shew (shoo, syoo) v., arch. to sew — ‘Yince in a day the maist o this whet-seem was shewed be hand’ [ECS], ‘...Quoth she, ‘Oh get a pair o’ horns. I’ll shue them on ye, An’ make a goat o’ ye whilk conforms Ti sic a loonie’ ’ [WP], n., arch. a sew, stitching (note these older pronunciations: also spelled ‘shue’ etc.).

shewin (shoo-win) pp., arch. shown, exhibited, displayed as proof — ‘...ane Act extract be ...clerk of our Judiciary, under his subscription manuale, schewin and producit befor the saidis Lordis ...’ [SB1500] (also written ‘schewin’).

shewman (shoo-mun) n., arch. a showman — ‘...An’ tongue as gleg to be as ony shewman’s’ [JoHa].

shew-up (shoo-up) n., arch. a bankruptcy, closing and winding-up of a business.

shiel (sheel) n., arch. a temporary hut or other rough building used by shepherds — ‘Weel Nature accords wi’ the sorrow I feel, As I gaze on the site o’ my grandfather’s shiel’ [DA], (also shielin: it survives in the names of many steadings and other place names; Adderstoneshie, Hawick Shiel, Hennlawshiel, Ropelawshiel, Shiel Burn, Shiel Cleuch, Shiel Rig, Shiel Sike, Shielwoods).

Shiel (sheel) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Goodfellow and their son Thomas was born in Hawick Parish in 1656. William (b.1647) is probably also his son. The James born in 1650 to Adam and ‘Janet goodfallow’ may also be his son. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Ballantyne. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1774, witnessed by the Associate Congregation. Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1791. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Lustruther in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Alexander (15th C.) witness to a 1479 sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn, where he is ‘Schevil’. He is probably related to David. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant somewhere in the Rule valley, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls and others for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His brother William and son John are also listed, their surname being recorded as ‘Schewill’. David in ‘Hoppiston’ and David in ‘Langraun’ are also listed. He could be the same Andrew, ‘alias Dand’, who was listed in 1502 along with David, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote recorded in 1684 for failing to appear in Jedburgh when cited. Margaret Lorraine (who was married to a Shiel, perhaps even him) and Grizel Lorraine were also cited, and all of them were probably Covenanters. Andrew (b.1798/9) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he is recorded as joint farmer with his younger brother John and nephew James. They were farming 250 acres and employed 14 people. Also living on the farm were his nieces Margaret and Elizabeth, and another nephew, Rutherford. He was still listed as farmer there in 1868. Anna (17th/18th C.) daughter of Margaret Lorraine, with her father probably being Andrew. She was listed (along with her mother and 2 other Shiels) in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Bapte. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. She was listed as ‘dochter of the said Margret, now servitrix to the Lady Bonjeddart’ (probably wife of William Douglas of Bonjedward).

Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Mackside. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. He may have been related to Walter in Abbotrule and John in Gatehousecote, who were also listed. Catherine (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. David (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. His surname is recorded as ‘Schevile’. Alexander is listed right after him, and so probably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed in 1502 along with Andrew, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids from Rulewater. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Hoppiston’, recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbulls for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobbsburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbulls for assisting the traitorous Homes. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included: Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Young and their children included: James (b.1851); Walter (b.1854/5); George (b.1856/7); Margaret (b.1848/9); and Agnes E. (b.1861). Along with Thomas (perhaps his brother), he created fizzy drinks. Edward (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the ‘George Scheel’ who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobkirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor’s ‘goose’ and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. He is probably the George, part of whose lands (along with ‘Boston’s half of Kirk-know’) were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included: Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). The witnesses in 1774 were the whole congregation. His father James died in Hawick in 1787. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-naire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was ‘Gilbertus schevil in bethroule’ and was fined for non-appearance of his wife, for whom he was surety (with her name not given). He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craigend and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 40 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being ‘in bethroule’ among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for communing with the English. He may be the same man as ‘Gilbert Schell’ who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-naire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dohleston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (d.bef. 1579) mentioned in 1579/80 as a resident of Selkirk when his son Philip witnessed a promise for ‘Mathew of the bent in Tuchellaw’. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Catslack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting ‘greenwood’ in the woods of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the minister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a ‘wadset’ for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Young in 1687 and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were John Hope and Robert Scott. He is probably the cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Robertson Parish in 1687. Hugh ‘Hog’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hobsburn, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-naire held in Jedburgh. The Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as ‘hoigis schevil’. Probably the same man was... recorded as 'hugone schewill alias hoge' in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for him failing to appear and he was declared as a fugitive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme’s farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (16th/17th C.) resident of Friarshaw. In the trial documents for witchcraft of Isobel Howison in 1628 there is a note to say that 'he kennes scho wes a chairme cat'. James (d.c.1694) tenant of Southdean Mill. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. In 1691 he had a discharge with William Currer of Whitemuir. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded being at Easter Burnfoot when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682 and 1688. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for another James in Hassendean in 1687. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiel’s at that time. He could be the James ‘in Knowhead’ whose will is recorded in 1689. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Riddell in Roberton Parish in 1681 and another for Walter Sanderson in 1683. He married Christian Miller in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Margaret (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); William (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The 1682 witnesses were William Beattie and James . . . and in 1688 were Thomas and Walter Sanderson. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Bessie and Isobel (b.1687). The witnesses were William Scott and James Shiel (probably the other man of the same name who was at Easter Burnfoot). James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hobburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James ‘called of Tour, indweller’ at Langraw who witnessed a sasine between Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichell. Probably the same James ‘portioner of Langraw’ was recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He was probably related to George, recorded in Langraw in 1688. James (17th C.) resident at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1737 and 1742. His children may have included James (b.1737), John (b.1739), Mary (b.1741) and Isabel (b.1743). Perhaps the same James married Janet ‘Boll’ in Cavers in 1733. James (b.1770/1) born in Eckford Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 1,000 acres, employing 11 labourers. His wife was Helen, and their children included James, Andrew (who continued with the farm) and John (who assisted his brother). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cairns and their children included: George (b.1798); Janet (b.1800); Mary (b.1803); James (b.1805); Francis (b.1807); Euphemia (b.1809); and Margaret (b.1812). James (1776–1858) weaver of West Port who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about No. 3 Loan. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: George (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809), who probably married Burgh Officer Jamie Smith; Ann (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); John (b.c.1819); James (b.1821); and David (b.c.1827), who was a grocer on Mather’s Close. He had twin sons who died in 1819. James (18th/19th C.) horsedealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greenbraeheads and Whitlaw. He is recorded at Greenbraeheads in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. By 1861 he was farmer at Little Whitlaw, unmarried and living with his brother John and sister Janet. He was still recorded at Little Whitlaw in 1868. James (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Common, who died at Southdean Schoolhouse in 1868, aged 90. Their children included: Thomas (1808–56), Schoolmaster in Hobkirk; and Mary (b.1816/7), who married Neil Taylor, schoolmaster at Southdean. John (b.c.1810), who was living with Thomas and Mary at Hobkirk Schoolhouse in 1841, was probably also his son. He died at the age of 47 and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and parents. James (b.1805/6) innkeeper of the Coach & Horses at the Tower Knowe. He is listed on Silver Street in 1851 and on Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower and grocer at 30 High
Shiel

Street. He married Janet Stewart and their children included: Janet Cairns (b.1842); and Isabella (b.1844). James (19th C.) listed as Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races of 1873. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.1830/1) born in Oxnam Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of 1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place. His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. He may be the Mr. Shiel who lived in the new house built at the foot of the Loan (and by the entrance to the Poorhouse) in about 1879. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aires in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of ‘tassy’, although it is unclear if this was a forename or a nickname. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded in Fodderlee in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties was recorded being ‘Dand’, Burgess of Jedburgh and William, also in Jedburgh. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot and brother of Steven. He is recorded as ‘John Shevell his man’ in a list of men accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589. He was named along with ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’, John Noble (another servant of Robert Elliot) and other Elliots and Croziers. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same ‘Jock Sheile’ is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliots, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as ‘Jock Sheill Robin Elliot’s man’ in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven and several Nixons, Croziers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson’s of ‘Lyn- briggs’; his name was given before Steven’s and so he was presumably the older brother. John ‘Jock’ of Kirkknowe (16th C.) recorded in 1589 on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. He was recorded as tenant in Kirknowe when accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. He was ‘Younge Jocke Shiele of Kyrknowe’ and ‘Jock Sheile of the Kyrkknowe’ listed along with Douglases, Laidlaws, Turnbulls and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods. He was probably an ancestor of the later Shiels of Kirknowe. John (17th C.) tenant in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1621. He and his son Hector were denounced as rebels for cutting down ‘greenwood’ on the land of William, Lord Cranstoun. In 1666 he (or his direct descendant) sold half the land to John Mair of Mackside. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as ‘John Schewill in Kirknow’ in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Appotside and Tythehouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kinknowe who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Grieve and their children included: Robert (b.1648). John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Murray and their children included Helen (b.1650) and Marion (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were George Helm and William Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their children included: James Shiel (b.1656). John (17th C.) tenant in Boosmill. Along with his brother (whose first name is not given) he was declared a fugitive in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among men proclaimed as rebels for being Covenanters. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same John had a son Adam baptised in Cavers Parish in 1695. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Adam (b.1691) and William (b.1695). His name is recorded as ‘Sheilds’. John (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was recorded as ‘theiker’ (i.e. Thatcher) in 1704 when his son John was baptised, with witnesses gardener Patrick McLellan and weaver David Miller. Perhaps the same John was ‘workman in Hawick’ in 1706 when his daughter Bessie was baptised, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie George Martin. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for smith John Scott in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. Based on the handwriting in the parish records, it seems likely he started in about 1697 and continued until around 1714. He married Margaret Shiel in Ashkirk in 1703 and their children included: William (b.1704); George (b.1706); and Dorothy and Elizabeth (b.1709). The children baptised in 1709 were ‘at one birth’, presumably meaning they were twins. John (17th/18th C.) lived at Dodheadshiels in Yarrow Parish. In 1728 his unnamed son was baptised in Roberton Parish. It is unclear what his connection was to this parish. John (18th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1733 he married Helen Bell from Hawick. John (18th C.) farmer at Kirknowe who was a significant Hobkirk parishioner in the early 1700s. The land of Kirknowe was in possession of the Shiels from before the Reformation. The part that he held was formerly called Hobkirk-style or just Kirkstyle. He held it from at least 1718. His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th C.) recorded as herd in Shaws in 1785 when he was part of a legal case in Selkirk. This could be the Shaws near Ashkirk. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1798 he married Janet Cairns, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Weensland Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean, along with his older brother Andrew and nephew James. In 1861 they are jointly recorded as farmers of 250 acres, employing 14 people. John ‘Jocky’ (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist and sweet shop at the corner of the Loan and Beaconsfield Terrace. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Leonem Schavil’ when he was on the 1517 panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglasses who were probably local to the Cavers area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as ‘Lyell Scheil there’. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (15th/16th C.) resident in Bedrule. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 8 sheep from Thomas Phaup in Bedrule, with the Laird of Bedrule as his surety. Robert (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener at Alton in 1711. His children, baptised in Winton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1711); and James (b.1715). He is probably the Robert married to Janet Smith whose daughter Jean was baptised in 1718. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. The farmers there in 1841, James, John and Robert, were probably his sons. Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Rutherford (19th/20th C.) recorded in 1896. He is probably the man of the same name who donated an adder killed at Hassendean to the Museum in 1863. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in Mynt’ (presumably Minto) among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, Will Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliots, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as brother of Jock, who was ‘Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, along with several Nixons, Crozier and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinson’s of ‘Lynbrigges’. Thomas (d.c.1578) recorded as ‘Thomas Schevill’ in 1578/9 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and members of his family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for his murder. The others accused of being involved were Sir Thomas’ sons Wat and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Scheill’ in Wauchope in 1605 and ‘Thomas Schewill in Wauchope’ in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Roberton in 1689. Probably the same ‘Mr. Thomas Shiel’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbride in Dumfriesshire, who was admitted in 1655, but deprived in 1662. His whereabouts during the time of persecution are unknown, but it seems that he may have settled in the Hawick area and started officiating at Roberton in about 1689. This same minister was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was translated to Sanquhar in 1693, where he remained until his death (as confirmed by a Sanquar Session minute book, starting in 1696 and recording his demise in 1708), and where he is buried. There is a letter dated 1691 from ‘R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarras’ (i.e. from the minister of Ashkirk to Scott of Harden) saying that he may be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Roberton is re-erected. There is also an assignation of 1692 in which he requests the stipend from Hassendean to which he claims the right. He was recorded as tenant of the farm of Todshawhaugh, leasing half in 1672 and 1673, all in 1677, until 1693, and being tenant in 1694 along with his son Thomas. It seems likely he was the ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ who was taxed for having 10 hearths at Lintalee house in 1694 (although why he would have been there at this time is a mystery), as well as being also listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sheill’ when taxed for 3 hearths at Todshawhaugh (although this could feasibly be his son). The Thomas who married Grizel Dalgleish (daughter of a Westerkirk minister) and had a son Thomas in 1701 was probably his son (since he himself would have been about 70 at the time, and there was no ‘Mr.’ title written). His son William farmed at Todshawhaugh, as clearly stated in a 1696 record. However, there is no documented evidence about his wife and the births of his children. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. He is listed in 1684 among men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, he was tenant at Todshawhill. He was recorded as tenant in 1694, along with his father, the minister. In 1699 he rebuilt the farmhouse there on a more convenient site. In 1712 he was ‘in Todshahill’ when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Scott in Stobicote and another in 1713 for a weaver called Douglas. He was in arrears for the rent of Todshawhill in 1713–20. In 1728 he was ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja…’ when he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood. He is still recorded as the tenant of the farm in 1735. He could be the Thomas of Roberton Parish who married Grizel Dalgleish in Westerkirk Parish in 1701; she was probably daughter of the former minister there, Walter Dalgleish. The couple had a son Thomas who was baptised in Hawick and Roberton Parishes in 1701; one of the witnesses was ‘Mr James Dalgleish’, suggesting his wife’s brother or other near relative was a minister, and it seems likely she was daughter of Walter Dalgleish, outed minister of Westerkirk. Other children born to a Thomas in Roberton Parish (mostly in Todshawhill) were: Jean (b.1717); Grisel (b.1719); Elizabeth (b.1721); an unnamed child (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); and Robert (b.1726). These seem likely to be the same father, although the gap between children is unusually wide, so perhaps he remarried. His servant Isobel Millar married Walter Scoon in 1720. In 1729 he is described as ‘in Todshawhill’ when his son James became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh and when his son Robert became a weaver’s apprentice in 1741. He was no longer tenant by 1745. He was also a joint tenant of Linhope with Walter Grieve in 1729. James Grieve, tenant of Brauxholme Park describes (in 1821) how he was son of a Dumfriesshire minister, and had a brother who married the sister of the ‘Bonnie Lass o Branxholm’. However, it is possible there were 2 generations confused here. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as ‘apprentis to ye sd Walter' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Hawick doctor Walter Scott. Thomas (1723/4–1812) buried in Borthwick Waas, his wife died in 1798. Their children included: James, who died aged 47, and whose son Thomas was Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas, son of James and Jean Karr who was born in Bowden Parish in 1723. Thomas (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Thomas (1808–56) son of James and Margaret Common. He was Schoolmaster at Hob Kirk Parish School, perhaps just before Mr. Lightbody. He was already teacher there in 1841, living with his mother, brother John and sister Mary. In 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret in the Hob Kirk Schoolhouse. He was listed as Hob Kirk schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at B onchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Perhaps the same Thomas was schoolmaster at Cosgrim from 1829. Tibbie (1783–1878) inn-keeper in the Yarrow valley. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd’s mother. She married Robert Richardson, a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Ch ape l hope, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir Walter Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. She had a child who died in infancy, as well as 3 sons (William, who remained at the family home, the other 2 emigrating to Canada) and 3 daughters (including Mrs. Michell, Crosscleugh). Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hob Kirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmen Schewile’ in 1427 when he was on the ‘inquest of retour’ for William Douglas of Drumcharrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same ‘William Schewyll’ was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo Schevil’ in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Ettrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witnessed in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as ‘Willelmo Schewyll’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schevill of Fodderlie’ in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, ‘for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh’. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schieviell, indweller in Hartshaid’ (probably ‘Hartshaugh’) when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed ‘Williame Schewill’. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mossyd’ according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Walker and their children included: Helen (b.1655); and John (b.1657). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Riddell and their son Hector was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d. bef. 1719) described as ‘writer in Hawick’ when his son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him ‘coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkenness’. His ‘servitrix’ Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Roberton session in 1701 for allowing a ‘mock’ wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boornaw and Esther Turnbull. He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the ‘Bonny Lass o’ Branxholme’ William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Stobicote in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for apothecary Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same as the farmer at Todshawhaugh William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1705 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1713) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, may have been his include Jean (b.1702), Margaret (b.1704), Margaret (b.1713) and John (b.1714). He may be the William recorded at West Middle in 1719 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1824 when his child was baptised.

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Wilson’s Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, which flows to Plantation, between the sites of Slack’s Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielden Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kirk Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshielden (it is ‘Shelden’ in 1835 and ‘Sheldon’ in 1841).

Shielie’s (shee-leez) n. sweetie shop at the Sandbed in the early-to-mid 20th century – ‘Across the road auld Shielie did us braw For bawbees we wad ware owre there . . . ’ [WL].

shielin (shee-lin) n., arch. a remote and often crude shelter built for shepherds, remote pasture lands where animals would be driven in the summer – ‘. . . as the shellins o’ Kedar, as the coortins o’ Solomon’ [HSR], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are brought to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL] (also shiel).

Shiel Knowe (sheel-now) n. hill lying southwest of Riccarton Junction and west of Saughtree, reaching a height of 292 m.

Shiellaw (sheel-law) n. former farmstead, close to the present location of Hassendean Common farm (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shiellaw Plantin (sheel-law-plawn-tin) n. former plantation near Hassendean Common (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shiel Rig (sheel-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, situated on the right, opposite the turn-off for Lethem. There are the remains of a group of 4 shielings, 5 pens and a stock enclosure there, just to the west of the forest. These are probably the remains of a medieval stading. There is also a 300 m boundary bank to the south-west, near the Carter Burn (also written as ‘Shieilig’).

Shiels see Shiel

Shiel Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in the Borthwick valley, which rises as the Red Cleuch near Redcleuch Edge and Cowbush hill, and joins the Dirthope Burn before running into the Borthwick. There is an old rectangular enclosure on the eastern side and a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Shiel’s Lands (sheel-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish. In 1811 ‘Part of Shiel’s Lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know’ were valued at £22 15s, among the lands of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, while the rest was valued at £68 5s and owned by William Oliver of Langraw.

Shielsteeds Hill (sheel-steedz-hil) n. Shielsteeds Hill, small hill in southern Castleton Parish, just west of Kershope Bridge. It has been suggested that this might be the site of the shielings of Eadulf, which are noted in a 14th century charter confirming a 12th century grant of neighbouring land at Kershope.

Shielswud (sheelz-wud, -wood) n. Shielswood, area around Shielswood Loch and Shielswood farm, on the Ashkirk to Roberton road. This is the highest part of Ashkirk parish, containing the hills Cringie Law, Threehead, Smasha Hill, Gandleskowre, Horn Hill, etc. William Turnbull was recorded at ‘sheliswod medow’ when Thomas Lauder of Todrig was accused of stealing from him in 1494/5. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Scott family from the mid-16th century and more recently became part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto. In 1581 Margaret Scott, widow of William Scott of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent of lands there to her son William. William Scott then leased the lands and steading to Walter Scott of Todrig, promising also to finish building a stone house there, but the liferent went to his new bride, Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly. The lands were valued at £260 in 1643 and owned by Walter Scott of Shielswood. It still had the same value according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and also in 1678 when it was owned by James Scott. The main house is listed as having 5 hearths in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 3 other tenants on the estate and one poor person. The lands were gained by the Elliots of Minto in the early 18th century. In 1779 the liferent had been given by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Rev. Simon Haliburton, and it was still valued at £260. It was also described in 1780 as ‘a four merk ten shilling and eight penny land’. William Scott is recorded as shepherd there and William Miller as farmer, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (the house there is marked as ‘Sheelswood’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and Adair’s c. 1688 map, and is ‘Shiels Wood’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘shielz-wud-hawch’ in 1617, ‘Scheilswode’ in 1648, ‘Sheil-liswood’ in 1609, ‘Schelliswoid’ in 1616, ‘Scheilswode’ in 1648, ‘Sheilswood’, ‘Sheill-wood’ in 1695, ‘Sheilswood’ in 1690, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1692 and ‘Shilsuood’ in 1694).

Shielswudhaugh (sheelz-wud-hawch) n. former steading near Shielswood. Thomas Gray was a weaver living there in 1709. Gideon Scott was recorded there in 1727 (it is ‘Shielswood hauch’ in 1709).

Shielswud Loch (sheelz-wud-loch) n. Shielswood Loch, loch about 3 miles north-west of Hawick, south of Shielswood farm on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sheelswood L.’).

shift (shift) n., arch. a stratagem, ploy, plan, evasion – ‘The Treasurer informed that some who owed money by Bill to the Session refused or made shift of payment’ [PR1724], livelihood – ‘...for gameing at ye Cards ... that was a sinfull and dishonest shift to get a living’ [PR1724], ‘...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood’ [PR1725], v., arch. to evade, dodge – ‘The Treasurer made report that the Delinquents shifts the payment of their penalties of fornication’ [PR1724].

shinty (shin-tee) n. a Scottish game similar to hockey, also sometimes applied to the version played on ice – ‘And then what fun beyond compare! What joy abune a’ price! We’d pick oor sides and play the game O’ shinty on the ice’ [WLu]. It was played in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Shiplaw (ship-hu-lu, -law) n. area around the former cottage of ‘Shiplaw Cross’, near the cattle-grid on the Earlside to Hawthornside road. Cars often stop near here to watch the horses cross the road on the Bonchester Ride-out. There is another Shiplaw north of Peebles near Eddleston and Sharplaws outside Jedburgh and near Hownan.

Shiplaw Bog (ship-hu-bōg) n. marshy area to the north of Cogsmill school, presumably related to the old chapel near there.

Shiplaw Corse (ship-hu-kōrs) n. area on the side road between Hawthornside and Earlside. Also known as ‘Chaipel Cross’, ‘Sheelplaw Cross’ or ‘Shiplaw Cross’, the cottage here was the highest house in Cavers Parish. William Whillans (who had been blacksmith at the Flex) was there in 1725. Robert Wilson was living there in 1749. It was a shepherd’s cottage from about 1780, when the shepherd was John Rutherford, whose descendants were blacksmiths in Bonchester. Adam Easton was there in 1792. The cottage was rebuilt in 1826, with the farmer about that time being John Elliot. Later it was occupied by a roadman, and in the mid-19th century the tenant was a Mr. Blake, when visited by Lady Scott of Spottiswood, who made a sketch of it. The house was destroyed by fire in 1902. It can be seen in a photograph of the mid-19th century, and is a late surviving example of country houses of an earlier era. It was a 1-storey thatched dwelling, built of rough, undressed stones, with the holes filled with mud. The walls were about 7 feet high and 3 feet thick. The name survives in the nearby plantation called ‘Chaipel o Cross Plantation’; the ‘Chapel of Cross’ has been suggested to be a medieval chapel dedicated to the holy cross, but there is no evidence that there was such a chapel there, with its existence probably deriving from the name (the connection with a ‘cross’ is unclear, however, it is possible there was a wayside cross associated with the chapel at Cogsmill; it is ‘Shyplawcross’ in 1725, ‘Sheelplawcross’ in 1749 and appears to be ‘Sleepraccross’ in 1792).

Shiplaw Cross see Shiplaw Corse

Shipley (ship-lee) n. Frederick (1889–1917) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Fraser. His paternal grandparents were William (who came from England) and Margaret Stevenson, while his maternal grandparents were George Fraser and Mary Ballantyne. He emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1906, with his mother following the next year. He married in 1912, but his wife died in childbirth in 1914. He enlisted in 1915 and was killed at Vimy Ridge. He is buried at Nine Elms Military Cemetery in France. He was posthumously awarded the Memorial Cross, which in 2007 was bought on E-Bay by the museum in Welland, his adopted home town.

shippit (shi-peet, pi) pp. shipped, took ship – ‘Aw shippit again frae Glasca, and now comes the strangest pairt o’ the story’ [JEDM].
Shipshieldean

Shipshieldean (ship-sheeld-deen) n. another name for Stripsfielden, as recorded in a survey of Buccleuch lands in 1718 and marked on Stobie's 1770 map. In 1718 it was 'Shipshelden alias Side', suggesting it was alternatively called Side.

shire (shir) adj., arch. exact, bare – Shire, Shyre. Used in the sense of strait, or S. scrimp; as 'shyre, shire'.

Shireings Cleuch', 'Shyreings Cleugh', etc.; the name may be related to the word 'shirins').

shir (shi-rif, she-rif) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Sheriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title 'Sheriff of Teviotdale'. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Sheriff-Principal, assisted by Sheriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply 'Sheriffs', a title they took officially after 1971.

Shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included Archibald (b.1740) and James (b.1741).

the Shiriff (the shi-ri-f) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 16th century.

Shiriff Clerk (shi-ri-f-klerk) n. clerk appointed to act as secretary to the Sheriff Court, specifically to record the business of the court.

Shiriff Court (shi-ri-f-kor', she-ri-f-kor') n. local court dealing with non-serious crimes and civil cases, Hawick's cases being dealt with at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh. From about 1895 until sometime in the mid-20th century there were weekly Sheriff Courts held in the Town Hall in Hawick.

Shiriff Depute (shi-ri-f-de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffs, the 'Depute' actually held the office of Sheriff and the term 'Sheriff Depute' was synonymous with 'Sheriff Principal', with deputies known as 'Sheriff Substitutes'.

Shiriff o Roxburgh (shi-ri-f-oo-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Sheriffs of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglases of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King's officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known 'vicecomite' of Roxburgh was Gospatic, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Sheriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Sheriffdom (and teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Sheriffdom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Sheriffdom is: Gospatic, c.1125; Gervase, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son of Orm, c.1170; Bernard of Haddan, c.1203 and 1227/9; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4-26; Adam of Bathgate, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285–90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Hastings, 1296-1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfreaville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert of Mauley, at least 1305-07 (Scottish); Aymer Valence, c.1310 (English); Sir Henry Balliol, around 1328; Galfrid Mowbray, 1334 (English); Sir Alexander Ramsay, 1342; Henry Ker.
Shiriff o Teviotdale

1349; John Copeland, 1350–55; Sir John Templest, c.1360 (English); Alan Struthers, 1368 (English); Lawrence of Govane, 1373; Sir Malcolm Drummond, c.1389; Sir William Stewart, c.1390; George, Earl of Angus, 1397; Sir David Fleming of Biggar, 1405; Archibald Douglas of Cavers, 1412; hereditary title of the Douglases of Cavers until 1747 (also called ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’).

Shiriff o Teviotdale (shi-rif-ō-teev-yi’-dial) n. office for maintaining law and order in Teviotdale, held by Sir Herbert de Maxwell, Alexander Ramsray, then Sir William Douglas, and for generations by Douglas of Cavers, starting with Sir Archibald Douglas from 1412. In earlier times the title usually went along with that of Keeper of Roxburgh Castle, and hence ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’ and ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’ were synonymous. The Sheriff was responsible for raising and commanding the local militia, local defence, collecting taxes and administering justice. This title ended in 1747 when heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown. Archibald Douglas of Cavers (the 15th Laird) was the last Sheriff.

the Shirraship o Teviotdale (shi-rif-ō-teev-yi’-dial) n. nickname for Sir Walter Scott in and around Selkirk – ‘And when the Shirra ettled syne To set the ballads doun ...

Shirraship (shi-ra-ship) n. the office of Sheriff – ‘...Who could frae Douglas warest and hold The Sherraship o’ Teviotdale’ [AD] (also ‘Sherraship’, etc.).

Shoddie (shoo-dee) n., arch. childish name for a baby shoe (noted by G. Watson).

Shoemakers (shoo-mā-kurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated before the existing Burgh Records (which go back to 1638). In 1643 they were directed by the Council to ‘try the market’ for the quality of the shoes and the quartermasters are recorded in 1677 examining the shoes at the market, to make sure they were ‘all of sufficient barked leather’. They were in earlier times referred to as ‘cordiners’, although the ‘cordiners' made a request to form a separate incorporation in 1722; the cordiners were allowed to be a separate incorporation from ‘those who make single-soled shoes’. However, they are not mentioned as separate bodies in later times, and so presumably merged again soon after. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. In local parades they would sometimes appear attired in the costume of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin, and were described as particularly splendid in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory parade.

shog (shog) v., arch. to shake, rock, swing from side to side – ‘... some of which made her pouch wagg and shogg’ [BR], ‘Though the waters o’t rair, an’ ar troublet; thouch the mountains shog wi’ the swallin’ o’ thame [HSR], ‘... thou hest brok an’ the gaaps ther’o’, for it shogs’ [HSR]; ‘Boondin bleithely on wui ma airms shuggiein ken it: men’ the gaaps thero’, for it shogs’ [HSR], ‘sair sapp’d by wear’ [GW], ‘Boondin’ (i.e. kite).

In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with Colin Roderick ‘Doddy’ (1942–2010) son of Pipe Major Robert, he was born and bred in Hawick. He was Head Boy at Trinity, then attended the High School and Henderson Tech. He worked for Pringles for 25 years, then started his own business, Shorts of Hawick, making tartan hose for pipe bands. He played pipes with the Boys’ Brigade and then the Hawick Pipe Band, being 2nd Pipe Major and band secretary for decades. He married Helen Greenhill and had children Karen, Kenny, Julie and Allister. James (1818–88) born in Eckford Parish, he was son of John, who farmed at Hartschaugh Mill. He was coachman at Wolfelee Glen in 1851 and coachman at Wauchope Cottage in 1861. He later moved to Jedburgh. In 1846 he married Helen (1823–111), daughter of William Sibbald; she died in Hawick. They they had 11 children, born in Hobbirk and Southdean Parishes, including: John (b.1846), who died in infancy; John (b.1848) the eldest surviving son, who became head gardener at Hummers Knott, Darlington; Margaret (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852), who worked in the hosiery industry in Hawick; Mary (1853–93); Helen (b.1855), who died in infancy; William (1858–69); James (b.1860), who died in infancy; James (1863–1905), also a gardener in Yorkshire, died in Hawick; Peter (1865–1921), a telegraph linesman; and Francis (b.1868). John (16th C.) joint owner of a particate of land (along with Stephen Scott and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to Robert who is also listed as a particate-holder in 1537. Probably the same John was deceased in 1560 when his brother Thomas inherited his tenement on the north side of the High Street; this was between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612. John Elliot was claimed by Elliot’s wife to have been murdered ‘within the said Jok Schor-tis duelling hous’, but in fact appears to have hanged himself with his own belt when imprisoned in St. Mary’s steeple. This suggests that he was an innkeeper. John (b.c.1775) farmer at Hartschaugh Mill. He is listed as miller at

Hartshaugh in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at Hartshaugh Mill in 1841, but absent by 1851. He married Margaret Davidson and their children (born in Eckford Parish) included: John (b.1808); Francis Davidson (b.1809); Euphan (b.1812); William (b.1817), who married Mary Dalgleish; James (b.1819), who married Helen Sibbald; George (b.1820), who married Rachel Scott; and Adam (b.1822). He could be the John, son of John and Isobel Thomson, born in Kelso Parish in 1779. John Dalgleish (b.1842) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and later Borthwickbraefoot. He was son of William, also farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and nephew of the John who married Margaret Davidson. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living with his siblings and widowed mother in Chesters. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Cavers, also from Rulewater. Their children included Mary Euphemia (b.1881) and John (b.1891). Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. A piece of land lying between his land and that of John Scott to the east was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. Robert ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (??– ) originally from Thurso, he was a Pipe Major. He formed the Hawick Boys Brigade Pipe Band in 1937, leading to the Hawick Pipe Band of today. His wife was Margaret and their son Doddy continued the family piping tradition. Their other children were Robert and Angus. Robert ‘Bert’ (1935–2014) eldest of 3 piping sons of Bob, he started playing from the age of 7. He took first prizes in the Borders B.B. Championships from the age of 12 for 5 five years in a row and gave a recital on B.B.C.’s Children’s Hour when he was 12. He did National Service with the Royal Scots, where he joined the pipe band. Returning home, he took over as Pipe Major for the Hawick Pipe Band, leading them through many competitions. He taught piping at summer schools through the Scottish Amateur Music Association and was on the National Council of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association. He married Edith and had children Maureen, Aileen and Graham. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1560 when he inherited his deceased brother John’s tenement in Hawick. This was a piece of land on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Thomas Logan and John Halliday. In 1674 he sold this same tenement to Robert Johnstone, from Annandale. William (b.1819) son of John, he was born in Eckford Parish. In 1851 he was a corn and meal dealer at 3 Kirk-style in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 his wife was a widow, farming 25 acres at Hobkirk Glebe in Chesters. In 1845 he married Mary, daughter of John Dalgleish, from Swanshiel. Their children included: John Dalgleish (b.1842); Jane; Margaret; Thomas; and Euphemia (b.1855) (formerly spelled ‘Schort’, ‘Schorte’ etc.).

shortbreed  (shor’-breed) n. shortbread, baked item made from flour, sugar and butter – ‘A pek of flur bikin short brid and button to it, £1 4s’ [1690/HAST1905].

Shortbutts  (shor’-butts) n. former name for lands in the territory of Sorbie (probably meaning near Sorbietrees) in Liddesdale. In the late 12th century Race Fitz Malger granted half of the land there to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1541 it is valued at 20 shillings and said to pertain to the Laird of Shortbutts. Along with Platt it was owned by Francis Robson in 1632 (it was is ‘Scortebuttes’ in the late 1100s, ‘Schortburtis’ in 1541 and ‘Schortbus’ in 1632).

the Shorter Catechism  (thu-shor’-ur-kaw’-e-ki-zum) n. short form of the question and answer instruction manual, designed to be memorised in order to test parishioners. The short form was the one mostly used, consisting of 107 questions. It was written in the 1640s by English and Scottish clergy, and also referred to as the Westminster Shorter Catechism. Locally it was called ‘the carritch’. Examination was often carried out in the parishioners own houses by the minister, but often in order round a circle, so it was possible to memorize only a subset of the answers.

Shorthope  (shor-tup) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, before reaching Kirkhope and Phawhope. In 1557 ‘Auld Hob Scot of Riskynhoup’ paid rent for the lands to Melrose Abbey. In 1609 it was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane, with tenant Andrew Scott. Robert Scott of Whitslade was served heir to his father’s lands here in 1643. It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Schorthope’ in 1564 and ‘Schorthoip’ in 1609; ‘Shortup’ is marked on Blaenu’s 1654 map).

short-leet  (shor’-lee) n. a short list – ‘A deh ken if A’ve got the job, bit A’m on the short-leet’ (this term survives, although the use of ‘leet’ itself seems to have died out).

Shortreed  (shor’-reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. Probably the same Andrew was one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. He is probably the Andrew who owned a piece of land in Selkirk according to a document of 1530. He witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches over Synton in 1531. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk.

Probably the same Andrew ‘Shortreid’ in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk.

Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essenside. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of ‘auldinnis hop’ served as his surety.

David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to William, who was also at Burnfoot. David (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when he was cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. He is probably related to Thomas, who was also at Essenside, but distinct from David who was at Burnfoot. George of Essenside (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as an executor for the children of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert Scott of Palace. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1705, 1706 and 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692. He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed a baptism (along with Robert Renwick) for George Renwick in the Sandbed in 1697. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliott, he was ‘younger of Essenside’.

He acquired part of Hermiston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Currer and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie (also recorded as ‘Helen Curret’) in 1754 in Ashkirk and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James ‘late of Essenside’ who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the ‘Mrs. Shortreed’ recorded as owner of ‘Nethercroft’, acquired from Langlands according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stiches. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1755); Isabel Margaret (b.1756); Margaret (b.1760); Jean (b.1762); Jean (again, b.1764); Agnes (b.1766); Ann (b.1767); Nelly (b.1769); Robert (again, b.1771); Mary (b.1773); Thomas (b.1774); Elliotie (b.1775); Andrew (b.1776); and Willie (b.1777).

John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. He was son of Andrew. John (17th C.) recorded being in ‘Longsintoune’ in 1679 when he had a discharge for payment with the treasurer of Selkirk. He was in ‘Langseintein’ in 1681 when he had a similar discharge. John (17th/18th C.) farmer in Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 in Edinburgh his daughter Agnes married William Thomson, who was ‘servitor to Bartholomew Brecher, bower’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: William (b.1702); an unnamed son (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Andrew (b.1707). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eilerig in 1718 and Borthwickbrae in 1720. He probably married Mary Hislop in Roberton in 1718 and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Rigg in 1729 when he married Margaret Scott. John (18th C.) tenant in Oakwood in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Perhaps the same John was tenant in ‘Hainingmote’ in 1741. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of B Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert of Essenside (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Sheil. He may be the Robert ‘shortridg’ who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at ‘woolie’ in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. His eldest son was James and another son was farmer Thomas. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert ‘Bob’ (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobbirk Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beaties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a founder member of the Jedforest Club and was the 2nd Honorary Secretary. He built a house in Jedburgh, which was later British Linen Bank house. His sister Mary married William Aitchison and helped him run the Cross Keys Inn at 11 Sandbed. He was Substitute to Sheriff William Oliver, who wrote some doggerel verse about him – ‘From chattering women all refrain, Let silence universal reign, While thro’ the world I proclaim A friend in need is Bob Shortreed’. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Jedburgh lawyer James Fair. He had 2 infant children buried in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard in 1802. His other children included: Thomas, who also helped Sir Walter Scott, and followed his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club; John Elliot, bank manager in Wexford; Capt. William of the Bengal service of the East India Company; James Elliot, who succeeded his uncle to the Langlee estate and took the additional name of Fair; Col. Pringle of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Robert, tenant of Attonburn. Simon (d.1550) Vicar at Ashkirk, who was succeeded by James Ker. He’s probably the ‘Simon Schortreid’ listed as a priest who witnessed an announcement by ‘Walter Scot in Esdchawe’ in Selkirk in 1532. He also witnessed an agreement in 1531 between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton, another agreement regarding lands at Haining in about 1534 and an agreement regarding the ‘Dean’s lambs of Selkirk’ in 1536. In 1536 he was ‘ane discreet man my servand’ to the Parson of Ashkirk Richard Bothwell, when Richard set him part of the kirklands ‘callit the clewis and kempis knowys’ for 3 years; the witnesses included John Mitchellhill, James Davidson and David Brownfield, who were chaplains (but it is not clear where). In 1537 he invested Simon Scott in the benefits of the Rectorship of Rankilburn; Andrew was one of the witnesses (and may have been related). In 1538 he witnessed a document for Ralph Davidson involving Grahamslaw and ‘Chames’. In 1539 he witnessed a transaction where Thomas Scott in Haining warned certain tenants to remove themselves. He was involved in a transaction for William Scott (probably relating to lands near Ashkirk) in 1542. In 1543 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk in favour of William (whose relationship is not recorded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Whitehillbrae (in Kirkhope Parish) in 1580/1 when Janet Turnbull (widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh) and William Allan assigned him their lands in Blindhaugh. Walter in Selkirk was one of the witnesses and may have been related. On the same day he confessed that he owed Walter money and was having to defer payment. He was also recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Blindhaugh in 1581 when the lifier was transferred to Walter, son of the deceased John Scott in Blindhaugh. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. He was probably related to David, who was also at Essenside. He may be the Thomas in Woll who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at Wolfelee, Hyndlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1757 he married Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella shot (sho’t) n., arch. a piece of ground, division of land, especially if used for crop rotation (existing in some place names, e.g. Bowshton and Wreathlongshot, as well as former names for small pieces of land, e.g. Cairstane Shot, Mill Shot and Notman’s Shot).

Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburgh. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He may be the Thomas listed at Fahash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 as witness to an agreement between Walter Scott of Ashkirk and John Scott in Aikwood over Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded as brother of Walter Scott, perhaps meaning brother-in-law. He is again recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk in a further transaction of 1581. He may be the same William recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. He was surely related to David, who was also at Burnfoot. He was still recorded as brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk when he witnessed a transaction for him in 1581/2 (also spelled ‘Shortred’, ‘Shortread’, ‘Shortreede’, ‘Short-reid’, ‘Shortbridge’, etc.).

shows (shôz) n. a funfair, with rides, games and other amusements, the local one being referred to as the Shows (usually used as a singular word).

the Shows (thu-shôz) n. fair that sets up in the Big Haugh for about a week at the beginning of June, being the last remnant of the days when the Common Riding Races and Games were held there. There are records of merry-go-rounds and ‘switchback railways’ being there from at least the 1880s. The main location was on the Under Haugh until into the 1890s when it became more fully developed. Photographs exist showing what it looked like from about 1900. The entertainments were suspended during WWII, but held in the Volunteer in June 1945. The present-day fair is run by Thomas Hiscoe & Sons and moves on to Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels – ‘wull ee take is ti the Shows on Saturday’?, ‘…the fair-ground on the Haugh, or as it’s better kent, the Shows’ [IWL].

Sibbald (si-buld) n. James (1745–1803) son of John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehill-brae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as ‘a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, [who] cultivated music and poetry’. In 1785 he started to publish the ‘Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany’ as a competitor to the ‘Scots Magazine’. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns ‘Kilmarnock’ edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the circulating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is ‘Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary’ (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effectively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etchings of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in W. Borthwick Johnstone’s 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–83) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of ‘The Edinburgh Magazine’; William of Gladswood (d.1817) merchant and ship-owner in Leith; John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes (b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1815), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and was the lady who sent off her son’s uniform to equip him in Edinburgh after the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804, as described in Sir Walter Scott’s note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’. John (1746–77) younger of Pinnacle. He was eldest son of William and Charlotte Cleland. He was a merchant in London. He married Anne Franks, and they had 1 son (Lt.-Col. William, who succeeded his grandfather) and 2 daughters (one of whom, Charlotte, married Archibald Scott of Howcleuch). The other may have been Ann, who married James Grieve, farmer in Branxholme Braes. John of Borthaugh (1755–1822) son of John and Margaret Grieve. His ancestors farmed in the Eildon and Bowden areas. He was recorded at Borthaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He was a local Conservative supporter of the early 1800s who is said to have put pins in his coat-tails before voting in Hawick, to avoid being ‘winged’. He married Jean Cunningham (from Ettrick) in Wilton Parish in 1804 and they had a large family, including: John (b.1805), who was running the farm in 1841; Jean (1807–65), who married poet William Wilson and emigrated to Poughkeepsie, New York; James (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1811), who was superintendent of the farm in 1851; Walter (b.1813); Agnes (b.1814); George (b.1816); Isabella (b.1817); and Helen (b.1819). It seems he must have been quite old when he had his family. John (1805–47) son of John and Jean Cunningham. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. He was farmer at Borthaugh in 1841, living with his sisters Margaret and Agnes. He appears to have been dead by 1851, when his brother William was running the farm. John (b.1835) son of James and Elizabeth, he was born in Leith. He was assistant gamekeeper on the Cavers estate, living at Effedge. He was said to be a terror for the Hawick poachers. On one occasion a gang came to his house to get him, but he was ill and his wife called David Honeyman, the head keeper, who was badly beaten up instead. Another story told is how he caught 3 poachers who has swam out to the island in Buckstruther Loch to collect gulls eggs; he bundled up their clothes, but instead of giving themselves up to him they ran off naked in the direction of Hawick. He is listed as a ploughman at Effledge in 1861. He married Margaret Best in Ashkirk Parish in 1857. Their children included: John (b.1857); Alexander (1860–1942), who died in Victoria, British Columbia; Thomas (1863–1948), who also died in Victoria; and Agnes (b.1865). Margaret (b.1845) daughter of William and Margaret Laidlaw. She helped her father with his duties as postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, and took over after his death in 1880. She also served as Clerk to the School Board and Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howahill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnett (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (1863–1948) born at Effledge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxton Park and Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1817 and was also a member of the ‘Border Bowmen’. In 1807 he married Susan, 6th daughter of Thomas Mein of Eildon Hall. They had 9 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1809–43), Captain in the 34th Madras Infantry; Thomas, Royal Navy Commander, who lived at Eildon Hall, Ontario; William (b.1814); James (b.1816); Archibald (b.1817); Charles (b.1819) who served as a militia officer during the Canadian rebellion of 1837; Hugh (b.1823), served in Bengal and also moved to Canada; and Francis Clunie, who served with the Royal Navy and was later a doctor in Sutton West, Canada. After his death the family lands were sold off. William (d.1815) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1792. He is listed as ‘Plaisterer’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, b.1793); William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. He was ‘Plaisterer Sandbed’ in 1815. William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Sclenty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors’ Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockmaker at Sclenty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Registrar of Births &c. Inspr. of Poor’ at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after his death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James Short; Mary (b.1825), who was unmarried; William (b.1827), who was a frameworker in Hawick and died unmarried; James (b.1832), who emigrated to Canada and died in Minnesota; Peter (1835–85), a mason in Hawick; Thomas (b.1839), a joiner; and Margaret (b.1845), who helped her father and then became post-mistress (also formerly written ‘Sybald’).

side (sid) n., arch. direction, district (this meaning is preserved in many place names, e.g. Appotside, Castleside, Damside and Towerdykeside), a slope, hillside (names of perhaps older origin, from the Old English, e.g. Earlside, Falside, Hawthornside, Hazelyside, Mackside and Teindside).

side (sid) adj., arch. hanging low, extending far down – ‘. . . to see what passed between her and the man in the ‘side black goun’’ [EM1820].

Side (síd) n. former tower just south of Newcastleton (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for ‘Locus Willelmi del Syde’ (8 shillings) and ‘Locus Ade de Syde’ (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these men belonged. It is possibly also the ‘Siders’ recorded as an Elliot residence in 1498. It was home of ‘Jock o the Side’ in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ is listed among Liddesdalen chief’s at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock’s brother. ‘Sym’ and ‘Lancie’ Armstrong of the Syde are recorded in 1601 and John ‘called of the Syd’ in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Owens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a ‘penny wedding’. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshieden was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Ettleton Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in the 19th century (and said to be marked by a solitary tree), which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Kirk Hill, has no traces of foundations (also spelled ‘Syde’ etc.; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Syd’ and on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Syd’).

side-be-side (sìd-be- síd) adv. side-by-side – ‘. . . whan billies fell seid-be-seide till the brae-face was traisselt’[ECS].

siller (si-lur) adj., arch. silver, made of silver, having a silvery lustre – ‘...I only scorn’d the ways Some take to catch thy sunny, siller blaze’ [JoHa], ‘Like siller muntybanks they spring ...’ [JBS], ‘When simmer waves wi’ siller wing, On banks and braes the daisies spring ...’ [DA], ‘The sillar saughs are in the bud, As down the glen we gang’ [JT], n. silver, money – ‘...with four 6 shilling peices, and 12 pence, with the rest of small siller ...’ [BR1642], ‘A party is fined for giving some of the border false, clipped, and counterfeit siller to James Badie ...’ [JW1704], ‘Gif she be ane wa’, we wull bigg apon hir ane palece o’ siller’ [HSR], ‘...kiveret wi’ siller, an’ her feathers wi’ yallo gowd’ [HSR], ‘...The symbols o’ sic strength and peace That siller cauma buy’ [WL], ‘We spend oor siller, and stake oor life, And syne the gloamin’ faa’ [WL], ‘...And the siller horn o’ the Hunter’s Mune’ [DH], v., arch. to give money to – ‘A siller’-t skirt makes quickest sail, To Hymen’s port’ [JoHa], ‘...Bids siller’d blockheads them despise’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘sillar’).
Sillerbithaa (si-lur-bi’-haw, -haw) n. older version of Silverbuthall, referring to the area previously called Easter Heap.
Sillerbit Hall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. this older name for Silverbuthall was adopted in 1861 for the lands purchased by Thomas Laidlaw (from Walter Wilson), and the mansion house he had built there in the period 1863–1866. The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rochead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements. The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A ‘wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone’ found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).
sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impene- cious – ‘Then up wi’ the purse an’ the siller, The jinglin’ yellow for me: Than wed wi’ a sillerless bodie, I’d far rather want till I de’ [JoHa].

silly man (si-lee-mawn) interj., arch. an expression of kindness and compassion, literally ‘poor fellow’ (noted by J. Jamieson).
Silurian shale (si-loo-re-in-shal) n. shale formed in the third period of the Palæozoic Era, about 405–425 million years ago. It is the dominant geology around Hawick, specifically referred to as the Hawick Group.
Silverbuthall (si-vur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Andrew Marshall was tenant there in 1711. John Blyth was living there in 1723, George Scott in 1728 and Robert Smith in 1791. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797. The house there was lived in by bunker William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stiches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rochead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the ‘prefabs’ being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branxholme Road and adjoining streets (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is ‘Silverbuthall’ in 1797 and ‘Silverbothall’ in 1808; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbuthaa (sil-vur-bi’-haw) n. another name for the mansion house called Sillerbit Haa.

Silverbuthall Ludge (sil-vur-bi’-hal-huj) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Rochead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

Silverbuthall Road (sil-vur-bi’-hal-ród) n. main road through the Silverbuthall housing scheme, with houses built in 1965.

Silver Field (sil-vur-feekl) n. local name for a piece of ground to the north of Ettleton churchyard, said to be where coins were sometimes found. It was perhaps the manse of the old kirk.

the Silver Flush (thu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the ‘palfrey’ of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in ‘ Beauties of the Border’).

the Silver Spurs (thu-sil-vur-spurz) n. annual race for married men at the Common Riding, since at least the 1840s.

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree’) n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on ‘the King’s High Street’. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and more so with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of ‘old court, Silver Street’ exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (the origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to ‘Auld Cash’, similarity between his name ‘Oliver’ and ‘Silver’ perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick ‘butt’s).

Sim (sim) n., arch. former short form of the Christian name Simon, popular in the 16th and 17th centuries (sometimes spelled ‘Sym’; cf. Simmie and Syne).

Sim (sim) n. George (20th C.) foreman at Innes, Henderson and later Braemar. His wife was Jessie and their children were: Shonnie; Mary Shortreed (‘Myra’), Provost of Hawick; and Vera. The family lived on Ramsay Road, Moat Crescent and lastly Burnfoot Road. He was reported in the national press for trying to break into the fever hospital to see his daughter Myra after reading her

Sime (sym) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle’s in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert’s. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina (‘Mina’) daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (?–??) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970.

William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had ‘the Coille’ built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Syme’).

Sime’s (sînz) n. manufacturers Sime, Williamson & Co.

Sime, Williamson & Co. (sÎm-wi-lee-un-sÎn-in-kô) n. tweed manufacturers, founded in 1889, with their main mill part of Weensland Mills. They were also sometimes known as simply Sime’s. They purchased Howlands Mill (on Victoria Road) in 1911 and changed the name to Dean Mills. When William Boyd Sime died in 1917, his brother James Boyd Sime became Chairman. The firm went out of business in 1937 and Dean Mills became part of Innes, Henderson & Co.

Simey (si-mee) n., poet. the Devil – ‘There is ane at the Carlenrigg, Might sof’en the heart o’ auld Simey, But gin ye want lasses that’s trig, gae up the burn fa’ther to Limey’ [JoHa], ‘When simmer came blythesome and simpliciter discharges the saidis two baylyeas ... ’ [BR1701] (a legal term).

Simpson (si-min) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1743, with witnesses ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was married to Margaret Turnbull when their son John was baptised Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably ‘Simmie’ refers to the Devil.

Simmons (si-minz) n. Anne Vernona of Tushielaw (1797–1837) daughter of Philip and Vernona Estwick. She was grand-daughter of Henry Peter Simmons and Ann Kirton and great-grand-daughter of Barbara Anderson of Tushielaw. She inherited the farms of Tushielaw and Hislop on the death of her great-uncle John Kirton Anderson in 1816. She married Benjamin Thomas Gaskin in 1818, and had their only child (a son of the same name) after her husband’s early death. Her son took the additional surname Anderson when he inherited.

Simon (si-min) n. (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in a document of about 1206, re-establishing the church of Hassendean. There was a Precentor of Glasgow with the same name recorded at about the same time (also written ‘Simeon’).

simple (si-pul) n., arch. a herb, plant material used as an ingredient in a medicine – ‘Her mother, — Scott, was great for simples (herbs), and belonged Deanburnhaugh’ [JHH], simpliciter (si-pli-si-ter) adv., arch. simply, unconditionally – ‘...exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two baylyeas ... ’ [BR1701] (a legal term).

Sime (si-mee) n., arch. former pet form of the name Simon, also used as an informal name for the Devil – ‘...And ane and a’ o’ them they vow and declare, ‘Twas Simmy, in shape o’ a bodie’ [JoHa] (cf. Sim and Syme).

Simmie’s Pottie (si-meez-po’-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably ‘Simmie’ refers to the Devil.
in 1746. Andrew (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1794 when his son John died. Dr. Andrew (20th C.) born in Kirkcaldy, he graduated in Medicine from Edinburgh University in 1923 and about 1924 took over the practice of Dr. Dixon in Hawick. He was Medical Officer for Hawick R.F.C. He was a founder President of Hawick Rotary Club and served as Chairman of the local British Legion. He retired in 1967 after being a Hawick G.P. for over 40 years. Dr. Andrew Rutherford ‘Ford’ (1932–2002) born in Hawick, son of local doctor Andrew. He was in the R.A.M.C. as part of National Service, then trained as a doctor, coming to practise with his father in Bridge Street in 1964. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants’ Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry. Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as ‘archibald symson’. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled ‘Symson’ and ‘Simsoun’. In 1575 Thomas Duncanson was Minister (also for Bowden, Langnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation.

Ashley (1973– ) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs in 1996. Baillie ?? Baillie of Hawick towards the end of the 19th century. In 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is also recorded as owner of 5 farm horses. He was still at Know when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had the house at Teviotbank designed by Robert Burn about 1791. He was listed as owner of the lands of Knowe and Knowetownhead on the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). In 1791 he married Margaret, daughter of John Elliot of Bothwickbrae. Their children included Gen. Sir James (1792–1868). His will is recorded in 1808 and his estate was granted to his widow Margaret, along with Rev. William of Edinburgh (his brother). After his death there was an ongoing dispute regarding money he claimed he was owed from the Nabob of Arcot and the Ameer ul Omrah. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. David B., F.R.C.O. (1886–1941) born in Kilmarnock and raised in Dundee. On 1920 he became the first professional organist at St. George’s Kirk, having previously been at the Parish Church of Leslie in Fife. He was also a private music teacher in Hawick, and was conductor of Hawick Choral Society. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David M. (b.1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Buenos Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Buenos Aires Western Railway. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for George Scott in 1671, along with John Scott, and another for John Blake in 1673, along with Walter Purdom. Francis ‘Frank’ (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He was church organist at Newcastleton and later at Minto. He also gave music lessons in this home at 4 Earl Street. He wrote the music for ‘Teviotdale’. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George ‘Geordie’ of the Raws (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Geordie Symson in the Raws’ when listed in 1576 among men who should not have been freed from ward. He is probably the ‘Gorth Simson’ listed in 1583 among supporters of Elliot of RedLewnhug. He is recorded as ‘George Symson of the Raw’ in 1586 when his superior Robert of RedLewnhug was instructed to enter him in court. He is recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. Probably the same George is listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is also recorded in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others had raided lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Bikins, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grand-father John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Elliots to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the ‘Simson’ spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Geraldine (1921–2010) great-great-granddaughter of Pringle’s founder Robert Pringle, she was born in Edinburgh to James Muir and Francis Pringle. She was sent to Hawick while her father recovered from injuries sustained during WWI, and raised by her maternal grandparents at Woodnorton. She attended school in Aberdeen and was a ‘land girl’ there in WWII, travelling around on horseback. With her mother she ran Fetteresso Castle as a temperance hotel; her grandfather Robert Pringle came to live with them in his last few years. She married Maurice ‘Chrystal’ Simpson, who was minister of Alford’s Tullynessle Church, and they had a daughter Maureen. The family later moved to Muchalls Castle, which they restored. She helped found the Architectural Heritage Society of Scotland and was a keen photographer of old houses. She was a long-time friend of the the author Nigel Tranter. In about 2000 she returned to Hawick to present the family bible to the Museum, since she was essentially the last of the Pringle dynasty. Harold (??– ) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Mathison and their children included: Bessie (b.1697). He may be the James ‘in ye toun of Hawick’ whose son John married Janet Ker in Hawick in 1718.
lands’, lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Wilton Parish in 1748. He witnessed a baptism in Wilton for John Miller in 1759. In about 1763 his rebuke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1743 he married Anne Cranstoune, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: John (b.1743), who died young; William (b.1744), who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John (again, b.1745); David (b.1747) of Know and Teviotbank; James (b.1748), perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne (b.1748), who died young; and Andrew (b.1751), who also died young. The witnesses in 1747 were William Scott of Whitehaugh and John Chisholme of Stirches and in 1751 were Kirk Elders Robert and Walter Scott. James (18th C.) Bailie who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary’s Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Elliott of Borthwickbrae. He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811. He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. John (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town’s business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included John (b.1669) and Francis (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John Scott and John Hardie. He may be the ‘Jon Symson, skinner’ recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobicoate. He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th/18th C.) son of James. In 1718 he married Janet, daughter of deceased gardener Robert Ker. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. It seems likely he was son of merchant James. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism for William Bulloch. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for James Rodger and Janet Simpson (probably his sister). In 1728 he was witness for Robert Rennie in Sandbed. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); Janet (again, b.1737); Margaret (again, b.1737); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver James Roger and shoemaker Patrick Hardie. John (18th C.) recorded in 1751 as ‘lying at the Point of Death in all probability’. This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with ‘the Horse belonging to the Session’. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Leyden. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council ‘for a standard for salt from Jedburgh’. It is unclear what his occupation was. John (d.1794) tailor in Hawick, son of Andrew. He could be the John (b.1746) son of Andrew and Margaret Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleknowe as owner of a saddle horse on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. Mary (18th C.) midwife in Hawick. In 1759 she was a witness for the baptism of a child of dyker George Sandie. It is extremely unusual for a woman to act as witness, suggesting there must have been a special reason. Robert ‘Smith’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as ‘roberti symson vocatis smyt’. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as ‘Robert Symson, callit Smyth’. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of West Riddell. A dispute with his servant Walter Stoddart from c.1823 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1825 a letter records how Walter Stoddart was hired as his servant at Hawick Fair and there are further letters about the age dispute. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from or around the Barony of Winton. Thomas (1833/4–98) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1916, aged 82. Their children included Andrew (1860/1–1933), who married Euphemia (1862/3–1939). Probably the same Thomas was manager of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk, recorded in 1879. They are buried at Ettleton. William (16th C.) tenant in Overraw, along with Andrew, recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newtown. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Headshaw on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–1797. In 1797 he owned the grand sum of 13 farm horses and 1 carriage or saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He could be the tenant from about then who was recorded as an attendant at Midlem Secession Kirk. He was recorded at Headshaw on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the William, married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 29 High Street in 1841. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, bookbinder. In about 1870 he started his own bookbinders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. This was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastleton, who died at Burgh-by-Sands. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29. Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elvis, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being traslated to St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also ‘Simson’, as well as ‘Simsoun’, ‘Symson’, ‘Symson’, ‘Symson’, etc.).

Sim’s Hill (sim-sinz-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, just to the east of Inner Hill. It reaches a height of 308 m.

Sim’s Hob (simz-hōb) n. nickname for Robert Scott around 1600.

Sim’s Knowe (simz-nowe) n. hilly area just south of Harwood House, being on the northern slope of Templehall Hill.

And sin’ they’ve aa taen their looks frae you, There’s nane sinclair (sing-klar) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Singlar’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groom at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Beatrix (16th C.) married William Alemoor and had children with him. She secondly married William Scott, brother of Walter Scott in Ashkirk. In about 1530 Walter Scott granted his brother William (along with her and her children with her first husband) half of Lilliesleaf Mill.

Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1830 he married Jane, eldest daughter of Archibald Little of Shabden Park, Surrey, and she died in 1887, aged 75. Their children were: Charles William, who succeeded; Archibald, who became a naval Commander; James Chisholme, in the Madras Civil Service; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen.

James H. Associate Minister at Selkirk, linked with Ashkirk, in the 1980s. Janet (d.1667) married James Brydon and had a son Andrew. She later married Rev. Thomas Thomson, minister of Hob Kirk. In 1618, along with her son Andrew and Hector Shiel of Kirknowe she had a ‘wadset’ over lands adjacent to the Kirkhaugh of Hob Kirk. This was registered in 1623. She was buried in Greyfriars churchyard in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being ‘in Mynto’ in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. This was probably a cache of English gold coins, hidden by Sinclair, but claimed by the King as treasure trove. Although said to be ‘in Minto’, the Laird of Bedrule was specifically his surety (while William Langlands acted for 2 of the others), perhaps suggesting that he was from Rulewater; the others were John Turnbull, George Turnbull and John Aitkin (with William Burn’s name also given, but scored out). Perhaps he was the same John recorded earlier in 1493 when the Sheriff of Roxburgh was... fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh; this John was cited again at the Justice-aires in 1494/5. Possibly the same ‘John Singlar’ was on the panel that met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Possibly the same ‘Johanne Sinclair’ was witness to the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; there he is ‘Halis signifero’, i.e. standard-bearer for Hepburn of Hailes. Perhaps the same ‘Johannis sinclar in baronia de caveris’ had remission in 1502 for the murder of John Moffat, with George Turnbull of Hallrule as his surety. Thomas (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1618, he was presented as minister to Abbotrule Parish in mid-1618 and ordained there early the following year. However, he resigned before the middle of 1623, the reason being that he had ‘gone to London with the Prior of Coldingham’s children’ (presumably as their tutor). A man of the same name is recorded in a deed of 1608 as schoolmaster at Oakwood; this could be the same man or perhaps a close relative. William (19th C.) hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town’s first truant officer! His main job was as a stockingmaker (written ‘St. Clair’, ‘Sinclare’ and ‘Sinclar’ in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. hamlet between the ‘Note o the Gate’ and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Songdoun’ (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as ‘Sangdane’, with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. It covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible (also written ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdon’; the origin is probably Old English ‘sengan demi’, for ‘valley cleared by burning’; it first occurs as ‘Singdane’ in 1541, is ‘Singdoun’ in 1632 and ‘Singden’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Singdem’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map of Roxburghshire and ‘Singlenn’ on the Liddesdale map; it is ‘Singden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Singdon’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Singdean Burn (sing-deen-burn) n. stream in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale, rising on Fanna Hill and flowing roughly south-east to become part of the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

singed sheep’s head (sinjd-sheeps-head) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep’s head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – ‘. . .there was a singed sheep’s-head on the table which had been ‘got up’ for next day’s dinner’ [WNK].

singel (sing-ul) adj. single – ‘there wasnì a singel Teri among them’, also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – ‘A’ll hev a fish supper an a singel haggis’ (note the lack of hard g).

singit (sing-ee, -i’) adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ‘Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf’ [HAST1868], ‘The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emaciated, ill-fed’ [ECS], ‘ye singit thing’ [GW].

singit-lookin (sing-ee-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled –
Singlet

_Singlet_ (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastle upon Tyne in the 1860s.

_Singley_ (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1366. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably ‘clearing made by burning’ from the Old English ‘sengan’, to scorch, plus ‘leah’, a wood; the name is recorded as ‘Senglee’ in the 14th century, is ‘Singlie’ and ‘Synglie’ in 1511, ‘Singlees’ in 1678 and is transcribed as ‘Finglio’ in 1687).

_Singly Brae_ (sinj-lee-brä??) n. area between Penchrise and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

_Single_ (sinj-lee??) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbulls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rieving crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In a rental roll of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, ‘occupiit be the kings gudis’ paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. John Lauder was there in 1579. Sir William Scott was granted the lands by John, Earl of Annandale in about 1605, although they appear to have been purchased by Simon Scott of Bonnington in 1593, confirmed in 1607. Robert Scott, son of William in Milisnton gained the lease in about 1712, and his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – ‘There’s daft Jock Gray o’ Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o’ the Inch; And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG]. ‘The sun was low when they crossed the Ale, It was dark when they won to Ettrick vale, And the stars on Singlie had blazed an hour When the watchman challenged on Kirkhope Tower’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Singlee’, it was ‘Singil’ in 1456, ‘Syngle’ in 1468 and 1471, ‘Single’ in 1484 and 1490, ‘seyngilie’ in 1494/5 and ‘Singylly’ in 1541; it is marked as ‘Singil E.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with the stream being ‘B. of Singil E’).

_Sinker_ (sing-kur) n. a shaped thin plate for depressing the loops between the needles in a knitting machine. These can be for forming loops by pushing the yarn, or for holding the already formed web while the needles make the loops.

_Sinner_ (si-nur) adv. rather, sooner – ‘A wad sin’ner gaun haim is stey here’, ‘...Suner a canny gowk Than pride rowed in the glaur’ [WL], ‘...A' the rest was a waste o' time Till the back-end o' July, When he saw it was suner derk at night; ‘Oo’re gettu’n in!’ says Dye' [DH] (also spelled ‘suner’ etc.).

_Sinskyne_ (sin-sín) prep., arch., poet. since then, since that time, ever since – ‘But sic a queer scene ne'er sin’ syne hae I seen, Nor afore, sin’ the day o’ my birth, man’ [JoHa], ‘...An’ he’s aye keepit it sin’ syne, – Retailing spirits, teas, an’ wine’ [RDW], ‘There hasna been a carriage at oor door nayther afore nor sin’ syne’ [WNK], ‘...excep’t this ae strange sicht aw ne'er afore nor sin’ syne saw anything supernatural’ [BCM1880], ‘Hello callant! What heh ee eer chafts tied up for? A forker gaed inti ma lug, i herrst, an it’s aye been sair sinseine’ [ECS], ‘Lang years sinsyne haw passed away, and muckle joy and woe...’ [JCG], ‘The Reuch Sike...a guid name for a fiddler’s howff, I’ve aye thocht, sin’ syne’ [DH], ‘...And they have flocked In package tours sinsyne’ [WL] (also written ‘sin syne’, ‘sinsyne’, etc.).

_Sinton_ see Synton

_Sinton_ (sin’-in) n. county town of San Patricio county in Texas, named after David Sinton, major shareholder of the local pasture company that gave the land. His name in turn probably comes from the estate near Ashkirk.

_Sinton_ (sin’-in) n. Adam (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer. Along with mill-worker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children
Sinton

Included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charters for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownam in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessuden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09, gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Faimington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.c.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleased with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as ‘Andrew de Synton’. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as ‘Andrea de Sintun’. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jails. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family’s history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds. Their children included: William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). Bailie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at 29 High Street, which became known as ‘Sinton’s Close’. Note, however, that the same property is labelled ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map. His first name is unknown. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1720. His children included: Walter (b.1709); Thomas (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); and George (b.1720). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725), George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Alison died in 1790. Perhaps the same George was married to Margaret Beattie and had a son Thomas baptised in Wilton in 1771. George (18th/19th C.) from Leith, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1897 he purchased the grocer’s business from Mary (nee Govenlock) Brodie. Helen (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same ‘Nelly’ was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1285) either sister or wife of the last ‘de Synton’ Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. Probably the same James was recorded in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. James (c.1730s–1802) carrier in Abbotrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret; and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, and whose children were: Mary; Margaret; Robert, born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James, who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth. He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He married Barbara Oliver. Their son was John (b.1806), born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. James (b.c.1775) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born at Southdean-millhead. He married Margaret Willie. Their children included: Peter (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; and Robert (b.1813), born at Clarilaw Moor. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonjedward. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married Mary Ann Fleming. Their children included: Robert William (b.1875), who was born at Blakedean, Morebattle; and James (b.1883), born in Bedrule Parish. James (b.1841) son of John, from Jedburgh and Mary Ann Gillies. He was born in Denholm. He served as groom to Daniel Mather of Hallrule. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Bruce. Their son John (b.1867) was born in Hawick. He died in Denholm. James (1841–1938) of Eastfield, Joppa, where his house was called ‘Hassendean’. He was born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Gillies. He worked for Blackwood the publishers in Edinburgh. He contributed several articles to the Transactions, as well as editing some other works and bibliographies. He published Leyden’s ‘Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands’ (1903) and wrote ‘Leydeniana’ (1912). His major local contribution, however, was ‘Bibliography of works relating to, or published in Hawick’ (1908), which he stated to be ‘a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period’. This was a more focused extension to his ‘List of books relating to or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’, which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas’ 1899 ‘History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’. His Hawick books contain information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. James (b.1883) son of James and Mary Ann Fleming. He was born in Bedrule Parish. He married Rhoda Carr and his son was also James. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing 24 sheep, 3 cows and a horse from his lands in Synton, with the help of James Elliot. He was also witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskine’s land of Synton; like the other witnesses, he was probably local. He was probably the Laird in 1502 when the estate was attacked by David Scott. It seems likely that he was descended from the original Sintons of Synton. (‘the Lady’) and some Armstronngs, with many sheep and cattle stolen. John (16th C.) wool merchant (‘lanitor’) in Selkirk. In 1579/80 he stated in Selkirk that William Scott ‘alias William with the teyth’ stole 5 sheep from near Simon Glendinning’s house. John (17th C.) recorded as a merchant in Selkirk in 1671. In 1674 he also had an account with the Burgh if Selkirk. Probably the same John was ex-Burgh Treasurer of Selkirk in 1663. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Cuthbertson. Their children were: John (b.1735); and Thomas (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Learmont. Their children were: Katherine (b.1735); Helen (b.1739), perhaps the Helen who died in Hawick in 1808, widow of John Turnbull; Walter (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); and William (b.1750). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Woll in 1744. John (18th C.) recorded in 1785 as servant to John Paterson, tenant in Langhope, when he was involved in a legal case in Selkirk. Helen Hunter in Philiphaugh demanded that he acknowledge he was father of her son and demanding payment. John (15th C.) resident of Rober- ton Parish. He was at Wester Alemuir in 1771 and 1774 and at Bellendean in 1785. He is probably the John who married Betty Burnet in Rober- ton in 1769 and whose children included Isobel (b.1771), Robert (b.1774), Betty (b.1779), Christian (b.1782) and Mary (b.1785). John (1780–1856) son of William and Isobel Black. He was born in Southdean Parish. He lived at Letham and in Hobkirk Parish. He married Dorothy Eastham, who died in 1844. Their children were: William (b.1807); Richard (b.1810); James (b.1815); and George (b.1817). John (1806–54) son of James and Barbara Oliver. He was born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. In 1829 he married Alison, daughter of John Hall and Betty Briggs. Their children included: Robert (b.1831); John (b.1833); William (b.1836); and James Oliver (b.1848). They were all born in Jedburgh. He died in Argyll and was buried at Eckford. John (1810–65) son of William and Isabella Scott, who was from Hawick. He lived in Denholm. He firstly married Mary Ann Gillies and their children included: John Gillies (b.1843); and James (b.1841), who contributed local history articles. He secondly married Mary Dickson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1856), skinner in Hawick; and Mary (b.1860), who married Adam Huggan, tobacconist in Hawick. John (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh. In 1851 he was a game watcher at Woodside Cottage. He was a widower, living with his children William, Jane, James, Isabel, John and George. John Gillies (1843-1904) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Ann Gillies. In 1864 he married Isabella Wight in Maxton. Their children were: John (b.1862); Helen (1869–1948); Mary (b.1871); James (1873–1936); George (b.1878) in Hawick; William Wight (1866–95); and Francis Douglas (1882–1971). Marie (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. She was widow of Alexander, the former Sheriff of Selkirkshire. Her seal, attached to the Ragman Rolls, showed a figure of eight rays and the name ‘S’MARIE DE SINTVN’. Also in 1296 she pleaded to the English King for dower lands worth 20 merks, since she had been left a widow for 3 years. Mark (16th C.) recorded in Lessuden in 1581 in a transaction in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Peter (d.1811) cattle dealer at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. He also lived at Southdean Mill. His father may have been James. There is confusion because he is named Patrick in some records. He married Janet Donaldson. Their children probably included: James (c.1773–1855), born at Southdean millhead; John (b.c.1774), born at Strangeburnfoot; Thomas (1776–1861); Janet (c.1782–1858); Peter (c.1783–1866); Margaret (c.1790–1869); Isabella (1792–1869), who married Richard Rob- son; and Cecilia (c.1795–1877), who married William Thomson. He was buried at Abbotrule. Peter (c.1783–1866) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born in Southdean Parish. He married Jane Wight. Their children included: Peter (b.1808), who was born at Rulletonhead; and James (b.c.1821), who was born in Southdean. Peter (b.1805) son of James and Margaret Willie. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Marion Ker and their children included Alexander (b.1839), who was born in Midlothian. Peter (b.1808) born at Rulletonhead, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married May Scott, and their son was John (b.1859), who was born in Corsenside, Northumberland. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.1813) born at Clarilaw Muir, son of James and Margaret Willie. Their children included Robert (b.1852), who was born at Raeles in Selkirkshire. Robert (c.1817–97) born in Southdean Parish, son of James and Isabella Fleming. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: George (b.c.1845); Robert (b.1847); William (b.1856); and John (b.1866). Robert (b.1818) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of Thomas and Mary Elliot. He married Isabella Oliver, and their children included Thomas (b.1851), who was born at Lanton. Thomas (1776–1861) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson. He was born in Southdean Parish. He married Mary Elliot. Their children included Robert (b.1818), who was born in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas (b.1856) son of John and Mary Dickson. He was a skinner in Hawick. His sister Mary married tobacconist Adam Huggan. He married Annie Scott and their children included: John (b.1878); and Walter (b.c.1886). Walter (16th/17th C.) brother of William ‘in Helialdrum Burne’. Along with his brother, Thomas Brown and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver. William (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, purchased 2 rigs of land there in 1580 and witnessed transactions in 1581. Also in 1581 he leased a tenement in Selkirk from John Hall and he may be the William in Newton recorded as witness to another transaction in Selkirk in 1581. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1582. His surname is recorded as ‘Suynroun’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose chartulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Helialdrum Burne’ recorded in 1618. Along with his brother Walter, Thomas Brown ‘in Thorishop’ and others, he was directed by Walter Scott of Goldielands to apprehend William Oliver ‘in Lanyburne’ (possibly Langburnshielis). Oliver complained to the Privy Council and those responsible for his unlawful capture were declared rebels. could be Langburnshielis. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Roberton Parish in 1714. He may be the William in Borthwickburn whose daughter Bessie was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. William (b.1718) born in Duns, son of John and Janet Scott. He married Isabel Dunlop. His children included: James (b.1760), who was born in Ashkirk; and Thomas

Skelfhill  (skelf-hil) n. farm to the south-west of Hawick, also the name for the surrounding area, in particular the hill Skelfhill Pen. The lands were probably owned by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Skelfhill is recorded in 1607, Robert Scott was tenant in 1694 and William Scott in 1711. Surveyed in 1718, it consisted at that time of 2062 acres (including Langcleuchside and Fairnyside), bounded by Brugh, Priesthaugh, Billhope, Gorrenberry, Linhope, Phaup, Northhouse and Doecluch. Walter Turnbull was there in 1722, Robert Scott in at least 1727–38, Walter Hogg and Francis Bell in 1729, James Fulton in 1736, James Pott in 1738–48 and Francis Gledstains in 1745. Robert Scott and his son James were tenant farmers there in the 18th century. There is a record of a house being built on the farm by Buccleuch estates in 1763. William Scott is recorded there in 1772, Robert Grieve in 1777–78 and Archibald Scott in 1780. James Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1785–97. William Grieve was there in the 1860s. Tradition has it that the cauldron used to boil William de Soulis was preserved at the farm. It is also said that John Deans (whose gravestone is at St. Mary’s) was killed near here in 1546 while defending his neighbour’s goods. There was a Common Riding ride-out there in 2006. Aerial photography shows an enclosure about 200 m north-west of the farmhouse – ‘At the Skelf-hill, the cauldron still The men of Lid desdale can show ...’ [JL], ‘The day is gane, the Like other peaks in the area, it is largely made of igneous rocks, in this case trachyte, with complex intrusions of other mineral types. It has a triangulation pillar and an adjacent cairn. The cairn was re-erected by the local children to celebrate the Jubilee of Queen Victoria in 1887 – ‘On my hills the moonbeams shines on fair Skelfhill, Meet wi’ me, my dear, ...’ [SWS] (a local remnant of the ancient Brythonic word for hill, ‘pen’).

Skirmish Field (ski-r-mee-sh-feeld) n. meadow by the river Tweed near Melrose, which was the site of a battle of 1526. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scotts, Elliots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King’s request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Scott failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at ‘Turn Again’ (possibly by an Elliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliot was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for mustering their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Synton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in Howpasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrule, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the ‘Battle of Darnick’ and the ‘Battle of Melrose’. The Waverley Castle Hotel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as ‘Skirmish Hill’). Another nearby hill, known as the ‘Charge Law’ was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while ‘Turn Again’ is a small eminence where Scott’s men rallied and Andrew Ker was killed. This event is said to have been marked by a standing stone, which still exists.

Slacer (sla-sur) n. John (18th C.) recorded in Lochburnfoot in 1748 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Cavers Parish. His surname is otherwise unknown locally, and so it may have been written in error. William (18th C.) from Southdean. In 1863 he married Betty Inglis, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included William (b.1775), baptised in Southdean (also written ‘Slazier’).

slack (slawk) n., poet. a pass, hollow, gap, saddle in a hill ridge – ‘Red Ringan sped and the spearman led Up Goranberry slack: Aye, many a wight unmatch’d in fight, Who never more came back’ [JL], ‘And up the slacksis of the morning cloud, Aneath the lirks of light’ [JTe], a bog, morass, particularly used in liddesdale – ‘The fell and the woodland, each summit and slack, Smiled on us, and said – ‘We will welcome you back’’ [DA] (preserved in ‘Deep Slack’, ‘Mitchell’s Slack’, ‘the Paddock Slack’ and other place names).

Slack see Slack’s Toor
Slack (slawk) n. former name for lands near Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch. In 1581 ‘Borthuikbray and Slak’ were together assessed for tax at £10, while ‘Slak et Westsyde de Howcleuch’ were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae.

Slack (slawk) n. James (b.1781/2) from Lockerbie, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was at about 1 Langholm Street, and by 1851 he was a pauper lodging on South Liddel Street. His wife was Jenny. Rev. John Watson (d.2003) minister of Ashkirk, linked with Selkirk Lawson Memorial. He served from 1983 until 1986.

Slackhills (slawk-hilz) n. farm recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Kedzie was farmer there, with 2 horses working on the farm. Given that this occurs in the list between Teindsdale and Commonside, it is possibly an error for Slaidhills.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. There are still remains of the peel tower to be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. Immediately to the south of the tower are the grass-covered footings of another pele (perhaps earlier). The farmstead and its enclosures was probably just to the south-east of the tower. Further to the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparently phases of boundary and enclosure banks. The lands were valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in ‘Slacks’ in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at ‘Slaks’. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written ‘Slacks’ with no apostrophe; it is ‘Slakis’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Slakkis’ in 1541, ‘Slakis’ in 1544, ‘the Slakkis’ in 1571/2, ‘Slakes’ in 1583 and ‘Slaxes’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Slaik’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack’s Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archaeological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement, with extensive agricultural development. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

slae (slä) n., arch. sloe, blackthorn, wild plum, Prunus spinosa – ‘Twaes een she had as black as slaes, An’ like twae diamonds glancin’, An’ gaed sae neat aye in her claes, Gart a’ the lads rin dancin’’ [JR], ‘The slaes maun be frostit ere pleasant to eat; The rose maun be pu’d frae the prickly brier’ [JoHa], ‘...Where first I pou’d the rasp and slaes, On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘We’ve denned ’aneath the blooming slaes, And row’d amang the ferns’ [JT], ‘Where oft in boyhood’s happy days I gathered nits and slaes’ [GD], ‘...And echoed sternly back by Whitlewe braes – Renowned alike for barns, and nuts, and slaes’ [WNK].

slaed (släd) n., arch. a sled, formerly used to transport goods – ‘They fynding ane slaide made up standing at the sd George Renwicke’s, the ane tramme tharrof being of ash and the other of aicke...’ [BR1686].

Slaidhill see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (släd-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular ‘Slaidhill’ and also formerly known as ‘Slatehill’ and ‘Slatehills’. An earlier name for essentially the same area is ‘Almondslands’. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and ‘left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid’. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is ‘Almonslands alias Slaidhills’ when listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615. It is probably the ‘Steadhills’ listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of ‘exterioribus et interioribus de Slaidhills’ and in 1683 the next Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in ‘outer slaidhills’ in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. William Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Thomas Pott in 1704. Alexander Hutton was tenant in 1707, with Thomas Rae as shepherd. James Miller was a weaver there in 1717. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhills and Inner Slaidhills are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Branxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Com-mounsie, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Robert Elliot was tenant in at least 1740–43. Patrick Hume was also tenant in 1743, with Adam Hogg also living there. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1822. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1849, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindside Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'slaed hyll', meaning 'the hill with the hollow in it', referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as 'Slaidhills' in 1494, 'Slaidhille' in 1581, 'Slaidhill' in 1585, 'Slaidhills' in 1634, 'Sledhills', 'Slaiderilles' in 1664, 'Sledhill's' in 1693, 'Slatehill's' in 1701, 'Sclathills' in 1702, 'Slatehills' in 1740, 'Slatehills' in 1743 and 'Slatethills' in the 1851 census; it is 'Sliiddhills' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Slatichills' on Stobie's 1770 map.

Slaidhills Moss (släid-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as 'Sлатetchill Moss' in William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border', when he is describing the course of the Catrail.

to Teindside Moss, and has part of the Catrail running through it, as well as a nearby fort (see also Slaidhills: ‘moss’ refers to moorland).

Slate Hoose (slā’-hoos) n. name of a house in Weensland in the mid-19th century??.

slater (slā’-ur) n. a wood louse, pill bug, Oniscus (also skletter; note, this term is obscure outside Scotland; the origin is probably because of often being found under slates).

Slater’s Directory (slā’-urz-di-rek-tu-ree) n. directory of people and businesses, more formally known as Slater’s Royal National Commercial Directory. It was published in 1852, 1860, 1878, 1882 and 1893, and was essentially a continuation of Pigot’s earlier directories. The volumes containing Roxburghshire are valuable as lists of businesses in Hawick, as well as Denholm, Newcastleton and some other villages. The publisher, I. Slater, was based in Manchester. Note that the information was not always up to date, and typically appears to have been current a year or so before.

Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Flosk Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and being joined by Langside Burn
joined by: Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Cogsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Patgon Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn – ‘...Where Slitrig dances doon
the glen’ [JT], ‘...And the Slitrig aye filling wi’ Slitrig Bank

was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn . . . ’ [DN].

Slitrig Cauld (sli'-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lymwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill lade, ‘the Back Dam’ (not to be confused with Lymwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Chaipel see St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

Slitrig Cottage (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli'-reeg-ko'-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli'-reeg-kre-sin’) n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, later premises of James Melrose & Sons engineers. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 17, 18 and 19 are grade C listed – ‘. . . the other dam, up Slitrig Crescent Where ee fed the ducks wi breid’ [AY].

Slitrig Cresesiit Brig (sli'-reeg-kre-sin'-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. The present structure was built in 1864, replacing a footbridge (shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), which in turn replaced an earlier iron footbridge destroyed in the 1846 flood. It is said to have been built in only 10 days. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. The footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden rain’[FH], ‘Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘slitan’ to split, or even possibly ‘sli’ter’; it is first mentioned as ‘Slitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot. The present structure is a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark. It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including ‘the Kirkwyn Brig’. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli′-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick, also known as the Back Dam. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. Originally it was relatively short, but in the mid-19th century it was extended to join what was called Lynnwood Dam or Nixon’s Dam. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills, Whiskyhouse Mill, and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeeworks. During dry spells it was possible to feed the dam by allowing water from Wulliestruther Loch to flow into the Slitrig. Several footbridges across the lade gave access to businesses and houses from the main road (the 1857 Ordnance Survey map shows at least half a dozen). Some of the first baptisms of the Brethren were performed in its waters. Much of the lade was covered over with concrete slabs in the mid-1960s. An explosion in the tunnel under Lynnwood Road (near the entrance to Lynnwood House) in the mid-1960s, caused by a build-up of natural methane, led to an understanding that unused tunnels needed to be filled. The lade was almost entirely filled in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area. The course of the dam is shown clearly on Wood’s 1824 map.

Slitrig Dyeeworks (sli′-reeg-dli-wurks) n. dyeing factory on Slitrig Crescent, also known as Turnbull the Dyers.

Smail  (smål)  n.  Adam  (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of Thomas there’. Adam  (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was baptised in 1786, with witnesses Walter Aitkin and William Phillip. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and still listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census, with Adam Scott as his apprentice. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza’) Redford. Their children included: Margaret, who married weaver Charles Scott; and Alison (b.1806), baptised in the East Bank Kirk, who married roper William Munro. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. Alexander  (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Lylisle’ witnessed a transaction for William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf in 1580. Alexander  (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew  (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret White and in 1724 their daughter Jean married Walter Aitchison. Andrew  (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of James. He is probably the Andrew who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Margaret Hume in Minto in 1736 and their children included: James (b.1737); Agnes (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); and Andrew (b.1741). Andrew  (18th C.) married Katherine ‘Frier’ in Minto Parish in 1740. William (b.1742), John (b.1744), Isobel (b.1746) and George (b.1749) were probably also his children. Andrew  (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1752), Betty (b.1753), Andrew (b.1754), George (b.1756), Robert (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Agnes (b.1762). Andrew  (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Anne Oliver and their children included: Margaret (b.1767); Thomas (b.1770);
and an unnamed child (b.1773). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Janet Purves and their children included Andrew (b.1778), Margaret (b.1781) and John (b.1784). Anne (b.1786), Mary (b.1789), Thomas (b.1790) and Thomas (again, b.1792), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. He was recorded being in Ancrum Parish in 1789. George (17th C.) resident of Minto. Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was a cottar in Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth (b.1717) was baptised in Headshaw Mill (‘being weak’). George (b.c.1780) toll-keeper at Spittal Toll. His wife was Janet. George (b.1810/1) from Ancrum, he was a blacksmith in Denholm. He is recorded on the 1841 census and by 1861 was at around Leydon Road. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1741), William (b.1742) and Elizabeth (b.1748). James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded at Linthill in 1789 when his son Robert was baptised. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedman. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlston. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlston, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and under this name published the poem ‘The Callant’ in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ in 1892); this was used as the anthem for the Callants’ Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Ingles in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad ‘Little Jock Elliot’ was written under this pen-name. He also wrote extensively on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace it course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (16th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He could be the son of Thomas, who received a half husbandland in Lilliesleaf from his father in 1581/2. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between him and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; the couple gained a half husbandland in Midlem from his father Thomas and he promised his mother land in Lilliesleaf in liferent. John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Walter Aitkin. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: George (b.1743); James (b.1744); Margaret (b.1746); Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses in 1743 were cooper John Aitkin (perhaps related to his wife) and shoemaker Robert Wilson, and in 1758 were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a cadger and carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf, St. Boswells and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included Thomas and Jane. Margaret ‘Meg’ (16th/17th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area, wife of Mungo Young. In the 1628 witchcraft trial of Isobel Howison, she gave evidence that about 9 years earlier Howison came to her sick child ‘and said he had gotten a blast of ill wind betwene tuo furres [furrows] and shee spake some words over him and he wes better within twenty four houres’. Martin (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as ‘Martine Smail’. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother’s life. His mother was Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that Ilk. His sister was Margaret. Probably the same Thomas in 1563 leased for 19 years a tenement from his neighbour Thomas Gray. He was to pay 20 shillings twice a year, along with ‘ane pek to the boll’ of grain, and if he built a kiln there, then Gray would provide him with beams for its construction. The witnesses in 1563 were ‘Berte’ Riddell, James Leithead and Robert Hastie, who may also have been from Lilliesleaf. In 1564 he witnessed a marriage contract for John Johnstone, tenant in Hermiston. Probably the same Thomas in Lilliesleaf is recorded in 1581/2 when Walter Turnbull in Belses took over his debt with Richard Wilson in Howford. In 1581/2 he resigned his half husbandland in Lilliesleaf in favour of his eldest son John and arranged a marriage contract between John and Janet, daughter of John Redford in Lilliesleaf; he gave the couple his half husbandland in Midlem and his wife Helen Clerk received quarter of a steading of William Middlemas. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buckham. He retired to Hawick. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His son Alexander was also granted land at the same time. William (17th C.) tenant in Harwood in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their son William was born in 1687. He could be the William born to Martin and Helen ‘Furgrie’ in Hawick in 1635. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Wight and their son Philip was baptised in 1688. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Leyden and their children included: William (b.1744); Adam (b.1754); and Helen (b.1756). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was ‘of Catch’ at Raperlaw. His surname was given as ‘Smeal’ in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William ‘Small’ recorded as possessor of the land of ‘Kaims-muir park’ in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William ‘Sonnail of Catshawhill’ in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish, he married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Stuart. Their children included: Margaret (b.1801); and Elizabeth (b.1803). name given, may also have been his children. William (d.1838) from Lilliesleaf. In 1790 he married Janet Thomson and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessy’, b.1803), who married Andrew Buckham; Alexander (b.1805); and Robert (b.1810), who probably married Ellen Ramage. Helen (b.1797) and William (b.1799), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. In about 1820 the family emigrated to eastern Ontario and there are descendants in the United States. He may have been father of William who in about 1823 married Mary Hunter in Edwardsburgh Township, Ontario. He died in Elgin Ontario and is buried in Montreal. William (c.1795–1879) prominent citizen in the area of Edwardsburgh, Ontario, along with his brother Robert and nephew Andrew. He was said to be from the Jedburgh area, but was probably son of William and Janet Thomson, who came from Lilliesleaf, emigrating in 1820. In about 1823 he married Mary Hunter (from Ayrshire) and their children included Robert, Andrew, Thomas, John, Alex and Ann. He served as ‘Reeve’ of Edwardsburgh and county councillor and was an organiser of the Reform movement, which laid the foundations for the Liberal Party of Canada.
Smailcleugh

His farm was called Glen Smail (formerly written ‘Smaill’, ‘Smaile’, ‘Small’, ‘Smeal’, ‘Smeall’ and ‘Smyle’).

Smailcleugh (smä̅l-kloo̅ch) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smail Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 19th century (also written ‘Smailieuch’).

Smaile Burn (smä̅l-burn?) n. stream now running underground from the Nipknowes to Hagghislaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘small’; the name occurs in 1433 as ‘Smaileburne’ and is ‘Smale Burn’ in 1448).

Smailholm (smä̅l-lum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was raided by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wrangham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. ‘Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church’ (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English ‘smael ham’, meaning ‘the narrow village’; the name first appears in 1160).

Smailholm (smä̅l-lum) n. Henry (d.bef. 1364) admitted as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1354, with his name written ‘Smalham’. He served until his death.

Smailholm Toor (smä̅l-lum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smailholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called ‘Sandyknowe’ from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – ‘These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy’s waking hour ... Methought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window’s rusty bars’ [SWS]. ‘At Smailholm’s Tower, Scott’s youthful hours Were nursed in song and story’ [RF].

Smaig (smä̅rg) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – ‘...for thaye smaig inequitie apon me, an’ in wreath thaye hæte me’ [HSR], ‘... an a smaiggin rowk feiles ilka thing’ [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

Smairt (smä̅r’t) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawl) n. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th C.) leased the lands of Boghall (presumably in Wilton) from Scott of Harden in 1749 for 11 years.

Small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it was often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Immunization was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

Smallshiel Sike (smaw-, smal-sheel-sik) n. small stream on the east side of the Whitrope Burn, opposite Flasket Sike.

Smally (smä̅-lee) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized – ‘Smaallie (adj.) = delicately framed (applied especially to a child of frail physique)’ [ECS], ‘A smally bairn’ [GW] (also written ‘smalllie’; diminutive of sma).

Smarroch (smar-roch) n., poet. a confused collection, crowd – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheelebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowps My greasly hert is wae’ [DH].
Smasha Hill

Smasha Hill (smaw-sha-hil) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are also several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for droving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers.

smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashed owt . . . ’[HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt . . . ’[HSR].

smatter (sma’-ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smitherens – ‘Hei broke it inti smathers’[GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’[HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the heæds o’ leviathan intil flenders’ [HSR], ‘Thou didist smatter the rok, that the waters rashet owt’[HSR].

smeddum (sme-dum) n., poet. spirit, mettle, common sense, resourcefulness, strength – ‘The smeddum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses’[JR], ‘And pits sic smeddum in my step’[WL] (from Old English).

smeeg (smeeg) n., arch. a kiss (noted by J. Jamieson).

smer (sner’) adj. smart, clever – ‘deh try ti be smert’, ‘Let cleaverality, mockreef folk that are unco smert . . . ’[ECS], well-dressed, stylish, attractive – ‘ee’re lookin awfi smert the day’, ‘Hei’s a smert keind o fallih, thon’[ECS], ‘Weel, aa met a lorry-driver, As smert as ee could sei . . . ’[DH], ‘Hei’s a big smert felli mind’[JCo], ‘she’s a smert lookin lassie, no like her mother’, brisk, quick – ‘An so, efter a smert hurl, oo clattert inti Hawick High Street duist on the chaap o six . . . ’[ECS], v. to smart – ‘ma backside’s still smertin’, ‘And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’[WL] (cf. the less common smairt).

Smellie (sme-lee) n. James (19th C.) teacher at Ashkirk in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish.

Smert (smer’) n. (Smart) Alexander (b.1815/6) born in Stow, he was a baker in Hawick. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 39 High Street and in 1861 at 2 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included Alexander William, Agnes, Jane and George. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastleton village. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smerter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘. . . Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smarter’[VW].

smddie see smiddy

Smiddielands (smi-dee-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (smi-deez) n. blacksmith’s workshops. These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark’s at the Sandbed, Rob Young’s of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Close, Brongham Place (Murray in the basement of No. 7), Melgund Place (No. 5) and Albion Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding countryside included Ashkirk (Kirkhouses), Bonchester Bridge, Borthaugh Wudfit, Borthwickbrae Burnfit, Cauldnill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Unthank), Hassendean, Headshaw, Heap, Hobkirk (Blacklee), Kirkhouses, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Copshaw), Stiches, Stobs, Teviothead (Bowanhill) and Todshawaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Tefler’s) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook’s on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing medical procedures like tooth extractions and bleedings for various ailments. Adam Scott is recorded as smith in Hawick in 1640 and ‘Hew Ellot’ in 1642.

Sir Alan (1917–2013) born at South

fri Soothfield’ (1797–1872) born at Heronhaa near Southfield (also referred to as Winnington Rig), son of a shepherd, he was an Army surgeon who became Director General of the Army Medical Department and is sometimes described as the father of South African zoology. He was baptised in Kirkton Parish, his father being Thomas P., his mother Grizzel Tait, and the location given as Winnington. He was the eldest of 5 children, hav-

1 brother and 3 sisters. He attended school at Stobs, where he was said to be flogged regularly for playing truant. In 1809 the family moved to Hassendean and he attended Minto and then Lilliesleaf schools. He had a 3 year apprentice-

sity and joining the army in 1815, shortly after Waterloo. He trained at various stations around Britain, and later when quartered in Edinburgh, continued his studies at the University, where he received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape wished to visit tribes beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending much of his leisure time studying natural history, he established a reputation as a zoologist and ethnographer. He reported on the Bushmen and the Amazooooloo (specifically the San, Khoi-Khoi and other peoples). In addition his expertise in zoology was sought out by Charles Darwin. He led a 6 month expedition to Port Natal, the report from which ultimately led to the founding of the colony at Natal. He was also the first Superintendent of the South African Museum from 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Mariqua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume ‘Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa’ (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since. And Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the whale shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it ‘Carcharodon’ (so that the species was sometimes called ‘Carcharodon smithii’ as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the ‘smoke-dried Andrew Smith’. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Henderson née Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeanie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’ at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as ‘a leal and competent guardian of the vernacular’, and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fascination with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1782) son of Thomas and Mary Scott ‘The Flooer o Rankleburn’. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840. Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dunfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. David Nicholson ‘Kel’ (20th C.) driving instructor in Hawick. His nickname came from the fact that he grew up in Kelso. He was well known as Clerk to the Course at the Common riding Races for many years, with many stories told of his droll humour heard over the loud-speaker system at

Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose ‘Mang Howes an’ Knowes: a Day’s Dander Thro’we Border Wa’er-Gates’. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion ‘Braid Haaick’ to the Transactions, as well as publishing ‘To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination’ (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cutlbert’s in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingles. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stirches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Chisholme.

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Lees and their children included James (b.1766).

James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Elliot in 1793. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Appletreehall. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Margaret Oliver in 1800. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in 1809. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and mill-wright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), born in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreehall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Burnet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert (b.1830); and Jessie. Most of their children were born in Cavers Parish, with Thomas recorded at Cauldmill. He is buried in old Wilton Kirkyard. James (19th C.) one of the 5 men tried for mobbing and assault during the 1837 election in Hawick. He was the only one found not guilty. James (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He was probably the first Session Clerk of the new church, serving until 1855. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Glendinning and their children included Mary (b.1822). James ‘Jamie’ (b.1805/6) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a grocer on the Howegate and then Burgh Officer and Halberdier in Hawick from about 1860. He was the Burgh Officer for a while along with ‘Tam-a-Linkin’, then with Michael Wintrup. He was noted as a wit. He also looked after the town’s poor house for many years. It is said that he was well liked in the town, and that even the beggars respected him. He married Margaret Shiell, and their children included: Agnes (b.1831), who married house painter James Smith (probably no relation); William (b.1833); James (b.1835); and Catherine (b.1838). He lived at 4 Loan according to the 1861 census. James (b.1810/1) farmer at Templehall and proprietor of Harwood Sawmill. He was at Harwood Mill in 1841 and listed there in 1861 as farmer of 1000 acres, employing 3 labourers. He was still recorded as farmer at Harwood Mill in 1868. His wife was Betty and their children included Thomas, Mina, Betty, William, James and Peter. The Jane Smith (aged about 70) living with him in 1841 was probably his mother. James (b.1823/4) painter, son of whip and thong maker John. He was a grandson of James ‘Deacon’ Dryden, father of John and grandfather of Elliot Cowan. He was Cornet in 1846, and Acting Father for his son John in 1881. He annually painted a line at Towerdyke-side to mark the level of the flood in the year of his Cornetship; this was replaced by a plaque in 1902. There is a painting (by Andrew Kennedy) of him and his Right- and Left-Hand men crossing the Teviot near Laidlaw’s Cauld. This is probably the earliest image of the Common Riding. There is also a photograph of him with the Cornets of 1845 and 1897; this makes him one of the first Cornets of whom we have a photographic image. In 1848 he married Agnes, probably daughter of Howegate grocer and Burgh Officer James Smith. Their children were: Margaret Shiel (b.c.1850), who married Allan Watt; Elizabeth (b.c.1851); Hannah; John (b.1856); Jennima Catherine (b.1863); Ann: Agnes Ellior (b.1869); Agnes Ellior (again, b.1870); and Helen (b.1873). The family lived at 8 Howegate, then 3 Green Wynd, and then 4 Loan, where they kept a ‘house of refuge’. After his wife’s death he lived at 1 Silver Street and lastly 19 Howegate. He was still alive in 1901. James Turnbull (d.1905) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Smith. In 1900 he married Margaret Murray (b.1875), who was from Galashiels. Their children were Peggie, Mary and Thomas James (born after his father’s death). He died following a bad fall from his bicycle at ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. His wife was later keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. James Dryden ‘Jamie’ (c.1881–1966) son of John and Annie Cowan, and older brother of Elliot Cowan. He was named after his great-great-grandfather ‘Deacon Dryden’, who was Cornet in 1772. He moved to Manchester with the rest of his family when he was young. He became a member of the Royal Institute of British Architects and was employed by a brewer’s in Manchester for many years. After retiring he moved back to Hawick, where he and his wife settled at 11 Backdamgate. He was a keen student of Hawick’s dialect and became known as a local historian, who was often consulted. He was also a rugby enthusiast, acting as correspondent for Manchester papers, for both Rugby Union and Rugby League. He provided the illustrations for ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. He accompanied his mother to Gallipoli in 1926, as part of an organised family memorial trip, and wrote about it for the Hawick Express; they were able to walk on the battlefield where his brother William had fallen, and he made a sketch while they were there. He was a member of the Archaeological Society Committee and contributed an article to the Transactions in 1958. He acted as Bard for Lodge 111, and was also a member of the Callants’ Club. He also was donor of the J.D. Smith bequest, which benefited several local causes. He was described as a ‘small and dapper figure’. He married his cousin Jane Hunter Scott. He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. Jenny nee Ferguson (1908–74) born in Stirling, she trained as a teacher in Dundee, being qualified as a primary teacher with a specialisation in music. She first taught in Yetholm, then moved to Manchester, after marrying local baker Robert T. The couple moved to Hawick in the late 1930s, where her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for ‘Hurrrah! for the Cornet’, to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song ‘The Jewel in the Crown’ for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she remarried, becoming Mrs. Dorward. She died at the Cottage Hospital and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th C.) doctor recorded in 1581/2 being in Riddell and also in Lilliesleaf. He witnessed the marriage contract between Helen, daughter of Alexander Gledstains and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs), as well as an instrument of sasine between Alexander Gledstains (Burgess of Selkirk) and Gavin Gledstains (who sold Stobs to Gavin Eliott). John (17th/18th C.) resident at Stirches. In 1747 he is recorded living at ‘Heap foord’. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as ‘John Smith, smith in Heip, on the lands of Wilton Common’, probably his children.

John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably: James (b.1714); Margaret (b.1715); John (b.1717) and William (b.1719). John (18th C.) blacksmith in Stirches. In 1747 he is recorded living at ‘Heap foord’. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as ‘John Smith, smith in Heap, on the lands of Stirkshaws’. In 1735 he married Margaret Dryden (1712/3–51) in Wilton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1736), who died aged 7; Margaret (b.1739); John (b.1739), who died young; Alexander (b.1741); Isobel (b.1744); and Elspeth (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Laidlaw. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was ‘Cicil Spinnie’ (or ‘Spindie’). Their children included John (b.1751), George (b.1752), James (b.1754) and Agnes (b.1756). Helen (b.1758), an unnamed son (b.1760), Margaret (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1767) may also be his children. John of Spittal (18th C.) made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. John (18th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Betty was baptised in 1790. John (18th C.) resident at Scaw Mill in Wilton Parish, when he paid the cart tax in 1791. It is possible he was the same as the Stirches blacksmith. John (d.1794) blacksmith at Heap. He must have been son of the previous blacksmith John (or else he was the same man and quite old when he died). He may have been father or grandfather of James, the blacksmith at Cauldmill and at Melgund Place, Hawick. He died at Cavers and is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. Isabel, who died in 1807, aged 27, was buried along with him, and so probably a daughter. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Chain (or ‘Chine’ or ‘Shian’) in Hawick in 1757 and had children: Christian (b.1758); James (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); William (b.1766, probably ‘Wull the Cutler’); and John (b.1768). He was listed as a weaver in the 1764 baptism, when the witnesses were clothiers Gavin and Thomas Turnbull, and also in 1766 when the whole congregation were witnesses. The witnesses in 1768 were fellow weavers Francis Cairns and Robert Chisholme. The death of his son Robert is recorded in 1798, his daughter Christian in 1800 and his wife Betty Chain in 1799. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in at least the period 1793–97, when he was working for George Douglas. He was recorded in Cavers in 1792. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isobel (b.1790), Christian (b.1792) and John (b.1794). John (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Newcastleton. He is probably the resident of the village recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1817 his inn was used as the meeting place for creditors of a bankrupt merchant in Newcastleton. He was listed as proprietor of a public house in Newcastleton on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably the John, innkeeper in Newcastleton, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastleton in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841. Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (d.1811) weaver in Hawick, son of Walter. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, ‘Wull the Cutler’. His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet’s followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties’ Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J. John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryburgh and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria’s visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Darnick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playing for the Wilton team in the late 1850s. John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role). He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’. A plumber by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1890s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet’s coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard. Rev. John (1859–1928) born at Haddington, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888. He was minister at Denholm Free Kirk from 1892 until his death. He married Agnes Hume. His daughter was a geography teacher at the High School in the 1950s and his grandson was a local vet. Joseph (19th/20th C.) gas manager in Hawick. His daughter Annie was the 2nd wife of Robert Riddle Thompson. Rev. Malcolm (1860–91) from the Gillespie area in Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1890. However, about a year and a half later he drowned while swimming on holiday at Spittal. Some of his sermons and a memorial were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. Margaret nee Murray (b.1875) daughter of Robert, carpenter at Blacklee, Hobkirk Parish. She married James, eldest son of Thomas Smith, tenant farmer at Tythecrook. They had 3 children, but her husband died as the result of an accident. She later was keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Patricius Smyth’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local. Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknowe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknowe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); Jane; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802), who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at ‘Harrot’ who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816–79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821–1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknowe. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbulls who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824–49), who married Robert, son of Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthornside; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804–86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Roberton Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greenriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdon of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull (‘Ellen’, b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) when riding past Mackside Demnings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshiel. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably a tenant of Douglas of Cavers. He may be related to the two Thomases who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) Hawick Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1751 and 1769. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Pott, resident of Borthaugh, in 1751. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or ‘Irwin’) in 1748, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Ancrum Parishes. Their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1769). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. The witnesses in 1769 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Boonaw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of ‘House and yard’, with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Silverbuthall in 1791. He married Isobel Ormiston and their children included: Esther (b.1791); and Robert (b.1794). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as ‘Swinstein’. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (b.1837/8) drystone dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet. Robert Tait (d.1958) baker and rugby player. He played prop and was capped 7 times for Scotland in 1929 and 1930. He married Jenny Ferguson, who wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! For the Cornet’. Spending some time in Manchester, in the late 1930s he returned to Hawick and took over the bakery business of W. & R. Johnstone on Bridge Street. He has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and from 2011 until 2013 served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. He was Rotary Club President from 2020. Thomas (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They may have been related to Robert, who was also named. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Murray and William Smith. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulewater. He was described in 1717 as ‘now keeper of ane puppie pleay’ (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalglish. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and may have been the same as Betty; William, who emigrated to New Zealand; and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T. Smith’ whose mother is recorded dying in Hobkirk in 1815. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) from England, in 1789 he married Margaret Paterson in Robertson Parish. Their son Thomas (b.1790) was baptised in Robertson. Thomas. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhaa near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Footowf in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth; Thomas, who emigrated to Canada; and Peter Smith, who farmed at Coldtown. Thomas Aird (b.1854) son of William and Isabell Aird, who was sister of Thomas Aird. He was brought up at Bridgehaugh near Selkirk. He became tenant farmer at Kirkton and Bedrule, remaining at Bedrule 1898–1921. He was a keen hunter and said to be a heavy man, requiring specially bred horses. He had at least 3 children, Isabel, Jessie and William (who all followed the Jedforest Hunt when young). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) tenant farmer at Tythehouse. He was a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hunt. His eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1870) son of John James, who was born in Malta, and Isabella Morrison. Although born in County Durham, he grew up in Hawick, where his father was a hand-loom weaver and later publican. He also worked as a spirit merchant in Hawick. In 1901 he married Margaret, daughter of James Blaikie. Their son John James was born in Wilton in 1902. About 1907 he emigrated to Rainy River, Ontario, his wife coming later. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) local bowler, who also laid out at least 30 greens, including the one for Wilton Bowling Club. Turnbull (1816–79) son of Peter and grandson of the first known Thomas of Rulewater. He was a farm steward, who died in Hawick. Walter (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the son of John and Betty ‘Shien’ born in Hawick Parish in 1762. He may also be the Walter who married Helen Gibson in Hawick in 1789 and had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick. His son John, also a weaver, died in 1811. Walter (b.1787/8) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Scaw Mill near the Dean. He may have been son of John, who was previously at Scaw Mill. He was recorded as miller there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was farmer there on the 1841 census, married to Janet and with daughter Mary. He was still alive in 1861. Thomas, who was living at Scaw Mill Stable in 1841 may have been his son. Walter (b.1792/3) thong maker of the High Street, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1841 he was at Miller’s Close. His wife was Janet and their children included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. William (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving John Geddes in Branxholme. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion ‘Hellin’ and their children included: George (b.1656); and Agnes (b.1660). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1690. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1721, 1723, 1726 and 1729. He may be the William who got married in Kirkton in 1712 (with no wife’s name given). His children may have included Margaret (b.1713), Marion (b.1715), George (b.1721), John (b.1723), Helen (b.1726), Euphan (b.1729), Bessie (b.1731) and Jane (b.1735). Perhaps the same William was recorded at Denholm in 1715. William ‘Wull the Cutler’ (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty ‘Chine’ and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first ‘spinning jennies’ in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the ‘Auld Brig gin’ (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by Wat Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘cut-ler & basket maker’ on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hilliesland; from her he gained possession of the ‘Gledstane Bible’, which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty biithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI].

William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Hawick. He was a blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside; Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens. William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot’s 1837 directory ‘Jas. & Wm. Smith’ are listed as blacksmiths on Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford’s 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Commonside Bankhead in 1841 and ‘Bowanhillbridge’ in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as ‘Railway Gaffer’ in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle; the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgenorth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-out authority on new Zealand natural history until his death, at New Plymouth, in his 90th year. He married Mary Foreman and had at least 7 children. Rev. William (1855–91) born in St. Fergus, Peterhead, son of a blacksmith. He studied at the Free Church College in Aberdeen and was ordained by the English Presbyterian Church in Scarborough. He then assisted at several churches, included Roberton. He came to Wolfelee Free Kirk to help while Rev. William Russell was ill in 1890. He was then inducted in 1891 (although some of the congregation objected that he was not himself in good enough health to take on the full task). He collapsed in the middle of his second sermon as minister and died about a month later, leaving a widow and young child. He married Agnes Shewan Kerr and their only child was John Kerr (b.1890). William (1893/4–1915) son of John and Annie Cowan, brother of Elliot and James. He became a calico designer in Manchester, but enlisted with the Territorials in Hawick, becoming a Corporal in the 1/4th K.O.S.B. He was killed at Gallipoli in the disastrous offensive of 12th July 1915. His name is recorded on the Helles Memorial (formerly written ‘Smycht’ and ‘Smocht’ n., arch. thick, stifling smoke, such as from burning rotten wood.

Smithfieldhaugh (smith-feeld-hawch) n. farmstead in Kirkton Parish, just south of Stobs Woodfoot, on the left-hand side of the road. It was formerly part of the farm of Turn and was already part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1643. It was recorded as just ‘Smithfield’ in 1708, when James Henderson was there. In 1788 it was recorded as ‘the remainder of Teurn or Turn’ and valued at £15 10s. It was home of the Mables in the 19th century. There were 2 separate families living here until about the early 1900s (it is ‘Smithfield-haugh’ in 1788).
acquired the Borders-based company Brooke and Amos in 1926 and later Adam Graham and the Border Motor Transport Co. As well as the Edinburgh to Carlisle service, they ran bus lines around Hawick, as well as transporting mill workers. The firm became Scottish Omnibuses in 1949 and the local fleet was known as Eastern Scottish. The colours of the bus fleet were a distinctive green, later becoming green and cream. After de-regulation of bus services, the name of the operator (and the quality of service) changed several times, e.g. to Lowland Scottish and First. The offices were in Oliver Place and the main bus depot was in Dovestone Street, which closed in the 1980s.

smuggle (smu-gul) v., arch. to carry by concealment in a ‘Baa’ game, to dispose of the ‘geg’ in a boy’s game, n., arch. a scrimmage in handball in which the ball is concealed in order to try to ‘hail’ it.

smugglin (smu-glin, -gu-lin) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomersmen’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. In 1836 the minister of Hobkirk records that ‘smuggling and illicit distilling are not now practised’.

Snaberlee (snā-bur-lee) n. area just to the east of where the Hermitage Water joins the Liddel, marked as ‘Snaberlee Rig’ on modern Ordnance Survey maps. There was formerly a small thatched cottage at Snaberlee Brae, inhabited by a lone woman until the late 19th century. In the early 1750s this was the site of open air sermons as part of the Secession movement in this parish. The farm was acquired by William Manderson from the Laird of Whithaugh and in 1811 valued at £23 8s (the origin of the name is probably from the Old Norse personal name ‘Snebjorn’; it occurs as ‘Snabirly’ on Blane’s 1662 map and is ‘Snaberly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Snaberlie’ in 1665, ‘Snaberlie’ in 1666 and ‘Snaberly’ in 1811).

The Snoot Kirk (thin-snoo'-kirk) n. Small former church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Robertson Free Church. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner’s yard at Dearnburnhaugh, before being given the ground at Parkhillhaugh by John Chisholme, with the church being built very quickly. It was reached from the main road via a footbridge. By 1852 the declining rural population meant that the church was reduced to a preaching station; it picked up again later, but always had a struggling existence. It switched from Selkirk Presbytery to Jedburgh Presbytery in 1880. The building was renovated in 1908/9, when a vestry was also built. It continued to be used as a church until 1927, and the congregation formally merged with Robertson Kirk in 1930. The land reverted to the Chisholme estate and was gifted to the Scottish Youth Hostel Association by Mr. Bruce of Chisholme in 1935. It was then used by the Youth Hostel Association, particularly as a pony trekking centre. The building succumbed to dry rot in the mid-1990s. A roll of the ministers is: John Dow 1845–52; James Logan around 1860; Thomas W. Paterson 1889–1900; Alexander Cameron 1906–11; David Brunton 1912–25.

the Snuffin (thu-sun-fin) n. ceremony taking place at the Kirkstile, near the site of the western end of the Auld Brig, early on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. Snuff is dispensed to the waiting crowd, harkening back to an old social custom of passing round the snuff box during some convenient halt in any proceedings. There is also a more fanciful story told that when the band returned from Hornshole in 1514 they found an old man partaking of snuff on the Auld Brig (long before tobacco came to the old world!). Formerly the ceremony took place on the Thursday evening on the Auld Brig, and was simply a private habit indulged in by the Burgh Officers and band members. It slowly became an accepted part of the traditions. After the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851 it was discontinued for several years, but subsequently restarted through the efforts of William Norman Kennedy, who provided a horn mull. The Thursday evening ceremony ceased in the 1870s. In 1881 the ceremony is recorded involving ‘many hundreds’. The ceremony was again revived by the Ceremonial Committee in 1887, when the sons of W.N. Kennedy undertook to again be at the Snuffing with their father’s horn mull. George O. Murray also provided a horn mull in 1889, or possibly just the snuff. Since those days the Snuffing has grown in popularity, was extended to the Friday morning, and now is restricted to the Friday morning only. The original horn mull is still in use. Since 1921 the song-singer has been in charge of distributing loose snuff from the horn, in a melee at the Kirkstile, protected by two bodyguards! This happens when the Drums and Fifes reach the site of the Auld Brig, shortly after 6 a.m. After the Song Singer reaches the Tower Knowe he throws small packets of snuff down from a window to the people below; these packets are highly sought after, even although the taking of snuff is now a thing of the past. It is traditional for the crowds to disperse to nearby hostelries for rum and milk refreshments afterwards. There is a short film clip showing the Snuffing of 1905 and others in 1929, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – ‘It was mebb a melee ootside bit in the shop itsel was leike the snuffin at the Commuin Ridin!’ [HEx1966], ‘At Snuffin’ when ee hear the drum Efter ee’ve hed milk an rum Want ti laugh, want ti greet, Want ti be nible on eer feet’ [MB], ‘A had never ever seen the Snuffin ceremony until the first time that A turned up’ [HD].

the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge (thu-su-sl-i’-in-skō’-lind-for-pro-pa-gā’-in-kris-tyu-no-lej) n. former organisation, established in 1709 to establish schools in remote areas of Scotland. This was mainly in the Highlands and Islands, but they also set up a school at Caerlenrig in 1755, as well as another near Langholm. They removed their support for the Caerlenrig school from about 1767, possibly because it was self-supporting by then.

Society for the Suppression o Beggin (su-sl-i’-for-thu-su-pre-shin-ō-be-gin) n. common name for the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. It was set up in 1822 to try to solve the problem of itinerant beggars. The association distributed funds and posted notices to discourage begging. Robert Wilson (‘Lurgie’) was in charge of distributing the funds.

Somerville (su-mur-vil) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He married Janet Anderson in 1811 and their children include: William (b.1813); and James (b.1816). The 1813 baptism was witnessed by James Somerville, Nanny Thomson and Nanny Mein. Euphemia nee Eckford (d.1928) daughter of Hawick grocer John Eckford, she married George, who was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. She lived in Denholm and bequeathed money, which was used to purchase property, including buildings around the arch on Sunnyside, where she had lived. It was hoped that rental would maintain the Somerville Trust, which supplied a nurse for Denholm, but eventually the moneys dwindled and the properties were sold. Hugh (17th/18th C.) ‘agent’ who witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1721. Mary nee Fairfax (1780–1872) daughter of Sir William Fairfax (one of Nelson’s Captains), she was born in the Manse at Jedburgh, home of her mother’s sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk’s Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804. She had a telescope made by James Veitch of Inchbonny, was well acquainted with Sir David Brewster and became a physician to Chelsea Hospital. Despite only 1 year of formal education, she educated herself at the family’s Burntisland home and became a mathematician and science writer. In fact she has the distinction of being the first person to whom the word ‘scientist’ was applied, in 1834 in a review of her book ‘On the Connexion of the Physical Sciences’. She translated and annotated Laplace’s work, hypothesized a planet perturbing the orbit of Uranus (which led to the discovery of Neptune), and wrote a popular school geography textbook. She was elected to the Royal Astronomical Society and received many other honours. She spent most of the time from 1838 living in Italy. She was a great supporter of women’s education, and Somerville College, Oxford was named after her. She also has an asteroid and lunar crater named in her honour. A history of her life was written by her daughter Martha. She is buried in Naples. Her children were: Woronzow Grieg (1805–65), a barrister; William George Grieg (1806–14); Margaret Farquhar Somerville (1813–23); Thomas Somerville (1814–15); Martha Charters Somerville (1815–79); and Mary Charlotte Somerville (1817–75). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in ye Midle’ in 1623, when Thomas Hood in Ancrum was accused of stealing 2 cows 7 years earlier from him. This was from lands at ‘Plassadge’ in England, the cattle belonging to him and Walter Scott of Todrig. It is unclear if he was tenant in Middle in Cavers Parish or elsewhere. Rev. Thomas S. (d.bef. 1710) minister of Cavers. He was son of James, who was second son of Sir James of Cambusnethan. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1666. He was presented to Cavers in 1674 and ordained there in the following year. It is recorded that the Presbytery had to swear him in at the ‘kirk-stile’, since the church and churchyard were locked up and no keys were to be had from the house of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. The Presbytery were also met by a number of women in the churchyard bearing stones, which they threatened to throw, and called them ‘soul murderers and the devil’s servants’. Given the Covenanting support in Cavers Parish, it is clear that the new Episcopalian minister was not popular! In 1689 he refused to pray for William and Mary and read the Proclamation of the Estates (i.e. refused to embrace the return to Presbyterianism), but he may have continued as minister until 1693 (precisely what the arrangement was is unclear, since there was great confusion after the Revolution). He then moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach (probably in his own lodgings) to some adherents of Episcopalianism and the exiled James II. This group included members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Baptisms are recorded by him in Hawick in 1694 and 1697. He was listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sumervaille’, living on the west-side of Hawick, on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is said to have ministered in Hawick along with Francis Scott, ousted minister of Hassendean, and a meeting house was opened at the Kirkwynd (or Playlaw) after the passing of the Act of Toleration in 1712 (but he must already have been dead by then). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands until about 1700. He married Miss Burnside and their son William was minister of Hawick (i.e., trained as a Presbyterian, despite he himself remaining true to his Episcopalian principles), while their daughter Dorothy married William Hadden, one of the masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would marry). He was for a while tutor of the young Lord Minto. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was presented to Jedburgh in 1773, translated there the following year, and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty’s Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for the accomplice of a notorious swindler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including ‘Candid Thought on American Independence’ (1780), ‘The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III’ (1792), ‘Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain’ (1793), ‘The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality’ (1793) and ‘The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne’ (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book ‘My own life and times 1741–1814’ (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters (daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland), who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his cousin Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar's Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Museslee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green. Consul General at Medeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was 'father of the church', i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton; the place was known as Wormington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was 'Willelmus de Somerville' when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691–1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731–57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary's in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson's 'Memories of Hawick'. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Grierson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said to be a great beauty. Their children included: Agnes (b.1735); James (b.1740), who may have died young; Thomas (b.1741), who became minister at Jedburgh; Jean (b.1742), who probably also died young; William (b.1744), who probably also did not survive; Janet (b.1745); and Helen. The witness in 1741 was schoolmaster James Anderson and the witnesses in 1742 were Francis Gledstains and Robert Boyd (the Bailies at the time). His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitehaugh, described as 'a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80', and she died in 1759. He is probably the 'Mr. Somervell' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758 (although probably deceased before then). It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the 'little round fat oily man of God' of James Thomson's 'Castle of Indolence', but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdoch. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals from about 1807–11. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1812. In 1812 he became deputy inspector of army hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife's scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife's uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there. William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller's Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled 'Somervell', 'Somervell', 'Sumerval', 'Sumervel', 'Summervale', etc. in early records). the Somerville Buildins (thu-nu-mur-vib-din-z) n. modern name for a block of houses

Solway Moss (söl-wä-mos) n. level, boggy area between Longtown and Gretna. It was the site of a battle in 1542, where the English army under Sir Thomas Wharton routed the much larger Scottish army. Only a small number of men were killed, with many Scots (including the Borderers apparently) surrendering to the English, and some drowning in flight. It is said that this defeat contributed to the death of James V.

the Sooth (thin-sooth) n. formerly, the South of Scotland district Rugby Union team, which existed through most of the 20th century, and is effectively replaced by ‘the Borders’ team.

Sooth Berryfell (sooth-be-ree-fel) n. another name for the main farm at Berryfell.

Sooth Bright Street (sooth-bri’-stree) n. South Bright Street, a street in the West End off Bright Street. The houses were built in 1927, but after restoration work in 1973 they were found to be unsafe and were demolished in 1975. The street was named after statesman and social reformer John Bright.

Sooth Croft Park (sooth-kroft-pawrk) n. Southcroft Park, former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfcleef and also contains the former Free Church here. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1876. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. An old out-house in the area was called Peden’s Barn and connected with Covenanter. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapiere blade, and a socketed axe. Other items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammerhead and 3 small whorls of polished green stone. The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. ‘Souden Kirk: a Border shrine’ was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of ‘Souden’, the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English ‘suth dun’, meaning simply ‘the southern hill’ or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as ‘Soudon’ in 1275 and has various related forms, including ‘Sowdon’ in 1404, ‘Sowdon’ in 1455, ‘Sowdone’ in 1484/5, ‘sowdene’ in 1488/9, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1491/2, ‘Sodane’ in 1538, ‘Sodene’ in 1539, transcribed as ‘Fowden’ in 1544, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1559, ‘Suddon’ in 1575, ‘Suddum’ in 1586, ‘Sudan’ in 1638, ‘Suddun’ in 1689 and ‘Souden’ in 1701; ‘Soudan K.’ is marked on Morgan’s 1687 map of Scotland and ‘K. of Soudann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglases, passing to Scott... of Branxholme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. The ruins of this original ‘Souden Kirk’ stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthed stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper’s coffin was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae. The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedward from 1566. The church was linked with Edgerston 1960–73, united formally with Hobkirk in 1988 and then linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1988–97. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobkirk). The oldest communion token is heart-shaped and made of lead. A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam, Parson in 1296; Thomas Forest, Rector in 1404; Robert Penwen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Richard, Parson in 1526/7; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; John Dargavel 1667–70; George Bapte 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96 (it is marked ‘Soudan K.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Soothdean Law (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-law) n. Southdean Law, hill near Southdean and also formerly the name of a farm there. In 1669 the tenants were Andrew Douglas and Robert Laidlaw. The hill is on the left hand side of the A6088. It reaches a height of 300 m and contains a fort and settlement, as well as having a triangulation pillar, all on the western peak. The fort consists of a pear-shaped enclosure around the summit, about 50 m by 30 m, and is probably from the early Iron Age (perhaps the first millennium B.C.E.). There is an annex to the north-east of the main enclosure, and this is probably later. In this area there are also the remains of 11 stone-walled houses (from 4.5 to 8 m in diameter) and several enclosures, perhaps dating to the 2nd, 3rd or 4th century. The surrounding slopes contain evidence of a field-system and rig lines, some running right up to the boundaries of the fort, and hence probably of a similar age. There are also the remains of an old building and enclosure to the north-west, in the direction of Slack’s Tower. 2 Bronze Age socketed axes were found near here, but their location is unknown (it is ‘Sudenlaw’ and ‘Souden Law’ in 1669).

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mill) n. former corn mill in Southdean Parish, situated on a lade off the Jed Water, just to the east of Chesters village. It was valued at £5 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, 1539 and 1541. Patrick, Janet and Marion Oliver were joint tenants there in 1541, with William and Marion (probably also Oliver, but surname not given) renting one third of the farm. James Shiel was tenant there in the 1680s and 90s. It is referred to in 1738 by the Duke of Douglas’s factor, shortly after it had burned down. Walter Riddell was tenant there in 1797. George Bell was miller and farmer there in 1866. ‘Southdeanmillhead’ is recorded in the late 18th century. There is still a farm in the same location, with evidence of its former use as a corn mill and a saw mill (it is ‘molendini de Sowden’ in 1538, ‘molendini de Sowdene’ in 1539, ‘Sodenmylne’ and ‘molendini de Soden’ in 1541, ‘suden milne’ in 1681 and ‘Suden Mylne’ in 1694).
Soothdean Parish

Soothdean Parish (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-pa-reesh) n. Southdean Parish, lying along the upper banks of the Jed, crossed by the A6088 road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It is also sometimes referred to as Chesters Parish. The Parish is about 12 miles by 7 miles in size, and is bounded by Jedburgh, Oxnam, Castleton, Hobkirk and part of Northumberland. It was formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. In early times it was called ‘Suden’, and pronounced that way until fairly recently. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at £5500. In 1678 the lands had the same value, split between the Marquess of Douglas and Gilbert Elliott of Wolvelee. It received part of the former Abbotrule Parish in 1777 (including the area having the former church), with a small part moved from Hobkirk in 1793. However, a northern section (bordering on Bedrule, including Gatehousecote and Ruletownhead) was later transferred to Hobkirk Parish. It was valued at about £6500 in 1811. Some of the Cheviots are in the Parish, and the highest hills are Carter Fell, Carlintootb Fells, Peel Fell and Wolvelee Hill. Chesters is the main settlement, although it really only grew in the 19th century. The Parish contains a great many ancient forts, remains of peel towers, etc. There are Parish Council books for 1851–1930 in the Borders Archive and the Parish records date back to 1696. In 1843 there were in the Parish: 4 heritors; 20 larger and 18 smaller tenants; about 17,000 sheep; and one ‘alehouse’ at the Carter Bar. The register of births begins in 1696 (with a gap 1700–37 and also in the 1740s) and marriages and deaths in 1736 (but also with gaps); registration was irregular for births, but fairly complete for the proclamation of banns (it is ‘Soudon Parioch’ in 1694).

Soothdeanrig (sooth-deen-rig) n. Southdeanrig, former farmstead near Northhouse, lying on part of Southdean Rig, between the Cromrig and Southdean Burns, south of the Teviot. The lands were included in a set leased by Walter Scott of Branxholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 and stated to be in the Lairsdhip of ‘Ringwoodfield’. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Southcothrig’ (along with ‘Vestcrotig’ and ‘Boburg’) where the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson is recorded in 1540. ‘The gudman of Syntoun and Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup’ (probably Walter Scott of Synton and Archibald Elliot of Thordishesope) rented these lands, along with Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey in 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Satchells (his father or grandfather probably) received the lands of ‘Southinrig’ for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was recorded as part of the land of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. William Clerk was there in 1708. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties, at that point covering 1017 acres and bounded by Northhouse, Phaup, Binks, Bowanhill and Còiterscleuch. James Griev was recorded there in at least 1723–35 and William Main in 1724–29. In 1744 the lands were leased by Thomas Elliot, farmer at Harwood. William Elliot was there in 1748–53. James Grieve was tenant in 1751 and Walter Elliot was there in 1757. Gideon Scott was there in 1785 and John Turnbull was herd 1785–97. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdinryg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1621, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1634, ‘Soudenrig’ in 1660, ‘Suddernig’ in 1661, ‘Suidinrig’ in 1663, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1693, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1708 and ‘Southdean rigg’ in 1723; it appears on Blaen’s 1654 map as ‘Suddarig’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrig’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanridge’; see also Soothinrig).

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of the main A6088, being essentially the northern shoulder of Charlie’s Knowe. The area is rich in architectural remains, around the Carter Burn, as well as further north to Jordan Sike. In particular there are apparent remains of buildings within enclosures.
Soothfield

Soothfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Soothfield’ and ‘Over Soothfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1884 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Adam Laidlaw was there in 1711. Grieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1888, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum’s collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (marked as ‘N. Southfield’ and O. Southfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means ‘the south field’, but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common; there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

Soothfield Gate

Soothfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troutlawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe – ‘...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I’ll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name’ [JYH] (also written ‘Southfieldgate’; it is marked ‘Southfieldgate ruins of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Sooth Hermitage Street

Soothinrig

Soothinrig is also used for the general area around the Sooth Kirk (thu-sooth-kirk) n. formerly used in Newcastleton for the United Presbyterian Church after it united with the Church of Scotland in 1929. The name was used to distinguish it from the ‘Park Kirk’.

Sooth Liddle Street

Sooth Port

Sooth Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastleton. It was recorded being ‘taken down’ in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Soothron

Soothron is a former name for lands at Soothdie Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Colterscleuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, and given for his services to the Duke (see also Soothdeanrig).

Sooth Synton

Sooth Synton is also used to distinguish it from ‘North Synton’ on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s.
Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. ‘Dauid Armstrong de Sourby’ witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch farms in 1718, when it covered 329 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Glendivan, Howgill, Middle and Over Wrae, Staplegordon, lands of the Laird of Rennaldburn and Burnfoot in Westerkirk. Thomas Armstrong leased the farm in 1735. William Borthwick was there in at least 1785–90, Mrs. Borthwick in 1794 and Alexander Borthwick in 1797. Robert Hardie was farmer in 1841 and D. Hardie in 1868. Henry Scott Riddell was born here in a shepherd’s cottage which stood in the plantation near the bridge. A plaque on the bridge commemorates the site. ‘Sorbie Haas’ was the former name used for the road from the Ewes valley to Westerkirk (the same name occurs elsewhere in Scottish and Northern England; it is ‘Sourbi’ in 1462 and ‘Sourby’ in 1456; it is ‘Sourby’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and ‘Sorby’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near to Sorbietrees. In the late 1100s Race Fitz Malger granted the whole ‘shaw’ there, and 1 acre next to the shaw, with pasture for 40 cows and their calves, 2 bulls, 10 oxen and 2 horses. This was together with half of the land of Shortbutts, which was also in the territory of Sorbie. The farm of Abbotshaws may recall this early land transfer (it was ‘Sourebi’ in the late 12th century).

Sorbie Hass (sor-bee-hass) n. name used for the road winding between Sorbie and Staplegordon. This was the main route through the lower Ewes valley to the Langholm area until 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Ewes road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written ‘Haas’, the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Sorbietreis (sor-bee-triz) n. Sorbietrees, farm about 3 miles south of Newcastleton. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buceluch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and ‘Demmebeck’. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ra-garth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepher here perished during the ‘Go-nial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – ‘A wailing sugh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter’d pines of Sorbietrees’ [HNo], ‘To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi’ news that Wull was deid, And croaws nicht leee in peace at last Frae Flatt to Tweeden-heid . . .’ [DH] (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse ‘saurr’ and Old English ‘treow’, meaning ‘trees at the muddy farm’; it first appears as ‘Sourby’ in 1456, but could be the ‘Southby’ recorded in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale; it is ‘Sorbe et Sorbietrees’ in 1541, sorner (sör-nur) n., arch. someone who lives off their neighbours, a scrounger – ‘...the country suffered sadly from bands of thieves, and sorners fleeing from labour and living in plenty upon the fruit of other men’s labour’[WNK], ‘The land was simply swarming with beggars and sorners, the latter of whom extorted food or help by terrorizing the dwellers in lonely farms and cottages’[JJV].

Soutra Aisle (soo-tra-I-yul) n. site of the Soutra mediaeval hospital, where a section of the Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the former Church.

Soutra Hospital (soo-tra-hos-pi’-ul) n. a mediaeval hospital, located on high ground about 40 miles from Hawick, just off the A68, also known as ‘Soltre’. It was founded by Malcolm IV in 1164 for the accommodation of travellers and pilgrims and the treatment of the sick and poor of the district. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A spring near there was known as the Trinity Well, and visited by many for its supposed healing powers. It was run by the Augustinian monks from the 12th century until around 1650, being annexed in 1462 to Trinity College and Hospital, Edinburgh. The superior was referred to as the ‘Magister’ or Master. It fell into ruin after the Reformation, and Trinity College Church and Hospital itself was demolished in 1848 (to make way for the railway). It was said that much of the ruins were used locally for building materials in the early 19th century. Excavations at Soutra have provided a wealth of evidence relating to mediaeval medicine, including over 300 identified plant species. The hospital was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, ‘Soutra Croft’. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre’ and variants).

Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as ‘vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelandis’ and in 1578 as ‘Sowtre landis in Hawik’.

spelleen (spe-leen) n., arch. spelling – ‘Oo’ve hed ever sae mony ill coonts an ill spelleens at the skuil the day, bit A got thum aa richt’ [ECS].

Spence (spens) n. Alan (12th/13th C.) listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Alano spens’. It seems likely that he was somehow associated with Lilliesleaf. Barry L. (1950/1–2017) son of William, he ran Spence’s Music Shop for more than half a century, taking over from his father in 1966. Starting at the height of Beatlemania, he was the main person from whom Terries bought hit records through the last decades of the 20th century and into the 21st. A blues fan himself, he stocked all kinds of music. He was a long-standing member of the Teviotdale Harriers. His wife is Margaret and their children Adrienne and Sandi. John of Coudie (d.1573) son of James, he became a Lord Advocate in Scotland. He was also Queen’s Advocate to Mary, Queen of Scots, from 1555. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scotts and the Kers and also signed the further bond of 1568/9. Rev. John (19th C.) minister at Denholm Congregational Kirk 1844–46. In 1844 he married Ann Drew of Portobello. Rev. John Ryrie (b.1880) born in Helensburgh, son of James and Jane Ryrie. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1901 and B.D. in 1905, and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1905. He became assistant at South Leith before being ordained as minister at Southdean in 1907. He remained there until 1950. He married Janet, daughter of James Currie and their children included James (b.1911). Matthew (16th C.) farmer at Weens. His barn and yard are mentioned in the 1562 document regarding the Barony of Feu-Rule.

Spence’s (spen-seez) n. Spence’s Music Shop at 4 Buccleuch Street, which has been Hawick’s main supplier of recorded music, instruments and equipment from 1966. The business was started by William Spence in Drumlanrig Square in 1962 before moving to its familiar location. William’s son Barry retired in 2017.

Spender (spen-dur) n. Robert ‘Rab’ (17th C.) recorded on a gravestone in Abbotrule. His wife ‘Margat ‘Turnbul’ was commemorated on a stone that was set into the east window of the ruined church, but is now not discernible.

sperk (sperk) n. a spark – ‘ee think ee’re a bright sperk div ee?’; v. to spark – ‘And the roar of the pitie was in their mouthes. And its fire was sperrkin i’ their ey’n’ [JTe], ‘...whaese heidmaister Robert Wood sperrked off his lifelong interest in poetry’ [IWL], to issue, fly out, to sputter (as grease in cooking), to spatter.

sperkit (sper-ki, -ki) pp., poet. sparked – ‘The kerlyn’s eye it sperkyt wi’ joy, Her leathery chaftis grew wide ... ’ [JTe].

the Spetch (thur-spech) n. the Spetchman’s (or Spetchmond) Haugh, an area of the Teviot above the Laurie Bridge, a favourite area for bathing in the Summer – ‘Yer great-great-grannie’s great-great-grannie Bathed in my Spetch in sunshine balmy ... ’ [WP], ‘...Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa’ ’ [IWL].

the Spetchman’s Haugh (thur-spech-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It may have been pronounced as ‘spetchin’ in a transcript from 1764 (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Spectch’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler in some dialects).

the Spetchman’s Sang (thur-spech-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

spewin (spew-in) adj. extremely bad-tempered – ‘spewin o ill-naitur’.

the Spider Hoose (thur-spI-dur-hoos) n. name for an outbuilding at Brauxholme. Tradition says that it was either named after one of the Duke of Buccleuch’s favourite horses, or after a story connected with Wullie Craw climbing up to its rafters. It is recorded as ‘Spider’s House’ in the Ordnance Survey Name Book and map of 1859, to the west of the castle ruins.

Spiers (speerz) n. Rev. George pastor of Hawick Baptist Church around the 1950s. He was also minister at Shotts in Glasgow.
spile (spil, spi-ul) v., arch. to spoil – ‘...for breach of Sabbath by gutting herring in the evening thereof, qch he ingeniously acknowledged, thinking they would spile if lying unguetted until ye Monday’ [PR1712].

spill (spil) v., arch. to spoil, damage, ruin something – ‘...and gif any wobstar spillies, and makes not sufficient work after tryell, under the pane of £10 to the Bailies, and satisfaction to the party owner thereof’ [BR1657].

Spinnie Bank (spi-nez-bawngk) n. area on the west side of the Liddel Water just north of Langhaugh, passed through by Spinnie Sike.

Spinnie Sike (spi-ne) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Hermitage Water near Netherraw. There are the remains of 2 stock enclosures and sheep stell to the south of the stream. There was once a blacksmith’s shop at ‘Spinniesbank-End’.

spinniesbank (spi-neez-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map just to the north of Langhaugh, and must have been located on Spinnie Sike.

spinnin (spi-nin) n. the industry of spinning yarn in Hawick grew up in the early 18th century and became fully established in the 1750s. Women would spin on the ‘muckle wheel’ and the yarn was carried on horseback to places such as Kendall, Boroughbridge (Yorkshire) and Stirling. The spinning wheel held a prominent place in households into the early 19th century, a wheel being the main gift for a new bride. The two main types were the ‘little wheel’ and the ‘meikle (or muckle) wheel’, an example of the former from Crumhaughhill being in the Museum. In 1733 a spinning school was opened in Hawick and in 1734 a spinning mistress was hired from England to take charge of the school, with some funding from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stirches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1798. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-ne) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the ‘spinning mule’, invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick’s spinning mills.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-ne) n., arch. a cranefly, ‘daddy longlegs’, a toy made with a piece of pipe-stem and a match, which spins by twisting a thread attached to the middle of the match and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

spinnle (spi-nul) n. a spindle – ‘And the yairns whusle throwe the hacks Frae spinnle heavy banks’ [WL].

the Spion Kop (thu-spi-in-kop) n. former drinking club based on the Loan from about 1890 (named after the mountain in Natal, which was the scene of a defeat of the British by the Boers in 1900, and Dutch for ‘Look-out Hill’).

spitefi (spi-fi) adj. spiteful – ‘...Her mither’s choice, to be fair to the lass, For a spitefu’ dame was Herodias’ [WL] (also written ‘spitefu’).

spite o (spit-o) prep., arch. in spite of – ‘...To drive care awa, spite o’ frost, wund, an’ snaw, The young fellows roond gathert there, man’ [JoHa], ‘Yet spite o’ their snortin’ an’ snuffin’...’ [JoHa], ‘...Her mither’s choice, to ‘Yet, spite o’ needle, yarn an’ clout, His waulit hair was keekin’ out’ [RDW].

spither (spi-thur) n., poet. empty speech, frothy talk – ‘...Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swither O’ with and glee’, ‘Wha valu’d not your college spither, A rigmarie’ [JR] (this word is obscure).

Spittal (spi-ul) n. fishing village south of Berwick that became a seaside resort town in the 19th century – ‘Thae browt ‘im a mount for heiz the Spion Kop just half the size o’ a donkey at Spittal’ [MB]. Also a local name for Spittal-on-Rule and other former hospitals, e.g. Smallholm Spittal.

Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Brig (spi-ul-brig) n. bridge at Spittal-on-Rule, carrying the A698 across the Rule Water. The original bridge was built in 1748 by the

Douglases of Cavers and stands just to the north of the modern bridge.

Spittalflatt (spi'-ul-flaw') n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Spittalflatt’ in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotshaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi'-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi'-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi'-ul-on-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbulls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woolen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen) and John Scott was also recorded there in the same year. The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the ‘advocation and gift of the kirk of Spitaill’ was listed among the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the 18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby ‘Dead Haugh’ the Turnbulls are supposed to have begged the King’s forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the ‘advocation of the church’ was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land ‘in terris hospitalis de Rowe, super lie Harparhill’ was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam Leyden was there in 1721, Alexander Gowk in 1726, John Bunyan in 1727–30, John Veitch in 1727, James Bunyan in 1728, William Veitch in 1729–30 and William Douglas in 1733–44. John Fairbairn was there in 1781. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murays, Veitches and Bunyans, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. Thomas Bunyan was there in 1795. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797, John Turnbull in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or ‘Leper’) Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; there are many places in Scotland and northern England that are also called ‘Spittal’ for the same reason; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘villa de spittale’ in 1502, ‘Spittale’ in 1508, ‘Spittайл’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, ‘Rowle Spittell’ in 1545, ‘the Spytill, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroull’ in 1558, ‘Spytall of Roule’ in 1563, ‘Spittroull’ in 1576/7, ‘Roull Spittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowlespittell’ in 1610, ‘Rowllsppittle’ in 1619 and ‘Spitlle’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Spittell’.

Spittal Plantin (spla‘-ul-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittalrule see Spittal-on-Rule

Spittal Tower (spla‘-ul-tol) n. former toll-house at Spittal-on-Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky Hoose’.

Spittalton (spla‘-ul-toon) n. lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Spteltoon’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spla‘-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbuls in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Bonjedward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglases of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Murrays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. John Murray was a gardener living there in 1715. [blank] Clerk was there in 1742 and Robert Cavers in 1778. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘tours of Roulwode’ in 1622 and ‘Tower’ in 1715; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map simply as ‘Tour’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Tourr’).

spitter (spla‘-ur) n., arch. a light shower of rain or snow, small drops, hence drivel – ‘Wha valu’d not your college spitter’ [JR], v., arch. to rain lightly (also written ‘spither’).

spittery (spla‘-ur, spi-tu-re) adj., arch. consisting of small, driving particles (said of snow), sputtering (said of a fire).

Spittle see Spittal-on-Rule

splainge (spla‘ing, -rng) n., arch. a splash of mud, v., arch. to besmar with mud, sprinkle, splash, sprawl – ‘Cf. ti splainge, which gives more the impression of besmearing (as painting or plastering roughly) by means of a brush or other agent’ [ECS] (also ‘splaing’; cf. slaing).

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. David of that Ilk (d.c.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hoppringle. He was probably the ‘Spottiswod of that ilk’ who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He married Katherine Pringle and Jane Brounfield of Hardacres. He was succeeded by his son Ninian.

James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankilburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is ‘rector ecclesiæ de Rankilburn’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1558 as a rector of the church of Hawick, along with John Sandilands. This is probably the same man who was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560, son of William of Spottiswood (who was killed at Flodden). This John (1510–85) graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of Lothian; he married Beatrix, daughter of Patrick Crichton of Lughton and Gilmerton and had children: John, who succeeded as minister of mid-Calder; James, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland; William; Rachel, who married James Tennent of Linhouse; and Judith. John (1565–1639) son of the minister of Calder, he went to Glasgow University at age 12 or 13, graduated in 1581, and became a favourite churchman of James VI. He was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1603 and translated to St. Andrews in 1615. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since he granted a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw, Crawknoe and Clews in 1606 and another to John Turnbull for the lands of Barnhills in 1607. He was Moderator at the Assembly that abolished the presbytery. He later became Primate of Scotland and Lord Chancellor of Scotland. He crowned Charles I at Holyrood in 1633. He objected to the Covenant, escaped to England, was deposed and died in London, being buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Rachel, daughter of David Lindsay, Bishop of Ross. His children were: Anne; Sir John; and Sir Robert. Rev. Robert (c.1634–1696) graduating from Glasgow University in 1654, he became minister at Temple in 1663 and was translated to Crichton in 1676. He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test. However, he was translated to Abbotrule in 1687, but may only have been minister there for a very short time. He seems to have been a Presbyterian minister, who survived through the Episcopalian years past the Revolution. His wife’s name is not recorded, but their children included: Jean; Alexander, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1677; Robert, who also became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, in 1681; and Elizabeth, who was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1696 (spelled ‘Spotswood’ and variants).

Spoutburn Park (spow'-burn-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779, 1788 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a joint value of £43 1s 6d. In 1780 it was recorded being on the western boundary of Lillielaw Park; this suggests that the stream passing through Minto Glen may have been known as Spout Burn.

Spoutgills (spow'-gilz) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish marked on Stobie’s 1770 maps, with ‘Spoutgillfoot’ just to the north. It is on a stream to the south of the Tweed Burn, perhaps corresponding to the modern Jordan Sike, in which case it would be essentially the same as Blinkbonny. John Armstrong died there in 1756 and is buried at Teviothead. Thomas Beattie lived there with his family in the 1770s and 80s.

Springbank (spring-bawngk) n. house at the foot of Dickson Street, built in the early part of the 19th century. It was the home of 2 generations of hosier manufacturer Alexander Laings. It took its name from a spring coming down from a former pond in Dickson Street.
Sprot

Sprot (sprō′) n., arch. the withered stump of a plant – ‘Sprot, The end of a grain, or branch blown from a growing tree, in consequence of high winds, Roxb.’ [JoJ], a chip, wood shaving (see also spret).

Sprot (sprō′) n. Edward William of Drygrange (1846–98) younger surviving son of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) brother of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) brother of Mark. In 1883 she gave money to build 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprots of Riddell. John (1775–1817) son of James and Frances Blair, descended from merchants in Edinburgh. He lived at King’s Road. Clapham Park, London. He made his fortune in the East India Company and provided for his 2 sons (who may have been minors when he died). In 1801 he married his cousin Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield. Their children (baptised in Holborn, Clapham and Streatham) included: Mark (1802–81), who became owner of Riddell; James (b.1804), who (with an amusing coincidence of names) bought the Spott estate near Dunbar; Marion (b.1805); Janet (b.1809); Mary (1811–46), who married Sir William Maxwell; and Caroline Isabella (1817–57), who married Capt. William Fordyce Blair. It is unclear whether he purchased Riddell before his death, or whether that was done by his executors on behalf of his son Mark. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and Germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. Despite reaching a higher rank, he is often referred to as ‘Colonel’, this being from his position as honorary colonel of Princess Louise’s Argyll and Southern Highlanders. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessuden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (1880–1964), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (1881–1946); Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (1887–1975); Gertrude Gladys Violet (1888–1966); and Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote ‘History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell’. He also wrote several military pamphlets. Maj. John Mark Francis ‘Mark’ of Muselee and Riddell (1881–1946) son of Lt.-Gen. John. He gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards (or ‘Greys’). He presented his regiment with the Sprot Cup in 1906 for an annual steeple chase race. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. His eldest son was John, who succeeded.
Their daughter Cecilia Doriel married Sir William Whitelaw and became Viscountess Whitelaw. Maj. John ‘Jock’ (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was educated in Buckinghamshire and Kent and joined the British Linen Bank in Edinburgh, later working for the International Paint and Compositions Company in London. He served with the Territorial Army and during WWII was a lieutenant at Drem Airfield, an intelligence officer in St. Boswells, a captain in charge of Italian prisoners of war in Galashiels and then was with special forces in India. He was stationed in Galashiels when Riddell House burned down in 1943. After the War he modernised the Riddell estate, developing the woodland in particular. He also served on Roxburghshire County Council. He was on the Royal Company of Archers and was an elder of Lilliesleaf Kirk. He also chaired the National Farmers’ Union in Selkirkshire, the Co-operative Forestry Society and the Scottish Woodland Owners’ Association. He was awarded the M.B.E. for his role as Vice-Chairman of the Electricity Consultative Council for the South of Scotland. He became interested in the history and the history of Roxburghshire. The lands there were once held by the Cranstons and later came into possessions of the Kers. A quarry in that region provided the white freestone used for much of the building in the area (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘Sprow’s farmstead’; it occurs in the early 12th century as ‘Sprostona’ and is ‘Sprowistoun’ in 1403).

Sprouston (sproos-tin) n. village a few miles north-east of Kelso. It is also the name of the parish, being at the extreme north-eastern end of Roxburghshire. S.S. Mary an David

S.S. Mary an David (sintz-mā-ree-an-dā-vid) n. Roman Catholic Chapel at 15 Buccleuch Street. This was the first Catholic church in Hawick since the Reformation, made necessary largely by the arrival of Irish workers, who had been meeting informally through the 1820s and 1830s. Fr. William Wallace of Traquair worked to build the church and purchased land in 1841. This plot (later designated 15 Buccleuch Street) was bought from William Wilson, between the Subscription Rooms and the meeting house of the Society of Friends. The land formerly held several 2-storey buildings, which were demolished. The foundation stone was laid in June 1843 (amid inclement weather), officiated by Fr. Wallace himself, flanked by the 2 Bailies. It was opened by Bishop Gillis the following year, as well as several other priests in attendance, as well as Earl and Lady Traquair and the choir of St. Mary’s. It original seated 400, the furnishings, altar and pulpit being given by the Earl of Traquair. When erected it was the only Catholic church between Edinburgh and Carlisle. A house for the priest was built in 1850/1 on the property immediately to the south and the associated school was started in 1854 (later with a separate building behind the Chapel on Buccleuch Terrace). A side aisle on the south was constructed in 1879, increasing the seatings by about a factor of 2. The Statue of the Sacred Heart was unveiled in 1913 and a War Memorial in 1920. The adjoining property (built as the Subscription Rooms) was purchased in the 1920s, and opened by Archbishop McDonald as the new Halls in 1930. The ornamental facade was removed in 1967 when renovations extended the front by a few feet. For much of the 20th century there was an assistant in Hawick, as well as the Priest. The Scottish Catholic Archives have records covering the period 1793–1939 and there are marriage and birth records from 1847 in the National Archives. The roll of the priesthood is: James Monaghan 1846–47; Patrick Taggart 1847–87; Patrick Shivers 1887–92; John Stevenson Lyle 1892–1912; George H. Bennett 1912–18; Thomas Gillon 1918–24; Edward Mellon 1924–30; Dominic Hart 1930–38; Daniel Kelly 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1942–47; James K. Birnie 1947–56; Peter Higgins 1956–86; Michael Sloan 1986–??; Jeremy Bath 2003–2008; Michael John Galbraith 2008–. A roll of the assistants is: Andrew J. Cameron 1936–38; James G. Harold 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1941–42; Eric Gordon 1942–45; Thomas Watt 1945–46; Thomas Engelen 1946–47; Charles Brodie 1947–50; Eric Barber 1950–55; Liam O’Maloney 1955–56; John F. St. Abb’s (sin’-awbz) n. Borders town on the coast north of Eyemouth with the specular St. Abb’s Head nearby. It has a picturesque harbour and one of the few stretches of sandy beach in the area (named after St. Ebbe, or Abba, daughter of King Æthelfrith, who founded the nearby Coldingham Priory in 616).

St. Abb’s Heid (sin’-awbz-heed) n. promontory, about 310 feet high, near St. Abb’s. It is very picturesque, a favourite place for bird watchers (now a nature reserve) and with several nearby prehistoric camps.

Stable (stā-bul) n. Dougal (15th/16th C.) probably name of the ‘Dougal Stible’ recorded as a son to Thomas Rutherford in the Grange when listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Brauxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran.

stachert (sta-chur’) pp., poet. staggered, stumbled – ‘He limpit and stachert sae when he did gang, Wi’ a loot and a stop, syne a bob and a bang’ [JoHa].

stack (stawk) pp., arch. stuck – ‘However, tae that she stack wi’ this promise …’ [JEDM], ‘… ma serk was drackeet wui weet till it stack ti ma verra back’ [ECS] (also written ‘staak’; this was the past tense of ‘stick’, with the past participle form being stucken).

stackit (stawk-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. stacked – ‘When simmer came blythesome I milked the yowes, Or stackit the peats on the crane-cover’d flowes’ [JoHa].

stack-yaird (stawk-yärd) n., arch. a yard used for stacking peat or possibly harvested crops – ‘…did freely confess the taking away from Mr Robert Cunningham, minister of Wilton, three burdens of oat straw out of the stacke yaird’ [BR1700], ‘…they would find the fowls ‘under the muckle thorn-bush i’ the stack-yard’’ [EM1820].

Stafford *(staw-furd) n. Joseph ‘Joe’ (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He may have married Janet Smith in Galashiels in 1864. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. John (19th C.) left Hawick to be a soldier in India in the 19th century, writing ‘The Hawick ‘Callants’ Farewell’ before leaving. He had been involved in the local Good Templar movement. John (1840/1–1910) Hawick man who was the last hosier to operate in Denholm. He worked in a building to the east of the Fox and Hounds. His wife was Christina Wallace, who died in 1914, aged 74.

staggerin bob (staw-ge-rin-bob) n., arch. a newly born calf, so-called because it is unsteady on its legs, also the veal from this (noted by J. Jamieson as a Teviotdale phrase).

the Stag’s Heid (thu-stawgz-heed) n. the Stag’s Head Bar, on the right-hand side of Drumlanrig Square since the late 19th century. It was formerly Gotterson’s Innery and probably went by other names.

staig (stäg) n., arch. a young horse, colt or filly, especially an unbroken one – ‘God send the land deliverance Fae every reaving, riding Scot: We’ll sune hae neither cow nor ewe, We’ll sune hae neither staig nor stot’ [LHTB].

stainch (stänch) n., arch. to staunch, stop, check the flow.

Stainton *(stän-‘in) n. Alexander ‘Elec the Bellman’ (1853/4–1926) son of Samuel, he was Hawick’s last Bellman, effectively acting as Town Crier. He lived on Dickson Street or perhaps 10 Wilton Crescent. He may be the same Alexander who was Precentor at the East Bank Kirk. He was celebrated in a poem by William Peffers – ‘A wee bit earnest, faithfu’ man, Far sma’er than his voice. Ye’d wonder how he can contain Sic devastatin’ noise’ [WP]. He can also be seen in a portrait by ‘Elliot’. A photograph of him used to hang in the staircase at Arburt Armstrong’s store. He also appears in a film clip at the Vernal Sports in 1909/10, wearing a distinctive ‘yauchting-style’ hat. Private Thomas R. Stain- ton (1896/7–17) of the Black Watch was probably his son. James (b.1800/1) from England, he was a nail maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 8 O’Connell Street and in 1861 was a ‘Nailmaker Master’ at 2 Melgund Place, employing 1 man. His 1st wife died in 1840 and his 2nd wife was Janet, from Kirkton. Their children included Elizabeth. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1850 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other ‘rat-tening’ crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huddersfield. Samuel ‘Sam’ (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Saxhorn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woolen frameworker. He was living at 12 O’Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Sarah Sales and their children included: James; John; Robert; Alexander (‘Elec the Bellman’); Ann (b.1856); Agnes (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1860); Sarah (b.1862); Sarah Elizabeth (b.1864); George Frederick Handel (b.1867); and Charlotte (b.1869) (written ‘Stenton’ and variants).

Stalker (staw-kur) n. Rev. James (d. 1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King’s College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Chanonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent’s son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village. Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

stam (stawm) v., arch. to stamp along, stumble, stagger – ‘Wi’ giddy pates an’ yill-stain’d claes, A’ hamewards they gae stammin’’ [JoHa] (see also stamml). stammack (staw-muk) n., poet. stomach, appetite – ‘The master’s hearte raise to his hass, His stomach vow’d to flynch’ [JTe], ‘Syne, when the stammack’s satisfied, The twae heids cry, ‘Weel met!’’ [DH] (also written ‘stambah’). stammel (staw-mul) v., arch. to stumble, walk with a hobbling gait, to stumble upon something – ‘I stammled in upon them when they were courtin’, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (see also stam stammle and stumme).

Stamper’s (stawm-purz) n. public house at the north corner of North Bridge Street and Croft Road (address 2 North Bridge Street), in part of the former post office building. It is well known as a local music venue.
stample (stawm-pul) v., arch. to stamp, walk heavily – ‘The auld gudeman came staplin ben, On battle he was bent ...’ [JTe].

stamyn (stā-min) n., arch. a woollen cloth used as a fabric for furnishings – ‘Itrem, to Willie Scott in Selkirk, for certane stamyn and furneising of the teindis leding, fourtie pundis’ [SB1574].

stance (stans) n. a station, position, site, particularly used for a taxi stand or bay in a bus station, location (of a house etc.) – ‘...and over the middle of the stance of a house in the midst of the town ...’ [C&L].

stanchel (stān-chul) n., arch. an iron bar, particularly fitted in a window – ‘Received for 27 lbs. stanchel iron taken out of the thieves’ hole window, ...L0 4 6’ [BR1787], a bar for keeping a gate closed – ‘Deel hae’m! his doup soud be weel yethert, An’ then ahint the stanchels tethert ...’ [JoHa].

stand (stand) v., arch. to hesitate, be irresolute, to trifle, idle (noted by J. Jamieson).

standard (stān-durd) adj. word formerly used to refer to classes beyond the three infant classes, so that e.g. ‘standard one’ was equivalent to ‘primary four’.

the Standard (thu-stawn-durd) n. another name for Hawick’s Flag or Colour – ‘The said day the baylyeas and town counsell did unanimoslusie agree that ane new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought ...’ [BR1707], ‘...Of slayer slain, of Standard won Down here in days of old’ [JEDM], ‘Our Standard shall wave as it waved of yore by Teviot’s rocky bed, As o’er many a Cornet it has streamed, now number’d with the dead’ [JEDM].

It had originally been the ‘Border Standard’, published in Langholm, which combined with some of Morrison’s other newspapers.

the Standard (thu-stawn-durd) n. name of a stagecoach operating in Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh every afternoon (except Sundays) at 1 p.m., going through Selkirk and Galashiels, and also leaving for London at 11 p.m., going through Langholm, Longtown, Carlisle, Penrith and Lancaster. The other coach operating at that time was the ‘Royal Mail’.

standard (stan-dur', -durt) n., adj., arch. standard – ‘...by plurality of votes Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash, was elected to carry the standard’ [BR1722].

Standhill (stawn-hil) n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in Ancrum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. John Hodge was there in 1580. Hector Turnbull had a charter of ‘feu farm’ of the ‘2½ lands’ of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbells of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull ‘in Standhill’ had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenanter supporters who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. ‘Captain Turnbull’ paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by ‘Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse’ and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was ‘standhill’ in 1494/5).

stand oot (stawn-doot) n., arch. a strike. Hawick’s first one recorded was in 1817 – ‘Hawick had hitherto been free of strikes, or ‘stand oots’, as they were called’ [RM].

St. Andrew’s Convent (sin‘-awn-drooz-kon-vin’) n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stirches House.

St. Andrew’s Kirk (sin‘-awn-drooz-kirk) n. St. Andrew’s Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called ‘Wilton Free Kirk’, it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw’s warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew’s. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rochead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could hold 900 people, and below it was a hall that could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John’s. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908-14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.

St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim (sin‘-awn-drooz-nur-sin-häm) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenkinsop. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as ‘Stirches Hoose’ and ‘the Convent’.

St. Andrew’s Place (sin’-awn-drooz-plis) n. street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow’s street map.

Stane (stäñ) n. a stone, stone – ‘A’ ye wha pry deep into nature In yirth, an’ stane, an’ a’ sic matter ...’ [JoHa], ‘My stanes the steps o’ those hae borne, By which they gloried to be worn’ [AD], ‘Happy sall he be that tak’s an’ devals thy wee anes agayne the stanes’ [HSR], ‘I couldna’ thole the cauld hearth stane ...’ [JEDM], ‘Oh! Had thea rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach’ [JT], ‘Wulton was biggit in comedy stone Quarryed frae native hills – Frei-stane and whum ...’ [DH], ‘...But the hert is stane that disna warm To the auld gray buskit mither’ [WL], ‘Grey are the stanes o’ Drumlanrig’s toor o’ the Border’ [IWS], stone weight (14 pounds), note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘the twae stane hei’d lost didni half please his horse’, ‘Full fifteen stane o’ Spanish iron They hae laid a’ right sair on me ...’ [CPM], v. to stone, throw stones at – ‘...the deevils staned us in, and staned us oot, an’ staned us a’ the time we were there’ [WNK], ‘Evil deeds, ye dirty savage, ye, I’ll hae ye staned oot o’ the Haugh if ye gie’s ony mair o’ yer impudence’ [JEDM], adj. made of stone – ‘Item, whatsoever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his niebhour and him ...’ [BR1640].

Stane-dumb (stäñ-dum) adj., arch. completely silent – ‘To sit stane-dumb ...’ [JoHo].

Stonefield (stäñ-feeld) n. area around the Stonefield Place housing scheme, and the former Stonefield Mill, between Liddesdale Road and the old railway line.

Stonefield Centre (stäñ-feeld-sen’-ur) n. club for old people living in the area around the Stonefield housing development, converted from a building on the old brewery site. It has more recently been used as a nursery.

Stonefield Cottage (stäñ-feeld-ko’-eej) n. former house attached at the north end of the Rockvale block on Lynnwood Road, reached over the mill lade by a foot bridge. The block was also referred to as ‘Stonefield Cottages’ and perhaps also ‘Slitrig Cottages’.

Stonefield Mill (stäñ-feeld-mil) n. factory on the eastern side of Lynnwood Road, demolished in 1973. It originally received water power via the Slitrig Dam. It was purchased by William Elliot in 1850. It was occupied by Laing & Irving in the mid-19th century, then Noble & Richardson for a few years (from about 1871), and later Grieve & Laidlaw and J. & R. Macnee, becoming a spinning factory around the 1920s. A painting showing the mill was painted by J.F. Pollocj in about 1890 and is in the Museum (also written as ‘Mills’).

Stonefield Place (stäñ-feeld-plis) n. Stonefield Place, housing aimed at elder people, built on the sites of the former Buccleuch Nurseries and Stonefield Mill in 1971–73. A footpath leads there to the old railway line. The housing underwent extensive redevelopment in 2015/6.

Stanegarthside (stäñ-girth-sid, -garth-) n. mansion house above the banks of the Liddel Water on the English side. It was originally built as a tower house perhaps around the 13th century, with wings added in 1682. It was long the seat of the Forsters. William Glendinning was at Nether Stanegarthside in 1778 – ‘What map of the Border Country would be complete without Bewcastle, and Stanegirthside, where the Captain of Bewcastle lived?’ [DH].

Stanhelm (stäñ-hööm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scotts of Brauxholm in 1500. It is probably the land called ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ which ‘Sym Scot of Fernill and Arche Elliot of Gorumberry’ rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that time.

Stane-ker (stäñ-kær) n., arch. liverwort, lichen (noted by J. Jamieson).

Stane-naw-pur (stäñ-naw-pur) n., arch. a stonecast, stones-throw (noted by J. Jamieson).

Stane-knapper (stäñ-naw-pur) n., arch. a stone-breaker – ‘...the teime a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill, – skrunshin – chaimpin – haanshin – nickerin – dirlin – snokerin – an reesellin’ [ECS] (also ‘napper’).

Stane o Destiny (thi-stän-o-des-ti-ne) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and ‘repatriated’ it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver’s shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

stane pirrie (stān-pi-ree) adj. daft, feather-brained – ‘Stane pirrie (for daft) derived, I think from Pirrie’s stone ginger in Hawick’ [HAST1958] (probably influenced by the adjective spiry, with a play on the name of the manufacturer Alex Pirrie).

Staneshiel (stān-sheel) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to the Staneshiel Burn. This is probably the ‘Staneshil’d and ‘Staneshield’ where John Nixon and Jenkin Nixon were in 1544. It was ‘Stanny sheile’ and ‘Stain sheile’ in 1590 and ‘Stanesheale’ in 1595 when Hob Elliot was there. John Crosier was also recorded at ‘Stanyesheile’ in 1590.

Staneshiel Burn (stān-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodbush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steelered-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanehillburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

Stanegill (stā-nee-gil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whigills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Stanegill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Stanegill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Stanegill Rig lies to the east of Tinnis Hill, with the Stanegill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tinnis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Stanegill Burn is a sheep-fold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Puddingburn Ha’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stannygill’ and ‘Stanegill’ in 1632; ‘Stainygil’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).
Staneyhaugh

Staneyhaugh (stā-nee-hawc'h) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Stanybalch’ around 1376; it could be connected with Staneshiel).

Staney Hill (stā-nee-hiil) n. hill to the southwest of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Stoneholm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stā-nee-mei-dī) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Staney Stewart (stā-nee-stew-ur’) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’ [JSB].

stang (stawng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony (1967/8– ) rugby winger, he attended Wilton an Hawick High and played for the school teams, as well as the Wanderers and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Gourdie and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a fish and chip shop and later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Grenoble and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. while still in high school in 1985/6. He later played for the Borders, Edinburgh, Gourdie and Leeds Tykes. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner. He also played for the British Lions in 1997. He married Bid and settled in New Zealand, running a company that helps to develop coaching skills – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet returned to earth? Was it for this magic moment that your mother gave you birth? When you louped halfway to Heaven, did you hear the mighty roar, As fifty thousand voices were all willing you to score’ [TD].

Stanishope (sta-nis-hōp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scane-hushope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. It was owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Elliott of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestation and an extensive area around the former steading are now sometimes called ‘Stenishope forestry plantation’ (also written ‘Staneshope’, ‘Stenishope’ and ‘Stenishope’ on the Ordnance Survey map; the origin is probably from Old English ‘stan hus hop’, ‘the valley with the stone house’; the name first occurs as ‘Stanehushope’ in the mid-14th century, is ‘Stanishope’ in 1511, ‘Staineyshope’ in 1678 and is transcribed ‘Stoniehome’ in 1687 and ‘Stainhope’ in 1698).

stank (stawngk) n., arch. a pond, swampy pool, ditch ‘Alang by the dead water stank, Jock Fenwick I met on the lea, But his saddle was toom in the nerrest-hand loch bit paddihs, fishes stankin for braith, an glet’ [ECS], n., arch. a deep breath, gasp, pant.

Stanledge (stan-līj) n. former name for Stanedge.

stanner (staw-nur) n., poet. a rounded pebble on a shore – ‘Stannirs, the rough projecting stones on the shore of the sea, on the banks of rivers, and the braes of burns’ [JL].

stannin (staw-nin) pres. part. standing – ‘he was stannin at the bottom o the Policeman’s Brae’, ‘Thy honour is true as the time-stan’in blue, It aye was, an’ ever will be’ [JoHa], ‘He turns the wuldirniss intil ane stannin’ water, an’ drye grund intil wals o’ water’ [HSR], ‘... so that A was stannin on bluiddy Ancrum Muir’ [ECS], ‘There was Jock, wui Robbie an Yid, an kens whae forby, stannin at the road-end’ [ECS], ‘For Dotards, can ye leave them stannin’?’ [GW], ‘Ee sei, the Queen was at the tither side o’ the car frew where Aw was stannin’’ [BW1978] (also written ‘stan’in’, etc.; note that ‘stand’ is usual for the verb, but the present participle loses the d).

stannin stane (staw-nin-stân) n. a large stone that appears to have been deliberately placed in its location, and of great antiquity. Examples near to Hawick include individual stones at Midshiel, near Saughtree (the Knocking Stone and the White Stones), at Hermitage (the Buck Stone), on Brown Rig, at Lilliard’s Edge and near Priesthaugh (the Tinlie Stone), as well as the stone circles at Burgh Hill and Nines-tane Rig.

Stan Reid’s (stan-reedz) n. popular venue for dances in the pre-WWII years, located in the Drill Hall, and organised by Stan Reid. For the next few years dances were organised by the Territorial Army, but still referred to as ‘Stan Reid’s’.

Stansfield (stanz-feeld) n. Sir James (d.1687) receiver general for the Scots of Buccleuch from 1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he disinherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son’s touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after apparently stopping up – ‘Haud aff me, ye muckle lang staup’ [JoJ] (also written ‘staupin’; noted by J. Jamieson).

Stap (stawp) v., poet. to stride, take long steps – ‘A muckle big, bang fallih that staapeet alang the Jethart road’ [ECS], ‘... And the auld laird sta-pin’ hamewan Is a soured man’ [WL], n., arch. a stopper, stave of a wooden vessel, ‘Ti take a stap oot o’ yin’s bicker’ means literally to reduce the size of one’s dish, or figuratively to humble someone – ‘A’ll taik a stap oot yoor bicker = I’ll reduce your allowance’ [ECS], ‘Ti gang a’ ti staps’ is to fall to pieces, become worthless, deteriorate, degenerate – ‘Ma wesheen-tub is geizent. Its gaen aa ti staps’ [ECS].

Stap (stawp) v., poet. to stride, take long steps – ‘A muckle big, bang fallih that staapeet alang the Jethart road’ [ECS], ‘... Staplegordon (stâ-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish (it is ‘Stab-ilgortoum’ in 1324 and ‘Stablegorden’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

stappin (staw-pin) adj., arch. striding awkwardly (also written ‘staupin’; noted by J. Jamieson).

stappit (staw-pee, -pi’) pp., poet. stopped, stopped up – ‘... but the lipps o’ thame that speik lees sall be stappet’ [HSR], ‘The brander’s stappit up’ [GW], ‘... when a muckle lang car stoppit and a man wi horn-rimmed glesses stuck his heid oot’ [DH].

stapplick (stâ-pul-kik) n., arch. the stalk of a tobacco pipe (noted by J. Jamieson; also stapple).

star (stawr) n., arch. the pupil of the eye, particularly in the phrase ‘the star o the e’.

Starcleuch (stawr-kloo-ch) n. a hill between Cauldcleuch and Greatmoor, about 10 miles south of Hawick, also known as Starcleuch Edge – ‘Breath of the heather from glade and glen, By Caldcleuch and Starcleuch and Penchrise Peu’ [JYH], ‘Just the verses, in strong-standing Scots – un-pawky, hale and sound – and all on one theme. A hill called Starcleuch Edge’ [DH].

Stark (stawrk, sterk) n. Andrew (1827–1900) from Westruther, Berwickshire, son of Robert and Isabel Moir. In 1861 he was a grocer and corn dealer on Dickson Street in Wilton. He was later a farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish and at Broom in Ancrum Parish. In 1858 in Wilton he married Eliza, daughter of James Riddel. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1858); Mary (b.1860); Jane (b.1862); James (b.1864); Isabella (b.1866); Robert (b.1870); and William (b.1875). starlight special (star-li-spe-shul) n. night train that sometimes passed through Hawick station.

starnie (stawr-nie) n., poet. a star – ‘When no’ a starnie lent its light. To cheer my lonely way’ [JT], ‘…And sweetly the starnies a’ blink through the blue’ [JT], ‘I saw the wee starnies beginning to sparkle, Aboon Christen-berry I saw the moon spied …’ [DA] (cf. ster and stern).

the Star o’ Robbie Burns (thu-stawr-ö-ro-bee-burnz) n. song written in 1879 by James Thomson, with music by James Booth (an English-born accompanist, based in Glasgow). It seems likely that Thomson met Booth when the latter was musical director for a performer at the Exchange Hall in 1873. The song was first sung at the Hawick Burns Club by Thomas Strathearn on the 120th anniversary of Burns’ birth, in Graham’s Hotel (later the Holland House). It was also popularised by the tenor singer J.M. Hamilton. The song was soon taken up by Burns admirers worldwide. It is typically the only song performed at Burns suppers that was not written by the Bard himself (sometimes also pronounced raw-bee).

start an o’er loup (star-in-ör-lowp) n., arch. the limited right of livestock to startle and leap over a boundary into neighbouring lands – ‘…did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oerloup …’ [C&L1767], ‘The tenants of his Grace, whose farms lay contiguous to the town-common, had been in the practice of taking start and o’er loup with their cattle on the burgh muir’ [RW] (see also owerloup).

the Station (thu-sta-shun) n. Hawick Railway Station, built when the Edinburgh line was opened in 1849 and reconstructed in 1862 with the opening of the Carlisle line. The original station was about 80 m west of the newer one, and was then used as a goods depot. An extra platform and subway were constructed for the 1914 Highland Show. The Station area also had extensive goods yards and sidings, and the offices of coal merchants. The last train left on 5th January 1969, with the track lifted 2 years later, and the buildings demolished in 1975. The site eventually saw the opening of the Leisure Centre in 1982. There is little remaining to indicate a station was ever there, although part of the original platform is incorporated into the footpath to Burnfoot. The name is still occasionally used to describe this area, or more commonly to refer to the pub across the street, which is one of the few tangible reminders of Hawick’s railway past.

the Station Brig (thu-sta-shin-brig) n. popular name for the bridge across the Teviot, officially called North Bridge – ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig Just lookin’ at the waitter There was naething mair excitin’ And naething else wad maitter’ [AY].

Station Buildins (stā-shin-bil-dinz) n. block of houses between Commercial Road and Laing Terrace, previously part of Dovemount Place, but renamed in 1890, and now being ‘Station Buildings, Dovemount Place’. It is 4 storeys high, with shops on the bottom and ornamental dormers. The much more plain lower block on the corner of Commercial Road was added later (this may be the block designed for Alan Watt by J.P. Allison in 1894). In its early days the name ‘Station Buildings’ was displayed prominently at the top. Businesses here include James Byrdon, grocers, and Kearney the chemists.

the Station Hotel (thu-sta-shin-hō-tel) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building was constructed in 1871, with Scots Renaissance and Baronial features, and is Grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell there to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

station-maister (stā-shin-mās-tur) n. a station-master – ‘…where the station-maister has verra obviously juist laid doon his howe and...’
Station Road

the Station Viaduct (thu-stā-shin-vi-a-dukt) n. main railway bridge crossing the Teviot just south of the Station, having 6 arches. The last train crossed it on 18th April 1971, when lifting track. The viaduct was blown up (twice!) in September 1975. The base of one of the pillars is still visible in the river (also called 'Teviot Viaduct' or just 'the Viaduct').

statute (sta'-ew) v., arch. to decree, enact – ‘...the two present bayleyes, and counsell being convenied, did statut and enact unanimously nemine contradicente ...’ [BR1694], ‘...the said Bayleyes and town Counsell did statut and ordaine that the said Robert Hardie ... should carie the said colour ...’ [BR1706], pp., arch. decreed, enacted – ‘The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit sconne ...’ [BR1643], ‘It was statut, enacted, and ordained that noe person ... should ... transport or Cary any other colour, pencell, or standard ...’ [BR1707] (also spelled 'statut').

statutory labour (sta-tew-tu-re-lä-bur) n. a system by which labouring classes were required to undertake public works up to a certain number of days a year. It was particularly used for the upkeep of roads, following Acts of 1617, 1661 and 1669. In later years there was some compensation for the work done. The system was abolished in 1845 and replaced by land assessment to pay for hired labour. But this would be a regular burden on local men in the late 17th, entire 18th and early 19th centuries.

staucher (staw-chur) v., poet. to stagger, stumble about – ‘She chased auld Winter frae the lea Ti staucher hame ti Greenland ...’ [WP], ‘Gin wi’ your faith set firm aboon, Ye staucher on alane ...’ [WL] (also spelled 'stacher').

staun (stawn) v. to stand – ‘Thy rough and ready weapon’s name sae blunt, ‘Twill staun’ a rattle ‘gainst their cuttl’ gullies’ [JoHa], ‘Sae wee weel we trow that’s no’ begun, Will gar us turn or staun’ aghast, man’ [JoHa], ‘... behald, he stan’s ahint our wa’’ [HSR], ‘... stave (stäv) v. to sprawn, wrench, benumb – ‘A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off cett’, ‘Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)’ [ECS], n. an injury caused by a sprain or twist – ‘it’s no broken, it’s juist a stave’ (also written 'staive').

stavel (stä-vul) v., arch. to walk aimlessly (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

Staven (stā-vin) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as ‘Johnne Staven in Hawick’ when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be ‘Steven’ or ‘Stavert’, for example.

Stavert (stā-vur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscoste (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscoste that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Tordrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscoste. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Philogar in Hownam. He is recorded at Hoscoste on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscoste by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscoste in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as ‘Stewart’). He was owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outserside in Robertson Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825. He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Roberton Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1939–) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann (b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Foster and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1656, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Henderson. Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer of about 3,000 acres of ‘mountain-land’, employing 4 labourers; in 1861 it was 3,200 acres and employing on average 8 labourers. He lived with his sister Janet. He is probably the Mr. Stavert of Saughtree who donated a red deer to the Museum in 1863. He was still recorded at Saughtree in 1868. Archibald of Hoscote (b.1828) eldest surviving son of William and Marion Park. He became Laird of Hoscote in 1857, succeeding his aunt Margaret, his uncles having already died. He also owned lands in Oxnam and Hownam parishes, and had a house in Edinburgh at 34 Palmerston Place. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 (incorrectly as ‘Andrew’) as owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as (correctly as Archibald) Outerside. In 1857 he married Rosina, daughter of William Hope, and she died in 1897. Their children were: William James (b.1858), Rector of Bursnall, Yorskshire and Chaplain to the Earl of Craven; Thomas Hope (b.1859), Major in the Leinster Regiment; Herbert John (b.1861) accountant in Edinburgh; Archibald Arthur (b.1864) with the Priory of South Queensferry, linlithgow; Francis Edward Vose (b.1870); and a daughter. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) listed at Florida in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. This was probably the farm of that name in Liddesdale. It is unclear how she was related to other Staverts. Elizabeth ‘Lizzy’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1815 when her child died. Dr. Elliot (1810–85) son of Thomas and Janet Armstrong, he was born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish. He graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University in 1834 and became a doctor in Preston, Lancashire, where he was also a councillor. In 1837 he married Margaret Jenkinson and they had children Elizabeth, Thomas and Margaret. He secondly married Ann Eliza Whitehead. Elliot (19th C.) donator to Hawick Museum of the 2 stone cross pieces which were found near the Abbey Sike in the mid-19th century. The first was about 4 feet long, in the shape of a sword handle, and found about 1850 near the ‘Abbey’. The second was a rounded head with a cross on each side, found by shepherd John Chisholm in the Abbey Sike in 1880. He could be the Elliot born to Thomas in Castleton Parish in 1810, who was a doctor in Preston and died in 1885. George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1737 His children included Agnes (b.1737). George (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He married Betty (or ‘Eliza’) Neil and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscate from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam’s first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlsde. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlsde in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded in Todshaw in 1720, 1723, 1725 and 1726. He married Marion Wilson in Roberton in 1718. Their children included: Thomas (b.1720); John (b.1723); George (b.1725); and Thomas (again, b.1726). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1738 he married Helen Veitch from Cavers Parish. Margaret (b.1740), baptised in Cavers, was probably their child. Perhaps the same John had children to a previous marriage, Agnes (b.1732) and Jean (b.1734). John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised at ‘Todshaw hillshiel’ in Roberton Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. He is probably related to the earlier John recorded at Todshaw. John of Hoscate (1807–59) born in Roberton Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hoscate after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hoscate after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hoscate was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1978) inherited Hoscate in 1932. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlsde along with William on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlsde (or ‘Earlswood’). His children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: Janet (b.1695); Robert (b.1701); Isobel (b.1705); and Thomas (b.1709). Robert of Earlsde (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Hummelknowes in 1737 and Ashybank in 1745. His children included: Isabel (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Jane (b.1745); and William (b.1747). Perhaps the same Robert, married to Henrietta Black, had several children baptised in Cavers, including Thomas (b.1750), Walter (b.1752), Janet (b.1753) and Elizabeth (b.1756). Robert (18th C.) farmer at Effledge according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He was probably son of Thomas, farmer at Saughtree. He married Helen ('Nelly') Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included William (b.1684) and Marion (b.1692). The witnesses in 1684 were John Purcell and William Purdum. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son John was baptised in 1705. Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiel Parish in 1723. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Horse Tax at Coliforthill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hoscate; his wife’s sister Jean married Walter Griev at the same time in Roberton. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hoscote; Adam (b.1750), baptised in Cavers, who was later Laird of Hoscote; Betty (b.1752), Jean (b.1758) and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. He was the Thomas whose daughter Betty (b.1745) and unnamed child (b.1746) were baptised in Kirkton. He may also be the Thomas whose children Margaret (b.1748), William (b.1754) and Thomas (b.1761) were baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Broadlee in 1753, 1762 and 1763. His children were probably John (b.1747), Isabel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), George (b.1756), William (b.1759) and Mary (b.1760), George (again, b.1762) and Janet (b.1763). It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, farmer at Coliforthill. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying ‘in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting’. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1756. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Davidson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1767. Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas who married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Kidd in Roberton in 1777; her death is recorded in Hawick in 1810, by which time he was already deceased. He was recorded at Harden Burnfoot in 1781 and 1784. His children included: Margaret (b.1778); Thomas (b.1779); Marion (b.1781); and John (b.1784). Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He married Margaret Dodds, who died in 1811. Their children included Thomas (b.1801), baptised in Kirkton. Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and Helen Pott. He was farmer at Saughtree. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Armstrong and their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Eliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1812), who married John Murray and died at Wolfelee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Margaret. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston’s memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscote (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hoscote, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Lairds of Earlside and then Hoscote from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hoscote. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as ‘Proprietor’ at Hoscote in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805; his wife was Euphemia Bramwell and their children included Margaret (b.1835), Thomas (b.1837) and Janima (b.1839). Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert ruecstle was order by the Hawick Bailies to pay him ‘four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton’. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) recorded in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year’s rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlside along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlside, whose will is recorded in 1682. He may be the William whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1697. William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. William (18th/19th C.) stockmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windy mains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hoscoite after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hoscoite. He wrote an introduction to ‘The Annals of a Border Club’ in 1898 (formerly written ‘Stavart’, etc.).

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel

St. Boswell’s (sin’-boi-zul) n. (d.c.664) Abbot of Melrose Abbey and teacher of St. Cuthbert. Almost all that is known about him comes from Bede. He was a Northumbrian, trained at Lindisfarne by St. Aidan. He is supposed to have had prophetic powers, predicting his own death in a plague. He was buried at Melrose. Relics relating to him were taken to Durham, and parts of a shrine dedicated to him can be seen in Jedburgh Abbey Museum. His day was once celebrated on 23rd February. The town of St. Boswells was effectively named after him.

St. Boswells (sin’-boi-zul) n. formal name for the town known as Bosells.

St. Bullion’s Day (sin’-bu-lee-inz-dă) n., arch. St. Swithin’s Day, 15th July (from St. Martin of Bullion, whose feast day was 4th July, which became 15th July in the new calendar).

St. Clair see Sinclair

St. Cuthbert (sin’-kuth-bur’) n. (c.638–87) 7th century bishop, born in the Borders, possibly on Leader Water. He was Prior at the old Melrose Abbey in the early 660s, and this was one of the resting places for his body (although he was buried at Holy Island). He was called a saint because his body was said to have been miraculously preserved 11 years after his death (and also said to be still uncorrupted when examined at the time of the Reformation!). He is traditionally supposed to have lived for a time near the location of St. Mary’s in Hawick, founding a church there and spreading Christianity throughout Teviotdale and beyond. A description of miracles described in a 12th century account of his life (by Reginald of Durham) contains one of the earliest mentions of Hawick. It also refers to a chapel dedicated to him, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and which was associated with several apparently miraculous stories. This may be the same place referred to by Bede as a place where St.Cuthbert took shelter, and miraculously found a loaf of bread, when travelling from Carlisle to Melrose. His remains were removed from Lindisfarne by his followers and moved from place to place, finally coming to rest at Durham Cathedral, where they are to this day, along with several relics associated with him. In the Middle Ages both 20th March and 4th September were celebrated as his saints day.

St. Cuthbert’s (sin’-kuth-burts) n. popular name for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel (sin’-kuth-burts-chă-pul) n. chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfins, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint’s day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Sægifa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfins’ mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as ‘the Chaipel Park’. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummelknowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).

St. Cuthbert’s Court (sin’-kuth-burts-kör’) n. housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club (sin’-kuth-burts-ki-ki’-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert’s School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times. Nicknamed ‘the Saints’, it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.
the church commemorates to 2 Grieves of Branxholme Park who were killed on board naval vessels before WWI. The nearby Church Hall was formerly part of the brewery (and was converted around 1980 and is now 2 houses). The church possesses its own Episcopal Cemetery, and the adjacent Rectory has been converted into houses. The church building is currently listed category B. A centenary history was written in 1958 by Hector McBean Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1847–1944 are in the National Archives. The roll of ministers (sometimes called Rectors) of the Church is: Robert Campbell 1847–54; John Rose Dakers 1854–82; Douglas Powell Ware 1882–92; James W.T. Hart 1892–1903; Edward T.S. Reid 1903–10; Alexander L. Ross, assistant 1904–09; Alexander J. Hay 1911–55; Philip Crosfield 1955–60; Edward Robertson 1960–69; Maurice Sunter 1969–70; Aidan Michael Burn-Murdoch 1970–77; Humphrey Lopdell-Bradshaw 1977–88; Jonathan Willans 1988–91; Stuart Maxwell Paterson 1992–96; James W.T. Hart. Records for the church and school covering 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk Club (sin’-kuth-burts-te-ris) n. private housing built behind St. Cuthbert’s Court, off Slitrig Crescent, in 1985.

St. Cuthbert’s Way (sin’-kuth-burts-wä) n. 62 mile (100 km) hiking trail from Melrose to Lindisfarne (Holy Island), named after the 7th century saint who began at Melrose Abbey and was buried on Holy Island. It was established in 1996.

St. Cuthbert’s Terrace (thu-ste-min-pump) n. former water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as ‘Bourtree Well’.

Steadman (sted-min) George (b.1844/5) legendary wrestler from Whitehaven. He won the all-weights wrestling tournament at Hawick Common Riding Games for many years in succession in the 1880s. He started competitive wrestling in 1862 and still won at the Grassmere Games at age 51. He also took the prize in the Liverpool Road (London) contest 31 years running. He was about 275 pounds and 5 foot 11 inches, and often won other events, such as hurdles and ‘neatest costume’.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk Club (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk-klub) n. St. Cuthbert’s Church Club, a local musical society of the late 19th century.

St. Cuthbert’s Schuil (sin’-kuth-burts-skil) n. Episcopal school near to St. Cuthbert’s Church on Slitrig Crescent. The school was for pupils of Episcopalian families, and like the church was gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was built in 1850–52 and had a house for the schoolmaster attached. The building was also used for a few years for church services. Previous to the erection of the purpose-built school there had been an Episcopal school on the Mid Raw around 1846 and another (per perhaps the same one) in the hallroom on Half-Moon Close, starting in 1847 or 1848. The new school was situated on the opposite side of Lynnwood Road, beyond Stonefield Mill and was reached via a footbridge across Slitrig Dam. The school was often known locally as ‘the English Schuil’. Pupils over the age of 12 were transferred to the High School in 1928, and it became St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. It was closed in 1956, and the pupils incorporated into the renamed Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert’s Primary School. The school and adjacent schoolhouse were demolished in 1972. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1935–56 are in the National Archives. The register for 1934–56 and log books for 1941–56 are in the Borders Archive. A list of schoolmasters (perhaps not all of them being Head teacher, and some of them for only a short period) is: Mr. Ellis; Mr. King; Mr. Craven; Jacob Jay 1861–93; Mr. Bountvie; Mr. Beaton; James Turnbull; Walter Inglis; David Gillis 1894–1915; Mr. Lumsden; Mr. Cormack 1945–48; and Mr. Walker.

steel (steel) n., arch. a handle for a barrow or plough – ‘What are you going to do with that?’ asked the doctor. ‘I’m just gaun to mak’ a barrow steel’. ‘Aye, aye, a shaft to-day and a wheel to-morrow’, was the doctor’s observations’[BP], a stall for an injured finger (also written ‘stiel’; noted by J. Jamieson).

steel (steel) n., arch. a steep bank, spur of a ridge (used in place names, particularly in the Borders, e.g. ‘Ashiestiel’, ‘Leapsteal’, ‘the Steel’ and ‘Steele Knowe’).

Steel (steel) n. Lord David Martin Scott (1938– ) born in Kirkcaldy, son of a minister, he became M.P. for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles from 1965, at age 26, and was known as ‘Boy David’. He remained Hawick’s M.P. until the boundary changes saw him move to Tweeddale, Ettrick & Lauderdale in 1983. However, in 1970 he only won by 550 votes. He was Liberal Party leader from 1976, including the period of the ‘Lib-Lab pact’ and the SDP-Liberal Alliance, resigning in 1987. He was knighted in 1990 and became Lord Steel of Aikwood in 1997 when he retired after 32 years in Westminster. He then became the M.S.P. for the Lothians and first Presiding Officer of the Scottish Parliament 1999–2003. He rode to Moss paul and followed the Cornet on the Friday in 1965 and was Common Riding Chief Guest in the Millenium year. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. (1940– ) born in dollar, she studied law at Edinburgh University, where she met her husband, David. The couple married in 1962. She has published poetry, plays and other writings. In 1987 she founded the Rowan Tree Theatre Company in the Borders, and in 2011 was awarded the M.B.E. for services to theatre in the Borders. She championed the renovation of Aikwood Tower (including wood recycled from the pews of Hawick Parish Church), later housing a museum to her idol, James Hogg, ‘the Ettrick Shepherd’. In 2007 her play ‘The Journey of Jeannie Deans’ was the first production to be staged in the new Heart of Hawick auditorium. She has 3 children, Graeme, Catriona Judith and Roray, and an adopted son, Billy. The couple retired to live in Selkirk. Rev. Robert (1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastle to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastle, listed as ‘Independent Minister’, and so he had an association with the village long before 1866.

The Steel (thu-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swansteed Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of ‘Steyll’ mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (thu-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title ‘The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Border Reivers’, it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885.

Steele Knowe (steel-now) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts (and may have been a combination of byre and domestic uses). There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written ‘Steel Knowe’).
Steele Plantin (steel-plawn-tin) n. plantation in Liddesdale, running along the north side of the Steele road (i.e. the road connecting Steele Road station with the B6399).

Steele Road (steel-röd) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastle, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name ‘Steele’ long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being farmed by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. ‘Steele Road’ is the name of the road that crosses ‘the Steele’, and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west, often circular, with an opening on one side, or cattle, usually composed of a dry-stane dyke and often circular, with an opening on one side, away from the prevailing wind – ‘...and numerous stells have been erected for the shelter of the stock’ [RJAW], ‘They were with great difficulty captured and held as surety for those found guilty.

stele fellow (steel-fe-lö) n., arch. a riever who was involved in a raid into England, and was not captured and held as surety for those found guilty.

stell (stel) n. a stall, enclosure, shelter for sheep or cattle, usually composed of a dry-stane dyke and often circular, with an opening on one side, away from the prevailing wind – ‘...and numerous stells have been erected for the shelter of the stock’ [RJAW], ‘They were with great difficulty brought to a ‘stell’ (a feeding-place for sheep in winter) ...’ [RB], ‘...Thrae yowes i’ the stells in the warm July days’ [DH], ‘...Scarce farm or stell or shearing-stance But echoed with some jibe at France’ [WHO] (see also stells and sheep-stell;
these are given other names elsewhere, with ‘stell’ being particularly prevalent in the south of Scotland).

stel (stel) n., arch. a still for whisky – ‘When Meggie grat, an’ vow’d that she Wad rather seen the gaugers I’ the stell that day’ [JoHa].

Stell Brae (stel-bræ) n. another name for the Stellhoose Brae.

Stell Hoose (stel-hooz) n. house situated at the corner of Havelock Street and Wilton Hill, demolished in 1945, with the site becoming part of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Haliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black and John Middlemas lived there in 1841 and it is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map (originally adjacent to the farmlands of Wilton Mains, so presumably there was once a ‘stell’ nearby; also sometimes ‘the Still’)

Stellhoose Park (stel-hooz-pawrk) n. area beside the ‘Stell Hoose’, which was drained in 1826. The area later contained the ‘Cadger’s Well’ from 1842 until the early 20th century.

stells (stelz) n. sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leeside of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.

Stells (stelz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Stells, within the Dyk’. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of ‘Littlestell’ may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend (stend) v., poet. to leap, spring, bound – ‘The spring that ilk ane lik’d he kend; Auld wives at sixty years wad stend ... ’ [CPM].

Stenhouse (sten-hooz) n. (Stenhouse) John (b.1812/3) born in Holmes, near Melrose, he was a grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory (when he was also a toy dealer). His shop was at about No. 51. His wife was Catherine and their children included Elizabeth, Helen, Jessie and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Stow, he was a carrier in Bowden. In 1852 he is recorded running a weekly service between Hawick and Lilliesleaf, Midlem or Bowden, leaving from the Coach & Horses on Saturdays. His wife was Agnes P., and their children included Janet, John, Joan and Helen. Neil ‘Stenny’ (1980/1- ) educated at Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. Originally a scrum-half for the High School, Hawick Albion, the P.S.A. and the Linden. From the age of 17 he was playing for Hawick R.F.C. and at 18 was playing sevens in a Scottish side. He later moved to stand-off and turned out regularly for the Greens, being part of the 2002 Cup-winning side. He then made over 100 appearances for Nottingham before retiring from the game at age 27 and works as a teacher in Nottingham. His wife is Laura and their children are Gillie and Quinn.

Stenhouse’s (sten-hoo-seez) n. shop in Hawick in the mid-19th century.

This was an annual fee paid in return for Common rights, often being an assessment on Burgesses paid into the town coffers and used for public improvements. In Hawick the practice stopped after the Division (a corruption of ‘extent’; cf. Stintkynowe).

stent-maister (sten-’mä-s-tur) n., arch. an official appointed to fix the ‘stent’ to be paid – ‘Stent-masters appointed to stent the inhabitants for the schoolmaister’s wage’ [BR1660], ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash …and the bailies, appoint stent-masters …’ [BR1699].

Stenton’s Pump (sten-’inz-pump) n. former spring near the corner of Melgund Place and O’Connell Street, also known as the ‘Melgund Pump’. The smith who used to live there charged two pence a month for the use of his well when the public wells went dry (the name probably comes from the Stainton family, who lived near there in the early-to-mid 1800s).

stent-roll (sten-’ról) n., arch. a valuation prepared for the purpose of imposing levies on Burgesses – ‘…Ae yeirlie stentrroll to be made’ [BR].

Stephen (ste-vin) n. (12th/13th C.) priest of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded as a witness to a grant of Glasgow church lands. This was sometime after Idel, possibly in the 1220s.

stevel (ste-vul) n., arch. a stumble, a strong buffet causing one to stagger.

Steven (stee-vin) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1623 as schoolmaster at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. William, who was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1630, may have been related to him. Alexander (19th/20th C.) proprietor of the 'Berwick News' and 'Berwick Journal'. He married Mary, daughter of David McBurnie Watson. He gave 3 bursaries to the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, in memory of 'Ada Carr Steven', 'Mary Watson Steven' and 'Esther Watson Steven'. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1702) and Beattie (b.1704). Robert (16th/17th C.) notary for a bond between Robert Turnbull, tenant in Bedrule, and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. He was also notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. In 1619 he was notary public in Raperlaw when accused of being among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who took hay from Huntliehill. As one of the few men who appeared personally, he was not declared as a rebels (also written 'Stevin').

Stevens (stee-vinz) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) housekeeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) vallet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stee-vin-sin) n. Agnes 'Nancy' (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed driking establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her family and lived her last days at the old blacksmith's house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at 'Wadiespinnells', presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith's shop at Hobkirk Kirkstile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his education at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Rutherford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Arthur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot's 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexander. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow University. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Hawick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon; Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941– ) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbulls of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfrieshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Brauxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outsiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d.bef. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hobkirkstyle’, recorded in 1733. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hobkirk Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann, who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hobkirk Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the erlier George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Bonchester Bridgend according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Amos; Betty (b.1789); John (1791–1823); Andrew (b.1795); Agnes, who married Alex Baptie; and Janet (b.1787). He appears to have changed the spelling of the family surname from ‘Stephenson’ to ‘Stevenson’. George Drummond ‘Stevie’ (1933–2012) played for Hawick P.S.A., Linden and the Greens in the period 1951–67. He was capped 24 times for Scotland, scoring a try against England in his debut match in 1956. He was also referred to as ‘Back-door Stevie’ because of the number of times he was called into the Scotland squad at the last minute. A career highlight was a solo try scored for the Scottish District when they defeated South Africa at Mansfield Park in the 1960s. He played at centre and wing, and at 6 feet 2 inches was tall for a back. Serving an engineering apprenticeship... in Hawick, he then did National Service, worked for Bibby’s the farm suppliers and became a sales representative for Ballantine’s Whisky (although ironically he was a teetotaller), settling in Currie. His married Jessie and had children Fiona and Mark. Helen (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholmne who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Her name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived. She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called ‘Mrs. Murray’. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: John (b.1702); William (b.1703); and John (again, b.1707). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. In 1708 he was described as ‘(in Harwood) tenant to arcleton’. He married Jean Thomson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam (b.1705); James (b.1707); John (b.1708); Bessie (b.1710); and Margaret (b.1710). The witnesses in 1705 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield, in 1707 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Francis Gledstains in Braidhaugh and in 1708 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Muselee; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/1–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1766. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. There are letters to him preserved in the Walter Mason Collection from the 1820s. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was listed as ‘vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk’ in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Probably the same John was baptismal witness in 1708 (along with weaver John Richardson) for weaver David Reid, in 1714 (along with shoemaker John Scott) for James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1721 (along with weaver Adam Scott) for merchant William Black and in 1725 (along with weaver George Wight) for weaver Robert Wight. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Scott called ‘Laird’. Their children included: Janet (b.1717); Thomas (b.1719); John (b.1720); John (again, b.1722); Robert (b.1724); and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1719 were wright John Pringle and Walter Scott in Newbigging, and in 1720 were weavers James Scott and Thomas Greenshields. John (17th/18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk ‘mort cloath’ for a family burial. They lived at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirkstyle. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1716 and 1721. His children probably included: John (b.1716); Margaret (b.1721); and James (b.1728). John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirkstile in 1779. He had 3 daughters, Nel, Nancy and Maizie, whose lives are described in Tancred’s history of Rulewater. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably may also his son. Betty may have been another daughter, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott and their son John was baptised in 1785 (or perhaps 1775). The witnesses were Archibald Elliot and John Smith. John (d.1823) elder son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in

Mary ‘Maizie’ (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirk Church. But she used the cushions from the ‘Lairds’ Lofts’ as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council ‘for a bottle of wine (Stevenson’s), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’, suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773 the Council recorded that they met ‘in Michael Stevenson’s’ to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James ‘Stevanson’ (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. ‘Mrs. Stevenson’ was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 the death is recorded in Hawick of ‘Mrs. Stevenson spouse to Decd. Mr. Stevenson tower inn’. He is described by W.N. Kennedy as ‘of Falstaffian proportions, and a fine burly specimen of the Boniface brotherhood, and is reputed to have weighed upwards of thirty stone’. It was said that he needed a pulley yo get to his feet in the morning and that after he died the coffin had to be hoisted in and out of the window of his bedroom. Patrick (16th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Robert (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1652). The witnesses in 1651 were Robert Grieve and William Elliot. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of HowPasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Plendergast and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Reid and their children included: Jean (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); John (b.1760); Jane (b.1762); Betty (b.1767); and Thomas (b.1771). The witnesses in 1762 were shoemaker John Scott and tobacconist James Scott. Robert (19th C.) stockmaking in Hawick. His infant child’s death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (?–2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001 Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknowes and become tenant at Little Whitlaw, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town’s Common. However, the ‘Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson’s sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm’; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of ‘pirns’ for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). His son Robert with Isobel Turnbull was baptised in Hawick in 1797, with witnesses Rev. W. Knox (although hard to read) and merchant George Waldie. Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in Wilton in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19–72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woollen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) from Langholm. Around the 1860s he came to Newcastleton once a week to operate a branch of the British Linen Company Bank. Thomas Pasley (b.1862) son of Thomas P. He worked as a postman and was later in the Douglas Hotel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Trow Mill in 1744 when his daughter Jane was baptised. His other children included: Walter (b.1741); and Helen (b.1745). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William’s baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 his daughter with Ann Howison died. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30–1807) tenant farmer at Langburnshiels. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his ‘sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled’. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6–93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled ‘Stevinsone’ etc., and interchangeable with ‘Stephenson’ before the mid-18th century).

Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote and John Waugh (possibly in Hawick). Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howesley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still 'younger'; these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father's grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King's hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell; John; Archibald, Parson of Kirkmaho; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmaho. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Baronies of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family's half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barycle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in 1594 and 1596. He married Christian, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of David, Earl of Angus, who was widow of Lord Maxwell. His children were Alexander (who succeeded), Thomas, William, Helen, Janet, Nicholas and John. Alexander of Garlies (d.1649) son of Sir Alexander and Christian Douglas of Drumlanrig. He inherited his father's rights in Minto in 1603; this included a half merkland in Minto, with the advowson of the Kirk there. He became Lord Garlies in 1607 and sat in Parliament several times. In 1623 he was raised to be Earl of Galloway. A firm supporter of Charles I he was appointed as a Privy Councillor. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar and their children included: Alexander (d.1638): Sir James, who succeeded; and Anne, Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of James of Tinnis. In 1609 he was listed along with Walter Scott of Headshaw and other Scotts as men that Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were fined for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘in Tynneis’ witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbulls of Philiphaugh in 1580. Alexander (17th/18th C.) dyker in Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Margaret (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker Robert Allan. Alexander (18th/19th C.) hosier in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1811. He could be the Alexander who married Margaret Scott and had children Ebenezer (b.1805), Betty (b.1808), David (b.1810) and David (again, b.1812), baptised in Wilton. Alexander (b.c.1820) servant at Cavers House in 1841. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children... included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother’s name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howplesley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year. Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull and Elspeth Douglas, residents of Midshiels and in 1733 another for William Turnbull, also living at Midshiels. Probably the same Andrew married Marion Huntly in Wilton in 1731 and had children Janet (b.1732), Robert (b.1734) and Mary (b.1737). Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their children included Agnes (b.1746), James (again, b.1748), Ann (b.1750), Andrew (b.1753) and Margaret (b.1755). Andrew (18th C.) married Jean Wright in 1761, both from Wilton Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Crozier. Their children (born in Lilliesleaf, but baptised in Linton) included: Peggy (b.1787); and Robert (b.1790). Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cottfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Bewlie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of ‘Dephoip’ or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpoffle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple’s only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Waldie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d’Aubigny and grandson of Esme, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esme he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Barony of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Rutherford. Burdened with his grandfather’s debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’ or ‘the Young Pretender’ (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym ‘Karl Brown’. He who wrote a poem about the Sclaterford skirmish and may be the ‘Carl Brown’ who wrote ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is also the author of the novel ‘Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders’ (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Roselea (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David member of the Archeological Society and font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. His daughter is Norma. Rev. Duncan (1841–1908) from Dumblane, he studied at Edinburgh University and New College. He became the first minister of St. Andrew’s Free Church, being called there in 1867, inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was said to have ‘the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones’ and to possess a powerful voice. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig’s Tower. He wrote ‘The Covenanters of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts’ (1908). In 1890 he married Mary J.S. Mitchell. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. An account of hers to Thomas Inglis for soap, muslin and lace from 1797. Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Commendator of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendator of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586 he re-leased several lands in Liddesdale to Elliots. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November of 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Brauxholme and Hawick, there meeting with leaders from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Bucceleuch carried out a raid around Berwick using his trumpet and standard. In 1589 there was a charge to him and Alexander, Lord Home, to keep peace with each other during the King’s absence. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a ‘band’ between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the ‘Falkland Raid’ of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Bucceleuch (his stepson). A ‘summons of treason’ of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy. There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King’s favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme and Bucceleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranstoun (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A son John was Commendant of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a ‘bend’ in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a surnout, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing ‘F.S.’
He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son – 'King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckcleugh's Relict He being but a Laird' [CWS]. Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father's death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburgh and Buckcleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buckcleuch and Roxburgh. In 1632 the patronage he had held of many churches around the Borders (including both Hawick and Wilton) went to Walter Scott, Earl of Buckcleuch. His rehabilitation was ratified by Parliament in 1633. In 1634 2 of the ‘tutors’ of the young Earl of Buckcleuch went to London to hear the King's determination of the ongoing dispute he had over Buckcleuch lands. He received lands in Lothian and made a financial arrangement over rights to the lands in the Borders in 1634. He married Isobel, daughter of Robert Seton, 1st Earl of Winton. Their children were Charles, Robert, Margaret and Elizabeth. Francis (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Helen Muir. His son William was born in 1637. Francis (b.c.1785) stocking-maker who lived at Appletreehall. He was also an army pensioner. His wife was Rachel and their children included George, Euphemia, Agnes, Francis, John and Janet. George (16th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Groundistone in 1729. He married Isobel, daughter of William Harkness in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1729, with witnesses James Scott and Robert Riddell. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted livery of Shielswood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter’s roll); he renounced this right in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they have a son William. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buckcleuch over the teinds of the lands of ‘Kalrige, Commenysyd and Mynhesingtoun’; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitelaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was said to have owned Whitlaw near Hawick, but this is more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). In 1590 he and Francis, Earl of Bothwell were cautioners for Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Martin Elliot of Braidley. A ‘summons of treason’ listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. He was hanged in Edinburgh. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Helen ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buckcleuch over the teinds of the lands of ‘Kalrige, Commenysyd and Mynhesingtoun’; the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. He was hanged in Edinburgh. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803.
1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born in Hawick in 1650 to Francis and Helen Muir. James name of 6 Kings of Scotland, see under James. James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scots of Whitchesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Bransholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (d.1557) eldest illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whitthorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso 1534/5–57, one of the last before the Reformation, and probably lived in the Commendator’s House. He gave the ‘Monk’s Tower’ at Hassendean to Walter Scott of Bransholme in 1546/7 and granted a charter of Cockerheugh to William Turnbull in 1556. His seal is in the National Museum of Scotland. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as ‘the Regent Moray’ and sometimes ‘the Earl of Mar’. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Slitrig, ‘for lack of trees and halters’, while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe’en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to ‘have in redresses bakin breid, browin aill, hors meit, man-nis meit and uther neidfull ludgeing and provi-sioun’. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliots and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Ha-wick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whithaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), ‘weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx dayis victuallis and provisioun’, in order to subdue the ‘rebellious subjects’ of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after failing in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earldom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Tinnis (16th C.) ally of Scott of Thirlestane. His home was presumably Tinnis in the Yarrow valley. In 1592 he had caution ‘to behave himself loyally’ and ‘not come within ten miles of the King’s presence’; he was also cautioner for several others, including William Scott in Hundleshope and his brothers Robert and David. He was listed in 1592 among those summoned for treason and William Stewart of Traquair was ordered to demolish his ‘place and houses of Tynneis’ because of his involvement in the Falkland Raid. His sons included Alexander, John and Archibald. James of Wells (16th C.) recorded in 1592 when he complained to the Privy Council about Turnbuls attacking his lands of Wells. Specifically, John, brother of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule, threatened and menaced his servant James Newlands when he was ploughing. He may be the same as another Stewart. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulwater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father's lands of 'Helme et Middill', with grain mill and fuller's mill called 'Dowishauch', comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of 'Roulwood', 'Majorwellis et Westlies', extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of 'Hareis' by annexation. James (17th C.) described as a cordiner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary's Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). Probably the same James witnessed baptisms in 1648 for George Hope and for James Lunn. James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esmé and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feu duties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Barnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esmé. James (17th C.) recorded as resident of a parish in Clydesdale. He married Margaret Hutchison. Their twins Susanna and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses William Scott of Brieryards and John Scott of Whitehaugh. James Francis Edward ‘the Old Pretender’ (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the ‘Jacobite’ movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’, also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (17th/18th C.) smith at Falnash. His children included: Janet (b.1701); and James (b.1703). Margaret (b.1691) and David (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may have also been his children. The witnesses in 1703 were John Scott in Falnash and Robert Riddell, miller in Falnash. Sir James of Colnness (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name ‘Steuart’. He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Branzholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedge according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the ‘Mr. Stewart’ marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 24 High Street or the other one at about No. 55. He could be the merchant of that name whose child died in 1805. James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leap and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father’s death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o’Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Penelope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hood) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of ‘Gas World’). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary’s, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth White-man, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanora. He published ‘Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal’ (Hawick, 1877) and the ‘Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal’ (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being ‘of Teviotdale or Jedworth’ and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406–09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Minto. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being ‘now Marshall’ and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. He married Janet Fleming and was succeeded by Robert (who married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’). He is sometimes said to have died at Flodden. John (c.1484–1536) son of Alexander, Duke of Albany and nephew of King James III. He inherited the titles of Duke of Albany and Earl of March from his father. He acted as Regent during the minority of his cousin’s son, James V. In 1516 he granted a new infeftment of the Barony of Branxholme to Sir Walter Scott. Ousted from power in 1524, he spent most of the rest of his life in France. John of Traquair (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Bedrule in 1562. He probably succeeded from William Kerr, but was himself succeeded by Sir John Douglas (however, this may simply have been because of disputes over the patronage). He could have been the same as Sir John, 4th Laird of Traquair. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter Ker of Cessford in 1555. John (16th C.) listed along with George Wilson as ‘servants and ministers for the time to William Ryddaill’, brother to the Laird of Riddell. This was in a transaction signed in Lilliesleaf Kirk, suggesting that he may have been associated with that church. Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. In 1556 he renounced his 3-pound land in Langnewton (called ‘Stuart Lands’) to Sir William Douglas of Lochleven. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a ‘bend engrailed’ and a cinquefoil on the left. He may be the ‘Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptrollar’ recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7. Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1559 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of...
Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’, including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Barony of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balermino. In 1619 he complained (through his tutor, Sir Robert of Shillinglaw) that a group of Turnbulls had cut down a large quantity of timber and removing hay from his lands at Huntsliehill and further complained to the Privy Council that the Turnbulls of Bedrule were still at large, despite being denounced as rebels in 1615 and 1616 for not removing themselves from Huntsliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of superior of Edgerston to John Rutherford of after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Sot- ton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1661 for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He married Janet Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1651); George (b.1653); and Margaret (again, b.1656). Isobel (b.1648), with no mother’s name give, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were William Laidlaw and Robert Paterson and in 1656 were William Donaldson and Thomas Currie. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1658) and James (b.1661). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Jean (b.1649); Marion (b.1651); and Jean (again, b.1653). The witnesses in 1651 were John Scott and James Lid- dell. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Cavers’ in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) record at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He was probably the ‘John Stuart’ who witnessed baptisms in 1685, 1687, 1688 and 1689, being ‘officer’ in one record, and was probably the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a weaver who married Marion Scott and had children: twins Janet and Jane (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); James (b.1684); Jane (b.1686); and William (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Purdom and Mr. Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk, suggesting that he may indeed have been the Burgh Officer), and in 1688 were Mr. Walter Gledstains and ‘litster’ George Young. He may have been related to the John Stewart who was a Burgh Officer in about 1740. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘caliario’ when he witnessed a Ha- wick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John ‘dyker to Ireland’ listed among the ‘Deficients in Hawick Parich’ in 1694; he may have worked as a dyker for Thomas Ireland. Perhaps the same dyker John was recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the John who in 1694 witnessed baptisms for John Williamson, for James Rutherford and for William Scott. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680. Sir John of Minto (d.1697) probably nephew of Sir Ludovic. He was the last in the long line of Stewarts of Minto, who were prominent citizens in Glasgow in the 16th and 17th centuries and held the Barony of Minto. The family interest in Minto had probably been lost either by his uncle or grandfather Sir Walter, although he was still referred to being ‘of Minto’. He died on the outward voyage of the Unicorn as part of the Darien Scheme. Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Episcopalian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached for several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1688 (the delay suggesting there was argument over the extra duties and stipend). However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for Episcopalians. In 1706 his widow Margaret Forbes, is recorded receiving money from the Session of Arnagask Parish, on the recommendation of Jedburgh Presbytery. John (17th/18th C.) ‘workman’ in Hawick. In 1709 he married Margaret Hislop, both of them being from the Town of Hawick. Their children included Walter (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His son Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in Hawick in 1723. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was probably a Burgh Officer, and is likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull; after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained the to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to bring in these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714–96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-renter of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigen and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigen Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given liferent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He married Catharine Hall and their children included: William (b.1786); and Douglas (b.1788). The witnesses in 1786 were butcher Andrew Waugh and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller and in 1788 were wigmaker Francis McKenzie and Kirk Officer Thomas Miller. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater’s 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her ‘Lady’s Companion’ was Maria Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She

He wrote ‘Borderers in Battle’ which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B. Rev. John T. ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. nee Scott (1928/9 –) growing up at Milsington, she married Sandy and later moved to Aberdeenshire. Her son James continued to own Milsington. She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society and helped organise the first Hawick High School reunion in 1980. She wrote ‘An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa’s Burial Ground’ (1987), ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ (1991), ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) and ‘History of the Scotts of Milsington’ (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and 1st Duke of Richmond, son of Esné the 1st Duke of Lennox. He was the next in line to the throne of Scotland after James VI. He was made Lord High Admiral in 1591 and in 1592 was appointed Warden of the Middle March. In that year he and the Laird of Cessford were directed by the King to deal with the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Roan. He gave a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw and Easter Essenside, probably in 1593 (although transcribed as 1553); he must have been Baron of Ashkirk then. In 1594 he resigned into the hands of the King (for later infeftment) the Earldom of Bothwell, including his Lordships and Baronies, such as Liddesdale, Longnewton, Wilton and Chamberlain Newton, lands of Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool and Alemoor and patronage of the Kirk of Hawick. In 1603 he had a charter for the lands and baronies formerly belonging to the Archbishop of Glasgow, which included the Baronies of Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf and Ancrum. He married 3 times. He was buried in Westminster Abbey and was succeeded by his brother Esné. Sir Ludovic of Minto (17th C.) son of Sir Walter. He is recorded in several deeds in 1663. He was involved in disputes with his father and also an unsuccessful investment in lands in Ireland. In 1670 he sold the Barony of Minto to the Marchioness Dowager of Montrose, Isabella Douglas. He married Elizabeth Cunningham, daughter of the 8th Earl of Glencarne, but they divorced in 1668. There were no children from the marriage and he was probably succeeded by a nephew, Sir John. Margaret (b.c.1775) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when she was living as a widow at the Sandbed. Her children included Mary, Margaret, Wilson, Beatrice and Margaret. Margaret (19th C.) daughter of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside.
Stewart

She was known as an attractive girl with a charming personality. She married civil engineer William Blood of Cranagher, and their children were Blindon (who became Gen. Sir Blindon, K.C.B.), Bagot, Robert and Margaret. Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgess of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the ‘mails’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhoun and had a son, Robert. He witnessed a document for the Duke of Lennox in 1594. Matthew of Barnhills (d.c.1796) son of Rev. Walter, minister of Ashkirk. He was served as heir to his father in 1750, but was not infested in the lands of Barnhills until 1780. He had a ‘decreet of excambion’ with Robert Bennet in 1775. In 1780 he appears to have sold Barnhills to Cornelius Elliot and bought it back the following year. In 1780 he had a sasine for the lands of Wester Barnhills ‘in fee’ (with Alexander Alison holding them ‘in liferent’). He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. His sisters Mary, Helen and Isabel inherited the lands in 1796. Robert 1st Duke of Albany (c.1340–1420) 3rd and illegitimate son of King Robert II, brother of ‘John’ who became King Robert III. He functioned as Regent during his father’s infirmity, and also after his brother’s death during the minority of his nephew James I. He was thus involved in internal power struggles in Scotland, as well as in leading military expeditions into England. This included indirect involvement in the ‘Siege of Cocklaw’ in 1403. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, his son Murdoch was exchanged with Henry Percy, and he besieged Roxburgh Castle in 1417. Andrew ‘de Hawick’ served as his Secretary from 1406. He married firstly Margaret Graham, Countess of Menteith, and secondly Harriet, daughter of Sir William Keith. His children were: Murdoch, who became the 2nd Duke of Albany and was beheaded; Isabel, who married Alexander Leslie, Earl of Ross and Walter Haliburton of Dirleton; Margaret, who married Sir John Swinton; Marjory, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Lochow; Elizabeth, who married Sir Malcolm Fleming of Cumbernauld; Joan, who married Robert Stewart, Lord of Lorn; Beatrix, who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew; Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar. Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. In 1533 he was appointed as his representative by William, son of the deceased John Turnbull. William Turnbull offered ‘kindly service’ to him, and he delivered an old version relating to Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. He married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. His children included John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), Agnes (who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchans and Dundonald) and Elizabeth (who married John Maxwell of Calderwood). Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for Tweeddale. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st Earl of Traquair; he was tutor in 1619 when there were 2 cases brought against the Turnbulls for cutting down timber at Huntliehill and for removing hay from there. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident of the former Hassendean Parish. He married Mary ‘Malkye’ (Mackie) in Roberton Parish in 1684 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1685) and Robert (b.1687), baptised in Roberton; and William (b.1694) and George (b.1698), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1687 were George Scott (probably the one associated with Easter.
Groundistone) and Thomas Cowan. The witnesses in 1694 were John Scott and John Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. He is probably the James recorded at Easter Groundistone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltart in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Roberton session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was ‘Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret ('Peggie') Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Agnes (b.1776); Janet (b.1772); Robert (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). The witnesses in 1776 were the Associate Congregation. Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox (probably the gardener at Damside) and John Lorraine. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834–47. He then rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnett and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfclee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace; Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.c.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Howpasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of ‘Dunrod and Fintelauach’ for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crailing called ‘Stewartlandis’, which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were Sir John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), William (who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurer of Scotland), Archibald, Agnes, Marion (married Adam Maxwell of Southbar), Margaret, James, Nicolas, Robert and John. The family kept the ‘of Minto’ designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), although they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan. He is recorded as vintner at the Nag’s Head in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan. Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was ‘Walteri Senescalli Scotie’ when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Caesarian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglintoun and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was presumably a member of the Stewarts of Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George Elphinston in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in 1/3 of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well as lands in Morebattle). Apart from the title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. In 1641 he was a representative for Clydesdale to meet with the King. He married Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Lilias Stewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. He may also be the Stewart who sold off the family interest in the Barony of Minto. Sir Ludovic was succeeded by Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordiner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary's Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craik in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733); Janet (b.1735); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1741); and Mary (b.1745). Rev. Walter (1706–62) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns, he was baptised in Canongate, Edinburgh. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1730 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. In 1742 he was recorded in Selkirk as ‘minister of the Gospel at Ashkirk for victual supplied for the poor’. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devlin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as ‘of Barnhill’ (or ‘Barnhills’). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Duncanson (who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary (b.1751); Matthew (1752–82) of Barnhills; Helen (1754–1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James (b.1756), died young; and Isabel (b.1759, or Isabella). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills from his father and after Matthew’s death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was at Greenbank in 1780 and Stirches in 1792. He married Betty Miller in Robertson in 1774. Their children included: Betty (b.1780); Janet (b.1782); and Walter (b.1792). Isobel (b.1776) and Marion (b.1778), baptised in Robertson, with no mother’s name listed, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1792 were Gilbert Smith and Thomas Ferguson (both servants of Chisholme of that Ilk, suggesting that he also worked for the laird of Stirches). Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of ‘John Senescal de Jedwith’ who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as ‘of Teviotdale’. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according Christina, 2nd daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; John, who succeeded Robert; William, who succeeded John; James, who succeeded William; Margaret, who married James Murray of Falahill and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward; and a daughter who married William Sinclair of Blans. William (16th C.) holder of a partidge of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Sir William (d.1605) 5th Laird of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother Sir John, also inheriting the lands of Wells in Rulewater. In 1567 he was listed as brother-german of Sir John of Traquair when he witnessed the wedding contract for Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a ‘gentleman of the bed-chamber’ of James VI and was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. In 1592 he was surety for George Douglas of Bonjedward and Andrew Douglas of Timpendean. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594 and in the same year was appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1602 he complained about ‘reif’ committed on him by James Scott of Whithopei and in 1603 was in dispute with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his chamberlains over taxation. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he, along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he, along with John, witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Agnes Stewart. He could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Marion Henderson and whose son John was baptised in 1661, with witnesses John and Robert Henderson. Alternatively he could be the William ‘Stevert’ who married Agnes Scott and whose son Walter was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and James Dunlop. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the

weaver in Heap who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John Cairns in Wilton in 1711. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married ‘Mals’ is probably the William who witnessed a baptism William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1690. He married ‘Mals’ Hastie and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John and James Stewart (who were surely related). William (1695/6–1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Ettrick Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Elliot in 1720. Their children included Robert (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). He may be the William ‘Steward’ who witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for George Langlands of that Ilk in 1724. He also witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, resident of Tandlaw, in 1729. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1770 and 1780. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). Probably the same William secondly married Jean Scott in 1777, with children: George (b.1778); and James (b.1780). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. The baptism in 1780 was performed by Rev. John Young (meaning that he was a member of the Green Kirk), with witnesses James Scott and George Turnbull. William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinshouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled ‘Steuart’, ‘Stuart’ etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with ‘Stuart’ as well as ‘Steward’).

Steyll (stil) n. former name for lands near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankiburn. The description is of ‘the lands and houses of Steyll, and the half of the broad meadow towards the lands of Steyll ... on the west side of the Syke’; the exact location is uncertain. Somewhere around Branxholme Town seems feasible, but a location much further west, near the hill called ‘The Steel’, is also possible (also written ‘Steyl’ in 1420).

steyzs (stiz) n., pl. stays, a corset, girdle – ‘...sellin a thing frae hooselach goods ti backlacin steyzs’[IW].

St. George’s Kirk (sin’-jor-jeez-kirk) n. church in St. George’s Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as ‘Hawick Free Kirk’ for more than 50 years. It changed its name to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of ‘Ellabank’ next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply ‘St. George’s Church’ in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Pocock of London. The organ was added in 1920 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End ‘Free’ congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George’s was re-named ‘St. George’s West’. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Roberton Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A role of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaultier, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone 1873–79; W.A.P. Johnman 1880–1923; Donald G. Ross 1911–35 (assistant until 1923); C. Sydney Finch 1936–1967; Thomas N. Hood 1967–82; Neil Combe 1984–

St. George’s Lane (sin’-jör-jeez-län) n. another name for Free Church Lane.

St. George’s Manse see the Free Kirk Manse.

St. George’s West (sin’-jör-jeez-west) n. name given to St. George’s (Free) Church after the return of the West End congregation in 1956. It was renamed Teviot Parish Church in 1988. The old Manse for St. George’s West is along Buccleuch Road.

St. Helens (sin’-he-linz) n. girl’s school based in Heronhill House in about the years 1945–9. It was moved there from Bridge of Allan. The school had as many as 54 girl boarders and a few very young boys. Miss Jean Macdonald was the owner and Headmistress.

Stichill (sti-chil) n. village north of Kelso, with the parish church dating from about 1770. The nearby Stichill House is demolished, but was long the home of a branch of the Pringle family. A grand entrance and lodge houses still survive, however (the name may derive from the Old English ‘stycce’, meaning ‘a piece’; also written ‘Stichill’).

Stirches (stir-cheez) n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly ‘Stirkshaw’ or ‘Stirkschaw’. ‘Watt Scott of Stirkshawis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. There were sons of the Scotts of Synton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries, who sold it to the Chisholmes around 1660. About that time Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land there. William Chisholmes was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. William Cavers was living there in 1682 and William Telfer in 1683. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. Stirches Brick Works (stir-cheez-brik-wurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises perhaps near Priestrig and flows through Stirches and then partially underground to become the Howden Burn.

Stirches Croft (stir-cheez-croft) n. former farm on Stirches estate, where??.

Stirches House (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholms for about 200 years, being built on top of a medieval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitslade, after he became Laird in the late 15th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in ævum protegat hanc ædem necnon sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the mid-1970s – ‘Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw auld Hawick a dreaming still’ [IJ], ‘Wi’ haltin’ step by Stirches brae ‘To roam the Heap Hills ower … ’ [WFC], ‘A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around Ee think wi’ awe this is name And it feels like hallowed ground’ [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as ‘Stirkshaw’, ‘Stirkshawis’, ‘Stirkshaws’, ‘Styrkschaw’ and similar spellings; the modern ‘Stirches’ is first recorded in 1713, but it is still ‘Stirkshaw’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1500, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1501/2, ‘Stirkshawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1504/5, ‘Stirkshaw’ in 1505, ‘Stokschawis’ in 1512, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1579, ‘Styrk Schwais’ in 1579/80, ‘Styrkschawis’ in 1580/1, ‘Stirkshawis’ in 1590 and 1592, ‘Sterchehewis’ in 1602, ‘Stirkshaus’ in 1694, ‘Stirkshawes’ in 1678, ‘Stirchaus’ in 1682, ‘Stirkshaws’ in 1708 and ‘Stirthees’ in 1720; the origin is clearly from Old English ‘styre’ plus ‘sceaga’ or Scots ‘shaw’, meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).
the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials 'W.C. M.B. 1666' were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone); this panel now in the north-east gable. Tax was paid on 19 windows there in 1748. The main house was added to and altered over the years, becoming a whitewashed cluster of buildings. The main building was in turn largely demolished in 1899/1900 for John Blenkhorn, and rebuilt to the designs of J.P. Alison. This included a fabricated Blenkhorn coat-of-arms in stained glass on the staircase and a stable for 12 horses. The only mediaeval parts surviving are sections of the south gable and west wall. After it was finally completed in 1904, James Blenkhorn lived there for only another 5 years before his death. There are photographs of how the house looked during his time there. After Minnie Blenkhorn's death in 1922 the house went on the market and since 1926 has been run by the Augustinian Sisters as St. Andrew's Nursing Home, better known as 'the Convent'. An intricately carved slab from the old house, bearing the Chisholm crest, is in the Museum.

_{stir-cheez-luj, -loj_} n. small house near the entrance to the drive-way of the former Stirches House, there since at least the mid-19th century.

Stirches Mains

_{stir-cheez-mänz_} n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. In the early 19th century was James Bunyan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Owre the lang brae frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toun?’ [WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

_{stirk-rig_} n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farmhouse disappearing. ‘Stirkrig’ and ‘Stirkrig-hill’ were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also ‘Stirkrig’).

_{stirk-shawz_} n. early name for Stirches, after the stirks which grazed there. It changed to ‘Stirches’ in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkshaws for about 250 years (also ‘Stirkshaw’, ‘Stirkshaws’, ‘Stirkshaw’, etc.; incorrectly written ‘Strikshaws’ by Keith Scott).

Stirkshielhope

James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James ‘Jim’ (1924/5–) from Cumnock, he volunteered for the Royal Navy at the age of 18. He was a telegraphist and then served on minesweepers. He was on a ship the cleared mines for the D-Day landings and later his ship was sunk and the crew spent hours in the water before being rescued. After the war he joined the police, serving in Duns, Coldstream, Yetholm, Jedburgh and Hawick. He retired as a sergeant. He is Hawick’s last surviving link with D-Day. Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797. He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811.

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stristcher-hils’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of ‘Styrkschelhope’ listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and ‘Streichelhope’ recorded in a rental roll of 1541. ‘Willie’s Airchie’ Elliot of Strychill hill’ is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Elliot of Stobs and listed as ‘Struchehill alias Stitchelhill’ (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whitrope, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawstonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1841 census, with 7 quarriers working there. George Scott and family were living there in 1861 (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stichillhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

He served with the Royal Scots, was awarded the Military Cross and returned to Britain wounded (with a missing leg, and an obituary having been written about him after being reported killed in action). He graduated from St. Andrews in 1919 and received his B.D. there in 1922, having a special interest in Hebrew and Biblical Criticism. He spent some time in Jerusalem, then became assistant at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh before being appointed as minister of Teviothead Kirk in 1925. He was translated to Gilcomiston, Aberdeen in 1929 and Inveresk in 1937. He was minister of Iona Parish 1958–66 and received a Doctorate of Divinity. He married Margaret (‘Peggy’) McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as ‘Steven’).

siver (stI-vur) n., arch. a small coin, something of little value – ‘…A single siver would I give? never! Though he fell at my very door’ [JoHa], ‘Nixt race when it came oot an’ won, Hed no a siver tae pit on’ [MB] (from an old Dutch coin).

stivet (sti-vi’) n., arch. a stupid or obstinate person – ‘He’s an auld stivet!’ [GW].

St. James’ Fair (sin’-jam-zeez-fair) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar's Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburghshire.

St. James’ Flid (sin’-jäm-zeez-flid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened just a few days af-after St. James’ Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Bonchester Bridge being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James’ Hall (sin’-jäm-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John’s Kirk (sin’-jöonz-kirk) n. the for-er St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum).
The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town’s tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a ‘quoad sacra’ parish by Decree of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. An-drew’s and East Bank to form the new Trinity Kirk. The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong’s department store in 1962, later becoming Armstrong’s. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R. E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listed on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dunnett 1913–20;

St. Jude’s Fair (sin’-joodz-fär) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from ‘riding the fair’ (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the ‘St. Simon and St. Jude Fair’. St. Jude’s feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick’s Winter Fair in the 18th century.
Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leonards’s see St. Leonards

St. Leonard (sin’-le-nurd) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey at Noblac (now St.-Léonard) in France, where he is buried. His cult spread through Europe, with at least 177 British churches dedicated to him, including the hospitals of that name in Peebles, Edinburgh and Alnwick, as well as a smaller one at Ednam. There was additionally a nunnery named after him in Berwick and a hill and mill in Lauder.
Shrines dedicated to him were associated with the curing of leprosy, as well as the freeing of captives and the safe delivery of children. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attached to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin’-le-nurdz, sin’-lee-nurdz) n.
general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish.
The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924.
The singing of ‘Teribus’ outside the farmhouse af-after the Friday morning ‘Hut’ was started in 1890.
The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled ‘Hawick Townhead’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – ‘And lang may ing Teri: And lang may the flag Owre a cornet wag, And lang may we a’ be cheery’ [JEDM], ‘In front of old St. Leonard’s now the throg With one accord assembled, old and young All share the duties that to them belong – Again the Common Riding Song is sung’ [JCG] (named after Christian Saint Leonard, the reasons for which, and era being unknown; also written ‘St. Leonard’s’).

St. Leonard’s Handicap (sin’-le-nurdy-hawn-dee-kawp) n. former race taking place at the Common Riding. It is recorded in 1875 on the Saturday, being run over 1 1/2 miles.

St. Leonard’s Moor (sin’-le-nurdy-moor, -mär) n. another name for Hawick Moor – ‘...Then in the breast alike of rich and poor There rises up a sense of joy refined, As on they journey to St. Leonard’s Moor’ [JCG].

St. Leonard’s Moss (sin’-le-nurdy-moss) n. another name used generally for Hawick Moss, for the marshy land behind St. Leonard’s farm or more specifically applied to the boggy land near to the north of Pilmuir Rig farm, in the middle of the Dipper Field. It is marked near Pilmuir Rig on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. In 1713 the Council granted the right to ‘cast bakes’ anywhere on the mosses of the Common, except for here, Winnington Moss or Whitchesters Moss. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733.

St. Leonard’s Park (sin’-le-nurdy-pawrk) n. race-course at the Mair, opened in 1854, and used exclusively for the Common Riding races since 1855. It is one of the highest race courses in Britain, and also used for a few ‘flapping’ meetings every year. The paddock was extended in 1889 and offices erected in 1894.

St. Leonard’s Vaults (sin’-le-nurdy-vawlts) n. former name for the Ewe & Lamb pub in the late 19th century, at the Sandbed/Orrock Place (also sometimes ‘St. Leonard’s Spirit Vaults’ and ‘the St. Leonard’s Bar’).

the St. Leonard’s Stakes (thu-sin’-le-nurdy-stäks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a ‘selling stakes’, with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard’s Well (sin’-le-nurdy-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard’s Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilmuir Rig farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as ‘Lurgie’s Well’ (if that was not nearer to St. Leonards farm).

St. Malachy (sin’-maw-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised ‘Maelmaedhoc O’ Morgair’, who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of ‘Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Stancholm’ was mentioned in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Braxholme. This may have been the early chapel near Northhouse.

St. Margaret (sin’-mawr-gri’) n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her family’s influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November). Another St. Margaret of Antioch was an early Christian martyr, and there are also other saints of the same name.

St. Margaret’s an Wulton Sooth (sin’-mawr-gritz-an-wul’-in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with St. Margaret’s Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George’s West and Roberton churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George’s and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret’s Convent (sin’-mawr-gritz-kon-vin’) n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the ‘Third Order’ of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Staffordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1900 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoninus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplain followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S Mary & David’s, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women’s section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall there was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David’s until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret’s Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslaw-court built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.
St. Margaret’s Drive

St. Margaret’s Drive (sin’-mawr-gritz-driv) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent. It was named in 1990.

St. Margaret’s Home (sin’-mawr-gritz-hom) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a ‘Home for Incurables’, with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret’s Kirk (sin’-mawr-gritz-kirk) n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decree of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret’s and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35; …

St. Margaret’s Schuil (sin’-mawr-gritz-skil) n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart in 1854, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. Within a couple of years it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new building was constructed on the present site on Buccleuch Terrace in 1878, and later extended. The staffing problems were largely solved when the Dominican Sisters arrived in Hawick and supplied 2 teachers. A more modern building was erected in 1965 to accommodate 140 pupils, and was opened by Cardinal Gray. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1867–1951 are in the National Archives.

St. Mary see sin’-mä-ree n. title sometimes used for the Virgin Mary, the mother of Jesus of Nazareth and wife of Joseph. The church in Hawick was dedicated to her in 1214 (and this may have been a rededication). A spring in Castle Cary (the main seat of the Lovels) was also dedicated to her, there possibly being a connection here. The celebration of her Assumption (i.e. the apparent taking up of her body) on 15th August was of local importance, being mentioned in the 1511 Charter as the date on which the token payment was to be made to the Baron, as well as in the earlier charter of 1407 when the Barony was granted to Douglas of Drumlanrig, and in the 1420 charter of half of Bruxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. There were several other feast days associated with Mary, e.g. 1st January, 2nd July (Visitation), 8th September (Nativity) and 8th December (Immaculate Conception), which may also have been important in Hawick at one time. The entire month of May was also specially dedicated to Mary. James Wilson suggests that the date towards the end of May, mentioned in 1214, when the townspeople paid tribute to their church’s saint, may have led to the Common Riding taking place at that time of year.

St. Mary’s see St. Mary’s Kirk

St. Mary’s Kirk (sin’-mä-ree-kirk) n. St. Mary’s Church, occupying an eminence above the confluence of the Slitrig and Teviot. The existence of a church in Hawick is first recorded in 1183, and it was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214 by Adam, Bishop of Caithness (as recorded in the Chronicle of Melrose Abbey, ‘Dedicata est ecclesia Sanctae Marieae de Hawic a dompno A. Episcopo Cathenensi iiij, Kal. Junii’, i.e. ‘the Church of St. Mary of Hawick was dedicated by Lord Adam, Bishop of Caithness, May 29’). The original was probably at least as early as the coming of the Normans to the area, and may have been much earlier and Saxon. It contained ornate stonework (a few pieces of which survive in the Museum, including pillars surmounted by capitals and also a pattern of carved foliage, which was probably painted). The original may have been roofed with red flagstones. It was reslated and repaired in 1670. For centuries the church bell was rung to mark the passing of a resident of the Parish. Tradition says that a bell and clock were brought from Melrose Abbey when it was suppressed. The bell broke in 1693 and was melted and recast the following year (the Council enacting that it was only to be rung for deaths in those families that had contributed to the cost). In 1717 the charge for non-Burgesses was 2 shillings Scots (6 shillings for those outside the Burgh). The clock is recorded as early as 1701, when mention is made of it being broken for the last 12 years! In 1718 the Council asked for contributions for providing a new clock, and it was repaired in 1747, with new dial-plates made on the west and east sides; it was repaired again in 1761 at great expense, a clockmaker being brought in from Redpath for the purpose and a stent being raised to pay for it. The current clock dates from only 1873. The old steeple may have been turretted with a flat roof and a belfry at one of the corners; this ‘bell-house’ was rebuilt in 1723, since its ashlar work was in danger of falling. In 1729 it is recorded that the bell was rung daily at 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.; by the early 19th century the times were 5.30 a.m. and 8 p.m. Stone stairs were built up to the steeple loft around 1714, and the ladder to the steeple was mended in 1727. The bell was also taken down (and presumably replaced) and the steeple mended in 1747. The main floor of the church was still not fitted with seats in 1718, when the Session records describe a dispute over space for stools. Already in 1723 there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was largely demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50, weighing 560 pounds and made by Lester & Pack of Whitechapel); the cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenantry (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason’s Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner’s Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severely damaged in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. There has been some dispute over the ownership of the tower, with the Town Council regarding itself as the owners in the 19th century (and being responsible for its upkeep, as well as that of the clock contained within it); however, the legal status of such ownership was not established. The Kirk had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the ear-est Scots of Bucleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The church yard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect ‘through-stones’ appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up.
The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary’s was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Earl of Bothwell for most of history, but given to the Earls of Bothwell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick’s population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844
(when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1887. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from ‘Old Parish’ the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark ‘M.A.K.’ for ‘Master Alexander Kynneir’. Other existing tokens date from 1700. The ‘gaufre’, or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be pre-Reformation. The National Archives contain records relating to the quoad sacra parish dating from 1833. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1860–
William Simpson 1927–33; Walter Calderwood
1933–53; J.P. Wilson 1959–66; . . . Duncan Clark 1998–??; Marina D. Brown 2010–  ‘While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke; On which the temple that’s situate on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC]; ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary’ [RSC]. ‘I sei the Slitrig whirlin’ doon, and I hear St. Mary’s clock’ [JEDM], ‘Where stands St. Mary’s pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages intrepressed The ashes of the dead forgotten lie (The while the living pass unheeding by)’ [TK], ‘. . . And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL] (usually referred to as just ‘St. Mary’s’ or in earlier times as ‘the Kirk’ or ‘Hawick Kirk’ or ‘the Pairish Kirk’ to distinguish it from the other churches).

St. Mary’s Knot (sin'-mä-reez-no’) n., arch.
a knot tied triply, so that it is hard to undo –
‘He has tied them a’ wi’ St. Mary Knot, A’ these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (the note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ suggests that the line refers to ham-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary’s Loch (sin'-mä-reez-loch) n.
loch lying in the central southern uplands, about half-way between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7 1/2 miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Et-trick Shepherd – ‘Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary’s, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk that’s situat on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC], ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary’s bell’ [WL] (usually referred to as just ‘St. Mary’s’ or in earlier times as ‘the Kirk’ or St. Mary’s Quoad Sacra School’. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body.
St. Mary’s Shiel

The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department. Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary’s Shiel (sin’-mā-ree-z-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Sant-Marie Scheillis’, and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary’s Steps (sin’-mā-ree-z-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary’s Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary’s Well (sin’-mā-ree-z-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a ‘holy well’, i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthornside was known by the same name, or perhaps just Mary’s Well.

St. Michael (sin’-mī-kul) n. David (12th C.) witness to a charter for Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as ‘David de sco michaelae’. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Brauxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes ‘de Illifistun’ (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may well have been related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250; he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli junioire’ who witnessed a charter bewteen Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. A ‘retour’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notorised document (made at St. Mary’s Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Buccleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by ‘John of St. Michael, traitor’ (probably his father). In 1456
there was a further notorial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as ‘quondam Johanni de Sancti Michaelae, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michaelae’, suggesting that he was also deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455.

Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaele’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son ‘Elmeras’ is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183.

St. Ninian’s Day (sin’-ni-ne-inz-wöld) n. Saint’s feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners’ Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder’s Window of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Ninian’s Road (sin’-ni-ne-inz-rödd) n. street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.

St. Ninian’s Well (sin’-ni-ne-inz-wel) n. former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

stob (stob) n., arch. a stake, fence post – ‘...Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see’ [WL], ‘Compared wi’ a nibbie, a walkin’-stick’s nea better than a palin’-stob’ [DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for ‘Stobs’ and ‘Stobi Hill’, while the second may apply to ‘Stobicote’).

Stob Cleuch (stöb-klo-eq) n. small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stöb-ej-wud) n. plantation to the north of Minto Crags. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Stobedge planting dyke’ formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called ‘Stobedge’ was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Stob Fell (stöb-fel) n. hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stö-béek-o) n. farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Branxholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the ‘Lordship of Ryngwodfeld’. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of ‘Wicked Wat’. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allanhaugh; it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as ‘Stobbit, Coibrugh’ in 1634, ‘Stobbit, Coitburgh’ in 1653, similarly in 1661 and ‘Stobit-coat-burgh’ in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendinning and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott ‘Drover’ was tenant there in at least the period 1712–29, John Elliot was living there in 1716–22, Thomas Davidson was there in 1716, James Jackson in 1717 and William Telfer in 1720–23. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doechuch, Northhouse and Braithaugh. William Edmondson was there in 1727, James Jackson and John Elliot in 1728, Walter Henderson in 1729 and William Scott in 1738. It was also the birthplace in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. William Wilson was there in 1772. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. George
Stobie Cote  see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stō-bee-klooch) n. small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leaugh Cottage, just north of Redheugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.

Stobie Rig (stō-bee-rig) n. small ridge of land between the Liddel Water and Foulshiels farmshouse, just south of Stobie Cleuch.

Stobie’s map (stō-beez-map) n. map of Roxburghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobi Hill (stō-bee-hil) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslade farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslaid Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked ‘Stobiehill on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stō-bee-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as ‘Stobimedhe’.

Stobitcote  see Stobicote

Stobo (stō-bō) n. John (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not ‘trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect’ [BR1659].

Stobs (stōbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith’s shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military camp. The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranston was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The superiority of the lands of Stobs was held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. Gavin Gledstains inherited the land from his deceased brother George in 1580. They were sold before 1584 to Gavin Elliot of Bailliebie, who then became the first Eliott of Stobs. On his death they were inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’, who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with ‘swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves’ threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Eliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’, the estate became the seat of the Eliott family for many generations. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Harwood Burn and William’s Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. In 1694 ‘The place & office houses’ of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while ‘Stobs his cooks wife’ was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. John Henderson was recorded living there in at least 1726-30 and Andrew Lillico in 1736-41. Sir Gilbert Eliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled ‘Stobbs’, ‘Stob’, ‘Stobbis’, ‘Stobbes’, etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as ‘Stobbis’ and in 1370 as ‘stokkis’, perhaps in error, with ‘the Stobbis’ appearing in 1458/9, ‘Stobis’ in 1509/10, ‘Stobbis’ in 1511, ‘the Stobbis’ in 1592 and ‘Stobs’ in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Stobbs’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for ‘stakes’ or ‘stumps’, perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block.

the Stobs Castle Stakes (thu-stőbzs-kaw-sul-stāks) n. race run over 2 miles on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

Stobs Crater (stőbzs-krā’ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

stocks (stoks) n., pl. long, white neckcloth worn as part of formal riding gear, popular in the 19th century. It was first adopted by the Principalis at the 1928 Common Riding.

the stocks (thu-stoks) n. wooden boards with semi-circles cut into them, placed together to hold people as a form of public punishment. Hawick’s stocks were next to the Mercat Cross. A new set is recorded being purchased in 1755. In 1787 the ‘stocks, wood and iron work, and lock’ were mended. They were in regular use until the end of the 18th century, and are preserved in the Museum (in fact the wood crumbled and was replaced with a replica, using the original iron-work around 1898). People were sentenced by the Bailies to spend up to several days in the stocks for relatively minor crimes, including theft and assault. Usually the feet were secured, but sometimes also the arms. The last use was for an elderly female offender in November 1800 – ‘…and sa lie acht days in the stockis, and stand with ane paper with the theft written upon their forehead at the mercat-crosse, upon the mercat day’ [BR1640], ‘…the baylyea fynes and onlaws him in fyftie pound Scotts, and ordaines him to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall baylyea his will and pleasure’ [BR1693] (see also the juggs).

Stockwell (stok-wel) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant of Hawick butcher Andrew Wilson. In 1815 he was found not guilty of assaulting Janet Ogilvie (or Orrock). It is stated that both were married people. He appears to have been married to Elizabeth Rae and had a daughter Isabella in Kelso in 1812. He was probably son of Thomas and Margaret Fairbairn, born in Kelso in 1789.

Stockwell Orphanage (stok-wel-or-fi-nej) n. orphanage in London, established in 1867 for boys and in 1879 for girls. In the 1880s Hawick had a circulating library, based at 2 Dovecote Street, to raise money for the orphanage.

stockyaird (stok-yärd) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse – “…and convey the chests containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyaird where it lay until the danger was passed’ [IW.L].

Stoddart (sto-dur’) n. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. David (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnston Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Daud Stodhirde’ is listed there with a value of 23 shillings and 4 pence. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as ‘gudewife of Greatlaw’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. Her lands there were valued at £104. She was presumably widow of the former owner of Greatlaws and may have been connected with the Riddell family. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and John, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. James (17th C.) listed at Flex among ‘The poor in Hawick Parish’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Grizzell Elliot and whose daughter Malie (b.1674) was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (18th C.) recorded in Ormiton in 1726 and 1727. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Walter (b.1726) and Walter (again, b.1727). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Armstrong and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were wright James Roger and merchant John Scott. James (19th C.) mason of Deanburnhaugh. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Joanne Stodhird’ in the 1447 sasine for the Cousinlands, purchased by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The witnesses are Scotts, except for the last 2, who are this man and Patrick Turnbull; it is possible that they were the Hawick Bailies at that time. John (16th C.) described as ‘Johne Stoddart, cobilman to the lard of Langlands’ in 1576. This was in a pledge made for him (and George Elliot) to the Privy Council by Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been ‘enterit’ and ‘deliverit in the sheref of Roxburch his hand’ who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was ‘Johne Stoddart, cobleman at Hawick’ when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the latter part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) recorded in ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1764, 1766 and 1772 when 3 of his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Mary Anderson in Robertson in 1762. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). Kenneth (164-1700) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australian Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert Hall and Nicole Kidman. styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman.

Robert (1964–1995) born in Hawick, he qualified as a musician then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australian Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at the Flex, probably related to the earlier Robert who was there. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Henderson ‘younger in Flex’. His son Francis was baptised in 1704, with witnesses William Henderson (also in the Flex) and Andrew Riddell (in Goldielands). Robert (d.1759) resident of Eves Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw, probably in 1756. Their children included: John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759), baptised after he had already died. The witnesses in 1759 were John Turnbull and Patrick Maxwell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Stouslie in 1729. He married Elspeth Turnbull and their children included James (b.1727), Margaret (b.1729), Thomas (b.1732) and James (again, b.1737). The witnesses in 1729 were William Grieve and John Scott. Thomas (1828–1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballarat being called the ‘City of Statues’. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was herd at Harwood in 1711. He married Jean Scott and their children included Isobella (b.1711) and Margaret (b.1713). The witnesses in 1711 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Bailie Walter Elliot. Perhaps the same Walter had children Christian (b.1707) and Walter (b.1710) baptised in Robertson Parish. He may therefore be the same man as the Walter recorded at Meadshaw in 1710. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Robert Simpson at West Riddell in about 1823. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘servant to David Gray tenant in Weensland’. He was living at the Sandbed in 1724. He married Helen Wilson (also from Hawick) in 1719 and their children included: Archibald (b.1720); Robert (b.1722); and Janet (b.1724), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1720 were David Gray in Weensland and merchant John Johnston. The witnesses in 1724 were Walter and John Scott. William (17th/18th C.) ‘casaer’ (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he was ‘Casaer in Flexs’ when he married Marion, daughter of tailor Walter Gledstains. Their children included: John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother’s name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. The witnesses in 1730 were Will Stoddart (surely related) and John Telfer. William (19th C.) woolsorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year’s Cornet was unable to attend. William ‘Willie’ (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick’s only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in setting up the Hawick Workers’ Mill, which supplied woolen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed mill-workers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stoddert’, ‘Stodert’, ‘Stotherd’ and other variants; also Stothart).

stog (stög) v., arch. to stab, pierce, jab – ‘I have stogd myself in the leg’ [HAST1922].

stoggit (stö-gi) pp., poet. stabbed, thrust – ‘Thou hest stogget sair t me, that I nicht fa’...’ [HSR].

Stoghill (stö-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonsides in upper Teviolare. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonsides, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buc-cleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

stoiter (stoɪt-ər) v., arch. to stagger, stumble – ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim …’ [WL], ‘… But byways for the likes o’ me Although the step may stoiter’ [WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej, stō-nej) n. farm west of Wolfelee above Howahill, once part of one of the main estates of Hobkirk Parish, also formerly known as ‘Stanledge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stoneslegha’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stonesleigh’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanliche’ in Et-trick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1586/7 and in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603–09, part sold to Gibbie Elliot of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to William Eliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Wolfelee, Stonedge, Unthank, Howa, Snap, Hobsburn and Little Gledstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes Scott, John Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later purchased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £856 12s, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1766 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Wolfelee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Elliot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee also owned small parts valued (along with Unthank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous purchase had really been completed. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sinclairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd there in 1797. Lands formerly in Stonedge (including Unthank) were listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee in 1811, valued at £112 5s 7d. The farm was tenanted by Thorburns through much of the 19th century and by the Barrie family into the 20th century. The original house was a strong tower situated on a rocky ledge, said to be surrounded by a very thick wall. All sign of this was already gone by the 19th century, although it is said that Mr. Barrie (who lived at Harden) picked up the old key to the peel and passed it on to the Marquis of Lothian. It was stated in the 19th century that there is a stone circle near here, in the direction towards Shankend, although if it existed it is now lost (many spelling variants exist in earlier documents, including ‘Steinleith’; it is ‘Stainletche’ in 1562, ‘Stenleche’ in 1567, ‘Stanielege’ in 1586/7, ‘Stonyleche’ and ‘Stonyletche’ in 1590, ‘Stanyleche’ in 1595, ‘Stanyeleg’ and ‘Stanylege’ in 1601, ‘Stanieche’ and ‘Stainieloche’ in 1603, ‘Stanylege’ in 1604, ‘Stanyeledge’ and ‘Steneledrig’ in 1606, ‘Stennyledge’ and ‘Staneleche’ in 1607, ‘Stainelache’ and ‘Stenletch’ in 1609, ‘Stanielege’ in 1611, ‘Stanileydecke’ in 1612 and 1615, ‘Stanieledge’ in 1616, ‘Stenniledge’ in 1618, ‘Stanileged’ in 1647,
Stonedge

Stonedge (sten-leej, stō-nej) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Stoneslegh’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. Although his name has also been transcribed as ‘Scunesleigh’, the more modern transcription makes the connection with the lands in Hobkirk Parish clear. His seal bore a ‘cabossed’ stag’s head with a cross between the antlers and the name ‘S...OHIS DE STYKS?Y?’; William of Yetholm had a similar seal. He is ‘de Stonesleigh’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton.

Stonedge Hill (stō-nej-hill) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry planting. Near the top of the hill there was previously a cairn, probably quite ancient, but now obliterated by forestry ploughing.

stooond (stoo-din) pp. stood – ‘A got stoooned on be a muckle cairt horse’ (cf. the older studden; this is the past participle of stan or ‘stand’, with the past tense being stuid or ‘stood’).

stook (stooek) n. a shock of cut sheaves, often placed upright to dry, a haystack – ‘18 Ma. they broke in through the growing corn and stooked of Newbigging where they did damage...’ [Ck&L1767], ‘Thomas Turnbull one day caught her stealing oats from the stooks in a field where she was gleaning’ [GT], ‘At restin’ time amang the stoons I sat upon his knee...’ [JT], ‘The hervest sun shines through the trees An’ lichtens the stooks an’ the stan’in corn...’ [FGS], v. to set up sheaves – ‘...Or prank amang the stook-ed corn. Till day was on the turn’ [WFC] (this was stak in earlier times).

stookie (stoo-kee) n. stucco, plaster of Paris, also used in analogy with a plaster statue to mean someone who feels foolish and out of place – ‘oo felt like a right couple o stookies’, ‘Muckle stookies’ with red cheeks and a pronounced ‘country loup’” [BB].

stooond (stoo-ond) n., arch., poet. a throb, ache, sharp pain – ‘...An’ a’ past on, till a lanne-ness play’d, Wi’ a stooned, thro’ the heart o’ the tocherless maid’ [JoHa], ‘It through my bosom stounded, No hopes it to alloy’ [JoHa], ‘...Wakes in my breist the tenderest stound nae mair’ [WL], ‘...Or, strakkit wi a stound o conscience, to face A vinegar wife owre a preen-cushion dish o pot-tered herring...’ [DH], a blow, start – ‘But od’ sic a stooned as he got when he came, An’ saw the queer hurklin’ bodie’ [JoHa], v., poet. to throb – ‘...the sicht garrd the gutter-bluid lowpin and puttin an stooding throwe aa ma book’ [ECS], to stupefy, resound – ‘...When ilk ane kens as he stoons wi’ pride, That the pick o’ the basket’s at his side’ [WL] (also spelled ‘stound’).

stoor (stoor, stowr) n. dust, originally a swirl of dust in motion, but also applied to dust in general – ‘An’ some wi’ fa’s their claes hae made A white as ony miller Wi’ stowre that day’ [JoHa], ‘mercy, look it the stoor ahint that!, ’Than did I betchell thame sma’ as the stour afore the wund...’ [HSR], ‘...the motor birls up the stoor on the Jethart road’ [ECS], ‘Everly, whan A haiggle on alang streets chowky wui chuds o shairny stoor...’ [ECS], ‘Get up my lads, and mak’ a stour, And weel the fiddle screw’ [WH], ‘Maps...Stour-getherers...Tummelin’ oot o’ the derk again...’ [DH], ‘...To wat his mooth, stoure dry’ [WL], ‘...And muckle stoor these auld wives made, The neebours all were fair dismayed’ [WFC]. ‘The Landlord’s poker face seems dour. He tells the tourist ‘It’s drookit stour, and stour is the stuff that the wind blows in. It’s powdery, drouthly; it’s gritty and thin: But a day of rain or a week of haar, and ye’ll need your wellies. It turns to glaur’’ [TD], powdery substance in general – ‘A white as ony miller Wi’ stowre that day’ [JoHa], v., arch. to be wind-blown like dust – ‘And the spraye came stourn back i’ their face, Frae the steed of Lucky Skrac’ [JTe], ‘The aipples stour’d off the stance’ [GW] (see also the related stour; from Old French ‘estour’, for tumult, perhaps influenced by the English ‘stir’; also spelled ‘stour’ and ‘stoure’).

stoorrie (stoo-ree) adj. dusty – ‘But never think to dit my shameless een, Wi’ stoury hopes o’ richly giltit fame’ [JoHa], ‘The rank an’ file rub stoorie een, An’ a’ concerned May greet an’ grane...’ [FL], ‘...wui stoorie claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizzent-ends, an skluiffin shuin wur.

the Store (thu-stör) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as ‘the Chartist Store’ with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker’s shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stocking-makers at the old Tabernacle building in the years 1874–81. The stableyards and dairy were built on Orchard Terrace in 1891 (designed by J.P. Alison). The main shop, usually the one referred to as ‘the Store’, stretched from Tannage Close to Baker Street and from the High Street to Teviot Crescent. It contained many departments, including clothing, electrical, shoes, furniture, toys, ladies hairdressing and a tea room. This main building was constructed in 1885 at 65, 67, 69 and 71 High Street, with the surviving upper level frontage at 65–67 designed by local architect Michael Brodie in a French Renaissance style, with the first and second floor windows having arched heads, each with a different carving; this is a category B listed building. This was Hawick’s biggest department store, with smaller shops elsewhere in town. Shoppers collected stamps that could be redeemed for goods, and departments within the ‘Store’ communicated via characteristic pneumatic tubes. The main shop closed in 1987, with the property sold off to several developers. The Co-op at Burnfoot remains, however. A history was published in 1889 – ‘There er peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer knees, In the Store, in the Store, There are peis, peis, This come up ti yer knees, In the Hawick Co-operative Store!’ [T], ‘...waitin eer turn at the Store’ [ECS], ‘In Hawick in days lang syne When the world and huz were younger Oo dune oor messages at the Store A still can mind ma number’ [IWL].

the Store Dairy (thu-stör-dä-ree) n. building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store’s dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thu-stör-feeld) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braid Road, near the Miller’s Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – ‘The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o’ Hawick was there’ [AY].

the Store van (thu-stör-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – ‘...wi’ a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O’ the Store van’ [DH].

Storff Burn (storf-burn) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join Great Warrington Sike, before eventually running into Larriston Burn.

Storff Sike (storf-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on Larriston Fells and is joined by Little Warrington Sike. Note that it distinct from Storff Burn, which lies further south.

storfully (stōr-fu-lee) aede., arch. excitably, in an agitated way – ‘...and then if she carries on storfully, as she’s amaist shure to do, throw half-a-dozen o’ plates or sae doon i’ the floor ...’ [HAST1868] (cf. stoor and stour).

Storie (sto-re) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Chester-house in Rulewater. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. Adam (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm. His children included: Marion (b.1723); Robert (b.1728); and Marion (b.1730). Andrew ‘Dand’ (15th/16th C.) resident of Newcastl. In 1502 Robert Rule (from the same place) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, with the pair fined for non-appearancei at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as ‘Cuthbert Storey of Hawicke’ in a presentment where Cuthbert of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe’. It is unknown whether or not he survived. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James ‘in Spitle’ whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else they were father and son. Either he or a near relative was probably the ‘Laird Storie’ whose lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish were valued at £18 in 1643, 1663 and 1678. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as ‘undermiller att ...’ (probably Newmill) in 1700. His children included: William (b.1693); Bessie (b.1698); and Anna (b.1700). The witnesses in 1698 were Robert Thomson and John Goodfellow and in 1700 were James Craw and James Dryden, smith at Newmill. James (d.bef. 1714) from Ancrum Parish. In 1718 he married Jean Bennet, who was from Bedrule Parish. In 1741 his widow gave money to the poor in Ancrum Parish, owing from her husband. James (d.1797) from Rulewater, he died at Robert Biggar’s Inn in Hawick in 1797. He could be the James who married Elizabeth Henderson in Bedrule in 1755, and his wife could be the widow of that name who died later the same year in Silver Street. James (19th C.) local man known for his poetry. He competed in the ‘Auld Brig’ competition and published ‘Poems on several subjects’ (1837). He was said to be a repository of local stories relating to the Covenanters. He could be the labourer, born at Southdean in about 1780, who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841 and on Brougham Place in 1851. John (15th C.) received a boll of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Johanni Storis’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Story’ on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed along with Robert, to whom he was surely related. John (17th C.) tenantin ‘Roods’ (or ‘Rodes’) in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1757 (when he was ‘younger’, suggesting his father was also John) and at ‘Harden anna’ in 1762. He married Marion Borthwick. His children included: John (b.1757); and Helen (b.1762). John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Borthwickshiel (probably) in 1735 when his son John was baptised. John (dbef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He married Isabel Watson, who died in 1815. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1764); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Helen (b.1767); Margaret (b.1796); Isabel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1779). The witnesses to Elizabeth’s baptism were Thomas Cowan and Walter Scott and in 1772 were the whole congregation. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Hawick Parish in 1849. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Rowll Spittell’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). In 1605 Robert Scott of Thirlestane was caution for Walter Scott of Dykes in a bond not to harm him. Robert (17th C.) resident of the old Hassendean Parish. He was listed in Over Boonraw in 1688. He married Isobel Wright in 1679 and their children (baptised in Robertson Parish) included: Isobel (b.1768); Margaret (b.1782); Bessie (b.1684); Walter (b.1686); and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert and George Ormiston (who lived at Boonraw), in 1686 were William Nichol and Adam Scott and in 1688 were again George and Robert Ormiston. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in 1684. Along with Robert Ormiston, he witnessed a baptism for William Nichol in Boonraw in 1696. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Cavers in Wilton in 1720 and their children included: Christian (b.1723); and John (b.1726). He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in 1725 for William Scott in Newton and in 1735 for Gideon in Roughheugh. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner at Brauxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Betty and their children included Jean, Thomas, Margaret, Robert, Janet and George. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a groom who lived at Falnash. His wife was Janet Middlemas, and already dead by 1861. His children included Helen, George and Robert, and he had a nephew, William Easton. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Thomas Scott in Brauxholme and John Scott in Spittal were convicted of a crimes against him. They came ‘across him in villa de spittale Inter aqueduct de damys’. Thomas (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Roucastle’ in 1632 when his widow Bessie Craik feued lands in Rucycastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe (along with William Armstrong) recorded on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is surely descended from the ‘Laird Storie’ who in 1643 owned the same piece of land, which later became part of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He owned part of the old lands of Ruecastle, as recorded in 1788, with value £18 (plus teinds). Probably the same Thomas was recorded paying the Land Tax for part of Ruecastle in 1811. Thomas (b.1793/4) blacksmith in Newcastleton, at about 40 South Hermitage Street. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet, and their children included William, Walter, Helen, Matthew, Nichol and Janet. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1551 as then occupier of an acre of arable land in the lands of Spittal-on-Rule, specifically on ‘lie Harparhill’ (whose location is unknown), which was granted by the Baron of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He witnessed the associated notorial instrument and letter of reversion, along with 2 men called Alexander ‘Wreth’, one of whom was a miller. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Weynis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. William (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls (also formerly spelled ‘Storey’, ‘Storrie’, ‘Story’ and ‘Storry’).

Storiesteed (sto-ree-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll, listed before Byreholm, and so presumably

storm (störm) v., arch. to beset or cover with snow or otherwise deprive livestock of pasture – ‘The term ‘being stormed’ was originally used to express the want of food suffered by sheep when the ground was covered with snow’ [RB].

storm-staad (störm-stawd) adj., arch. delayed because of a storm – ‘Storm-staad (stawd) = starom-stayed; delayed by stormy weather whilst on a journey or errand’ [ECS] (see also staa), stœrm-stawd adj., arch. delayed because of a storm – ‘Storm-staad (stawd) = starom-stayed; delayed by stormy weather whilst on a journey or errand’ [ECS] (see also staa)

stot (sto) v. to bounce, rebound – ‘wull ee stop stottin yer baa off ma waa?’, ‘Item ane stot of twa yeir auld or thairby price 30s’ [SPB1579], ‘...And the star beame stotted out of the way, When it saw the ryders come’ [JTe], ‘The rain hed been fair stottin at Jethart an it wasneh muckle of twa yeir auld or thairby price 30s’ [SPB1579], ‘I wull tak’ nae stot o’ thy hous ... ’ [HSR], ‘This alsua sall pleese the Lord mair nor ane stot or bullok that heth cluts an’ hoorns’ [HSR], ‘Doddies an stirks an queys an stots’ [ECS], ‘A muckle jet-black Angus stot – I gey near fainted on the spot’ [TD], ‘And this ye may take as Wat Harden’s word: Each stot they ha’ stolen comes hame wi’ a herd!’ [WHO], ‘We met wi’ a rush i’ the pass, Wi’ a clash made the steel-fire flee, But he fell like a stot on the grass; And who daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T].

Stot (sto’) n., arch. James (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Lyden. Their children included Charles (b.1723) and probably Margaret (b.1719). James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Margaret Cavers and their children included John (b.1730). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Highcusters in 1753. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Magdalen (b.1745); Margaret (again, b.1749); Agnes (b.1752); William (b.1753); and James (b.1755).

Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident. His son James was born in 1734 (also written ‘Stott’): it is possible that some of these may be errors for ‘Scot’.

Stot Cleuch (sto’-klooch) n. small stream in southern Liddesdale, which flows roughly north-east to meet Timnis Burn.

Stotfield (sto’-feeld) n. lands that were part of Lilliesleaf Common. Along with Nolt-lair, it was described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls that it was feuded by John Scott in Bewlie Mains from William Riddell of Camieston.

Stothart (sto-dur’) n. David (1772/3–1841) resident of Deanburnhaugh. He married Christian Jackson, who died at Doecleuch in 1851, aged 70. Their daughter Jane died at Deanburnhaugh in 1841, aged 33. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. David Orkney Smith ‘D.O.’ (1900–72) shopkeeper at 6 High Street, son of saddler George. After he took over the shop he branched out into sporting goods, fishing tackle and toys. He was also involved with local operatic productions. His cousin was Herbert Stothart, Hollywood musical director who won as Oscar for ‘The Wizard of Oz’.

Janet (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who is recorded in 1725 being added to the poor list and receiving a badge allowing her to go begging. She may have been the Janet born to William and Bessie Elliot in Hawick in 1685. Joseph (b.1808/9) born in Langholm, son of David and Christian Jackson. He was a macon at Deanburnhaugh, being recorded there in the 1841 and 1851 censuses (in 1841 with his mother, along with David probably his brother). In 1861 was living at Wilton Dean. He married Janet Hudson in Roberton in 1832 and their children included Jane (b.1842), Margaret (b.1844), Christian (b.1847) and David (b.1851). Joseph (19th/20th C.) saddler at 6 High Street, taking over from George Davies, who had been saddler there before him (see also Stoddard).

Stothart’s (sto-durts) n. D.O. Stothart, sports goods, fishing tackle and toy shop at 6 High Street through most of the 20th century. The shop was a butcher’s run by George Davies in the mid-19th century. It was then taken over as a saddler’s by James Thomson, then by Robert and Thomas Hall and then by George Davies (junior). Joseph Stothart took over in the 1880s, continuing the saddler’s business and eventually it passed to his son David, who moved out of saddlery into sports equipment, fishing tackle and toys. Len Elliot took over the business in 1971 and it closed for good in 1989.

stotter (sto’-ur) v. to stagger, stumble, totter – ‘he was stotterin hame as yaisual’, ‘...with a sort of nervous excitement which made it stotter’ [HSR], ‘Thaye reel bak-an-forwart, an’ stotter like ane drunken man ... ’ [HSR] (cf. steiter and stotier).

stourney (stowr, stoo-ree) adj., poet. dusty – ‘May flowers did bloom, the skies were clear, The roads were dry an’ stourney’ [JoHa], active, restless, excitable (said of a young child) – ‘Cuddle doon ye stourie loon – Ye wee croodlin’ doo’ [JT] (see also storie).

Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stirches, reached by the left hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were Turnbulls here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. John Turnbull from the Borthwick was granted the lands by John, Lord Lindsay, having previously been held by William Lindsay of ‘Garmilton’, and Turnbull resigned them back to Lord Lindsay in 1468. Thomas ‘Trumbl’ of Stouzlie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Grahamslaw from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scotts living here in the 1500s. In 1506 ‘Stously and the five merk lands of Grundiston were valued at £5 Scots, in time of peace at six merks, and were held of the Earl of Bothwell as baron of the barony of Chamberlain-newton for one penny banch’. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stowslie’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stougie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stouzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land...

Stow (stow) n. town on the Gala Water, near the Moorfoot Hills, in the old county of Midlothian, and now in the Scottish Borders region. It is roughly half-way between Hawick and Edinburgh, and was a station on the Waverley Line. The road to Edinburgh via Stow (later the A7) was only opened in 1818, after which it has become well-known to all Terries. The settlement was once known as ‘Stow of Wedale’. Formerly one of Scotland’s original seats of sanctuary, it was also the Bishop of St. Andrews summer residence. The ruined Old Kirk (late 15th century, having been repaired in the 17th century) replaced an older church of 1242 and an even older one allegedly built by King Arthur, and holding a piece of the ‘true cross’. An ancient broch, Bow Castle and the 1654–55 Pack-horse Bridge are nearby. The town probably achieved burgh status in 1699. Population (1991) 528 – ‘Syne, up on the tap, wi’ a thankfu’ sigh, That its wark was gey
Stow

Stow (sto) n. John (c.1525–1605) English historian. From humble beginnings he published several influential works, including editions of Chaucer, Chronicles of England and a Survey of London, although he remained poor all his life. His Chronicle contains the story of Hawick’s residents burning the thatch from their roofs before a visit by Sussex and his men in 1570.

stoned (stown) pp., poet. stolen – ‘He hadna’ been awa’ a week but only twa, When my mither she fell sick, and the cow was stoun awa’’ [CPM], ‘…which, says my narrator, ‘nae doubt they had stoun out o’ some honest Laird’s cellair’’ [EM1820], ‘They’ve stown the bridle off his steed, And they’ve put water in his lang gun; They’ve fixed his sword within the sheath, That out again it winna come’ [LHTB]; ‘She stole my heart, she broke her vow, And love has stown my wits away’ [JTe], ‘O dool! an’ what will douce fouk say, When this I tell – Death’s stown away The ae best soul e’er warmed clay?’ [JoHa], ‘Oh, waeful and sad was the tale he did tell – How that he had been stoun frae his daddie’ [JT], ‘At Wheel-Kirk, within the Catrail, Priest David had thirty-and-three Gude nowt that were stown head and tail By Percy o’ Keeldarstaneel’ [T].

stowp (stowp) n., arch. a tankard, flaggon, jug, liquid measure, bucket, particularly a deep wooden vessel, narrowing towards the top, crossed by a fixed wooden handle, and used for fetching water from public wells – ‘For taking up of ane pint stope … and offering to throw it att James Newbie’ [BR], ‘…and ilk ane of them wantit 4 stoupis’ [BR1656], ‘The inhabitants were enjoined to keep their ‘water stoups’ well filled …’ [V&M], ‘Come away, for the stoup it is toon, do you see?’ [JoHa], ‘Aa whiles think that life in this grey auld toon o’ Hawick Micht weel be compared to a river …’ [DH], ‘May ill befa’ the cankered loon, That winna mak’ the pint stoup clatter’ [GWe] (also spelled ‘stoup’ and formerly ‘stope’, etc.; they were used locally well into the 19th century).

Strachan

Stow struntn (stow-stun-tin) n. a kind of narrow worsted tape, originally made in Stow – ‘Stow-struntn, a species of coarse garters, which the inhabitants of a village called Stow were famous for manufacturing’ [JR],

St. Quentin Strip (sin’-kwen-tin-strip) n. plantation to the southwest of Riddell, north of Boosmill. The name may be connected with St. Quinette’s Fountain or else the forename Quentin formerly used by the Riddells of Riddell.

St. Quintegern’s Fountain (sin’-kwern-ti-gerzn-fown-tin) n. former name for a spring in Lilliesleaf recorded in the Register of Sasines in 1816. Given that the kirk there appears to have been dedicated to St. Mungo (also called ‘Kentigern’) it seems likely this was a spring near the church, perhaps one of the springs marked in Lilliesleaf Moss on modern maps. It may also be the place once known as the ‘Kirsenin Well’.

Struthers (strposn) n. Alan (14th C.) from the Northumberland family, he became Lord of Lyham through marriage. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1368. The lands he held included the Hawick in Northumberland. In about 1370 he was ‘Alano de le Strother’ when he witnessed a grant by John Neville of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. His children included Alan (contemporary of Chaucer at Cambridge), Henry, William (married a daughter of the Mayor of Newcastle) and Joan. Sir Thomas (d.1395) probably son of Henry, who was Sheriff of Northumberland. He was likely to be the Sir Thomas ‘of Strother’ whose charters are included in the collection of David Laing (although that does not match with a death in 1395). He was appointed custodian of Jedburgh Castle in 1394. He was reputedly an English champion, who was marauding around the Scottish Borders, bragging that he would take on any Scotsman. The challenge was met by Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) at Rulehaugh, witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. Struthers was killed in single combat it is said. Other accounts describe how Inglis’ force had attempted to breach the Castle walls and after being repelled when the English soldiers returned from the town, he challenged Inglis to single combat for breaking the truce (also written ‘Strother’ etc.).

Strynds (strposn) n. former lands in the Rule valley, near Westerhouses, later known as ‘Strange’. This was home of a prominent branch of the Oliver family in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. Robert Oliver from there, along with 7 other Olivers and a Shiel, had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. Several members of the same family had remission for thefts and other crimes in 1502 in a number of cases. Later in 1502 4 Olivers from here were all found guilty of rieving crimes and probably hanged. This branch was said to never have been heard of again, although it was said to be related to the later Olivers of Lustruther. The lands were valued along with Westerhouses at £6 5s., according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 (and the comptroller was allowed the ‘femes’ from there for that year), as well as 1539. Edward Oliver was there in 1541 and there were still Oliverson there in the late 17th century (also ‘the Strynds’; it is written ‘le sryndis’ in 1494/5, ‘Strydis’ and ‘Stryndes’ in 1502, ‘Stryndis’ and ‘Strydis’ in 1538 and ‘Stridis’ in 1539; the origin is probably the Old Scots word for rivulets; see also Strange).

St. Stephen’s Chaipel (sin-stee-vinz-chai-pul) n. Roman Catholic Chapel built in 1962 on Barnfoot Road (at the corner with Fairhurst Drive) to serve the Burnfoot area. The building has a novel triangular design with a high slender spire. In 1986 it was closed as a chapel, declared the Subscription Academy (thy-sub-skrip-shin-aw-ka-du-nee) n. another name for Hawick Academy. There was a school run out of the Subscription Rooms from about 1830, sometimes referred to as the Subscription School. It was renamed ‘the Subscription Academy’ in 1857 when J.A.H. Murray was invited to be headmaster (at age 17!). Not long after the school moved along Buccleuch Street to the former Quaker meeting house, and was then called ‘Hawick Academy’. It ran until 1865, after Murray had left for London. The ‘Subscription School’ meanwhile carried on with James C. Mudie as headmaster. Sometimes called ‘Hawick High School’, this ran until about 1874, when Mudie left town. Meanwhile Mudie’s assistant, James Brand, had left to start his own school in Union Street, which eventually became the senior part of the High School (the confusion and interconnection between the several Buccleuch Street schools makes some accounts very muddled!).

the Subscription Rooms (thy-sub-skrip-shin-roomz) n. building erected on Buccleuch Street in 1821 from public subscriptions, and used as an institute for the arts, as a library and as a public meeting place. The location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. The foundation stone was laid with full Masonic honours, with a speech by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson and a special verse by James Ruickbie. For the next few decades it was a popular venue for lectures, ‘magic lantern’ shows, concerts and related social gatherings. It was also used as the location for a private Academy, taught by Mr. Fleming 1837–40. Later it was rented to the Commercial Inn, although the main hall continued to be used for concerts etc. A particular event was a set of plays performed over 9 days by a company of actors (led by Burns Bryson, Keeley Halswelle and Gus Blake) from Edinburgh in October 1856, immortalised in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. About 1864 it was sold to Mr. Mudie, who used it to run his private school, called ‘Hawick High School’, which was later taught by Mr. Brand, who moved to Union Street. It was also used for a while as the premises for the ‘West-end Academy’, taught by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor’s hosiery mill who used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by the Catholic church and converted (largely through voluntary work) to become the Halls for S.S. Mary & David’s Chapel next door. Until only a few years ago it had a frontage ornamented with a portico untilled by 4 Grecian pillars. It was renovated in the early years of the 21st century and saw temporary use again as a school in 2006, housing pupils following the fire in Denholm – ‘This house a public building is design’d To gratify the curious mind; Subservient to the parson and the player, By turns a theatre, and a house of prayer’ [JR].

Summers (su-murz) n. Adam (d.1808) clogger in Hawick. He married Isabel (or Helen) Currie in 1789, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Cavers parishes, his wife being from Cavers. Their children included: John (b.1790); Thomas (b.1792); and Isabel (b.1794). The witnesses in 1794 were the ‘Associate Congregation’. His name is also given as ‘Summer’ and ‘Sumors’.

John (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the writer in Edinburgh, whose daughter Eliza married James Drummond of Comrie, W.S., in 1792.

summond (su-mind) v., arch. to summon, particularly in the legal sense – ‘The beddal was ordered to summond to ye next meeting of ye Session James Crow in Branxholm for breach of Sabbath’ [PR1712]. ‘The Beddall was ordered to summond Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot . . . ’ [PR1717].

Sunderland (sun-dur-lind) n. Mark (18th C.) stock-making-mak in Hawick. He married Margaret Flemington and their children included: Margaret (b.1787); Joanna (b.1787); Ann (b.1793); and Alexander (b.1798). His son William died in Hawick in 1798. Perhaps the same Mark secondly married Janet Crow in Hawick in 1800.

Sunderland Hall (sun-dur-lind-hawl) n. mansion on the south side of the Tweed, near where it meets the Ettrick. The Shaws, schoolmaster and minister of Selkirk held the annual rent in the early 17th century. It was the home of the Kerrs, later the Plummers, and then the Scott-Plummers, who were descended from the Scotts of Woll.

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at 8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stitchelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branxholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot in the early 1800s, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £500 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’). There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130 m long – ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondayhop’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhop’ in 1510, ‘Sundhop’ in 1516, ‘Soudhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613; the stream is marked ‘Soundhoupp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and the farm is ‘Sandhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, where the burn of the same name meets the Yarrow from the south, just to the west of Yarrow Feus. It was a Crown property from about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Alemoor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. William Scott was tenant there in the first half of the 18th century. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century. It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanskemple – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom, My brother Harden spyd; And, with a stern and furious look. He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sondhop’ in 1490, ‘Sundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541).
Sundi Schuil

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mense) n. Sunday-mense is to attend church in Yarrow Kirk. Livesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Whithopefoot. There are (or were) sundials at Harden, Lillics Gledstains of Whitlaw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Liliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundih’ etc.).

Sundials (sun-di-ulz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Liliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuil (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town’s churches down to the present time – ‘Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen . . .’ [IWL].

Sundhope Burn

Sundhope Burn (sun-dup-burn) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on Sundhope Rig and Greatmoor and flows roughly southwards to join the Whitrope Burn near Whiteropefoot.

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sunnyhill

Sunnyhill (su-nee-hil) n. area between Wilton and the Dean, consisting of Sunnyhill Road and surrounding region, containing mainly larger houses. The name was earlier also applied to the Rosalee Brae area. It was named apparently for its aspect with respect to the Sun. The area was feued in the latter part of the 19th century the Sunnyhill Cornets under the supervision of John Guthrie. Langlands was the first house about 1878, followed quickly by Deanfield, Kilmeny and Westwood – ‘Here the tree-clad slopes rise upward from the water’s sparkling rill, Where clematis and laburnum Deck the homes on Sunnyhill’ [WL], ‘in the days afore the nouveau riche manufacturers became upwardly mobile in mair ways than yin and built their mansions on Sunnyhill’ [IW].

Surrey (su-ree) n. name often used for Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey (1473–1554) English nobleman who fought at Flodden and was later made Duke of Norfolk. After his victory, and knowing that the Borders forces had been devastated, he split up his troops to carry out raids, with Lord Dacre plundering and killing across Teviotdale. In a bizarre coincidence, at Queen

Victoria’s Diamond Jubilee in London, the Hawick Volunteers were met by the Surrey Rifles, whose headquarters was in Flodden Road! – ‘After Flodden was decided, Surrey half his troops divided’ [JH], ‘When the spirit, bruised and bleeding From the shock of Surrey’s blow …’ [TK] (note that the force that devastated Teviotdale in 1570 is sometimes erroneously connected with ‘Surrey’, while in fact it was led by ‘Sussex’).

born in Melrose, he was educated at Trinity and the High School. He represented the Borders and Scotland in the back row of youth teams, but
R.F.C. Afterwards he played for Biggar and Gala and then professionally for Edinburgh from 2014.
He was first capped for Scotland in 2016 and was to the British Lions squad in 2021. Walter ‘Wattie’ or ‘Suddie’ (1890–1918) youngest son of Alexander and Isabella of the Imperial Hotel.
He was a member of the Teviotdale Harriers, being Border Champion over 100 and 220 yards, and was part of the team that won the 1 mile relay at the Common Riding Games of 1910. He also won the Scottish Amateur Athletic Associate-tion 220 yards title and represented Scotland.
He played wing for Hawick R.F.C. from the age of 17, his first game being against Gala. He excelled at Sevens, being part of the 1912 team that won all 5 Border tournaments. He went on to become Captain of Hawick. He played for Scotland from the age of 18, his first cap being Willie Kyle’s last, and went on to be capped 13 times.
On the outbreak of WWI he joined the Lothian and Border Horse, transferring to the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and later to the Seaforth Highlanders, where he became 2nd Lieutenant.
He was killed by a stray shell in October 1918, in the last days of the War. Afterwards his position on the Scotland team was taken by Eric Liddle

Suttie (su-tee, su’-ee) n. Dr. Alastair (1938–2001) born in Emmiskilen, he grew up in Moray, where his father was a vet. He qualified in Medicine at Aberdeen University in 1961. He came to Hawick after holding various posts in the north of Scotland. He joined Bill Cameron as a general practitioner in 1964, and remained in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1998. During that time he ran a training practice, and helped to develop the Health Centre. He wrote the ‘History of Haig Maternity Hospital’ (1999) and made a photographic study of bridges over the Teviot. Married to Gillian, their daughter Alison Mary (1968–) daughter of Dr. Alastair, she attended Hawick High School, and then read French and Russian at Heriot-Watt University. After graduation she worked in Russia and then French and Russian at Heriot-Watt University. She attended Hawick High School, and then read French and Russian at Heriot-Watt University. She was Head of the Liberal Democrat Leader’s Office and was the party’s Campaign Manager in 2010, as well as being coordinator of their negotiating team after the 2010 election results produced a hung parliament. She then became a Special Adviser to Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg. In 2013 she was created a life peer as Baroness Suttie of Hawick. Euphemia see Eppy Sootie.

Swamp Field (swawmp-feeld) n. name for the field on the Common just to the south of the race-course.

Swan (swawn) n. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sanderson and writer Thomas Watson and in 1741 were Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tdhope. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 for weaver John Thorburn, in 1764 for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca and in 1768 for mason William Ekron and Betty Dobie. He could be the George Swan who witnessed a baptism for Francis Cairns in 1783. Isabel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. He may have been related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). He may be the same as John ‘Elder’. John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘nest the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was ‘older’ in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Jolly. John ‘Nuckle’ (18th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the ‘John Suan younger’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the ‘younger’ weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the John who (along with Mungo) witnessed a baptism for weaver William in 1700. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for gardener Robert Roger in 1701, workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism in 1704 for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill. He is probably one of the 2 John Swans who in 1709 witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘att ye port’. He was one of the ‘two John Swans’ (possibly ‘Black John’ and ‘White John’ or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to ‘perlustrate’ the town to look for people still drinking after 8 ‘clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John ‘Black John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from ‘White John’. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. He married Elspeth Clerk and their children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1700 and 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as ‘distinctionis causa called black John’. The witnesses in 1700 were weaver John Lunn and James Scott ‘Laird’, in 1704 were Andrew Clerk and another John Swan, and in 1707 were weaver James Lunn and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the John who was witness for a baptism for John Lunn in 1705. John ‘White John’ (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1701 he is recorded being ‘distinctionis causa called white John’. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for a different John in 1706. He married Janet Allan and their children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. The witnesses in 1701 were Mungo (perhaps his brother) and weaver Thomas Turnbull (possibly his brother-in-law). Other children of either this or the other John are: William (b.1692); John (b.1693); Jean (b.1695); John (again, b.1696); and Janet (b.1706). Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs, who was probably daughter of William and Bessie Brown. In 1665 (although this date may be an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret ‘Bridges’ who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He is probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother) in 1676 and 1680 2 others (along with William, who was surely therefore also related) for William Bridges. It seems likely he was father of ‘White John’. Mungo (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who married Jean Briggs in 1702. Their children included Jean (b.1702). Other probably children, with no mother’s name given are Thomas (b.1705), William (b.1708) and Mungo (b.1710). The witnesses in 1708 were Michael Bridges and James Scott, Laird. His wife probably secondly married weaver Robert Wight in 1715, suggesting he was deceased by then. He is probably the Mungo who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for weaver William in 1700, (along with Thomas Turnbull) for weaver John Lunn in 1701, for James Beattie in 1704 and for Town Herd William Palmer in 1707. Richard (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1483 relating to lands in Hassendean, given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers. He was also a witness in 1484 to a sasine relating to lands in the town of Hawick. William (d.bef. 1694) weaver in Hawick. In 1689 he witnessed baptisms for fellow weavers William Brown and James Lunn. His widow ‘Joan Bennet’ was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the William recorded as ‘Wm Suan Elder’ in the 1694 list (but likely drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier) among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the William, son of George and Margaret Bridges who was born in Hawick in 1635. He married Helen (or Jane) Bennet, and their children included: Thomas (b.1669); George (b.1672); Margaret (b.1673); Mungo (b.1677); Jane (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). The witnesses in 1680 were Walter Purdom and William Scott. He could be the William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Bridges and Andrew Dodd in 1673, Thomas Lunn in 1675, John in Cavers in 1676 (with Mungo being the other witness, suggesting that all 3 were closely related), Patrick Bridges, William Bridges (along with Mungo again), Francis Scott plus Isobel Bridges in 1678 and Andrew Jardine in 1684. in 1680 he witnessed baptisms for William Bridges (again), Francis Scott, James Lunn, John Scott (of Cavers) and Margaret Scott and Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges. He may also be the William who (along with Patrick Bridges) witnessed a baptism in 1689 for Adam Lamb. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Suan, younger’ in 1687 among a group of men fined for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the same as the weaver of the same name. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, but could be their son. He may be the William who married Margaret Paisley and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1692), Walter (b.1698), Agnes (b.1700), William (again, b.1703) and Mungo (b.1706); the witnesses in 1696 were Henry Orrock and John Hart and in 1700 were weavers John and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1698, for weaver James Jolly (along with John, perhaps his brother) in 1700 and for Walter Paisley at Weensland Mill (also along with John). He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had seen him playing at the kails in her father’s garden. He was a single, unmarried man, landlord of the house wherein Henry Gibson’s relict lives’. His name is written ‘Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683 or the William born in Hawick to another William in 1703. Perhaps the same William married Jean Stewart and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1731, with witnesses John Elliot and John Scott. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included Jean (b.1806) and Samuel (b.1808), baptised at Liddelbank (written ‘Suan’, ‘Suane’, ‘Swane’ and variants).

the Swan (thu-suawn) n. former hostelry on Main Street in Denholm. It is recorded in 1852, when Thomas Field was proprietor. A meeting of 100 Total Abstinence supporters took place there the same year ‘in Mr. Field’s large room’.

Swansdale (suwanz-dal) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Swansdale’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Jeffrey Crozier. The location is uncertain, but perhaps around Larriston.

Swanshiel (suwans-hiel) n. farm just to the west of Hobkirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swanshiel. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swanshies, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £1 6s. 8d. The Abbey’s tenants were Turnbuls, who later became owners of the lands. Robert Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1567 and James Turnbull in 1580. In 1643 Adam Turnbull ‘in Swanshiel’ owned land valued at £66 13s 4d, and another (or the same) Adam Turnbull ‘of Swanshiel’ had lands valued at £32 10s. In 1678 the Easter and Wester parts were valued at £66 13s 4d and £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Wester Swanshiel was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778. John Donaldson was tenant in 1797. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago. There was also once a joiner’s shop there (it was ‘Swanscheil’ in 1567, appears as ‘Sironscheill’ in 1581, was ‘Swoonshield’ in 1604, ‘Swansheil’ in 1643, ‘Swan-sheil’ in 1684 and ‘Swanhill’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is marked ‘Suanesheells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; Walter Deans says that it was formerly ‘Suin Shieles’ and ‘Soneshiells’ and suggests it meant the land facing the Sun, however ‘swain scheil’, meaning ‘herdsman’s hut’ is more likely).

Swanshiel Cleuch (suwans-hiel-klooch) n. name for the steep lower section of the Blackhall Burn, to the south-west of Hobkirk Manse.

Swanson (suwansin) n. Andrew (16th C.) ploughman at Riddell. In 1580 he witnessed an agreement between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. James (18th C.) said to be from Wilton Dean, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784. He is recorded there in 1785, working for Michael Stevenson, and named again in 1788. In 1790 he was working as a ‘drawer’ for vintner
Swanstead Hill

Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hotel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was ‘Stick by cauld whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye’re gaun a journey’. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch interceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship’s surgeon; and a daughter, who married waiter Tom Lunn. His wife Jean died in 1795. James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of ‘the Prudence’, which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson’s) name sounded to the sailors like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel). He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father’s sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttleheaa in Teviothead. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allanlawshaws and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen’s Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard’s St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably had a child Sophia in 1862; Christina (b.1832), who probably died young; Walter (b.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cannongate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys which killed about 200 men. Most of the survivors were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica and New Jersey. William (b.c.1780) recorded as miller of Doveshagh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census he was miller at Bedrule Mill. William (19th C.) recorded as labourer at Dovemount in 1835 (also formerly written ‘Swanston’, ‘Swanstoun’, ‘Swanstoun’, etc.).

Swinnie

Swinnie (swi-nee) n. hamlet and farm off the A68 on the B6357 towards Hallrule. Thomas Oliver ‘de Swyne’, who witnessed a sasine in Rulewater in 1436 may have been from here. Robert Oliver was there in 1502. It was listed along with Clarilee in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400 (along with Old Jedburgh and ‘Standalane’); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there on the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There was formerly a toll-bar there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, containing silver coins from the reign of James I of Scotland and around 1845 a set of 300–400 silver coins were ploughed up on the farm, these being from the reigns of Henry VIII and Queen Mary. There is a linear earthwork to the west of the farm, which runs about a mile and is probably an old agricultural boundary (also written ‘Swinney’ and ‘Swinny’, it is ‘Swynny’ in 1502, ‘Swyne’ and ‘Swynne’ in 1538, ‘Swynne’ in 1539, ‘Swynne’ in 1557 and ‘Swinie’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sownie’).

Swinnie Moor (swi-nee-moor) n. moorland area between Bonchester and Jedburgh, around the B6357, near the hamlet of Swinnie and Swinny Plantation. An area called Swinnie Dyke Nook was once the supposed haunting ground of a ‘bogle’ (the origin of the name is possibly from Old Norse ‘svithningr’, meaning ‘the place cleared by burning’ and first occurs as ‘Swlynny’ in 1528).

Swinside (swin-sid) n. hamlet on the Oxnam Water south of Oxnam village, the area once being the seat of the Kers of Swinside. In 1468 Patrick and William Douglas were tenants there. Brothers Adam, Robert, Henry, Simon and George Douglas were recorded there in 1502, as well as separately brothers James, Adam and 2 Johns. Andrew Rutherford had sasine for these lands in 1506. In 1579/80 and 1586/7 George Douglas was there. There were Hislops there in 1590 and Murrays and Douglases in 1623. The lands were held by Lord Jedburgh in the early 17th century. Simon Elliot of Swinside owned the lands in 1678, when they were valued at £1675. The Hearth Tax records list 13 households on the estate in 1694. Alexander Lindsay paid tax on 31 windows there in 1748, while William Elliot paid tax for 10 windows. The farms there were run by Douglasses in the mid-19th century (also written ‘Sweeniside’, ‘Swinside’, ‘Swinseyd’, ‘Swinseysde’ and ‘Swynside’; the origin is probably Old English ‘swin set’, meaning ‘place where pigs are kept’; the name may be first recorded as ‘Swyneshede’ in 1345, then is ‘Swynynshede’ in 1390 and ‘Swinysyde’ in about 1390).

Swinstead (swin-steed) n. Swinstead, former lands in Kirkton Parish, once held by the Elliots. This could be the ‘Swintries’ held by the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh and managed for him (along with Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Priesthaugh) by his step-father Gavin Elliott of Stobs in about the 1560s. James Murray and Hector Jardine were there in 1581. ‘Gawin Elliot of Swinsteidis’ is listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. It is probably the ‘Sweenesteidis’ where the fugitive Martin Burn was tenant in 1606. In 1610 it was listed as part of the Lordship of Winnington, possessed by 3 sisters called Hamilton, heirs of their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. In 1622 Gilbert of Stobs purchased the 15 merk land of Over and Nether ‘Swinsteidis’ from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington; it was described as ‘now commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newtoun’. It then formed part of the estate of the Elliots of Stobs in the 17th century. It may be the same as the farm of ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish where Robert Smith is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is probably ‘Swinsteis’ in 1574, ‘Swinties’ in 1576, ‘Swinsteids’ in 1581, ‘Swynsteid’ in 1610, ‘Over and Nether Swynsteid’ in 1657, ‘Swinsteide Ovir et Nethir’ in 1670 and ‘Over and Nether Swynstead’ in 1681).

Swinton (swin-in, swin-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinton family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland. Swinton House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.
Swinton (swin’-in, swin-tin) n. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Margaret Douglas, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Isabella (b.1823); Thomas (b.1825); Anne (b.1829); John (b.1832); Charles (b.1835); James (b.1839); and William (b.1839). John (1832–c.1913) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee. He also helped secure a Cornet in 1856, when the man elected by the Council refused to accept. He celebrated the Common Riding along with other exiles in 1858 in Galt, Canada. He also acted as starter for the Common Riding Races. He remained on the Ceremonial Committee from 1887–95. In 1861 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Scott. Their children included Charles, Margaret, Ann and Elizabeth. Marion (18th C.) housemaid at Woll in 1791, when she was working for Charles Scott. Swinton’s (swin’-inx) n. Sword (sord) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick’s first schoolmaster on record, according to deeds of about 1592 and also in 1616. Perhaps the same Andrew was also Hawick’s second recorded Town Clerk, from about 1620 until some time in the 1630s. He was also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1627 (for the Hawick Parish valuation). James (1786/7–bef. 1861) born in Stichill Parish, he was a master carpenter at Briershaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and they had children Jessie, James and Helen. His wife was a widow and ‘Fund holder’ in 1861. John (17th C.) witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. It seems likely he was closely related to Andrew, who was notary for the document. John (b.c.1779) shepherd from Selkirkshire. He he was living at Ettrick House in 1841 and 1851. In 1801 at Gamescleuch he married Janet, daughter of Walter Lunn and Betty Turnbull, who lived at Colterscleuch. His children were born at Eilrig, Nether Dalgleish and Ettrick House. In 1861 his widow was living with their daughter Margaret Anderson at Easter Alemoor, where she died a year later. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1802–82), who married Adam Beattie, and died in Annan, Ontario; John (1807–79), who married Jean Colthard and died at Easter Alemoor; Margaret (b.1804), who married James Anderson, farmer at Easter Alemoor; Walter (b.1810), who married Bella Hislop; James (b.1812), who married Helen Rieve; Janet (b.1813/4) born and died at Easter Alemoor; John (1813–19); William (b.1814), who married Isabella Hardie; and Robert (1821–84), who married Margaret Nichol and died in Annan, Ontario. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1743 as ‘Officer’, meaning that he was either Burgh Officer or Kirk Officer (probably the former). He was paid one shilling for guiding a troop of dragoons from Hawick to Langholm in 1740. He is also recorded in the Kirk Session records being paid ‘for summoning the Parish’ about the same time. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman William Noble. Probably the same Thomas is recorded in 1756 when the Council paid 1 shilling for his ‘sentence money’. He is probably the Thomas, married to Margaret Brown, whose children included John (b.1737) and Thomas (b.1739). Thomas (b.1813/4) born in Southdean Parish, he was shepherd at Tythehouse in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included John and David B.D. (also spelled ‘Sowrd’ and ‘Sworde’).

Synton Cottage (sin'-in-ko'-eej) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 190 m to the north-east are the remains of a plantation bank.

Synton Hoose (sin’-in-hoos) n. house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark ‘Synton’, although it was demolished after WWII and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time. Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT)’.

Synton Loch (sin’-in-loch) n. small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about 75 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there are in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (sin’-in-mänz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there. John Scott was servant there in 1709. Charles Scott was tenant in 1786 (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is the ‘Manys of Syntoun’ in 1510 and ‘Sintownmill’ in 1755; is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (sin’-in-nil) n. farm and former corn mill on the south side of the Ale Water north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. Andrew Fletcher was miller there in at least 1689–98. Robert Foster was miller there in 1703 and William Henderson in 1715. William Tait was cottar there in 1717 and Thomas Scott was there in 1719. John Redford was there in at least 1755–65. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm. Adam Neil was miller there in 1851 (also written ‘Syonmill’), it is ‘Sintoune Milne’ in 1689 and ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sintoun Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (sin’-in-mos) n. land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now called Synton Loch. Bones of several large extinct mammals were found there in the 19th century, including the skull of ‘bos primigenious’, donated by Henry Ewen in 1857.

Synton Mossend (sin’-in-mos-end) n. farmstead at the northern end of the Synton Moss area, to the left of the A7 before Ashkirk. It may have been alternatively known as Synton-shiel or Ashkirkshiel. The name is also applied to Synton Loch. There are remains of a settlement in the woods to the south. A stone found on the farm had cup and ring markings and was moved to Whinfield Sawmills Yard in Selkirk before 1967. A cutting by the A7 near gives a good opportunity to view folding of the Silurian strata – ‘Past Ashkirk the exile feels that hame is nearly in sight Synton Mossend is left behind and it’s a climb tae the heights’ [GM] (see also Ashkirk-shiel).

Synton Parkheid (sin’-in-pawrk-heed) n. Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. It is known locally as simply ‘Parkheid’. William Inglis was there in 1581. Thomas Lockie was a wright there in 1715. A bronze sundial there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age spearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow (it is ‘Parkheid in Syntoun’ in 1581).

Syntonshiel (sin’-in-sheel) n. former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend.

Taggart (taw-gur’) n. Fr. Patrick (1809–95) born in County Tyrone, Ireland, he was ordained about 1846. He served in Dumfries and Edinburgh before becoming priest in Hawick in 1847, remaining for almost 50 years. Originally he ministered to Catholics in St. Boswells, Jedburgh, Kelso and Galashiels, as well as in Hawick.
He was finally relieved of the responsibilities of Galashiels in 1853. He opened a Catholic school in Hawick in 1854. He also ran an evening school, since many of his pupils worked during the day. He had a house built for him in 1851, after living in the vestry for 2 years! He was known for regularly going walks with Rev. Dr. MacRae, and in general for being on good terms with the local protestant ministers. His services were used several times to try to quell riots that broke out during the building of the railway line, at St. Boswells and Shankend. It is also said that he helped get hosier orders from the Admiralty directed towards Hawick firms in a time of very slack business. He later had a small cottage built behind the chapel to serve as his retirement home. In 1890 he was made a Domestic Prelate, with the title of Monsignor. He was buried in a vault at S.S. Mary & David’s and a stained glass window erected in his memory.

Tailleycleuch *(tā-lee-clooch) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly near the modern Steelroad-end. The stream there is marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. There is no sign of where the house may have been. A circular enclosure near there, and close to the railway line, was excavated in 1977; it is about 40 m in diameter, and seems to be a prehistoric settlement with later occupation, probably unrelated to the tower-house. It may be associated with the ‘Tailside’ recorded in 1632, which was probably close to there.

Taillyard *(tāl-yārd) n. name for former lands within Crook, i.e. near the Kirkton Burn in Cavers Parish. It is recorded in 1581 as a ‘hortulo vulgo vocat taillzard’, i.e. a small herb garden commonly called Taillyard, on the west side of the lands of Crook (note that the transcription of the name is unclear; ‘Tail’ probably refers to a small piece of land attached to a larger area).

tailors *(tā-lurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were probably incorporated towards the end of the 17th century. In 1679 their quartermasters were fined for ‘making an act not to work out of their own houses’. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1734 the Council allowed a petition from them ‘to convene at six o’clock to their work, and leave at eight o’clock at night’. The first female dressmaker in Hawick was in about 1793, with dresses before this period being made by the tailors.

Tailor’s Slack *(tālurz-slawk) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into Greenshiel Sike, which becomes part of Ryedale Burn.

Tails Day *(tālz-dā) n. former tradition on the day after ‘Huntie Gowk’, i.e. 2nd April, in which children (particularly at school) would try to pin paper tails on unsuspecting victims (this survived until around WWII).
Tailside

Tailside (tāl-sid) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Fairside and Cleuchside. It may be associated with the modern Taylor’s Cleuch and the fortified house of ‘Tailleycleuch’.

tailzie (tāl-ye) n., arch. term in Scots law, an entailment, whereby the legal succession of an estate is restricted to designated heirs – ‘Free the gates ye thowless bailies! Leave for once your wads and tailzies!’ [ECS], poet. a covenant – ‘‘Til sic as keepe his taylye, an’ til thae that beer in mind his commandements til do thame’ [HSR].

taings (tāŋz) n., pl., arch. tongs, fire-tongs (also tings and tyngs).

taingle (tāŋg-ul, -gul) v. to tangle – ‘And ‘tween thaim Aa let gaun, And the yins that got away, Lies a lang taingled story …’ [DH], n., arch. a tall lanky person – ‘A lang taingle o’ a chap’ [GW].

tairget (tār-gi’) v. to target, n. a target, arch. a long narrow shred of cloth, a tatter – ‘…wui stoory claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizzent-ends, an skluffin shuin wurn inti bauchels’ [ECS] (the English pronunciation is probably more common).

tairm (tārm, tā-rum) n. a term – ‘this ees ma last tairm it schuil’, ‘Oo thocht o’ gettin’ yin at the tairm’ [HNe1914], ‘Mebbe the tairm ‘discov’ last tairm it schuil’, ‘Oo thocht o’ gettin’ yin at the tairm’ [HSR].

tait (tāit, tai’) n. a small amount, little piece – ‘…A tate o’ meal, a pickle coals, Will help their New Year’s Day’ [TCh], ‘A’l just hev a wee tait o’l, ‘The Cornet, a tait reed o’ face On the road to Monday Chase’ [MB] (probably from Scandinavian).

Tait (tāt) n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielwood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as ‘Vicar-pensioner and Reader’ at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprived, living afterwards at St. Bride’s Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782–1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He married Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Lauder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockmaker of the Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffins on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffins, but when taste changed to coloured muffins, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were cholera victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, have married twice and had 19 children. He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as ‘Egglar’, meaning a peddler who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick.

and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was probably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant at Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshiel. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Adderstoneshiel Moss. He is probably the ‘D. Tait’ recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (??–) accountant in Pringle’s, he was President of the Callants’ Club in 1966. He became Secretary at Pringle’s in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle’s. George of Pirn (15th C.) listed on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being ‘of the Pren’, his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David ‘de pryn’ recorded in the Justiciary in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taits of Pirn died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taits. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when James Gray in Fawhope had remission for stealing livestock from his farms of ‘pyrne’ (i.e., Pirn), Gatehope, Seathope and Innerleithen. He was probably son of the previous George of Pirn. Gray had also been accused of killing Anthony and stealing from Patrick and Margaret, all of whom were probably related to him. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet ‘Caidyea’ (i.e. Kedie) in 1654. Their children included: William (b.1656); John (b.1658); Isobel (b.1659); and John (b.1661). The witnesses in 1656 were Thomas Vogan and John Fraiter. George (d.c.1693) tenant in ‘Newtoun’ in 1689 when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newton this may have been (in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk). George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may have witnessed a baptism in 1691 (but it is hard to read). George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton itself in 1731 and at Highchesters in 1742. Children baptised in Roberton who are probably his include Margaret (b.1731), Isabel (b.1738), Helen (b.1742), John (b.1748) and James (b.1754). George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had the same name. He served on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ as a representative of the hammermen; he was certainly there as early as 1827. He lived on the Punch Bowl Close at 27 High Street, owning the property there; his son George later rebuilt the front, while another son James ran a druggists in one of the 2 front shops and had a school in the back. He is probably the George listed as a builder on the Fore Row on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in 1837. ‘Geo. Tait & Sons’ is listed on Punch Bowl Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is at Punch Bowl Close with his son James (druggist), with his other son George next door. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1818, aged 38. Their children included: Margaret (b.1804); John (b.1808), also a builder; George (b.1812), who continued with his builder’s business; and James (b.1815). A portrait of him exists. The family (including 3 children who died in infancy) are buried in St. Mary’s. George (1812–97) son of builder George. He was also a mason and the 3rd George in a row in this family (his grandfather being miller at Borthaugh). Like his father before him, he was a member of the ‘Eternal Coonsul’, representing the hammermen for several years from 1846. The Tait builders (including his father and brother John) between them erected many of the Town’s buildings, including much of North Bridge Street and a large number of local mansions, including Silverbuthall, Mayfield, East Bank Meeting House, St. Andrew’s Church and Orrock Place Church. In 1841 he is recorded on Punch Bowl Close, listed at 76 High Street in 1851 and 1861, and still there in 1875. He rebuilt the front of the property that had been owned by his father; however, the building was later demolished (along with the one next door) to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. He was a nearly life-long member (and later an Elder) of Orrock Kirk. He donated some fossils to the Museum in 1863. He was described as having ‘a fine portly form’ and was latterly very deaf. In 1836 he married Beatrice Wilson, who died in 1862, aged 51. Their children included: Margaret (b.1838/9), who married James Turnbull of Galalaw; Beatrice (b.1839), who died in infancy; Beatrice (again, b.1845), who died young; George (b.1847), also died young; and Elizabeth (b.1851/2), who married Alexander Welsh from Coldstream. George (b.1829/30) son of grocer John. He was listed as a shoemaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1851 census he was living with his parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Crozier and their children included Andrew (b.1689). James (d.1815) tenant farmer at Eilrig. He is recorded there on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He is recorded as ‘Mr James Tait’ at Eilrig in 1798 when his daughter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1795, the marriage being recorded in both Robertson and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included: Janet (b.1798); Helen (b.1803); Henry (b.1806); and Georgine (b.1810). His death is recorded in Hawick in 1815, with the words ‘Died suddenly’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815–63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carre’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of Prominent men and women of the Border’ (1876) and ‘Wilson’s Tales of the Borders’ (1881, 1884). James (19th C.) local artist. His painting ‘Hawick Common Riding Procession at Tower Knowe 1890’ is in the Museum collection. He is probably also the James who painted a portrait of Provost George Wilson and possibly a picture of Minto Pond. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being ‘in the town of Halroule’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) piper, named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, among 15 other ‘idle and masterless men’ as fit to be sent to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Henderson and their children included George (b.1691), John (b.1693), unnamed (b.1694), Margaret (b.1697), James (b.1699), Agnes (b.1703), and Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1691 were William Easton and James Veitch. John (d.bef. 1721) gardener listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Probably the same John was resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Heath Tax rolls in 1694. In 1715 he was fined ‘for breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Duchess of B. at the Woillegate’. He was described as the deceased ‘some times gardner’ in 1721 when his daughter Isobel married flesher Robert Hardie in Hawick. He was ‘in the toun of Halroule’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (17th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish, perhaps son of the earlier gardener John. He was ‘gardner att ye Cross wynd’ in 1716. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in 1730. In 1716 he married Jean, daughter to Adam Armstrong in Barnes. Their children included: Isobel (b.1719); Beatrice (b.1721); Agnes (b.1723); John (b.1726); Bessie (b.1729); and Jean (b.1739). William (b.1732), with the mother’s name given as ‘Margaret’ Armstrong, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1719 were wright Francis Gledstains and carrier William Miller, in 1723 were smith John Scott.
and James Chisholme ‘Laird’, and in 1726 were Bailie Martin and ‘Dand’ Gray. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish. He could be the John ‘Tat’ recorded at Borthwick-shiel in 1725 when his son John was baptised and the John ‘Tat’ recorded in 1735 at Girnwood when his son John was baptised. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Ormiston in 1727. His children included: William (b.1725); and Helen (b.1727). John (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1779 he was listed as a house and riding servant. John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have ‘came and drunk with Bailie Ker’ in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9–1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (b.1801/2) from Watten in Caithness, he was a grocer in Wilton. He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middleman). John (19th C.) in 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middleman) in 1860. John B., (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at ‘Cavers Garden’, which was presumably the gardener’s house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorlieshope. He was one of the local clergymen who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). He is listed in 1684 among men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (b.1801/2) born in Chancelkirk Parish, he was a gardener at Wells and then farmer at Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835): William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes. Thomas (1833/4–1923) son of stone-cutter John. He married Christina Black, who died in 1908, aged 70. Their children included Rule (1866/7–97). Probably the same Thomas was tenant at Denholm Mill, recorded in the 1860s. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Adderstoneshiel, recorded on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786. Betty (b.1784), John Caverhill (b.1787), Caverhill (b.1788), Margaret (b.1790) and Susan (b.1792) were probably also his children. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1697 he was ‘cottar in Sinto’ (presumably Synton). He married Agnes Beatrice (sometimes written ‘Brattie’ or ‘Brattine’) and their children included James (b.1689), John (b.1691), Janet (b.1694), Marion (b.1697), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Robert (b.1705). The witnesses in 1694 were James Pringle and William Brown (who lived at Ashkirk Mill). Probably the same William was cottar in Synton Mill when his daughter Alison with Isobel Gibson was baptised in 1717. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1721 he married Margaret, daughter of William Hope, gardener. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1756 he married Agnes Hogg. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jean Gordon and their daughter Ann was baptised in 1758, with Thomas Bunyan as witness. His occupation may read ‘tinclar’, i.e. a metal worker. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1762 he married Margaret Crozier, who was from Minto Parish. William (1782–1832) son of Archibald and Isabel Geddes, he was baptised at Borthaugh in Wilton Parish. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Dumfries and Annan, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was listed as a carrier in the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the carrier William who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of William Forsyth, in Wilton Parish in 1813 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1812), who married James Daykins; Isabella (b.1814), who married John Lawrie; Elizabeth (b.1816), who married Peter Blair, miller at Hundalee and emigrated to Australia; Matilda (b.1818), who may have died in Dumfries in 1889; Archibald (b.1820), who married Elizabeth Naylor and was proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in Melrose; Catherine (1823–64), who married farm steward Andrew Walker of Linton Parish; Williamina (1826–31); John (b.1829), who married Helen Cranston; and William (b.c.1831), confectioner. His wife died 2 days after him, leaving 8 children as orphans. In 1833 his former premises in the east end of Hawick were advertised for sale, including ‘dwelling-house, offices, garden, and pertinents’, with the house being built within the previous 20 years. William (b.c.1784) born in Hownam, son of David and Janet (or Jessie) Armstrong. He moved to Hyndlee as a shepherd and spent most of his working life at Wauchope Walls (also known as ‘Langhaughwalls’ or ‘the Waas’). He was recorded there in 1861 and 1868. He also acted as carrier between Hawick and Jedburgh and the Wauchope area. Along with his wife Rachel and daughter Rachel, he was a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Rachel Riddell in 1805. Their children were David (who married Mary Paterson), Betsy (who emigrated to America), Janet (who married T. Waugh), Mary (who married A. Elliot), Margaret (who married labourer Christopher Shakesleton), Agnes Douglas (who emigrated to America), Rachel, Isabel (who married Will Bell), Helen (born at Hislop), Jane and James. William (b.1802/3) from Bowden, he was a baker on the Cross Wynd. On Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a baker on the High Street. He was at about 4 Cross Wynd in 1841. He later lived on Backdamgate and Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Kerr, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (c.1831–1913) youngest son of carrier William, who died shortly after he was born. In 1861 he was a frame-worker, living at 11 Teviot Crescent. He was later a confectioner in Hawick. In 1853 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Bell. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (b.1836/7–1914) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is probably the shepherd at Langburnshiel whose daughter was mother of Peter Jardine, forester at Wolfelee. He married Thomasina Nichol in 1860 and she who died in 1889, aged 52. Their children included: Thomas (b.1863); Walter Nichol (b.1866); James (b.1867); William (b.1871); John (b.1873); and Isabel Grey (1892/3–1914). He died in Hawick and is buried at Ettleton. William (19th C.) son of William, he was a greengrocer. He was at 72 High Street in 1875. William (19th C.) farmer at Pin in Liddesdale in 1868. William (19th/20th C.) superintendent of St. George’s Sunday School from 1916 until WWII. He was a member of the Public Assistance Committee and Chairman of Drumlanrig Home Committee. He also represented Scotland at bowling (formerly ‘Taitte’ and other variants).

Tait & Anderson (tā-an-an-dur-sūn) n. textile manufacturing firm of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. They were located in Waverley Mills, Mansfield Road.

Tait’s Close (tāt-klos) n. popular name for a close off the High Street in the mid-1800s, with uncertain position, probably at 29 High Street.

Tait’s Strip (tāt-stript) n. plantation to the east of Denholm, about mid-way between Garthside and Towerburn. Near there are signs of a possible old enclosure.

take ower (tawk-ten-tō-tūn) n. phrase inscribed on a panel attached to the top of 25 High Street. There is also a script letter ‘C’ on the building. A sundial, dated 1683, was found built into this house. The full inscription is ‘To take over time, ere time be tint’, which is known on other sundials (e.g. at Stormontfield Church).

take the gate (tāk-thū-gā) v., arch. to set off, flee – ‘Where fiddle-sticks they take the gate, An sets them on a-prancin’ ’ [JoHa] (see also taen the gate).

In 1837, opposite here, part of the wall was taken down so that Tory supporters could be thrown into the water.

(tawng-kred) n. George (1831–1914) eldest son of George Cleghorn of Weens. He was born and raised at Weens, then educated in Edinburgh and at Leamington. When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he smashed his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the ‘key of Gibraltar’ which had been taken from ‘the Rock’ by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells. He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimile 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local land-owning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsdon (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), moved to Queensland; Edward Meynell (b.1877), also Queensland; John Yule (b.1879), with the Indian Staff Corps; Walter Cecil (b.1885), born at Weens, Lieutenant in the Royal Navy; Mary Norcliffe; Katherine Wray (b.1869), born at Weens, who married Alexander Ormiston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and 1705. William Gibson in 1708. Another Robert Scott was there in 1729, Walter Scott in 1758 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleithen is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as Tandlaw, or Tanlaw. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symonton was farmer there in 1797 and Adam Nichol in 1841 and 1851 (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Tandla’ in 1673, ‘Taandlaw’ in 1862, ‘Tancla’ in 1702 and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

(tawnd-law-moss) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-nä) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlerrig, reaching a height of 310 m, called ‘Tanlawnese’ in earlier documents. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandle’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘Tandleines’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tab-dhanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (tawneej-kloos) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the business carried out by John & Walter Wilson from 1800. In the early 1800s it was called Ewen’s Court, then was known as Moncrieff’s Close until Tannage Close was adopted about 1857 (although the 1858 Ordnance Survey map shows the bottom part called Tannage Close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (from the plumber and slater’s business on the west side). It was once an area of over-crowded housing, with re-development happening between the two world wars.

tanner (taw-nur) n., arch. a sixpenny coin, sixpence – ‘...Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a Tanner ...’ [AY], ‘Thrippences, tanners, bobs, florins, The odd halfcrown Come floatin’ doon’ [DH].

the Tannage Pool (thaw-taw-nurz-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot near the foot of Tannage Close, which was used for tanning. The base of the old Mercat Cross was once located here (and the iron ring in it used for securing skins), but removed when Teviot Road was built.

tannin (taw-nin) n. the act of converting hides into leather by soaking in an infusion of barks containing tannic acid. The tanning of leather and dressing of sheepskins was formerly an important trade in Hawick. Tanners would usually have open tanning vessels, producing a strong smell in the vicinity. Mactaggarts skinworks was a related modern business that successfully operated through much of the 20th century. The name ‘Tannage Close’ is one of the few remnants of this occupation.

tap (tap) n., arch. top, summit, a spinning top – ‘...I watche, an’ am as ane sparra alane upon the houn-tap’ [HSR], ‘...Let thame be as the gerson the houn-taps ...’ [HSR], ‘A rountree bus’ oot o’er the tap o’t ...’ [JBS], ‘...and three to be in ambush at the tap o’ the plantin’ at Denholm Hill Quarry’ [BCM1881], ‘The wee birds sit on the tap o’ the sheafs, An’ twitter an’ sing i’ the mornin’ licht’ [FGS], ‘...Frae the tap o’ her heid tae her feet’ [WAP], a distaff-full of flax, ‘ti take yin’s tap in yin’s lap’ is to pack up before departing, particularly after marrying (from the former custom of spinning flax at a neighbour’s house) – ‘For the bride has her tap in her lap, And the bridegroom his tail in his riggin’ [ES] (not now particularly Hawick pronunciation; cf. top).

taper off (taw-pur-of) v., arch. to sum up a person in a disparaging manner, verbally tear to shreds – ‘The expression is often used of two persons ‘scandalising’ a third person. The verrih taathi = the very thing. No the rael taathi, no the cleen (clean) taathi = not sincere, not genuine’[ECS]. It should be remembered that this plant has not always formed part of the staple of the local diet. Potatoes are first noted in Scotland in a household book of the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1701. There is a record that Dickson of Hascendaleburn paid William Turnbull, a Denholm carrier, 1 shilling for a peck of potatoes in 1729; this may imply one of the earliest examples of potato cultivation in Scotland. They were still a relative rarity in the 1740s and there was apparently much opposition to eting them to begin with. In about 1760 William Scott of Woll was among the first to plant them far apart in drills. It did not become a staple of the local diet until the late 18th century (also spelled ‘taatih’, ‘tattih’, ‘tateth’, ‘tattie’, ‘tata’, ‘tatae’, etc.).

taxt (takst) n., arch. a tax, levy – ‘... and to frie and exeem us from any proportione of the taxt to be laid on by the royall burrows upon burghs ...’ [BR1699].

Taylor (tä-lur) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the ‘Andro Tailliour’ listed ‘in Schortburtholme’ among Liddesdale and Eskdale men described as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald ‘Ainchie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Zairdhous’ in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastle, it could be that Yethouse is meant. Charles (19th C.) teacher, who was one of the three people who met in 1877 to plan the Hawick Golf Club. He was also part of the first committee and later Club Captain. He was conductor of the Hawick Choral Union in at least the 1870s. David (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for a child of Thomas Barrie. His children included Helen (b.1704) and David (b.1707). The baptism in 1704 was witnessed by weavers John Taylor (surely related) and David Miller. In 1711 he was a weaver at Roughheugh when his son Walter was baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the David who witnessed bap- tisms in 1724 for John Scott from Brieryhill and John Miller from Roughheugh. David (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhill in 1756 and 1762. His children included John (b.1754), William (b.1756), Isobel (b.1759) and Walter (b.1762). Agnes (b.1748 and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Minto, may also have been his children. David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Danfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the ‘Joogly Brig’. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 ‘Sleinty houses’ in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner’s business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hobkirk. Edmond (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘ewmund talzor’. James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for ac- companying him to steal cattle from the farm of Cauldshiels. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. George (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who married Margaret Hislop. Their son George was baptised in 1690, with witnesses Robert Taylor and William Hislop (who were surely related to the couple). James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in ‘Betheruill’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473. It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Haw- ick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761); Marg-aret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John ‘Kerswell’. James (18th/19th C.) fined in Caivers Parish in 1792 for an ‘irregular marriage’. 3181
Taylor

James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as ‘Independent’ at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer’s widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David ‘of Ailmure’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were John Brown and William Allan. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendeen Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for David, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 and 1726 he was at Robertson Burnfoot and in 1729, 1733 and 1736 he was at Mains. His children included: David (b.1725); Bessie (b.1726); Helen (b.1729); Walter (b.1731); Bessie (again, b.1733); James (b.1734); Helen (again, b.1741); and Marion (b.1746). John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at U nthank, brother of Walter. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackcleughmou th in 1797. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swanshiel, where they had sons Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. Joshua Joseph Henry (1831–1910) composer of music for ‘The Banner Blue’. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkhorn & Richardson’s, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote wrote several short choral anthems, including ‘Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion’, ‘Come, Ye Children’ and ‘Rend Your Hearts’, as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new ‘Te Deum’, performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem ‘If, With All Your Hearts’. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be ‘a modest, retiring man’. He died at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of Thomas, schoolmaster at Hobkirk, and they had a son Malcom T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howegate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. R.M. (20th C.) published ‘Teviot Reaches’ in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Anerum. He was convicted for intercommuning with Adam and Thomas Turnbull, who had been declared rebels for the slaughter of Patrick Hepburn. Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1691 when he witnessed a baptism for William Scott and Isobel Renwick. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Oliver in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1706. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Brown and their children included Janet (b.1722). In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for John Easton in Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703.
in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Tobacconist’ when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for merchant James Douglas; this may be one of the earliest recorded instances of this word being used as an occupation. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull; there he was stated to be a ‘writer’ (but that may be in error); he was stated to be a tobaccoist in the related court case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope. He is stated to be a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull (from Hawick Shiel) in 1745. He married Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiel (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Ronald ‘Rou’ (?–?) headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding’, with the help of the Callants’ Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Margaret Douglas (proclaimed in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and their children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant James Douglas (surely related to his wife) and gardener Robert Turnbull, and in 1745 were Walter Turnbull from Hawick Shiel (whose own baptism he had witnessed on the same day) and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska. Ronald ‘Rou’ (?–?) headmaster at Burnfoot Primary School who wrote the booklet ‘Hawick Common Riding’, with the help of the Callants’ Club in 1983. He was unfortunately to later become Headmaster at Dunblane Primary School and witness the terrible aftermath of the shootings in 1996. He returned to Hawick as Common Riding Chief Guest in 1997. Thomas (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside being inherited by Hector Lorraine. He was probably local, like the other witnesses. Thomas (b.1829/30) born in Holywood, Dumfriesshire, he was a surgeon in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. His wife was Mary Ann and their children included John T.E., James Joseph and Mary. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Talzour Baron de Hassindene’ in 1493. He is otherwise unknown as Baron there, so perhaps the translation should be ‘of the Barony’. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for ‘communing with the English’, the Laird of Buccleuch serving as his surety. It is unclear how he might have been related to any other Taylors. Walter Noble (17th C.) tenant at Effedie who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for being a Covenant ter. Walter (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1733 when he married Bessie Blyth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Janet Nichols in 1758. He was at Whithope in 1761. His children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (1761). Walter (b.1809) born at Swanshie, he was a younger son of John, who had farmed at Unthank. He worked on the farm at Howahill, becoming tenant there. In 1849 he was listed on the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was still there in the 1860s, being listed as a widower in 1861. In 1834 he married Margaret Gow (whose mother was Margaret Barry). She was said to be a very beautiful woman, who died in childbirth in 1848. Their children were: John, who worked on the farm at Howahill; Isabella; George, who emigrated to New Zealand; Thomas, who lived at Howahill and died there from blood-poisoning, caused by an axe cut; William, who went to Australia, but returned to Howahill; Margaret; and Walter. Walter (19th/20th C.) son of William, with his mother being a daughter of Dr. Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1580, when he acted as cautioner for Robert Scott of Alton when he borrowed money from the servant of Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. William (17th C.) tenant in Groundistone. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. William (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed as ‘Wm Tyzer’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1680 baptism was witnessed by Walter Purdom and William Haswell, the 1682 baptism by Walter Purdom and Andrew Hart and the 1685 baptism by Walter Paisley and James Gray. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray in 1684. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He was at Todshawhill in 1781. He married Betty Laidlaw in Roberton in 1778 and their children included: James (b.1781); Janet (b.1788); and Betty (b.1792). He

the Teind Court (thu-tīnd-kōr) n. Court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

Teinder an thirder (tīnd-dur-an-thīr-dur) n., arch. A person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to 2/3 of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘...the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirder out of their own pocket ...’ [C&L].

Teinside (tīnd-, teend-sīd) n. Farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1446/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they were included among those held ‘in property’ by the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The Scotts of Buccleuch held lands there since at least the early 1500s, although Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is listed among the property of the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1594 and 1615. In 1627 they were listed as a ‘25 merk land’ producing ‘500 merks in stok, and to 100 merks in teynd’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653 and 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. James Grieve was tenant there in 1709. In 1724 Gideon Elliot purchased the lands from his brother Robert.

James Scott was living there in 1731. Thomas Watson owned the lands in the early 18th century and sold them to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1750. There were Murrays living there in the mid-1700s to early 1800s. Thomas Barrie was there in 1788. By 1788 it was valued at £426 13s 4d and still the same in 1811, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and Robert Govenlock in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort on the Slaidhill, which lies above, near the source of the Teinside Burn, and 2 more on Teinside Hill. Ancient burial cists were found there in 1869, with an excavation carried out by Dr. Brydon and Lord Rosehall. And there are signs of ‘cord rig’ cultivation there also (also spelled ‘Tynside’, ‘Teinside’, etc., and possibly formerly pronounced tīnd; the origin is possibly Old Welsh ‘din’ and Old English ‘side’, meaning ‘the slope by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Theynsyde’ in 1393, is ‘Tenside’ in 1446/7, ‘Teynside’ in 1494, ‘Tyneside’ in 1502, ‘Teneside’ in 1511, ‘Tenside’ in 1528/9, ‘Teneside’ and ‘Teneside’ in 1572, ‘Teyndsyde’ in 1595, ‘Teynsyde’ in 1627, ‘Tyneside’ in 1634, ‘Tynesyd’ in 1653 and 1663, ‘Teyndsy’ in 1661, ‘Teinside’ in 1731 and ‘Tein-side’ in 1839; it is ‘Teensydhall’ on both Blaeu’s 1654 map and Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Teinside Brig (teend-sīd-brig) n. Bridge across the Teviot just after Teinside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teinside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called ‘Teinsidebrae’. Walter Hogg was living there in 1779–84 and William Gledstains in 1784. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is ‘Teinside Bridge’. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851 (it is ‘Teenside bridgend’ in 1781 and ‘Teinside-bridgend’ in 1783).

Teinside Burn (tīnd-sīd-burn) n. Stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the northwest) near Teinside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Tynessydburne’ in 1615, ‘Teyndsideburne’ in the mid-17th century, ‘Teindsideburn’ about 1755 and ‘Tiendsideburn’ in 1797; ‘Teindburnfoot’ is marked on Stobie's map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tīnd-sīd-hil) n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. Its contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120 m by 65 m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60 m by 20 m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a ‘hut eight feet square’. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called ‘Bert’s Cairn’, with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Ludge (tīnd-sīd-lūj, -ludging) n. house in Teviothead, also known as Commonside Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonside. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15 m in diameter.

Teindsideslope (tīnd-sīd-slop) n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as ‘Teindside Slope’; it is ‘Tiendsideslop’ in 1797).

Teindyard (tīnd-yārd-) n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – ‘Item, to James Scott, servant, for keeping of the teind yard of Hawik, bigging the dykes therof, and heiding the stakes of the samyn the said year, eightine pundes’ [SB1633].

Teivot – ‘...an thegither oo turnt ti the rict for the Teiot an the coonty toon’ [ECS]. ‘...And treoots that i' the Tei'ot tipple’ [DH]. ‘As by his haugh the Tei'ot rummle’t’ [DH] (a contracted spelling to denote the older pronunciation; also written ‘Teiot’ and ‘Tei'ot’).

Teir see teer

Teisday (tīz-dī) n. Tuesday – ‘I got to Berwick on Monday afternoon, and was unco weel on Teisday morning . . .’ [RW], ‘My friends, be thankfu' that Sabbath is upon the day that its on, for had it been a Tysday ye wad hae been at Jeddart, or if a Tysday ye wad hae been at Hawick’ [JW] (also written ‘Tysday’; cf. the more modern Tuesdi).

Teistrell (tī-strul) n., arch. a scoundrel.

Teitim (tī-tim) n. teatime – ‘A'll sei ee the back o teitim’ (note the usual pronunciation of the second syllable; also tei-time).

Teitime (tī-tim) n. teatime – ‘A was verrih mensefi at tei-time: A duist tuik yeh cup’ [ECS].

Telfer (tel-fur, tāl-fur) n. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for putting a quick end of Mr Talefer’s tryals’). He is said to have borrowed heavily from Shaftsbury’s ‘Characteristics’ and other essayists for his sermons, and to have had an ascetic temper and a high opinion of himself. He witnessed baptisms in 1723 for surgeon Walter Scott in 1724 for workman Robert ‘Huison’ and in 1725 for merchant Thomas Thomson, for William Cathrae in Closses and for merchant Andrew Turnbull (it was unusual for the serving minister to be a witness). In 1724 he complained about drunkenness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect 'the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen'. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that 'he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common'. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overtures the next day 'for certain comparisons which he had used', but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkleton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. They had a daughter Christian Ann baptised in Hawick in 1730, with witnesses Rev. Crawford (of Wilton) and 'Mr Cunningham' (probably Patrick). Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, also known as the ‘Brig End Schuil’. She was teacher there in at least the 1860s. Confusingly, she was known as ‘Catherine’, as well as ‘Christina’. She died in Newcastleston. Christina (b.1796/7) tollhouse keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastleston. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becoming motoring correspondent, business correspondent, industrial correspondent and business editor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returing to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (16th C.) recorded in Dodhead in 1579 when he made an agreement with John Lauder in Singlie to exchange their lands at the end of a year. He promised, along with Adam Scott of Bonnington, to pay Lauder for tack of a quarter of the ‘rowme’. There is surely a connection with the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer o the Fair Dodhead’. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshie listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Adderstoneshie among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) herd at Nether Southfield. He married Mary Thomson and their daughter Euphan was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Ekron in 1758. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. George (1979–) joined Hawick Boxing Club along with his childhood friend Colin Bain, when they were 11, later joining Hawick Royal Albert Boxing Club in 1998. He had more than 200 amateur fights, boxing for Scotland, with a highlight being winning the Scottish Welterweight Championship in Hawick Town Hall. He had 9 professional bouts in 2003–05, winning 7 and losing 2. James (16th C.) tenant in Huntly and servant to the Laird of Bucleuch in 1579. There was a complaint that the neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn had taken his horse, claiming that it had crossed the march dyke and was pasturing on Hutlerburn. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, son of William in North Synton. He married Bessie ‘Hutsone’ and their son William was baptised in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wiltonburn in 1705. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. His children included Agnes (b.1704) and Margaret (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Adam and William Scott. He could be the James who married Bessie ‘Hutsone’ in Ashkirk in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: Jean (b.1716); and Isabel (b.1722). Perhaps the same James had a son William baptised in 1718 (with his wife’s name recorded as ‘Jean’). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1716 when he married Jane Stewart and at Deanhead in 1722. His children included: Janet (b.1719); and Thomas (b.1722). James (18th C.) recorded in Chapelhill in 1726 when his daughter Christian was baptised in Robertson Parish. He may be the James who married Isobel Bell in Robertson in 1718. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1761

James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinlabyre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (d.1824) dyker whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastle. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1852 his name was given as ‘Telford’. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson. He was born in Southdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) the night the other one died. He was a great admirer of the James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, who he got to know in his youth and who inspired and encouraged him to write poetry. He was self-taught, becoming schoolmaster in Castleton in 1827 and was at Saughtree from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was referred to as ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree in Liddesdale, since he wrote several ballads, including a long one ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ about an encounter between a shepherdess and a fairy. A version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’ was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine, among other places. His first book was ‘Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems’ (1824, republished in 1852), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it contains many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’ was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol. II of ‘Local Historian’s Tablebook’ in 1844. He also contributed to Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’. Additionally, he wrote a novel ‘Barbara Gray, or the Widow’s Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life’ (1835). It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple ‘but and ben’, with the ‘but’ being where his family stayed, and the ‘ben’ being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class ‘in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading’, including treating them to ‘a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland’. He is probably the ‘schoolmaster, likewise a poet’ mentioned being antagonistic to John Halliday publishing his own verses in 1847. He married Janet Beattie (1802–89); she is recorded living at Saughtree in 1841 along with their children Margaret, Christian and Janet (he himself being absent). In 1851 the family were at Saughtree Schoolhouse (with Margaret having moved away by then). In 1861 his daughter Christian was living with them and described as a teacher; she ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. They also had a train driver lodging with them in 1861. His children included: Margaret (b.1833); Catherine Lillico (1835–1909); and Janet Armstrong Stavert (1839–1911), who died in Liverpool. One of his daughters had a son, Telfer John Telfer, who died in 1889, aged 25. His wife Janet died at Bankend. The family are buried in Old Castleton Cemetery. James (b.1821/2) shepherd at Wormscleuch in Castleton Parish. His wife was Christian and their children included Andrew, Margaret, John, James, Mary and Thomas. James ‘Jim’ (1941–) born between Gala and Melrose, he played rugby for Melrose and gained 25 caps for Scotland. He became Scottish Coach, leading the team to the 1984 Grand Slam. He trained as a teacher, eventually becoming Rector of the High School 1984–93. During some of this time the school was nicknamed ‘the Rugby Academy’. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union’s Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bunyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, she was born in Cavers Parish, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Peebrae listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the John ‘Telfert’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook in 1685. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John, ‘Coater’ at Branxholme, witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) Beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms for flesher Robert Wilson in 1730, for William Helm and for George Oliver in 1731 and for Robert Riddell in 1733. He is recorded as ‘Officer’ or ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed further baptisms in 1737, 1738, 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745 and 1747. He may also be the John who witnessed other baptisms in 1738 and 1746. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Merrylaw in 1755. He married Helen Learmonth and their son William was baptised in 1755. John (18th C.) shepherd at Braedlie on Hermitage Water in about 1750. He married Agnes Main and was recorded at Braedlie in 1777 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Castleton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howiasley in 1766 when his son George was baptised. He may be the John who married Janet Pringle in Roberton in 1765. His name is written ‘Telford’, although he is probably related to the earlier Telfers who were at Howiasley. John (18th C.) listed along with Thomas as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John (1781–60) shepherd from Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Christian Lillico. He was shepherd at Carewoodrig in 1851, living there with his wife Ann, daughters Isabella and Mary, son-in-law John Scott and 2 grandchildren. He married Isabella Taylor and secondly married Anne Davidson (1784–1862). With his first wife he had James (1800–62), the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Later children (born in Hownam Parish) were: Andrew (1808–86); William (1810–82); Margaret (1812–71), who died at Flatt; Christian (b.1814); Thomas (1817–84); Isobel (b.1819); and John (1822–38), who died at Todlaw. He died at Dykeraw and the family are buried in Chester Kirkyard. John (b.1789/90) from Westerkirk Parish, he was farmer at Braidhaugh in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 150 arable acres and 400 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He was deceased by 1861, with his sons David and Walter taking over the farm. His wife was Isabella and their children included David, Walter, Betsy, Mina and Agnes. John (b.1834) son of William and Catherine Hume, he was born in Southdean Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Carewoodrig. He was living there with his wife Jane, daughter Janet, a domestic servant and 2 assistant shepherds. He was surely related to the earlier John who was at Carewoodrig. Mark (b.1826/7) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a carrier in Newcastle. In 1861 he was on Whitchester Street. His wife was Ann and he had a niece Betsy. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Hassendean listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gillbraehead in 1868. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1757 and 1760 for shoemaker John Oliver and in 1766 for wright Gideon Easton. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1778 for ex-Bailie Andrew Scott. He may be the Robert who was paid by the Council in 1755 for the use of his horse ‘to Kelso, pressed by Bailie Turnbull, with a shoulder [soldier] and his wife’. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in Hawick in 1797. He may be the same man as the blacksmith. Robert (b.1803/4) clogger living on North Hemitage Street in Newcastle in 1851 and 1861. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son, John. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1696. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1696); and Walter (b.1699). The witnesses in 1696 were Adam Scott and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was a workman at Blackleckuch when his daughter Mary was baptised, with witnesses John Scott ‘Uncle John’ and Walter Elliot in Commonbrae. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlsdie in 1733. His children included William (b.1731) and Helen (b.1733). Thomas (18th C.) listed along with John as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (17th C.) shepherd in Ormiston listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Telford’, but he was surely related to other Telfers living nearby. Walter (1800–57) born in Hawick, 2nd son of William. He trained as a silk merchant in Edinburgh and spent 2 years in Jamaica settling an uncle’s estate before training as a doctor in Edinburgh. In 1824 he emigrated to Stamford (Niagara Falls), Upper Canada. He established a medical practice at Niagara and moved to Toronto in 1835 and sat on several medical bodies. He became Superintendent of the Provisional Lunatic Asylum in 1845, but was dismissed in 1848 over charges that he vigorously denied. He then returned to private practice. He married Euphemia Denham and they had 1 daughter. Walter (b.1827/8) son of John, he was farmer at Braidhaugh near Bochester in 1868. He was brother of David, who was farmer at Braidhaugh before him. William (17th C.) tenant in Howpasley. Along with Thomas Pott (also in Howpasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequencit conventicles. He could be the William in Styiches whose son William was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683; the witnesses were George Scott and James Halliwell. William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded in 1698 when his son James had a child baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He received money from the Session in 1707. William (18th C.) recorded as ‘servant at Stobotcote’ in 1720. He was still living at Stobicote in 1723. He married a Falside. Their children included: John (b.1720), baptised in Hawick; and ‘Manny’ (b.1723), baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses in 1720 were John Scott and John Elliot in Stobicote. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1721, 1729, 1735 and 1738. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1719. Their children included: Margaret (b.1719); Thomas (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1725); William (b.1729); Helen (b.1732); Janet (again, b.1735); and James (b.1738). The witnesses in 1721 were George Bell and William Turnbull, in 1729 were David Renwick and George (probably Bell), in 1735 were John and Robert Scott and in 1738 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he was at Borthaugh. He married Marjory Scott in 1757, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Robert (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); William (b.1763); Robert (again, b.1765); Marjory (b.1767); William (b.1771); and Beatriz (b.1775); John (b.1778); and John (again, b.1779). The last 3 children were baptised in Hawick Parish, the others in Wilton. The witnesses in 1758 were George Hart and Walter Ker. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Westshields in Southdean Parish in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of the early 19th century, recorded on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Telfer with property on the south side of the east end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed on Melgund Place in 1837 and 1841. He married Fanny Elliot, and their children were: Fanny (1823); Robert (b.1825); Thomas (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Isabella; and William. William (18th/19th C.) wright and wood dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1810. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1837 as a carrier operating between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh. He left from the Black Bull in Hawick bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1811) son of James and Betty Hutton. He was a grocer in Newcastle, and later worked as a gardener. In 1861 he was on North Heritage Street. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Hardie and Violet Douglas. They had a daughter Violet (1851–1924), who married James B. Murray and lived in Edinburgh. William (b.1809/10) born in Hownam Parish, he was a shepherd in Southdean Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Letham, also known as ‘Burns’. He married Catherine Humie and their children included: John (b.1834), who was shepherd at Carewoodrig; James (b.1836); George (b.1838); Jane (b.1840); Anne (b.1842); Andrew Hunter Cowan (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); William (b.1849); and Thomas (b.1853). William (b.1813/4) from Cummittrees in Dumfriesshire. In 1851 he was shepherd at Dykeheads in Hobkirk Parish and in 1861 was living at Hallrule Cottages. He firstly married Helen Burnet and secondly married Isabella Scott. His children included Eliza (b.1846), Agnes Mitchell (b.1854), William (b.1855), Robert and Ann (b.1861). Rev. William (19th C.) said to be from Hawick. He was an arts and divinity student at Edinburgh University from 1819 to 1830 and was then at St. Mary’s College, St. Andrews for a year. He was minister at Eday in 1845 and South Yell from 1845. Rev. William (1818–86) born in Hawick, he became an evangelical preacher. He was assistant at Ryton in Durham, then at Queen Street Leeds 1857–60, Glossop, Derbyshire from 1860, Whittlesey (Independent Chapel), Cambridgeshire 1864–77 and Carlisle Chapel, Kennington from 1877. William (b.1824/5) son of

Telford (tel-, tā-furd) n. George (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name is given as ‘Tylfoord’. James (17th C.) herd at Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Maxwell (b.1801/2) worked as a lime burner at Lariston Rigg. He was there in 1841, with his wife ‘Douglas’ (nee Hall, from Hawick) and daughters Isabella and Helen. By 1851 he was a labourer in Denholm, probably living on Kirkside, with a son Robert. Maxwell ‘Max’ (1914/15–91) born in Wilton Crescent, he worked at Lockie’s, then joined the L.N.E.R., where he was a porter, guard and ticket collector at Hawick Station. He served with the Border Regiment in WWII, transferring to the Manchester Regiment and then the R.O.A.C., where he became sergeant. He then served as High School Janitor 1950–80, being a familiar figure for 3 decades of pupils. Richard (1837–92) born in Canonbie Parish (as ‘Telfer’), son of John and Jane Bell. He became a policeman with the Borders Police, and was later Governor of the Hawick Poor House, starting some time after 1881. He married Margaret Jane Mathieson, who acted as matron at the Poor House. He died of a heart attack while working there. Thomas (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Reidmoss in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Thomas (1757–1834) engineer born at Glendinning on the Meggat Water, in Westerkirk Parish, not far from Langholm. He was famous for road, canal and bridge construction, including the Menai Suspension Bridge in Wales. He worked on the Langholm Bridge over the Esk as an apprentice stonemason, and gave a bequest to keep the Westerkirk Library going in Bentpath and another to establish a library in Langholm. He was one of the first to suggest a Borders railway line, specifically a horse-drawn railway running from Berwick to Glasgow. He also published a poem ‘Eskdale’, which was printed in Hawick in the ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. Locally he was sometimes known as ‘Laughing Tom’. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was recorded as steward at Todshawhill in Roberton Parish in 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Mina. William (19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as teacher at Castleton. It is unclear who he was or where exactly the school was located. It is possible this was an error for James Telfer. William Pattison (1836–1922) son of William Pattison and Elizabeth Murray. He was born in Newcastle and educated in Dumfriesshire and then in Ontario, Canada. He worked as a stone-cutter and a teacher, later becoming a banker. He was elected a member of the Canadian House of Commons for Grey North in 1904, but was defeated in 1908. His son, William Pattison, Junior, was also a Canadian Member of Parliament (formerly spelled ‘Tailford’, ‘Talfourd’, ‘Talliefeir’, ‘Tylfoord’, etc., and once probably the same as ‘Telfer’).

Telio’s (tee-lee-oz) n. cafe, chip shop, and ice-cream shop run by Telio Gonella (apparently he was named after the village the family came from) in the mid-20th century on Dickson Street. There was another shop for a while on Green Terrace, and Telio also ran the hut near the top of the Loan as a fish and chip shop.

Temperance Hall (tem-pu-rins-hal, tem-prins-haw) n. former meeting hall at 6 Croft Road, the site now occupied by the Salvation Army Citadel. It was constructed in 1879 and initially run by Miss Thomson, a daughter of the local minister. In about 1900 it was converted into a picture house, ‘The Theatre’.

Temperance Hotels (tem-pu-rins-ho-tel) n. alcohol-free hotels, which were popular in the latter 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the office Bar is now, Gibson’s was on Bridge Street, Inglis’s on Teviotside Terrace, Pringle’s on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the ‘Coffin End’. The Buccleuch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (thu-tem-purins-noov-min) n. a social trend to recognise the evils of alcohol, which flourished towards the end of the 19th century, and died out between the Wars. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soiree. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting until WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle scath and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barleycorn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n. Sir John of Hertford (d.bef. 1379) son of Sir John of Bracewell, and younger brother of the next Sir John of Bracewell. His brother Peter married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh and Berwick, as well as Governor of the Castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Scarborough in the period 1351–75. He married 3 times. Sir Thomas (c.1476–1543/4) son of Robert of Holinside, he served in many positions in the north of England. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His daughter Anne married Sir Ralph Bulmer. He was one of the English commissioners for negotiating peace with Scotland in 1528.

tempit (tem-peec, -pi) pp., poet. tempted – ‘Whan your faethers tempet me, pruvet me, an’ saw my wark’ [HSR].

the Templar’s Hall (thu-tem-plurz-hal, -haw) n. former name for the hall of the I.O.G.T. – ‘...We lairned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wilson’s Mill’ [WL].

Temple (tem-pul) n. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. James (d.bef. 1841) joiner of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census his wife Helen Oliver and 5 children were living at about 33 High Street, with his sons carrying on the cabinet-maker’s business. His children included: Helen (b.1805); James (b.1807); Robert (b.1810); Janet (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); Marion (b.1815); and John. James (b.1807/8) son of James. He was listed as a High Street joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a master joiner and cabinet-maker, employing 7 men, at about 55 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Robert. R. (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1722 for a ‘jist to the steeple’. He was thus probably a wright or joiner in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Whitriggs in 1737. His children included: James (b.1733); and David (b.1737). Perhaps the same Robert had children William (b.1724), Isabel (b.1726) and Janet (b.1728) baptised in Jedburgh and a son Robert (b.1731) baptised in Ancrum. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastleton. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of) William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as ‘Ind’ at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and grand-daughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Bewcastle Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as ‘Jessie’, who married (probably a Robert) in Newtowneston. He was buried at Ettleton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Jane and their children included Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James.

Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with ‘Notman-shot’, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d (it was ‘Templecrofts’ in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw-ko-min) n. Templehall Common, the commony associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James, Lord Cranstoun, and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked ‘ Wauchope Common’ on the modern Ordnance Survey map, to the east of Templehall Hill.

Templehaa Hill (tem-pul-haw-hil) n. Templehall Hill, hill in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, south-west of Templehall and to the east of Lurgiescleuch. It reaches a height of 342 m. Near the summit is an old cairn about 10 m across and on the southern ridge there is another almost twice as big, now quite demuded and within the forest.

Templehaashiel (tem-pul-haw-sheel) n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall Hill. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-ten-pu-l̩-thu-new-zeez) n. monument in the form of a classical Greek pavillion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’ fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine’s house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhan O’Hehir replaced it.

tenand (te-nand) n., arch. a tenant – ‘...and to becum tennand to me and thaim of the samyn’ [SB1470].

tenandry (te-nandree) n., arch. land that is leased from a superior, the condition of being a tenant, tenancy – ‘...tenandry of lande if Harden-wod with the pertinentis lyande within the soyleze of Borthwisheillis ...’ [DoR1445], ‘...with tenenttis, tenandrijs and service of frie tennenttis of the samin, with the pertinentis, liand within the baronie of Braunxhelme ...’ [SB1569].

tendit (ten-dee’ , -di’) pp. tended – ‘The hills where he herdit are bonnie and green, The hirsel he tendit is white i’ the glen’ [JoHa].

tenement (te-ne-min’) n., arch. a piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – ‘...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawik, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ...’ [JW1558], ‘...befor one of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik and thair purelic and sempilie resigne the said tenement of land’ [PR1571].

Tennant (te-nin’) n. Hugh (19th C.) married Mary Halliday in Hawick in 1840. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listonsheils, he was son of John of Cairnes, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being presented to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tancred to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Ruecastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Turnbull). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing ‘Roullis land’). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairnes became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at ‘Listounscheilis’. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled ‘Tennent’).

Tennant’s Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant’s ‘Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs’, which was published in 1850, and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. The club wound up in 1893, with many of the members having switched allegiance to golf, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten’, tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ (inscription at 25 High Street), ‘I said, I wull tak tent til my ways ...’ [HSR], ‘Hear the richt, O Lord; tent weel my crye’ [HSR], ‘A planteet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claam in’ [ECS], ‘...only take tent! aw was as sober as aw am enow’ [BCM1880], v. to tend, attend, watch over – ‘Then Jeanie McFadzean, who tented the weans, Sae blooming and lovely, but yet in her teens’ [JoHa], ‘Where tenting ewes is a’ the trade, The bravest dress the tartan plaid’ [DA] (from Middle English).

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails with hooks set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘The tenter grounds of Messrs. Laidlaw & Sons were almost all swept away . . . ’ [BM1997], ‘. . . with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside . . . ’ [WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks’).

Tentifutie see Tentyfit

tenty (ten-ee, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked wee, Wi’ tenty, watchfu’ e’er [JoHa], ‘An’ Cupid sly, wi’ tenty aim, Pops in some’se heart an arrow’ [JoHa], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tenty, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hobble On yer auld grandfaither’s knee’ [TCh], ‘Oh, cruel death! how could ye slay The tenty herd, sae auld and grey . . . ’ [TCh] (also written ‘tentic’).

Tentyfit (ten-tee-fi’) n. Tentyfoot, the local name for an old tower at Branxholme. It is the only remaining part of the former courtyard of walls and buildings around the Castle, the fragment now standing being about 15 feet high. It is a grade A listed building (also spelled ‘Tentifutie’ and variants).

ter (ter) n. tar – ‘ee’ve got ter aa ower yer new breeks’, ‘. . . and in summer, whan the smuists are warast an the pluifie ter fros up atween the causa-stanes’ [ECS], note that the English phrase ‘tarred with the same brush’ more often involved a stick in Scotland – ‘. . . the sister. who was ‘tarred with the same stick’ . . . soon severed the troublesome foot from her leg’ [EM1820].

terce (ters) n., arch. the right of a widow to one third of the rents of her husband’s property, this right being by default until 1681. A document of 1553/4 shows a dispute over the right of ‘terce’ between Janet Ker, 2nd (and divorced) wife of the late Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Bucleuch and his grandson, the new Sir Walter.

Teri (tee-ree) n. someone from Hawick – ‘Then rally, Teries, yin and a’. Let this year be the best o’ a’ [RH], ‘Hark again the stirring strains! Rouse ye Teries from your slumbers’ [RH], ‘. . . They’ll wish that they had ne’er been born Or else been born a Teri’ [JT], ‘. . . For Teries the wide world over Are Teries evermore’ [TK], ‘There’s a welcome and a greeting from the Teri in the street. And a gladness in the knowledge that old Hawick’s hard to beat’ [WFC] (also occasionally written ‘Teerie’; deriving from an abbreviation of the ancient Hawick slogan; the plural is Teries).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) interj. short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Teribus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’er they dwell’ [RH], ‘. . . And while the strains of Teribus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’ [JCG], ‘. . . For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’ [AW], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Teribus’, conquering terror’ [IWS] (various spellings exist).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. the main Common Riding song, written by James Hogg in 1819, to a tune that is surely much older and effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses); it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotia felt ...’, ‘After Flodden ...’, ‘Down they threw ...’, ‘Magistrates ...’ and ‘Peace by thy portion ...’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried ...’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees ...’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Teerie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather’ [JR], ‘Sings ‘Teribus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’man, if ye was to play ony other tune exow but ‘Teribus’, the toun o’ Hawick wad rise’ [RM].

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much moreso than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

the Teribus Airms (thu-tee-ree-bus-armz) n. public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Altar (thu-tee-ree-bus-awl-tur) n. Roman altar stone at Chesters Museum on Hadrian’s Wall. It appears to contain the word ‘TERIBVS’, and since it has been labelled with a reference to the ‘old gods’, some Teries have suggested that it relates to the Hawick slogan. However, when it is realised that ‘-ibus’ is a common Latin ending, other, more mundane explanations suggest themselves. Most likely the part visible reads together as ‘DIBVS VI–TERIBVS’, meaning ‘to the gods named Viteri’ (or alternatively the broken stone contains only part of an inscription), since there are many other examples of similar words on other altar stones.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally by Hamish Smith, Tosh Scott and other tradesmen. It features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.
teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron Reith in 2001.

The Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-spi’-fir) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly shot down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-o-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglo ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglians of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Christianised (and hence not worshiping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by Jameson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray. However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tiw’ and ‘Wōdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods). Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn).

teribus.com term-days hearth’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin!’ Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).

Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teries (tee-reez) n., pl. plural of Teri – ‘Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerful – Laings, Watsons, and Wilsons, Scotts, Elliots, Laidlaws’ [T].

Terie-ess (tee-ree-es) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner.

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leved lang syne He’d been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’ [FL].

Teri Oden (tee-ree-o-din) n. another variant of part of the Hawick slogan – ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag. To kiss the breeze o’ Summer … ’ [JT].

Teriodin (tee-ree-o-din) n. the second half of the Hawick town slogan – ‘…Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri-Odin flag … ’ [JT], ‘Teri Odin’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared … ’ [TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’ [WFC].

the Teri-Optimists (thu-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s. Prominent members included Bay Armstrong, Eileen Bannerman, Cameron Conn, Jimmy Glenny and Ian Mactaggart.

term-days (term-, te-rum-disz) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candlemas, Whitsun, Lammas and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitsun moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigrant (ter-mi-gin') n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigants have been rife in this same month . . . ’ [RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter. The ‘mairt’ (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a general ly festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thu-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Welloagate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-ree-ur) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrin (ter-in) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woolens grew.

the Territorial Kirk (thu-te-ri-tö-ree-ul-kirk) n. name used in the early days of West Port Kirk.

Terrona (te-rö-mu) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitshiels, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is ‘Torrona’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Toroun’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tareona’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tertan (ter’-in) n. tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – ‘There’s the spot where we were lyin’ Roved within your tartan plaid!’ [JT].

the Test (thu-test) n. one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopalianism in Scotland. The most important ‘test’ was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced episcopacy and attempted to suppress the Covenanters. In Hawick in that year it seems that the Bailies and Council suscribed to a specific text, stating that no one should ‘enter into covenants or leagues, or to convocate, convene, or assemble in any councils, conventions, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesiastical, without His Majesty’s special command’. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.

testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase ‘testament testamentar’, meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is testificate

- ‘The testament testamentar, and invent of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertening to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branxholme ...’ [SB1574].

testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki’) n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – ‘...by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts ...’ [BR], ‘To a man that had a testificate’ [PR], ‘...and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificates’ [PR1713].

testit (tes-ti’-ta’) adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – ‘...nor pursue ...but before the Bailies of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quotes’ [BR1640], ‘Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Bailie Court, except testat goods’ [JW1701] (also spelled ‘testat’).

tethery-methery (te-thu-re-me-thu-re) n., arch. an untidy mess, confused state (noted as ‘therie-metherie’ by E.C. Smith; related to the children’s counting rhyme, see eendy-teendy).”

teach (tewchly) adj., arch. tough – ‘They’re teach sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Hauch’ [JAHM], ‘...thin Than a robin’s leg And twice as teach’ [DH], ‘Glooms and glints, sudden flashes of gold across the fields – teach and smooth on grass ...’ [DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ù and oo).

Teueot (tee-ee-i’) n. another early spelling of ‘Teviot’ (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).

Teuiot (tee-ee-i’) n. early form of ‘Teviot’, recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).
valley and mead [WL], ‘The Teviot babbles on its way; The clash of steel has passed away’ [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root ‘taváss’, perhaps meaning ‘surging’, which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbric suffix ‘ed’, probably later than the 8th century; it is ‘Teuîet’ in charters around 1200, ‘aque de Teuyoth’ in 1279, ‘aqua de Tevot’ in 1420, ‘Theviot’ in 1547/8 and ‘Teueot’ in 1579, with other spellings including ‘Teviott’, ‘Tiet’, etc.; it is ‘Tiot fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Teatt fl.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Teviot (tee-vi’-i) n. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was ‘of the Hillhouse’, and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastle. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Alexander Bell ‘Crat Bell’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’.

Teviotbank (tee-vee-i’-bawngk) n. merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd. for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (tee-vee-i’-bawngk) n. villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Robert Burn. It was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener’s cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north are cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written ‘Teviotbank’; possibly also known earlier as ‘The Knowes’).

Teviotbank Gairdens (tee-vee-i’-bawngk-gar-dinz) n. street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (tee-vee-i’-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738-1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter’s Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Auncrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter’s Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when ‘the kistone was perfected and close’ on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslawgreen (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as ‘the Haugh Brig’ and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name ‘Teviot Brig’ is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i’-brig-röd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i’-kör’) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989-91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feued after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson’s. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers’ residences, and are now listed for preservation. They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions.
with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw’s Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin-nilz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as ‘the Back o the Mill’. The factory was also referred to as ‘Laidlaw’s’. It was eventually demolished.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däil) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, being recovered in 1383/4 – ‘My native stream, my native vale. And you green meads of Teviotdale . . .’ [JL], ‘When morn’s first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the daring hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale’ [JL], ‘And for the world I wadna’ leave My Bonnie Teviotdale’ [JoHa], ‘Young Mary was the loveliest lass In all green Teviotdale; Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale’ [JTe], ‘Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong’ [JCG], ‘. . . Where nature’s voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale’ [RHL], ‘O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale’ [IWS] (called ‘Theuidalie’ by the Romans; it was ‘Teugetedale’ in about 1117, ‘Thieudall’ around 1147, ‘Thevetedalia’ about 1165, ‘Teviotedale’ in about 1170, ‘Tevietesdale’ in the early 13th century, ‘Tevidalie’ in Bagimond’s Roll of 1275, ‘Thevidat’ in a Scottish record of 1297, ‘Tevydale’ in an English document of 1391 and ‘Tevidalia’ in the 1407 charter for the Barony of Hawick; the early spelling varies wildly, e.g. ‘Theuydalie’ in about 1360, ‘Teuidalie’ in 1415, ‘Thewidalie’ in 1427, ‘Thueydale’ in 1431, ‘Teuidale’ in 1433/4, ‘Tevidalie’ in 1448, ‘Tevidalia’ in 1453, ‘Theuidalie’ in about 1452, ‘tevidale’ in 1498, ‘Tewidalie’ in 1501, ‘Tavidale’ in 1516, ‘Tevidale’ in 1479, 1500 and 1525, ‘Tyvidalie’ in 1525, ‘Tevidail’ in 1530, ‘Tavdale’ about 1540, ‘Tewydail’ in 1546, ‘Theviodail’ in 1547/8, ‘Tevydell’ in 1566, ‘Tevidale’ in 1567, ‘Teviotdalil’ in 1583/4 and ‘Teviotdaill’ in 1591).

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däil) n. song with words by Robert H. Laidlaw and music by Frank Simpson. The words were published in the Hawick Express in 1934 and reprinted in 1950 when the music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association’s Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däil) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däil) n. blended whisky, formerly labelled and sold by John Turnbull of Hawick.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däil) n. Thomas (16th C.) Englishman, who was tenant in Ingram and had a local surname. He was recorded in 1590 as ‘Thomas Tevidalie’ when it is claimed that he was wounded by a group of Scottish raiders, specifically Burns, Youngs and others.

Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club (tee-vee-i’-däil-am-ee’-ur-bi-see-kul-klub) n. earliest known cycling organisation in Hawick, also known as Teviotdale Cycling Club. It was formed before 1881, when the Hawick Bicycle Club (to become the Hawick Cycling Club) was formed, and some competitive events were held between them in the 1880s. The club ceased to be active in about 1889.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i’-däil-bä-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thu-tee-vee-i’-däl-klub) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as ‘Hawick Billiard Club’. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonsor’s factory and the Jehovah’s Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Court (tee-vee-i’-däl-kör’) n. part of the Meadows, built in 1964 and refurbished as luxury flats in 1986.
Teviotdale Herriers (tee-vee-i'-dāl-kre-si'n')
n. ??.

Teviotdale Cyclin Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-sī-klin-klub) n. alternative name for Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i'-dāl-dā-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-storied, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as 'Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company' by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to local residents. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Farmers' Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-fer-nurz-klub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i'-dāl-heid) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already 'Teviotdaleheid' in 1551 and 'Teviotdaleheid' in 1633).

Teviotdale Harriers (tee-vee-i'-dāl-her-ree-urz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. It was formed in 1889 as a cross-country club by several local merchants and professionals, including George Heron Wilson. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club's Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies' Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdykeside in 2006. A history, 'The First Hundred' was written by John L. Colman in 1989.

Teviotdale Hockey Club (tee-vee-i'-dāl-ho-kee-klub) n. mixed hockey team existing before WWI, based in Hawick. The 4 Laing brothers all played for the team.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i'-dāl-luj, -loj) n. house in Commonside, just past Newmill, built in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i'-dāl-milz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store side in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs. The club's Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies' Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdykeside in 2006. A history, 'The First Hundred' was written by John L. Colman in 1989.

Teviotdale Lodge (tee-vee-i'-dāl-laj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Lodge 10417. Sometimes known as 'the Buffs', this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It folded in 1990.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i'-dāl-milz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store there. It was later Scoon & Hood's until about 1930. It may also have been owned by Innes & Henderson. The building more recently became a garage, with Croall Bryson.

the Teviotdale Regiment (thu-tee-vee-i'-dāl-re-jeem-in') n. foot regiment formed by Sir William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian, in 1639, after the signing of the National Covenant. It was one of the armies raised to protect Scotland against Charles I, and also referred to as 'Lothian’s Regiment' (Buccleuch commanded a Tweeddale regiment, Hume a regiment from the Merse, etc.). The Regiment probably consisted of about 500 men, many of whom must have been local. They were part of the Covenant force that crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640, capturing Newcastle. The Regiment was disbanded.
the Teviotdale Rifles

in 1641, but reformed in 1642 and sent to Ireland. About 1642 Lords Lothian, Buccleuch and Cranston were made Colonels of foot of a combined force, with Sir William Scott of Harden commanding the horse. They returned from Ireland in 1644, but mutinied for lack of pay in 1645 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

Teviotex (tee-vee-ō-teks) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vee-i’-grōv-aw-ka-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as ‘Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Art classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothead (tee-vee-i’-hawf) n. farm near Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, just beyond the north end of Denholm and to the south of Minto. It was once part of the Minto estate. Nailer John Oliver was living there in 1815. Christopher Hislop was farmer there in 1841. It was farmed by James Young in the 1860s and by the Miller family in the late 19th century, until the 1920s.

Teviothead (tee-vee-i’-heed, teev-yi’-heed) n. Teviothead, village about 9 miles south of Hawick, which is spread out along the A7, and was formerly called Caerlenrig. Prior to the opening of the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike, there was an alternative route from Langholm to Selkirk (skirting past Hawick) which diverged at Teviothead and crossed to the Borthwick valley. The area was for many years the home of Henry Scott Riddell, with a plaque on his cottage there, his memorial cairn overlooking the area, and his burial place in the churchyard. The Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig existed there from early times. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ there, for the outlying members of Hawick Parish from the early 18th century. The parish itself was formed in 1850 out of parts of Hawick and Cavers, and extends to the Dunfriesshire boundary. Prior to this time the area was generally known as Caerlenrig. The area was famous for the 1530 capture and hanging of Johnnie Armstrong and his men. His grave and commemorative plaque are there. The village long had its own primary school, but it was closed in 2004. It also had its own library from at least the 1830s. A stone war memorial (designed by J.P. Alsion) was erected after WWI – ‘There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne’ [WHO], ‘At Teviothead there stand three stones, If ever you’re that way, Take time to seek them out And read the words they have to say. One man was called to fight a fight And one to win a race And one to write a special song To mark his time and place’ [WL] (the place name appears as ‘Teviotheid’ in 1623 and is used regularly from the 1660s).

Teviothead Cottage (tee-vee-i’-heed-ko’-eje) n. home of Henry Scott Riddell at Teviothead, built for him about 1840 by the Duke of Buccleuch, and also known as Dryden Cottage, Caerlenrig Manse and Dryden Burnfoot. It still exists and has a commemorative plaque. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviothead Haa (tee-vee-i’-heed-haw) n. Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviotheid Kirk (tee-vee-i’-heed-kirk) n. church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. ‘Mr’ Thomas Hume was recorded witnessing baptisms in the area in 1713 and 1714, suggesting he was acting as preacher there. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Falnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the masonry of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as ‘Meeting House at Teviothead Library

Thorny Hall’. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1799 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch’s Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edges and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1900. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: Thomas Hume, at least 1713–14; David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Samsin 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobbie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1843–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinnwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–63; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Wright 1972–86; George Watson 1989–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–

Teviothead Parish

Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Roberton, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a ‘Chapel of Ease’ here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher’s salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smithy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a ‘side-parochial school’ in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlanrig.

Teviot Kirk

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i’-kirk) n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George’s, adopted in 1988, and having links with Roberton.

Teviot Lodge

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i’-loj, -luj) n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to designs by J.P. Alison in 1890. The daughters of Col. Elliot gifted the house and grounds to the school in 1933. It was used for a while as a nursery, and as the headquarters of the Women’s Voluntary Services Organisation during WWII, while the gardens became part of the ‘dig for victory campaign’ and the riverside lawn was used for games. The house was demolished in the 1950s to make way for the High School science buildings and gymnasium, built around 1960. Wood’s 1824 map shows its location and the lay-out of the grounds. A bungalow built at the corner of the site in the 1970s was given the same name.

Teviot Mill

Teviot Mill (tee-vee-i’-mul) n. hosiery factory in Weensland, built by Walter Wilson in the 1850s, on a piece of ground that had formerly belonged to John Oliver & Sons. The premises of Walter Wilson & Sons there made hosiery and tweeds. It was later associated with Sime, Williamson & Co.
and Kenway & Co. Part of the mill was used for a while as barracks during WWI (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Teviot Pairish (tee-vee-i’-pá-reesh) n. Teviot Parish Church, being the name used for what was St. George’s Church, with a connection to Roberton.

Teviot Place (tee-vee-i’-plis) n. street name used in the mid-19th century, presumably the same as one of the other similarly named streets.

Teviot Raw (tee-vee-i’-raw) n. Teviot Row, street alongside the river in the Weensland area, previously named simply ‘Weensland’, renamed when houses were constructed in 1872 and demolished when considered unsafe in 1968.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i’-röd) n. road along the Teviot, parallel to the High Street, leading from Teviot Crescent to the foot of the Mill Port. The houses were developed from 1824, and on Wood’s map of that year it is labelled ‘New Projected Street’. Previous to that it was a roughly 3 foot wide cobblestone path, close to the water level, which was dangerous in high water, and connected the foot of Walter’s Wynd with the Round Close. In the 1830s there was a proposal to build a High Street bypass along the riverside here, together with a bridge to the Sandbed, linking with the New Road, but this never transpired. During the construction of Pringle’s Rodono Mills in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i’-síd) n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Tiviotside, And by the Braes of Branxholm, There I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘By Tiviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No place could be so dear to me As Bonnie Tiviotside’ [RHL], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Tiviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti wake be Tiviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL].

Teviotside Foondry (tee-vee-i’-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i’-síd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.

Teviotside Road (tee-vee-i’-síd-röd) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviotside Terrace (tee-vee-i’-síd-te-ris) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name.

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i’-skwär) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i’-stän) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylaw farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘And Tei’ot Stane pinpointed wi a dab o’ jeely . . . ’ [DH], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotside They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘Teviotside’; it is marked ‘Tiot-stane’ on Gordon’s map c. 1650 and ‘Tiot stain’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Teviot Tweed (tee-vee-i’-tweed) n. tweed merchants located at 17 High Street (or equivalently the Round Close) around 1906 (the name seems like an oxymoron).

thieves (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole (thu-theefs-höl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level. Part of Jedburgh Jail formerly had the same name (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike (theefs-höl-sik) n. stream that rises to the west of Barnes Loch and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Troutlawford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road (thu-theefs-rööd) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Thief Road’; it may be the ‘Thewesrode’ mentioned in an English document of 1255 listing the boundary of lands in the Cheviots).

Thief’s Sike (theefs-sik) n. stream that rises on Thiefsike Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsgarth to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knocking-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Broco’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of shieling huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thieftously (theef-tis-leev) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘...and theiftu-ouslie stealing and away taking out of her house...’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie...’ [BR1640] (also thefteously).

thief (thift) n., arch. theft – ‘...or that committs greitere thift, sal be banysht the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640], ‘...that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guiltie of Sacrilege, Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names...’ [PR1718].

Thilasteane (thil-stän) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thirlasteane’,

thim (thim) pron., arch. them (noted by E.C. Smith; thaim and thum are more common).

thimbler (thim-blur) n., arch. a thimble-gigger, someone who runs a shell game – ‘A fiddler is here, and a thimble is there, Wi’ mut-men and spice-men at Copshawholm Fair’ [DA].

thimme (thi-mul) n. a thimble (probably the more common local form; see also thummle).

Thimmel Haa (thi-mul-haw) n. former name for a building in Hawick, also known as ‘Tummel Haa’ (noted by G. Watson).

thimmlefi (thi-mul-fi) n. a thimbleful – ‘No, no, just a thimblefu’. It manna gaun tae ma heid or ’Aw’ll no’ can tell ma story’ [JEDM].

thin (thin) conj., prep. than – ‘she’s a faster rin-ner thin am er’, ‘yer een er bigger thin yer belly’, ...when ee wax lyrical ti yer less thin fortunate Gala pals’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘than’, as in English; cf. then).

thing (thing) n., arch. amount, quantity, extent – ‘I understand little thing can be brought against you o’ this day’s mischief’ [RW], sort, kind (almost used as a suffix) – ‘I’ve some mair paper, but it’s no sic guid thing as that’ [JAHM], ‘Wad ye like some black ink, or some blue thing?’ [JAHM], ‘Mask iz a pickl new thing’ [ECS], ‘The broon thing’s mair use as the yallih’ [ECS], pl. matters, duties, etc. – ‘Ee’ll finnd ec’ve other thing adae’ [ECS] (these senses not common in English; also hing).

thingubbed (thing-a-beed) n. a thingum-abob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thingubby and hingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy’).
thingubby (thing-a-bee) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsis – 'A hink what’s ‘ei’s name din eet, thingubby, frae up the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporarily forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS], ‘As ee get older ee yaise that a lot mair, thingubby, thingubby, thingubby!’ [ME] adj. whatchamacallit, descriptive word which temporarily cannot be recalled – it was aa thingubby, ee ken?’ (also written ‘thing-a-bee’; perhaps used more frequently than ‘thingummy’ when referring to a person rather than a thing).

Thinside Hill (thi-sid-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgarth. There are many enclosures and some springs marked there.

thir (thir) pron., arch. these – ‘...before yir witnesses, John Scot Bailzie, Robert Denis, surgocone, George Scot, James Morlaw, and Robert Nillag’ [JW1558], ‘When ‘thir’ is used absolutely without a noun following, it generally becomes ‘thirs’; ‘Thirs is meyne’’ [JAHM], ‘Boonjeddart, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’ [CPM], ‘Thirs is mine, thae’s yours, but whae’s aucht thon yins?’ [GW], common in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘Be it kend til al men be thir present lettreis, me David Scot of the Bukchuch ...’ [SB1470], ‘...before thir witnes, Thomas Glendynwyn, Alexander Scot ...’ [SB1510/1], ‘...befoir thir witnessis, ... Thirat (thee-raw) n. M. (18th/19th C.) French Napoleonic prisoner of war located in Hawick. He painted ‘View of St. Mary’s’ (1813) among other local scenes (unclear whether this is ‘Monsieur’ or his first initial).

thirl (thi-ruil) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meanin they hed ti git their corn ground there’, ‘Lansyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boond ...’ [FL].

thirlage (thi-leej) n., arch. the state of being thirled, usually applied by rule of the landowner to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘...whereby these Baillies created a sort of thirlage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’ [C&L1780].

Thirlestane (thi-ruil-stan) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirlestane mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirlestain Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Braux holme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandson Sir Walter in 1553/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armstrongs in 1543. The precedence of the Thirlestane branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had Thirlwall (Thirlestane) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley in 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Laird of Thirlestane’s lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials ‘R. S. M. C.’ for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauder of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – ‘Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane’s eye of flame; His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pensils and pennons wide were flung, To Heav’n the laides [SWS], ‘Wher Ettrick wandirs down a southern Scotland. It is said that many shepherds made walls from piles up the dead sheep in order to give some shelter to the living. As much as 90/Scotland perished. The winter weather began in January, and never really let up until the end of March, with the 13 days themselves beginning on 20th February (although there is some confusion over the dates). The Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch obtained a special licence in 1675 to import 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland.

The Thirty Shillin Haugh (Thirlestane Castle) recorded from at least the early 18th century and ‘Grenhowe’ (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Comyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirlwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian’s Wall.

Thirlestane (Thirlestane) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turreted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with Thirlestane in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirlwall (Thirlestane) n. John ‘the elder’ (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and ‘This is no my ain Hoose’.
to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my ain Hoose’).

thistledoon (thi-sul-doon) n. thistledown, a soft fluffy yarn used for luxury knitwear garments, called after the silky down or pappus inside the head of a thistle – ‘...An’ oor casmerees an’ angoras An’ oor thistledoon lambswool’ [WL], ‘...Her step as licht as the thistle-doon, Wi’ easy grace she gaed dancin’ roun’’ [WL].

Thistlesike (thi-sul-sik) n. farm in Liddesdale, just south of Mangerton, on the opposite bank of the Liddel. It is on the Trysting Sike, and with the forest there known as Thistlesike Plantation. It is probably associated with the place known as ‘Siselscheillis’ on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Alexander Armstrong.

thit (thi, thit) pron. that – ‘it was efter that thit aa moved ti Hawick’, ‘...thit there’s nae where else on earth it that moment, they wud rither be’ [IHS] (only pronounced this way in certain contexts; see also that).

thockit (tho-kee’, -ki’) pp., poet. panted, breathed heavily with exertion – ‘His toothless gans they fell abreide, He thockyt and he blew’ [JTe].

Thoftcotsys (thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent Albany conferred lands there and at ‘Borthvic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hoscote, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier Yrostitcots: it seems likely that this was a variant of Hoscote, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’).

thole (thól) v., arch. to endure, tolerate, suffer, undergo, bear – ‘...His beating heart could hardly thole, For thinking on her beauty’ [JR], ‘And O, for blessings, never theshe, If ye wadna the brydle thole ...’ [JTe], For she’ll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole’ [JTe], ‘...His beating heart could hardly thole, For thinking on her beauty’ [JR], ‘And O, for blessings, never theshe, If ye wadna the brydle thole ...’ [JTe], For she’ll ride ye post to the clutye deil, And he to the reikye hole’ [JTe], ‘...Tis love, and beauty, and the glass, Makes lifetime worth the tholin’ ’ [JoHa], ‘Then where’s the rain we canna thole ...’ [JoHa], ‘...Though hard to thole, there’s yet a hole, We aye get creepin’ out’ [DA], ‘I couldn’thole the cauld hearth stane That doorway that is not’ [JEDM], ‘Tho’ hard tae thole, they seldom last, That’s ae guid thing about them!’ [IJ], ‘...he sall nevir thole the rich- teous til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘...while I thole thy terrers I am distraucht’ [HSR], ‘...Thinks little o’ the friendless form Maun thole the Winter’s cauld’ [JT], ‘...And set it in the sun to dry – The waiting o’t he scarce could thole’ [WFC], ‘He’d better hae thole wi’ a half toom wame ...’ [WL], ‘Nor can I thole their snax-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brillantin’ ...’ [DH], ‘...and that she’ll juist hev to thole, and hope it wadna be smittal’ [DH], to allow, suffer – ‘Jesus answerin’ said untill him, Thole it til be sae now’ [HSR] (from Old English).

tholit (thō-lee', -li') pp., arch. endured – ‘Becaus for thy sak’ I hae tholet reproch: shame heth kiveret my fece’ [HSR], ‘He tholet nae man til do thame wrang . . . ’ [HSR].

Thom (tōm, tom) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society’s Museum collection in June 1957. Also in 1857 he read a paper at the Archaeological Society on ‘the Noachian Deluge’ and donated a collection of coins. In 1861 he donated a large axe-head, found at Northhouse, to the Museum.

Thomas of Wilton see de Wilton

Thomas the Rhymer (to-miš-thu-ri-nur) n. (c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmonth, Laird of Erclidoune (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He may have been born in Earlston, where a fragment of his tower remains. He possibly retired to the priory of Fail in Ayrshire, and his lands were transferred to the house of Soutra in 1294. He made many prophecies, often in rhyme, supposedly predicting the accidental death of Alexander III in 1285. He is also meant to have gone off with the Queen of the fairies for 7 years (but actually seems to have been in Aberdeenshire!). His son Thomas is recorded resigning lands to Soutra Hospital in 1294. After his death his reputation as a prophet became legendary, with predictions of the defeat at Flodden, the Union of the Crowns, the defeat at Bannockburn and the Jacobite risings all being attributed to him – ‘True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank, a ferlie he spied wi’ his ee; And there he saw a ladie bright come riding down by the Eil- don Tree’ [SWS], ‘. . . Where Rymour, long of yore, the nymph embrac’d, The first of men unearthly lips to taste’ [JL].

Thomline (tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781–1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a slater and glazier on the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children included: William (d.1808); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the widow ‘Tomline’ recorded keeping lodgings on the Cross Wynd according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. Alexander ‘Alex’ (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Underdamside with ‘Tibby’, who was probably his mother. George (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary’s School. He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch’s 1778 book on Scottish trade as ‘dyers and clothiers’ who ‘have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of cloths fit for that market, and how to use woad in dying of blues & c.’ There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. In 1780 he and William were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughheugh. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Roughheugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s, and another piece of Roughheugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as ‘Thomline of that Ilk’ and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near ‘the Nitton’. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (d.1849) Hawick stockmaking who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. He married Helen Scott and their son George was baptised in Hawick in 1825 Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isobel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hinshelwood (or ‘Hanselwood’). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793) and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the ‘Walter Tomlin’ whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dying business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. In 1780 he and John were witnesses for a baptism for John Clerk, who was at Roughhead. He and John were recorded as owners of the ‘Waulk Mill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769); Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled ‘Thomlin’, ‘Thomlins’, ‘Tomlin’, ‘Tomlins’, etc.).

He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled ‘Thomlin’, ‘Thomlins’, ‘Tomlin’, ‘Tomlins’, etc.).

Thompson (tom-sin) n. John Riddle (19th C.) married Jessie T., daughter of Walter Wilson and Isabella Richardson. He had sons Robert Riddle (b.1860) and Walter Wilson (b.1862). Mark Hawick-born power lifter. He won the British Weightlifting Association Bench Press Championship in the 110 kg division in 2005. Robert Riddle (19th C.) son of John Riddle and Jessie Wilson. He was a baker and later insurance inspector in Hawick. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of baker Robert Young, and they had children Aggie Lamb Dryden, Jessie W., Walter W., Robert Young, Elizabeth Margaret and Thomas Dryden (who died in 1917 and is commemorated on the Mikra Memorial). He secondly married Annie, daughter of Joseph Smith, gas manager. Richard (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish. He is referred to as being at Woodfoot in 1808 when his sister Janet died. Thomas ‘Tommy’, ‘Tufty’ Cornet of 1955. He rode on the Friday in his jubilee year. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) from Allan Glen’s School in Glasgow, he became High School Rector in 1908, and remained in the position until 1919 (see also Thomson).

Thomson (tom-, tam-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a resident of ‘est grange’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas Clomnell in Minto was charged with stealing a pig from him. He probably lived at Grange in Ancrum Parish. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Singdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813–74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dunoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soiree was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopædia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew’s College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including ‘A pastoral memorial; discourses . . . ’ (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir ‘Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.’ was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landreth. A portrait of him exists.

Alexander

(15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitchesters. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for William Scott, who was also tenant in Whitchesters (as well as Robert Scott, the other witness). He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William Wilson was his sertor in 1712 when rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. He witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1713. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). He was deceased in 1719 and ‘sometimes tenant in Whitchesters’ when his daughter Agnes married John Scott (tenant in Hawickshiel). Alexander (d.bef. 1777) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Cathrae, who died in hawick in 1777. Rev. Alexander McInroy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement’s in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgesses in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. He could be the Andrew who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leithead and Marjory Thomson. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Riddell (who died in Hawick in 1781), with their daughter Betty baptised in 1758. Andrew (18th C.) cottar at Ashkirk Mill. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1745); and James (b.1749). Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew ‘Heiton’ as cautioner; she was daughter of John Usher of Toftfield. He was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded as deceased in 1828 in a letter from James Usher, writer in Edinburgh, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection; this was either an error, or referred to his father perhaps. He was at Bewlie in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. His children probably included: Robert (b.1788); John (b.1789); Janet (b.1794); Thomas (b.1796); Betsy (b.1798); James (b.1800); William (b.1803); and Andrew (b.1806). Andrew (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harvey and their children included: Helen (b.1810); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Ewesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George’s Church in Hawick. Andrew (b.1826) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of Andrew and Jean Harvey. He was tenant of Billerwell farm for about 40 years in the latter part of the 19th century. He was at Billerwell in 1861 as farmer of 300 acres, employing 5 people. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Jane, Andrew and Mina. He had a brother George and a sister Helen. Andrew (b.1834/5) son of shepherd Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became shepherd at Wigg on Wauchope farm. Like his father he was a strong supporter of Wolfelee Free Kirk. His children included: William, who was also a shepherd at Wigg; and Marianne. His wife died in 1904. Andrew (19th C.) framesmith at Robert Ewen’s factory, who left for Nottingham. He was a popular local singer. He is probably the Andrew listed as a millwright journeyman at Melgund Place in 1841, with wife Agnes and children Walter and Elizabeth. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Wells in 1785, when she was working for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald ‘Archie’ (16th C.) listed in 1576 as a servant of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. There was a promise that he, as well as Martin Crozier in Bedrule, and Martin’s son Martin, should all refrain from theft. However, they were all declared rebels in 1578/9. Archibald (18th C.)
foreman at Dickson’s Hassendeanburn nurseries around 1770. Rev. Charles (1795–1871) born in Dalserf in 1795, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He came to Hawick in 1821 to be assistant for Rev. James Arkle of Hawick Parish. There appears to have been some dispute with the Duke of Buccleuch about his appointment, and he did not become Arkle’s successor. He was ordained at North Shields in 1823 and became minister of Wick in 1840, then went to the Free Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – ‘...Or, maybe for a daintie kirk, As did his Reverend Frien’ o’ Shielis. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, roguery and cunnin’ ...’)[RDW]. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne’s former partner, ‘Auld Cash’ – ‘A black robed son of light – yclep’d a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco’s soul’[RDW]. David (16th C.) recorded in North Synton in 1581/2. George Caverhill in Whitehaughbrae resigned to a tenement in Selkirk. David L, son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to ‘compound’ for resetting ‘Joiffe Glenquhin’ (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as ‘in Corrisheuch’, which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as ‘Besse Thomsone’ in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a ‘mortification’ to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) baker in Newcastle upon Tyne about 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it included Hassendean. The baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Robertson in 1680, ‘begotten in fornication with Issobell henderson’; the witnesses were Robert and James Thomson (presumably close relatives, perhaps his brothers). He married Isobel Turnbull in Robertson in 1684 and had children including Isobel (b.1685) and Robert (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and James. Along with Robert he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilley leaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowes in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Alars Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Robertson) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth. Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He became a doctor in Hawick with practice on the High Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on ‘Market pl’ and as part of the partnership of ‘Graham & Thomson’, physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dumfriesshire. His children included: George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893–99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Gideon (b.1684) son of Robert. In 1707 he and his father were witnesses for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) laundress at Minto in 1789. James at Hassendean. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Robert (b.1679); James (b.1680); Christian (b.1683); Bessie (b.1686); and Andrew (b.1688). The witnesses in 1680 were William Gray and Robert Graham and in 1686 were Robert and George (who were probably related). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, who witnessed a baptism for Robert in 1687 and who witnessed another for Andrew Leyden in 1683. It is probably one of the Jameses recorded at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Weensland in 1704. He married Agnes Thorbrand and their children included: David (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk; and Alexander (b.1704), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1704 were David Miller and Walter Paisley. James (17th/18th C.) married Elspeth Scott in Bedrule in 1715. James (18th C.) married Jean Phau in Minto in 1722. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ashybank in 1726 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Ann (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, was probably also his child. James (18th C.) tenant at Midshiels. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. He could be the James who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard Turnbull, resident of Midshiels. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! He attended Jedburgh Grammar School and had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his mother. He moved to London in about 1725. He wrote the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the epic poem ‘The Seasons’ (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He retired to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Elliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk. Erskine organised a memorial celebration to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath thou well hast sown While Scotia, with exulting tear Proclaims that Thomson was her son’. A bi-centenary celebration with speeches etc. was held at Southdean kirk in 1900 – ‘To thee, fair Jed! a holier wreath is due, Who gav’st thy Thomson all thy scenes to view, Bad’st forms of beauty on his vision roll, And mould to harmony his ductile soul’ [JL], ‘And Ednam’s genius shall the soul sublime’ [JTe].

James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1721 and 1726. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: Maury (b.1721); James (b.1724); and Jean (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included Christian (b.1718), William (b.1721), Walter (b.1723) and Margaret (b.1726). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Deans and their children included Isobel (b.1726), George (b.1728), Robert (b.1730) and James (b.1732).

James (18th C.) married Mary Elliot in Hawick in 1727. James (18th C.) married Rachel Douglas in Wilton in 1731. James (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Wilton in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Turnbull and their children included Andrew (b.1752). James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1764. His children, baptised in Robertson, included Bettie (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), James (b.1758), John (b.1760) and Robert (b.1764). James (18th C.) tenant farmer at Nether Ancrum. In 1778 he had a sasine for the lands of Fodderlee, following a disposition by Robert of Fodderlee, who must have been a near relative. In 1784 East Fodderlee was sold to William Riddell, and along with Riddell he granted a disposition for the lands to John Thomson; this may have been the John born to a James Thomson in Minto Parish in 1783. He was surely related to George, who was recorded as owner of East Fodderlee in 1788 (unless there is an error in forenames). James (1752–1831) born in Hawick. In 1785 he emigrated to the Niagara district of what was then called Upper Canada. There he married Margaret Emerick and they had 10 children; this included David, who rose to the rank of Major in the Canadian militia, a founding member of the Grand River Navigation Company and owner of several mills and Canadian Member of Parliament. He and his sons built their brick house, baking the bricks themselves. He was described as ‘a stern old Presbyterian’. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1778. He married Janet Shiel and their son Duncan was baptised in 1778. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Outerside in 1793, in 1794 was ‘late in Broadlee’ and in 1798 was at Unthank in Ewes Parish. He married Isobel Graham in 1792 and their children included: Jane (b.1793), James (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796) and Janet (b.1799), all baptised in Robertson; and Mary (b.1802), John (b.1803), Edward Aitchison (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), William (b.1808), Christian Aitchison (b.1810) and Edward (b.1811), all born in Ewes. James (b.1776/7) born at Over Huntly, son of James and Mary Stirling. He was surveyor of roads on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may be the ‘Mr. Thomson’ whose land is marked on the left side of the Loan, just before the Moat, on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a road-surveyor on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was living on the Loan with his wife Rachel and children Robert, William, Mary and Rachel. He was still living on the Loan in 1851, as a retired surveyor. He married Rachel Wilkie from Midlem and their children (all born in Ashkirk Parish) included: Andrew (b.1800); John (b.1804); Robert (b.1806), grocer; Janet (b.1808); William (b.1810), hosier; Mary (b.1814); Rachel (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1821). James (b.1781) born in Minto Parish, son of James. He was a forester in Castleton Parish, living at Sandholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. He was listed as a ‘ Woodforester ’ at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘ Pingle ’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. He probably lived at Pingle South of Langholm, but it could have been Pinglechale. James (18th/19th C.) from Hawick, recorded in a document related to the Haremoss Toll, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in Selkirk. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835. He married Janet Jackson, but they were rebuked for ‘ antenuptial fornication ’ in 1832. James (b.c.1805) born at Appletreehall. He was a joiner in Jedburgh. His wife was Jane and their children included Mary Ann, John, Elizabeth, Isabella, James and Thomasina. James ‘ Jimmy ’ or ‘ Jamie Tamson ’ (1827–1888) poet and song-writer, born in Bowden. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archaeologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg and Dr. Jamieson. He was also a cousin of poet Thomas Aird. He had a sister Janet, who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘ Pingle ’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border ’ in 1821. James ‘ Jimmy ’ or ‘ Jamie Tamson ’ (1827–1888) poet and song-writer, born in Bowden. He had a maternal uncle, Dr. Wilkie of Innerleithen, who was an archaeologist and friend of Sir Walter Scott, James Hogg and Dr. Jamieson. He was also a cousin of poet Thomas Aird. He had a sister who became Mrs. Drummond of Tranent. He herded cows in the Eildons, where he got to know the poet Andrew Scott. From age 16 he served an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of ‘ Up wi’ the banner ’, ‘ The Border Queen ’, ‘ Hawick Volunteers ’ and ‘ The Star o’ Robbie Burns ’, as well as poems such as ‘ The Auld Mid Raw ’, ‘ The Mither Tongue ’, ‘ The Wee Croodlin’ Doo ’ and ‘ Hairst ’, many contained in his book ‘ Doric Lays & Lyrics ’ (1870). ‘ Our Robin ’ was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his ‘ Hogmanay ’ sung at the New Year of 1860 at the Ewan’s Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns ‘ Kilmanock Edition ’ was his constant companion while he was a herdsman. He was Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk, as well as Bard for Lodge 424. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. In 1887 he presented ‘ Up wi’ the Banner ’ to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk. A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006. James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of 6 High Street, taking over the butcher’s premises of George Davies. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot’s 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Synton in 1508, where he is ‘ John Thomesoun ’. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. He was recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and Richard Brown acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbuls of Bedrule. John (16th/17th C.) resident of Mangerton. In 1603 he was ‘ Johnne Thomsoun ’ of Marguerston when there was a complaint that he and others had raided ‘ Sewingdene ’ in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; ‘ Cubbie’s Archie ’, servant of Simon Elliot. of Binks, was the leader of the group, which also contained Armstrongs. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Caverhill and their children included James (b.1649). John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mabinslaw’ on a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He probably farmed at Mabonlaw. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Flatt when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear if this was the Flatt in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Williands and their children included James (b.1674), Isobel (b.1684) and Bessie (b.1687). The baptism of Bessie was witnessed by Stephen Greenshields and Michael Turnbull. John (17th C.) tenant in Lethem in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, living near the East Port. In 1706 he was one of the people who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry, and later charged. He was apparently forced to ‘ryse naked out of his bed’ and threatened with being taken away by the pretend officers. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1722. He married Isobel Gray in 1714. Their children included: Andrew (b.1715); Andrew (again, b.1718); and Isobel (b.1722). The witnesses in 1722 were William Riddell and John Scott and in the same year he (along with John Scott) witnessed a baptism for William Riddell, who lived at Appletreehall. He may be the John in ‘Brihool’ (probably Brieryhill) whose funeral is recorded in 1750. John (18th C.) resident of Giddenscleuch. His son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John (18th C.) resident of the Flex. He married Mary Miller and their children included Mary (b.1721), Gideon (b.1722) and James (b.1726). The witnesses in 1726 were George Gibson and James Gledstains. John (d.bef. 1776) grocer in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1776, when his daughter Christian married David Brown. John (18th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray and whose children included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Paterson and their children included Robert (b.1771). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Boyd in 1789. Their children included: Thomas (b.1792); and John (b.1794). The 1792 baptism was carried out ‘In presence of the Congregation’ and the 1794 baptism witnessed ‘by the Burgher Congregation. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Robertson Parish. In 1795 he is recorded at Greenbank. He married Helen Chisholme in Robertson in 1794 and their children included William (b.1795). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John (18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitchesters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. John (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Janet Reid and their children included: Janet and Jean (b.1803); and Cicely (b.1806). John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lambert and their children included John (b.1834/5), who was a mason. John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Rachel Scott and their son John was born in 1814, with witness appearing to be Jane Scott. John (19th C.) member of East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Preston and their daughter Violet was baptised in 1832. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh, son of farmer William and Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk. He was ordained as minister of St. Mary’s after it had become a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosaclea when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allan-shaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John’s Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary’s in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet’s Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the ‘Kirkin’. The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughheugh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Grierson Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including ‘Address to Ploughmen’ (also called ‘Address on the Evils of the Bondage System’, published in Hawick, 1866), ‘The art of weaving spiritualised’ (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), ‘Voices from the Plough’ (Hawick, 1869), ‘History of Peter Plough’ (Hawick, 1872), ‘Life and times of William Thomson’ (1875 and 1879), ‘Alexander Hope: a Hawick story’ (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), ‘The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws’ (1879), ‘The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised’, plus at least one other sermon and ‘Speeches delivered on Different Occasions’ (Hawick, 1882). Although ‘Alexander Hope’ was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows. John (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller of Hawick, he served as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1915–24. Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwallis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanquhar, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson’s College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew’s in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallacetown, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains’ Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stepped in as ‘interim-moderator’ for St. George’s Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7.
Thomson

He wrote ‘Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929’ (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church. He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791/2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. He married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants’ Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Lisa (1997–) attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools and then Edinburgh University. She played for Melrose Ladies, Edinburgh University, French side Lille Metropole and D.M.P. Durham Sharks. She made her international debut against England in 2016 and was Scottish team Captain for the 2018/9 season. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘i d¯ en¯ u’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘in dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Martha Norval and their children included: John (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1760). His wife was probably recorded in 1787 when ‘Martha Novels Grandchild’ died in Hawick. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). The witnesses in 1779 were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is probably the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside ‘Newtown’. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Barony land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dobie and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1646. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (the part corresponding to Hassendean). Along with James he witnessed baptisms for George in 1680 and 1688, and along with George he witnessed a baptism for James in 1686. It seems likely that he was father or brother of both George and James. He also witnessed a baptism for John Hope in 1681 and Andrew Leyden in 1683. He married Margaret Gray in Roberton Parish in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680); Dand (b.1682); Robert (b.1684); and Janet (b.1687). He was probably also the Robert recorded in Burnfoot in 1697 when his son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1687 were James (perhaps his brother) and Thomas Caldwell. The witnesses in 1697 were Adam Scott of Burnfoot and James White. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for ‘ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright’. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (d.bef. 1720) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). In 1707 he and his son Gideon witnessed a baptism for James Renwick, undermiller at Newmill. This suggests he may be the same man as the tenant in Castlehill and Newmill. Robert (1668/9–1740) tenant in Greens in Castlehill Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etteleton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as ‘Rot. Thomson officer’, but it is unclear what ‘officer’ meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where he was ‘wt tuo kilns’ and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was in ‘Newmilne’ in 1696 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Storie in 1698 and for smith John Dryden in 1700. He was also in Newmill when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for William Bell in Whitchesters and Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1701 for smith John Dryden (whose wife was a Thomson), in 1702 for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield, in 1704 for Walter Wilson in Castlehill, in 1705 twice (one at Branxholmtown), in 1706 for Robert Henderson, in 1707 for Walter Wilson again and for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town, in 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood, in 1709 for James Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield, in 1712 for Robert Scoon in Branxholme Town, for William Allan (in ‘Park’) and for James Scott in Stobicote (husband of his step-daughter), and in 1713 for John Riddell in Branxholme Town. Given all the baptisms that he witnessed, it is likely he was a Kirk Elder, acting for the Newmill area. He was recorded in Newmill in 1709 when his ‘servitor’ John Nichol had a child baptised. Probably the same Robert was in Newmill in 1723 when (along with William) he witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden and in 1726 other baptisms (also along with William) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. In 1731 he witnessed a further baptism for William (who was also at Newmill). He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Falside, and whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1694), Walter (b.1698) and Robert (b.1701). The witnesses in 1698 were John Dryden and Thomas Elliot. He is probably the Robert ‘in New milne’ whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret

Falsyde was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Burnfoot in 1697. He married a Gray and their children included Robert (b.1697). He may be the Robert in Appletreehall who had a process against James Laing, maltman of Selkirk in 1723. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Anna Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1701); and William (b.1704). Robert (18th C.) ex-Bailie in 1738 when he was involved with the construction of the Teviot Bridge. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters Mill in 1733. His children included: Robert (b.1733). He may be the Robert who in 1773 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for John Scoon and Rachel Riddell and in 1776 witnessed another baptism for miller John Scott and Betty Thomson (who was probably related). Robert (18th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm in the Rule valley. His family came originally from the Hassendean area. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. When he died (in the late 1700s) he left around £1200 to a distant relative called Boog, who spent it all within about a year. Robert (18th C.) only son of George and Margaret Kerr. In 1757 he had a sasine for the half lands of Fodderlee. He married Mary Dick. She and her her son George had a sasine for the ‘liferent’ of Fodderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at New Mill on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He was at ‘Newmili’ in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Nelly Oliver and their children included Nelly (b.1808). Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1809), William (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813) and Jeany (b.1815). Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob’ (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk.
in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinneil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In about 1693 he married Beatrice Trotter of Wideopen (on Kale), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendean, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Their daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1725, with witnesses Rev. Charles Telfer and weaver James Roger. Perhaps the same Thomas also married Mary Elliot and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1729). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Dryden in 1718 and their children included Adam (b.1722). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He was probably the Thomas who married Marion Tudhope in Cavers Parish in 1728. He was recorded at Denholm in 1729 and 1730 (when he was a herdsman). His children included Bessie (b.1729), Helen (b.1730) and Adam (b.1734). He is probably also father of some of these children baptised in Cavers Parish (with the others being part of the other Thomas; family): Helen (b.1728); Alison (b.1732); George (b.1732); and an unnamed child (b.1739). Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Isabel Hardie and their children included: Peter (b.1756); Isabel (b.1759); Agnes (b.1762); and Robert (b.1764). The witnesses in 1759 were flesher Robert Hardie and Kirk Officer Alexander Bunyan. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Coltart and their children included James (b.1765), Walter (b.1766) and Agnes (b.1768). He may be the workman who witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland in 1787. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Oliver and their son Thomas was baptised in 1773. He may be the deceased Thomas whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1781. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1787. He married Margaret Elliot in 1785 and they had an unnamed son in 1787. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815; in that record the word ‘Sloriage’ or ‘Slorage’ appears after his name. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) members of the East Bank Kirk. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included John Thomson Thomson (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Dunlop and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Walter (surely related) and John Wilson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th/18th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1702 he was listed as servitor to Gideon Scott of Falnash. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included William (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1707). The witnesses in 1702 were smith John Dryden and Robert Riddell, miller at Newmill. He is probably the William ‘older’ in Newmill, who (along with William ‘younger’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705; Dryden’s wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. He could be the William who married Agnes Cook and whose children included James (b.1680); the witnesses in 1680 were William Wilson and William Paisley. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) resident of Newmill in Parish. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. In 1733 he is recorded being at ‘New Miln’ and ‘at New miln’ in Hawick Parish in 1740. He may be the William ‘younger’, who (along with William ‘older’) witnessed baptisms in 1716 and 1718 for James Scott in Stobicote and in 1719 for William Clerk, workman in Castlehill. He was ‘in Newmiln’ in 1720 when he witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town, William Mitchellhill in Branxholme Town and James Dryden in Newmill. He is probably the William who (along with Robert, both in Newmill) witnessed a baptism for smith James Dryden in 1723. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1726 (along with Robert) for John Scott, for John Riddell and for Walter Scott in Newmill. His servant Robert Deans witnessed a baptism in 1742 for William Anderson in Raeskowne; this was the same day as the baptism of one of his own children in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot in 1729, the marriage being proclaimed in Robertson. Probably the same William in Newmill secondly married Isobel Scott (with whom he had children baptised in 1738 and 1740), with her name being recorded as ‘Margaret’ in 1742. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1729); Nichol (b.1731); Margaret (b.1733), Katherine (b.1735); Janet (b.1738); Helen (b.1740); and Margaret (again, b.1742). All the baptisms were recorded in Hawick, except the first Margaret, who was baptised in Robertson Parish. Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter. The witnesses in 1731 were Walter Scott and Robert Thomson, in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, and in 1742 were his servant Robert Deans and Kirk Officer John Telfer. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1740. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Doecleuch in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1750. William (d.bef. 1791) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Scott and she died in 1791. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) stockingsmaker in Hawick. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for Miller John Scott and Betty (who may have been his daughter or sister). William (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servant to Capt. Douglas of Cavers’ in 1784. He was listed as footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included: Tibby (b.1778); Nelly (b.1784); William (b.1787); and George (b.1788). Additional children, also baptised in Cavers, may include: Walter (b.1779); and James (b.1792). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the Thomson’s Cave

Thomson’s Cave (tom-sinz-kâv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. It is said to have been a popular haunt of the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (thu-ton-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897… It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thon (thon, thôn) pron. that, those, yon, yonder – ‘This is mine, that’s yours, but what’s aucht thon?’ [JAHM], ‘Yiddie’s a bleith fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!’ [ECS], ‘And thon’s jist the stert. What about the audience bogles?’ [JuH], adv., adj. those – ‘What’s the name o thon close it the Croon Hotel?’, ‘But still, up thon weary brae, Onward aa blundert …’ [DH] (this form is peculiarly local, while yon appears in other British dialects; also sometimes thone; it is used to indicate more distant objects than ‘this’, while yon corresponds more often with ‘that’).

thonder (thôn-dur) adv., adj., pron. yonder, over there – ‘if ee’r lookin for yer fither hei’s ower thonder’, ‘Thonder was the monument A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’ [ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’ [DH], ‘A’way up thonder abune the Wusp … at Westminster …’ [DH].

thone (thôn) adv., adj., pron. that, those – ‘A fair likeet Nardini’s ice cream. Was thone no the best?’ [We] (also thon).

thoom (thoom) n. a thumb – ‘hei’s aa fingers an thooms’, ‘A ken ma thoom’s beelin, cause it’s putt, puttn (throb, throbbing)’ [ECS], ‘…Wi’ tea, an’ crackers no’ the size O’ even ane’s thoom nail’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘thoomb’ or ‘thoum’).

thoosand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand – ‘Thoosands, gude kens how mony, to the breeder, An’ hauf as muckle for a cock to tread her’ [JoHa], ‘…Mair worth than an estate a thoosand miles square’ [JoHa], ‘…but A’d a thoosand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing aboot like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘Ten thoosand hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘A thoosand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s likin’ for butter …’ [DH], ‘What sacrifice To gie a pound Gin I’ve a thoosand mair?’ [WL], ‘Weary an’ dowie, aye myseil A thoosand times I’ve tried ti tell …’ [WP], ‘…for gettin’ a thoosand folk

thoot (thoo, thoot) prep., poet. without – ‘. . . An’, holy beacons, glow ‘thoot flaw or wane’ [JoHa], ‘Nought but the vera rims o’ men, ’Thoot saul or spunk – a glazent den’ [JoHa].

Thor (thôr) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JB], ‘With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thôr-brawnd) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam who married Elspeth Stevenson and whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. He is probably also the wright who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for carrier Walter Bryson. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoun’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands. Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for theiking’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Also in 1673 he was witness to baptisms for John Chalmers, Thomas Cowan and James Newbie. In 1683 wright Francis Gedstains was fined for attacking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late ‘baylea in Havicke’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. This was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jeane Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Bailylea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Purdem pay’d him, is all he gote for placing about the pulling raiil about Mr Elliott’s grave stone, £12’. He may be the John who was listed as ‘student’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Elliott in Whitchesters. Robert (16th C.) witness to an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. Simon Routledge was ‘in Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Volle Thourbrand’ (formerly ‘Thorbrand’ and ‘Thurbrand’: note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).
child who died in 1798 and another who died in 1811 (where he is recorded as ‘Berwick Carrier’). He is probably the Adam who married Janet Paterson and whose children included: Agnes (b.1796); John (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); Catherine (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); George (b.1805); William (b.1807); and James (b.1815). The witnesses in 1796 and 1797 were Robert Tinlin and Michael Anderson. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedene. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. David (18th C.) resident of Hawick as recorded in a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He may also be the David from ‘Broumhoortight’ recorded in another letter. He married Sarah Thomson and their son David was baptised in Hawick in 1790. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedene. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedene after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastleton, operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedene in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedene. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgleish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedene. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1– ) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was speaker at the 2005 Callants’ Club dinner and Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Probationer M.A. of U P Church’ when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkirk. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Salenside. She is said (by J.H. Haining) to have ‘lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly’. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80.

Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791. Jock (1926/7– ) came to Hawick as a refugee in 1939. He worked as foreman at the Walled Gardens and had a long association with boxing in Hawick. He married Teri Jean Cumming. They had sons George and John. The couple celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2019.

John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Moss and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1727.

John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bulloch in 1756 and their children included: Jean (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); and Elizabeth (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were mason Andrew Turnbull ‘junior’ and weaver George Swan.

John (d.1794) carrier. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish. He was ‘killed by his own cart at Drydoun’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Horsburgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798).

John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge.

John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprietor’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiel mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabell Hall in Hawick in 1791.

John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd minister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Elizabeth.

John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with hiselderly father. He married Margaret Rae (from England) and their children included Agnes, Susan Wright (b.1854), John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846.

John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenside Cottage. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Andrew and Jessie.

John son of Jock and younger brother of George. He works for the Bill McLaren Foundation and has been Secretary of both Hawick R.F.C. and the 1514 Club. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Headshaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew.

Robert (18th C.) wheelwright in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Rae and their children included Thomas (b.1740), Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1743). He could be the Robert who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760.
Thorlieshope

(18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hall and their children included Agnes (b.1789) and John (b.1791). Robert (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. His daughter Nelly died in 1860. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is unclear. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedene, was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedene Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedene helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barnman’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died unmarried. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Walter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. In 1762 he married Christian Ballantyne, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Robert (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Adam (b.1766); William (b.1768); Janet (b.1771); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne, in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn (who were Surely related) and in 1771 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or Marion) Ekron and their children included: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); and Elizabeth (b.1770). He is probably the Walter from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1780 and 1785. His children included: Janet (b.1780); Thomas (b.1784); and Walter (b.1785). Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Huggan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laidlaw). Walter (b.1822/3) resident of Roberton Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Harden in 1841, was living with his mother Janet Lockie at Borthwickbrae Haugh in 1851 and was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1861. He married Beatrix Scott from Newcastle-on-Tyne. Their children included Williamina (b.1850), William, Henry, James, Janet and Marion. Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time after WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howegate. He was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Ballantyne who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and their son Walter was baptised later the same year. The witnesses were weaver Robert Renwick (probably related to his wife) and tobacconist William Brown. He may also have married Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosiery manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielhaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburn’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

Thorlieshope (thör-leez-höp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorleshope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘John Elwald in Thorleshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th century. It is probably the ‘Thorleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same ‘Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup’ rented Southdeanrig and Caldecleuch from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Hob of Thorlieshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorlieshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braedie branch in 1558, while John ‘of Thorlosope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorlieshope. Adam ‘Rakkis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. It could be the ‘Thorship’ where Thomas Brown was recorded in 1618. John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mawgerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bluidy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was farmed by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorlieshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Mannering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleeshope’ in 1488, ‘thornlawiship’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1498, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirlleshope’, ‘Thorleshope’ and ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshop’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorlilshwp’ in 1547, ‘Thornisloip’ and ‘Thorlishop’ in 1569, ‘Thornsospe’ in 1583, transcribed ‘Thorwisoip’ in 1587/8, ‘Thorilishop’ in 1594, ‘Thorlesop’ in 1595, ‘Thirlleshop’ in 1613, ‘Thoerleishoip’ in 1623, ‘Chorlesoip’ in 1646, ‘Thorlishoppe’ in 1648, ‘thorlishop’ in 1678, ‘Thorlishope’ in 1690, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1692, ‘Thorlishop’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlishope’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorlishope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Thorlishope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thorlieshope Burnfoot (thor-leez-hōp-burn-ī) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, near where Thorlieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorlieshope Heights (thor-leez-hōp-hīts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thorlieshope farm, south of Thorlieshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thorlieshope Pike (thor-leez-hōp-pīk) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorlieshope is located to the west, and Thorlieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

thorn (thōrn) n., arch. the hawthorn tree (used in place names, e.g. Thorniewhats, Thornybank and Thornyhaugh).

Thornebogg (thor-nee-bōg) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thōrn-hill) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron’s Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thorniewhats (thor-nee-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch (it is ‘Thornyquhat’ in 1579, ‘Thornythaite’ in 1583, ‘Thornyquhattie’, ‘Thornyquhatt’ and ‘Torniquhatt’ in 1585, ‘Thorniquhat’ in 1623 and ‘Thorniequhathis’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Thorniwhat’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map; note that it should not be confused with ‘Thornyhaugh’ near Falnash).

Thornton (thōrn-īn) n. former name for piece of land on the farm of Braidhaugh near Hobkirk, probably near to the Rule Water and ‘Thornton Pool’ (also ‘Thorntonpool’).

Thornton Pool (thōrn-īn-pool) n. deep pool in the Rule Water near the farm of Braidhaugh. The name was still in use in the early 20th century.

Thornwud Avenue (thōrn-wud-aw-vi-new) n. Thornwood Avenue, a street in Weensland, named for its proximity to the former Thornwood House and constructed in 1976.
Thornwud Hoose

Thornwud Hoose (thörn-wud-hoos) n. mansion built by James Oliver in 1870, which eventually became the Mansfield House Hotel. The name probably derived from being ‘on a bleak hill side covered with whins and thorns’, according to a contemporary newspaper report. The original design, in a Greek Revival style (with Italian elements), was by Glasgow-based architect John T. Rochead in 1867. The house was sold to Lt.-Col. Mudie in 1936 and by the 1950s it had become a hotel (see also Mansfield Hoose).

Thornwud Park (thörn-wud-pawrk) n. Thornwood Park, a street in Weensland, part of Daykins Drive. The whole street was called Daykins Drive when built in 1982, but this name was favoured by many residents and later made official. It derives from the proximity to Thornwood House.

Thornybank (thör-nee-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, probably located between the lands of Harwood and Fairnielees. This could be the same as ‘Thornydykes’, where Robert French is recorded in 1603 (‘Thorniebankis’ in 1562).

Thornycleugh (thör-nee-klooch) n. former farmstead to the west of Bellendean and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Robertson Parish. William Little ‘in thornyclych’ is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendean Burn. The stream called ‘Thorniecleuch Burn’ is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornyaugh (thör-nee-hawch, -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by Robert Scott in 1738 and Robert Laidlaw was there in 1741. John Hume was there in 1781–85 and was tenant in 1797. Peter Hume was there in 1795. (It is ‘Thornyaugh’ in 1738 and 1741 and ‘Thornihall’ in 1781 and 1785; also written ‘Thorny Hall’ and ‘Thorniehall’, perhaps erroneously).

Thorterdykes (thör’t-ur-, thor-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes’; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thör’t-ur-diks-rōd-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.

Thorter Villa (thör’-vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdykes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud (thör’t-ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on Blaen’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

thouch (thowch) adv., conj., poet. though – ‘Thouch ane host shud encame agayne me, my hairt sallna feär …’ [HSR], ‘Thouch the Lord be hie, nathese heth he respeck untill the lawlie’ [HSR].

thouch (thowcht) pp., arch. thought, n., poet. a thought – ‘When I tak’ a thouch o’ thy heævens …’ [HSR], ‘I hae taen serious thouch o’ the dayes o’ auld …’ [HSR], ‘Nae gowd or jewels Salome sought, To silks and satins she gied nae thouch!’ [WL] (also written ‘thowcht’; cf. thocht and thowt).

thoun see thoom

thousant see thoosant

thow (thow) n., arch. a thaw, state of thawing – ‘Thon plew’d field ’ll be a perfec’ champ whan
the thow sets in’ [GW], ‘... ti gar aa the trauchles an the fashes gang leike the snaw off the deike in a thow’ [ECS], v., arch. to thaw – ‘He shook the frost froe his chatterin’ wing, Syne thow’d his taes, and began to sing’ [JT] (also written ‘thowe’; from Mediaeval English).

Threepheid (threep-heed) n. Threephead, former farmstead near Stinty Knowes, also known as ‘Clatterin’ Brows’ – ‘. . . a very notable swinging at a place called Threephead or Clatterin’ Brows, near Stinty Knowes, when one of the party, being sent to Hawick to fetch a fiddler . . . ’ [JAHM] (it is possibly the same as ‘Threep Heid’ further to the north).

Threep Heid (threep-heed) n. Threep Head, one of the hills on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, between Cringie Law and Esdale Law. It reaches a height of 347m and has Threephead Moss to the east. A farmstead there was where James ‘Locie’, James Watson and Alexander Nichol were recorded in the 1770s, Andrew Hogg in 1781–87, William Miller in 1795–98 and John Cavers in 1808 (the first element derives from the Old English ‘threapian’, meaning ‘disputed’).

threeple (threep-pul) adj., arch. triple – ‘There, at the yeh hand, tooered the threeple Eeldons . . . ’ [ECS].

Threepridge (threep-rij) n. former name for an area in or near Hawick Common Moor, the precise location of which is not now known. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants (recorded as ‘Threapridge’; the name probably derives from the Old English for ‘the disputed ridge’).

Threepwud (threep-wud) n. Threepwood, location roughly between Galashiels and Lauder. It was combined with Newhouse in the 1678 county valuation (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘threapian wudu’, meaning ‘disputed wood’, and is recorded in the Dryburgh Charter Book as ‘erat in litegio’).

It is played in a different manner in Teviotdale. Two stand together, facing each other, having their hands clinched, and lifted above their breath, so as to form an arch. Under this perhaps twenty or thirty children pass, holding each other by their clothes. When all have passed save one, the arms of the two, like a portcullis, fall down and detain this individual as prisoner. He, or she, is asked in a whisper, ‘Will ye be Tod or Fern-buss?’ If Tod is the answer, the person takes one side, and must wait till all are caught one by one. This being done, the Tod’s draw one way, and the Ferns another, the two candidates still keeping hold of each other’s hands; and he, who can draw the other and his party to the opposite side of the street, and separate their hands gains the victory’ [JoJ].

Thursdi (thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thurs-die’; cf. the older Thursdai).

the Thursdi (thu-thurz-di) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonial singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farm-house at St. Leonards and a ride around the race-course at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘Bg Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after the ‘Hut’ and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900–04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mor-neen-chais) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursday morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Back-damgate, but at 6 m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipknowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farm-house while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farm-house and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilmuir field to the Moor, where they ride round the race-course, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhaughhill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount... and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the Town Hall. There the Principals dismount and the Flag is displayed from the balcony awaiting the Colour Bussing in the evening.

the Thursdi Night Chase (thu-thurz-di-ni’-chás) n. name often used for the Chase at the Nipknowes on the Thursday evening before Common Riding week, officially called Orderin the Curdis an Cream.

the Timpa Witter

the Timpa Witter (thu-ti-NU-wi'-ur) n. small river that rises near the border with Dumfries & Galloway and flows about 6 miles roughly north to join the Ettrick Water at Ramsaycleuch – ‘Then a murmuer wakes in the heath and fern, And the fairies gather, unseen of men, Riding up from the Rankleburn And trooping down from the Teema Glen’ [WHO] (it is ‘Tymeye’ in 1235/6 and ‘Temay’ in 1415; ‘Timo B.’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Timbersidemill (tim-bur-sid-mil) n. former name for Scawnmill, a cottage in the north of the old part of Wilton Dean. It was once a corn mill, distinct from Deam Mill. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls record ‘Thomas Miller and John Bue wt an kline betuixit thm’ there; Andrew ‘Audisone’ was also recorded there, among the poor of Wilton Parish. Francis Scott was there in 1697. John Cairns was there in 1721 and James Scott in at least 1721–27. John Scott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 (it was ‘Timbersydemilne’ in 1694, ‘Timerside miln’ in 1721, ‘Timbersyd miln’ in 1727, ‘Timber Syd mill’ in 1747 and ‘Timbersidemiln’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

time (tim, tím) n. time, a specific time such as for eating or feeding livestock – ‘It’s horse-time, cow-time’ [GW] (note the pronunciation with the soft i in phrases such as ‘tei time’ or ‘yon time’; also sometimes spelled ‘teime’ to emphasize the pronunciation).

time aboot (tim-u-booo’) adv. alternately, by turns, turn and turn about – ‘….Sure, time about is but fair play, His Highness syne maun now obey’ [RDW], ‘As o’ canna gie away thre the shoop thegither, oo’v duist aye ti taik oor hoald-iyads teime aboot’ [ECS] (cf. the more common turn aboot).

timously (ti-mis-lee) adv., arch. punctually, early – ‘….to attend their respective posts on ye day following, without and within ye church, and to be timeously thereat’ [PR1717], ‘And finding that they have lost considerably through their not lifting the annual rents timeouslie …’ [PR1724] (there are spelling variants).

Timpendean (tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is sur-rounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. The Laird of Timpendean was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpeandean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been inherited in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities. Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tympynden’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tympyndean’ and ‘Tympanedene’ in 1504, ‘Timpenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympenden’ in 1545, ‘Tempandeane’ in 1551, ‘Tympyndane’ in 1557, ‘Timpenden’ in 1584/5, ‘Timpandeane’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tempandeane’ in 1600, ‘Tempandeane in 1655, ‘Timpendeine’ in 1680, ‘Timpingdean’ in 1714, and ‘Timpintine’ in 1739; it is ‘Timpendeine’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858).

Tindall (tin-dal) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tyndale’.

tine (tin) v., arch., poet. to lose, suffer loss, mislay, forget – ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tynie my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tynie the waye’ [JTe], ‘... Or find a midge ’mang dockens tyned, An’ darkness fa’in’’ [JoHa], ‘I gat ane frae the priest, nor is it tyn’d yet, Sae lang time syne, guidfaith! I dinna mid o’’ [JoHa], ‘Their love for thee they never tine Thou bonnie Border toon’ [RH], ‘The mither tongue, what Scottish heart Its memory wad tynie? The lightsome days o’ happy years, The blinks o’ langsyne’ [JT] (also written ‘tyne’).

tink (tink) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahint them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also gypsy).

Tinkers’ Knowe (ting-kurz-now) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m.

tinkerler (tingk-lur) n., arch. a tinker, metalworker, itinerant peddlar – ‘And on 4th july of the same year a tinkler is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language to the two present baylyeas ... ’’ [DMW].

the Tinkler (thu-tink-lur) n., arch. nickname for John Scott, tenant in Harwood in the latter part of the 16th century.

the Tinlee Stane (thu-tin-lee-stän) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Cattrail. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Hornshole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the westside of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Brown and their children were: Robert; Thomas (b.1677); George (b.1679); Agnes (b.1682); and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’; as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy (probably including the unnamed baptism in 1684). The witnesses in 1684 were George Young and William Purdom. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675 and another for William Bryson in 1680. John (c.1775–1844) son of Robert. He was William Wilson’s first apprentice in 1790. He may be the same John who was recorded as being a constable in 1801. He later lived in the Fore Row. He was there in 1841, with his sister Ann, and recorded as a woollen hose sorter. Joyce nee Cavers, known locally for her beautiful singing voice, making ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ her own. She has served as President of Wilton Dean Women’s Institute and Chair of Hawick Saxhorn Band, and has been involved with the Bright Eyed Daughters. In 2015 she became the first woman to propose one of the main toasts at the Common Riding Dinner. She sings ‘The Fairest Spot o’ a’’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006) and ‘Soft Lowland Tongue of the Borders’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Robert (1672–aft. 1725) eldest son of John and Agnes Broun. He was a weaver in Hawick. In 1702, 1704 and 1705 he witnessed baptisms for his brother Thomas. In 1697 he was fined by the Magistrates for publicly insulting John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, resisting the payment of a fine to the incorporation, and refusing to go to the Tolbooth. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for Janet Bruntfield (wife of Walter Laing). In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Stewart, dyker in Hawick. He was later quartermaster of the weavers himself along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). In 1721 he was recorded as a weaver when he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver Andrew Jardine. He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. The witnesses in 1704 were Walter Purdom (surely related to his wife, perhaps her brother) and carrier John Aitkin. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also Beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1791 in a letter preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection. In 1796 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for Adam Thorburn and in 1797 another for James Mein. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1804 and 1811. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw’ [WiS]. Robert (19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was a weaver like other members of his family. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704), a daughter; Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). The witnesses in 1702 included his brother Robert, in 1704 were his brother Robert along with merchant Robert Brown and in 1705 were Robert again along with Adam Brown ‘head-hous elder’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Kersel in 1720. In 1719 he married Janet Liddell, who was 'servant to ye Lady Burnfoot'. Their children included: Isobel (b.1720); and Euphan (b.1725). The witnesses in 1720 were Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Robert Scott of Burnhead. Walter 'Watt' (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale. He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional 'Watt Tinlinn' in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate – 'If I cannot sew', retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to the saddle, 'if I cannot sew I can yerk' [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlin of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), 'Rob the Naig'; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1737 baptism of his son Robert were merchant William Tudhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter 'Wat' (b.1767) son of 'Rob the Naig' and brother of 'Wull the Naig'. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his 'angry word, like his father's, was quickly followed by a blow'. He liked to claim the it was his 'forfadder yat fetched the flag off Flowden Field'. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw in 1796. William 'Wull the Naig' (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of 'Rob the Naig', and was a cousin of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. He may have been Beadle at St. Mary’s for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of 'Naig, Naig' or 'splonsters'. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as ‘Will the Nag’ in the death register (also ‘Tindlin’, ‘Tinlan’, ‘Tinline’, ‘Tinling’, ‘Tinlinn’, ‘Tynlin’, ‘Tyntine’ and other variants).

Tinnis (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show ‘Old Tinnis’ and ‘Tinnis Farm’. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King’s flocks in 1502. Alexander, Lord Home, had a charter for the lands in 1512. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. In 1551 the lands were inherited by Alexander, Lord Home from his father, George, Lord Home and in 1564/5 there was a decree by the Lords of Council that those inhabiting the lands remove themselves, namely the Stewarts and Pringles, as well as their tenants. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries; there was a letter of reversion between the Pringles and Homes regarding these lands in about 1606. Thomas Scott ‘callit of West Tyneis’ was in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1617. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written ‘Tinneis’, ‘Tinnes’, ‘tynis’, ‘Tynnes’ and variants, as well as ‘Tunnies’, ‘Tymmes’, etc.; the origin may be the Cumbric ‘din’ for ‘fort’ or ‘refuge’).

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Over and Neather Tyneisburne’ are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is ‘Tenissburn’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1580, ‘Tynesiburne’ in 1599 and ‘Tyneisburne’ in 1605).

Tinnis Burn (ti-nis-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows roughly south-east to join the Liddel near Burnmouth (it is ‘Tunnies burn’ in 1718).

Tinnis Burn see Tinnis Witter

Tinnisburnfit (ti-nis-burn-fit) n. former farmstead in lower Castleton Parish, on the north side of the Tinnis Burn, where it meets the Liddel Water (it is marked ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnisburnheid (ti-nis-burn-heed) n. former farm in Liddesdale, presumably on the Tinnis Water. It is ‘Tynneisburnheid’ in 1632 when Tinnis Hill (tii-nis-hil) n. hill south-west of Newcastle, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway. It reaches a height of 404 m, has a triangulation pillar and some remains of ancient cairns, sheepfolds and terraces. A wooden bowl found there, possibly neolithic, is in the Museum. There are cairns and standing stones to the south of the hill. The lands there were formerly a farm, valued at 6 pounds in 1541, and vacant at that time. There is another Tinnis on the Yarrow (including Tinnis Farm and Old Tinnis), another in Southdean Parish, east of Chesters (with an ancient settlement) and one more (with an ancient castle), near Drumelzier, between Peebles and Biggar – ‘High Tinnis is crested with flame of yore, And flings its broad glare down the Solway’s red tide’ [Fi] (it is ‘Tyneshill’ in 1541; it is ‘Tinnis hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinnis Hill (tii-nis-hil) n. another name for Hoodie’s Hill in Southdean Parish. The fort on the east side is so recorded in the R.C.A.H.M.S. listings, and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Tinnis Witter (tii-nis-wi’ur) n. Tinnis Water, also known as Tinnis Burn, stream that rises on the eastern slopes of Tinnis Hill and meets the Liddel near Kershope. It is said to have once been heavily wooded and ‘the residence of freebooters’ – ‘Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow: To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now’ [WL] (it is ‘Tyneshill’ in 1541; it is ‘Tinnis hill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is also marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Tinniswood (tii-nis-wood) n. T. (19th/20th C.) composer of the piano tunes ‘Cornet’s Lancers’ and ‘Cornet’s Schottische’. He also organised a local orchestra in the early 20th century.

Tinniswud (tii-nis-wud) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Tenaswd’ in the c.1376 rental roll of the area. They were there valued at 9 merks, ‘Tynneswoodgren’ is listed in 1541, with a value of 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. It must have been somewhere on the Tinnis Burn, but the precise location is unknown.

tint (tin) adj., pp., arch. lost, mislaid, forgotten – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tint’ [inscription at 25 High Street, and at the Text House in Denholm], ‘…and they could come to nae other conclusion, than that it had tint its companion’ [LHTB], ‘For Sense she now has drawn the cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa], ‘Some’s tint a hat, an’ some a plaid, An’ some lae tint their siller’ [JoHa], ‘I hae gane astraye like ane tint cork, An’s tint the art o’ thinkin’’ [JoHa].

tipe-yill (tip-yil) n., arch. beer drawn through a tap from a cask, draught ale – ‘Mor yeal 3 and tipe yeal …46d.’ [1691/HAST1905].

Be faithful trustees ...’, while the Right- and Left-hand men get ‘They are Jolly Good Fellows’. The toast to the memory of Drumlanrig is always pledged in solemn silence. Other toasts might include ‘the Provost’, ‘the Council’, ‘the Lasses’, ‘Absent Teries’ and ‘Safe Oot, Safe In’. Dinners typically end with ‘Cornet’s Up’.

tobacci (to-baw-ki) n. tobacco, plants of the genus Nicotiana, brought back from the New World from the 16th century and prepared for smoking or taking as snuff, originally believed to have remarkable medicinal properties. Like elsewhere in Europe, social customs were to change utterly with the arrival of these dried leaves. The first record in Hawick is in 1652 – ‘Persewit be John Scott, merchant, for payment to him of £6 10s. worth of tobbacco pypis, broken be him in carrying of thame out of Edinburgh’ [BR1652] (also bacci).

Tod (tod) n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as liferenter of the lands of Langnewton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-duties from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Woflelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote ‘The obligation of civil rulers to establish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God’ (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Todd).

Todcleuch see Todscleuch
Todd (tod) n. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew’s Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as ‘Miss Todd’, she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.) stationmaster at Stobs in the 1860s. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. He seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. His surname is recorded as ‘Tode’. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for ‘Ker’, who was a clergyman there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish teinds (formerly spelled ‘Tod’ and ‘Tode’).
toddie (to-dee) n., arch. a round scone, savoury pancake – ‘They now maun drap their teas and tododies, An’ wheaten bread’ [JoHa], toddie scone (to-dee-sköin) n., arch. a small, round scone – ‘... an old lady called Porter stayed in the bottom flat and sold pies and toddie scones’ [JRa] (see also scone and toddie).
toddle (to-dul) v. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily – ‘Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle’ [JR], ‘The bales o’ guid humour, the bags o’ love fare, The smiles an’ the smirkings that toddle it there’ [JoHa], ‘Some playfu’ todlin’ sweet wee bairn‘; Some lovely youth, or maiden dear ... ’ [AD], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me ... ’ [TCh].

Todds (todz) n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todgiehill (to-jee-hil) n. former name for Todshawhill.

Todholes (tod-hōlz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todholyis’ in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddellis’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be ‘fox hollows’).

Todholes (tod-hōlz) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers, as ‘Denummains, called Todholis’ (or ‘Todcholis’). In the 16th century Helena Douglas was heiress of ‘Todheils’ when she married Robert, 3rd son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. It was listed as the principle ‘messuage’ of the demesne lands of Denholm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside (tod-hōl-sid) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standestanerig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’-ur-grān) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinnis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain. As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1851 it was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the ‘Todha’ near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick (tod-rik) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-rij, tōd-rij, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Laudir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Lauder from there was convicted of reset, commuting with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the superiority of the lands to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. John Hay granted the lands to Stephen Lauder in about 1512; it was then in the Barony of Olivercastle through annexion. William Lauder inherited the Lairdship as heir of Stephen and in 1535 he announced that his tenant William Scott should be ejected from the lands. Katherine Gray had the right in 1538 to remove the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig was cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focis’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). Thomas Cowan was gardener there in 1709. John Hendry was living there in 1710. The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Robert Brown was living there in 1787–89. The estate was valued at £576 in 1785 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjacent farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one
Todrig (töd-rig) n. Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same Archibaldus Todryk who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibald Tothrik’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. David (16th C.) son of Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He is recorded as witness to several documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–44. In 1536/7 he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Stephen Wilkinson. In 1542 he was listed as ‘serjeant’ and in 1543 he complained about a transaction with Simon Fairley. He was witness to a transaction in 1544. David (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He may be the David recorded in 1561 in Selkirk when he made an agreement with Robert Robson ‘in Hauyk’. A tenement formerly pertaining to him is recorded in Selkirk in 1579 and he was a Burgess in 1580 when he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed a dispute between Bailies in Selkirk. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrik’ in 1552. John (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Todrik’. Robert (d.bef. 1537) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1527. In 1528 and 1534 he witnessed documents in Selkirk, along with his son David. Also in 1528 and 1534 he was recorded as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was a ‘special tenant’ in the 20 shillingland of East Haining, wadset to John Scott, Burgess of Selkirk. He was deceased in 1536/7 when his son an heir David succeeded to his lands and money in Selkirk. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todruck, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. Perhaps the same Thomas was a traveller when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1551. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrik’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrick’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelmi Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrik’) in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Todrig Burn (töd-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Todrigg-burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (töd-rig-mill) n. former mill near Todrig farm. William Riddell was miller there in 1617. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 and John Glendinning in 1781 (it is ‘Todrigg Mlyn’ in 1617, ‘Todrigg Miln’ in 1763 and ‘Todrigg miln’ in 1781; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Shank (töd-rig-shawngk) n. former name for a place, presumably close to Todrig. It is ‘Todrick Schank’ in 1581 when it was the location where an agreement was signed by Walter Scot of Goldielands, Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, John...
Todscleuch

Scot of Roberton and William Dalgleish in Crookston, relating to a dispute between Adam Scott in Bonnington and Robert Scott of Haining. Todscleuch (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuche alias Todcleucheside’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todschughside’ in 1797 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todscleughside’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Toddiscleuchsye’ is recorded in 1659 and is is ‘Todscleughside’ in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcleuch’ near Canomic). Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely George Turnbull, Isobel Renwick, John Turnbull, Janet Turnbull, Walter Fairgrieve, William Henderson, Sarah Rule, Michael Renwick, John Aitchison, Janet Scott, Mark Coltart, Janet Paterson, William Grierson, Mungo Brand, Isobel Shortreed, Marion Scott, Marion Brand and Grisel Hall. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithope Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Roberton Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Miller was there in 1703, Walter Scott in 1710–15, John Jackson in 1711, William Helm in 1720, John Stavert in 1720–26, Patrick Blakie in 1722 and John Scott in 1725. It was sold by William Scott of Thistlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Robertson was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763–67, George Colart in 1767 and Walter Armstrong in 1789. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleuch joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as ‘Todshaw’ in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox). Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. James (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull in Robertson Parish in 1681. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Jean Kinnear in 1683 and their children included: John (b.1684); John (b.1685); and Elizabeth (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Scott and George Riddell. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism in Robertson for James Scott and Janet Elliot (formerly ‘Totchaw’). Todshaw Cleugh (tod-shaw-klooch) n. stream that rises near Todshaw Hill and runs in a north-easterly direction to join the Borthwick Water to the east of Todshawhaugh farm. Todshaw Dean (tod-shaw-deen) n. area along a stream in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh (tod-shaw, to-jee-hawf) n. farm a mile or so along the Borthwick, opposite Highchesters. It was along a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 167 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Branxholme Park, Branxholme Mains, Todshawhill and Whames. It was also stated to have some stands of ash and birch trees. There was a William Turnbull there in 1426. It was among lands exchanged by Thomas Inglis of Manor with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It is probably the lands of Todshaw held by Robert Scott in 1463/4, and Robert Scott was there in 1484/5. John Scott of Todshawhauch is recorded in 1492 and Robert Scott ‘in todshawhalch’ in 1493. The tenant in 1549 was Walter Scott, who was one of the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned the year before by a group of English and Kers. William Scott, who resided at Whames was also listed in 1549 as ‘alias callit Wille of Todshawhauch’. Through the 16th century it was held by a branch of the Scotts. In 1627 it is described as paying ‘6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage’. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch’s trees on his park there. There were 11 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Gledstains, Agnes Rule, James Scott, Andrew Cook, Agnes Davidson, Helen Wilson, Margaret Scott, Helen Robson, Walter Hogg, Isobel Scott and Lilias Armstrong. In 1650 John Renwick and ‘Pail’ Murray were tenants. It was part of Hawk parish until Robertson was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690-93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant here in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. James Grieve was recorded there in 1716–23, James Brydon in 1725 and Robert Govenlock in 1727. It was also the site of a blacksmiths in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Grieve was tenant there in the early 18th century (from about 1712) and Walter Grieve (of Branxholme Park) farmed there in the late 18th century, until he died in 1800. The farm was then leased to Robert Scott of Singlie. Walter Armstrong was living there in 1800. In 1841 Walter Scott was farm steward there and the residents at the cottages were Turnbulls and Millers. The flat land on the south side of the Borthwick there is known as Todshaw Haugh, and the hill to the west is Todshawhaugh Hill (also spelled Todshawauch), etc., it first appears as ‘Todgishalch’ in 1426, is ‘Todshawauch’ in 1446, ‘Togehawch’ in 1484/5, ‘Todshawhauch’ in 1486, ‘Todshauhauch’ in 1490, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1492, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1549, ‘Todshawauch’ in 1580/1, 1591 and 1594, ‘Todshawaucht’ in 1581, ‘Todshahatuch’ in 1627, ‘Todshahatue’ in 1628, ‘Todshauch’ in 1648, ‘Todsha-haugh’ in 1678, ‘Todshauch’ in 1692, ‘Toitchah’ in 1694, ‘Todshauch’ in 1721 and ‘Todziehaugh’ in 1757; it is ‘Todshauch’ on a 1650 parish map, appears to be marked simply ‘Hauch’ on Blaeu’s (1654 map).

Todshaw Haugh (tod-shaw-hawf, -hawch) n. flat land on the south side of the Borthwick Water, just to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshawhaugh Hill (tod-shaw-hawf-hil) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Harden Bridge, and to the south-west of Todshawhaugh farm. There are remains of a hill-fort and earthworks on the northern spur. The nearly circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter has been almost obliterated by ploughing on the eastern side. The ditch of the ridge -fort appears to connect with this and runs for about 20 m to the south-west, with traces of a rampart along its inner side. A little further south is a peak called Ladies’ Seat, which is a little higher.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil, to-jee-hil) n. hill above Chapelhill and Todshawhill farms, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.
Todshaw Hill

Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill to the north of Alemoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2½ miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of ‘Totchahill, from the family of Robertoun’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying ‘21 bolls stock and teynd; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, Parsonsage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage’. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Agnes Scott, Euphan Haliburton, Helen Haliburton, Joan Scott, Agnes Scott, John Rennie, Isabel Keidie, Robert Rennie, John Rennie, Bessie Hendry, Robert Scott and Margaret Turnbull. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1689/90. In 1691 it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among ‘the poor’. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiels was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. This is probably the ‘Todschill’ where William Pott is recorded in 1702. John Douglas was living there in at least 1711–18 and James Leith in 1722. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease. The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762, James Scott in 1765 and 1771, James Crow in 1766, Andrew Henderson in 1771 and William Taylor in 1781. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1841 the residents of the cottages on the farm were the Hoggs and the Grahams – ‘The three Scotts o’ Commonside, The Tamsons o’ the Mill, There’s Ogilvy o’ Branxholm, And Scoon o’ Todgiehill’ [DJG] (also sometimes incorrectly ‘Todshawmill’; it appears as ‘Todschawhills’ in 1435, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1446, ‘Todshawhill’ in 1549, ‘Todshawhill’ in 1627, ‘Todschaw-hill’ in 1678, ‘Toodyhill alias Todschawhill’ in 1660, ‘Toitchahill’ in 1694, ‘Todghail’ in 1791 and ‘Todgiehill’ in 1856; it is ‘Todshahill’ on a 1650 parish map, marked ‘Todshahill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is presumably related to the fox; note there is a farm of the same name in Eskdalemuir Parish).

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. William Lawson was recorded there in 1716, James Thomson in 1721–26, John Stavert in the 1770s and Robert Riddell in 1788–90. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is ‘Todshaugh Hillshiel’ in 1771).

Todshawkip (tod-shaw-kip) n. former name for lands near Todshaw. Robert White was recorded there in 1721 when a child of his was baptised in Roberton Parish.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of mediaeval and post-mediaeval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todscleuchside’).
Tofts

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Toftes’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in tofts’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbuls ‘of Tofts’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Tofts’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Tofts’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘toft’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaue’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’ROBERTI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmo de Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Cauers’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (θu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftsholm. It is probably the ‘Tofts’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tolbooth into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaw's, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscote, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hil) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial photography has a slo shown 2 rectangular enclosures, some field banks and some rig lines to the south-west of there.

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hön-sik) n. small stream that rises at Chiefshike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftsholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Tolbooth).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-ge-dur) adv., arch. together – ‘... were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censers, after the tem hour bell was rung’ [BR1702], ‘... the present Bayleyes, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, haveing conveined and called togidder the towne Counsell ...’ [BR1706] (also written ‘togidder’; cf. the more modern the-gither).

toilets (toi-litz) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howegate, the Cross Wynd and Museum. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerdykeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jō) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archæological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2002). A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (θu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of their tolbuith’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents. of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house ‘or under tolbooth’ should be leased. A staircase was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-lined. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof . . .’[BR1638], ‘Item, whatsoever person that shall be committed in ward, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’[BR1640], ‘Walter Scott . . . bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith . . .’[BR] (also spelled ‘Tolbooth’ and ‘Tolbuith’).

tolerat (to-le-ri) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘. . . was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye toun’[PR1717].

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rā-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (tōl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

the Toll (thu-tōl) n. name sometimes given to any of the former tolls, particularly the Loan Toll.

toll-bar (tōl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers. Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dowmount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).

toll-hoose (tōl-hōos) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Roberton), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll Hoose (thu-tōl-hōos) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls (tōlz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6–8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dowmount Toll (at Dowmount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

tomato (to-ma’i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’.

tombolo (tōm-bō-lō) n. former name for bingo, in use around the 1950s.

tombstone (toom-stān) n. a tombstone – ‘…but also named on the family tombstone in Duns Kirkyard’ [IWL].

tome (tōm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS] (also written ‘toam’; cf. taw).

Tomes (tōmz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (??–) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed (tōm-sko’-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomsclotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Clerlandis, Robsteid, Cranewat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hall-rule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of Denesyde, its former name for the Tongue-roots. ‘A hev hed a richt took o woark’ [ECS]. As Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

took (took) n., arch. a tuck, pleat, a tug, pull, an excess of food or work, surfeit – ‘A’m deed-tield: A hev hed a richt took o woark’ [ECS].

toom (toom) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘But, let me tell ye, gin yer pouch be toom, sirs …’ [JoHa], ‘Toom as a teapot newly dreepit, Ae single plack, or I’ll be wheepit!’ [JoHa], ‘…Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket ower his toom ribs …’ [JEDM], ‘He was tired and wat and the big creel was toom’ [UB], ‘We view them now baith toom and bare Wi’ empty pouches’ [RF], ‘…Leaving the toom shafts o’ the trap To mock his fuddled ee’ [WL], not running, idle – ‘A stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS], v., arch. to empty, particularly a drinking glass – ‘Ane faster than another strives, In tooming the pliskie – Will toom’d this night’ [JoHa], ‘An’ aye we ca’d the ither cog, An’ toom’d the reamin’ horn!’ [JT] (also spelled ‘toun’, ‘tume’; see also tuim, etc.).

toon (toon) n. a town – ‘There came a queer bodie unto oor toon …’ [JoHa], ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘…Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’ [TC], ‘…On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the toons following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses’ [PR1717], adj. relating to the town – ‘…that no other toune or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh …’ [BR1699], ‘But the toum-clock cheery chimes owre a’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toun’).
the Toon Book  (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates’ Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – ‘...quhiliks premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toun-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641].

toon clerk  (toon-clerk) n. town clerk, an official appointed as secretary to a town council, keeping records and performing administrative duties – ‘Item, whatsomever personnes gevis unrevrent language to the bailies, minister or towe-clerk, sal pay £10 efter tryal ...’ [BR1640], ‘...for calling Gilbert Watt, Toun-Clerk, ane suckler, and for other injurious words’ [BR1650].

the Toon Clerk  (thu-toon-klerk) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgesses every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was ‘Hew Counston’ or ‘Cowston’ in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing ‘Town Book’, recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records.

the Toon Council  (thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quarter-masters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

toon end  (toon-end) n., arch. part of a town, neighbourhood – ‘...For weel I ken’d ‘bout yon toon end I’d mony a glowerin’ foe’ [WaD].

the Toonfit Kirk  (thu-toon-fi’-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastle, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

the Toon Guaird  (thu-toon-gär’d) n. another name for the Watch.

the Toon Hall  (thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. It itself...
replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. It contains the Council offices, as well as the old Council Chambers, the Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. It is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building. Outside is a datum level of 352.9 ft elevation marked and another plaque commemorates the former site of the South Port – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toone head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chester. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1699.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pör’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-töl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed. Those filling the appointment included: William Palmer (recorded in 1707); Adam Hobkirk (recorded in 1713); Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1720–c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (from at least 1800); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – ‘About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scott was Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon Hoose (thu-toon-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell (at a cost of £24, 14s.), to complement the one at St. Mary’s in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Scilders Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch (‘tacksman of his Grace’s customs’); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the ‘Oyes door’ and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li'-ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying ‘stent nor lott’. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer’s Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ô-rool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are is now no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnbull et Andree alias David Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowlle’ burned by John Musgrave’s men in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562 as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside and Holihouse on the west. It is probably where Jock Tait ‘in the toon of Halroule’ was recorded in 1586/7. ‘Gibbon wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Elliott to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of ‘Over or Outer Halrule’. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as ‘North Town-o’-Rule’, referred to by locals as ‘Drythropple’, and renamed ‘Heathfield’ for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called ‘Dobie’ or ‘Dubbie’, and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toon o’ Roull’ and variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowle’ in 1535 and ‘Toon of Roull’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Toon of Roull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Toon-o-Rule Burn (toon-ô-rool-burn) n. Town-o’-Rule Burn, stream, running to the north-west of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pi-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was also synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing through the town after the fair; it is recorded that he played the ‘great pipe’, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Fouller’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantyne in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810; however, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. John Halliday wrote a poem ‘Davie’s Dead’, published in 1847, which appears to be about a piper. The Common Riding Procession of 1894 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes ‘and the pipers’. ‘Hawick Pipe Band’ traces its roots to 1937 – ‘The town’s piper, for his not revelling, on going on the fair not playing with the great pipe thro the haill toun, is fined £100 Scots’ [BR1700], ‘...the pyper is only allowed four pounds Scotts to buy him ane coatt’ [BR1713].

Toonrig (toon-rig) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Toonrig’ and on Blaue’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Tournreg’).

toonsfolk (toonz-folk) n., pl. townsfolk, townpeople – ‘No’ sae lang syne a guid when o’ the toonsfolk didna’ hesitate tae condemn the annual festival wi’ a’ the invectives they could command’ [BW1939].

toonsmen (toonz-men) n., pl. townsman – ‘I canna schule mysel’ to fit Wi toonsmen, drawn sae keen the bricht Upon each other’s avarice’ [DH].

toon’s officer (toon-o-fee-sur) n., arch. an officer of a burgh – ‘...and James Olifer, town officer, playing before him’ [PR1718], ‘Rob Tinlin whae was the toon’s officer an the pairish bea’dale’ [HEx1965] (see Burgh Officer).

the Toon’s Purse (thu-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.

the Toon Steel-yaird (thu-toon-steel-yard) n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was ‘collector’.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thu-toon-sub-skrip-shin-purs) n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thu-toon-tre-shoo-rur) n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others. The first record of the election of a person to this office in in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailies, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer’s books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’ (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S. Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; George Gass, early 1900s.

toonty (too’-ee, too’n-ee, toon-tee) n. twenty – ‘if ee’re no in bed be the time A coont ti toonty...’, ‘Look ... Owre yonder, D’ye see him? Teh, toonty pund, I’m shair. Fish rinnin, fish rinnin Enough and to spare!’ [DH], ‘...an oot o’ the toonty-fower entered the wunner was Dick Wricht threel Langtoon’ [BW1974], ‘Last night A hed a dream, And wi’ this A end ma ditty, It was toonty year frae now, Hawick hed been renamed Safeway City’ [IW], ‘Teribus is an amazing piece o wurk, toonty fower versus o pure poetical genius ...’ [IHS] (cf. the rarer toanty).

toor (toor) n. a tower – ‘Grey are the stanes o’ Drumlanrig’s toor o’ the Border’ [IWS], v. to tower – ‘There, at the yeh hand, toovered the threeple Eeldons ...’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘toorer’, ‘toore’, ‘touer’ and ‘tour’).

the Toor (thu-toor) n. popular name for Drumlanrig’s Toor, for centuries the most imposing building and de facto geographical centre of Hawick. The word is also used generally for this area of Hawick (also spelled ‘Too’er’ etc.).

Toor (toor) n. former name for Spittal Toor (also written ‘Tour’; also see Tower).

the Toor Burn

the Toor Close

_toor-klôs_ n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.

Toordykeside

Toor Dykeside

_toor-d k-s d, tow-ur-d k-s d_ n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed. The wall along by the Slitrig was mostly swept away in the flood of 1846 – ‘And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside’ [JCG] (sometimes the ‘Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly ‘Toor-gate-side’; it is ‘Tower Dyke side’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Toorgateside

the Toor Hotel

_too-ru-h ô-tel_ n. Drumlanrig’s Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as the ‘Tower Inn’. This phase of the building’s history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onstead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site). The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

the Toor Inn

_too-ri-in_ n. usual name for the Toor Hotel in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The first landlord was Michael Stevenson, from 1773, followed by Robert Armstrong for about a decade. William Brown (‘Billy’, d.1839) was landlord in the early part of the 19th century, then John Fenwick (with William Crozier as long time hostler) and later Frank Fenwick. The landlord farmed some land up the Wellogate and had some space for stabling where the Con Club was later built. A coachhouse for the inn stood where the Exchange Buildings were built in the 1860s. Wordsworth stayed here in 1803 and the first Burns supper in Hawick was held here in 1815. In the 1830s, being the Town’s polling station, it was the focus of troubles during several elections.

the Toor Knowe

_too-ru-now_ n. area in front of Drumlanrig’s Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its norther side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ eer blethers’ [JEDM].

the Toor Knowe Brig

Toor Mill

Toor Mill
Toor Mill Dam

The building is 3 1/2 stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. There was strong disagreement about whether to demolish or renovate the building, but it was saved by the Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative in 1998. With funding from the European Union rural development funding, Scottish Borders Council and the Scottish Arts Council, it was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

Toor Mill Dam (toor-mill-dam) n. Tower Mill Dam, name sometimes used for one of two short mill lades in the centre of Hawick. One fed Tower Mill from the Slitrig, with the cauld being at the foot of Slitrig Crescent. The other was effectively an extension of the Back Dam, running under the Tower Knowe to power the original Hawick Mill on the Mill Port.

toosle (too-sul) v. to tousle – ‘They’ve crush’d an’ spoilt her brand new cap, Her bonnet’s a bamboo’d, As flat as ony rattan trap, An’ a’ her ringlets tooz’d[JoHa] (also written ‘toizzle’).

tooselt (too-sul’t) pp. tousled, tangled, dish-evelled – ‘...hair aa tofellt an toozelt; collar raandeet, an waaffelt lang seine’[ECS].

toozy see tousie

top (top) n., arch. a tuft of hair, fowl’s crest, upper bushy part of certain plants (cf. tap).

the Top Haugh (thu-top-hawf) n. occasional name for the Upper Haugh, especially the grassy area used as a communal drying green.

top-lookin (top-look-in) adj., arch. stalwart, erect in bearing (noted by E.C. Smith).

toppin (to-pin, -peen) n., arch. top, summit, tuft or crest on a head, peaked top of a hill – ‘The toppen o Ruberslaw an the brows o the Menith Hills’[ECS].

toppit (to-pee’, -pi’) adj. topped – ‘There was the Eldons and then Ruberslaw and the roond toppit Minto Hills ...’[JEDM].

the Top Tent (thu-top-ten’) n. large beer tent near the top of the hill at the Mair, distinguished from ‘the Bottom Tent’. In recent years there have been live bands playing there in the late afternoon and evening of the Saturday.

torffe (tor-ful) v., arch. to come to grief, perish – ‘I’se r¯ ad he’ll toorfel’[GW], to toss about, tumble, dishevel, tousle – ‘Their ringlets fluttered round their lily necks, As if they had, by the effects, been torrentelled wi’ the weather’[HSR], ‘...I am torflet up an’ down as the locust’[HSR], ‘...hair aa tofellt an toozelt[ECs] (also ‘toorfe’ in Liddesdale).

Toronto (to-ron-ta) n. largest city in Canada, in the province of Ontario. Many exiled Tories have settled in the area. In 1921 a number of them gathered at the home of James H. Ross and organised a Common Riding celebration of their own. It took place on 1st July (Canada Day) in High Park, with W. Matherston (who had lost a leg at Flanders) as Cornet and C. Ingles and W. Corbett as Right- and Left-Hand men, respectively. There was a replica flag, which was bussed, pipe music, a ‘smuffin’, Hawick songs, (non-alcoholic) beverages, races, a speech by Alex Craighead (from Galashiels), and all in over 30°C temperatures. Matthew Leydon probably served as Cornet in 1925. In 1926 the Cornet at High Park was Telfer Anderson Huggan, and the replica 1514 flag was bussed by Edith Whillans. In 1927 the Cornet was James Miller and the Lass was Annie Steele.

Torsonce (tor-sins) n. area on the Gala Water to the south of Stow, for long an important seat of the Pringle family. The last Clan Chief was John Torthorwald

Hoppringle of that Ilk and Torsonce, who died in 1737. The mansion is built on the foundations of the older peel. Nearby are the ancient ‘Our Lady’s Well’ as well as the remains of a chapel.

Torthorwald (tor-thur-wald) n. Adam (15th C.) received 10 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branholme in 1491/2. He may have been a local man.

Torwoodlee (tor-wood-lee) n. Georgian house north-west of Galashiels, built near to some older ruins, which were home to the Pringles. The tower dates from 1601 and replaces the one that was sacked in 1568. This was an attack by John Elliot of Copshaw and perhaps as many as 300 other Elliots, Armstrongs and Grahams, when the master of the house (George Pringle) was murdered and a huge amount of loot stolen, including silverware and 17 horses. In the latter part of the 15th century the lease of the farm was granted to the Ranger of Tweed Ward for his fee. It was supposedly home of the Pringle who married Mary Scott in the ballad of that name. The house was used as a temporary refuge in 1681, by Covenanters the Earl of Argyll and John Scott (ousted minister of Hawick) on their escape from imprisonment. There are efforts underway to stabilize the crumbling structure. There is a golf course on the estate. A bridge nearby was built in 1808 and the modern house in 1783. The remains of Torwoodlee Broch (not to be confused with Torwood Broch, near Falkirk), perhaps 2,000 years old, is also nearby; it is similar to the better preserved one at Edin’s Hall – ‘The Leader, rolling to the Tweed, Resounds the en-

the tother ((thu-to-, tu-thur) n., arch. the other, especially in the phrase ‘neither the tane nor the tother’ – ‘…And bids the tother theme try, While th she fans the flame’ [JoHa], ‘…an’, as for the tother – the whisky – aw daras, aw gat ae gless at pairtin’ …’[BCM1880], ‘…An A’d get mair guid yeh way as the tother, atweel’ [ECS], ‘…an on the tother hand – the richt – the road wunds about the Green’[ECS], ‘If you couldna swally the tother half, Though ye’d hed the den-

The weavers and cordiners existed from before the earliest Burgh records, with the hammermen incorporated in 1686 and the skinners in 1694. About the beginning of the 18th century it is recorded that the Burgesses of Hawick included 26 merchants, 18 carriers, 20 weavers, 10 tailors, 8 cordiners and shoemakers, 10 Wrights, 5 gardeners, 2 bakers and 2 candle-makers, as well as glovers, fisherwomen, thatchers, dykers, cooperers, cassayers, brewers, pipers and pedeese.

the Trades (thu-trädz) n. Hawick Trades, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. It was formed in 1946, with first President Jimmy Murray, other founding members being Tom Wright and Andrew Meldemas, and with Jock Imrie and Tom Reid being long-time club stalwarts. Minute books and accounts exist from 1946. The club grew out of efforts in the War years to keep rugby going, with teams from the B.B.’s, local mills, High School and the ‘Combined Trades’. After the War this latter team joined the South District League and Border Junior League as ‘Hawick Trades’. The team used to change in the old Baths, and later established clubrooms behind the Waverley Bar. They joined the Linden in 1963 in renting the facilities at the Volunteer Park. The team has had an annual tradition of playing Welsh club Glynneath since 1956. They were also the first local junior team to tour abroad, at Pesaro in Italy. They play in sky blue tops with white shorts and navy socks. A history, ‘The First Fifty’, was published in 1995.

His ‘Cheviot Chase’ (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern enmity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Hornshole events; ‘Balefire’ (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while ‘Portrait of the Border Country’ is a useful work of non-fiction. He was an honorary member of the Hawick Archaeological Society and Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957.

Trantfield (trawn-tee??) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale, recorded in a 1525 ‘letter of reversion’ between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of ‘Tranty-fit’ etc.).

Traquair (tru-kwär) n. house south of Innerleithen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. The ‘Bear Gates’ (or ‘steekit yetts’) were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is ‘Treverquyrd’ about 1124; it is ‘Tracquhair’ in 1507/8, ‘Tracquair’ in 1527, ‘Trocquair’ in 1564/5...

Trimontium (tri-mon-tee-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 80 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

Trinity (\textit{tri-ni'-ee}) \textit{n.} name for the area between the Bourtrees and Weensland, being called ‘the Trinity Lands’ from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Tarnity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848 because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

Trinity Gairdens (\textit{tri-ni'-ee-gär-dinz}) \textit{n.} Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheathole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it’s hard tae Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate'

Trinity Haugh (\textit{tri-ni'-ee-hawch}, -\textit{hawf}) \textit{n.} former name used for flat area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kilnhill (\textit{tri-ni'-ee-kiln-hil}) \textit{n.} former name for an area south of Weensland Road, roughly opposite Trinity steps, and also known as ‘Kilnhill’.

Trinity Kirk (\textit{tri-ni'-ee-kirk}) \textit{n.} Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and East Bank joined together to become Trinity, when East Bank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and redecorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The organ was installed in 1911, boasting 1,182 pipes, built by James Jepson Binns of Bramley Organ Works in Leeds. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building. A roll of the ministers includes: Dennis Leadbeater 1960s; Lindsay Thomson 1972–2008 (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

Trinitylands (\textit{tri-ni'-ee-lawndz}) \textit{n.} older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the ‘Trinity Hospital’. The same lands were also known as the ‘Soutralands’, since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Boukle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as ‘Soltocroft’) in a 1557 charter, as lying between ‘Ladyland’ to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott ‘in Hawik’ and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he ‘conquest the Sowtre landis in Hawik’. In 1627 it was a ‘three merk land called Trinity land’ estimated as ‘paying presentlie 20 bolls’ and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on ‘his lands and barony of Braxholme and Trinity lands of Hawick’. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch.
Trinity Mills

Trinity Street (tri-ni'-ee-stree') n. Trinity Street run off Weensland Road, named after the Trinitylands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom.

Trinity Schuil (tri-ni'-ee-skil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller’s Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called ‘St. Mary’s’, but changed its name when the new St. Mary’s School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils which formerly existed in Weensland. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects for the new building being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. It was constructed with a raised ground floor to protect against flooding. The former building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915–53 are in the National Archive and other ingredients, fried, or served in a white sauce. There were formerly several well known purveyors of tripe in town, including Jen McVitie, Mag Burns and Teenie Balmer.

tripit (tri-pee’, -pi’) pp. tripped – ‘A neater messin ne’er was tippet, Nor on a parlour carpet trippet’[JR], ‘...But hei trippit in the straw As a wheelin’ maul came roond like a herd o’ kye’[DH].

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hlk-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – ‘Troked, whiles, wi’ smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang’[DH], ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock ...’[WP], ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel: It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’[DH], n., poet. a bargain, trade, deal – ‘...And the feck o’ the trock they took away, Ye wadna hae cairried hame’[WL] (also written ‘trock’; see also truck).

tродж (troj) v., arch. to trade, barter – ‘...Troked whiles wi’ smuggled brandy’[?], n. truck, trade, dealings – ‘...An’ hides ilk wee... bit secret troke, An’ sma’ transgression’ [JR] (cf. truck).

Tron (trón) n., arch. a system of weights, officially abolished in 1618, but in use into the early 19th century, with the tron pound varying between 21 and 28 ounces avoirdupois – ‘Item, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie geir with tronc wecht, sall sell it again in small with the lyk wecht . . . ’ [BR1640], a standard of weight – ‘. . . and from thence bring home to the tonne ane Holland brasen trone, to be ane true and just standard for the trial of their weights amongst themselves’ [BR1687].

Trone (trón) n. probable name for lands within Crook in the Parish of Cavers. It appears to be recorded in a document of 1581 as ‘horreum vulgo muncupat trone et troneland’, i.e. a barn commonly called Trone and Troneland. It was in the north part of Crook (note it is possible that this is a scribal error for ‘Trows’).

Troneyhill (tró-née-hil) n. small hill between Belses and Barnhills, with a farmstead on it. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1536. It may be the ‘Tromnyhill’ listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, but if so is incorrectly listed under Rule Water. Watt and Dand Turnbull from there are recorded in 1576. David Turnbull of the Cronyhill was probably from there when he was declared a rebel in 1581. It was among the lands for which the Bennets and then Ogilvies of Chesters were superiors. In 1788 it was listed as being part of the estate of Chesters (it is the ‘Troneyhill’ in 1536, ‘Trannehyll’ in 1548/9 and ‘Troneyhill’ in 1576; it is marked on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map as ‘Tronehill’; the origin may be the Celtic for ‘house with ash trees’).

Troosers (troo-zurz) n. trousers – ‘Forfochen at the seams As a gangrel’s troosers’ [DH], ‘. . . they taen on anybody in a per o troosers’ [IWL], ‘. . . a wumun can rin fer faster wae iir skirt up than a man can wae iz troosers doon’ [MB].

Troot (troo’, troot) n. trout – ‘. . . And troots that i’ the Tei’ot tipple’ [DH], ‘Mebbe they’ve a’ gien up at last And taen to catchin troots . . . ’ [DH], ‘Now a man that would net bith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots’ [UB]. ‘My bonnie troots ye come ti kil; Ca’ murder sport, an’ nurse yer thrill’ [WP].

Trot (tro’, trot) n. trot, used in the phrase ‘on the trot’, meaning ‘in a row’, one after the other – ‘A got picked thrice on the trot’.

Troth (tròttl) n., poet. truth – ‘. . . Sae weel’s ye’re harness’d, and sae trig, In troth ye sit like oon bride. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘An’ muckle mair I canna name, In troth I think but little shame . . . ’ [JoHa] (cf. trowth).

Trottit (tro’-ee, tro-ti’) pp. trotted – ‘. . . As he trottit aboot on his short bit legs, Watchin’ the rin o’ play!’ [DH].

Trotter (tro’-ur) n. George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiton in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife’s portrait was painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockingmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockingmakers’ Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters’ Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He may be the William recorded in Selkirk in 1856 in a receipt for furnishings for the Charity School. He married Elizabeth Revell in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included Elizabeth, Sarah, William, Margaret and George.

the Trough Inn (thu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockingmaker called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike (trof-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed ‘James Elliot, Shepherd Sept 30’, and a second stone inscribed ‘William Elliot Builder 1820’. Peden’s stone is just south of here.
Troutlawford

Troutlawford (trow-law-ford) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiel may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration ‘The Troutlawford: Hawick Burgessess on the Trail of Reivers, 1546’ by Tom Scott ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawford upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (marked ‘Trouttling Ford’ on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes ‘the Troutlawford’; it is ‘Trowtlaw Ford’ in 1767).

Troutling Ford see Troutlawford

Trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we aft ourseis betr ay’ [CPM], ‘He tends me weil I trow’ [??], ‘But gin they saw him when they trow he’s sleepin’, They’d fin’ him fou, an’, for ye ken what, greapin’’ [JoHa], ‘...And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor’ [AD], ‘But I’ll gie him his gilded ha’ – I trow he’s little skill ...’[JT], ‘They’re some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Siltrig wimples throw’ [TK], ‘Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’ [HI].

Trow (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – ‘Heels up, [he] trowed in the dam outright’ [HSR], to waddle – ‘Lang may you row, trow, guzzle, swatter’ [JoHa], ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; While it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh].

Trow (trow) n., arch. a small flat-bottomed boat, usually with an opening towards the centre, used for spearing fish, a confined river channel (see also trows).

Trowant (trow-in) n., adj., arch. truant.

Trow Brig (trow-brig) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn – ‘...Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town’ [JEDM], ‘...it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS].

Trowburn Cottage (trow-burn-ko’-cej) n. cottage on the opposite side of the A6088, roughly opposite Beehurst, just outside of Hawick. The Trow Burn passes here. In a field to the west is a sand pit, seen as parchmarks in aerial photographs.

Trowhaugh (trow-hawch) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of ‘ane land’ (presumably meaning a husbandland) ‘estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd’ (it is transcribed ‘Troinhauch’ in 1615).

Trow Knowes (trow-nowz) n. farm just outside Hawick beyond Weensland, above Trow Mill. Andrew Nichol was there about 1880.

Trowmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-mill) n. small woollen mill at ‘the Trows’, on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trowmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for ‘himself undermillers & kilns’. James Scott was living there in 1724–37, Walter Stevenson in 1744 and Robert Waugh in 1753. William Ferguson was there in at least 1787–92. James Curle was tenant there in 1797 and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – ‘...The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill, ...’ [WL] (also written ‘Trowmill’, it is ‘Trow-miln’ in 1684, ‘Troumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Trowmnill’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Trowsmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Trow Mill Cauld (trow-mill-kawld) n. weir upstream of Trow Mill (near the island in the Teviot there) supplying the former mill lade.

trows (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for fishing in local rivers – ‘The ‘trows’ were shaped something like this, A. The man stood with a foot on each leg of the ‘trows’, and steered and propelled it with the leister. When the ‘trows’ were not in the water there was a movable wheel attached to its point, and it was pushed along the road like a wheelbarrow’ [JTu] (presumably related to both trow and trows).

Trows (trowz) n. hamlet on the south bank of the Tweed, between Roxburgh Newtown and Roxburgh Barns. It is also known as Makerstown Trows. There is another place of the same name, and also a stream just south of Windy Gyle in Northumberland (the name perhaps derives from the narrow ‘troughs’ on the bed of the Tweed here, although another possibility is the old Celtic ‘tros’, suggesting a river crossing; it may have the same origin as for the more local area the Trows; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Trows’).

the Trows (thu-trowz) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. ‘Trows’ was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’) to describe the general location, rather than the word ‘Hornshole’, this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in at least 1694–1705, Archibald Douglas in 1747 and Alexander Douglas in 1791–96. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie’s 1770 map, and with Trowsmill down by the Teviot at the same time – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lazy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, An’ Cad- don wi’ his bluiddie shears, Fra’ clippin’ o’ his yowes’ [T], ‘Hawick better lo’ed sic needfu’ rows

As cowed the English band at Trowes’ [AD] (often written ‘Trowes’), it is ‘le Trowis’ and ‘trows’ in 1502. ‘Trowis’ in 1511 and 1517 and ‘Trones’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Trows’ on Pont’s c.1590 map, is still ‘Trowis’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Trowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh ‘tros’, which means ‘across’ something, and occurs in other place names associated with river crossings, while another suggestion is ‘trowch’ for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough.

trowth (trowth) n., arch., poet. truth, troth – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me wae’ [CPM], ‘..Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots’ [UB], ‘Thaye stan’ siccer forevir an’ evir, an’ ar dine in trouth an’ uprichtness’ [HSR], ‘Trouth sall spring owt o’ the yirth . . .’ [HSR] (also written ‘truth’; cf. troth).

truck (truk) n., arch. goods, barter, especially used to refer to the goods formerly received for part payment of wages in the hosiery trade (see also trock and troke).

The True State . . . (th-troo-stā) n. possibly the first book published in Hawick, full title ‘The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.’, published in 1783, written by John Young and printed by George Caw.

Turnbull (trum-bul) n. occasional old spelling for Turnbull, now a name in its own right.
Trummel

Trummel (tru-nul) n., variant of Turnbull, reflecting the formerly common local pronunciation – ‘But there’s nae reek i Jock Trummel’s house This nicht – an’ nane i mine …’ [DH], ‘An there’s other families in Hawick caed ‘Turnbull’, an when oo speak aboot them oo caa them ‘Trummel’ [DaS] (also written ‘Trumnie’).

trump (trumpf) n. a trump, the suit chosen in a card game to outrank other suits – ‘that’s a stipeet game if ee hev aa the trumphs’, v. to play a trump or take a trick with a trump.

trumprie (trump-ree) n., poet. deceit, trickery – ‘But that’s the way you men yer money spend, On worthless trumprie, for nae use that’s ken’d’ [JoHa].

trunle (tru-nul) v. to trundle, move along by rolling or spinning – ‘it Easter oo trunnled eggs it the Miller’s’, ‘As the wairp mills trummle roond’ [WL] (cf. trimme).

Truslye (trus-lee) n. former name for lands near Groundistone, just to the North of Hawick, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It was listed in 1535, along with ‘Groundeston’ as when the King revoked a former charter, and so its superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. It is unclear precisely where these lands were.

trustit (trus-tee-, -i’) pp., arch. trusted – ‘Was unco clever, dealt sae fair, An’ ilka day was trustit mair’ [RDW], ‘But I trustet in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God’ [HSR].

try (trI) v., arch. to test, examine, scrutinize – ‘…the cordiners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarikt schone, and what fines they receive, the ane half thereof shall pertain to the town’s use, and the other half to the craft …’ [BR1643]. ‘The quartermaster of the shoemaker trade tried the market, to find if the shoes were all of sufficient barked leather …’ [JW1677].

trykle yill (trI-kul-yil) n., arch. treacle beer, a drink made with treacle or molasses, together with sugar, water and yeast, once brewed by housewives. It was a cheap and refreshing drink, popular up to the end of the 19th century. It was sometimes used in porridge instead of milk – ‘…and he remembered that his old grandfather always had his jug of treacle yill’ beside his porridge plate’ [JeC].

tryst (trist, trist) n., arch. an appointment, rendezvous, meeting, meeting place, country get-together, market, particularly for the sale of livestock (but distinguished from a true fair or market in that it was not generally established by charter). In in the 18th and 19th centuries there was a tryst in Hawick held on the third Tuesday in October, established in 1785 on the land at Thorderykes, also sometimes called the Cattle Tryst. Black cattle were stopped at Hawick on the way from northern markets, such as Falkirk, to southern markets at Carlisle or Newcastle – ‘And fair or tryst aye proves the best To him wi’ a bit braw in’t’ [MG], ‘When the tryst has been set in some lane leafy dell, That echoes the sound o’ the eicht o’clock bell’ [JJ], ‘And can ye be the bonny lass That set the trysts wi’ me! the Tud (thu-tud) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. ‘Jhone off Towdop’ is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and ‘William Tudhoip’ in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-dup) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johnstone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married ‘Gellan’ Dryden, probably about 1675. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723), with baptismal witnesses carrier Robert Aitken and mason Robert Mein. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1798 he married Agnes Scott, who was from Westerkirk. Their son James was baptised in 1799. Alexander (17th/18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1702 in a case brought by John Turnbull for assault. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1741, 1742, 1743, 1745, 1747 and 1757, suggesting that he may have been an elder of the Kirk. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). David (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1536. William Douglas allowed him to grow oats and pasture cattle on the meadow of Friarshaw for the rest of his life. He was presumably a former tenant of the Douglases of Friershaw. He also witnessed transactions in the period 1538–42. In 1562 he was appointed as executor for Janet Scott (who appears to have been someone else’s wife, rather than his), leaving him her goods and land in Peebles. Probably the same David was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who married Betty Miller in 1767, and whose children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrix (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa with his wife and 3 young sons, John, James and Francis. Gavin (b.1807) son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Janet Watson (from Galashiels) in Witon Parish in 1832. He worked as a wool-spinner in Selkirk (according to the 1851 census), and had at least one child, Ann (b.1842). He was listed as a spinner at Damside among heads.

...of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be 'fit to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered luyttering at hame'. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642.

He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army 'in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost'. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). Alternatively he could be the James, married to Helen Clapperton, whose son Robert was baptised in 1635, or the James, married to Janet Fulla, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was 'att Newcastle upon his brother's service and business'. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret 'Badie' in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1718 he married Agnes, sister to gardener Walter Turnbull. Their children included: Walter (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); William (b.1724); and Elizabeth (b.1729), who may have married Robert Balmour in 1762. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Marion (or May) Littlejohn and their children included: Charles (b.1737); and Agnes (b.1740). James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Palmer in 1758. Their daughter Helen was born in 1760. It is possible he was the same James who married Margaret Henderson a year later. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Helen died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Henderson in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother's Christian name given as 'Isabel'; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). The witnesses in 1762 were possibly George Turnbull and Robert Young (but hard to read), in 1765 were smith Robert Young and carrier Robert Chisholme and in 1767 were Robert Leithead and another James Tudhope. He may be the James 'Tuleup' whose use of the Parish 'mortcloth' is recorded twice in 1773. He may be the James who in 1773 witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1767. James (18th C.) married Betty Davidson in Hawick in 1784. James (d.1797) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785-91. He was presumably a carrier, and the same as one of the contemporary Jameses, perhaps the carrier married to Margaret Henderson. He is probably the carrier whose son William died in 1797. His death is recorded in Hawick, where he is stated to be 'late Langholm Carrier'. James (b.1823) born in Hawick, probably son of Thomas. He was a tobacconist and china merchant at 10 Sandbed. In 1861 he lived with his sister Janet, and his housekeeper was Agnes Huggan. John (17th C.) described as maltman in Cavers in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers' servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he (along with Adam Ogilvie) witnessed a baptism for James E.... He married 'mellie' Cowan and their children included Adam (b.1661). The witnesses in 1661 were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Scott. John (17th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1686 he was appointed, along with James Boyd, as 'marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour anent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, beingjoyed to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers'. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was also listed as a flesher among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as a flesher when he witnessed a baptism for wright Andrew Scott in 1704. He married Helen Gilespie and their children included: Robert (b.1693); John (b.1696); and Alexander (b.1702). The witnesses in 1702 were miller James Paterson and Bailie Patrick Richardson. He witnessed a baptism in 1714 for shoemaker Robert Elliot and in 1716 for Thomas...

Waugh (along with fellow flesher Thomas Wilson). John (18th C.) merchant in Selkirk. In 1733 his servant Isobel Wilson complained that someone had tried to drown her at the Cross Well in Selkirk. Probably the same John was recorded in Selkirk in 1717 and 1718, charged with debts and with assault in 1727 and in a further cases for his debts and against someone for non-payment of rent in 1736. It was probably his son who was the John ‘younger’ recorded when accused of assault in 1719 and a claim against debtors in 1720. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isabel Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and William Scoon, servant to Rev. William Somerville; fellow carrier James Paterson and his wife Helen Ruecastle had a child baptised on the same day. He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Isabel Tudhope in 1794 and the John who (along with Walter) witnessed another for the same couple in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He married Margaret Wood and their children included: James (b.1698); Margaret (b.1700); John (b.1703); Robert (b.1705); Isabel (b.1708); and John (b.1710). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Raesknowe in 1704 and was herd at Over Southfield in 1709. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott and their children included Mary (b.1701), William (b.1704), Robert (b.1707) and John (b.1709). The witnesses in 1704 were John Graham (also in Raesknowe) and Robert Riddell in Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was ‘servant to Falnesh’ in 1708. He married Esther Elliot and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel and James Falsyde. Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1730); Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). The witnesses in 1730 were John (who was surely related) and Walter . . . . He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Cur- rer in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was involved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involving the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermediary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret David- son in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Jean, daughter of John Ekron and Jean ‘Dinlap’ (i.e. Dunlop); she died in 1775. He is probably the Robert who in 1768 witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron (perhaps his brother-in-law). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Selkirk Parish. He is recorded in a complaint in Selkirk in 1787. He married Margaret Fairbairn and their children included: Alexander (b.1768); Nelly and John (b.1770); Robert (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1778). Perhaps the same Robert is recorded being in debt in documents of 1813, 1814 and 1817. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Marion Pott, who was from Cavers Parish. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas ‘Tammy’ (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, ‘Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!’ and the cry ‘The fair’s begun, yonder’s Tammy Tudhope’. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobaccoist at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘Hist- ory of Hawick’. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have mar- ried Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion ‘Thor’. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Graham in 1722. She was daughter of Walter Graham (perhaps the Bailie) and died in 1777. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. ‘William Tudopis duelling hous and yaird’ are recorded in the 1562 Barony dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. Bailie William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded buying a bag of ‘Irish happenies’ from the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. Also in 1723 he witnessed a baptism for wright Richard Turnbull and was probably the William ‘Thowdup’ who witnessed another in 1726. He is probably the William who (along with Robert Boyd) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He was elected Magistrate in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller and another for shoemaker George Gardner. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for druggist Gideon Scott and was ‘late Bailie’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Gardner. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1716 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth), daughter of Robert Scott in Drinkstone. Their children were: Walter (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); Charles (b.1722); James (b.1723); Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). The baptismal witnesses in 1723 were schoolmaster James Anderson and surgeon James Scott, in 1725 were James Anderson (again) and ‘Tacksman’ Robert Elliot, and in 1728 baptism were ‘Mr. Anderson’ and Robert ‘Pote’. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that Ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the ‘Hair Merchant’ who died in Hawick in 1808 and whose sister Janet died in 1811 (also spelled ‘Toudhop’, ‘Toudhope’, ‘Towdop’, ‘Tudhop’, ‘Tudp’, ‘Tudwp’, ‘Tutop’, etc.).

Tudhope Hill (tu-dup-hil) n. hill east of Moss-paul, between the Allan and Hermitage Waters, on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 599 m (1,961 ft) and is topped by a triangulation pillar. A smaller peak, to the west, is called Little Tudhope Hill, and reaches 483 m (also sometimes just ‘Tudhope’ or ‘the Tudhope’ and occasionally ‘Tudhope Fell’; there were several former spellings, e.g. it is ‘Tudtop’ in 1839).

Tuesdi (tezw-, chewz-di) n. Tuesday. This is early closing day in Hawick, and traditionally the day for the mid-week Ride-outs (also spelled ‘Tuessdi’; cf. the older Teisday).

the Tufti (tu-ful) adj., poet. ruffled, entangled, mentally confused – ‘But, sir, my brain hath been sae tufti, An’ my puir musie sae corftull’ [JoHa].

Tufty (tuf-tee) n. nickname for John Wil-son, Burgh officer from roughly the 1810s to 40s – ‘…And the folk o’ Hawick were made aware By tuck o’ Tufty’s drum’ [JCG]. Also a nickname for some members of the Thomson family, e.g. Tommy, Cornet in 1955.

the Tug-o-War Shield (thu-tug-ō-war-shield) n. trophy shield dating from 1911 which was presented annually at a tug-o-war contest held at the Vertish Hill Sports. The event was ‘banned’ by the Council around 1990 following concerns over safety.

tully (tu-lee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle
(cf. tuzie).
Tully (tu-lee) n. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’
when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. The death of a child of his is recorded in Hawick in 1824. In 1861 he was living at 25 High street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howe gate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From among you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads waur Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yaud’ [MB]. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repentance ‘in her linen sheitts, and to sit all the tyne of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-leez-mill) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tammie’s Prayer, and thanksgiving for his marvellous escape from ‘Tully’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘...he got ‘Tully’s Mill’ in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JTu] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tully-wap (tu-lee-wap) n., arch. a game involving a chain of children curling around a leader and then all falling down – ‘Tuilylie-wap, a childish amusement in Teviotdale, in which a number of boys take hold of each other’s hands, and wrap themselves round the one who is at the head; clasping themselves as firmly together as possible, and every one pushing till the mass fall over. From ‘Tuilyle and Wap, to throw’ [JoJ].

tulzie (tuul-zee) n., arch. a quarrel, fight, struggle – ‘If it was hot, the langkail gully, Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR], v. to quarrel, come to blows – ‘Syne Tam an’ Geordie had a bout, An’ tulzied ‘boot a hizzie’ [JoHa] (also tully).

tummelt (tu-mul) pp. tumbled – ‘...Whilk dang puir Yeddie’s head agee, Till drunk he tummelt, An’, as oor sacred authors gree, Life’s garden bummilt’ [JoHa], ‘O! Mony’s the mirry mile I’ve raiked, And mony a wainch in hey tummelt’...’ [DH] (also written ‘tummelt’).

tummmle (tu-mul) v. to tumble – ‘...Losh he wammelt and tummled ower on to the floor’ [UB], ‘Wha toss an’ tum’le, wapaut a’ through ither, Until the grun’ they tread on seems alive’ [JoHa], ‘Sweat, pech, an’ stacher up Parnassus’ brae, An’ though thou tum’le, tryt an’ tryt again’ [JoHa], ‘When a’ the world looks cauld an’ grey, An’ a’ things tum’lin under...’ [WP], ‘...Here they come at the spring-cleaining, Tummelin’ oot o’ the derk again...’ [DH], ‘Synnie aff frae his shouther’ll tummle his pack...’ [WL], ‘...And crystal rivers tummle doon’ [WL], n. a tumble – ‘hei took a right tummle doon they stair’.

tummmle-car (tu-mul-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – ‘...Roostit horseshoon, an queer wheel-rings O’ tummle cars, The swords o’ ancient knights an’ kings, Lost i’ their wars’ [JoHa].
tummler (tum-lur) n. a tumbler.
tumshie (tu-m-shie) n. a turnip – ‘oo made tumshie lanterns it Hallowe’en’.
tundle (tun-dul) n., arch. tender, especially in the phrase ‘as dry as tundle’ (also written ‘tundl’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Tungrig (tung-rig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scotts.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.

Tunno (tu-no) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt’s Protocal Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638-51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was ‘younger’ and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as ‘notary in Melrose, now at Hawick’, in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659-70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as ‘porterion of Melrose’), complaining that he held the ‘protocol book’ of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth
Tunny

Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl’s last will and testament in 1633.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903–06.

tup (tup) n. a ram, male sheep – ‘The skulls o’ elk-deer, bison, tups, Fund i’ the mosses …’ [JoHa], ‘A large and powerful tup turned on Jock and attacked him’ [RM], ‘I’m no acquaintance wi’ mealy pows; I was brought up wi’ tups and ewes …’ [JR], ‘Your credit with us rises up each time you turn a stubborn tup …’ [TD] (this was formerly tuip).

the Tup Fair (thu-tup-fær) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s main ‘tup’ market, held on September 20th and 21st during parts of the 18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

tur (tur) v., arch. to turf, cover with turf – ‘…that every inhabitant within the brughe shall have liberty to tur and theik, and sett ane ladder in his neighbour’s close’ [BR1660].

turbleent (tur-bleen) n., arch. a sudden gust of wind, turbulence – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundils) a turbleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinelheuch Moniment’ [ECS] (also ‘turbleen’ and ‘turblin’; from the Mediaeval English and Old French).

the Turf Hotel (thu-turf-hō-tel) n. former hotel at Langburnshiel, offering food, drink and accommodation to travellers. It was opened by Mr. MacDonald in early 1860. Later that year the guests and proprietor were attacked by a gang of navvies and there was an even worse riot on St. Patrick’s Day 1862. It is unclear how long the hotel operated.

Turfy Sike (tur-fee-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Turie (too-ree) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Horselee and Acreknowe, although the location is unknown.

Turk’s Close (turkz-klos) n. popular name in the 19th century for a passageway between 58 and 60 High Street, home of the ‘Turks’. This was a nickname of long standing for John Scott and his family.

the Turk’s Halfpenny (thu-turkz-hāp-nee) n. name for a temporary trade union in Hawick, instigated as the result of John Scott (‘the Turk’) reducing the price of men’s hose by 6 pence per dozen (or a halfpenny each) in 1817. The stocking-makers of the Town levied 6 pence on each man and used the funds to try to fight the imposition of wage reductions. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) and James Scott were arrested and spent several days in Jedburgh Jail before the employer yielded. The resulting celebration inspired James Hogg to recite the following verse – ‘See my dear comrades, turned to ashes, The cursed page that once did fash us, And bear in mind, we once did wish Our persecutors just like this; But innocence should aye get clear – Our bonds are dead and we are here’ [JH].

Turlenbrae (tur-lin-brä) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse and Whitfield, according to its entry on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Henderson was tenant at that time (it is possible this is an error for some other place).

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and Aw hev him in New York now …’ [JEDM], ‘Ee’re denner’s turnin caald’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘…the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘…a turn for the better; …the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour – ‘…ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier was located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torne’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowler-awe’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstains, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnington at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possessed by William Elliot and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 5s 5d, with the other part being Smithfieldhaugh and valued at £15 10s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Elliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfield-haugh; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’; it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but there is no sign of it today).

the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gän-stän) n. standing stone on the farm of Kae-side, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Feild in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (turn-bul, tru-mul) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. In a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeanbank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Serrifdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbells, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeanbank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4, and (listed after several Turnbells) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Greenwood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbells of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gargunmock. He is also listed in the 1506 remission for the same crime. His son and heir William is also recorded in 1504 as a procurator for Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that Ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphaugh was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for part of Philiphaugh in 1509 was surely related to him, as well as Ralph, who held the same third of Philiphaugh shortly afterwards. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Hornshole recorded at the 1493 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing ‘catallorum’ from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pil lage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 36 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Additionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to com pone for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauder; stealing sheep from Glenrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and 'chattels' from Hugh Douglas; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tyndale to plunder from Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley. He was also described as 'in Hornshole' (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called 'the Lady') tenant of Stirches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synton. Later in 1502 he was 'in Hornshole, now in chalmern-lane newtoun' when he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing 80 sheep from Broadmeadows (probably also involving David 'the Lady' Scott in Stirches); bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave; stealing 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 3 oxen and a cow from Muircleuch; stealing 4 cattle from Hermiston; stealing 7 cows from Whitmuir; stealing 160 sheep from Hundlehope; stealing 25 sheep from George Bonnington; stealing 28 sheep from the 'cauldschelhous'; stealing 30 sheep from Philiphaugh; stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood; stealing 60 sheep from Cauldsheils; bringing in Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, stealing 200 cattle abd 80 horses from James Newton there; and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep, a double, a sword and 40 shillings from St. Leonard's Hospital near Peebles. James Newton in Synton and Walter Scott of Howpasley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Headshaw) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave's men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this raid; George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called 'Gabirlenzeis'. There are no details given for the events leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbulls who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the 'Ade Trumbull' listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Branhholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam 'Gaberlunzie' (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as 'Gabirienzie'. He was surely related to Walter, ‘gabirlenze’. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adam's. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhaugh was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.) described as 'of Billerwell' in 1502. In 1502 he was 'de bullirwell' when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder if Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Bonchester. In 1506 he had remission for 'resetting, supplying and intercom-muning' with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being 'in Bullerwell'. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; James was also listed there as tenants of ‘Wolfelee’, and so may have been related. Adam (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Thomas Dalgleish, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided ‘within the boundis of Teviotdale’. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Adam (16th C.) listed along with Gavin in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers (with his name given first), but it is not clear where they were from exactly (the names match the Turnbulls of Billerwell, for example). Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1552/3 as ‘Adam Trumbull of Woulie’ when he had a bond with John Ker of Ferniehirst and others to remain within Jedforest. He is probably the Adam who was tenant in Wolflee (along with Walter) when listed among many Borders men in the remission of 1526 for riding against the Earl of Arran. Probably the same Adam signed a bond in 1557 (along with others) with John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon; he is there recorded as ‘Adam Trumbill in Woulie’. Adam of Billerwell (16th C.) signed a bond in 1557 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, to bring in the thief William Nixon. Probably the same Adam of ‘Bullerwell’ is recorded in 1571 when he had to appear before the Privy Council and was warded. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He may be the same ‘Adam Trumbill of Billirwall’ who was part of the ‘pacification’ granted by the King to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his friends and servants in 1581. He must have been related to the Adam recorded a couple of decades later. Adam (16th C.) tenant in Westwood. He is recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. He could be related to the later Lairds of Westwood. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as ‘Isobel’s Robin’, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as ‘in Belsis’ when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons ‘Hekie’, David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of ‘Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam’ Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He is also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of ‘Woalie and Wowahoalie’ (i.e. ‘Wolflee’ and ‘Wolfhopelee’) in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranston in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam ‘called of the Wowly’. He was surely related to the Adam in Woolee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘sumtyme servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Rafflat’ in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him ‘binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schouderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, quhairthrow his feit rottit fra him'. What became of him is unrecorded. Probably the same Adam, servant to Walter Turnbull of Rawflat was accused by the widow of Mark Turnbull of Nether Bonchester in 1617 of burning the ‘writs and evidents’ of the lands there, as part of harassment of her by Walter of Rawflat. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. He could also be the brother of ‘Geordie in Belses’ listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbulls of Wauchope themselves. Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton’s lands of Appotside and Tythehouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by ‘my brother’ Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a sasine of 1612. Probably the same Adam ‘in Bullerwall’ was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were ‘past fra’, i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbulls. In 1617 he was transcribed being ‘of Bulleroule [Bedreule]’ when complained about along with his eldest son George at the Privy Council; it seems more likely this was Billerwell than Bedrule. John Ainslie, maltman in Jedburgh, complained that he still owed him money and should be apprehended. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedale and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called ‘of Tounheid of Abbotreull’, who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bonchester toumhead’ (i.e. Bonchester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend, Walter Lorane in Gattascot’. He may be the ‘Adam Trumble, called the As [presumably Ass], in Bunchester’ who in 1619 was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor (or the man listed as ‘Ninian’s Adie’ or the one just listed as Adam). Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in ‘…head’, among Bonchester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam ‘Ninian’s Adie’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name was given as ‘Ninian’s Adie’ (so his father was Roland) among several Turnbulls from Bonchester. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. He could be the Adam recorded in Hartshaugh in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men (including Hector in Hartshaugh) under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. He is recorded as ‘in Hartshaugh’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull!) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairlesyd’. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller ‘in Hartshaukmynhe’ when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Elliott’s land at ‘Leisburne’. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to ‘enter’ with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshiel. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshiel in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam ‘in Swansheil’ who was tenant in the other part of Swanshiel, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshiel and Wester Swanshiel on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deceased by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in

Turnbull Turnbull

1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam ‘Clerk’ (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Ruletownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam ‘in Roull’ was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him ‘ane land loppon lowne’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elphinaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (d.1716) merchant at the Westport in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright George Haliburton in 1704. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Bessie (b.1701) and Elspeth (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and innkeeper Francis Elliot. Probably the same merchant Adam married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. In 1716 his widow presented their son Adam for baptism in Hawick, with witnesses ‘student’ Patrick Cunningham and Beadle Walter Scott. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1714. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Helen Nichol in Minto in 1716. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Ettleton. Adam of Denesye (17th/18th C.) last Turnbull Laird of Denesye (also called ‘Nether Hawthornefoot’). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr (‘Bitterbeard’) in fighting with the Old Pretender. As a consequence he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, who bought up all the ‘wadsets’ which the estate was under and advised him to leave the country. Elliott agreed to keep ‘St. Mary’s Well’ as a roadside watering place, and also gave him some money for his journey. He went south with his family, first to Tarset-foot in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, but some of his grandchildren returned to the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornefoot whose son (first name not given) was among those listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. Adam (18th C.) resident of Kilnknowe. His wife Christian Lorraine died in 1762 and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. Adam (d.bef. 1769) schoolmaster at Abbotrule, recorded in 1769 when his daughter Elizabeth married Finlay Stewart in Edinburgh. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children included: Helen (b.1766–1810) tenant of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his grandfather being Adam and great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls and also in 1797, where he is listed as owner of 8 farm horses. He also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same year. In 1788 he married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. They had at least 12 children, including: Jean (1790–1874); James (1791–1854); Robert (1792–1822); William (b.1794), who farmed at Falnash and Merrylaw; Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835), who became an architect; Gideon Pott (1797–1841), who died in Berbice (Guyana); Agnes (1799–1829), who married Pater Brodie; Gavin (b.1800–54); Thomas (1802–81); Helen (1803–79); Betsy (1805–63); and John Robson (1807–66), Master of Works at Windsor Castle. Adam (1760/1–1851) eldest son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was a shepherd in Tynside, but joined his younger brother Thomas on the farm at Grange, on the Abbotrule estate. He leased Midburn (also called ‘Africa’) in about 1823, and renewed the lease along with his eldest son Thomas in 1848. He is listed at ‘Africa’ in 1851, but must have died soon after the census was taken. At that time the farm consisted of 50 acres of arable land, 100 acres of pasture and employed 3 people. He married in Tynside and had a daughter Margaret (who was brought up by her aunt at East Fodderlee and married James Stewart) and another daughter who died young. He secondly married Mary, daughter of John Turnbull, farm worker at Stonedge, and she died in 1852, aged 74. His children with his 2nd wife included Thomas (who farmed at Midburn), John (who married Jane Nichol and moved to Selkirk) and Michael (who married Beatrice Nichol, sister of his brother’s wife). Adam (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Adam from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835) son of Adam and Betsy Scott. Like his brother John Robson, he attended Minto School and trained to be an architect. He was a builder in Edinburgh and died there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His son James Somerville became a doctor and emigrated to New Zealand. Adam (b.1817/8) grocer and spirit deal on the Mid Row. He was at about No. 4 in 1851 and was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Robert, James and Alexander. Bailie Adam (1867–1946) son of Robert and Margaret Wilson. He was a teacher in Hawick. He was also well known on both the rugby and cricket fields. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1880s. He was on both the South of Scotland teams in Rugby Union and Cricket. He took over from George Wilson as the second Secretary of Hawick R.F.C. He also refereed at least 7 international rugby matches. He also acted as Session Clerk to Hawick Parish. He was a member of the committee of the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Unionist Association. He married Helen Paterson (1867–1942), and they had 4 children, including Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) and Helen (b.1895). He became blind 11 years before his death. Adam (19th/20th C.) stood in as Left-Hand Man in 1897, perhaps the only time this honour was given to someone who had not already been Cornet. It is said that he was meant to be Cornet in 1898, but either fell out with the organisers, or turned it down because his sister died about then. In any case he refused to act as Left-Hand Man again in 1898. Agnes (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Walter in Dalkeith. She married Thomas Home, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Breewlands in Rulewater. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. She was probably from the Ashkirk area. Agnes ‘White Ersed Nannie’ (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her. Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as ‘Wull the Bellman’. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861 she was a widow, still running the lodging house. Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalgleish. She was teacher at the ‘Image Garden’ school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater’s 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage. Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbulls. He may be the same ‘Alexandro Turnbull’ among the witnesses to the charter granting

Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited as the tenant at Braidlie in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder was convicted of stealing 15 sheep from him. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant at Braidlie in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. It is unclear whether his farm was the one on the Borthwick, the Hermitage or near Ashkirk. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1502 for resetting Adam ‘howatson’ and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fustheugh and helped the ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levy’n’ in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long and very detailed list of his goods. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for communing with ‘the traitors of Leven’. His brother ‘Blinnd John’ was also recorded in ‘laudoma’. He was probably buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1650, with the label ‘for:’. The witnesses were George Turnbull and Andrew Routledge. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1780, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langraw. His son was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as ‘Brother to the Laird of Tofts’ when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (18th/19th C.) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. Alexander ‘Auld Sandy’ (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bonchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as ‘Carrier & Grocer’ at ‘1 Woodside’ in Bonchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth (‘Betty’), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bonchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97) of the firm Turnbull the dyers. He was son of the company’s founder, John. In 1861 he was master dyer, employing 30 people. He married Janet Armstrong Hume and their children were: Annie Hume (b.1865), who married Town Clerk John Ritchie Purdom; John Elliot (b.1868); James Armstrong (b.1871); and Arthur Rutherford (b.1873). Alexander Dobson (1853–1932) hosiery manager, he was son of George and Jessie Mark. He was cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co. He had both Welloagate Villa and Woodside built for him by David and Peter Dalgleish (Galashiel builders, who were his brothers-in-law). He was a member of the Hawick Archaeological Society. He is recorded as ‘Alex. D.’, cashier at 2 Teviotside Terrace, where he died. He married his second cousin Mary Warwick. They had 8 children, including: William Dickson of the Crescent Cleaning Co., George, law clerk in Edinburgh; Keith; and Mary (b.1881), who married Provost James D. Lawson of Pittenweem. Alexander (b.1867) born at Newton, Jedburgh. He worked as a servant on the Wolfelee estate. In 1893 he married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Little, shepherd at Gorrenberry. Their children included John, Andrew, Helen and Alexander. Alison (16th C.) daughter and heir of John, Burgess of Selkirk. She is recorded in 1544 and 1545 when served as heir to her deceased father. She shared a tenement with Margaret, another heir (whose relationship is not stated). She immediately sold her share to William Elliot. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) witness to a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Turnbule de Driden’, his lands probably being in upper Teviotdale. The Andrew of Dryden recorded 4 decades later may be the same man, but is more likely to be his son. Andrew (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balvayn. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Stephen and John, who directly follow him, or Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Andreas Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is recorded as being ‘of Hawick’ and Thomas of Stouslie was another witness. It is possible he is the same man as Andrew of Stouslie. Andrew (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1490 sasine in which Robert Scott purchased a ‘tenement’ of land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is described as ‘Andrew Trumbull of Stowisle’, which is presumably Stouslie. He must be related to the Thomas of Stouslie recorded in 1488. Andrew (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh as being at Bonchester. George, son of Walter in Bonchester, was surety for him, and he also served as surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Driden’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Midlemas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dryden in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related to John of Dryden, recorded in 1498, and probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew of Dryden. Andrew (15th C.) recorded as being called ‘calvus’ (i.e. ‘bald’) in 1494/5 when he had remission for burning and stealing from Fastheugh, for resetting the ‘Traitors of Levyn’ (i.e. Englishmen) and helping them in a raid on Hangingshaw. The Laird of Whithope acted as surety. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote. In 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while John and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Presumably the same Andrew in Gatehousecote is also listed on the 1516 remission that a number of Turnbulls had for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother William is also listed, as well as Thomas, Patrick and David, who were also at Gatehousecote, and so possibly related. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Bedrule in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. Andrew in Gatehousecote was listed separately and hence was a different man. It is unclear how he might have been related to Thomas, Laird of Bedrule at the time. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolfinhont. Also in 1502 he was ‘in bethroull’ when he served as surety for David, brother of the Laird of Bedrule at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 he was among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolfinhont. He was separate from Andrew in Gatehousecote and Andrew in Bedrule, who were also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Sir Andrew’, chaplain, in 1512 when he was witness to a charter where Roger Langlands of Wilton sold Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was thus probably the Chaplain of Wilton. Possibly the same ‘Sir Andrew’ was witness to a document at Kelso Abbey in about 1520. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and George (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. His son Thomas was also listed. Other tenants there were Mark, Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David and Ninian. Andrew (15th/16th C.) brother of David, tenant of Hassendeanbank. He is on the 1516 remission for Turnbuls and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbuls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d.bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as ‘Andree alias David Turnbull’ in the trial of Robert Scott of Alloa. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruely killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Liddesdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Hornishill’ (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as ‘pretended tenants’ from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be related to other Turnbuls who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Andro’, and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely related. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father’s brother-in-law Patrick Richardson were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young ‘in the Cames’ of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as ‘Andro Trumbull’ and also as ‘Dand Turnbull, sone natural’ to Hector. Probably the same ‘Andro Turnbull, bastard sone to Heckie of Belseis’ and (presumably a duplicate entry) ‘Andro turnbull, bastard sone to umquhile Ekkie in Belseis’ was listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes. He is probably the Andrew in Belses for whom Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety in 1587, as well as for George and David in Belses. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew ‘Spangand Andro’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to ‘springing’ an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbuls he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in ‘Yaton Scott’, listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Rulewater. Andrew (16th C.) son of John of Philiphaugh and brother of Mark. In 1579/80 he was brother to Mark, ‘apparent heir of Philophaugh’, when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Also in 1570/80 he was son of John of Philiphaugh when he witnessed a promise and brother of Mark when he witnessed another proclamation. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, ‘Auld Bedrule’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ‘Raid of the Redeswire’, so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – ‘But little harness had we there; But auld Badreule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Turnbills at his back’ [T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbuls and Rutherfords, claiming that he had stolen cattle from Home of Wedderburn. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbuls (from Barnhills, Bilerwell, Belses and Chesters). Watt from there is also listed and hence surely related. Andrew (16th C.) uncle of William of Barnhills. He is listed in 1584/5 as ‘Andro Turnbull of the Bernhills’ along with his nephews William, Robert, Gavin and Hector, among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Andrew of Howden (16th C.) listed among the Border Liards who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers George and Robert are also listed. Probably the same Andrew ‘in Houndene’ is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1579/80, along with his brother Robert and was a witness in 1581 and 1582. Andrew ‘Andro’ of Bewlie (d.1601) son of Walter of Bewlie and brother of Robert and Hector. He was probably among the group of Turnbulls accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Robert and Hector, among Turnbulls and Davidsouns, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1601 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Bewlie’ when accused of attacking a Bailie of Jedburgh and his son, and later, with his brother Hector, returning to harass the Bailie, with ‘grit nowmeris of thair freindis upoun the streitis and in houssis of the said burgh, awaiting to have assisted thame in case thay had bene straitit’; he was committed to Edinburgh Tolbooth. There was then a proclamation posted at ‘Jedburgh, Hawik, Selkirk, Peiblis, Lauder and other places’ asking for any other complaints to be lodged against him and his brother Hector. Also in 1601 he is listed along with Mark of Bewlie, Eckie of Stonedge, James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect giltly of’; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. He was beheaded at the Market Cross of Edinburgh for his role in the murder of Thomas Ker and George Gardner in Jedburgh. This was part of a feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs, in which 30 Turnbulls and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver. He lost ‘the lytill fingar of his left hand’ in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems clear that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Billerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbulls of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedge. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Stanielege’ when John Riddell, younger of that Ilk was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John ‘in Elscheuch’ complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James ‘called of Bedrule’ (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded in 1618 along with George in Belses when the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that they had not paid the profits of the lands of Hawthornrig for the previous 2 years. He is recorded as ‘Andro in Belsches’ when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Midlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) presumably related to earlier Turnbulls of Bewlie. He married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshiel, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his step-father and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at ‘56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll’, corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the

Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick who married Janet Miller. Their children included Thomas (b.1648), Isobel (b.1651) and John (b.1654). The witnesses in 1648 were David ‘Badie’ and William Briggs. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at ‘Woollie-mill’ (i.e. Wolfelee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hobkirk Kirkyard, the inscription being ‘Here lys Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Miln’. His wife Eliza-...
Turnbull

witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Weens. In 1719 he was described as ‘merchant att ye Damme bridge’ when he married Marion, daughter of gardener James Falsyde. Their children included: James (b.1720); Andrew (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Robert (b.1725); James (again, b.1727); and Marion (b.1737). The witnesses in 1721 were baxters William Hodge and William Mitchel and in 1725 were Rev. Charles Telfer and John Scott. Andrew (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1742 he was ‘Eklar Carrier’ when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew ‘Younger, Town Post’. He was thus probably father of Hawick’s letter deliverer. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Town Post’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). He was also ‘Town Post’ in 1742 when one of his children was baptised. He was additionally ‘younger’ in 1742, suggesting he was son of the ‘elder’ carrier (and not the same as the family of masons). He married Esther Porteous and their son Andrew was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Robert Scott and carrier Andrew ‘Elder’ (presumably his father). Andrew ‘Little Andrew’ (d.1776) mason in Hawick, probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He may be the Andrew ‘jun’ who witnessed baptisms for workman Alexander Burnet in 1738, for shoemaker Thomas Scott and for gardener Robert Kerr in 1742, for weaver John Thorburn in 1757 and for James Dodds in 1758. Perhaps the same man was listed as Andrew ‘senior’, mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as ‘elder’, was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary’s in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. In 1757 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was ‘mason, senior’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. In 1765 he was ‘Sen’ when he witnessed a baptism (along with glazier William) for James Clerk. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed baptisms for mason Andrew (probably his son) in 1764, 1765 and 1767, as well as for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his decendants. He is probably the ‘old Mason’ of this name who died in Hawick in 1776. His son Andrew was also a mason, who died in Hawick in 1810. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Margerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew (d.1810) mason in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname ‘Little Andrew’ on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. In 1763 he married Agnes Deans, who was also from Hawick Parish; in the record he is described as a mason. She may be the daughter of flesher George Deans born in 1735. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (probably his father) and Robert Thorburn and in both 1765 and 1767 were Andrew (again) and George Deans (probably his wife’s father or brother). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans (probably his brother-in-law) and the mason Andrew who witnessed another for William Philip, both in 1777. He is probably the deceased mason whose daughter Janet died in 1811. Andrew (18th C.) married Beatrux Turnbull (both from Hawick Parish) in 1761. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbuls. Andrew (d.1811) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1811 it is recorded that his daughter ‘Menie’ (probably Wilhelmina) ‘Burnt to Death’. He is probably the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Veitch. Their children included Andrew (b.1770). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Alison (b.1777); Mary (b.1780); and Agnes (b.1786). He is probably the man recorded as ‘Anne’, married to Margaret Scott, whose son Walter was baptised in 1772, with witnesses merchants Andrew and Walter (possible relatives). He is probably the Andrew whose daughter ‘Alley’ died in 1776. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Thomas (b.1806); Janet (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1812);

Oliver (b.1816); and Isabella (b.1817). The witnesses in 1808, 1810 and 1812 were wright William Hislop and Janet Paisley; these 3 baptismal entries were recorded together, suggesting that the family were members of one of the secession churches. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosier from Hawick, manufacturer based on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the stocking-maker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. He may also be the stocking-maker whose ‘bastard’ child died in Hawick in 1800. Andrew (1795/6–1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He is recorded in letters of 1826 and 1827 preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wauchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was ‘Annie’, living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was ‘younger of Knowe’. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dispute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cockernheugh. In 1741 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He paid the window tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Huntlaw and in Selkirk. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas’s sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony of Tofts (d.1811) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He is probably the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. His own death is also recorded in Hawick. Archibald (15th C.) part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurd’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald (16th C.) occupier of land in Ednholm in 1535, along with William Davidson and James Hobkirk. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of ‘Howatt’. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. His son George was recorded in the inventory of goods and finances for Mark Ker of Kippielaw in 1579. He is probably the ‘Archie in Hawla’ whose son Gavin was recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 he was ‘in Howa’ when accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Herdmandstoun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavin. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. He appears to have been father of: Robert, tenant in Haulrule; William in Barnhills; Gavin in Howa; Hector in Stanedge; and George. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 on a list of defaulters who refused to appear before the judiciary court. He is ‘callit Unthank’, which is probably the farm in Hobkirk Parish. He may well have been related to other Turnbulls associated with Unthank, e.g. the earlier Leo, and the later Robert and David. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Langraw (16th C.) listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. He is also recorded in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls who were accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was also recorded in 1579/80 in a list of men accused of taking part in raids into England. His caution was the Laird of Bedrule. He was one of those charged to repay ‘Johnne Selby of Twysill tuicheing the guidis taikin furth of Monylawis’. He could be the ‘Archy Trumble’ listed along with ‘Gib Lorreyne’ among men of Teviotdale in complaints of a raid into England in 1597 Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Broomhall in 1759. He married Mary Lamb in 1755 and their children included William (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and Robert Easton. Archibald Oliver (1825–69) eldest son of Thomas Turnbull with his 2nd wife Mary Beattie. He was born at East middle and educated at Denholm and then from the age of 12 at Minto under Mr. Grant. He was said to be Minto School’s second best scholar, after ‘General Knowledge’ Moodie. He became a legal apprentice to George Potts of Hawick at the age of 16. 4 years later he went to Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. In 1850 he became a junior partner with Elliot’s in Jedburgh then set up on his own in 1859. He researched and wrote about the Turnbull clan, and also gave recollections of Denholm, which are related in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’ book. He is buried in the place of interment of his ancestors at Bedrule. Barrie (20th C.) proprietor of the family grocer’s business at 51 High Street. His son John took over the business after he fell seriously ill. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallruie) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. Possibly the same ‘Bertholomeu Trumbull’ was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrix (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called ‘Wat o Wauchope’). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brelwands (in Rulewater) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1768 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alexander Bunyan. His wife may be the ‘Lizzy’, spouse of Charles ‘now in America’, who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1809/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles ‘Charlie’ (1939–2019) born at Crown Lane, son of baker George. He started his 60 year association with the Scouting movement in 1945 and joined the pipe band at the age of 12. He enlisted in the Royal Marines at the age of 18, serving for 19 years and being Pipe Major of the regimental band. He lived in Portsmouth for many years, but returned to Hawick to take over his father’s 2 bakery shops. He renewed his association with the Hawick Scouts and was their band’s Pipe Major 1975–2005. He wrote a history of the band for their 100th anniversary in 2017. He married Elizabeth Hunt and later Frances Scott, and had 5 sons. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Esther were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent. Cock (15th C.) son of John in Tofts. He was recorded at the Justice-aires held in Jedburgh in 1493 when he had remission for stealing an ox belonging to William Rennie (or perhaps Rae), from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His surety was John, who may be the same man as his father. His name is given as ‘Cok turnbule’, but it is unclear if ‘Cock’ was a nickname or a short form of a forename. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford was allowed to compon for several crimes, including assisting and resetting him after this same theft from Minto. Probably the same Cock ‘of Fulton’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing and ox of his. Colin (1975/6– ) played football with the Legion and rugby with the P.S.A. and the Harlequins before debuting for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 19. He also played for the South of Scotland and professionally for the Border Reivers, as well as for club sides in New Zealand, Australia and Canada. He moved to County Durham and works as a kitchen fitter. Cuthbert (d.bef. 1530) recorded as already deceased in 1530 when his tenement of... land in Selkirk is mentioned in relation to lands of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1496. He may be the Cuthbert recorded in 1579 as once being owner of land in Selkirk, which later was owned by his daughter Janet, who married Cuthbert Brydon.

David (15th C.) part of a ‘return of inquest’ for the lands of Eilrig in 1426 and for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. Perhaps the same David was on a return in 1439 for Douglas of Bonjedward. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnburls. David (15th C.) listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicitly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as ‘David Trumbull with George Trumbull’ listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1484/5 for lands in Mangerton, involving the Scotts of Branxholme. 2 other signatories were Turnbulls of Rule Water. He may be the ‘David Trumbull’ who was among the witnesses for the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2 (and possibly the David who received 10 sheep in the will). Perhaps the same David was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was explicitly listed with George of Hawick. He may be the same as ‘David Trumbull with George Trumbull’ listed along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere pledging good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. It is possible that he is the same as David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1484/5. David (15th C.) recorded being ‘In hoscot[is]’ (i.e. Hosocate) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule (probably Thomas). He is recorded in 1502 at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh when Andrew in Bedrule was surety for him (and he was additionally surety for himself), but fined for non-appearance. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigend. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David ‘in bonechester’ was mentioned in 1493 as surety for George Turnbull (there and in Stouslie), who was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether Bonchester, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was recorded in 1502 among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrule and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bonchester was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William’s son Lawrence, and were presumably related. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpool in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid Fastheugh and Hanginshaw. Their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonside. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. Also in 1502 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, including George called ‘Hawick’, Thomas Dunbar and himself. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as ‘Davud Trumbull de Wauchhop’ when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Sclaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnburls and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbulls are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of ‘Howay’, Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Bemersyde and others. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appltreehall by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Bucleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavvin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the ‘Lard of Wauchop’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Holsburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his ‘man and servand’ Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwoodtown, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both with our handis at the peu’. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhope according to a rental roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as ‘Sir’ David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation ‘in Minto’ when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbulls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being ‘called David of Crawden’ in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbulls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbulls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. In 1587 he was brother of George in Belses, when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety for the pair, as well as Andrew also in Belses. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being ‘of the Cronyhill’, which was probably Troneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Troneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as ‘Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill’ in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbulls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Cralinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being in Jedburgh, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. In 1587 his sureties were recorded being Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Andrew Oliver in Ancrum. David (16th C.) recorded in 1593 being ‘in the Watter of Roule’. Along with Alexander in Odlhamstocks and 2
Frasers from the same place, he was accused of attacking the farmers of the lands of Newbigging (perhaps the one near Lauder) and were declared rebels for non-appearance. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other Davids. David (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’). He and his bride were infefted in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He is referred to in reference to the lands of Wauchope in 1604 when his son Andrew’s nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Fowlton’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the ‘Guismann’) and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘Davie Trumbill in West Leys’ when he was listed among fugitives in the Middle shires. He probably came from West Lees in Rulewater and was likely related to John who was there in 1616. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as a farm worker of George, portioner of Belses. In 1618 there was a compaint that he and John Brown were tending the animals at Belses during Sunday worship when a group of Middlemasses from Lilliesleaf ‘unhonestie strak and dang thame and brak their headis, to the efusion of thair bloodis’. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to have his ‘young pearect with ane hett boitkyn; and thaireftir Banischet this realme’. David (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with Robert, recorded in 1643. They were probably related to the earlier Archibald. David (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bunchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David ‘Millionaire Turnbull’ (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryyards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made in India as an indigo planter and cotton speculator. His son was William, who became Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and inherited Fenwick from his cousin. He died in India, during his father’s lifetime (probably 1820s). David of Fenwick and Brieryyards (b.1837) son of William. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1875. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He succeeded to all of the family lands in 1891 (except Palace, which had been sold). He had the house at Brieryyards renovated. However, he later sold all his property and left the country. In 1875 he married Christian, daughter of Hawick lawyer George Oliver. They had 1 daughter and 6 sons: William, who worked in the nitrate business in Chile and married Marie Salmon; David Oliver, a vet in Zomba, Nyasaland, who married Muriel MacKinnon; Margaret Lindsay, who married Hal Worke and had a son who went to British Columbia; George Archibald, who worked for the Cape Civil Service and was killed in the Boer War; Harry, who married Flossie Salmon; John MacLeod MacKinnon, who worked for the South African Forestry Service and wrote for Cornhill magazine; and James, who married Violet MacKinnon and died in East South Africa in WWI. Ebenezer (19th C.) recorded in 1837 as apprentice to James Wilson, writer in Hawick. He could be the Ebenezer whose infant daughter’s death was recorded in Hawick in 1822. Edward (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1493 he had remission for stealing a cow from Robert Davidson in Newton, with the Laird of Bedrule acting as surety. Eleanor (1785–1853) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Bank with her younger sister Jane. In 1851 she was described as an ‘Annuitant’, showing that she had been set up with an allowance from her father. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Margaret, who was probably her sister. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) had a sasine for Gargumnock and other lands in Stirlingshire, along with Janet (perhaps her sister). Elizabeth (16th...
Turnbull

C.) resident at Haining Castle in 1580 when an inventory of her possessions was recorded. Robert Scott of Haining and his wife Janet Scott were her executors, and she left everything to them, except for a gown and ‘paitlot’ to be given to each of her daughters when they came of age, plus a share of her goods, at the discretion of her executors. It seems likely that she was the mother or stepmother of Robert Scott of Haining and hence wife of Thomas Scott of Haining. Her goods (some in the houses of other people) included several gowns and petticoats, a feather bed, a bolster, several pairs of sheets, blankets, towels, cushions, curtains and some gold jewellery. She also had debts owing from Grizel Scott, Lady Borthwick, from William Crichton in Fala, from Patrick Murray of Falahill, from John, son to Patrick Turnbull, and from several people in Cranston. Elizabeth nee Elliot (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, she married John Turnbull of Minto. Her husband died in 1641 while on army service in Newcastle, and her son John succeeded while still a minor. She and her brother-in-law Rev. William of Makerstoun appear to have acted as guardians for the young Laird of Minto; in 1643 she was listed along with her son and Rev. William as owner of the Minto estate. Other children of hers included William and Robert, who became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively, and probably Alison, who married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbills of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked ‘Bessiey Turnbul’ is still in the old graveyard, but her husband’s name is illegible. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth nee Wilson (1753–1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’. She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper’s shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have had 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that ‘when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children’. She was known in later life as ‘Auld Betty Turnbull’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5–1857) labourer living at Whisgills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at ‘Sorbies’ in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847/8–1900), who died at Newcastle; and Mary (1851/2–97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastle. The family are buried at Ettleton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black. Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woolen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister. Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbuls who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Bedrule in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch’s lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. He was recorded as ‘Town Officer’ in a baptismal record of 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He married Elizabeth Gibson and their children baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). The witnesses in 1743 were Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gawen Trumble of the Wowley’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Billerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same ‘Gavin Turnbill in Bullerwell’ listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is probably the ‘Gawen’, brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. He is probably the brother of Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ and also Hector who (along with his brothers, as well as Hector in Barnhills) was declared as a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamslaw. Perhaps the same Gavin was ‘sone to Archie in Hawla’ recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Gavin Turnhill in Howe’, brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in ‘…side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for ‘Kerswell’ in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in Roberston Parish (when it included Hassendean) in 1684. A ‘bastard childs’ of his was baptised, with witnesses John (who was surely related, perhaps his father) and Andrew Leyden. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden's. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden's poem 'To Mr. James Purvis' – ‘The first that tried the eastern sea Was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fann’d by the breeze, Gleam’d golden on the orient seas: But never shall his steps be seen Bounding again on Denholm’s pleasant green’ [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of 'Tammy Trumble' and Beatrix Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashiels and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was 'deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of'. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where ‘the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it!’ In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in ‘Address to a Haggis’. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland's Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, ‘The Recruit’. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of it’s revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in ‘The Recruit’ in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are ‘Poetical Essays’ (1788) and ‘Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian’ (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as ‘Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot’ and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns’ best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as ‘late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city’. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for subscriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared). The project ‘The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online’ was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots Church in Charleston. Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Mary Blake and their son Gavin was born in 1800. Gavin (1800–54) son of Adam, tenant of Hassendeanbank, brother of Adam Ogilvie and John Robson. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became a surgeon with the East India Company. He may have married Isabella Jane Fenwick in 1826 and they had 5 children. He secondly married Mary MacDougall Stuart in 1841. He died on Jersey. Rev. Gavin (1800–32) born at Brieryhill, he became minister of Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1821, and probably remained there until his death. He was certainly still preacher there in 1831. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He published ‘A Sermon on Meekness’ in Hawick in 1832. He was probably son of John, who was tenant farmer at Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a Sasine for lands near Branxholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroul’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who Turnbull (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a sasine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethoroull’ witnessed a sasine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branxholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1479. He may be the George ‘de belthoull’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de belthoull’ served as surety for several Turnbuls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbuls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th/16th C.) infested by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendean) in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. He was deceased by 1534 when his son an heir John was recorded in a dispute with Andrew Davidson in Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded being in Bonchester and also ‘in stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. David in Bonchester served as his surety and the pair were fined for non-appearance. George (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as son of Walter in Bonchester. The entry is after that for George in Bonchester and Stouslie, and hence this is possibly a different man. He was surety for Andrew Turnbull (in the same place), who failed to appear and was accordingly fined. He may be related to Walter of Stouslie, who is recorded in 1494/5. George (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 along with 4 others. Their crime was concealing a trove of coins that had been found in Minto Kirk, but by rights were Crown property. The Laird of Bedrule served as surety for him and for John Sinclair. Perhaps the same George in Minto had remission in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hallrule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roull’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflatt on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflatt; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £10 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbuls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and plunder Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stirches) for Walter Turnbull in Branxholme, as well as for Hector Shiel and for John Sinclair (from Cavers, who murdered John Moffat). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rule-water at the time. George ‘Hwick’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being called ‘hawic’ and living at ‘turri de wauchop’ (presumably Wauchope Tower). David of Wauchope was surety for him and they were fined for non-appearance. Perhaps the same man was ‘georgii turnbule de hawik’ and explicitly listed with along with David (who was probably a close relative and perhaps the same David of Wauchope), among men of

Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He presumably lived at or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Wyndis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) recorded ‘in Tofts’ in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called ‘Muriale’ in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 480 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. Note that Pitcairn appears to have mistakenly called him ‘David’. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remission for Turnbulls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being ‘in Bethroule’. He may be the same George ‘in Bedrule’ mentioned in 1523. George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbulls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George ‘in Bedrule’ (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme had a gift from King James V of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of ‘ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vnquhile George’. In 1553 Robert ‘brother german of the lord of Bedroull’ is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books and presumably his son. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’, who must have been his grandson (although the son’s name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbulls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be same as George ‘in Foulton’ who was part of an inquest into the ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘layman of the diocese of Glasgow’ in 1526 when he had permission to marry Christian Ker, despite being within the 3rd and 4th degrees of consanguinity. This is preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hassendean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. It seems likely he is also the George transcribed being ‘of Bulckwell’ when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isobel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in 1628. George of Standhill (16th C.) listed as pledge for the Laird of Minto in 1553/4. This was in the assurance given to keep peace with the Rutherfords and others. He and George ‘of the Tour’ were to remain in ward in Edinburgh, as pledges for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Hector, Tutor of Minto and David of Wauchope. George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His yard there is listed among the lands disputed by the Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. He may be related to the earlier Andrew and Thomas who are recorded as tenants there. George of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he witnessed a dispute over a sum of money involving James Douglas of Cavers and William ‘Familtounne’. He was also recorded in 1562 when he was ordered to be warded in Dunbar Castle. George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward was his surety. He was also listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th C.) holder of quarter of the lands of Raperlaw. In 1564 his lands there were leased to William Gray and William Redford. George of Chamberlain Newton and Woollee (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was recorded as Laird of Chamberlain Newton in 1563 when he witnessed a notorial instrument between Robert Michelson and David Home of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Blackhaugh (near Clovenfords). There were Turnbulls at Chamberlain Newton earlier, but it is seems that this George no longer lived in the Hawick area, and hence it is unclear how he was related to other local Turnbulls. He may be the George who witnessed a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1567 he was ‘of Wowlie’ when he tried to eject David Elliot as tenant in his 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. In 1572 he sold half of Chamberlain Newton to Gavin Elliott of Ballielee (and later Stobs) and his wife Jean Scott; they complained to the Privy Council that David Elliott’s widow Margaret Turnbull (who is not stated to be a relative, but that is unclear), who possessed the other half of Chamberlain Newton, encouraged her sons Walter and John Scott to attack Gavin Elliott’s servant there. He is probably the George ‘of Vowly’ whose son was murdered some time before 1587, as mentioned in the Privy Council (when those at the horn for the murder were excepted from a respite given to Borderers accused of crimes). George (16th C.) tenant in Catlee. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. He was probably related to Eckie of Catlee, recorded in 1586/7. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Fahnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Andrew, who was listed right after him. George of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) listed among among men from the Jedburgh area accused in 1573 by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst.

He was listed as ‘of Hassinbank’. George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Bedrule in 1579 and 1580. There could be some confusion with John, who was Reader just before this. George (16th C.) of Hallrule. He is recorded as ‘in Hallrewll’ in 1557 when there was a complaint to the Regent about ‘molestations’ by him and Thomas of Bedrule. This related to the lands of Kirklands, Hallrule and Swinnie owned by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, suggesting that there was an ongoing land dispute. He was ‘of Halroule’ in 1561 when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was probably ‘The Guidman of Hallrule’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1571 he appeared before the Privy Council and was instructed ‘to abide in Leith’. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. Probably the same man was ‘in Halroule’ in 1581 when he and others were denounced as rebels for refusing to obey the charge to restore Sir Thomas Ferniehirst to the living of Bedrule parish. Also in 1581 he was listed among 10 men implicated in the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. In 1581/2 there was a charge to remove him and others from their lands for not complying. And in 1583/4 Sir Thomas Kerr had an ‘escheat’ to take his goods, along with those of John and Walter, farmers at ‘Roull’ and Hobburn, respectively, who may have been close relations. He may be the George of Hallrule named in 1587 as one of the 13 main Lairds of the Middle March who were charged to keep thieves in check. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordours’ and were denounced as rebels. He is the ‘Turnble of Halroule’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590, and is the George ‘of Halroull’ listed among Border Lairds by Monipennie in 1597. In 1595 he was recorded along with Turnbulls of Minto, Bewlie, Barnhill and Stonedge, as well as Davidson, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1597 his daughter Isobel had a marriage contract with John, eldest son of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1603, as part of the marriage contract, he rented the half lands of Hallrule to the Turnbuls of Barnhills. It is possible that there are 2 generations of Georges compounded here. George (16th C.) brother of James ‘of the Toure’. Along with his brother he was listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is probably the ‘George Trumbill in Tour’ who signed the 1560 bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He may be the George ‘of the Toure’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551 and who was one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4; he and George of Standhill were to remain in ward in Edinburgh. He is probably the George ‘of the Tour’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. George ‘Geordie’, ‘the Duds’ (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as ‘Geordie Turnbull, callit the Duddis’.

George (16th C.) Laird of Billerwell in 1589, presumably a descendant of the earlier George and Adam. He was among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England 3 years earlier; it was claimed that 200 men raided Doortrees and Stobs, taking 80 cows, 240 sheep, 10 horses, goods and 6 prisoners. The later Adam of Billerwell (whose son and heir was also George) may have been his son. If so he also had a son Andrew. He is probably also the ‘Turneble of Bullerwall’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He may be the ‘goodman of Bullerwell’ who complained in 1601 about Englishmen stealing his cattle, sheep and horses. George of the Tofts (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of about 1590. He is probably the George ‘of the Toftis’ who was ordered to appear personally in 1567 to answer accusations about raiding into England. George (16th/17th C.) younger son of John of Minto. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father and brother Thomas, among Turnbuls and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; unlike his father and brother, he was declared as a rebel for non-appearance. George ‘the Creelman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit the creelman in Crocecleucht’ (i.e. ‘Crosscleuch’) in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton. George (16th/17th C.) farmer at Crosscleuch, recorded in 1602 (and separate from George ‘the Creelman’). He was son of the deceased John. George (d.1601) recorded as George ‘Trumbill in Phillophaucht’ when he was witness to transactions in Selkirk in 1579 and when he purchased land in Midlem in 1579/80. He is probably the George of Phillophaugh involved in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580. He was recorded in Phillophaugh in 1581 when he had a marriage contract between his son John and Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel; his wife Isabel Murray is also mentioned. He witnessed a transaction in 1581 for James Ker in Yair. Also in 1581 he and his wife gave sasine of 21/2 acres of land to Katherine, daughter of Adam Hislop in Ashiestiel. His son James witnessed him granting a sasine in 1581. In 1581 he represented the Sheriff of Selkirkshire and his tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. In 1581/2 he witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1581/2, including an agreement between the widow and son (Mark) of John of Phillophaugh. He is probably the George who witnessed a transaction for his brother Mark in Phillophaugh in 1581/2. In 1582 he witnessed another transaction in Selkirk. He is described as ‘in Phillophauch’ in 1601, when his son John was served heir to his 5-merk land in Phillophaugh, called ‘Bairborisland’. He may have been son of John, who inherited these lands from his mother in 1558. George ‘Geordie’ of Belses (d.1603) brother of David in Belses, with other brothers being John and Adam. He was listed among a group of Turnbuls (led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule) who were accused in 1579 of raiding the lands of ‘Pansoun’ in England, stealing cattle and taking the Laird there prisoner; his brother David was also listed. The brothers were also recorded in 1581 when accused of attacking the farm at Rawflat and killing Walter of Rawflat. He was denounced in 1583/4 for failing to appear before the Privy Council; he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others. In 1586/7 his brother Adam was listed among Borderers accused of crimes and given a last chance to provide sureties. In 1587 Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst acted as surety for him, as well as his brother David and also Andrew in Belses. He was tried in 1603 for a long string of crimes, including: murdering John Hamilton of Cumnuck; murdering William, son of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; capturing and torturing Walter Turnbull’s servant Adam Turnbull (it is said that he had him hung by the feet and shoulders for 13 days, causing his feet to rot off); illegally carrying guns; shooting Walter Turnbull, younger of Rawflat; stealing 4 cows from John Donaldson in Melrose; stealing 6 cows, 20 sheep, 2 horses and goods from David Riddell in St. Boswells; stealing 16 cows from the Laird of Bemersyde; stealing 20 sheep from the Lady of Newton; stealing 5 sheep from George Davidson in Belses; stealing a horse from George Wilson in Langnewton; and being ‘a common briggane and notorious cowmone theif’. He claimed to have killed William Turnbull in self defence (suggesting some intra-family feud). He also appears to have killed the elder Walter of Rawflat, after he was pronounced a rebel for refusing to leave the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses in 1581. He was acquitted of most of the offences, but nevertheless convicted of illegally carrying fire-arms and had his right hand cut off at the Market Cross of Edinburgh. Later the same year he appeared on charges of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his brother Jock’s wife Marion. At the same time he was accused of stealing a horse from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1577, stealing 20 cows from Rawflat in 1579, stealing 4 horses from 4 millers in Jedburgh about 1600 and stealing a horse from the younger Walter of Rawflat. This time he was convicted of all charges, and hanged in Edinburgh, with all his lands and goods confiscated. He is probably the ‘Turneble of Belses’ listed on the roll of ‘Landit Men’ of about 1590. He is surely related to the slightly later George of Belses, possibly his son, as well as the Hector of Belses recorded in 1604. George (16th/17th C.) tenant of the lands of Fulton, recorded in a 1602 letter, which lists 2 other George Turnbulls! He is distinguished with the appellation ‘callit of Crawden’. He was probably related to ‘David of Crawden’ recorded in 1583/4. George (16th/17th C.) brother of Hector of Barnhills, he was tenant in Howa. He could be the George, son to Archie of Howa’ recorded in the inventory of Mark Ker of Kippielaw in 1579. He could be the George, brother of Hector in Barnhills who (along with his brother, as well as Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ and Robert’s brothers Hector and Gavin) was declared a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 men called Grahamslaw. In 1604 he was denounced as a rebel (along with his brother Hector, uncle Gavin and also Hector of Staneedge) for failing to appear on the charge of murdering 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. He could be the George ‘called of Howden’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. He was described as being ‘in Howa’ in 1606 when he was one of the Turnbull clan accused of laying waste to Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605. The action against him was not pursued, although the Turnbulls of Wauchope were tried and Thomas Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George in ‘Howay’, brother of Hector of Barnhills, who resided a tenement of land off the Kirkwyn in Hawick in 1610. George (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Billerwell. He witnessed a sasine in 1612 and was part of a bond with his father in 1619, with John Haliburton of Mertoun. George (d.c.1637) 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope. In 1605 he was ‘tutor’ to his relatives Jean and Beatrux Turnbull, daughters of Walter of Wauchope. He is also mentioned as 2nd son of Hector in a court case of 1606, where a separate George is also listed in Wauchope. In 1606 he was one of the men charged with stealing from and burning Appotside and Harwood, killing 3 men and cutting down Appotside woods in the period 1598–1605. Although he was tried (and probably involved), he was acquitted, with his older brother Thomas being the only one convicted. He is recorded in a ‘contract of wadset’ with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ox-nam in 1612. He held the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) in exchange for advancing money to Sir Andrew. He must have gained a portion of the lands, since in 1627 he granted them to Sir James Douglas of Mordington. In 1632 Templehall and Brewlands are described as ‘possessed by George Turnbull of Wauchope and his tenants’, but the feu of the lands were held by Jean Turnbull, niece and heir of Andrew, son of David of Wauchope (hence presumably a distant cousin). However, his son James renounced all rights to the lands to William Earl of Lothian in 1655. He may have been the George describe as ‘there’ in relation to Templehall in a sasine of 1604. In 1637 he was described as ‘called of Wauchope’ when the guardianship of his son James was given to Hector in Clarilaw, as his closest male relative; it seems likely that this Hector was his cousin (since the record would have stated if they were brothers). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope, recorded in a court case of 1605 in which John Elliot of Copshaw and others were accused of stealing livestock from Wauchope. He is separate from the 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope, who is also listed there, but could be related to the Adam, also tenant of Wauchope. George (16th/17th C.) son of James of West Lees. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he was witness to a bond between his father and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. He was also recorded as son of the Laird of Bedrule among fugitives listed at the Privy Council in 1618. Perhaps the same George was listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. George (16th/17th C.) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the earlier George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603. He is later described in the Commissioners’ Court as ‘Geordie in Belsches’, when he is accused of having stolen 11 sheep from the lands of ‘Rafflett’ (e.e. Rawflat) belonging to the Davidsouns, in about 1612; he was sentenced to be hanged, but presumably was later acquitted. In 1618 the curators of the young Andrew Scott of Aikwood complained that he and Andrew (probably a close relative) had not paid the profits of the lands of Hawthornrig for the previous 2 years. Additionally in 1618 he is ‘portioner of Belsheis’ when he complained about a series of attacks by the Middlemases of Lilliesleaf. Specifically William Middlemas and his sons, brother and supporters fired at the windows of his house in the night, and were only saved ‘by the timely arrival of some country people’, then servants of William Middlemas attacked his farm workers while he was at Sunday worship and afterwards William ‘upbraidit him with mony injurious and reproutchfull speitches, and proudlie and avowdlie appealit him to the combat’. Several of those accused were found guilty by the Privy Council and imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in 1622. Robert owned Templehall in 1647 and may have been his son. George (16th/17th C.) probably son of William and hence grandson of Walter of Bedrule. In 1619 he was listed among Turnbuls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. Additionally in 1619 he was ‘son to the said William Turnble fiar of Badreule’ when listed among Turnbuls accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. George (17th C.) proprietor of Todshaw in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘near Edderstonesheils’ (i.e. Adderstonesheil) in 1684 when he was listed among people declared as fugitives for being a Covenant. George (d.1685) tenant in Birkhill when his will was recorded in 1685. It is possible this was the place of that name in Hobkirk Parish, where Walter and Robert were in 1694. George (17th C.) tenant in Doveashaugh. In 1686 he was fined in Hawick ‘for having seedie and insufficient meale in the market, being about ane gouping of seed sived out of half ane pecke of his full sacke’. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. George (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1661/2–1728) tenant in Upper Bonchester, probably son of William of Upper Bonchester. He is buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard, as recorded on an old headstone there. He was probably related to William Turnbull, miller of Harestane, whose daughter Susan is recorded on the same stone. He appears to have been the last Turnbull of Bonchester. His daughter Margaret married William Turnbull, tenant of Haresthaugh Mill. He is probably the George listed as ‘his sone’ after William ‘in ye midle of ye toun’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; both of them are listed after William ‘in Boonchaster’. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, living at Synton in 1698. He married Janet Scott and their children included Helen (b.1695), William (b.1698) and Robert (b.1700). George (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1716 he gave in a bond of £60 Scots granted to Margaret Waugh (widow of Thomas), which she had bequeathed for the poor of the town. Presumably this was some loan between him and Waugh, which Waugh’s widow decided to donate to charity. In 1712 he married Janet Cavers, who was also from Hawick and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1713. The witnesses were Baillie Robert Hardie and shoemaker Walter Scott. He later married Isobell Scott and their children included John (b.1717), William (b.1718), Margaret (b.1720), George (b.1721) and Gilbert (b.1727). The witnesses in 1718 were merchant Adam Elliot and tailor James Boston. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1717 when his daughter Betty was baptised. He may be the George who married Betty Scott in Cavers in 1714. George
Turnbull

‘Young Whitegates’ (18th C.) married Elizabeth Dalgleish in Hawick in 1720. His wife was daughter of John Dalgleish, wright at Alton Croft. Perhaps the same George and Elizabeth had a son John in Crailing Parish in 1724. The meaning of his nickname is unclear, but it may be related to the Scotts who were called ‘Whitegates’. George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1723 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same George was at Mains in 1731 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. George (18th C.) resident of Ashybank in 1735, 1741 and 1747. He was recorded as a gardener in 1747. Children, baptised in Cavers, who are probably his include: William (b.1735); John (b.1736); Ann and Archibald (b.1738); William (b.1741); Robert (b.1743); Margaret (b.1744); Walter (b.1747); and George (b.1749). He was surely related to Walter, who was at Ashybank at the same time. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1759 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabel Henderson in 1754 and their son Adam was born in 1757. The witnesses were tailor John Turnbull (who was probably related) and shoemaker Robert Oliver. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1772. He married Jean King in 1767 and their children included: Margaret (b.1768); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Helen (b.1786). In 1769 the witnesses were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1772 Andrew Turner and John Mathieson. George (18th C.) resident at Robertson Parish. He was at Deanburnhaugh in 1773 and 1775 and Greenbank in 1781. His children included William (b.1773), Isobel (b.1775), Robert (b.1776), John (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and James (b.1783). George (18th C.) married Isabel Kedie in Ashkirk in 1767. George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He is probably the George ‘Senr.’ recorded on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence father of George junior. He is recorded as ‘senior’ when he (along with Walter Wilson) witnessed baptisms for George ‘Junior’ in 1776 and 1777. He may also be the same man as ‘George Turnbull Senr. Vintner’ in Hawick, who is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5. He may be the George who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: John (b.1774); John (again, b.1777); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1777 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his wife’s father) and ex-Bailie William Elliot. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for Bailie John Hardie in Hawick in 1768, 1772 and 1774. George (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick, with his shop at 14 High Street. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Junior Merchant’, and was hence son of another George, who had been a merchant before him. Note that the somewhat later drapers, William and James (at 11 High Street), were not closely related. He is recorded as George ‘Junior’ on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1785–87 and 1791–97. He is probably the merchant George who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson and Isobel Turnbull (perhaps a relative) in 1780 and the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1798. He is probably the ‘George Turnbull, jun. Hawick’ on the subscribers list for ‘Caw’s Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the junior merchant of that name who was among the creditors of Walter Lunn in the court case for bankruptcy against Lunn in the years 1799–1803. He is still ‘Junr. Mercht’ in 1791 and in 1795 when he witnessed a baptism for John Straiton and Agnes Wilson (his sister-in-law). In 1774 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Wilson, eldest eldest daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’; she died in 1829. Their children included: George (1776–1809); Katherine (b.1777), who married William Oliver; Janet (b.1778), who died unmarried; Betty (b.1779–81); Walter (1780–1809); Betty or Elizabeth (again, b.1781), who married tobacconist James Scott; William (b.1783); Jane (b.1784); Agnes (or Nancy, 1785–1827), who was unmarried; William (again, 1786–1806); Margaret (b.1787); Thomas (b.1788), who married Jane Veitch; and Isobel (b.1791), who died young. The witnesses in 1776, 1777 and 1784 were George Turnbull senior and Walter Wilson (presumably his father and father-in-law), in 1778 and 1779 were weaver George (perhaps also his father) and merchant Walter Wilson (again) and in 1788 were merchant James Dickson and manufacturer Thomas Turnbull (perhaps a relative). In 1791 the witnesses were merchants Walter Wilson and William Wilson (probably his father-in-law and brother-in-law). In 1809 he was already deceased when his daughter Elizabeth married Hawick tobacconist James Scott. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Helen Laidlaw, who was also from Hawick. George (1776–1809) eldest son of draper George. He may be the ‘Junr. Mercht.’ listed in Hawick on the

1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It seems likely he was the George, son of George ‘Junior’, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with John, son of George ‘Senior’) and who was listed as a mercant when he was elected Cornet in 1795. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Larriston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of the Cross Keys in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 work horses at that time. It is unclear whether this was the Cross Keys on the High Street or at the Sandhead. He was surely related to the John of the Cross Keys whose son Walter died in 1808. He could be the George ‘Senior’, whose son John was among those on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with George, son of George ‘Junior’), and who was probably the John of the Cross Keys who was Cornet in 1796. George (1783–1861) eldest son of James and Betty Adamson. He was born at Hillshaugh and became a carrier in the Rulewater district, like his grandfather, George Adamson. It is said he frequently acted as the disseminator of news. In later life he moved to Newcastle on and was a grocer and meal-dealer at about 41 North Hermitage Street. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Brown. He was said to resemble ‘John Bull’ in later years. George (1826–66) 2nd son of John and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Scott. His uncles were schoolmasters at Wilton and at Hobkirk. George Purvis (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Bilerwell. He had a twin sister Mary. He emigrated to Canada, where he raised cattle. An earlier man of the same name (b.1821) was his uncle. Gideon (18th C.) recorded as resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Newton in 1718 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1726, 1729 and 1733. He witnessed a baptism in 1724 for James Ormiston, resident of Boonraw. He married Helen Scott in 1718 and their children included: Thomas (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); James (b.1724); James (again, b.1726); Janet (b.1729); Helen (b.1733); and William (b.1739). The witnesses in 1724 were James Ormiston and John Huntlie, in 1726 were Robert Scott and another Scott (probably William), perhaps relatives of his wife, in 1729 were Walter and William Scott and in 1733 were Robert Scott and Thomas Turnbull (who may have been related). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Patrick. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Gilbert (b.1742) son of Thomas, who was one of the instigators of Hawick’s carpet trade. He was born in Minto Parish. In 1758 he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He joined the Honourable East India Company. It is said that he had extravagant habits and would send his bills Grisel (d.c.1685) described as ‘in Roull’ when her will was recorded in 1685. It is unclear where in Rulewater she may have lived. Hector (15th C.) member of the inquest panel for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Other men listed included George, John and William of Minto. Hector (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522 for the Homes of Wedderburn. Archibald is listed right after him, and possibly related. Hector of Barnhills (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Bailie in that part’, along with John Turnbull, in a sasine for William, Lord Herries of Terregles, Baron of Feu-Rule for Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Hector (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1549 he was granted the 2 husband lands in Appletreelall belonging to Robert Scott of HowPasley. Along with his brother David and Patrick Gordon, he was already tenant of these lands at the time. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Bucceleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barnhills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector (recorded in about 1590). Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutorem de Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherford and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was George of Standhill. Also in 1553/4 he was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Bucceleuch, where he is recorded as ‘tutorem de Mynto’. Hector of Barnhills was also listed, proving he was a different man, although it is unclear to which branch of the Turnbulls he did belong (but presumably associated with the Turnbulls of Minto). He was simple ‘of Mynto’ in 1561, when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was ‘The Tutour of Mynto’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was ‘Tutor of Mynto’ when he signed the 1569 bond to suppress Border thieves, also signed by several other men of Roxburghshire and neighbouring areas. Hector (16th C.) listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer charges of raiding into England. He was recorded being of ‘Vowley’, which is probably Woollee. Hector (16th C.) listed in 1567 when he was among men to be entered by David Home of Wedderburn. He is recorded being ‘in Turnbull’ (although it seems likely this is a transcription error, perhaps for Town-o-Rule) and brother to George. ‘Isobellis Robene’, as well as Adam, son to Sanyd Turnbull, ‘Part Purliss’ and 2 Oivers were also to be entered from there. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Belsis (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses. He was recorded in 1579 when his son Thomas was listed among men accused of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was ‘Hekie’, son of Adam in Belses, for whom there was a pledge to stop thieving in 1576, along with his brothers David, George and John. Since his name was given first, he may have been the eldest son. The joint cautioners were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and William Turnbull of Barnhills. He was also ‘Ekkie Trumbill of Belsis’ in 1580 when his son Andrew (then a minor) was convicted of murder. This was probably the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock who was slain ‘vnder silence of nycht in his bed within ane laych chalmer in the place of Polwart’. In 1580 there was a further complaint by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, that he, his son Dand, and brother-in-law Patrick Richardson, killed her husband (John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’, presumably the same man) at his home in Polwarth; they were all denounced as rebels. Sir George Home of Wedderburn received the ‘escheeat’ of his (Hector’s) estate, as well as that of the other convicted man, John Young in ‘Camys’. At the end of 1580 he gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for the ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. His brother John was a witness, as well as several men who lived in Belses. He was probably either deceased or exiled by 1581 when his brothers David, George, John and Adam were recorded. He is ‘Heckie of Belses’ in 1586/7 when ‘Andro’ his ‘bastard sone’ is listed among Border criminals (this could be the same son as Dand); he is also the ‘Ekkie in Belses’ (with no surname given) whose brother-in-law ‘Pait Richesoun’ is on the same list in 1586/7. Hector (16th C.) recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector ‘Eckie’ of Catlee (16th C.) listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court.

and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Eckie Turnbull of Catlie’, suggesting that his name was Hector. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. He may be related to the earlier Turnbulls associated with Catlee. Hector of Wauchope (d.bef. 1612) son of David. In 1571/2 he joined several Borders lairds in signing a bond to act against thieves. In 1572/3 he was recorded as son and heir apparent of David of Wauchope, when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with William Ker of Caverston as surety. In 1573 he and his father signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1580 he and Walter of Hobsburn were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. Also in 1580 he was in a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn, who had a band to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is probably the unnamed Turnbull of Wauchope who was on the 1584/5 list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in order to keep peace on the Border. In 1587 Sir Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as his cautioner. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590 he was in prison in Edinburgh Tolbooth when the Earl of Angus became bound to enter him to William Ker of Cessford, Warden of the Middle Marches, to answer an accusation by an Englishman. Additionally he was mentioned in a 1590 case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant; he was described ‘being now tenant and vassal to William, the present Earl of Angus’. In 1591 he was among local chiefs who signed a bond to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell and Alexander, Lord Home. It is unclear how he was related to Thomas, who was declared a rebel in the 1590s. In 1592 his surety was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose. He was a signatory for the assurance of good behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Wauchope (separate from those derived from Minto) in 1595; he signed by ‘touching the pen of the notary’. Also in 1595 he, along with John Rutherford of Hunthill and William Scott of Howpaseley, were ‘put to the horn’ for failing to pay to the Sheriff their ‘blench ferms and castle-wards’; in 1599 there was a complaint about the Sheriff (James Douglas of Cavers) for not prosecuting the men. In 1599 he complained that he had captured Gilbert and Hector Lorraine, who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his son David, and handed them over to James Douglas of Cavers, who had refused to enter them in court. He is probably ‘the old Laird of Vaughopp’ recorded in 1601 when an Englishman complained that he had stolen cattle from him. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. In 1603 he complained about Turnbulls from Nether Bonchester, Braidhaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkschaw’ stealing more than 20 cows from his lands. His 2nd son George was recorded in 1604 in a sasine for lands of Tempelhall. In 1605 he accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a group of about 100 riders who stole 80 cows, 100 sheep and 1 horses from Wauchope in 1602. His eldest son Thomas, 2nd son George and several other neighbouring tenants are also recorded; Elliot was found not guilty, however. His surety in this case was Robert Home, younger of ‘the Heuch’. In 1606 he was the most senior of the men accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; his sons George and John are also listed. They were accused of stealing a huge number of livestock, cutting down virtually the whole wood at Appotside and killing the young Laird of Harwood and his younger brother, as well as a servant of their mother, Lady Appotside. It is unclear exactly what Margaret (herself a daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) had done to invoke the ire of her neighbours and distant kin. Although he and the others were eventually acquitted, his son Thomas was separately found guilty of the same crimes. Probably the same Hector is recorded in 1612, when his son George was involved in a contract with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam relating to Templehall (in the Rule valley). His son and heir David married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593, but was killed before 1599; those involved in his death included Gilbert and Hector (uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood), as well as James Lorraine of Appotside; this was presumably part of the same family feud. Thomas was heir afterwards, with George being the next son. Hector of Clarilaw (16th/17th C.) listed in a bond of March 1594/5, along with Richard Turnbull, subscribed by James Gledstains of Cocklaw, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He may be related to the Hector who had a charter for Pinnacle and Broomlands in 1550. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. As well as other crimes, he was singled out for his involvement with stealing livestock from and burning Appotside in 1598. However, he was cleared of all charges. He was surely related to the slightly later Hector of Clarilaw. Either he or his son was the Hector of Clarilaw who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Sucker’ of sheep stealing. He is probably the Hector in Clarilaw who was put to the horn in 1618 for the murder of Gavin Elliot in Hassideanburn. In 1619 an action was raised by Elliot’s widow and children to apprehend him, with the Laird of Cranston appointed to head the commission. Not appearing, there was an order to take his houses and goods for the King’s use. Hector (d.aft. 1610) probably son of Thomas of Hartshaugh (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule). In 1580 he was a ‘kindlie tenant’ in possession of the lands of Kirklands of Hockirk. His ancestors had probably been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey for several generations. In 1581 he was listed (along with his son Thomas) as ‘in Hartishauch’ among the 10 men accused of being involved with the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Tom ‘of Harkshaw’ and his brother ‘Lancy Trumble’, who were listed among men who stole cattle from Wauchope in 1603, seem likely to be his sons or other close relatives. He had a charter to lands of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel in 1604, specifically the lands and mill of ‘Hartishauch’, the lands of ‘Wester Swoonshield’, including the wood called ‘Clerksbank’, and the ‘kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobirkirk’, except for the manse and glebe. These lands were in the Barony of Abbotrule. He is stated as having been tenant in Hartshaugh beyond the memory of man’. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘in Hartshauch’ when he was part of an inquest for succession to lands in Rulewater. His son Mark had a bond in 1616 (when he was presumably still alive) with William Scott of Todrig. He may be the Hector in Hartshaugh recorded in 1619 (along with Adam, also there) among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. He married twice, and his children (to his 2nd wife) were James, Mark and William. ‘Leonall’ (possibly Lyle) may have been another child. His grandson Adam was served heir to his lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in Hobirkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. It is unclear whether he is the same as any of the other contemporarary Hectors. Hector of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) surely directly related to the earlier Hector of Barnhills, and possibly son or brother of William of Barnhills. He had a charter of confirmation issued by James VI for the lands of Barnhills. He may be the Hector, brother of ‘[blank] Trumbill of Barnhills’ recorded as in 1581/2 in Selkirk to 2 transactions (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related, and another along with Mark, heir of Howden); he was also recorded explicitly as brother of William of Barnhills in several other transactions in 1581/2. He witnessed a further transaction in 1582. In 1586 he was ‘in Barnhills’ when denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included his brother George, a son of Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert ‘tutor of Barnhills’ (perhaps his uncle) and Robert’s brothers Hector and Gavin, as well as Davidsouns, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1597 and a following grant of lands of Hallrule and others in 1603. In 1599 he was a subscriber at Barnhills to a bond by John of Minto to enter the Lorraines; his servants George Bell and Robert Brown also subscribed. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Mark of Bewlie, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. Also in 1602 it is recorded that he had been ‘put to the horn’ and the ‘lifer of all and sundry’ of his lands had been given by escheat to Alexander, Lord Home, including Hallrule (which a group of Armstrongs and Elliots attacked). His eldest son John married Isobel, daughter of George of Hallrule. He is probably the Hector of Barnhills who was tried in 1604 for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; also tried were his brother George, their uncle Gavin and Hector of Stanedge. They were denounced as rebels for not appearing; however, they were probably rehabilitated, since his he and his son and heir John were taken to court in 1609 by David, son of the late John Scott ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ for not paying what they had borrowed. In 1607 he and Thomas of Wauchope brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. In 1610 his brother George ‘in Howay’ is recorded resigning a tenement of land in Hawick. Hector of Bewlie (d.1604) probably a younger son of Walter of Bewlie. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Robert and Andrew, among Turnbulls and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. In 1601 he accompanied his brother Andrew of Bewlie to harass a Bailie of Jedburgh with ‘long lagguts and pistolets’; after confessing he was committed to Edinburgh Tolbooth. There was then a proclamation posted at ‘Jedburgh, Hawik, Selkirk, Peiblis, Lauder and other places’ asking for any other complaints to be lodged against him and his brother Hector. He was recorded in 1601 in a document to capture him and William Middlemas for the slaughter of Thomas Kerr of Crailing. This was the outcome of a serious fight between Kerrs and Turnbulls at Jedburgh Fair that year, which included Mark of Bewlie and his brother Robert (who was killed there); these 2 may well have also been his brothers. He was declared a rebel and there is a Commission of 1603 for the Provost of Jedburgh to gather men to apprehend him. He was killed at Lilliesleaf around Martinmas 1604 by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. Ker had remission for this and other crimes in 1615. This was all part of an ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and the Kerrs, but the exact circumstances surrounding the events of these times are impossible to guess. Hector of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) declared a rebel in 1604 for failing to appear to answer the charge of murdering Thomas Kerr of Crailing and his servant George Glaidner. Hector of Belses acted as cautioner. It is possible he is the same man as Hector of Bewlie. Hector ‘Eckie’ of Stonedge (d.1611) brother of Gavin in Howa and Robert, called ‘tutor of Barnhills’, who was also tenant in Hallrule. Their father may have been Archie in Howa. In 1586 he was declared a rebel for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws; his brothers Robert and Gavin were also listed, as well as Hector in Barnhills (perhaps their nephew). In 1595 he was recorded along with Turnbulls of Minto, Bewlie, Hallrule and Barnhill, as well as Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He is recorded in 1596 as ‘Hector Trumble of Stoney letch’ when he was accused of crimes by Englishman Thomas Selbie and fined ‘for lack of answer’. In 1601 he is listed along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thy wer suspect gilty of’; Kerr was directed to pay the penalty for failing to produce him in particular. He is recorded as ‘in Stanileche’ in a bond of 1603 when he gave all his goods to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst for being unable to pay his debts and also apparently because Sir Andrew had saved his life. In 1604 he was one of the Turnbulls involved with slaughter and burning at Appotside and Harwood. Also in 1604 he was tried, along with 3 Turnbulls of Barnhills, with the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; they were denounced as rebels for non-entry, with their cautioners being Robert Home of Carolside, Hector Turnbull of Belses and James Douglas of Cavers. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Hector Turnbull in Steneledrig’, brother of Gavin in Howa and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule; there was clearly a feud between the 2 families. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; however, the case against him was not pursued. In 1607 he sold the lands of ‘Carlinghall, Laisell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill’ to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1607 he brought a court case against Robert Scott in Northhouse. Additionally in 1607 he was cautioner for John Maxwell, Lord Herries. He is also recorded as ‘of Steinieloche’ in a set of documents in 1609 relating to the lands of ‘Hardwotdoun’, ‘Fairneleyis’ and ‘Staineleche’. Andrew held these lands in 1610, and so was probably his son. This also suggests that he had been declared a rebel by then. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam, but whether this was an ‘official’ act or part of a feud is unclear. Hector ‘Eckie’ of Firth (16th/17th C.) listed in 1601 along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto. Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect gilty of’; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Ekie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. He took part on the affray at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601, when a large group of Turnbulls drew Thomas Ker (brother of the Jedburgh Provost) out of his house and killed him along with his servants. This was part of some ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs. He was one of 4 Turnbulls who were found guilty of the crime of murder and illegally carrying pistols. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davisons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Hector of Belses (16th/17th C.) acted as cautioner in 1604 for a group of Turnbulls from Stanedge and Barnhills (including 2 other Hectors!) accused of killing 6 sons of Grahamslaw of Newton. Also in 1604 he was cautioner for Hector of Lilliesleaf, charged with the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailing. He must have been related to the George of Belses who was executed in 1603. Hector (16th/17th C.) had a charter of ‘feu farm’ for the lands of Standhill in 1610. He was probably ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Standhill. Hector (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 when there was an unnamed cautioner for 1000 merks for him. He promised not to molest Alexander, son of the late Sir John Drummond of ‘Halthrondaill’. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619 as brother of Thomas in Raperlaw ‘Townfute’. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He may be the same as one of the other Hectors. Hector of Clarilaw (17th C.) possibly son of the earlier Hector. In 1637 he was appointed (as closest relative on his father’s side) as tutor to James, son of George ‘called of Wauchope’. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £273. In 1643 his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Scott of Burnhead. He probably had no sons, since Clarilaw appears to have gone to the Scotts of Burnhead after that. Hector of Firth (17th C.) feued Firth from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. He was probably the son of the earlier Hector of Firth. John and Walter leased Firth later in the later 1600s, and must have been his descendants. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1637 of his daughter with George Clerk. In 1643 his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £195. Hector (17th C.) recorded in ‘Rule’ in the 1643 valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Hector (d.c.1683) tenant in Grudstone whose will was recorded in 1683. Hector of Wester Swanshie (18th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by his son James. Helen (16th/17th C.) wife of James ‘Lethame’. She and her husband complained about being attacked by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife n Hawick in 1616. Helen of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded as owner of £80 of land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. She was probably related to James, who was also recorded at Fodderlee in 1643. Helen (17th/18th C.) see Helen Chisholme. Henry of Craik (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1431 ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter granting half of the barony of Branxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Turnbull de Crak’. Henry (15th C.) leased a quarter of the lands of Appletreehall according to a document of 1470, with Alexander Scott of Howpasley having the other parts. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded holding the lands of East Mains (of Hassendean) in 1493/4. He may be the Henry who witnessed a sasine for lands in Linton in 1509. Henry (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in deni’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again in 1494/5 for failure to appear. Henry (15th C.) tenant in Unthana, listed at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was indicted and did not appear, with his surety, Matthew Hobkirk being fined. He was probably related to Alexander, recorded in Unthank in 1493. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He is listed as ‘Harie Trombull’. Henry ‘Harie’ (17th C.) holder of part of the lands of Westwood near Bonchester in 1643. His lands were valued at £12 Scots, while those of Thomas (presumably his father or brother) were worth £40 Scots. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of a total of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He married Betty Stavert in Kirkton in

Herbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in connection with lands in Bedrule in the early 1500s. Helen Rutherford of that Ilk had the ‘half merk land of Bethrioull’ confirmed to her by the King, this being near the Parish Church and ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. It is possible that his name is an error for the much more common ‘Hector’.

Herman (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It could be that this is a transcription error for ‘Hector’. Isobel (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘gudwif of Woll’ among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. The name of her husband is not recorded; it is possible he was a missing first generation of the Scotts of Woll, perhaps father of Walter, who is noted in 1606. It is also possible that she was mother (perhaps if she married twice) of John Turnbull, half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, who is recorded in 1608. Isobel (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Rawflat, sister of William and Walter. In 1603 she was one of the ‘pereswaris’ of the case against George Turnbull of Belses, for a list of crimes, including killing her brother William and shooting her brother Walter. Another of the persuers was George Rutherford ‘as kinsman’, so he was either her husband or married to one of her relatives. In 1632 probably the same ‘Issobella’ was ‘heir portioner’, along with her sister Margaret, to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feurule. Isobel (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) recorded as resident of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (18th C.) cook at Stirches in 1791, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholm. Sir James (1320-55) son of William, the first Turnbull. He married Mary Haliburton and died at Nisbet Moor. James (15th C.) listed among the squires who witnessed an agreement in 1432 between the Rules of Primsde and the Kers of Altonburn. James of Hornshole (15th C.) witness in 1456 to an instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters, made at Brauxholme. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo Turnbule de Hornshole’. He may have been an ancestor of the later Turnbuls who were at Hornshole. James (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was described as a ‘common thief’, who had stolen things with John Davidson, resident of Minto. Davidson was allowed to ‘compone’ for his crimes, including stealing a horse from him. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as the brother of the Laird of Whithope (probably the one near Harden in the Borthwick valley). He had remission for stealing 18 ewes from Bowhill, with the help of Walter Dalgleish. His crimes also included stealing iron windows, doors and ‘crukis’ from the tower of Howpesley. His brother the Laird of Whithope was surety for him. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1484 when he claimed compensation from Adam of Philiphau for the ‘wrangwis vexacioun and disturblance’ of him in his lands of Westfield and ‘wrangwis spoliacioun of a kow’ at his lands of Kirkhope. Probably the same James ‘in Kirkhop’ is listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother of Mark in Bonchester in 1494/5. He failed to appear and so his brother, serving as his surety, was fined. He was also recorded as brother of Mark in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted; as well as his brother, there were Turnbuls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere also listed. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hornshole listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men who had been fined. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant at Hornshole in 1502 and John in 1516. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. In 1502 his son Thomas served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gargunnock. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Perhaps the same James of Gargunnock gave up his lifierent of a tenement in Solkirk in 1538 in favour of his cousin John; his own son John was a witness. He may be related to the contemporary Walter of Gargunnock and Hassendean. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for John Stirling for lands in Dumbarton, signed in Edinburgh in 1508. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Wolfelee in 1516 on a list of many Turnbuls pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. James (15th/16th
C.) tenant in the lands of Hillhouse, listed among the men who had remission in 1516 for any assistance given to the Homes. Fergus is also noted as being there, and so presumably related. It is unclear if these were the lands in Liddesdale or other lands in Rulewater. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame Trumbill, young Pait’s brother’ on a list of Scotsmen reset in England in 1540. He was probably son of Peter (or perhaps Patrick) of Catlee. James (16th C.) recorded in Philiphaugh in 1540/1 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. James (16th C.) recorded in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He represented his son Thomas in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Perhaps the same James set a tack for his lands called ‘Scottis Yard’ in Selkirk in 1581. James of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame’ in 1565 when there was a bond with Walter Turnbull, tenant of Howa (in Rulewater) to present him to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may be one of the unidentified James Turnbulls who are on the list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. James (16th C.) listed as tenant in ‘Sironsechell’ (probably Swanshield) in 1581 among 10 men (mostly Turnbulls of Rulewater) accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. James of the Toor (16th C.) recorded as ‘of the Toure’, along with his brother George, in a 1579/80 case of men accused of raiding into England. They were asked to pay recompense to the Laird of ‘Panstoun’, from whom they had presumably been accused of stealing. He is also listed among the men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border. He was also listed as one of the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He was probably related to William ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ recorded in 1622. His lands were presumably at Spittal Tower. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Stenleche’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1567 when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. He is recorded in 1586/7 as ‘Jamie Turnbull in Stanielege’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He was recorded being ‘of Stonyletche’ and ‘of Stonyleache’ among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for 2 separate raids into England in 1587. In one raid he is listed first and there were more than 40 other men involved, including his servant ‘Jocke Weittie’. In the other raid there are several Turnbulls listed, among a group of about 200. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hassendean in 1598. He was denounced along with John in Minto, Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ and James Langlands for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to the Laird of Mynto’ in 1601. He was listed along with Mark and Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth and Eckie of Stonedge, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect gilty of’. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James ‘Baneist James’ (16th/17th C.) one of a group of Turnbulls involved in a melee at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601. This resulted in the death of Thomas Ker and his servant, and the wounding of many men. As a consequence several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. Although he was one of those found guilty of murder and illegally carrying pistols, it is unclear whether or not he was executed. In 1610 he was named (as ‘called Baneisht James’) by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. It is not stated to which Turnbull branch he belonged, but probably somewhere around Minto. His nickname is presumably Scots for ‘banished’. James (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1616 he is described as ‘called of Bedrule’ when along with David (or Andrew, probably his nephew), butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh, he had a bond with Mark in Hartshaugh. And in 1618 he is ‘brother german to Walter of Bedderreull’ when he had a bond with James Jamieson of Lessuden. James (d.bef. 1619) eldest son of Hector of Hartshaugh. In 1608 he had a charter of the lands of Wester Swanshield, granted by his father to be held in feu for rental. He was also the successor to the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands. However, he could only have been Laird for a very short time after his father’s death, before his own son Thomas succeeded in 1619. He must also have been related to the contemporary Adam and Lyle (probably either brothers or sons). James ‘Jamie’ of West Lees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son George was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in

Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh; his son and heir William was also mentioned. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘called of Raperlaw’ in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbuls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His son John was also listed. James ‘Maltman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was among a group led by Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. James (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Willie of Braidhauche’, he is recorded in the 1622 Circuit Court, where he was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’, this being possessed by the ‘fear of Cavers (William Douglas) and his tennentis’ (hence probably Earlside). He was ‘clengit’, i.e. found not guilty. His cautioners were Adam in Hartshaugh and another Adam, who were perhaps related. In 1628 there was a complaint by Robert Kerr of Cavers against him and his father, for opposing his apprehension after he was declared ‘an idle and masterless man’ (i.e. fit for military service). Also in 1628 he is named when his father William paid caution to the Privy Council, promising to atone for the disturbance they had caused at Abbotrule Kirk. James (d.beft. 1632) described as ‘in Hassidenbank’ and already deceased in 1632 when his son Walter feuded part of Raperlaw. Probably the same James ‘of Hassindanebank’ was complained about in 1607 by George Scott in Castleside, with his surety being Thomas Ker of Cavers. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of £180 of land at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He was probably related to Helen ‘of Fodderlee’, who was also recorded in 1643. They are presumably distinct from the people with the same names who were at Bowshot Hill at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded at ‘Bossthillic’ (i.e. Bowshot Hill) in Abbotrule Parish in a valuation roll of 1643. He was there with Helen, who was presumably his wife. Their land was valued at £33 6s 8d. James of Wauchope (d.c.1674) only son of George of Wauchope. In 1653 he inherited the 20-pound land of Wauchope in Jedforest from his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. In 1655 he renounced all claims to the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) to William Earl of Lothian. His sister Anna was served as his heir in 1674. James of West Lees (17th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier James. In about 1663 he was recorded paying £66 13s 4d on the Land Tax Rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick. He married Isobell Margaret Stoddart and their children included Robert (b.1682), James (b.1685) and an unnamed son (b.1688). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by John Law and Robert Turnbull (who was presumably closely related). James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. James (d.1686) tenant farmer who also served as ‘pyper’ for the Parish of Abbotrule. His will is recorded in 1687 when he was ‘pyper, in Abotroull’. He left a reasonably sum of money to his only daughter. James (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh. The will of his wife Agnes Turnbull was recorded in 1688. James (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Caverspark’ when his will was recorded in 1688. It is unclear if this was associated with Cavers Parish or Cavers Carre or elsewhere. James (17th C.) referred to as ‘James Trumble’ in 1688 when he was fined for assaulting the Bailie and Town Officers. They were trying to take him to the tollbooth ‘for certain riots and bluids’ and threatened ‘to take yr lives wt ane drawn penknife in his hand’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor of said Dame Magdalene’ in 1690 when he witnessed a bond. He was thus some sort of employee of the widow of Stobs. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. He may be the James who married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Hobsburn according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant at Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant there at about the same time. James (17th C.) cottar at Rule-townfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in New Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. He married Catherine Minto and their children included Janet (b.1701), Isobel (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707) and Margaret (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1715 when his daughter Helen was baptised. Perhaps the same James was in Denholm in 1720 when his son John was baptised. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Tofts in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the Turnbulls of Tofts. His children included: James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1718). He was recorded at Nether Tofts in 1718. James (d.c.1724) son of Adam and grandson of Thomas. His father had lost the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton through ‘non-entry’. In 1682 he was entered with his superior in the lands of Wester Swanshiel as successor to his grandfather. He was at that time already married to Elizabeth Scott. He may be the same James ‘portioner of Swan-sheil’ who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for not conforming to Episcopaliam. He was probably the James recorded as resident at Easter Swanshiel in 1694. His son and successor Walter was born about 1700. He was succeeded by Walter (called William in Walter Deans’ history). James (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick Parish. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for William Aitken, ‘younger carier’. He married Agnes Henry, who is recorded in 1721 as a teacher of poor children. Probably the same candlemaker James is listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is recorded as a candlemaker in 1685, and his wife as ‘Isobell hewie’, when their daughter Bessie was baptised; the witnesses were William Elliot and Thomas (perhaps a relative). James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the tailor recorded in the Kirk Session records paying 18s ‘for 3 sticks lost from the quire’. He witnessed baptisms for fellow tailor Alexander Hislop in 1705, for tailor Archibald Scott (along with fellow tailor George Scott) in 1714, and for carrier Simon Mark in 1719. He married Margaret Forrest in 1703; both were from Hawick Parish. Their children included: James (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were barker John Whillans and tailor William Gledstains. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Wester Parkhill in 1714 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Other children who could be his include: Adam (b.1702); Anna (b.1706); and Mitchell (b.1712). James (17th/18th C.) wright in Cavers. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1722. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, could also be his: Helen (b.1715); Rachel (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); John (b.1720); Thomas (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1728). James (17th/18th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick Parish, who probably also acted as Session Clerk. According to the handwriting in the baptismal records, he probably took over in the latter part of 1726, following the death of John Purdom, and perhaps after some interim person. His wife was Margaret Henderson. In 1726 he is ‘schoolmaster in this toun’ when his son Charles was baptised in Hawick, with witnesses John Turnbull (perhaps related) and John Scott. It is unclear how long he served. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Cawfaulds in 1728. He married Elspeth Martin and their children included: Margaret (b.1718); and Archibald (b.1728). The witnesses in 1728 were Thomas and Walter Turnbull (who may have been related). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew Martin) for James Dryden in 1737. James (b.1709) son of William, he was born at Bedrule Mill, and the family claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He became tenant farmer at the Dykes, where he was recorded in 1742. He married Helen Spindie in Cavers Parish in 1739 and their children included: Thomas (b.1740); James (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); and William (b.1755). James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Currie in 1758 and their children included Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1762). James (b.1736) tenant farmer at Hassendean Bank, son of Adam, who was also tenant there. He could be the James who in July 1774 was paid 2s 5d for ‘sharpening Picks’ as part of a boundary dyke at Hassendean and who in 1782 was tenant of the ‘East end farm of Hassendean’. He was recorded at Hassendean Bank in the Horse Tax Rolls 1785–94. He was still tenant of Hassendean in 1793, when part of the farm was enclosed. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of Burnfoot and the Hawick carpet factory). Their children included Adam, who married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. He was the ancestor of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died. James (18th C.) tailor... in Hawick. He may have been related to the earlier tailor of the same name. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) ‘Norval’ and their children included: Margaret (b.1735); James (b.1739); John (b.1741); and William (b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie Robert Howison and wright Walter Scott. James (d.1787) wright in Bedrule. He married Euphan Peden, who died in 1792, aged 62. Their children included: Mary, who died aged 9; James, who died at 16; and William, who lived at Lanton East Park. James (18th C.) resident of Scawmill. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1766); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); and Ann (b.1774). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Robert Ormiston. James (18th C.) resident of Courthill. He married Jean Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Esther (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Jean (b.1771); Helen (b.1774); and Rebecca (b.1776). The witnesses in 1770 were John Mathieson and Andrew Turner. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. James (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His death register states he was ‘Schoolmr. Billetmas (d.1797) resident of Hawick Parish. He was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1792 he married Martha Hogg, who was from Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Hightofts’ (i.e. Upper Tofts), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Greenhouse at 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Highchesters, when he owned 3 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs at Highchesters in the same year. Probably the same James at ‘Haychesters’ was on the 1821 subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1774) son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He was born in Hobkirk Parish and became a tenant farmer. In 1799 he was tenant at Philhope when his son was baptised in Roberton parish. He was later tenant farmer at Galalaw outside Hawick, the lands being purchased by his elder brother Robert. He is recorded in the 1841 census at Galalaw Braefoot. He married Mary Stavert in 1798, the marriage being recorded in Yarrow and Roberton Parishes. Their earlier children were baptised in Robertson. They included: John (b.1799), Mary (b.1809), James (b.1812) and Helen (b.1815), all baptised in Robertson; Eliza (b.1801), Catherine (b.1803), Mary (b.1805), Robert (b.1807), Ann (b.1808), Walter (b.1811), Agnes (b.1814), Margaret (b.1816), Margaret (again, b.1818) all baptised in Yarrow; and William (b.1821), baptised in Wilton. James (18th/19th C.) married Annie ‘Maire’ in Robertson Parish in 1800.

James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1798 he married Margaret Ainslie, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Walter (b.1801); an unnamed child who died in 1816; and Janet, who married coal carrier William Graham.

James (1773–1858) son of Walter of Chesterhall near Ancrum. He became farmer at Billerwell in the Rule valley, along with his sons. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Turnbull, tenant of Ancrum Mill, and she died in 1862, aged 78. His wife’s brother was also Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, whose grandson was Provost of Melrose. Their children were: Walter (1805–64, who was the last of Chesterhall); Thomas (b.1809); James (b.1815); John (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); George Purvis (b.1821); Margaret (1824/5–63), who died unmarried; and Mary (1812/3–60), who married John Laidlaw in Jedburgh. His daughter Elizabeth married Robert, son of John Grieve in 1853. William may have been another son.

James (b.1782/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1835, when he was at Damside, and in 1840 and 1841, when he was at Roadhead. His wife was Mary and their children included William, James and Mary. He may be the stockingmaker James whose infant child’s death is recorded in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. James (b.c.1780) thatcher living at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1851 with family members Janet and Andrew. James (1786–1834) son of James and Betty Adamson (not Anderson, as stated in one source). He was born in Hobbkirk Parish, being baptised at Hoddleswoodie, and came from the Nursery House Turnbulls. He was schoolmaster at Denholm and then became the successor to James Elliot at Wilton School in the 1810s. His brother William was schoolmaster at Hobbkirk. He was said to have a reputation for being an excellent teacher. He married Margaret Dalgleish (cousin of William Dalgleish, who established the ‘Coutard Fund’) in Cavers Parish in 1808 and they had 12 children, including: James, Clerk of Session in Edinburgh; John, who died in London; Agnes (who was also a teacher); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married James Dalgleish; Jane or Janet; Charters, who married Eliot Armstrong; Elspeth; George; Jane; Mary Scott; and William, auctioneer in Edinburgh. His wife and eldest daughter ran the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s, and she survived him by about 50 years. James (18th/19th C.) son of Mark and an Elliot. He was descended from the Chesterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd at Minto Kames, then at Barnes and later at Old Fodderlee. His children include Robert (also a shepherd), Mark (a joiner in Peebles), James (a shepherd in Kingledoors) and a daughter (who kept house for him at Old Fodderlee). James ‘Wiggam’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm tailor who was described as ‘half-witted’. He also acted as the village crier, ringing the Dead Bell, announcing the name, and time and place of the burial and usually adding ‘and ye’re a invited to the funeral’. James (b.1799/1800) originally from Bowden, he was a blacksmith, grocer and spirit dealer at Appletreehall. He was listed as blacksmith at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming at Fenwick, having 140 acres and employing 2 servants. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane, Jessie, Agnes, James and Thomas. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1861 as a grocer and widower, with children Agnes and Thomas. James ‘Jimmie Springkie’ (b.c.1800) Hawick shoemaker who lived to an old age. His nickname derived from that of his father, ‘Auld Springkell’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shoemaker on the Cross Wynd. He is probably the James recorded at 4 Cross Wynd in the 1851 and 1861 censuses, employing a handful of men in his shoemaker’s business. He lived with his sister Margaret. He could be the son of Robert and Mary Laidlaw, born in Hawick in 1798, with sister Margaret born in 1793. He probably married Martha Blythe, who died in 1826, aged just 21. James (19th C.) son of Hawick stocking-maker William. He was one of 5 men charged for mobbing Tory supporters during the 1837 election. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 12 months. James (b.1800/1) born in Southdean Parish, he was farmer at Harelaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Allison and their children included William, James, Isobella, Eliza, Jane and Christina. James (1801/2–77) born in Minto Parish, he was forester at Cavers estate for almost 50 years. In 1828 he married Jane Weir, who appears to have already been deceased by 1841. He was living at ‘Cavers Cottage’ in 1851 and at ‘Cavers Wood’ in 1861. The family belonged to the Associate congregation in Jedburgh. He had a family of 2 daughters and 3 sons: John (b.c.1829), the eldest; Margaret (b.c.1830); Robert (b.1832), clothier in Denholm; James (b.c.1837); and Jean (b.c.1840). James (19th C.) recorded being ‘in Gillbraehead’ in 1832 when accused of fathering a child with Janet Scott from Gillfoot. However, he denied it. He was surely related to the blacksmiths of Gillbraehead. James (1814–74) son of Robert and Ann Mathieson. He was a Hawick draper, conducting the town’s highest class drapery business of the time at 11 High Street. This is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living with his parents on the Cross Wynd. In 1851 he was listed as a Master Draper, employing 4 apprentices, 5 women and 4 girls. In 1861 he was employing 2 men, 2 boys and 5 women. He was on the ‘Eternal Council’ and was twice Senior Bailie. He was probably the Turnbull who was Junior Bailie in 1859, when he was croupier for the centenary Burns night. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk, succeeding his father, was appointed Session Clerk in 1851 and was presented with a plate service by the congregation in 1865. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; she died in 1878, aged 58. Their children included: Robert (1850–53); Ann (c.1855–61); and Christina Mary, who married John Wield. He died at Wilton Grove (his son-in-law’s house) and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. James (1815–88) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. He was joint tenant of Billerwell with his brothers, and also of Prieston. He also farmed for a while at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the James recorded as farmer at Wester Fodderlee in the 1860s. He married Mary, daughter of William Scott. Their children were: James Robert, who emigrated to Edmonton; William Scott, farmer at Tythhouse; Annie; George Purvis, who emigrated to Canada; Mary, twin to George Purvis; Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Mark, twin of Walter; Elizabeth, ‘Betsy’, married Samuel White from Stow; Janet; Thomas, farmer at Greenholm, near Newcastle; and Andrew, also farmer at Greenholm. He died at Midburn in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1819) eldest son of James, Wilton Schoolmaster, and Margaret Dalgleish, he was born in Wilton. He became Clerk of Session in Edinburgh. It is said that he knew the law so well that he was often consulted by the professional lawyers. He married Jessie, sister of banker Archibald Douglas. Their children were Catherine (who married Henry Bunge) and James (a clerk in Register House). James (b.1822/3) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a blacksmith and shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule. He was recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane Scott, daughter of a Hawick joiner, with his mother-in-law being Agnes Scott. Their children included George B. and Adam. James (b.1823) eldest son of John. He took over the tenancy of Spittal farm. He was miller at Spittal Mill on the 1852 directory. He is recorded there in 1861, as farmer of 500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He was living there with his step-mother Anne E. James (1825–78) eldest son of John, grocer of Newcastle; descended from a Hobkirk branch of the Turnbulls. His uncle James was schoolmaster at Wilton. In 1855 he acquired the old-established grocery and wine merchants at 51 High Street, and it lasted for more than a century. He also ran a cart out to Whithope when the tunnel was being built there. Accounts for the period 1889–1964 are listed in the National Register of Archives. In 1854 he married Anne, eldest daughter of James Robson, a Jedburgh shoemaker; she died in 1890, aged 65. Their children were: Isabell Young, who married Charles Firth of Fell Grove, Yorkshire; Mina, who married William Cunningham of Brisbane, Australia; James Robson, who died unmarried; John; William, who emigrated to Toowoomba, Queensland; Mary, who married Frederick William Sykes from Leeds; Margaret; and Robert, who moved to Brisbane, Australia. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) recorded in 1852 as saddler and ironmonger in Lilliesleaf. If this was not an error for ‘Thomas’, then they must as least have been closely related. It is also possible he was the same James who ran the Subscription Library in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Blawearie in Cavers Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included George B. and Adam. James Douglas (b.1833) son of Thomas and Mary Beattie. He emigrated to Australia, where he farmed at Mount Prospect, Leichhardt and Kotupna in Victoria, and in 1885 settled at Guy Fawkes (now called ‘Ebor’) in New South Wales. Robyn Crosslé wrote a book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994) about him, containing...
extracts of many family letters, especially from his brother Gen. Peter Stephenson. He married Esther Rathie, daughter of his cousin Barbara Andison and James Rathie. Their children were Thomas Scott, Barbara, James Douglas, Mary, Archibald, Esther, John, William, Adam Robert and Barbara Esther Mabel. James (b.1836) son of Robert, he was farmer at Galalaw. He married Margaret, daughter of builder George Tait. Their children were: Robert, who was an engineer in Toronto; James, who later farmed at Galalaw and married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull; John, a science teacher in Kilwinning; and George, town missionary in Kirkintilloch. James (19th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School during part of 1893, between Mr. Jay and Mr. Inglis. James (19th C.) resident at East Bank House. He was one of the executors for the firm of Dickson & Turnbull when it folded in about 1876. He may have been a brother of George, the main Turnbull partner. James (1846–1923) engineer born in Hawick, who was long involved with Allars Kirk. His father died during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He wrote a memoir, which was published (at the insistence of John R. Purdom) as ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927), which contains an invaluable record of Hawick shops, businesses, people and customs of the mid-1800s. James Robert (b.1852) eldest son of James, tenant at Billerwell. He emigrated to Canada and worked as an auctioneer in Edmonton. James (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was farmer at Galalaw like his father. He married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull. Jane (b.c.1775) originally from England, she was listed as grocer and spirit dealer at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. She was probably proprietor of the Horse and Hounds Inn. She lived there with Thomas and John, who were probably her sons. Jane nee Scott (b.1777/8) postmistress in Denholm in the mid-19th century. She is probably the vintner of that name recorded in Denholm in 1837 and 1852. She married Alexander. In 1841 she was ‘Jeany Turnbull Seur.’ living at the Cross Keys Inn with her joiner son John, daughter Jeany and nephew John Scott. She was listed as postmistress in 1851, with her daughter Jane as assistant. Jane (1792–1866) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her older sister Eleanor. They were referred to as ‘the Misses Turnbull’ among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 she was living at the same address with her niece, also Eleanor Turnbull. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. In 1501, along with her sister Margaret, she was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1509 she and Elizabeth (perhaps another sister) had sasines for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshire. She probably married Thomas Elphinstone, who had a charter for half the lands of Hassendeanbank (along with her) from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn in 1512. And she may later have been the Mrs. Janet Seton (nee Turnbull) who infested Archibald Douglas of Timpended in Hassendeanbank. She may be the Janet who had a sasine for Lanton in 1502 (with Elizabeth and Margaret having the sasine in 1506). Janet (d.bef. 1526) granted a charter for part of Philiphaugh in 1509. She may have been daughter or wife of Adam of Philiphaugh. She is probably the deceased Janet described in 1526 as having possessing a third of Philiphaugh. This piece of land reverted to Ralph, whose widow Margaret Ker gained them according to the 1526 document. It is unclear how she was related to the Janet recorded possessing Philiphaugh in 1555. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1555 when her son John was served heir to her lands of Philiphaugh. She could have been wife of Robert of Philiphaugh, who is recorded in the 1530s. Janet (16th C.) recorded in Ancrum in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It was quite unusual for women to be named as criminals in this way, and she is one of only 2 such names on this particular list. Jean (d.bef. 1632) daughter of Walter of Templehall. Along with her sister Beatrix she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewlands from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope) in 1604. She must have been a minor then, since in 1605 her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector) acted on their behalf to removed several people from their lands. In 1632, by which time she was deceased, her sister claimed the other half of their inherited lands. Jean (b.1819) daughter of Alexander and Jane Scott. Her mother was postmistress in Denholm, and her brother John was a joiner. They lived at the Cross Keys Inn, where she was also a spirit dealer. John (14th C.) had a charter for the lands of ‘Hundallwalschop’, i.e. Hundlehope in Peeblesshire. This was given by King David II in 1357, as documented in a transsumpt of 1534, with his surname recorded as ‘Trumbull’. His daughter and heiress Margaret married William Gledstains. of that Ilk. Margaret later resigned her lands of Robertson to her son John; this suggests that this John of Hendleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnbulls. John (14th C.) was granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougall in the reign of David II. The lands were ‘Litlegrewy’, ‘Glengarg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360. He was also recorded as Deputy to the Sheriff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th C.) granted the lands of Wauchopehead in a charter of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by ‘John Bour’. John (14th/15th C.) son of Adam ‘of Whytehope’, i.e. Whithope in the Borthwick valley. He was granted lands at Hassendeanbank in 1409 by the Baron, William Cunningham of Kilmours. Several generations of Johns subsequently held these lands. Sir John of Falshope (14th/15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George Scott, 2nd Laird of Synton. His lands were either Phawhope near the head of the Ettrick or Fauldshope opposite Oakwood. He may have been ancestor of Sir Thomas who held the same lands in the late 15th century. John of Minto (d.1423) nicknamed ‘out with the sword’ for his fiery temperament. In 1390 he granted part of the Barony of Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth, probably his nephew. He was captured by the English in 1399 (along with Sir Richard Rutherford) and imprisoned in the Tower of London until 1413. Thereafter he took part in the Battle of Cravant (part of the Hundred Years War), supporting the French, at which perhaps as many as 3,000 Scots fell. He appears to have died there, although it is also alleged that he died later of leprosy, causing dispute over the title to his lands. He was succeeded by his son Walter. There was an inquiry in 1424 into whether the grant to Sir William Stewart was legal, because of his supposed leprosy. His sister may have married Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley. John of Fulton (15th C.) part of the investigation into the leprosy of John of Minto in 1425/6. About the same time he also witnessed a retour of Walter Scott in the lands of Eilrig, and is there recorded as ‘Johannem Turnbull de Foultoone’, along with David Turnbull. He may be the John who was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1432 he was recorded as ‘Johannes Turnebule’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. John of Lanton (15th C.) recorded as being of ‘Langtoun’ and constable of ‘le Newerk’ when he witnessed a charter in 1439. The document was a grant by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn, for lands in Primside, and was made at Newark Castle. John (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451, when the custom of his goods was paid to Lord Crichton. In 1453 the rentals from the west side of Dumure (it is not clear where this was) were in his hands. John of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded in 1464 resigning the lands of Hassendeanbank to ‘William de Edmondston’. This may simply have been resigning them to his superior before they were granted again, since the family appear to still hold the lands about a century later. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He is surely related to the William of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1432. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Ern Cleuch (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Probably the same John ‘Turnebull' was on the inquest panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5 (along with Hector, George and William of Minto). He is probably related to the David of Ern Cleuch who is recorded 30 years later. John (15th C.) granted the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, resigned by William Lindsay of Garmilton. He is described as dwelling in Borthwick (presumably the Borthwick Water). In a document of 1468 he binds himself on payment of 100 merks Scots on 40 days notice to resign the lands in favour of John Lord Lindsay of the Byres. John (15th C.) recorded in 1468 when he was one of 2 men appointed to represent Selkirkshire on a Parliamentary inquisition to assess the tax on barons. It is unclear whether the is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Harden (15th C.) probably the last Turnbull of Harden, son of Walter (who is recorded in 1468). He had a charter for the lands of Harden in 1482, granted by the Baron of Wilton, Henry Wardlaw. A letter under the seal of James IV in 1491 requires John Scott, Baron of Wilton to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in the lands of Harden, which had fallen into the King’s hands because he had ‘died a bastard without lawful heirs’. He could be the same John who held the lands of Stouslie. He may be the John who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Brantholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. John (15th C.) listed in 1476 as being ‘of Phirith’, which could possibly be Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is among a number of Border Lairds involved in an action over lands in Linton Parish, registered with Parliament. He is probably the John ‘duellands in the Fithe’ who in 1479 was ordered (along with James Alemoor of that Ilk) to pay rentals of lands in Cavers Parish to Robert of ‘Murheid’. John (15th C.) son of Thomas of Phaup. He leased Phaup at least in the period 1483–7. He was listed as son and heir of Thomas ‘of Fawlishop’ in 1486 when he leased the lands of Huntly. John (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girmaud) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas of Greenwood to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Johanne Turnbull’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when he was assigned the lands of ‘Corscleuch’ (i.e. Crosscleuch) by James IV. He may thus have been the first of the Turnbulls of Crosscleuch. John (15th C.) son of Robert in Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-ataire in Jedburgh in 1493. John (15th C.) tenant in Ruecastle, recorded in 1493. He had remission for stealing 6 oxen, 2 horses and 12 cows from tenants ‘de slitrik’ (i.e. on slitirig Water). His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Probably the same tenant in Rucastle was fined in 1502 for non-appearance at the Justice-ataire, when he was surety for himself. Additionally he was one of the 20 or so Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Thomas of Bedrule was fined for not entering him in the court. John of Gatehousecote (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-ataire at Jedburgh in 1493. George of Bedrule had remission for several crimes, including assisting him in his ‘theft and treason’. Separately, George Waugh in Hawick was allowed to compone for resetting him when he was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of Archibald Rutherford. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Probably the same John ‘in gaithous coit’ was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. Also in 1502 he was ‘in gatehousecoit’ when he served as surety for his brother Thomas, both fined for non-appearance. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ at the 1493 Justice-ataire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh, he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of bringing in Englishmen and he was also charged with common theft. His surety was the Laird of Howpasley. John ‘de Newhalburn’ (15th C.) listed in the pardon granted by the King to Sir Thomas of Phuaup in 1494. He may have been a son of Sir Thomas (perhaps the same son recorded in the 1480s); he and Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ are listed, with one of them being ‘suorum filiorum’ (his son), but it is unclear which one. His residence (transcribed as ‘Newhalby’ in Pitcairn’s book) may have been the Newhal Burn to the south-west of Traquair. John (15th C.) listed in the will of Sir David Scott of Brantholme being bequeathed 40 sheep. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johnns. John ‘Case’ (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-ataire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his nickname there is given as ‘easly’. He is also recorded as ‘John Turnbule, callit Case, in Nethir Boneche-stir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire of 1494/5; he contributed 4 cows. He was probably related to the David of Boucherste recorded in 1502. John (15th C.) recorded as being in Minto in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynito’. His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. It is possible he is the same as John of Minto, who was recorded in the early 16th century. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1498 as ‘Suer[?] Johannes turnbul’; along with William of Minto, Ralph Ker and others, he was part of a bond to act upon men who were already declared as fugitives. He may also be the John who was recorded as father-in-law to Robert Young in Minto, for whom William of Minto served as surety in 1502. John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for committing theft before the time of his previous remission and also for involvement with the Duke of Albany during the earlier revolt. John ‘Blinmd John’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Sande Turnbullis brothir of Ballentyn, callit blind Johne’ in the accounts of the Justice-aire of Jedburgh, when he contributed 2 cows (for the expenses of the court, presumably in lieu of a fine). This is probably Bellendean near Roberton, but other places may be possible. His brother was clearly Alexander. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as resident of Dryden. He was allowed to compone for the crimes of commuting with rebels who were at the horn, specifically Patrick and Gilbert. Probably the same John, son of Andrew of Dryden was recorded in 1494/5 among men who John Scott of Deloraine was allowed to compound for associating with; they were said to have stolen 60 sheep belonging to William Murray from Sundhope. In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1498 he is listed being ‘in Dridane’, presumably meaning he farmed at Dryden, near Teviothead. Along with John Scott from Northhouse, he received a pardon for his crimes of assisting the English. In 1502 he was surety (along with Alexander in Commons-side) for Philip in Whithope and David in Carrinpool. Probably the same John in Dryden was surety in 1502 for William Anderson and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother Nicholas had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. John (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. John (15th/16th C.) son of Philip, probably the Laird of Whithope. He is mentioned in 1494/5 when the Laird of Bedrule acted as his surety and was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire. He was also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, including Turnbuls of Fulton and Boucherste; his name is recorded as ‘Johannis Turnbull Philipson’. John ‘Blue John’ (15th/16th C.) one of the Turnbuls and others who were failing to appear in court in Jedburgh in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Many of the others were from Rulewater, suggesting he was also. His nickname was recorded as ‘blew Johne’, and he was distinct from John in Ruelcastle, John in Jedburgh and John in Wells, who were also listed. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was among a large group of men who failed to appear to the charge of murder of Robert Oliver and were declared as fugitives. Mark Ker of Dolphinston was fined for his non-appearance. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Wells in 1502. Along with about 20 Turnbuls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Mark Ker in Dolphinston was called to enter him, and subsequently fined, while he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods; the Sheriff of Roxburgh served as his surety (unlike for most of the other men). He was probably related to Adam in Wells, who was also listed. John of Tofts (15th/16th C.) served as surety in 1502 for George, described as ‘in Tofts’, who was surely a close relative. George, along with Robert, called ‘Murialle’ had been involved in a raiding party that burned and stole livestock from Riddell. Probably the same John ‘in tofts’ is mentioned in 1493 when his son Cock had remission for theft of an ox from Minto. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. James Davidson in ‘canys’ (perhaps Camieston) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de france’ in 1502 at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Master of Angus (George Douglas) was fined for failing to arrest him. It is unclear where ‘France’ was located. John of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as an associate... of Peter in Bonchester. Along with his accomplices, they had burned grain belonging to George Rutherford at ‘Sandystainis’. He may be the same as one of the 2 men called John ‘in Mynto’ who were listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503–20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbulls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to James given remission for any role in helping the treasesmen of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503–20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbulls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to James and Adam, recorded as tenants at Hornshole in 1501 and 1502, respectively. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as owner of a tenement of land in Selkirk, lying between the main street and the Ettrick. Probably the same John is recorded in Selkirk in 1532. John ‘Black Sow’ (d.1531) hanged for ‘Common Theft, outputting and inputting thereof’. There is no information about his relationship to other Turnbulls. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with Hector of Barnhills in a sasine in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1531. John (16th C.) listed in 1531 as ‘tutor of the lord of Phillophaucht’ and grandson of Robert ‘Trumbill’ when an acknowledgement was made in Selkirk for a tack being given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philphauh. Probably the same John ‘of Phillophaucht’ witnessed a document in 1530/1. Robert was also recorded as tutor of Philphaugh in 1531 and surely related. He was presumably tutor for John, who was son of Ralph. John of Hassendeanbank (d.c. 1540) son and heir of George of Hassendeanbank. In 1533 he made a declaration in Selkirk that he had tried to pay Andrew Davidson for the redemption of a tenement there. He was also recorded in a court case of 1540 involving a dispute between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawfalt, with William Scott of Hassendean, over a ‘wadset’ of his as well as other issues for the lands of ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and ‘Easter Mainis, called Copit Rig’. He is probably the John ‘of Hassendene’ recorded in 1538 when he discharged Andrew Ker and his wife Marion Pringle for all previous fees on the lands of ‘Mabyllynnflat’. In 1540 he sold a tenement in Selkirk to John Thomson. He is probably the John ‘of Hassendene burn or bank’ who sold land in Selkirk to Adam Vogan in 1544; Henry was one of the witnesses and may have been related. His family appear to have held the lands of Hassendeanbank since 1409. John (16th C.) early example of a Turnbull not directly associated with the Borders. He was Deacon of the Guild of Wrights in Cupar, Fife. In 1545 he and others were imprisoned for leading the Craftsmen of Cupar in a revolt against their Provost and Bailies. John (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1535. He was chaplain and ‘vicar pensionary of le barechy Benedochy’ (i.e. the parish of Benedochy). His testament was read out in Selkirk, whereby he left everything to his servants and the poor, appointing as executors John Brydon (probably the notary in Selkirk) and his sister (perhaps wife of Brydon). John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. John (d.bef. 1544) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1544 his daughter and sole heir Alison was given sasine of his tenement there. However, confusingly she seems to have shared a tenement with another heir, Margaret. She immediately sold her half tenement to William Elliot. John (16th C.) recorded in 1559 as Clerk of Minto Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. It is possible that he is the same as ‘Johanne Trummill’, who acted as a witness for the inventory after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. John of Philphaugh (c.1505–bef. 1582) son and heir of Ralph, Laird of Philphaugh. He may be the John ‘heir of Philphaucht’ who witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535. In 1535 he was ‘of Philhop’ (but Philphaugh is probably meant) when his wardship was held jointly by Mark Ker of Kippielaw (his uncle) and Robert (probably an uncle or grandfather). The pair agreed to each hold half of his lands until he came of age. However, in 1536 Robert gave over his half to Mark Ker. He came of age in 1536/7 when described as ‘[illegible] of Philop and lord of the lands of Holdene and Philop[hauch]’; it seems likely that ‘Philop’ refers to land near Philphaugh and not Philhope in the Borthwick valley. He then appointed his uncle Mark Ker as curator for his lands, failing which Andrew Ker of Auld Roxburgh. In 1539 he was on the inquest panel for Alexander Lauder succeeding to Todrig. Probably the same John of Philphaugh is recorded in 1558 when he was served heir to his mother Janet, in her 5-acre lands of Philphaugh. He was also recorded as witness to the 1560 bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He is probably the ‘Lard of Phillphoauch’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Perhaps the same John of Philiphaugh in 1579/80 served as an arbitrator on behalf of Thomas Dalgleish of Deuchar and Simon Scott of Gamescleuch in a case against Robert of Burnfoot and Robert of Burnhead and in the same year witnessed the installation of the new Parson and Vicar in Ashkirk. He is probably the Laird of Philiphaugh whose son and heir Mark and other son Robert both witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf. Additionally in 1579/80 he and his son and heir Mark witnessed a transaction for lands near Melrose. In 1580 he was deceased when Patrick Murray of Falahill gave sasine of 4 acres of land, with mansion, houses, etc., to his daughters Janet, Agnes, Margaret and Marion (alias ‘Mawsie’); his eldest daughter Elizabeth complained that this sasine should not prejudice her, while Janet and Agnes promised not to sell their parts without the consent of their mother’s brother John Scott in Catslack. The witnesses included John Scott in Catslack, John Murray in Philiphaugh and James Ker in Yair. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement involving lands in Hassendeanburn. In 1581 he witnessed a dispute involving Scotts in Hundleshope. He was deceased in 1581/2 when his widow Isobel Douglas resigned her thirds and liferents of lands to his son and heir Mark; George in Philiphaugh and William, Burgess of Selkirk, were witnesses.

John (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule. His house and yard are referred to in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. This could have been the same as John ‘in Roull’ recorded in 1583/4 along with George in Hallrule and Walter in Hobburn, when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had an ‘escheat’ to seize their goods for not vacating their lands. He could be the ‘Johnne Turneble of H rural’ listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. John of Hassendeanburn (16th C.) recorded in 1564 when he accused David Elliot (son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill) of stealing 80 sheep from his lands of Hassendean Kirk. It is unclear how he was related to the Turnbuls of Hassendeanbank. John (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses and brother of Hector of Belses. In 1576 Adam had a pledge before the Privy Council that his sons would refrain from thieving; this included him, as well as his brothers ‘Hekie’, David and George. In 1580 he was a witness when his brother Hector gave sasine to his daughter and heir Katherine for his lands in Belses. John of Gatehousecote (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among the list of men accused of treason for assisting James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. Probably the same ‘Jok Turnbull in Gaithous Cott’ was listed in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. John (16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule. In 1569 he was warded within the Sherifdom of Perth, with his sureties being Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Denesyde (16th C.) described as holding a peel house. He was probably a direct ancestor of Adam, who left Denesyde in 1715. He may have been descended from Robert and David who were recorded in 1611. John of Howden (16th C.) recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Barnhills, Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbuls (from Minto, Beulie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He is surely related to the later John of Howden. In 1580 he was listed among men who owed money to John Dawson in Selkirk. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Bedrule 1576–78. George was Reader right after this, so it is possible that one of the names is an error. He also appears to have served as Reader at Abbotrule and Lessuden. It is possible that he was an ex-monk of Dryburgh Abbey. John (16th C.) nephew of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, with his father perhaps being Robert. He was listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’ when members of the family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for the murder of Thomas Shiel. John (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Hutlerburn in 1579 when there was a dispute over a horse with neighbouring tenants in Huntly. John (16th C.) gave a sasine in 1579 of his 10 poundland of ‘Reuhop or Philop’, in the Barony of Hawick and Sherrifdom of Selkirk, to Martin Elliot. This was surely Martin of Braidlie, whose son was Simon of Hope. He did this with the consent of his son, whose forename is not given. It is possible he is the same as John of Howden, and possibly also John of Philiphaugh. John (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as occupier of 2 rigs in Lilliesleaf. These lay to the east of Porteous Croft, where William Middlemas held lands. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Nether Bonchester. In 1581 he was listed among the 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He could be the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers being Adam and George) accused of harassing the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. John of Minto (16th/17th C.) possibly son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded, since Hector Turnbull ‘tutor of Minto’ is recorded in 1553/4 and in 1569. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with Sir Thomas and 2 Rutherfords. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliot in their feud with the Pringles. He also served as surety in 1576. In 1576 he was listed among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), who had a bond not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters); however, there was a complaint a few months later that his ‘servand and dependar’ Walter in Firth attacked Patrick Bennet, servant to Adam of Belses. In about 1578 he signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls and another bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Wat of Bewlie, to enter pledges into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which apparently he did) or be declared a rebel. He and Wat of Bewlie had a caution for £2000 that they would appear before the Privy Council on 2000 penalty. In 1588/9 Alexander Horxburgh of that Ilk was surety for him that he and those he was responsible for would keep the peace, while he was surety for Hob Elliot, ‘Vica’s Hob’ (and someone else signed for him ‘beacaus I can not wryte’). Also in 1588/9 he served as cautioner for Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. In 1589 he and Walter of Bedrule were listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. Additionally in 1589, he and Walter of Bedrule were cited by the Privy Council for not remaining in Edinburgh after instructed to do so because they were guilty of resetting a group of Turnbulls and Douglases who were involved in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; James Gledstains of Cocklaw was his surety. He is also listed about 1590 among landed men of the Borders and in 1591 when he was among the Barons who pledged their support for the King against the Earl of Bothwell. Also in 1590 he acted as a ‘surety in relief’ for Walter of Bedrule and was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1591 he subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Martin Elliot of Braidlie. In 1592 Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk served as his cautioner in a bond of loyalty to the King. In 1595 he was recorded along with his sons Thomas and George, among Turnbulls and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill. He is also recorded in 1595 when he was one of the main signatories of a letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Minto; this included the Turnbulls of Hallrule, Barnhills, Gatehouse-cote and ‘David Daviesoune of the Cambes’. In 1598, along with James in Hassendale, Walter Scott ‘of Ordschaw’ and James Langlands, were denounced for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. In 1599 he served as cautioner for entering the Lorraines who were accused of the murder of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; there was also a bond subscribed at Barnhills in the same year, with a notary signing for him. His name is recorded in 1603 on a long list of local landowners whom the Baron of Hassendale (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) was trying to remove. The name of his wife is not known. In 1603 his son Thomas was served heir to his lands in Minto (suggesting he was deceased by then). He had at least one other son, George. John (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas. In 1592 he is recorded in a complaint to the Privy Council by James Stewart of Wells that he threatened his servant when he was ploughing the fields at Wells. He was assisted by his brother Robert, with the incitement of their brother Walter of Bedrule, and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1599 as a servitor of the Laird of Bedrule (presumably Walter). He was a subscriber at Barnhills to a bond by John of Minto to enter the Lorraines of Harwood. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) nephew of George of Belses. In 1603 he was recorded as ‘Jok Trumbill in Belsis’ when his uncle George was convicted of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his wife Marion. John (16th/17th C.) from Braidhaugh. He is recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. William ‘of Brodehaugh’ is listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Macksie. He is recorded in 1601 when he was accused by Mr. Gray of Morpeth of being part of a group of Scotsmen of stealing from him. The others were Lorraines of Appotside and Turnbulls of Braidhaugh. In 1603 he was ‘of Maiksyde’ when, along with Turnbulls from Nether Bonchester, Braidhaugh and ‘Harkschaw’, he was ordered to find caution of 300 merks to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. He is also recorded as ‘in Maksyld’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ in 1604 when he was ‘Bailie in that part’ for James Sandilands, Baron of Feurule. In 1605 he was one of the people asked to remove themselves from the lands of Tempilhall and Brewlands. Another John, also tenant at Templehall or Brewlands, is also mentione in the same action. John of Barnhills (d.c.1628) eldest son of Hector of Barnhills. He had a marriage contract of 1597 with Isobel, daughter of George Turnbull of Hallrule. This was followed by a grant of the half lands of Hallrule in 1603, when he was still a minor. He had a charter for the lands of Barnhills in 1607, and a charter of confirmation in 1618. In 1609 he and his father Hector were part of an action brought by David, son of John Scott ‘of the Tour in Hawick’, for not paying what they had borrowed from him. In 1613 he sold ‘10 acres of Easter Barnhills’ to Ragwell Bennet. In 1617 there was a ‘renunciation’ to him from James and George Scott (which branch of the Scotts is unclear). He had a ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliot (both elder and younger) of Stobs in 1617, and some kind of financial arrangement with Ragwell Bennet in 1618. His brother William in Langrav succeeded to the lands of Barnhills in 1628. John (16th/17th C.) one of the Turnbulls who were accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Trumbill, sone to Hectour of Wauchope’. His brothers included George (also accused in this trial), Thomas (who succeeded to Wauchope) and probably David (who was originally the heir). He was acquitted, although his brother Thomas was found guilty. John (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and grandson of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He married Judith Forster, probably in the 1590s. John (17th C.) son of George in Philiphaugh. In 1601 he was served heir to his father’s 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was in turn succeeded by his son William in 1606. John of Howden (17th C.) member of the ‘assyse’ in Dumfries in 1622 and 1623. Also in 1623 he is recorded in a letter of inhibition in Selkirk, for non-payment to Sir John Stewart of Traquair. He could be the Turnbull of Howden who held half the lands of Philiphaugh in the early 1600s, succeeding his father George in the 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1627 he concedes some lands in Philiphaugh to William, portioner of Philiphaugh. In 1630 he was served heir to his father Mark of Howden in the lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. He is surely related to the John who succeeded his father George of Howden in 1601 and the John of Howden recorded in 1576. John (16th/17th C.) half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, described as ‘apparent of Harden’ in 1608 (even although there had not been any Turnbull Lairds of Harden for a century). Along with John Scott (brother of Walter of Woll) he attacked some of the citizens of Selkirk, and when apprehended by the Selkirk Bailies the pair were forcibly taken from imprisonment by a gang of Scotts and Turnbulls. They were then ordered to appear in Edinburgh or be declared rebels. It is possible he was a son of Isabel, who was described as ‘gudwif of Woll’ in 1579 (with her husband’s name not recorded). John (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Scots and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. He is listed as ‘apparent of Hundeley’ (presumably Huntly). His brothers Robert and Andrew were also involved. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Elsteches’ recorded in 1612, this probably being Elfhaugh. Along with Andrew in Bonchester, and Andrew’s sons Thomas and John, he complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. William was also tenant there, and so presumably a relative. John (16th/17th C.) son of James ‘called of Raperlaw’. In 1619 was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He was one of the few men who appeared personally and hence was not denounced as a rebel. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ (possibly the one in Bedrule Parish) when he acted as caution (along Gilbert, son to Gavin Elliott of Brugh and 3 men from Headshaw) in 1623 for Mungo Scott from Castleside. Perhaps the same John was ‘in Bedrule’ in 1643 when his lands were valued at £34. John of Minto (d.1641) possibly son of Thomas. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. His sons William and Robert became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively. His son John succeeded while still a minor. He died while on army service in Newcastle, this fact convincing his superior to allow his son to marry before he was of age. He is probably the John of Minto whose daughter Alison married William Douglas of Timpendale in 1655. John of Minto (b.1620s) son of John and Elizabeth Elliott. He was brother of William and Robert. He married Rachel Inglis in 1641, even although he was technically too young: this was because his father had died while in military service (and also through the help of his uncle William Turnbull, minister of Makerstown). In the 1643 Land Tax Rolls he was owner of the main part of Minto, along with ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ (his uncle) and Elizabeth Elliot (his mother), valued at £2006 13s 4d. He was also listed as holding the ‘Minister of Makerston’s Lands’, being Hornshole’, valued at £100. He is probably the John who was in 1655 served heir to his father John of Minto in 1/3 of the lands and Barony of Minto, including a half merk of land in Minto, with advowson of the church, ‘2 parts of the said lands undisposed’. At the same time he also inherited 1 merkland of Hornshole. It is unclear what his relationship was with John of Knowe, but it seems easy to mix them up; in 1655 he received from John of Knowe his third of the rent of Hyndlee and Rouchhope and in 1656 rented Minto Craig to him (definitively proving they were not one and the same man). In 1657 he was the heritable proprietor of the lands of Hornshole when he had a ‘wadset’ for them with John Scott of Brieryyards, with the consent of William Turnbull, minister of Makerston. He appears to have owned part of Standhill in 1660 and could be the John in Standhill recorded in the 1643, 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. Payments to Lord Lyon in 1662 suggest this is when the family matriculated their arms. He was renewed as a Roxburghshire J.P. in 1663. He was probably the Laird of Minto recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £2006 13s 4d. His wife may be the ‘Lady Minto’ who paid tax on £200 for lands in Southdean Parish in 1663. He had one child, also John, and father and son are also easy to confuse. It was probably his son John who sold off the Minto estate. John (17th C.) described as ‘indweller in Machsyde’ when he was witness to a sasine in Rulewater in 1653. John of Minto (d.1684) son of John. He was involved in a bond with John Turnbull of Knowe, partly paid off in 1668. He was probably the John, recorded along with William in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably also the same John of Minto who was later married to Rachel, daughter of Cornelius Ingles of ‘Eastbarnes’ (she is recorded as his wife in 1681). In 1672 he had a charter of the Barony of Minto, which was ratified in 1681. In 1673 they were involved in a land deal with Walter Scott of Harwood, selling off the Minto estate, and ending its connection with his family, which had lasted many generations. He also sold about a third of the lands of Minto to Gilbert Elliott of Craigend (who was probably his maternal uncle, and not the same man as Sir Gilbert Elliot, who would unite them into the Barony of Minto in 1706). It seems likely that he was forced to sell off his lands to clear debts (but it may be that the arrangements in the 1670s were only wadsets, and he lost the lands for good in the 1690s). He is probably the John of Minto whose brother William is recorded in a deed in 1673. In 1674 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife Rachel (so her father must have been a Burgess too). His wife is recorded recovering the ‘wadset’ with the Earl of Tarras over lands in the Barony of Minto in the period 1682–94. This must be the same John of Minto described as deceased in 1684 when his son John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in his right. He had unnamed children buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1670 and 1674. John of Langshaw (17th C.) appointed one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (along with Harry McDougall of Makerstoun) in 1665. John of Knowe (d.1675/6) probably eldest son and successor as Laird to Thomas. In 1652 his brother William was appointed as tutor to the children of their relative Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Chesterhall near Ancrum). He appears to have rented Hyndlee and Rouchhope (along with other farmers) from John of Minto in 1655, and he rented Minto Craig from John of Minto in 1656. There is an account relating to him from 1664 among records in Selkirk. In 1655 he is recorded in a ‘tack’ with Thomas Turnbull, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and in 1657 in an ‘inhibition’ against Robert Turnbull, son of a Jedburgh merchant. In a discharge of 1658 he is listed along with other Turnbulls, suggesting that he was son of Thomas and brother of William. He is recorded in a bond with James Scott in 1658. He was fined £2,000 in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying £227. He was on a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and he complained against the planned division of that parish in the same year. He paid annual rent to the treasurer of Selkirk in 1667. In 1668 he is mentioned as cautioner for John of Minto (making it clear that they were not the same person, although their relationship is unclear). It was established in 1670 that he owned the burial place within the bellhouse of Hassendean Kirk. His wife Agnes Liddell died in 1648. He was probably succeeded by another John, who may have been the John (son of John) who became an apprentice surgeon with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1675. His daughter Helen married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead, was probably his daughter. His children John, Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated 1661, while he was still alive, and another in 1676, possibly after he died) are among the papers of the Horsburgh family in the National Archives. His death is recorded on a table tomb in the old Minto graveyard, along with Thomas of Knowe (d.1646). John of Firth (17th C.) recorded receiving land from Walter Riddell in 1645. He paid tax on £200 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1664. In 1675 he led a ‘poinding’ against Bessie Murray, widow of James ‘Bucholme’. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for his lands of Firth. John (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter wanted ane drop’. It is unclear if he was from Hawick or elsewhere, but he must have been a trader at the market in Hawick. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He is recorded in 1684 when his former servant James Johnston was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included George (b.1680). John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Rutherford and their children included Agnes (b.1682). John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Fowler and their children included William (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681) and John (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were James Todshaw and John Armstrong. John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Agnes Brown and their children included William (b.1683), Thomas (b.1685) and Isobel

Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead,

Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated

John (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Rutherford and their children in-

of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Fowler

and their children included William (b.1679),

Margaret (b.1681) and John (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were James Todshaw and John married Agnes Brown and their children included

William (b.1683), Thomas (b.1685) and Isobel

Turnbull
(b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Thomas Henderson and Andrew Rodger. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Robert (b.1686) and Patrick (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Patrick Dodds (who was surely related to his wife) and Thomas Robson and in 1688 were Patrick and John Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1687. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Agnes (b.1671). The baptism witnesses were John Scott and John Aitkin. In 1684 he was listed among many people declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Aitken and their children included John (b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were George Johnstone and Andrew Fletcher. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. He was fined in 1689 for his ‘exhorbitant’ marriage with Christian Scott. He may be the same man as the John declared a fugitive in 1684. He was ‘John Trumble, candlemaker’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. He was also listed as a candlemaker on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) servitor of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge who is recorded as witness to a bond of 1691 and again in 1693. Possibly the same John is described in 1694 as servitor of ‘Mr Harie Mauil of Kellie’ in another document relating to a bond of 1691 with Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Gavin Elliott, his uncle. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton, and ‘The malt kilne’ is listed after him, suggesting he may have been maltman at Newton. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) carrier at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in West Middle on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the later John in West Middle. John (17th C.) tenant in Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish. John (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) shepherd at Clarilaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his wife’s will was recorded in 1690. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Miller in 1689. John of Knowe (17th/18th C.) probably succeeded John. He may have been the John who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1675. He is recorded in 1689 bringing an action against Rev. Francis Scott, after he had been removed by the Privy Council. John of Minto (17th/18th C.) son of John and Elisabeth Elliott of Stobs. He sold the Minto estate in 1703 to his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw, ancestor of the Earls of Minto; it is also stated that he sold it to Walter Scott of Harwood in 1673, but perhaps this was a wadset only. His connection with the other Turnbulls (of Minto and/or Knowe) seems unclear, but he was probably the John (described as a merchant) who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1684. It may have been his son Patrick who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1704, in right of his deceased father (in which case he died about 1703). John (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, brother of Michael and Robert, who were also coopers. All 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies in 1678. In 1689 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Andrew Dodds. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as cooper on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1700 he was a witness for a baptism for flesher Robert Renwick. He was a cooper in 1709 when one of his children was baptised and when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He was an elder of the Kirk, and in 1717 charged with collecting money ‘from ye foot of ye play la to the west end of ye town’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He was still an Elder in 1718. In 1719 he was ‘cuper elder’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Riddell. He was recorded as a cooper in 1699 when his son Andrew was baptised, with witnesses shoemakers Robert and George Oliver. It seems likely he was father of the cooper John who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1710; if so his wife may have been Agnes Moffat and other children were James (b.1684) and Elspeth (b.1688). He married Helen ‘Junk’ in
Turnbull

1706 and had children including: James (b.1707); Michael (b.1709); Isobel (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); Mary (b.1716); and John (b.1719). The witnesses in 1709 and 1712 were cooper Michael and weaver Robert (his brothers) and in 1716 were ‘Mr’ Thomas Douglas (brother to the Laird of Cavers) and mason John Napier. John (17th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was separate from the contemporary cooperator of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘oye to Mr James Ker Sometimes Minster att Abbotrule’ in 1704 and 1707. His children, baptised in Hawick, included Thomas (b.1707) and Mary (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were were Bailie George Martin and Patrick McLellan and in 1707 were William Cunningham and apothecary Walter Scott. He was presumably either nephew or grandson of James Ker, but the precise relationship is unclear. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in Cavers in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was shepherd in Whitchesters in 1710. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Malie (b.1710); and Agnes (b.1712). The witnesses in 1710 were Walter Nixon and Henry Orrock. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Boonraw in 1708 and 1711 when his sons William and Archibald were baptised in Wilton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Lauds and their children included: Margaret (b.1710); Andrew (b.1713); Andrew (again, b.1715); James (b.1717); Helen Margaret (b.1720); and John (b.1724). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Wester Groundstone in 1721 and 1725. His wife was Janet Colvin and their children included: Janet (b.1717); John (b.1718); Marion (b.1721); Andrew (b.1723); and Agnes (b.1725). The witnesses in 1721 were George and Richard Scott and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John (17th/18th C.) mason of Hawick. He is probably the mason who witnessed baptisms in 1706 (along with mason John Napier) for mason Peter Mitchell and in 1711 (along with mason Nichol Turnbull) for mason Peter Mitchell. In 1717, along with John the cooper, he was ordered to collect monies from the west end of the Town, suggesting he may have lived there. It is possible he was related to the other John. In 1720 he (and mason Andrew) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Colwart. He was still an elder in 1722. In 1725, along with Andrew (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young. Along with Dand Gray in Weensland he witnessed a baptism in 1725 for tenant Robert Scott. He witnessed another baptism in 1726 for flesher Robert Hardie. Probably the same mason John had a child called Nichol in Hawick in 1709, the mother being Jean Dunlap (labelled ‘fornicat.’). In 1721 he was recorded as a mason when he witnessed a baptism (along with Andrew) for shoemaker Andrew Scott and Janet Turnbull (who may have been related); the same 2 men were also witnesses in 1726. His unnamed child was baptised in 1715, with witnesses baxter John Whillans and mason Andrew Turnbull, younger. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1710 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He was probably son of an earlier cooper of the same family; he may be the John born to John and Agnes Moffat in Hawick in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Mossbrae in 1718 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, who may be his (although some are probably children of John at Roberton) include: Michael (b.1703); Margaret (b.1707); Isobel (b.1709); Mary (b.1709); William (b.1712); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and James (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Roberton itself in 1718, and was distinct from the John who was at Mossbrae. His children included Janet (b.1718). He may be the John who married Janet Little in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor to Walter Elliott, bailie-deput of the regaility of Hawick’ in 1718 when he was rebuked for having a horse race with Thomas Porteous on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1721. James (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Anne (b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton, may also have been his children. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who was paid in 1721 for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock. He may thus have been a clockmaker or other tradesman. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at West Middle in 1723 when his son John was baptised. He is probably related to the earlier John in West Middle. John (1712/3–87) tenant in Mackside. His family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although he appears to also be referred to there as Thomas). His wife Isabel died in 1756, aged 41. Their children included Betty, James and Thomas (who probably carried on as tenant of Mackside), as well as William, Mary, Elspeth and Margaret, who died in infancy. John (18th C.) resident of Parkhill recorded in 1725, 1728, 1733 and 1743 when children of his were baptised. He may have been brother of Walter who also had children baptised at Parkhill around the same time. They could both be descended from James who was at Parkhill a couple of decades earlier. His children included: Robert (b.1725); Margaret (b.1728); Janet (b.1733); and Robert (again, b.1743). Several other children baptised in Robertson could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Timbersidemill in 1747. He married Margaret Easton in 1737 and their children included: Mary (b.1738); James (b.1741); William (b.1743); Thomas (b.1747); John (b.1749); Helen (b.1752); and Robert (b.1755). The witnesses in 1747 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. John (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He paid the tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. John (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for a weaver George, who was probably related to him. John (1723–81) son of William, he was born at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. Around 1744 he was schoolmaster at Kirkton School, also serving as Session Clerk. That year he married Isabel Scott in Wilton. By 1750 he was at Ewes, where he was also Session Clerk. He married Bridget Monet in Hawick in 1759. His children (with his 1st wife) were: William; Betty; and John. With his 2nd wife he had at least one child: Janet. He died in Hawick. John of Wester Swanshiel (b.1729–1820) son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1750 (note there is some confusion here, since Walter Deans says he was son of James). In 1778 he sold Wester Swanshiel to Cornelius Elliot of Woolee, in order to lease a bigger farm (although he is recorded as still being the owner in 1788, so perhaps the sale had not gone through yet). This ended an association of those lands with his family for perhaps 300 years. In 1780 he occupied the farm of Berryfell and also rented Howasheil. He was a major heritor of Hobkirk Parish along with Henry Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He is recorded as farmer at Berryfell on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He later farmed at Whitehill Brae, where he died. He married Esther Douglas, a relative of Douglas of Trows. Their children were: Janet; Walter, who used to write songs and sonnets, entered the army, moved to England and had a single daughter; Esther; John, who was tenant at Brieryhill and later Minto Kames; Robert, who purchased Galalaw; Betty; and James, tenant farmer at Galalaw. The combined age of he and his wife on their Hobkirk tombstone is 184 (he being 91 and his wife 93). His descendants included Mr. Turnbull of 2 Tower Knowe in the early 1900s. John (d.1772) mason in Minto. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. It is possible he is the mason in Denholm whose unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1748 and the mason in Denholm, married to Marion Smith, whose son John was baptised in 1753. John (18th C.) cooper in Hawick, probably related to the earlier cooper of the same name. He married Christian Veitch and their children included Agnes (b.1756) and Elizabeth (b.1760). John ‘Garleek Jock’ (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1762. Later that year he married Margaret Storie (who died in 1806), the couple being rebuked for their ‘irregular marriage’. Their children included: William (b.1763); Robert (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1766); and Margaret (1770–1808), who died in Hawick. The 1766 witnesses were Robert Turnbull and Thomas Pringle. He is recorded as ‘garlic jock’ when his wife died. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (d.bef. 1799) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his wife Elizabeth Scott is recorded in 1799. John (1743/4–1816) probably son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at Mackside. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Mackside in the same year. He married Ann Common, and she died in 1803, aged 41. They had a daughter who died in infancy. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although some of the names and generations may be confused). John (b.c.1745) farm worker at Stonedge. By his first wife he had sons William (a forester in Jedforest) and James (farmer worker at Unthank, who died at Midburn). He secondly married Christian Grieve, and their children were: Robert, shepherd at Philphaugh and elsewhere; Kate, who married and moved to London; Margaret, who married George Henderson, weaver at Kilnove and was great-grandmother of Euphemia Henderson, who lived at Weens Lodge; Mary, second wife of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Midburn; and Jane, who married Andrew Turnbull, gardener at Weens. John (d.bef. 1815) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Dryden, who died in 1815. Their children included
Betty (b.1775), Jane (b.1776), William (b.1787) and John (b.1788). John ‘Meldrum’ (18th C.) recorded in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died in Hawick. He is surely related to James, ‘Auld Meldrum’, who died in 1781. James ‘Auld Meldrum’ (d.1781) recorded in the list of deaths in Hawick. He may be the same man as one of the other Jameses. He was surely related to John, who was also recorded as ‘Meldrum’ in 1787 when his daughter Lizzy died. John (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He married Helen (or Agnes) Scott and their children included: John (b.1784); and Elionora (b.1789). The witnesses in 1784 were merchant George (surely a relative) and James Scott (probably related to his wife). John (18th C.) groom at Branxholme in 1785–88, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was listed as house servant at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. It may just be a coincidence that there was a servant with the same name earlier at Branxholme and at the same time at Stobs. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Robertson and Wilton Parishes. He was living at Harden in 1787, 1789 and 1794 and at Langlands Dean in 1797. He married Isobel Gray in 1786 and their children included: John (b.1787); Thomas (b.1789); Isobel (b.1792); Walter (b.1794); William (b.1797); and William (again, b.1800). John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) said to be son of Robert, who was farmer at Hallrule Mill. A story is recounted by Walter Deans in 1887, who said that he was ‘imbued with the ancient spirit and daring of the Turnbuls’, and that he would regularly settle disputes with his enemies by picking fights at local fairs; on one occasion after he had dispatched a large group of enemies at Jedburgh, his mother, Tibbie Donaldson, said ‘ma heart was wae to see them a’ gushin’ an’ bluidin’, and oor Jock knockin’ them doon’. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Hudshouse. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (d.1827) Hawick clockmaker. His property immediately to the east of the old Town House was bought by the Council in 1827 and later used to build part of the new Town Hall. His niece, Anna Maria Brown, wife of C. Brown, traveller of London, was served as his heir in 1827. He may have been related to the John who was paid for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock in 1721. John (1761/2–1803) probably son of Thomas, he was tenant in Mackside, like at least 3 generations before him. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) son of George of the Cross Keys. He was recorded as son of George ‘Senior’ on the 1794 short-list for Cornet. He was elected Cornet in 1796, when he was stated to be of the Cross Keys. He was also recorded at the Cross Keys in 1808 when his son Walter died. This is probably the Cross Keys on the High Street (rather than the Sandbed), although this is unclear. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Colterscleuch, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No information such as occupation is given about him. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Denholm, recorded in 1795 and 1797. He is listed as a wright on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, separate from the other John in Denholm who is also listed there. His children included: Thomas (b.1795); and twins Andrew and Joshua (b.1797). John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Grange in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. John (1762–c.1850) 2nd son of John, who was the last Turnbull Laird of Wester Swanshie. His brother Walter moved to England, and so he became the local representative of the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshie. He was tenant at Brieryhill and later at Minto Kames. He is probably the John who was listed as owner of Wester Swanshie in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married and his children included John, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He lived to an old age, being still at Minto Kames at the 1841 census. He could be father of Gavín, who was minister at Teviothead. John (18th/19th C.) in charge of wood management at Branxholme in at least the years 1814/5, when he is recorded supervising and paying labourers for ‘upholding the plantation dikes’. He may be the same John recorded conveying a letter for Adam Ogilvie at Branxholme in 1790. He may also be the John who was a farm worker, about 75 years old, at Branxholme in 1841. John (b.c.1765) merchant on the south side of Main Street in Lilliesleaf in 1841. He is probably the draper or grocer recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.c.1780) mason in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He recorded on Main Street in 1841. His wife’s name was Elizabeth. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. John (b.c.1780) joiner on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1836 electoral roll he was listed as joint proprietor with John junior. He is probably the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiner on the Round Close in 1837. His wife was Margaret. He is probably the John recorded along with his wife Margaret as a joiner on the 1841 census, around 10 High Street. John (b.1780/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a servant at Stirches. He was listed as servant at Stirches among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was footman at Stirches House on the 1851 census. His wife was Isabella and they had a daughter, Ann. John (b.1780/1) stocking-maker in Wilton Parish. He was listed as stocking-maker at Crawhill Park among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was also an elder in Wilton Kirk. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and George. In 1851 the family were living on Wilton Place. John (b.c.1784/5) agricultural labourer, born in Southdean Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Beatrix and their children included Robert, Janet and John. John (b.1786/7) shepherd at Burngrove in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Isabella. John (1787–1857) 2nd son of James, who farmed at Rueycastle. In 1811 he became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded at Spittal in 1841 and 1851. He is probably the ‘Mr. Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule’ who was said to take a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. In 1827 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Lockie. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen Rutherford (b.1822); James (b.1823), who took over the tenancy of Spittal; Mary (b.1825) and Isabella A.G. (b.1830). He secondly married Ann Euphemia Burnett (from Edinburgh) and further children included: John Rutherford (b.1838); Margaret Catherine (b.1840); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1842); William George (b.1844); Alexander Jamieson (b.1846); Agnes R. (b.1847); Walter Douglas (b.1849); Anne Euphemia (b.1851); and Jessie Catherine (b.1856). Ann is recorded as ‘Late Farmer’s Widow’ in the 1861 census. John (b.c.1787/8) eldest son of John, farmer at Brieryhill and Minto Kames. He carried on the tenancy of Minto Kames when his father retired. He married Esther Turnbull. His children included John, Isabel, Thomas, James, Agnes, Robert (who became a solicitor) and Walter (a stone mason). In 1851 he is listed as retired and living at Newton in Wilton Parish with his wife Esther and children Margaret, Robert, Walter, Esther and Mary, plus his brother Thomas. In 1861 he was at Wilton Dean. He retired from farming and lived to the age of 88. John (1788–1849) son of Thomas (‘Bailie Tammy’) and Margaret Darling. He may also have been a Bailie. He was a dyer on the Crescent, carrying on some of his father’s business and founding the company John Turnbull & Son, Slitrig Dyeworks in 1819. He is recorded as dyer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and as a dyer and carpet manufacturer in the 1837 directory. He maintained the Baptists within Hawick after the death of their local leader William Thorburn; he helped the congregation acquire a room for worship on the ground floor of 8 Allars Crescent. He married Isabella Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1831. His children were: Thomas (b.1833); Alexander (b.1835); John D. (b.1838); Catherine (b.1840); and Margaret Darling (b.1842/3), who married Thomas Bell, and whose daughter Isabella R. was the first person baptised in the new Baptist Kirk on Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was living on the Crescent with his wife Isabella and 4 children, but by 1851 his wife was a widow there. He is probably the John, dyer on the Crescent listed in Slater’s 1852 directory, even although he was deceased by then (since the firm continued).

A portrait of him exists. John (b.c.1795) born in Minto Parish, he was a seedsman and spirit dealer on Allars Bank. In 1851 he was living at Allars Bank and listed as a farmer of 130 acres (employing 5 labourers) and a nursery and seedsman (employing 42 people). In 1861 he was at the corner of Bourtree Place and North Bridge Street and listed as ‘Nursery & Seedsmen’. His wife was Violet H. Thorburn, and their children included: George (b.1820); Euphemia; Jessie; William; John; Isabella (b.1830); and James (b.c.1838), who worked in the nursery business. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer. By 1861 he had moved to the east side of Bridge Street. John (18th/19th C.) married Helen Goodfellow in Lilliesleaf in 1825. Their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (1796–1875) youngest son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson. He succeeded his father as farmer at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. He also carried on his father’s reputation as a breeder of short-horn cattle at Burnfoot. In his younger days he was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was probably the John listed at Burnfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed as farmer at Burnfoot in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 as farmer of 200 acres, employing 9 labourers and was still farmer at Burnfoot in 1868. He married Mary Kilner Anderson, who was from Huddersfield. Their children included: William (b.1833); Betsy Anderson (b.1836); Eleanor Stephenson (b.1833); Thomas Anderson (b.1839); and Mary (b.1841). His last 20 years were spent in failing health, and he was seldom seen in public. He died at Burnfoot.

John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (b.1803) youngest of 7 sons of James and Betty Adamson, he was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He had brothers who were schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He became a grocer in Newcastleton. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the carter in Newcastleton listed as male head of his family in 1835. In 1824 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), daughter of George Scott, shepherd at Lodgegill. They had a family of 10: James (1825–78), grocer in Hawick; George (1826–86), who died in Edinburgh and had a daughter Elizabeth Lawrie who was also a teacher; Elizabeth (b.1828), who married Jedburgh baker W. Hollands; Thomas (1830–60), who died at Morebattle, and had a son Dr. Adam Robert, who was medical superintendent at the Fife and Kinross Lunatic Asylum; Robert (1832–64), who died unmarried at Saratoga Springs, U.S.A.; William (b.1834), who died in infancy; William again, who also died (d.1836); William Elliot (1838–68), clerk at Register House; Walter Hall (b.1841) provision merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret (b.1842), married Linlithgow paper merchant John Lovell. He is buried with his wife at Rosebank cemetery in Edinburgh. John (1807–c.49) son of John and Margaret Murray, he was born in Hawick Parish. In 1833 he married Helen (1808–98), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. In 1841 he was a joiner living on the Round Close, but emigrated soon afterwards, settling in Galt, Ontario. His children (the first 3 born in Hawick) were: John (b.1835); William (b.1836); Helen (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1850). John Robson (1807–66) youngest son of Adam, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and Betty Scott, from Skelfhill. He attended Minto School and Edinburgh University and became an architect. He was Master of Works at Windsor Castle in the period 1845–66. He married Ann Oliver from Middlesex and they had 5 children. He is buried at Windsor Castle. John (b.1808) son of Alexander and Jean Scott. He was a joiner and innkeeper in Denholm. He is probably the joiner recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Cross Keys on Main Street. In 1851 he was living with his mother Jane, who was postmistress, his sister Jane and his nephew John. In 1861 he was with his sister Jean and cousin Agnes Scott. John (19th C.) educated in Selkirk, he became schoolmaster at Millburn (otherwise known as Hermitage) in Castleton Parish in 1838. It seems unlikely that he was there for long. John (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, listed at the Round Close in 1841. He is probably son of John, who was also a joiner, and was part of the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiners on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Helen, and their children included John, William and Helen.

John (19th C.) farmer at East Middle, probably son of Thomas. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John (19th C.) son of Robert. He was a grocer to trade, with his shop at Bonchester Bridge. In 1835 he became the first postmaster of the Rule valley, however he died not long afterwards and was succeeded by his sister Betty.

John (19th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1863 he donated a Roman bronze fibula to the Museum. It is possible this was the ‘fibula, made apparently either of jet or cannel coal and bearing a fine polish’ found on the borders of Hawick Parish and described in 1839. John (b.1803/4) shepherd and agricultural labourer in Florida in Liddesdale. He was listed there among heads of households in Castleton in 1836–41. The 80 year-old James who lived with him in 1841 was probably his father. By 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd and he is recorded as farmer at Florida in 1868. His wife was Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (c.1818–c.1905) 2nd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Deeside, he was born at Old Fodderlee. He married Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (d.1891) son of Thomas, who was shepherd on Templehall farm. He was born in Hawick Parish and was related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel and also coachman John. He worked for Henry Elliot, senior and junior, then at Town-o-Rule, Westerhouses and finally Weens East Lodge. In 1861 he was shepherd at Westerhouses. He married Margaret Elliot from Newcastle. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Janet, who was laundry-maid at Weens; Isabella; Agnes; John; Elizabeth; and Thomas. John (b.1828) son of tobacconist William, he was a baker in Hawick. In 1851 he and his father were both living at about 3 Howe gate, and he was employing 2 men in his baker’s business. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed on the Howe gate. John Struthers (b.1829) son of weaver William. He was a bank accountant, working in Jedburgh by the time of the 1861 census. His wife was Janet and their children included Ellen L., William and John W. (who was with Thomas Purdom & Sons). John (d.1891) related to the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He took over driving the Hawick to Carlisle coach from Sandy Elder for the last few years that it operated. He later farmed at Wiltonburn along with his brother William. John Anderson (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He was one of the members of the first committee of Hawick Golf Club in 1878, and was later Club Captain. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiards Club. John (19th C.) clerk at William Watson & Sons, he was an influential early member of the Hawick R.F.C. committee. John (19th/20th C.) wine merchant at 51 High Street. He was probably son of the founder of the grocery and wine store. John A. (19th C.) draper on the Howegate. He was later a tobacconist. His daughter Amy married her cousin James Turnbull, farmer at Galalaw. John (1836–1915) from the family of Bedrule, he was born in Jedburgh, where he worked at the Procurator Fiscal’s Office before becoming the first accountant of the Hawick Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland. After holding this position for 15 years he moved to the Gala branch where he was appointed Agent.
Turnbull

in 1902 and retired in 1909. He was also actuary for the Gala branch of the Trustee Savings Bank for almost 40 years. He married Isabella Ewen Turnbull (1834–1917) and their children were James Brydon, John William, Gilbert Kilpatrick, Helen, Robert John (killed on a train in the U.S.A.), Douglas (of the Imperial Yeom-antry, died at Pretoria), George Hector (died in Nashville, Tennessee) and E.J. (of Dayton, Ohio).
John (1838–1910) son of John and grandson of ‘Bailie Tammy’. He worked in the family dyers business. He lived at Kirkton House, which in 1901 had 9 rooms and 2 servants. He married his cousin Isabella Macdonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw. He was educated in Denholm until the age of 16, acting as pupil-teacher there. He was an apprentice with his father until 1890 then worked in Glasgow for 2 years, returning to Denholm to join his father in ‘R. Turnbull & Son’, later becoming the sole partner. He acted as local Registrar in Denholm and lived at Rosebank. In 1895 he married his cousin Isabella Macdonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw.
John (19th/20th C.)
cashier with Wilson & Armstrong at Weensland Mills. He later became a partner in Turnbull & Hodgson, coal merchants, then had his own coal business and finally was involved with Teviot Tweed Co. He married Barbara Scott Davidson, dughter of James. John (19th/20th C.) became Managing Director of Pringle’s in 1929, following J. Boyd Sime’s resignation. He himself resigned in 1933, to be replaced by Arthur Oddy and Wullie Mactaggart. John Fisher ‘Gutty’ or ‘Gutty’ (1932–82) son of Barrie, he was a local grocery merchant and Town Councillor, as well as husband of Myra. He attended George Watson’s College in Edinburgh and served an apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny before taking over the family business in 1954, based at 51 High Street. His business also sold a blended whisky called ‘Teviotdale’. He revived the Turnbull clan in 1977, after effectively being dormant for centuries. He was a Town Councillor for 11 years, starting in 1969 and later served as Roxburgh District Councillor for Teviot South. He was also heavily involved in events twinning Hawick with Bailleul. He married Myra in 1956 and they made their home at 14 Rosebank Road, later moving to St. Ables, Wilton Park Road. His children were Barrie (b.1957), Deborah (b.1959) and Hamish (b.1961). The Turnbull Clan named their time achievement award after him. Joseph (19th C.) postman in the Denholm area in the 1860s. Katherine (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Hector of Belses. In 1580 her father gave her sasine for his ‘ten librates of land of old extent of Belses’. Her uncle John was one of the witnesses. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th/17th C.)
brother of Tom ‘of Harkschaw’, which seems likely to have been Hartshaugh. The brothers were listed in 1603 along with Turnbults from Nether Bon-chester, Braidhaugh and Macksdie, who were ordered to find caution of 300 merks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. His name is given as ‘Lancy Trumble’ (which is an unusual forename for a Turnbull). Lawrence (15th C.)
part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Alton-burn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right after Archibald, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) son of William in Bonchester. In 1502 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver.
The person who was supposed to enter him into the court was George of Hallrule, who was fined for his non-appearance. His father William was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as David in Bonchester, who was probably related.
Lawrence ‘Laurie in Maxsyde’ (16th/17th C.) found guilty at the 1622 Commissioners’ Court of stealing 2 cows from William Douglas of Cavers’ land at Langside about 1614 and 2 sheep from elsewhere in 1619, and sentenced to be hung. He is also referred to as ‘Lancie’. Lawrence ‘Lawrie’ of Hartshaugh (17th C.) recorded on the valuation for Abbotrule Parish in 1643. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulllows who lived at Hartshaugh. Leo (15th/16th
C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbults given remission in 1516 for any role they played in assisting the Homes. Presumably these are the lands of Unthank in Rulewater. Lyle (16th/17th
C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbults
also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as
David in Bonchester, who was probably related.

Margaret (14th C.) described as ‘Lyell Turnbull in Hartishauche’ (presumably Hartshaugh) in 1618 (registered in 1623) for a ‘wadset’ of lands in Hobkirk Parish. He was also recorded in the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hartshaugh Mill. He was surely related to Adam. He may be the ‘Leonall’ who was possibly a younger son of Hector of Hartshaugh, who witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford (younger in Abbotrule) in 1618. Malcolm (17th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Selkirk in 1630, when he sold his tenement there. His son William witnessed another transaction in 1630. Margaret (14th C.) forfeited lands in Eyemouth (in Coldingham) which were granted to ‘Ade Corfoure’. This was during the reign of David II. It is unclear how she was related to other Turnbulls. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter and heiress of John, who was granted Hundlehope in Peeblesshire by David II in 1357. She also held lands in Roberton and in the town of Selkirk, suggesting that her father was from the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire Turnbulls. She married William Gledstains of that Ilk. They had a son John, to whom she resigned the lands of Hundlehope in her lifetime, probably around 1400. During the reign of Robert III she also resigned to her son John the lands in Roberton and in Selkirk. It may be that the lands the Gledstains family soon possessed near Hawick (Ormiston, Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc.) also came from her and the Turnbulls. Margaret (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Gargunnock. Along with her sister Janet she was infested in the lands of Hassendeankbank in 1501 (her brother William probably dying before then). Margaret (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Elizabeth, who was probably her sister. Margaret see Lady Margaret Lorraine. Margaret (16th C.) daughter of Robert. In 1536 she presented proof that her deceased father had held the tenancy of the lands of ‘Uterall Burne’ in Selkirkshire. Margaret (16th C.) wife of David Elliot, who was tenant in Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls she came from. There was a court case to get her husband removed from the other half of the farm (owned at that time by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh) in 1567. There appears to have been an ongoing dispute over this half of the lands, since in 1573 Gavin Elliott of Baillielee and Stobs (who purchased the half from George Turnbull) complained that she had ordered her sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack his servant there. By this time she was widow of David Elliot (who was also from the Horsleyhill branch, like Gavin Elliott of Stobs), and must have married a Scott. She claimed that although she had no title for the lands, she had possession ‘be virtew of tak and assedatioun’, although her accusers claimed these ‘ar of lang tyme bigane outrunin’. She was represented before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps therefore a relative of her husband) and was ‘visiit with seiknes’ and did not attend herself. Her son John Scott did not appear and was declared a fugitive, while she and her son Walter were declared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedly, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It seems likely that Walter and John were sons from her first marriage, perhaps to a Scott of Newton (but it this unclear). Walter and John also had a brother David, recorded in 1588, who was presumably also her son. Margaret (d.1593) daughter and heiress of William (younger of Bedrule) and Margaret Home. On the death of William, her lands and gift of marriage then came into the hands of the Crown, who appointed her uncle Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes and her grandfather Sir Thomas of Bedrule as tutors. However, Sir Thomas was declared a fugitive, leading to a lack of clarity over her future. In 1584 she was recorded as ‘oy’ (i.e. granddaughter) of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and also niece of Alexander Home of Huttonhall when there was a claim by Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes (her ‘moder broder’, i.e. another uncle) over ‘the exhibitium of the said Margaret’, but the Privy Council decreed that control over her should remain with her ‘keeper’ Alexander Home. It was then ruled that she should stay in the house of Alexander Clerk of Balbirny, Provost of Edinburgh, until a decision about her future was made. She later married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but had no children. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Walter of Rawflat. In 1632 she and her sister Isobella were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feur-Rule. Margaret (17th C.) along with Mary Chisholme she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders ‘quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both’. Their fate is not recorded. Margaret (17th C.) widow who was jointly responsible, along with James Scott of Whitlisle, for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1663 according to the Land Tax Rolls. She was ‘relict of Alton’, this probably being Robert of Alton, who died in about 1650. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Margaret nee Dalgleish (b.1789) son of John Dalgleish, she was born in Hobkir Parish. She married Schoolmaster James in 1808, probably when he was teacher at Denholm. They later moved to Hawick, where he was Schoolmaster at Wilton. Her husband died in 1834 and later she ran her own school, along with her daughter Agnes, this being known as the ‘Image Garden’. The 1841 census records her living at ‘Wilton Cottage’ with children Agnes, Elspeth, Jane, Mary and William. In 1851 she was still there, with Agnes, Mary and Margaret and in 1861 just with Mary. Margaret (b.1819/20) born in Minto Parish, daughter of Janet Deans. She was listed as a teacher in Lilliesleaf in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a teacher of ‘female School teacher (of Sewing &c)’ in Lilliesleaf, along with her mother. They lived on the north side of Main Street. Marie (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £40 in Hobkir Parish. She is listed being in the same place as Mary Rutherford ‘of Rydwell’; however, it is unclear where this was. Marion nee Lorraine (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, called ‘of Wauchope’, whose daughters Jean and Beatrice inherited Templehall and Brewlands from him in about 1604. In 1605 their ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector of Wauchope) had her and several others removed from the lands there. This must have been part of some family feud. She was perhaps daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no proof for this). Marion (17th C.) listed as a widow living at Effelde on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Her name appears just after William, to whom she was probably related. Mark (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester, recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-appearance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marci Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbells of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philiphaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Perhaps the same Mark was one of the witnesses to a document in Selkirk involving Robert, tutor of Philiphaugh. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbells for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull with Marc Turnbull in Overchester, David Turnbull with the same Marc, William Turnbull, John Turnbull his sons’. Presumably they were all related. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was Provost in 1561 and in 1565 (when his name is given as ‘Marcus’), during a dispute with Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Mark of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded as witness to a transaction in Selkirk in 1579. In 1579/80 he was ‘apparent heir of Philiphaugh’ when he (and his brother Andrew) witnessed a transaction involving land in Lilliesleaf and another for lands near Melrose when he was clearly son of John of Philiphaugh. He witnessed other transactions in 1579/80. He was still heir apparent in early 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk, but later that year he was ‘of Philophauch’. Also in 1581 he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundlehope to her son Thomas. In 1581/2 his father was already deceased when his mother (Isabel Douglas) resigned her lands to him, in return for a promise of 8 bolls of grain annually from his lands of Howden. Also in 1581/2 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk and set a tack for his lands in Howden, with his brother George as a witness. Mark of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the Turnbells who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was one of a group of about 30 Turnbells who entered Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601, as part of a feud with the Kers. At the end of the fight Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) and his servant were dead, along with 2 Turnbells, one of whom was his brother Robert. There were also several serious injuries, and he himself lost ‘the thowme of his left hand’ in the fight. Another brother, Andrew, was also involved in the raid and lost his little finger. Also in 1601 he is listed along with Andrew of Bewlie, Eckie of Firth, Eckie in Stonedge and James, servant to the Laird of Minto, when Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present them at Edinburgh Tolbooth ‘to answer such crymes as thay wer suspect guilty of’; Kerr had to pay a penalty for failing to produce Eckie of Stonedge, so presumably he and the others were imprisoned. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Hector of Barnhills, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. He must also have been related to Hector of Bewlie, who was killed by the Kers in 1604 for his part in these events. He was convicted in late 1601, but it is unclear whether or not he was executed. He was also one of the ‘pursuers’ of the case against the Kers for the murder and maiming of several men in his party. He is probably the Mark listed in 1606 in letters of apology by the men responsible for the death of William Kerr of Ancrum. He is probably the Mark, brother of William ‘called of Beulie’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commissio, was appointed to apprehend them and 6 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsions), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamislaw brothers. Mark (d.bef. 1617) tenant in Nether Bonchester. He was recorded being ‘of Neddin Bonchester’ in 1590/1 among men who the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were charged to enter in court, and separately Kerr of Ferniehirst (on whose Jedburgh Abbey lands he also occupied). He was recorded as a raider into England in 1589/90, being ‘in Nethir Buncheest’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear in court in Edinborough, along with 2 other Turnbulls. In 1603 he, along with Turnbulls from Braidhaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkschaw’, were ordered to find caution of 300 marks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. In 1606 he was the occupier of the lands of Weens and Hobsburn when they were sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He could be the Mark listed along with Turnbulls of Braidihaugh and Mackside and Lorraineis of Appotside, accused of stealing from an Englishman in 1601. He married Margaret Rutherford. In 1617 his widow complained that although the family had held the ‘rowme of Nethir Bonchester past memory of man, as kindlie tennentis and possessouris to the Abbotnis of Jedburgh’, after her husband’s death, she was harassed there by Walter of Rawflat, destroying crops, forcing her off the landi and burning the ‘write and evidents’. However Walter of Rawflat denied these acts and was found not guilty by the Privy Council. Mark of Howden (d.bef. 1631) probably the Mark ‘apparent of Howdene’ who in 1581/2 witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving Walter in Belses. He is recorded in 1612 among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging more than the allowed amount of interest. He was surely related to other Turnbulls of Howden. He failed to appear to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel. In 1631 his son John of Howden was served heir to his lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Mark in Bedrule who witnessed the bond between Robert in Bedrule and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Hector in Hartshaugh (who appears to have lived to an old age) and younger brother of James. In 1616 he had a bond with William Scott of Todrig, and another with James (called of Bedrule) and David (or Andrew), butcher of Jedburgh. He is recorded as ‘in Hirtishaugh’ in 1619 when he was cautions for Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. Mark (d.1689) described as ‘por- tions of fotherlie’, it is unclear which Turnbulls he was related to. However, it seems likely he was related to John, who was at Fodderlie in 1694. He is recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax at Fodderlie for land valued at £100 (in one transcript of the valuation the name is given as ‘Margaret’, but that is clearly an error). He married Bessie Kerr, who was surely related to the Kerrs of Fodderlie; their only child (and heir) was Helen. The testament of him and his wife Bessie Kerr was recorded at Peebles in 1690, by Walter Chisholme, whose wife was Helen, his daughter. When he died the assets of him and his wife consisted of 2 cows, 31 sheep, half a poll of yarn barley and ‘insight and plenishing’ of their house, valued at £30 Scots. Additionally William Turnbull, shoemaker in Jedburgh (who was surely related to him, perhaps his brother), acted as cautions for the list of people who owed him money, namely: Robert Bonnar in Knowesouth; Adam Young in Hassendeanbank; Andrew Oliver in Bairnkin; William Scott in Birkhill; William Turnbull in Fulton; Andrew Rutherford in Rule; James [blank] in Earlsi; and John Ker of Fodderlee. When no one appeared, Adam Chisholme in Newton became cautioner instead. Mark (18th/19th C.) related to the Turnbulls of Chesterhall, Ancrum. He married an Elliot. His children included James (shepherd at Minto Kames) and William (who emigrated to New Zealand). Mark (b.1806/7) from Ancrum, he was land steward at Menslaws farm. He was recorded there in 1851, with his wife Betsy (from Wilton) and their children Janet, William, Margaret, Mark, Helen and Betsy. Mark (19th C.) one of the local Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob at the 1837 election. 5 men were tried for rioting, with 7 victims named. He lived at Spittal Mill. He could have been the same Mark who married Margaret Govenlock, daughter of Robert Govenlock (‘Gloomy Wunter’) and Margaret Ruickbie. Mark (b.1862) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. His twin brother was Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh. He farmed at Midburn, where his mother Mary Scott lived with him. Mary (d.1816) recorded dying in Hawick, when she was listed as ‘sister to Andrew Turnbull from Jamaica’. It is unclear who this Andrew might have been or how she was related to other Turnbulls. Mary Shortreed ‘Myra’ nee Sim (1932–2020), J.P., M.B.E., daughter of George and Jessie Sim, she was born in the Haig and bred in the West End. She was entirely educated at Hawick High School and was one of the children who contracted typhoid fever in the 1938 outbreak. She worked in Wilson & Glenny’s office and married local merchant and councillor John F. Following the sudden death of her husband she wound up the Turnbull family business and moved home to the bungalow Coblestanes. She then decided to enter politics herself and was elected to the District Council in 1984, serving for 12 years, including 4 as chairperson. She was Hawick Provost 1988–1996 and was described at the time as ‘the best wumman Provost Hawick has ever hed’. Her appointment was not without controversy, however, with her withdrawing her original nomination in 1986, considering Hawick not to be ready, and then getting in unopposed 2 years later. There were some serious hiccups over traditionally all-male events, e.g. she was not invited to attend the annual Callants’ Club dinner and initially not allowed to attend the Common Riding Dinner, despite being Provost. Nevertheless, she was able slowly to break barriers, being the first woman to speak at the Jethart Callants’ Club smoker, the Galashiels Manufacturers’ Association Michaelmas dinner and the Peebles ex-Cornets’ Committee dinner. She was also on the board of Eildon Housing Association for 24 years, stepping down in 2017. She received an M.B.E. in 1996 for her public service. Her children were Barrie (an architect), Deborah (manager at Borders Pet Rescue) and Hamish (who runs a knitwear agency). Matthew (15th C.) tenant in Hassendean. In 1494/5 his sons Nicholas and John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains acting as surety. Maurice made a Director of Pringle’s in 1947. There is a seat to his memory at the 15th tee on the Vertish. Michael (15th/16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh his surety was Patrick in Mackside, and he also served as surety for himself; however, the pair were fined for non-appearance. Michael (17th C.) recorded as witness to a baptism in the Hassendean part of Robertson Parish in 1686. This was for William (who was surely a relative), with the other witness being Thomas. Michael (17th C.) described as ‘victore’ when he witnessed a Hawick sarine in 1687. The description is probably an occupation of some sort (perhaps ‘vintner’ or ‘vitaluer’ is meant). Probably the same Michael witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Andrew Porteous in 1684, James Davidson and John Thomson in 1687, Andrew Porteous and Robert Turnbull in 1688 and William Bryson in 1689. Michael (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, who had brothers John and Robert. In 1678 all 3 were involved in a case before the Bailies involving a fight with Robert Brown, whose wife they called ‘witches-gate’, with him responding that ‘their sister was ane of that sort’. He was referred to as a wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the Michael ‘Trumble’ recorded in 1683 when flesher John Briggs was found guilty of insulting him and William Paisley, ‘calling of them two drunken elders’. Probably the same cooper Michael in Hawick was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Michael listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was senior Deacon of the hammermen in Hawick. He is probably the cooper who in 1704 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Beattie. In 1709 and 1712 he and Robert witnessed baptisms for coopenter John (probably all 3 were brothers). In 1715 there was a dispute between the hammermen and the weavers over seating precedence in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk.

The Session determined that 'for his lifetime, [he] should have ye head of ye fore seat of ye loft, conform to ye desire of ye other two hammermen concerned'. To take this prized seat he had to be waiting at the Loft door when it was opened, and was not allowed to pass anyone else on the way to his seat. This right was not to carry on to his descendants. He may be the same Michael who, in 1714, was 'creat burgess upon the appoint that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple' (of St. Mary's). He could be the Michael, son of Robert and Janet Scott, born in Haick in 1645. It seems likely he was the Michael married to Bessie Bridges, whose children baptised in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1672), John (b.1676) and Helen (b.1679). Michael (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1704 he had a son John baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Bailie George Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1731 when his daughter Mary was baptised. Michael (18th/19th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1821. Michael (1787–1849) son of William of Burnfoot. He inherited the Great Seal of the Turnbulls after his elder brother was effectively disinherited. He married Mary (possibly sister of Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick, who died in 1832), and after her death emigrated to Canada with his 5 children in 1842. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: Margaret Scott (1818–1908); Walter (1821–49); William (b.1822), who died young; Peter Stephenson (1826–89); Mary (1829–80); and William (1828–1901). He died at Woodside in Brantford, Ontario. Michael (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the Turnbull marked at No. 31 or around No. 66 on Wood's map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 1825 'History of Hawick'. He could be the same as Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. Michael (d.1894) 3rd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He helped his brother Thomas farm at Midburn (or 'Africa'). He married Beatrice Nichol (known as a great beauty), sister of his brother John's wife. He died at the old schoolhouse, Wolfelee. Mungo resident of Fulton who in 1619 was listed among Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. He may have been related to Walter, Thomas, Robert and Robert 'Fendie' who were also in Fulton. Myra see Mary Shortreed. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1488/9 as witness to an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Most of the other witnesses were local clergymen, and so the same was probably true for him. Nichol (17th/18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1711 he witnessed (along with mason John) a baptism for fellow mason Peter Mitchell. He is recorded as a witness at Hawick Parish Session in 1718, inquired about whether he saw Andrew Jardine coming out of the Beadle's house at a very late hour. He was probably related to mason John, who had a son called Nichol baptised in Hawick in 1705. Nichol (d.1840) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw, who died in 1819, aged 56. They had a son Andrew (d.1804), who married Jean Omiston (d.1838). Nicholas (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King (where his name is 'Nichol'). Ninian (15th C.) son of William. He is recorded at the 1494/5 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh when he failed to appear and the Thomas, Laird of Bedrule was fined. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Perhaps the same Ninian was also listed in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was among more than 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh for the charge of murdering Robert Oliver; Adam of Billerwell was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same Ninian, son of William, recorded in 1494/5. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Mark, Mark's brother Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David, Andrew, and Andrew's son Thomas. He was probably related to some of these men. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His lands were referred to as 'Roule', which could be the same as Town-o'-rule perhaps. Andrew was also listed as a tenant there. Norman (1942–2014) born in Edinburgh, he grew up on a farm and served in the R.A.F.
He then ran a garage, before becoming a shepherd in the Hawick area. After retirement he became record-keeper for the Turnbull Clan Association. In 2012 he married Terri Booth. The Clan awarded him their lifetime achievement award in 2014. Norman High School history teacher. He was Acting Father in 1997. He was President of the 1514 Club in 1982, the Mostroopers’ Club in 1990 and the Callants’ Club in 2007, becoming the first person to have held the chair of office of all 3 clubs. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘Patricio Turnbull’ in 1447 when he witnessed the sasine for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s purchase of the Cousinlands. This was signed in Hawick, so he must have been a local man. His name appears at the end along with John Stoddart, so they may have been the Bailie’s of the time. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Gilbert. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded at Wauchope Tower at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’ for the murder of James Rutherford. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also recorded in 1502 as ‘in Walchope’ (i.e. Wauchope) when he had remission for associating with Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William, son of David Scott of Tushielaw. He was recorded being absent from the indictment when summoned by the sergeant in Jedburgh. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Patricks. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and David. Patrick (16th C.) witness to a Lorraine sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He is listed beside Robert, so they may have been related, as well as possibly related to the Lorraine family. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1538 Exchequer Rolls as occupier of the lands of Wauchopbank and Templehall, which were at that time owned by the Crown. He is probably related to earlier and later Patricks of associated with these same places. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope in Ruelwater. He is recorded as ‘Pait Trumbill’ in a 1605 court case. He may be a descendant of the earlier Patrick in Wauchope. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands, along with Walter Scott, recorded in a contract of ‘wad-set’ for the lands in 1612. In 1614 (registered in 1616) he is of ‘Templehall’ of marriage between his daughter Margaret and William, son of John Ainslie, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son Thomas was cautioner, while witnesses were William ‘fiar of Bedrule’ (probably his brother), Robert (possibly his uncle), and George also ‘there’ (in Bedrule or Templehall). (and probably another relative). Along with Walter Scott, he is also recorded as sometimes occupier of Templehall in 1627. He is probably the Patrick who was son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. His children included Thomas and Margaret (who married William Ainslie in 1614). Patrick (16th/17th C.) recorded in Mackside in 1618 when he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam in Abbotrule Townhead. Patrick (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Anna, daughter of William Douglas. Paul (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Andrew Turnbull in Hornshole is also listed among others. Percy (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Stonylethe’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1601, when 2 Englishmen accused him of stealing their livestock. He was fined ‘for lack of answer’. ‘Percy’ is not a common Scottish name, and so it is possible that this was an error and he is the same as one of the other Turnbulls associated with Stonedge. Peter (15th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. In 1493 he served as surety for John Waugh, who had remission for stealing sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and for associating with the Duke of Albany. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester who had remission for his involvement in a long list of crimes in 1502. This included the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick, burning and stealing goods from George Rutherford of Longnewton at Barnhill, stealing livestock from John Grahamslaw at ‘Camys’ (probably Minto Kames) with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’, bringing a party of English to raid from the lands of Robert Lauder at ‘Merch-cluche’ and capturing him for ransom, stealing sheep from George Tait and his tenants at ‘Fichop’, stealing sheep from John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lethane-
George Rutherford at ‘Sandystanis’, with the help of John of Minto and others, and for associating with the rebels Mark and John. Adam of Billerwell served as surety. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Macksid in 1502. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he was surety for Michael in Abbot-rule and was fined for his non-appearance. Peter (15th/16th C.) feued the lands of the east steading of Gildhouse, also called Baillelee in 1510. Peter ‘Pait’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as ‘Pait Trumbill called Catle’ on a list of ‘Scottes-men rebels resete within England’. His son ‘Pait’ called ‘Catle younger’ and another son ‘Jame’ are also listed. They presumably came from Catlee near Wauchope. Peter ‘the Monk’ (d.1561) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who were hiding out in England. He is recorded as ‘Peter Trumbill called the Monk’, and he is listed among Turnbulls from Catlee and Cragwood (several of whom were also called Peter). He was hanged for theft and reset, along with William Elliot ‘callit Woddir-nek’ and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear where he came from. Peter Stephenson (1836–1921) 14th son of Thomas Scott of East Middle farm, and direct descendant of the Turn-bulls of Bedrule. He was said to have been born at ‘Deneburn’ near Denholm, but his baptism was registered in Kirkton. He studied at Glasgow University, graduating M.D. in 1859, then studying briefly at Edinburgh Medical School before entering the army. He received a medal for serving during the Abyssinian campaign in 1867–68. In 1893 he became Surgeon Major General of the Indian Medical Service in Bombay. He was a fellow of the University of Bombay and Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay. In 1896 he returned to Britain, receiving a good-service pension, and was appointed honorary surgeon to the King. In 1870 he married Mary Oliver, daughter of George Oliver the Hawick solicitor, and she died in 1902. Their children were: Thomas (1871–72); Margaret Lindsay ‘Meta’ (b.1873) who married Maj. W.G. Cooper of the 34th Poona Horse; Mary (b.1874); Evelyn Jane (1875–76); George Oliver (b.1877), who served with the Indian Army; Nora Christian (1879–1974), married Rev. John Robert Paterson Sclater of New North Church, Edinburgh; Bruce (b.1880), Lieut. in the 23rd Sikh Pioneers; Hugh Stephenson (b.1882), who became a 2nd-Lieut. in the 57th Rifles; Percy Douglas (b.1886); and Dorothy Lillian (b.1887).
He is named on the memorial tablet to the Turn-bulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk, which his 4 surviving children had put up in 1955. He is buried in Grange Cemetery in Edinburgh. Many of his letters are incorporated into the book ‘Turnbull:
lives and letters’ (c.1994). Philip (15th C.) son and heir of Richard of Harden. He inherited the lands in 1448 through a charter by Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. He was probably succeeded by Walter, who resigned the lands to the Lady of the Barony in 1468. Philip (15th C.) son and heir of William of Whithope. He witnessed a charter for ‘Irelandis landis’ in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Probably the same Philip witnessed a document in 1455 attesting that John of St. Michael inherited the lands of Whitchesters from his father. A charter of 1456 from William Douglas of Drumlanrig grants him the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick. He may have been related to the neighbouring contemporary Philip (at Harden). Philip of Whithope (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull for the precept leasing Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott. In 1494/5 Thomas, Junior, Laird of Bedrule, served as surety for his son John (unless there was another contemporary Philip). He also served as surety for his brother, Stephen, who had raided
the lands of John and Ninian Murray at Kershope. He was probably the Laird of Whithope ‘in Ernheuch’ who was surety for David Craik in 1494/5, who had remission for pillaging from Harthern. In 1500 he had 4 oxen taken from him, appraised and then given to Walter Scott of Branzholme, assignee for the Murrays; since no other goods could be found, he also lost his lands of Whithope to Scott of Branzholme. In 1500 he was witness to the instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Branzholme inheriting lands from his grandfather. Probably the same Philip is described as ‘in Quhithop’ in 1502 when he and David in Carlinpool had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid the farms of Fastheugh and Hangingshaw; their sureties were John in Dryden and Alexander in Commonsid.
He was surely related to David, son of the Laird of Whithope recorded in 1494/5, may have been his son. It also seems likely he was related to the earlier Philip of Harden. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ralph (d.bef. 1526) recorded in a document of 1526 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He held part of the lands of Philipaugh. A third of those lands had been held by Janet Turnbull (perhaps related, or perhaps a first wife) and were in 1526 gained by his widow Margaret Ker. The attorney acting for his wife was Mark Ker (who was probably his brother-in-law). He was probably a descendant of Adam of Philipaugh. In 1535 Robert declared that he (Ralph) was never given sasine of 10 shillings of rent on a tenement of William in Selkirk (all 3 men possibly related). Also in 1535 he was ‘deceased lord of the said lands of Philipaugh’ (Philipaugh is probably meant) when Mark Ker of Kippielaw and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of these lands until his son and heir John came of age. Chaplain Mark was one of the witnesses and may also have been related. His wife was Margaret, sister of Mark Ker of Kippielaw. He was succeeded by his son John (who may have been son of Janet Turnbull), who was a minor (with tutors Robert and Mar Ker of Kippielaw). Richard of Harden (15th C.) recorded in 1431 when he was among a number of witnesses who attested to being at the transfer of the lands of Heap between James Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Buccleuch; John and David are also listed beside him (although with no designation) and so may be related. He was possibly dead by 1448 when his son Philip inherited the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton. This family is probably related to the Turnbulls of Whithope. He may be the same Richard who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. Richard (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and John) and may be the same as Richard of Harden. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Turnebule’. Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other men are also listed there, and so probably related. Richard (16th C.) listed along with Hector of Clarilaw (so presumably his son or brother), in a pledge made by James Gledstains of that Ilk in 1594/5, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliott of Horsleyhill. Richard (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism for William (probably a relative) and Christian Oliver in Roberton Parish in 1688. He may be the Richard whose son William was in Minto in 1718 when he got married. Richard (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He is recorded in 1722 when he was paid for a joist for the steeple in St. Mary’s Kirk. He married Janet Porteous in Hawick in 1714 and their children included: William (b.1716); Mary (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Mary (again, b.1721); John (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); and Robert (b.1729). The witnesses in 1723 were merchants Adam Elliot and William Tudehope and in 1726 were William ‘Thowdup’ and John Scott. Richard (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1729 and surely related to Robert, who was there at the same time. He married Helen Turnbull in 1726, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1729), with witnesses James Thomson and William Turnbull. He is probably the Richard who witnessed a baptism in Wilton in 1729 for George Scott, resident at Wester Burnfoot. Sir Richard of Ferniehirst (1908–98), G.C.M.G. Career diplomat, he was Governor of Tanganyika during its hand-over and later Governor of Aden. His wife Beatrice is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His twin children are Alison and Julian. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f…off’’. Robert (15th C.) Presbytery of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1431 he was the notary for the ‘letter of transumpt’ for the 1420 charter of half the lands of Brauxholme being granted to Robert Scott of Rankiburn. This letter was made in the church of Cavers. Hence he was probably a local church official. Robert (15th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf from about 1460. In 1440 the Pope revoked the gift to the Bishop of Glasgow and attached the advowson to the Holy See. It was later given to him, and he resigned it back to the Pope in 1480. Robert (15th C.) Abbot of Jedburgh 1476–78. In 1478 he is recorded as witness to a charter granting David Scott rights in Selkirk. Also in 1478 he was involved in a case registered with Parliament involving ‘mails’ on Stewartfield, belonging to the Stewarts. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Robert of Hoscot (15th C.) resigned
Turnbull Turnbull

the lands of Hoscote into the hands of their superior, William Lord Borthwick in 1493/4. They were then conferred upon Alexander, Master of Home. He is referred to as being of ‘Thoscot’. It is unclear how long these lands in the Borthwick valley belonged to his family. Robert of Broddlee (15th C.) resigned his lands of ‘Bradelee’ in the Barony of Hawick into the hands of the superior, William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1479. Presumably this was to have these lands regranted. Either the same Robert, or perhaps his son is recorded in 1498 as being ‘of Bradle’ when he had remission, along with Alexander and John, son of Robert, for communing with Englishmen. Robert (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 among some Borderers who were captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. The others were several Elliots and Robert Dalgleish. He may be the same as one of the Roberts who was later declared to be a rebel. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The previous entry was for Alexander, also in Wolfelee and a later entry was for his son John. Robert (15th C.) recorded being ‘in laris’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His lands may have been Lairhope above Falnash. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing livestock from Blackhope in Eddleston Parish; stealing 2 cows from Shieldgreen; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauderdale; and common theft. His surety was George, Master of Angus. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing a horse, a dagger and other items from John Smith, with surety being John Murray ‘in the Forest’; he was again described as being ‘in laris’. Robert (15th C.) resident of Wells. He is listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Robert of Mudlaw (15th C.) possibly son of Sir Thomas of Phaup. He is mentioned in the royal pardon for Sir Thomas in 1494/5, whose crimes involved receiving stolen sheep from him and other men, namely John ‘de Newhalburn’, Thomas Newton and Alex Gray; either he or John appear to have been son of Sir Thomas (but the Latin in ambiguous). He is also recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when he was fined for failure to appear (with Thomas of Phaup listed just after him). His lands were probably near where Moodlaw Loch is, on the boundary between Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire. He is probably also the Robert listed along with Alexander in 1494/5 when Edward Dunn in Phaup had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from them, from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed; Thomas in Phaup was surety for Dunn. Robert (15th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Bedrule in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull, ‘Junior’ Laird of Bedrule served as his surety; it is unclear if this means he was brother of Thomas or uncle of Thomas (i.e. brother of George, the elder Laird). Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was tenant ‘in le castil hil de branxame’, i.e. Castlehill near Branhelme. He ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, with his surety being Lord Home. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Walter Rutherford was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including stealing from him. The theft was of 14 sheep from ‘sowdane braa’ (presumably Souden Bræ). Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with 2 Johns, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de bonechester’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. Probably the same Robert was also recorded as tenant in Bonechester in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire; he was fined for non-appearance, denounced as a fugitive and had his goods escheated. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls from Bonchester. Robert ‘Muriale’ (15th/16th C.) described as one of the King’s rebels and already ‘at the horn’ in 1502 when George Turnbull in Tofts was allowed to pay a fine for associating with him. They had burned Riddell, as well as stealing 480 sheep, 2 cows and sundry goods. On the same raid they killed a black mare belonging to Robert Scott. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘blindhalch’, which is probably Blindhaugh near Ashkirk. In 1502 he was surety for Walter Wilson, in the same place, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to a chart for Alexander, Lord Home, signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls for Ettrick Ward in 1507, when he had an obligation for a payment. He may be the same Robert who was aid for a silver cup in 1513 in association with Yarrow. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1507 as a rebel, along with Simon, when several Dalglieshes (tenants of Braidhaugh) were given remission for associating with them. He was probably from somewhere in the Rule valley. His name is written ‘Roberto Turnebule’. Robert (15th/16th C.) feued the east steading of ‘Warmwood’, also called Langeleuchhead in Ettrick in 1510. Either the same Robert or a descendant was tenant in 1541 of the Crown lands of ‘Est Syde of Warmwod, alias Huitralburn’ in Ettrick. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank, listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbuls and others who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. David is also listed as tenant at Hassendeanbank. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbuls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; William and Thomas were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Probably the same man was also listed among the Borderers who were pardoned in 1526 for their role in marching against the Earl of Arran. Also on the list are his ‘brethir sonnis’ (i.e. nephews) David and George. He was also among the local lairds who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field and at Linlithgow. He was thus presumably a supporter of Scott of Branxholme. Robert of Howden (15th/16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1527 when he renounced his claims of wardship, relief and marriage against James, his cousin in Philiphaugh. This was done in the house of William (who was probably related). In 1528 he quitclaimed a piece of land in Selkirk called Ladylands and also witnessed documents. He was also recorded in documents in 1528/9 and 1531. He was probably the Robert ‘tutor of Holdene’ who witnessed a transaction between John Scott in Myres and Walter Scott, tutor of Howden. In 1534 he demitted his lands of Howden to George and John Murray. In 1535 he was ‘tutor of Holdene’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Walter Scott of Robertson. Probably the same Robert is recorded in 1536 when he sold parts of Ladylands in Selkirk to James Crawford, to James Minto and to Thomas Forest. He may be the Robert who witnessed a marriage contract for Walter, son of Robert Scott in Howford in 1539. Robert of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1530 as ‘superior lord of Philiphaugh’ when he assigned half of Ladylands to Thomas Forest. He was listed in 1530 as ‘Tutour of Philiphauche’ when he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep the rievers under better control. In 1531 he was still ‘tutor’ there when Mark Ker gave up any claims to Philiphaugh in his favour. In 1531 he is probably the Robert who formally acknowledged to his grandson John, ‘tutor of the lord of Phillophaucht’, that a tack had been given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1532/3 he was superior of lands in ‘the Ladyland’ in Selkirk that he re-signed to James Crawford and Christian Turnbull. He could have been married to Janet and father of John, who was served heir to his mother’s lands of Philiphaugh in 1558. He may be the Robert recorded in 1526/7 (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) attesting to a royal letter that he should be in possession of the rents previously held by Janet Hunter, widow of Thomas Turnbull, who lived at Coldingham. He may also have witnessed a baptism in Selkirk in 1527. He could be Robert complaining in 1535 that Ralph was never given sasine of 10 shillings rent for a tene-ment in Selkirk belonging to William. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1535 when he and Mark Ker of Kippielaw agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philloph’ (although Philiphaugh is surely meant) until their ward John (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; in 1536 he yielded up his half of the ward-ship. Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. He witnessed a transaction there in 1532/3 and was probably distinct from the tutor of Philiphaugh. Robert (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a Lorraine sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside. Other witnesses were Patrick (possibly a relative) and 2 Lorraines. He could be the same as Robert in Hallrule. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hutleburn when he witnessed an agreement in Selkirk for John Scott being responsible for the death of Walter Down in 1540/1. He witnessed another transaction in Selkirk for Alexander Scott in 1541/2, Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘incola’ (i.e. resident) in 1563 when he was witness to the transfer of Spittal-on-Rule from Douglas of Cavers to Ker of Primside. Robert ‘Feeble Hob’ (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1537 for stealing from Sir Walter Ogilvie of ‘Dunlugus’ at ‘Col-brandispethe’. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. His nickname is listed as ‘Febill Hob’. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bedrule, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1553. His brother was presumably Sir Thomas of Bedrule and hence he was a younger son of George of Bedrule. He claimed on behalf of Chaplain William Todd, possessor of the lands of ‘Fentoun’ that Andrew Ker of Faldonside was wrongfully keeping his cows on the land. Robert (16th C.) probably farmer at Hobburn. ‘Robert Turnbulls hous callit the auld hous and yaird thairof’ are listed among the disputed lands in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule. His rig lay at the ‘schadow’, i.e. west side of the lands, adjacent to Hawthornside Wood, and were assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. He may have been father of Walter, who is recorded as Laird there in 1568 and 1574. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Siron Shiell’, i.e. Swanshiel, recorded in 1567 among men charged to appear before the Regent Moray. He was also listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Robert ‘Isobel’s Robin’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as Adam, son to Sandy Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Oliv- ers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Wauchope in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for Kers. Robert of Bewlie (d.1601) son of Walter, he was among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. His brothers William, Mark and Andrew were also involved. In 1588/9 John of Minto was cautioner for his father Wat of Bewlie, not to harm his tenants and servants; presumably there was some kind of dispute between father and son. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father Walter and brothers Andrew and Hector, among Turnbulls and Davids ons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. He was murdered in Jedburgh at the same time as John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as ‘Henry Davidsoun of Combes’ and others were mutilated. There was a remission for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst (Provost of Jedburgh), Sir James Kerr of Crailling and George Moscrop, for these and other crimes, with many other Kerrs, Ainslies, Rob- sons and Rutherfords implicated. This was the result of some ongoing feud between the Turn- bulbs of the Minto area and the Kers of Jedburgh; a gang of about 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh on Fair Day seeking Thomas Ker, brother of the Provost. They eventually killed him and his serv- ant, with John Middlemas also being killed, and many other men being wounded. Several Turn- bulls were late convicted and hanged for their involvement, including his brother Andrew. His brother William was appointed tutor for his son Andrew in 1603 and Andrew was served as his heir in 1607. Robert (d.c.1605) tenant in Hall- rule and ‘tutor’ of Barnhills. He was brother of William in Barnhills, Gavin in Howa and Hector in Stanedge. He is probably the Robert, brother of William of Barnhills (as well as Gavin and Hector) who was listed in 1584/5 among Border- ers summoned to appear before the Privy Coun- cil. He was recorded in 1586 as ‘called the tutor of Barnhills’ when he was among Turnbulls and Douglases declared as rebels for the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. His brothers Hector and Gavin were also on the same list. Presum- ably he was at one point a ‘tutor’ for a Turn- bulb of Barnhills who was a minor, perhaps Hector, who could have been his nephew. Prob- ably the same Robert ‘of the Barnhill’ was among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England. In 1592 he was listed as ‘Robert Trumbill, sometime tutor of Barnhills’ among a large number of men in a summons of treason. The list was started with Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, and Francis Stewart, sometime Earl of Bothwell (and presumably the rest were their supporters). He is probably the ‘Robert Trumble of Barnehill’ recorded in 1601, along with James Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of Whitriggs, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. In 1606 the Bailies of Hawick apprehended William and George Grahamslaw for his murder. They were sons of Adam Grahamslaw of Little Newton, and were transferred to the Edinburgh Tolbooth. His widow, children and brothers were accused of trying to ruin the 2 accused, rather than prosecute them. The summons mentions his widow Grizel, as well as his brothers Gavin and Hector, and his eldest son Robert. Robert (16th/17th C.) possibly brother of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was among Turnbulls and others charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. He may be the Robert Turnbull, called Hob of Bedroule who was recorded in 1599 as ‘depute and clerk’ to James Douglas of Cavers; the pair were denounced as rebels for failing to turn over the taxes that they had collected. He may also be the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire who was complained about in 1599 for refusing to register the letters of horning against Thomas Ker of Cavers. This Robert took over as Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire after the death of George Douglas, as recorded in the Ker-Turnbull feud case of 1601. He was depute to the James Douglas of Cavers in 1600 when they were charged to appear before the Privy Council and was Sheriff Depute in 1600 for the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1601 there were further complaints against him, as Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, that he had failed to register some letters of horning against Walter Scott of Goldielands and Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1614 he was witness to the marriage of the daughter of Patrick of Templehall, probably his nephew. Also that year he was probably the Robert in Bedrule who had a bond with Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule. And in 1618 he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. However, some of these entries could be for Sir Thomas’s son Robert (his nephew), with whom he is easily confused. It is probably his son John who is listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’. Robert (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Robert in Hallrule, with his mother being Grizel. He is recorded in a summons of 1606, in which the family are directed to prosecute the men accused of murdering his father within 15 days, or else they would be released from the Edinburgh Tolbooth. Robert (d.1611) son of David in Mackside. He was convicted and educated in Jedburgh in 1611. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Denesyde. In 1611 he acted as cautioner for the appearance of his brother David in court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Fulton recorded in 1619 when a group of Turnbulls and others were accused of cutting down wood at Huntliehill. He is listed after Walter and Walter’s son Thomas, but before Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, all being in Fulton. Robert ‘Fendie’ (16th/17th C.) resident of Fulton who in 1619 is ‘callit Fendie’. He was listed among Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. He may have been related to Walter, Thomas and Mungo, who were also in Fulton. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and brother of Walter of Bedrule. In 1586 he was among a list of Turnbulls and Douglasses who were declared as rebels for their part in the murder of 6 men called Graham-slaw. In 1592 he is recorded assisting his brother John (at the instigation of their brother Walter of Bedrule) in attacking a servant of James Stewart of Wells in ploughing the fields at Wells; he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1618 he witnessed a bond of his brother Walter. In 1619 he was ‘brother german to Walter Turnbull of Badreule’ when listed among a group of Turnbulls and others accused of removing hay from Huntliehill; he was one of the few men to appear at the court, and hence was not denounced as a rebel. He was witness to a bond of 1620 between Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’ (probably his brother) with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichell). Also in 1620 he was probably the Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ whose son Thomas had a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Whitlade. He married Margaret Erskine and their children included John and Thomas. He is difficult to distinguish from his uncle Robert, who lived at a similar time. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647 and another of 1642, and witness to a sasine of 1654. He was also named in a disposition of 1652. His brother was Thomas, tenant at Harwood. And he must have been related to George and to James. He could be the Robert in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £104, and Thomas also listed there. Robert (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with David, recorded in 1643. Their lands were valued at £66 13s 4d. Robert (d.c.1662) tenant in Swanshieil. His daughter ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Leyden and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1654. The witnesses were John Scott and Walter Purdom. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Slitrig valley. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part that was Hassendean. He married Agnes Renwick and their children included Agnes (b.1689). He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Roberton in 1681, another for William in 1686, one for William Scott and Bessie (who may have been related) in 1687, one for George Hood in 1687 and one for John Renwick in Horsleyhill in 1688. Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Repertslaw’ in a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism; this was probably Raperlaw. His name is given in another version of the record as ‘Thomas’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to Walter, who was tenant there. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Cockerheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He may have been son of Thomas, who was at Cockerheugh about a generation earlier. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Rathie and their children included: Isabel (b.1688); Jean (b.1691); and Helen (b.1694). His wife’s name is ‘Margaret’ in 1691, when the witnesses were William Easton and James Veitch. The witnesses in 1694 were James and William Dunlop (who lived at Birkwood). Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the same Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eisit the water’ in 1694. In 1712 he appears to have been the first person to be allowed to plan for the erection of a ‘through-stone’ over his grave in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. This followed the reading of an Act of 1708. He was allowed permission, but asked to contribute to the poor box. He may be the same weaver who was recorded in a sasine of 1687 disposing a West End tenement to his wife Helen Paisley, and whose daughter Isobel was born in 1688 (with witnesses Robert Allan and Michael Turnbull). He may be the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley in 1700. Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, brother of Michael and John. In 1678 all 3 brothers were involved in a case before the Bailies. In 1708 he is described as ‘cooper’ when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Turnbull, younger. In 1709 and 1712 he and Michael witnessed baptisms for cooper John (probably all 3 were brothers). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Appletreehall in 1711 when his son James was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in ‘Falsecastle’ (presumably Fastcastle) in 1718 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlew. He married Janet Donaldson in 1710. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); James (b.1722); and Janet (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Paterson and James Johnstone. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the ‘younger weaver in ye Howgate west of ye water in Hawick’ recorded in a baptismal record of 1708, and hence son of the older Robert; the child was called William, and the witnesses were cooper Robert Turnbull and Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Porteous in 1713. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid in 1713 and another in 1716 for an illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother of the Laird of Whitslade. He was also ‘younger weaver in Hawick’ in 1716. In 1717 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for butcher Robert Hardie in 1723. He married Margaret Elliot (perhaps the Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, who married a Robert in Hawick in 1707). Their children included: Margaret (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Isobel (b.1725); and Michael (b.1727). The witnesses in 1716 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and shoemaker Robert Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Woollee Miln’, i.e.

Wolfelee Mill. His children included: Isabel (b.1718); Janet (b.1719); Thomas; and William. Probably the same ‘Miller in Wooleemiln’ had a son Robert baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1737. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1729 and surely related to Richard, who was there at the same time. He married Elspeth Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1729) and John (b.1738). The witnesses in 1729 were Andrew Stewart and William Douglas (who was surely related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) smith in Hawick Parish. He married Christian Turnbull and their children included James (b.1726) and Isabel (b.1730). The witnesses in 1726 were masons John and Andrew Turnbull. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Isobel Kedie. Their children included: John (b.1737); Janet (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1741). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1722 when his son William was baptised and in 1730 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. There are several other children, baptised in Cavers, who could be his. Robert (18th C.) gardener in the Hawick area. He could be the gardener recorded at Whitriggs in 1727 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1733 and 1736 he was living at Midshiels. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism (along with James Douglas) for merchant Robert Taylor and Margaret Douglas (probably related to his wife). His wife was Euphan Douglas and their children included: Janet (b.1731), Helen (b.1733) and Charles (b.1736), baptised in Wilton; and Robert (b.1743) and George (b.1745), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1733 were James Dryden and Andrew Douglas (perhaps related to his wife), in 1736 were John and James Dryden and in 1743 were merchants Robert Taylor and James Douglas (who was probably related to his wife). Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Kersel and their children included: Adam (b.1760); John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); and James (b.1768). The baptism in 1768 was witnessed by the ‘whole congregation’. Probably the same weaver Robert witnessed a baptism in 1761 and another in 1766 for James Taylor. He was already deceased in 1803 when his wife died. Robert of Standhill (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may be the ‘Captain Turnbull Standhill’ listed in the Window Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in 1748. In 1737 his daughter Ann became the 2nd wife of Andrew Bennet of Chesters. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulla of Standhill. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Whitecleughsdale in 1761 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton Parish and at Mabonlaw in 1763 and 1766 when his sons William and John were baptised. Other children baptised at a similar time to a Robert include Walter (b.1759) and Robert and Janet (b.1768). Robert (d.1766) miller at Hallrule Mill. He married Helen and their sons were Thomas and Walter (who were millers at Southdean Mill, along with another Robert). In 1774, by which time he was deceased, his widow rented the farm of Doorpool. He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Robert (1738/9–99) blacksmith at Gillbraehead. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1797, aged 55. They are buried in Etterton Cemetery along with 5 of their children and Elspeth (1760/1–1833). Thomas (1770/1–1854), also blacksmith at Gillbraehead, was probably his son, as well as William (1777/8–1851), who married Isabella Young. Robert (18th C.) miller at Southdean Mill. In 1773 his co-tenants William and Robert were cautioners for the rental of Doorpool by Helen Turnbull, their mother, who was widow of Robert, miller at Hallrule Mill. It seems likely that the 2 Roberts were related to each other. He may be the same Robert who was recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Hallrule Mill. He was married to Tibbie Donaldson, and their son John was said to have been prone to fighting at local fairs. It is unclear how he might have been related to the miller of Hallrule who died in 1766. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope Mill in 1780 when his son John was baptised. Robert (18th C.) farm labourer in the late 1700s. He is recorded planting trees at Whitchesters in 1790–91, cutting the foundation for a dyke in upper Teviotdale in 1792 and quarrying stones for a dyke in Liddesdale about 1793. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott. Robert (d.bef. 1809) mason on the Cross Wynd. His daughter Margaret died in 1809. He could be the workman Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Johnston in 1784. Robert (b.1765) 3rd son of John of Wester Swansheil. He purchased Galalaw, just outside Hawick, probably from Robert Pott around 1815. In 1821 he was a witness to the birth of William Turnbull to James (his brother) and Mary Stavert. He is listed as ‘Turnbull, R. Esq. Galalaw’ in 1821 on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the
Robert (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Ann Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) saddler in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of Main Street with Jean, probably his wife. He may be the same as the saddler recorded in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick. Robert & Son is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Robbie’ (d.1838) innkeeper at Bridgend, in Hobkirk Parish in the early 1800s. He was also a joiner in the late 1700s, the house there being rebuilt as a joiner’s shop, but turned into a pub. He married Jane Chisholme, whose sister Bella married Walter Amos. His son John was a grocer in the same building. He also had a daughter Betty, who took over as postmaster from her brother, and also kept the public house after his death. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same Robert who was a flesher on the Howegate on the 1841 census, married to Isabel and with children Elizabeth, John and William. Robert (1802–73) married Margaret Lillico in Wilton in 1825. Their children included: James (b.1825), baptised in Wilton; Agnes (b.1832) and Lizzie (b.1834), baptised in Yarrow; Maggie (1839–1905), Esther (b.1841), Ellen (b.1841) and Jean (b.1842), born somewhere in Scotland; and Jane (b.1845) and Mary (b.1849), born in Ontario, Canada. The family emigrated to Canada, settling in North Dumfries Township, Ontario. His wife died in 1864, aged 60 and they are buried in Mount View Cemetery, Waterloo, Ontario. Robert (b.1800/1) farmer at Galalaw, probably son of Robert. He was listed among the heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 150 acres and employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was listed as proprietor and farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 people. He was still recorded at Galalaw in 1868 and listed as owner on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Agnes Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1832. Their children included: Margaret (b.1832) and Robert (b.1834), who probably died young; James (b.1836), who was probably the later farmer at Galalaw; John (b.1838); John (again, b.1839); Margaret Scott (b.1841); Robert (b.1842); Thomas (b.1846); and Andrew Anderson (b.1848). Bailie Robert (b.c.1785) Magistrate of the mid-19th century, who was known as a tenor singer. He may have been the same Robert described as ‘Officer’ for the Excise Office in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk. He is listed in the 1841 census as a farmer on the Cross Wynd. He married Ann Maththison, and their children included: Ann Scott (b.1808); Elizabeth (b.1812); and James (b.1814), who was a draper. He is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1815) blacksmith at Stirches Croft in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been related to Walter, who was joiner there at the same time. Robert (1832–97) son of James, forster in Cavers. He was a tailor and clothier in Denholm. In 1859 he married Margaret (1833–96), daughter of Robert Scott, farmer and Elizabeth Wilson. Their children were: Robert Scott (b.1860); James (b.1862); David Wilson (b.1866); John Weir (b.1870); Elizabeth Wilson (b.1874), who died young; Thomas Mungo (b.1876), also died young; Thomas Mungo (again, b.1878); and Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), died young. The forst 2 children were born at Todlaw. He and his wife are buried in Denholm Cemetery. Robert Laidlaw (1830–74) son of William and Margaret Scott, he was from the Merrylaw family, and presumably named after the proprietor of Falnash. He attended St. Andrews University 1847–9. He was recorded as farmer at Falnash in 1868. He was owner of Merrylaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1867 he married Apalina Christina Hogarth, daughter of Alexander Pott in Teviothead Parish in 1867. Their children included: Apalina Margaret Scott (b.1869); William Laidlaw (b.1870); Jean Elliot (b.1871); and Alexander Pott (b.1872). He died aged 44.

Robert (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was descended from the Charterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd and then a farmer. In 1886 he married Isabella Gutterson, whose father had been a servant of Athol Hay. They had a son James, and 3 daughters. Robert (19th/20th C.) Bailie of Hawick. He was on the Council 1890–1900. Robert (1864–1932) gamekeeper at Arden Hall in Yorkshire, he was tenant farmer at Weensmoor around 1910. He married Isabel Gotterson and their children were Jim, Cecilia and Tib. Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) born in Hawick, son of schoolmaster Adam and Helen Paterson. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He served as a Lieutenant in the Black Watch and the Royal Fusiliers. He was licensed to preach in 1915, was then assistant at the Tron Church in Edinburgh and also in Hawick from 1919. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1921. He married Catherine Russell, daughter of Joseph Strang. Their children were: Helen Blair Paterson (b.1920); Katherine Margaret Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josepeline Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Michael Gordon (b.1935). Roland (15th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1476 he and his wife Peronell summoned Henry Liberton to appear before the Lords Auditors over a claim for rental on a tenement in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Roland (15th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Thomas had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘prynadotis in Weddale’; their surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Clarilaw. In 1493 he had remission for associating with the ‘rebels of Leven’ (i.e. Englishmen). His surety was George of Hallrule. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Simone Turnbull’ in 1507. Several Dalgleishes of Braidhaugh (probably in Rulewater) received remission for receiving and communing with him and others. Robert Turnbull was also mentioned, and so presumably a relative. They must have been declared rebels for some rieving activity. He and Robert were also recorded in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was hanged for associating with them. And in 1510 John Dalgleish was convicted of several crimes including ‘Intercommuning with Symon Turnbull and his accomplices, Englishmen’. Simon (16th C.) holder of the lands of Chamberlain Newton according to a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to ‘non-entries’ and other fees of the local Scotts. He is there described as the ‘grantor’s servant’ (i.e. servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell). Stephen (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, John and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Stephanus Turnbulle’. Stephen (15th/16th C.) brother of Philip of Whithope. He was recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Stephanus turnbule frater domini quhithop’ when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the plundering and burning of Kershope, stealing 50 cows and slaughtering John Murray; his brother the Laird of Whithope served as his surety. In 1500 Philip was assessed for payment due to Murray, with 4 oxen being taken, appraised and given to Walter Scott of Brouxholme. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (16th C.) son of Watt in Howa and hence brother of Archibald in Howa. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Stephen (d.c.1590) recorded as ‘of Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590 when he was succeeded by his son Adam. The family possessed the right of rental of the lands, which were still owned by the Homes of Wedderburn. He may have been son of the previous Adam. Stephen (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Appotshyd’ when he witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Stephen (17th C.) became an elder of Bedrule Parish in 1691 and was probably connected directly with the Turnbulls of Bedrule through his grandfather, who was also Stephen. He may be the ‘Stiphan’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Stephen (17th C.) tenant in Minto Cleuchhead. In 1692 he represented Isobel Wright, widow of Robert Paterson, in a discharge in Selkirk. Stephen (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1703 when the Parish Session collected money for ‘his numerous family of motherless children’. He was called to the Session as a witness, but could not attend because ‘the water was not passable’. Thomas (14th C.) witness in 1390 to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. His designation is not given, but other Turnbulls listed were Adam of Whithope and Adam of Fulton. Thomas of Penchrise (15th C.) recorded in 1464/5 as witness to the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1471 as being ‘of Faulysh’, which could be ‘Falnash’, but seems more likely to be the same as ‘Fawlishope’ (as recorded the following year). He was ordered to pay 3 year’s worth of taxes for the lands of Chamberlain Newton pertaining to Lord Lindsay, but failed to appear. He is probably related to the John who was connected with Stouslie (in the same Barony) in 1468. Sir Thomas of Greenwood and the Lyne (15th C.) had a sasine for the lands of Greenwood in 1461. He leased the lands of Greenwood and the Lyne, in the Barony of Minto, to Robert, son of David Scott of Buccleuch in 1488. This corresponds to the modern Girnwood. He kept 1 acre of the lands of Greenwood and 1 acre of the lands of Lyne, both in the north part, presumably for himself. He is probably son or grandson of the Adam who was granted Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1439. In 1488 he also had a charter from James III for the lands of ‘Traringzeane’ in Ayrshire; this was for his service to the King at Blackness. He is also recorded resigning the same lands to Alexander, Lord Home in a charter of 1492/3. He may have been part of the family of the Turnbulls of Minto, who sold the lands about half a century later. He is probably the Sir Thomas who witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton in 1494/5. He may be the Thomas of ‘Grynwald’ who in 1462 witnessed the copying of a discharge made a few years earlier between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. He may be the Thomas who gave a pledge for James Rutherford in 1471. Thomas of Stouslie (15th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is surely related to the Andrew of Stouslie who is recorded in 1490. Andrew Turnbull of Hawick was also a witness to the same sasine, and so probably related. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘in Gaithous cot’ in 1493 when he had remission for being at the Boroughmuir of Edinburgh with the Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing sheep and a horse from John Sinclair in Lauderdale, with George in Halrulc acting as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. In 1502 he and his brother John in Gatehousecote were fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Thomas, tenant at Gatehousecote, was listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Patrick and David. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when the lease of ‘Faulishope’ was granted to him without ‘grassum’, and granted to him again in 1492. He is also recorded in 1494/5 when he had a precept from King James IV for any crimes he might be accused of committing before the King’s coronation seven years earlier. It is unclear whether he was a Turnbull of Bedrule or from another branch; however it is possible that he was the same man as Thomas of Bedrule. He is recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’, which seems likely to be Phaup near the head of the Ettrick (although it could be Fauldshope further down the Ettrick). The crimes included stealing many sheep, cattle and horses from Patrick Murray at ‘Skaddamness’ (probably Scadow Ness or Rig) and Lewenshope, and stealing from David and George Tait ‘de Pryn’ (i.e. Pirn, near Stow), John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lechtanchop’ and John

Scott at ‘Glensax’, as well as resetting Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ and John of ‘Newhalburn’; one of these Turnbulls was his son (the Latin making it unclear which one is meant). His son and heir John leased the lands of Phaup in the period 1483–87 and Huntly in 1486. In 1494/5 he was surety for Edward Dunn in Phaup, who had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from Alexander and Robert Turnbull (who may have been his sons or other near relatives) from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed. In 1495 he was recorded as a controller of some sort for the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest. In 1499 and 1501 half of the lands of ‘Faulishope’ in Ettrick were let to his wife, Janet Scott. In 1471 probably the same ‘Thomas Turnebull of Faulishope’ was ordered to repay Thomas ‘Folker’ for 2 sacks of wool. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Roland had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘prynadotis in Weddale’; his surety was the Laird of Bedrule. He was also recorded in 1494/5, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls among a group of Turnbulls and others whose fines were remitted; ‘Thome Turnbull junioris’, listed before him may have been his son. He may be the same Thomas, son of James in Fulton, who served as surety for himself in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas of Bedrule (15th/16th C.) son and heir of George Turnbull. It is possible he is the same man as the Sir Thomas who was tenant in Phaup in Selkirkshire (and fined at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5). In 1493 Peter, ‘filio domini thome militis’, served as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; this suggests that Sir Thomas was indeed the Turnbull Laird (although ‘Bedrule’ is not explicitly mentioned). He is probably the Laird of Bedrule also recorded in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493, when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for ensuring that he and his attendants would not harm James Dunn in Jedburgh (suggesting some sort of feud). He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety for David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick in 1494/5. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety (along with William Langlands) for John Sinclair in Minto, John in Ruecastle and the Turnbulls in Fulton in 1493, as well as for Gilbert Shiel in Minto in 1494/5. In 1494/5 he was also ‘Junior dominus de bethroul’ when he served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire; the ‘Junior’ appellation suggests that his father was still alive, but that he was serving as the effective chief of the Turnbulls. In 1494/5 he additionally served as surety for: John, son of Philip; Ninian, son of William; and Robert, brother of the Laird of Bedrule (who was therefore presumably either his brother or uncle). He was recorded in 1501 when a fine of £40 imposed on 6 Turnbulls was granted to him. He was also recorded in 1502 as being ‘of Bethroull’ when he was one of about 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Ralph Ker in Greenhead was fined for failing to enter him in the court, and was fined £100 (considerably more than for the other men, indicative of his standing). His brother William was also listed, as well as Andrew in Bedrule, who may have been related. Additionally he was fined for failing to produce John in Ruecastle to answer for the same crime. He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule whose brother David was recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502, with Andrew in Bedrule as his surety. He had a sasine for the lands of Bedrule in 1502 and is probably the Laird who served as surety for Robert Shiel in Bedrule in that year. He may have been son of George of Bedrule, who is recorded about a generation earlier, and must have been related to the George of Bedrule who is recorded in the next decade. He is probably the same Thomas, son and heir of George, who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 and perhaps 1528. He is probably the Laird of Bedrule from whom 10 sheep were stolen by the Olivers in Strange before 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘junior’ in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted. Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester were also listed, and so he was probably from this area, and from his name was likely to have been son of another Thomas. Thomas in Fulton is listed directly after him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘le langhauch’ in 1502, this probably being Langhaugh in the Rule valley. George, Master of Angus served as surety for him in his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; Robert and William were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Thomas (d.bef. 1535) tenant in Town-of-Rule. Along with ‘Andree alias Dauid’ he was recorded in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused (but found not guilty) of their cruel murder. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when Turnbull accused of having been on a raid into England. He and George Rutherford, along with 100 other men were said to be responsible for the deaths of John Routledge and Robert Noble. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Sir Thomas of Bedrule (c.1520–c.87) son of George. In 1528 there was a gift of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his late father’s lands, to Sir Walter Scott of Brancheholme. Included in the gift was the right to arrange his marriage, since he was then still a minor. He may be the ‘Trumble of Bedroule’ who was listed among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds in 1545.

In 1550/1 he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ involving Robert Scott, heir of Adam Scott in the lands of Little Drinkstone. He signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1553 his brother Robert is recorded in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was either William of Hassendean Kirk or George of the Toor. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Brancheholme etc. by Sir Walter Scott. There was a complaint against ‘the molestations’ committed by him and George in Hallrule, made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, and he had to appear to answer these charges (the resolution is unrecorded, however). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 Sir John Stewart of Traquair was surety for him to answer to an accusation of stealing 3 horses from Lord Gray. In 1563, along with the parishioners of Bedrule he brought an action against Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, William Kerr (the Parson) and Sir John Allan, demanding that they produce the proof that they had the rights to the benefices of Bedrule; Kerr won the legal battle in 1564. There is a ‘certificate of relaxation’ for the teinds of Bedrule between him and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564/5, and a bond between them in the same year. Also in 1564 he was listed as ‘The Lard of Badrewl’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He was recorded as being at Mary Queen of Scots’ wedding to Darnley in 1566. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He had a bond of 1567 with the Warden, Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to present ‘Rengen Foster called Can’. A few years afterwards he assisted in stopping the Regent Moray from seizing the Crown. He later supported the Regent Morton, along with the Rutherfords, but against the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress the thieves on the Border. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Whitton. Along with his sons Walter and Thomas he was put to ‘escheat’ as a perjured rebel at one point. Additionally in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him, while he was surety for Adie Elliot ‘of the Cowdais’ and John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane around the 1570s. In 1571/2 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Oliver's as well as for Andrew Hall of ‘the Sykis’ and some Robsons of Hownam. Also in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Richard Rutherford of Edgerston) for several men from Southdean. Also in 1572/3 he was surety for William, Burgess of Edinburgh (who was thus probably a close relative). In 1573 he (and his son and heir William, and other son Walter) were among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; also on his side were his son Walter, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chesters. Also in 1576 he was cautioner for the Turnbulls of Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Belses in their bond not to harm other Turnbulls. In about 1578 (perhaps earlier) he signed a bond with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords, and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1577/8 his sons Thomas and Walter were acquitted of the murder of John Forbes. He was also one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1576 he was a cautioner for some Borderers who were accused of rieving, and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (in his case as pledge for Adam of Over Hassendean and also Sim Armstrong). He was then declared to be liable for the fines, or the amounts would be made from his ‘movabill guidis and geir, and, failyeing of thair movabill guidis, to appryse thair landis’. However, he appeared personally, and was let off, provided that the Davidsons for whom he stood as caution appeared before the Justice Court of Roxburgh. Also in 1578/9 John Johnstone of that Ilk was caution for his appearance, as well as his sons Walter and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine; this was for the slaught of ‘Thomas Schevill’. Also in 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Douglas of Bonjedward) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also another agreement between him and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward. Kinmont Willie Armstrong appeared before the Privy Council in 1579 because of a feud between their families, and also Christie Armstrong of Barnglies, for the same reason. In 1579 his sons Walter and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England: also listed were ‘Hobbat Hall and Mekie Hall, banished Englishmen, and servants to the Laird of Beddroule’. In 1580 he is listed as head of a group of Turnbulls who were bound over to keep the peace with John Turnbull of Minto and his followers; his group included his son Walter, as well as William of Barnhills and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood. Also in 1580 he was ordered along with John of Minto and Wat of Bewlie, to enter wards in Edinburgh Castle or be declared a rebel; later he was said to have disobeyed and was denounced as a rebel. In 1581 he was cautioner for men of the Jedburgh area and was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In about 1583 he lost the liferent of his lands of Bedrule to Robert Ker, younger of Woodhead. He was denounced in 1583/4 for not appearing before the Privy Council; he and his sons Walter and Thomas were denounced as rebels for taking ‘the cumpany of utheris thevis and rebellis, intending to continew in thift and oppressioun’. He was also the Laird of Bedrule whose sons are mentioned in a letter by the King in 1584 ‘for ane attemptat committ be thame at Preswen in England’ for which they were found guilty. In about 1584 he lost his position as one of the tutors to his niece Margaret (daughter and heiress of William), since he had been declared a rebel. He was probably the Laird of Bedrule referred to in 1584/5 when his son Robert was one of the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. In 1585/6 it was mentioned in a case before the Privy Council that the Bailies of Jedburgh blamed him and his associates for the murder of George and Harry Grahamslaw. In 1586 there was a promise by William Douglas of Cavers and George Douglas of Bonjedward that when he and his sons Thomas and Wat were released from jail in Edinburgh Castle that the Douglasses would present them again to the Privy Council if required. He is also recorded in 1587 representing Archibald in Howa, acting as surety for David in Jedburgh, and when Robert Scott of Haining was cautioner for him ‘and those for whom he is bound’. He must therefore have still been alive then. He married Mary Ker and secondly Janet Turnbull, widow of Philip Bennet of Chesters. A marriage contract of 1542 also exists between him and Margaret, daughter of George Home of Spott. He had at least 10 children: William, who probably pre-deceased him; Walter of Fulton, who succeeded to Bedrule; Thomas, probably tenant at Spittal-on-Rule; Robert, recorded in 1586 and 1592; Margaret, who married Edward Lorraine, this union apparently being unpopular with the Rulewater Turnbulls; Patrick, probably tenant at Templehall; Mark, tenant at Hartshaugh; James; Hector, who owned Hartshaugh and Swanshie; although this may be a confusion with the son of Thomas of Hartshaugh; and John, recorded in 1592. Another daughter Agnes is recorded in an undated marriage contract with Robert, son of deceased Robert Scott of Raesknowe. Although some genealogies have him dying in 1572, it seems this is wrong (or else 2 Thomases are hopelessly confounded). Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1533 being ‘in Rauflat’ (i.e. Rawflat) when Robert Stewart, on behalf of William Turnbull, delivered an old reversion relating to him. He is described as being ‘in Rawflat’ in a court case of 1540 when he disputed a ‘wadset’ with William Scott of Hassendea. Another case heard at the same time involved a marriage contract of 1536 between his son and heir George and Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heir of the same William Scott. Curiously in 1538 he had remission for the crime of stealing letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Cop-pitrig’ from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Nicholas Rutherford’s house in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘in the Tronyhill’ in a charter of 1536, where William Scott of Hassendean gave him ‘two husband-lands’ in ‘le Easter Hassendean’ described ambiguously. It is possible he is the same Thomas who farmed at Rawflat 4 years later. He may have been father of David of Troneyhill, who is recorded later in the 1500. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Turnbull of the Gaittuscott’ in a document of 1550. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Hartshaugh or possibly Laird there. He is recorded in 1557 when he signed a bond (along with others) with the Warden John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in the thief William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). Hector was probably his son. Thomas in Abbotrule was another son. His son Airchie was recorded in 1567. Thomas (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1561 he and his brother were among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. He may be the Thomas who was pledge for the Laird of Wauchope in 1553/4. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Harwood-town, brother of David of Wauchope. ‘Thomas Turnbullis byir and barneyaied’ are listed among the lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule under dispute in 1562. He is listed as brother of David in 1567 when he was instructed to present his servant Ingram Oliver to answer charges relating to raids into England. It was either him or (more likely) his son who was hanged during the period when Sir William Cranston was a Border Commissioner, i.e. shortly after 1605. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Hassendenbank’ in 1567 when James Heriot of Trabroun was surety for entering him into ward in Edinburgh. He was recorded as tenant in Hassendeanbank in 1571 when he and his wife, Margaret Scott, had a charter in Melrose for lands in Darnick. Their eldest son William was also mentioned, and the witnesses included Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, who may well have been his father-in-law. This charter was confirmed in 1616. The Thomas, younger, listed in 1579 was probably a son of his. He could be the same man as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Blue Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit blew Thome’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Thomas (16th C.) recorded ‘in Cavers’ in 1579, this probably being Cavers Carre. He was son of James who represented him in a transaction in Selkirk, where a piece of land was purchased in Midlem. Probably the same Thomas was in 1592 a signatory to a caution (signed at Cavers Carre) by Thomer Ker of Cavers Carre for the good behaviour and loyalty to the King of James Scott of Whithope. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1577/8 he and his brother Walter were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer for slaughter of Thomas ‘Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Walter were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He and his brother Walter were accused of stealing 19 cows from Englishman Edward Grays in 1582. In 1583 he and Walter were supposed to be turned over to the English Warden, but William Ker of Cessford (a relative of some sort) sent them back to Scotland and they were acquitted. Ker gave caution for the pair in 1583/4 and John Cranston of that Ilk paid the £2000 penalty. He is mentioned along with his father Sir Thomas and brother Walter in 1586, in a promise to present them again before the Privy Council when requested, after their release from jail in Edinburgh Castle. He became tenant at Spittal-on-Rule in 1612. He may be the ‘Thomas Turnbull of Roule’ listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. He is recorded as ‘in Rowlspittle’ recorded in a bond of 1619 with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichill), servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, with cautioners being Mark Turnbull ‘in Hairtishaugh’ and Thomas ‘Allensone’ Bailie of Jedburgh. There may also be some confusion between him and Thomas of Minto, who lived about the same time. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, he was recorded as tenant in Abbotrule in 1579, when listed among Scotsmen accused of committing raids into England. He was said to have been in a party of about 40 men, led by the sons of the Laird of Bedrule, who stole 40 cows, and took the Laird there prisoner. Thomas (16th C.) son of ‘Hekie of Hartshaugh’. In 1579 he was listed along with several Turnbulls and others of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He may be the ‘Thom Troumble of Harkshaw’ (if this is a transcription error for Hartshaugh) listed in 1603 along with his brother Lanie, as well as Turnbulls from Nether Bouchester, Braithaugh and Mackside, who were ordered to find caution of 300 merks each to answer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. Thomas ‘the Tutor’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 as ‘Thome Turnbull, younger in Hassindanebank, alias called the Tutor’, when he was among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. The group was led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule. He may have been son of the previous Thomas in Hassendeanbank. Thomas of Billerwell (16th C.) listed in 1581 among men accused of murdering Walter of Rawflat. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls, but the Belses branch were also named in the accusation. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Deneside 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have been related to other Turnbulls associated with Deneside. Thomas of Hobsburn (16th/17th C.) probably the son of Walter of Hobsburn listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes. He was also accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year; his name is recorded as ‘Thom Smucly of Hoppsburn the younger’, and others named were Douglases, Laidlaws and Shiels. He is probably the ‘Thomas Smucly of Hoppsborne’ listed along with Douglases, Laidlaws, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton in 1590. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was there ‘Thome Smucly of Hoppsburne’. He was also one of the Turnbulls accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside. He was probably related to some of the others who were on trial (from Wauchope, Billerwell, etc.), but the exact relationships are not clear. He is referred to as ‘houselid man to Thomas Trumbill younger of Wauchope’. He was eventually acquitted of the crimes. Either he or his son was ‘younger of Hoppsburn’ in 1606 when he sold Hobsburn and Weens to John, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmount. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of David of Troneyhill. In 1610 he was named along with 7 other Turnbulls (and 2 Davidsons) for continuing as rebels following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Fulton. Along with his father and several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. He was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear, along with others, including Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, also in Fulton. This may be the last record of the Turnbulls of Fulton. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw ‘Townfute’ in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. His brother Hector was also listed. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Home, son of the historian David Home of Godscroft (in Berwickshire). He witnessed a bond for Home of Godscroft in 1627. Thomas of Bedrule (b.c.1585) son of William and grandson of Walter. Although these generations are uncertain, he was probably great-grandson of Sir Thomas. He is probably the Thomas ‘son of William Turnbull, fiar of Bedreull’ who was a witness in 1618/9 to a bond by Walter of Bedrule to Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he recorded as son of William, ‘younger of Bedreule’ when, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns and attacking a servant of the Laird of Traquair. This is probably part of a dispute over lands of Huntliehill that the Turnbulls of Bedrule lost to the Stewarts of Traquair. He could also be the Thomas ‘in Reidetoun fute’ who had already been declared a rebel along with Walter of Bedrule, William and others in 1615, for not removing themselves from the Laird of Traquair’s lands of Huntliehill. He was recorded in 1619 as son of William ‘fear of Bedrule’ when, along with his grandfather, father, brother George and others, he was declared a rebel for removing timber from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair. By the time he succeeded to the Bedrule title, the castle was long destroyed, and the Kers had taken possession of the lands in 1623. It is unclear who he married, but he seems to have succeeded by William and then another Thomas (last of the Lairds of Bedrule). Thomas of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Hector. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 as ‘appeirand of Wauchop, for myselff and my father. In a court case of 1605 (in which they accused John Elliot of Copshaw of stealing livestock from their farms) he was still ‘younger of Wauchope’; his brother George and other neighbouring tenants are also mentioned. He was perhaps the leader of a band of Turnbulls who systematically raided the estates of Appotside and Harwood over the period 1598–1605. Although the rest of his family and associates were acquitted, he was separately brought to justice in 1606, but failed to appear and was declared a rebel. James Gedstains, younger of Cocklaw, acted as his surety. Willie Scott ‘man to Young Wauchop’ may have been his servant, when declared a fugitive in 1605. In 1607 he and Hector of Barnhills brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Hector of Wauchope may have been his son, with Thomas his grandson. However, in 1653 his nephew James (son of his brother George) was served heir to his 20-pound land of Wauchope. Thomas of Minto (16th/17th C.) son of John. In 1595 he was recorded along with his father and brother George, among Turnbulls and Davidsons when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill. He appeared in court and was ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for £1000 that Ker and his tenants would not be harmed; however, he failed to find a surety, left the city and was denounced as a rebel. In 1601 he was ‘Tho. Trumble the younger layrd of Myntaw’ who, along with another Thomas, as well as James Douglas of Cavers, was accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag. He is probably the Thomas of Minto who was one of a large band of Turnbulls who were involved in a serious fight in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601. About 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh and tried to get Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) to come out of his house, whereupon the men of Jedburgh took up arms. The fight left Thomas Ker, his servant and 2 of the Turnbulls dead and many men injured, and as a result several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. In 1602 he was recorded as younger of Minto when, along with Hector of Barnhills and Mark of Beulie, he robbed a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds as ‘fear of Mynto, for myself and for my father’. In 1603 he was served heir to his father in the half Barony of Minto, including 5 husbandlands in the town of Minto. In 1604 he acted as cau- tioner for William Middlemas and his son James, charged with the crimes related to the 1601 skirmish. He is probably the Laird of Minto who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburgh- shire in 1610. Also in 1610 he acted as cau- tioner for James Douglas of Cavers and his son William, that they would not harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues. In 1611 he had licence to travel abroad for 5 years. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to apprehend Andrew and Cuthbert McDougall in Stanedge for the murder of Fergus Lorraine and to try them in Jedburgh; however, Andrew Ker asked for him to be replaced, since there was a ‘deidlie feid stand- ing betuixt’ them. He is also mentioned in 1622 when his son Walter became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He witnessed a report by the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire in 1627. In 1627 he paid caution for William of Braid- haugh and his son James. He is also recorded in 1628 when the major landowners of Roxburgh- shire convened to elect M.P.s. He is there listed as ‘Thomas Trumble of Minto’. His 2nd son was Thomas, recorded in a charter for Hornshole in 1619; his 1st son may have been John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Minto. In 1619 he was granted the lands of ‘Horneshioll’ by the Earl of Melrose. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of James of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. He succeeded his father in 1619. He was in turn succeeded by his son Adam. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ who had a bond in 1620 with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. The bond was witnessed by his father Robert, who was probably a son of Sir Thomas, but these generations are difficult to sort out. Thomas ‘in Rewcaistill’ and his son John (certainly close relatives) were cautioners. Thomas ‘Andrew’s Tam’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Bonchester in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name is given as ‘Androis Tam Trumble in Bunchester’. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 2 deeds of 1620 as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, the first person on record to hold such a position. There is nothing else known about him. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Rouchcaistell’ in 1619 among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1620 when he was cau- tioner for a bond between Thomas, son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ and Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Rowcastell’ who witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1623. He is also described as ‘in Rowcastell’ in 1632 when he feued lands in Rowcastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He was possibly a son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule, brother of Walter of Bedrule, making the other Thomas (son of Robert) his nephew. Thomas of Knowe (d.1647) probably the Thomas included in 1603 on a long list of local men that the Baron of Hassendean was trying to remove from their lands; his son Walter (perhaps William) is also listed. He was Laird of Hassendean Knowe. In 1613 Sir George Ramsay paid him the teinds for the lands of Knowe. In 1619 he raised ‘letters of horning an poinding’ against William Turnbull, brother of the deceased Robert. He was also a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court. His relationship with Thomas of Minto is unclear (but the families seemed to use the same names John and Thomas for the next few generations!). There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of Hassendean. In 1628 he was Thomas ‘in Know’, who, along with Walter, were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels and other Scotts. He paid the caution in 1628 for Andrew of Bewlie not to molest the Scotts in Burnfoot and Midshiels. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is further recorded in 1640 in dealings with Walter Gledstains, factor to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of Knowe in Hassendean Parish, valued at £279 10s. The name of his wife does not appear to be recorded, however a carved panel on the house at Knowetownhead has ‘T.T.’ and ‘H.T.’ and the year 1628, suggesting that he married another Turnbull (probably Helen, which was the name of one of his granddaughters). His daughter Marion married Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie about 1640. Another daughter Elizabeth married Walter Scott (subject of a legal dispute against Walter and Janet Scott in 1644); she is the ‘Bessie’ who secondly married Andrew Riddell in 1652, tenant at Over Whitton. He was deceased by 1649 when his daughter Barbara married John Grierson (son of the deceased Andrew), and she appears to have put an ‘inhibition’ on her husband in 1657. One of his sons was William (recorded in 1658), while John (who appears to have succeeded as Laird) was probably his eldest son. His death is recorded on a table tomb in Minto old churchyard, along with that of John of Knowe (d.1676). Thomas of Westwood (17th C.) holder of lands near Bonchester in 1643, along with ‘Harie’, who must have been his brother or son. They appear to have held separate lands, with his valued at £40 Scots. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘in Templihall’ when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654. He was brother of Robert, the tenant at Templehall. He could be the Thomas in ‘Rouletoum’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £40, and Robert also listed there. Thomas (d.c.1655) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) in 1622. He is probably the Thomas who was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1622. He is recorded as possessor of the lands of Hassendean Bank in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. His son Thomas succeeded to the lands in 1655. Thomas of Upper Bonchester (17th C.) Laird in 1643, and probably father of William (d.1686); this is according to Walter Deans, writing in 1887. He is probably the Thomas of Bonchester whose lands were valued at £30 in 1643. He could be the same as Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls among landowners in Abbotrule Parish; it is unclear what that name meant, or whether he was related to the Scotts who shared a similar appellation, or Adam ‘callit Clerk in Bonchester’ recorded in 1643. He may have been progenitor of the Bonchester Turnbulls who were later tenants at Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. Thomas of Tower (17th C.) listed by James Wilson among the list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He is recorded being of ‘Tour’, which probably meant Spittal Tower. He paid the land tax of £104 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Tofts (d.c.1690) son of William of ‘Weddelliswallis’ In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s 5 husbandlands of Minto. He was recorded in a marriage agreement in 1669 between him and Helen, daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This may have been for one of his sons, since he himself married a daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This was recorded as being ‘of Tofts in Kirktoume parish’ when he paid land tax on £402 in 1663. He may be the unnamed Turnbull who paid the land tax on Tofts, valued at £300 in 1678. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Tofts’ whose testaments were recorded in 1686 and 1689. His son William was served as his heir in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’. Thomas of Bedrule (17th C.) son of William of Bedrule. He was probably grandson of the earlier Thomas (although these generations are not clear). He is probably the Thomas who is recording owning half of the Mains of Bedrule in 1643 (the other half being owned by William of Bedrule). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. He was the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule, although by the time he inherited the family had already lost most of its lands. There was a final instrument of resignation of the Barony to Ker of Cavers in 1668. He was nevertheless allowed to remain in Bedrule Mill (where he is recorded in 1673) and part of the Mains of Bedrule. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Andrew, and was grandfather of Thomas of the Hawick carpet factory. His other son was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. There was also a tradition that his eldest son died in India leaving a great fortune that was taken by the government. Thomas (17th C.) brother of William, who was a mason in Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish, but possibly on Slitrig). He was one of those accused by a servant of Douglas of Cavers of stealing his wallet in a Hawick inn in 1642. He gave evidence to the Magistrates at the trial. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John of Knowe. In 1652 he was appointed as the tutor to the children of the deceased Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Charterhall near Ancrum), Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret. He was the nearest male relative, probably their uncle. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh in 1655. He is recorded as ‘in Hassendeanbank’ in 1655 in a ‘tack’ with John Turnbull of Knowe for ‘Cosier’s Acre’ in Cocksersyke, at the east end of Hassendean Knowe meadow (it seems likely that he was distantly related to the Turnbulls of Knowe). He had a ‘wadset’ with John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656, also involving the ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (i.e. Cockerheugh). In 1658 he had a further bond with John Scott of Brieryyards. His eldest son was probably John (according to an undated document). He could be the Thomas, tenant of Hassendean, who is recorded paying the land tax for £52 in 1663. Robert, who is recorded at Cockerheugh in 1694, seems likely to have been his descendant. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1662 as ‘in Roultoinfute’. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ for the Earl of Lothian or perhaps to Walter Riddell. He may have been the same as Thomas, tenant of Templehall. Thomas ‘Captain’ (17th C.) tenant of Swanshiel. He is named (along with 7 others) in a proclamation fixed to the Mercat Cross in the early 1680s, accused of frequenting Conventicles. He is also on the long list of fugitives proclaimed in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1665 (although this would make more sense as 1685) he was accused of throwing his mother-in-law Helen Briggs (wife of Mungo Swan) downstairs, when ‘coming to see his spouse, her daughter then att the poynit of death’. His wife was probably Helen (b.1657), with whom he had a daughter Helen in 1681. He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver William Brown in 1687 and another for William Lethem in 1684. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for weaver ‘White John’ (perhaps his brother-in-law) in 1701. Thomas of Allerton (17th C.) resigned the lands of ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to his cousin Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690. How this relates to the history and political fortunes of the Turnbulls of Knowe is unclear. Thomas of Standhill (d.bef. 1658) recorded in a discharge of 1658 between Thomas of Knowe’s son William (‘tutor’ to his son Thomas) and John of Knowe. It seems likely that he was a close relative of the Laird of Knowe. He may be the Thomas of Chesterhouse (near Hownam) whose widow made an agreement in 1664 with his younger brother William (and tutor to his children Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret) to resign the lands of Standhill to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. Thomas of Knowe (1651/2–1730) probably son of John. He was a Covenanter supporter. Note that some of these events may refer to 2 different generations. In 1678 he paid land tax on £227 8s in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Knowe). In 1680, along with others, he was declared a rebel by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum, with the implication that he was involved in the uprising at Bothwell Brig. In 1681 he was summoned to appear before the Lords of Council and Session in Edinburgh for failure to answer to a ‘decreet of horning’. The same years his property was confiscated by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. But he had a ‘decreet of absolution’ in 1681 and in 1683 he is recorded raising ‘letters of horning’ against the minister and several officials.

of Selkirk. And in 1684 he is listed among men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, his crime being ‘for rest’. In 1678 his sister Grizel married Adam Scott of Burnhead. He is probably the Thomas ‘of Hazintonn Know’ recorded in a bond of 1679 with his brother John and sisters Margaret, Marion and Elizabeth. He is also recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in that year, for which he was arrested. Also in 1690 there is a record of Thomas Turnbull of Allertone resigning the lands of the ‘East Mains of Hassindene called the Know’ to him; it is unclear whether this was just some legal maneuver. He appears to have acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire in 1694. He also served as an elder for Minto Kirk. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He rented Huntlaw from Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw in 1703 and was still renting it in 1715. He bought Hassendean Townhead from William Little the same year. A bill for William Little from Gideon Scott of Highchester was passed on to him by Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick in 1705. He paid a similar bill for William Little according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Fahnash in 1705. In 1716 he brought a libel case against James Elliot, an Edinburgh waiter. About 1720 he is recorded in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish (the part that had been in Hassendean). A letter of 1724 from James Clerk suggests that they were brothers-in-law to each other. His will of 1682 (while he was still alive) is in the National Archives. He married Agnes Mackie, who died in 1716 in her 58th year. He was probably succeeded by his son Anthony and in 1721 his daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant in Hawick. He and his wife were buried in Minto Kirkyard. Thomas (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682. He is probably one of the Thomases recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Bennet and their children included: Bessie (b.1677); Bessie (again, b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). His wife’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ in 1677 (perhaps in error). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Cowan and John Binnie. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Johnston and their children included James (b.1688). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. His children included John (b.1688). He could be the Thomas whose daughter Jean married William Beattie in Roberton in 1705. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Michael) witnessed a baptism for William in Roberton in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1644/5–1729) tenant in Dyke farm, son of Thomas, who was also tenant there. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably one of the 3 men of that name who are listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas of Standhill (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a discharge of 1658 when Thomas of Knowe’s son William was his ‘tutor’. He was known as a leading local supporter of the Covenanting cause, being converted by John Livingstone, who preached at Ancrum. In 1676 he helped John Blackadder escape after the Sheriff broke up a meeting near Selkirk. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He fought at Bothwell Bridge in 1679, and escaped the battlefield along with Walter of Bewlie. He was persecuted, had his possessions removed from him, and was sentenced to execution, but escaped capture and eventually returned to his estate at Standhill. He is probably the Turnbull ‘of Stainhall’ listed among those named as officers of the militia to defend against ‘the papists’ in 1689. He is listed among those appointed to visit schools in the Act of Parliament established in 1690 after the Revolution. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire (but may have already been deceased). He had 2 sons: one was a soldier; the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. One of them must have been the Thomas who was served heir to Thomas of Standhill in 1695. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Wester Swanshiel according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed as being ‘called tounfoott’ in Abbotrule Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was probably associated with the lands of Abbotrule Townfoot. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after Thomas ‘called tounfoott’, who was probably associated with Abbotrule Townfoot (rather than Ruletownfoot), but may well have been closely related. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) gardener at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) smith listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassandem’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths. A separate Thomas appears on the same list of cottars. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Standhill. He was served heir to his father in 1695. It was said that his father had 2 sons, one of whom was a soldier and the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant in Commonside. In 1706 he married Mary Hislop, who was also a servant in Commonside. Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded as a herd at Nether Southfield in 1708; his wife was Margaret Hislop and their daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. Other children, baptised in Hawick Parish, which could be his, include John (b.1705), Jean (b.1708), Margaret (b.1709) and John (b.1709). Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Gledstains. His son John was baptised in 1705, with witnesses weavers Robert Jolly and Robert Greenshields. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1708 with witnesses weavers Michael Bridges and James Scott ‘Laird’. He may be related to the earlier weaver Thomas. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1711 and 1712. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls. He may be the same man as the merchant involved in a court case in 1748, in which writer Robert Taylor paid his bill with money that perhaps did not really belong to him; he also took Taylor to court to recover his money. He may be the Thomas whose mother was given money by the Hawick Session in 1723 for teaching poor children. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Turnbull in Wilton in 1714. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1717 when he married Janet Dryden, the marriage also being proclaimed in Jedburgh. Thomas (1680/1–1753) son of Thomas, tenant in Dykes farm. His wife Marion Brown died in 1743, and their son Thomas died in 1752, aged 25. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (1691/2–1768) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Scott, who died in 1777, aged 72. Their children included: James (b.1725); ‘Beatie’ (b.1726); James (b.1727); Isabel (b.1728); Thomas (b.1731); James (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1738); Betty (b.1739); and Anne (b.1741). He may be the same man as Bailie Thomas. He was buried under a tablestone at St. Mary’s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 he was living at Mabonlaw when his daughter Mary was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Helen Telfer in Wilton in 1729. Bailie Thomas (18th C.) father of Bailie Thomas of Fenwick. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he came from (but presumably not closely related to Bailie ‘Tammy’ and the Minto branch, despite the similarity of names). He may be the Thomas who sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch, along with John Scott and Rev. Patrick Cunningham in the 1740s. He was probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1730s, 40s and 50s. He witnessed a baptism for skinner Walter Scott in 1746. He was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull, elder’ when he served as Magistrate in 1757. In that year there was a dispute over residents of farms near the Common making ‘bakes’ at Black-grain Moss, which were broken up on the orders of the Council (when he was visiting Newcastle) and the offenders fined, with him settling with them in opposition to the other Bailie, Robert Scott. He is probably the Bailie Thomas who purchased Fenwick in 1762 and other properties in 1771, including Rashiegrain and Commonbrae. In 1763 he was engaged in business in London when his son (also an ex-Bailie by then) was commissioned by the Hawick Town Council to write to him to arrange for an exchange of a new bell for St. Mary’s. Also in 1763 he was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick’ when he witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas. In 1765 he is probably the Thomas ‘senior’ who witnessed a baptism for glazier William and the ‘Bailie Turnbull Sear’ who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew Scott. In 1767 he was described as ‘Thomas Turnbull, elder of Fenwick, Merchant in Hawick’ when he produced the Hawick Town Charters at the court case for the Division of the Common. In 1777 he was one of the claimants for a share of Hawick Common, when it was divided, gaining more than 15 acres. He is said to have left 2 sons and 2 daughters (although these generations seem confused by multiple Thomases!). He was succeeded by his son, also Bailie Thomas. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William (who was probably related to him) and in 1764 witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas (called ‘Junior’ at that point). In 1764 (when described as ‘late Bailie here’) and 1766 he witnessed baptisms for Walter (probably a relative) and Katherine, daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce. In 1764 ‘Bailies Turnbull older and younger’ and in 1766 both ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ and ‘Junior’ witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn. In 1772 he is probably the Bailie of Fenwick who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie William Elliot) for Bailie Andrew Scott and another for John Osburn. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Denholm Dean in 1741 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. Probably the same Thomas was in Denholm in 1749 when his son Thomas was baptised. Some of these other children, baptised in Cavers, may also have been his, James (b.1736), Margaret (b.1737), Thomas (b.1738), Walter (b.1739), Patrick (b.1744) and William (b.1745). Thomas (b.c.1730) son of Adam of Deneside. After the family were forced to leave the Rule valley he became a weaver in Tarset-foot, Tyneside. His sons Adam and William returned to the Rule area, but he could not be convinced to move. He also had a son Michael (who died young), and daughters Isabella (who married William Walker, farmer at East Fodderlee) and Mary (who married Thomas Telfer). He lived to be 99. Thomas ‘Tammy’ of Knowe (d.c.1770) probably succeeded from Anthony, who may have been his father. He is recorded in a discharge of 1758 and in 1763 when he leased Appletreehall, Townhead and part of Clarilaw. He is easily confused with Thomas of Minto, who was probably a distant cousin. He was involved in an action against the Duke of Buccleuch over teinds in the parishes of Minto and Hassendean in the period 1749–65. He is probably the Turnbull of Knowe recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of those who raised an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. In 1769 he had a marriage bond for his son John with Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee. He married Sussana Scott, daughter of Robert Scott of Fahnash in Edinburgh in 1755 (and she made a disposition in 1789). He was succeeded by his son Thomas. His daughter Violet married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1778, and the titles and lands probably passed to the Horsburgh family thereafter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. James Watson in Kelso, and was also an heiress of his lands. His will from 1764 (when he was still alive) is in the National Archives. Some of his correspondence also survives (in the Horsburgh family collection) including letters from his cousin Patrick Heron, brother-in-law James Holt and sister Isabella. Thomas of Knowe (d.c.1788) son of Thomas. He is recorded as part of the bond for his brother John’s marriage to Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee in 1769. He is recorded in an ‘assignation in trust’ with Robert Scott, cashier in Jedburgh in 1774. He was listed on the roll of elector for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is still recorded in 1786, although it appears that the estates passed to the Horsburgh family through marriage to his sister Violet. He was taxed for having a gardener and a footman in the period 1778–86. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 3 carriage horses, and 2 in 1787. He was taxed for owning a carriage in 1786 and 1787 and for having a female servant in 1785–87. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Know’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1790 is probably his widow. There is a disposition by him (among the Scott of Ralbarn papers) in 1787, and another to Alexander Horsburgh (among the Elliot of Minto papers) in 1788 relating to Clarilaw and Hassendean. His trustees were recorded as owners of Alton, parts of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the 1788 county valuation (and 1811 Land Tax Rolls). Thomas (1706–74) of Burnfoot, and also described as ‘of Catshill’ (i.e. Catshawhill). He was son of Andrew and Jean Scott. He was factor to the Minto estate in 1738 (and hence sometimes confused with the Turnbulls of Minto) and farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He also managed the estate of Haining and the farm of North Synton for Lord Alemoor, where he planted numerous hedges and plantations. He bought the farm of Catshawhill, but sold it after a few years (for a large profit). He was involved in the beginnings of the local carpet trade about 1753. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of Thomas Turnbull & Company, Hawick, manufacturing woolen articles (presumably carpets) in 1763. He joined with others in 1769 (or perhaps 1759) to form a partnership in the main carpet factory in Hawick. He obtained the lease for Burnfoot and also West Buccleuch in 1760. He also acted as a local money lender before there were banks; he loaned money to William.

Kerr of Abbotrule, Thomas Scott of Stonedge, Henry Elliot of Harwood, Gideon Scott of Falnash, Douglas of Cavers and Lord Minto. He was appointed as an arbiter for the process of deciding on the division of the Common (one of a group of 2 lawyers and 2 country gentlemen), but died before the process was completed. In 1735 he married Nellie (or Nelly) Thomson, who was said to be from Whitelee, Redewater, and she died in 1747, aged 34. In 1753 he secondly married Esther, daughter of James Douglas (farmer at the Trows); she was widow of Alexander Ogilvie and aged 38 when she remarried, but still had 3 children. He was recorded as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1758, when his son Gilbert became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This son joined the Honourable East India Company, was inclined to be extravagant, and it is said he eventually refused to pay his bills. His children with his first wife were: Andrew (b.1736), who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1737), who married James Turnbull, tenant of Hassendeanbank; Jean (b.1739); Andrew (again, b.1740/1), who also died young; Gilbert (b.1741/2) who was a surgeon in the East India Company and died unmarried; an unnamed son (b.1743); William (1745–1825), who inherited Burnfoot; and Marion (b.1747), who died young. With his second wife he had: Nelly, who married George Thomson, farmer at Bught-Rig; Esther, who married Thomas Scott of Peel; and Thomas, who became a manufacturer in Hawick. He died at Burnfoot. Thomas (18th C) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1736 and 1737 when his son James was baptised. Some of these children, baptised in Cavers Parish, are probably his: James (b.1736); Margaret (b.1737); Thomas (b.1738); Walter (b.1739); John (b.1741); Patrick (b.1744); William (b.1745); and Thomas (b.1749). Bailie Thomas (1730/1–1825) of Fenwick, merchant in Hawick. He was eldest son of Bailie Thomas, and is easy to confuse with his father. He may have been the Thomas born in Hawick to Thomas and Betty Scott in 1731. He was Cornet in 1753. In 1758 he was recorded as a skinner. He was already a Bailie by 1763, when he is described as ‘younger Bailie’ when asked to write to his father in London to arrange for an exchange of the great bell of St. Mary’s for a new one; they are described as ‘Thomas Turnballs, late Baillies, Senr. and Jun.’. In 1763 he was ‘junior late Bailie in Hawick’ when he received from the Town Treasurer the money to pay for the new bell. Both he and his father witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn in 1764 and 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and also a neighbouring landowner, getting 15 acres himself. He may be the Bailie Turnbull whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. He is probably the Thomas of Fenwick who gained 15 Scots acres in the Division of the Common in 1777. He is probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Fenwick (valued at £100), land in Weensland (valued at £35 18s 7d), as well as owner of two parcels of lands (valued at £31 19s 4d and £31 19s 4d, possibly near Burnflat) that had belonged to Patrick Cunningham. He paid tax in Hawick Parish for having a female servant in 1788–91 and also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was ‘of Fenick’ in 1787–97 when he paid the horse tax, being called ‘Mercht.’ in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was probably the Thomas who was ‘Esq.’ on the Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 work horses and the merchant who paid tax on a saddle horse in Hawick, as well as paying the dog tax. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (along with his son William). In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of Fenwick, Brieryyards, Hornshole, part of Weensland, part of ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ and ‘Part of Particot Lands in Hawick’. He was the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map, although he must have been extremely old by this time; he was therefore an important heritor in the Parish. His lands included: the area later named Fenwick Park; a large section of the Terraces; fields on the north side of the Loan; and Wylie’s Dub. In 1806 the farms of Palace and Shortacres were added (and they would later own the Rodono Estate in Yarrow as well). In 1805 he married Martha, daughter of David Ogilvie of Brieryyords, through which his family gained Brieryyords in 1783; she died in 1806. Their children included: Thomas (b.1758), who died young; Martha (b.1759); William, who succeeded (b.1760); Thomas, again (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1764); and David, who died in India before his father. In 1758 and 1759 the witnesses were David Ogilvie of Brieryyards (his father-in-law) and James Weir. For the 1763 baptism he was described as ‘late Bailie’ and the witnesses were Bailie Thomas of Fenwick (his father) and Bailie John Scott. The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ (his father) and Andrew Scott. It is possible he is the Thomas whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1777. A portrait of him, painted by Scott of Edinburgh, is in the Museum (and donated by Andrew Kennedy). He died at the venerable age of 94. Thomas (1731/2–95) merchant in Denholm, son of Alexander (d.1761) and Helen Murray (d.1780). He was recorded as a merchant in Denholm in 1783, when his son Alexander was baptised. His wife Agnes Rutherford also died in 1783, aged 29. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (b.1783), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably also his son. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Martha Ogilvie and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Martha (b.1759); William (b.1760); Thomas (again, b.1763); and Elizabeth (b.1764). It is possible he is the smith whose son William died in Hawick in 1716. Thomas ‘Tammy Trumble’ (18th C.) clothier and dyer in Hawick. It is said that the family were once quite well off, but their fortunes changed and he had to move to find work, including as a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. It was also said that he ‘was rather an eccentric in his way’, being a frequenter of ale-houses and ‘fond of singing songs, not always of the most delicate character’. He may be the same as Thomas the dyer in Hawick who was paid in 1757 for ‘dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes’. He was listed (as a clothier) along with Gavin as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764; he was probably son or younger brother of Gavin. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1764 when he witnessed a baptisms in Hawick for George Scoon. In 1770 he was living at Roughheugh and recorded as a parishioner of Wilton, and in 1772 was at Denside. In 1770 he and Gavin were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill). By 1774 the family were in Galashiels and in 1778 were in Portsburgh, St. Cuthbert’s Parish, Edinburgh. He married Beatrix Ruecastle in Hawick in 1762; she is probably the Beatrix, daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle, who was baptised in Hawick in 1742. Their children were: Jane (b.1763), who probably married Ebenezer McLellan in Hawick in 1794; Gavin (b.1764), baptised in Hawick, poet and actor; Betty (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1768), baptised in Hawick: Walter (b.1770), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Wilton, who later emigrated to America; Euphemia (b.1775), baptised in Galashiels; Henry (b.1778), baptised in Edinburgh; and Walter (again, b.1781), baptised in Kilmarnock, who was a weaver and died in Glasgow. The record in 1781 states that Walter was the 6th son and 9th child, and that this was the first marriage for both parents. The baptismal witnesses recorded are: in 1763, John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and Gavin Turnbull (perhaps his father); in 1764 and 1766, the whole congregation; in 1768, ‘present Magistrates’ Walter Ruecastle (probably his brother-in-law) and William Elliot; in 1770 Robert Scott (perhaps the miller at Roughheugh) and Thomas Scott; in 1772 James Scott and John Mathieson; and in 1778 Edinburgh dyers Henry Duncan and James Fairney. Based on the children, his parents names were probably Gavin and either Jane or Euphemia. He may have been related to the later dyers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1770. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Scott. Thomas (b.1740) eldest son of James, farmer at Dykes, and Helen Spindie. He was born at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He was locally very well-known in his day as a writer of poetry. He wrote a piece about the old village of Bedrule called ‘the Deserted Village’ and he also put the Shorter Catechism into verse. He was grand-uncle to John Turnbull of Sunlawhill farm. It is said that he made a lock for the old burial ground at Spittal-on-Rule, which was preserved at Weens in the early part of the 20th century. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Dykes on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Harkness and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1774); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew Burnet and Alexander Bunyan. Thomas (1756–97) son of Thomas and sister of Janet. He was probably grandson of John and brother of John, who farmed at Mackside. The family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Dodburn in 1789 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Bailie Thomas ‘Bailie Tammy’ (1758–1823) local businessman and Magistrate. He is easy to confuse with the contemporary Thomases of Fenwick. He was the youngest son of Thomas of Minto and his 2nd wife Esther Douglas, and was father of John Turnbull of the Dyeworks. He became a partner in the Hawick Carpet Company in 1779. He later carried on the dyeing department as a separate business, for a while situated where Bridge House was later located. This business ultimately led to ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. He was involved in a large number of local business enterprises in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He is probably the manufacturer who in 1788 (along with merchant James Dickson) witnessed a baptism for merchant George (who was probably a relative). He was listed as a manufacturer in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794 and 1797 and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797, as well as the manufacturer of that name on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was also the first agent for the British Linen Bank in Hawick, his appointment lasting until 1806. He was known for being an independent thinker and having a caustic manner, e.g. when he ordered Warren Hastings off his land at Wilton Glebe. He was listed as a bankrupt carpet manufacturer in 1820, and hence it appears that his business did not go so well in the latter part of his life. He appears to have married 3 times: Margaret Darling (d.1829); Isabella Aitkin; and Mary, sister of John Oliver, Town Clerk of Hawick. His children (with his first 2 wives) were: John (b.1788); Isabella (1805–83), who married James Orniston and David Miller; Christina (b.1815); Ester (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1818). He is probably the Bailie Thomas of the Sandbed whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1811. The death of one of his daughter is recorded in 1838 as ‘Miss Turnbull daughter of Bailie Turnbull Carpet Manufacturer’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in the Hawick area. His son William, stockingmaker, died in Hawick in 1816. Thomas (1770/1–1854) blacksmith at Gillbraehead, probably son of Robert, who was previously blacksmith there. He is listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Isabella Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 44. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–23); and Isabella, who died age 14. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Crosshall in Wilton Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) manufacturer in Hawick, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794. It is possible this could be the same man later known as ‘Bailie Tammy’, although that Thomas appears to have been married by 1794. Thomas Scott (1784–1867) eldest son of William of Burnfoot. He was effectively disowned after his mother disapproved of his marriage to Margaret Goodfellow about 1810. He was at East Middle when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He farmed at East Middle from at least 1841. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres and employer of 7 people, while in 1861 he farmed 380 acres, employing 9 men and 3 boys. He is listed on the tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. He was a registered voter in Cavers Parish. In politics he was firmly a Tory and took a leading part in local events surrounding the Reform Bill and the disruptions at the local elections in the 1830s. In 1837 he was one of those who were besieged in the Tower Hotel (possibly for several days), and he was one of the witnesses who travelled to London for the Parliamentary inquiry. His first wife died in 1823 and about a year later he married married Mary Beattie (who died in 1880). His children with his 1st wife were: William (1812–47), whose twin brother died at birth; Thomas (1814–76); Michael (1816–92), died at Southsea; Elizabeth (b.1818); Eleanor (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). And with his 2nd wife: Agnes; Archibald Oliver (1825–69), who became a lawyer in Jedburgh; Peter (1826–27), who died young; John (1828–84); Margaret (b.1829); Peter, again (1831–34), also died young; James Douglas (b.1833); Jane (b.1834); Peter Stephenson (1836–1921), who was Surgeon General; Robert Dempster (1838–93); Scott (1839–59); and Adam (1841–80). It was said that he was heir to a fortune that had been left by a son of the last Laird of Bedrule, who died in India; he apparently told the Rev. Craig of Bedrule that if the money could be recovered he could take half himself. Thomas (1788–1883) younger son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He farmed at Broombanks and then for a while at Tandlaw. About 1810 he married Ellen Chisholm and had 9 children. He emigrated to Huron, Canada in 1860, following his son Andrew. Thomas (1795–1856) 6th son of James and Betty Adamson. He had 6 brothers, including the Schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He moved to Newcastle and became a carrier there. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory operating to Edinburgh once a fortnight. His cart also left the Nag’s Head in Hawick every Saturday, bound for Newcastle. In 1851 he was at about 1 Whitchester Street. In 1852 he was listed leaving the Coach & Horses bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday, and to Newcastle on Thursdays from the Bull & Butcher. He married Elspeth Anderson, who died in 1873, aged 76. Their children included: James (b.1817), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (1821/2–55); Henry; John B.; Thomas; and Agnes. In 1852 he is recorded operating a twice-weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick. He may the Thomas from Castleton who was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshie. He was a shepherd on Temple-hall farm. His son John was also a shepherd, who married Agnes Telfer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was son of draper George and Betty Wilson (daughter of ‘Hamless Wat’). In 1811 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Elizabeth Turnbull (his sister). He married Jean, daughter of John Veitch and Jean Elliot in 1813. Their children were: Elizabeth, who died at Lanton; Jean or Jane (b.1815), who also died at Lanton; George (b.1818), who emigrated to Australia and married Margaret Watt; Jane (b.1820), who married; Margaret, unmarried; and Georgina, also unmarried. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, recorded as daughter of merchant Thomas, may have been his daughter. Thomas of Fenwick (1799–1874) only son of William of Fenwick. He was said to be ‘of weak intellect’ and his estates were placed in the charge of trustees, under whom they prospered and expanded. This included the purchase of Midshiels in 1852 and the Barony of Rodono and farm of Over Kirkhope. He was probably the Thomas ‘Esq. Younger of Fenwick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded as Thomas ‘esq. (of Palace)’ and residing at Brieryyards along with his father, who died in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as ‘Independent’ at Brieryyards, with Alison (his mother) and Martha (probably his aunt), plus 3 servants. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards along with his head trustee David D. Scott; he is described as ‘incapable’. Nevertheless he was still formally a Commissioner of Supply for Rox-burghshire. He was succeeded by his cousin William. Thomas (b.1800/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 on Teviot Square. His wife was Margaret. It is possible he was the same man as ‘Tam-a-Linkin’. Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ (1801/2–61) town crier. Orphaned at an early age, he became a Town officer, using both bell and drum, serving as Halberdier at the Common Riding and crier at public meetings etc. For a while his fel-low Officer was Jannie Smith. He was known as a wit and used to refer to the Common Riding as ‘the coming struggle’. He died suddenly after becoming ill on the street, and was buried in an unmarked grave in the Wellogate. A cairn was placed there in the 1980s. A portrait of him exists (painted by ‘Scott’), and he has been immortalised in a poem by J.C. Goodfellow – ‘Nae mair ‘sheepheads an’ plucks’ he’ll cry, Sae much a head; his drum and bell are baith laid by – Tam-a-Linkin’s dead’ [JCG] (there are various spellings of his nickname). Thomas (1802–81) younger son of Adam, tenant in Hassendean-bank. He was baptised in Minto Kirk. He is recorded as farmer at Brierhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Thomas (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Den-holm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He left for Hawick from Abbey Place in Jedburgh, ev-ery Wednesday. Thomas (b.1806/7) farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish, recorded in 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Mary, Thomas and Robert. Thomas (b.1809) son of Walter and Helen Oliver, he was smith at Stobs Woodfoot, like his father before him. In 1856 he presented to the Archaeological Society a walking stick owned by Gen. Elliot, who defended Gibraltar, and a lock from Fast Castle. In 1857 he read a paper at the Society, on ‘Certain phases of the Great Exhibition of 1851’. He is recorded at Stobs Woodfoot in the 1861 census, living with his mother Helen. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1811/2–77) eldest son of Adam, descended from the Turn-bulls of Denesyde. He farmed with his father and brother Michael at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). They worked hard to improve the land and ended up fairly well off. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1860s. He died unmarried. Thomas (b.1816/7) shepherd at Newton (‘the Nitton’) in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas, William, Janet and James. Thomas (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was saddler and post-master in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as the postmaster (and perhaps listed in error as ‘John’ as saddler and ironmonger, as well as librarian). He may have been son of the earlier saddler Robert. In 1841 he was living with Margarett, George and Robert, probably his siblings. In 1851 he was living with his sister Betsy and brother Robert. In 1861 he was living on Main Street, as postmaster and saddler (employing 2 men). His wife was Agnes F. and they had daughters Agnes M. and Margaret P. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. Thomas (b.1822/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Whitlaw and then at Newmill on Slitrig. He is recorded there in 1856 and in 1861 was farming 100 acres and employed 2 men and 2 women. He married Jane Knox and their children included Walter, James, Ina Elliot, Robert, 2 women. He married Jane Knox and their children included Walter, James, Ina Elliot, Robert, David and Euphemia. Thomas (b.1823/4) born in Ancrum Parish he was farm steward at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth S., and their children included Sarah, Margaret, James and John. Thomas (1824–1907) born in Glasgow, son of solicitor Joshua and Jeanie Marshal. He is said to have been raised by a relative in Denholm after being orphaned. He became an architect in Edinburgh, then emigrated to Australia and later moved to California and then New Zealand. He is responsible for the designs of several churches and other buildings, particularly in Wellington. Thomas (b.1828/9) born in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as ‘fundholder’ on the 1861 census, when he was living at 13 Kirkwynd. He married Mary Hardie in 1858 and their children included: John (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861); Jane (b.1864); Mary (b.1866); Esther (b.1868); and James (b.1871). Thomas (d.1890) Hawick solicitor of the late 19th century. His parents lived in Appletreehall. He was in partnership with Walter Haddon from 1880. He was a supporter of the Common Riding. He was also a prominent member of the St. John’s Lodge and was buried with Masonic honours. Thomas Scott (1836/7–77) from Hawick. He was recorded dying of consumption at Stirling East in Australia. Thomas (19th/20th C.) 2nd son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. He went to Australia with his brother John when gold was discovered there (probably in the early 1850s). After returning he farmed at Easter Boonraw, then moved to Greenhouse in Minto Parish. In 1858 he married Mary Hardie, daughter of a Hawick farmer. Their children were John (b.1859, who farmed Boonraw and Stouslie), Margaret (b.1861), Jane (b.1864), Mary (b.1866), Esther (b.1868, who died young) and James (b.1871, who farmed at Greenhouse). Thomas (19th/20th C.) resident of Bonchester. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Walter of Minto (14th C.) possibly a son of the original William of Rule. He held the lands of Minto, perhaps from 1329, being confirmed by David II before 1370. Perhaps the same ‘Waltero Tornebole’ was the witness to a charter of Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Also in 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey; he is recorded there as ‘Waltero Tornbul’. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of John. He instituted an inquiry in 1424 in order to try to invalidate the grant his father had made to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth in 1390. This was on account of John Turnbull having leprosy at the time (making the transaction void under Scots law), together with the rumour at the time that Sir William Stewart had died in France. However, the Stewarts continued to hold the half barony of Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto, again claiming his hereditary right. As a result it seems that the barony of Minto was split, so that thereafter there were 2 families who were ‘of Minto’. Walter (15th C.) on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and another for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) Bailie of Selkirk recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of William. In 1458/9 he was granted the lands in the Barony of Minto that had belonged to his father. Walter of Harden (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1468 when he resigned the lands of Harden to Margaret Wardlaw, Lady of the half Barony of Wilton. His son John had a charter for Harden in 1482, suggesting he either died just before this, or John reached maturity then. It is possible he was the same Walter who witnessed a charter for Thomas Middlemas for lands in Peeblesshire in 1476. Walter (15th C.) mentioned at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh as tenant in Bonchester, when his son George was surety for Andrew (in the same place), who was fined for non-appearance. Walter (15th C.) resident of Hornshole. He is recorded in 1493 along with Adam, also in Hornshole, when they were allowed to ‘compone’ for a series of crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of East Mains of Hassendean, which are probably the same as ‘Knowe’. This letter was transferred from the old baron to the new baron in 1493/4. He may be an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Knowe. It is also possible that he was related to the Henry who held a quarter of Appletreehall in 1470. Walter (15th C.) member of the household staff of James IV. In 1490 he was given cloth and in 1497 when he was given a horse. He is recorded being in the King’s Chamber in 1492 when he was given his fee for the term. It is not known what branch of the Armstrongs he was from. Walter ‘Gaberlunzie’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494/5 he was again fined for non-appearance, serving as his own surety, with his nickname given as ‘gabirlenzie’. He was surely related to Adam ‘Gabirlenzies’, who was killed in 1509. Walter of Gargunnock (d.c.1527) recorded in 1482 when William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale protested that he had caused him (the Sheriff) to be summoned, but had not himself appeared. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He also had a 1482 action against Walter Bertram, Burgess of Edinburgh for money owed, and a 1483 action against Elizabeth Somerville and others. In the judicial proceedings of Parliament in 1484 he had to prove that his neighbour stole cattle from his lands of Gargunnock (in Stirlingshire). Also in 1484 he leased the Crown lands of Singlie and Erncleuch. In 1479 and 1486 his son William had a lease for the ‘Weststeid of Hartwod’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he gave a charter infefting Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. His son William is also mentioned. In 1493 he had a precept of sasine to George Turnbull (probably also a relative) for the lands of Hassendeanbank. And in 1501 there was a sasine to his heirs Margaret and Janet Turnbull for Hassendeanbank. He may be the ‘Waltero Turnbulle’ who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Braxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. Walter of Stouslie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘Walterus turnbule de stowislee’ He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stouslie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice-aire and his surety, William in Crumhaugh, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1501, among 10 men whose fines were remitted. There were several other Turnbulls listed, including from Fulton and Bonchester. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant of Braxholme. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 168 cows and sundry goods from the Murrays at Carterhaugh, as well as stealing 2 horses from there ‘in company with the Traitors of Levin’. George Turnbull of Hallrule and Robert Scott in Stirches were sureties. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as one of the King’s minstrels in 1504. His name is listed as ‘Watte Trumbull’. Walter of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1520 when he witnessed a document for Andrew Ker of Primside Loch. It is unclear how he was related to the other Turnbulls of Minto, or if this was an error for William. Walter (16th C.) tenant in ‘Wollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1526 he was among the Borders men who accompanied the Homes on attacks against the Earl of Arran. Adam ‘there’ is also listed, so probably a son or brother. Walter Wat of Howa (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530 along with David of Wauchope and others, for ‘assistance given and afforded to Thieves and Malefactors in violation of their Bonds’. He was recorded there as being ‘of Howay’. He could be the ‘Watt Trumbull of Howatt’ whose son and heir Archie was in Selkirk to Peter Moffat. He is probably the Wat recorded ‘in Howa’ in 1565 when he had to ‘enter’ James Turnbull of Abbotrule to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the Watt ‘in Hova’ whose son was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer changes of raiding into England. It is possible that 2 generations are represented here. He appears to have been father of both Archibald in Howa and Stephen. Walter (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. Walter of Stouslie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘Walterus turnbule de stowislee’. He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grahamslaws of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stouslie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice-aire and his surety, William in Crumhaugh, was fined.
‘Walter Trumbill in Caveris’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. There is no way to know where in Cavers he may have been tenant. Walter ‘Watt’ of Bewlie (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Bewly’ in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Minto, Kames and Troneyhill), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbuls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Hobsburn in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and others. Also in 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and John of Minto, to enter persons into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which he apparently did) or be declared a rebel. William Redpath of Greenlaw was his surety (for 1000 merks) that he would appear before the Privy Council. In 1580/1 he loaned 100 merks to Andrew Davidson in Kames, for which he received annual rent on Davidson’s lands in Belses. In 1581 he was accused of being in a group of Turnbuls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm; his sons Robert, William, Mark and Andrew were also listed. This accusation was repeated in 1583, and in that year Robert Kerr of Anrum and his son William Kerr were caution for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat, and her tenants and servants; John Andrew signed for him ‘becaus I can not wret’. In 1583/4 he was granted half of the meadow of Belses by Andrew Home. He was listed in 1584/5 among Border Lairds who were to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Borders. His son Walter was killed in 1580. In 1588/9 John of Minto was cautioner for him not to harm his son Robert, as well as his tenants and servants. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1595 he was recorded along with his sons Robert, Andrew and Hector, among Turnbuls and Davidsons, when John Ker of Barnhill complained they had harassed his tenants in Barnhill; most were declared as rebels for non-appearance. His sons appear to have included Walter, Robert, William, Mark, Andrew and Hector. Walter ‘Watt’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbuls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who had a bond with another group of Turnbuls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters), not to harm each other. Dand from there is also listed and hence surely related. Walter ‘in Rafflatt’ is recorded in 1576/7 in a complaint that the bond of 1576 had been broken; hence he may be the same man as Walter of Rawflat. Walter (d.1580) son of ‘Watt of Bewlye’, recorded in 1581 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst made a list of 10 men who were called to account for his murder in the previous year. He may have been the Walter whose son Hector was killed at Lilliesleaf by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1604. Robert, who was killed in 1601 was presumably either his brother or son, and Robert’s brother Mark must have been similarly related. Walter ‘Wat’ of Templehall (16th C.) witness in 1593 to the marriage contract between a daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and a son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He was deceased by 1604 when his daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands. He was also called ‘of Vauchope’, suggesting he was probably a son of the Laird of Wauchope. His widow Marion Lorraine (along with several Turnbuls) was forced to leave Templehall and Brewlands, following a court case of 1605. It has been suggested that she might have been a daughter of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Walter ‘Wat’ of Bedrule (1560–c.1623) son of Sir Thomas and Janet Turnbull. He was listed along with his father and brother William among the group of men accused in 1573 of raiding the farm of Anrum Woodhead. In 1576 he was listed along with his father, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chester in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Anrum; he was by then listed as son and heir of Sir Thomas. It appears that by the time he succeeded the Turnbuls of Bedrule were no longer very powerful, with the Castle in ruins and much of their Barony lost through defaulted ‘wadsets’. In 1577/8 he and his brother Thomas were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for ‘the slachter of umquhile Thomas Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He was included along with his father and others in a bond of 1580 to keep peace with the Turnbuls of Minto and others. In 1583 he and his brother Thomas were charged with offences against an Englishman (Edward Grays), but the Warden, William Ker of Cessford, ‘in respect of the nearnes of kin with him’, delivered them back to Scotland, instead of to the English Warden. At that time he was referred to as being ‘of Fulton’. In about 1583 he lost the liferent of his lands to Robert Ker, younger of Woodhead. In 1583/4 several men of Hassendean were cited for failing to appear to give evidence against him and his brother; it was later confirmed that they were all declared as rebels, although this situation must have been resolved. He is mentioned along with his father Sir Thomas and brother Thomas in 1586, in a promise to present them again before the Privy Council when requested, after their release from jail in Edinburgh Castle. In 1589 he was ‘son of the late Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule’ on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give ‘thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris’ and were denounced as rebels. In the same year he and John of Minto were listed among leaders in Teviotdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 William Douglas of Cavers and George Douglas of Bonjedward, as his cautioners, incurred the penalty of 5000 merks for him not returning to ward in Edinburgh Castle. Additionally in 1589, he and John of Minto were cited by the Privy Council for not remaining in Edinburgh after instructed to do so because they were guilty of resetting a group of Turnbulls and Douglases who were involved in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; Sir John Cranston of that Ilk was his surety. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In the same year William Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him, with John of Minto being ‘surety in relief’ and he was also denounced for failing to pay £100 to Elspeth Weir, Laddy Hadden. About 1590 he was listed as ‘in Bedrule’ among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 James Douglas of Cavers was surety for him for keeping good order. Also in 1591 he was one of the local Barons who signed a pledge to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell. In 1592 he was accused of inciting his brother John, assisted by another brother, Robert, in attacking a servant of James Stewart on his lands of Wells. Also in 1592 his surety was William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. In 1602 he signed the ‘General Bond’ among Border Lairds, with his son William signing separately. In 1607 a case was brought against him by William Alanson, Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1618 he had a bond with George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, for which the witnesses were his son George, Robert in Bedrule (probably his brother) and Lionel in Hartshaugh. And also in 1618 he had a bond by Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule Townhead; his wife Helen Lillico is also mentioned. He had a bond in 1619 with Robert Ker of Fairnington, and another with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre relating to the good behaviour of his son William. Also in 1619 he was among the Turnbulls who were accused by Sir John Stewart of Traquair of cutting down timber on his lands at Huntliehill and taking away ‘tunety foure horse laidis thairoff’, and was denounced as a rebel; others named were his son William, grandsons George and Thomas, plus Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas, as well as Robert and Mungo also in Fulton, Robert ‘Fendie’, and John and William in Crosscleuch. Further in 1619 the Stewarts complained about him leading a large group of Turnbulls and others, bearing arms, to carry of ‘threttie darge of hay’ from Huntliehill; his brother Robert, sons William and Walter, and grandsons George and Thomas were also losted. Lord Cranstoun the Border Commissioner tried to remove him from ‘the waist ground’ he occupied; in 1620 he appeared personally before the Privy Council and promised to withdraw himself, his wife and family from these lands and move to either Bedrule or Jedburgh on penalty of £1000. He must have received remission, because in 1623 he had a bond for the good service of his friend George Deans, servitor to Thomas Nicholson, advocate in Edinburgh. In 1623 he served as cautioner to David Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh. Also in 1623 he testified that he had seen Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst’s flocks grazing on certain lands for ‘fiftie yeir syne and mair’. In his old age he is said to have been quite a nuisance, along with his sons and grandsons, and they were denounced as rebels for several crimes, including injuries done to Stewart of Traquair, owner of Wells; the alternative viewpoint is that he was simply trying to hold on to his former position of power, with no support from the local landowners. He married twice, his first wife’s name being unrecorded. His second marriage was to Helen Lillico by 1618. He had at least sons Andrew, Adam, George and William (who succeeded). In 1587 it is stated (by English Warden Lord Hunsdon) that ‘a sunne of Bedrooles’ was slain in the encounter between Borderers and Englishmen under Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. He was probably also father of ‘Gawin Turnbull, son of the Laird of Bedroull’, who was declared a fugitive in 1605. Walter ‘Wat’ of Hobsburn (16th C.) possibly son of Robert. He is recorded in 1567 being ‘of Hopisburne’ and brother of David of Wauchope; he was among men ordered answer accusations of raiding into England, with his servant David Scott also listed. He is also recorded at Hobsburn in 1568. In 1574 he had to appear before the Regent and the Lords of Secret Council to answer the charge of building his own mill without permission, but after producing a charter of ‘feu-ferme’ for his lands he was discharged. In 1580 he and Hector of Wauchope were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. He is listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Bewlie in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. It is probably the Walter recorded as ‘in Hoppisburne’ in 1582 when he was ordered to restore Sir Thomas Kerr of Fernichirst to his lands in Feu-Rule. Kerr had an ‘escheat’ for his goods in 1583/4, along with George and John (in Hallrule and ‘Roull’), who may have been close relatives. There is another charge in 1585 for witnesses to appear to decide the ongoing court dispute. He is recorded in 1586/7 being ‘callit of Howpisburne’ (suggesting that he may have lost his lands by then, or that this was a different family member), among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his son Thomas is also listed, as well as James Brown in Weens, who was said to be ‘undir Watt of Hoppisburne’ (who is probably him). He is ‘Watt Trumble of Hoppesborne’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1590. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Sir Davidis Wattie’ in 1601 when he was part of the band of Turnbulls who attacked Kers in Jedburgh. Walter of Rawflat (d.1581) recorded in 1579, along with his son and heir Walter. He had borrowed £80 from Alan Deans of Hawick and made an arrangement to pay him back, including that he convey to Deans’ house annually 4 bolls of malt, as well as the expenses of half his land of Rawflat. His land there is described as ‘lying in Ryndaill through the field from the Lonyng east of the said lands with the tower and fortalice, occupied by the said Walter, in the town and territory of Rawflatt in the barony of Prumside, sherifflom of Roxburgh’. He was recorded as a tenant in 1581 who was declared a rebel and asked to remove himself and his servants from the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses.

He was later that year killed by a group of Turnbulls, including David of Belses and his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell. In 1583 his wife Agnes complained to the Privy Council about this and also how another group of Turnbulls, led John of Minto, harassed her and her children by coming to Rawflat, ‘bodin in armes, with hagbuttes and pistolettis’, stole goods and livestock, and shot at them. The excuse given was that he himself was already declared a rebel, but clearly there was some family feud involved here. In 1583 Robert and William Kerr of Ancrum paid caution for Walter of Bewsie not harming his widow, or her tenants and servants. More details were recorded in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses for a long list of crimes. This included killing him, as well as his son William in 1600, capturing and torturing his servant Adam Turnbull, and shooting his son Walter. His daughter Isobel was one of the pursuers of the case. George Turnbull was acquitted of most of the crimes, but had his right hand cut off for illegally carrying fire-arms, and was later executed for other crimes, including stealing a horse from Rawflat in 1577 and 20 cows in 1579 (as well as adultery with his nephew’s wife). Walter (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1581/2 when he became ‘cessioner and assignee’ to recover the debt of £24 owed by Thomas Smail in Lilliesleaf to Richard Wilson in Howford. The witnesses included Mark, heir of Howden and Hector, brother of the Laird of Barnhills. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Fulton in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbulls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. His son Thomas is also mentioned. He was presumably related to the Turnbulls of Bedrule as well as to Robert, Mungo and Robert ‘Fendie’, who were also residents of Fulton. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1619 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill and declared as rebels for not appearing to answer the charge. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being in Skelfhill in the Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Geordie Morton in ‘Harrett’, of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) probably the ‘Walter Trumbill, younger of Raflat’ who was shot in the arm and thigh in 1602 by George Turnbull of Belses, this taking place between Jedburgh and Belses. He also had a horse stolen from him by George of Belses about the same time, this being included in George’s final trial before his execution. In 1617 Margaret Rutherford, widow of Mark of Nether Bonchester complained that after her husband’s death he had harassed her, destroyed her crops and driven her off the farm, with his servant Adam Turnbull burning the deeds of the lands; he denied the charges and was found not guilty by the Privy Council. In 1632 his sister Margaret was served as ‘heir portioner’ to him in the 10-pound lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. He sold Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being a resident in Know in 1628, when he was charged along with Thomas in Know to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels, Adam Scott of Burnfoot and others. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Rurletownhead along with Adam in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Walter (17th C.) son of James ‘in Hassiden bank’. In 1632 he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He is probably the Walter listed on the 1643 county valuation ‘for his lands in Raperlaw, 17 bolls half mean half bear, £110, should be £110 10s’. He is probably also the could be the Walter of ‘Rapparlaw’ listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, with the same value. Walter (17th C.) from Nether Ancrum, he is recorded in a valuation of 1643. He was part of the Chester-hall branch and ancestor of the Turnbuls who farmed Spittal-on-Rule through the 19th century. He probably had sons Walter and William. He was probably related to Andrew in Nether Ancrum (son of Andrew), who was served heir to his mother ‘Malie Krinklaw’ in 1636. Walter (d.c.1682) tenant in Strange when his will was recorded in 1682. His farm was presumably the one in Abbotrule Parish. Walter of Bewlie (17th C.) appears to have sold Bewlie to Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshiel, in 1672. However, this may have been only part of the lands (or else he retained the designation ‘of Bewlie’ after selling the family lands). He was recorded as ‘portioner of beulie’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Lil-lesleaf Parish for part of Bewlie, valued at £390. He was declared a fugitive for being present at the Bothwell Brig uprising in 1679. He was Laird in 1684 when the Laird’s brother William was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. However, it is unclear what happened to him, and he may have been rehabilitated at the Revolution of 1689. He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Knox in 1686. They had daughters Bessie (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Young and John Turnbull (who was probably related). Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, or more likely the part that was once Hassendean. He married Janet Welsh in 1679 and their children included: Mary (b.1680); Janet (b.1684); and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Scott and William Young and in 1687 were Thomas Scott and John Dodds. Walter (17th C.) married Janet Martin in Roberton parish in 1687. Walter (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Robert, who was also there at that time, as well as possibly George, recorded in 1685. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘mylnholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Ha-wick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the same as the Walter at the East Port. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in Hawick in 1700. He married Helen Elliot and their children included: Hugh (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); Agnes (b.1685); and Walter (b.1686). The witnesses in 1685 were Bailie James Gledstains and carrier John Scott. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Walter (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also recorded there in 1696. He married Agnes Cowan and their children included William (b.1696). The witnesses were John Armstrong and Andrew Rodger. Walter (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the deceased farmer in Southdean Parish recorded in 1714 when his daughter Margaret married mason John Harrower in Edinburgh. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1711 when his daughter Janet was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (17th/18th C.) gardener of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for John Napier and in the same year his sister Agnes married merchant James Tudhope. In 1717 he married Mary Simpson, ‘late servant to ye Laird of Gorrenberrie’. Their children included: George (b.1717); Helen (b.1719); and Barbara (b.1721). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lamb in 1719. Walter (d.c.1743) portioner of Ancrum, part of the Chesterhall branch. In 1707 he had a son Walter and in 1710 a daughter Ann. His son Walter was still ‘younger’ in 1742, but not in 1743, suggesting the year of his death. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Deanhead in 1717, when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the Walter who married Helen Huntly in 1714. John (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1722) may have been his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, he was recorded in Cavers itself when he got married in 1727; his wife’s name was Janet, but no surname is recorded. Janet (b.1728), John (b.1731) and Walter (b.1733), baptised in Cavers Parish, were probably his children. Walter of Wester Swanshiel (c.1700–c.50) son of James and Elizabeth Scott. He succeeded his father in the lands of Wester Swanshiel in 1724. His children included Helen (b.1726), Magdalene (b.1727), John (b.1729, who succeeded), William (b.1729, probably a twin of John, who did not long survive), James (b.1731) and William (again, b.1733). He may also have been father of George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741) who were baptised at Lilliesleaf. Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Minto in the early 1700s. He may have been the same as the Schoolmaster at Hawick slightly later. In 1725 he raised ‘letters of horning and poinding’ (to try to recover a debt) against ‘John Mekell’ tenant in Hassendean Townhead. And in 1733 his son Gilbert became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Walter ‘the Little Maister’ (d.c.1756) Schoolmaster in Hawick in the mid-to-late 1700s. He was master of the Parish or ‘English’ school (in distinction to the Grammar School). He was ‘English School Master’ in 1743 when one of his children was baptised. His office and school were down the Punch Bowl Close. He was also Dean of Guild as well as Session Clerk in the 1730s. He served as one of the first postmasters in Hawick, but was found not to be suitable after a short trial. His nickname came from his diminutive stature. He had very brittle legs that were constantly being fractured and became curved into ‘S’-shapes. Apparently some bones of this description were once kept in St. Mary’s steeple after being found by the grave-digger! In 1737 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick ‘for his service to the place’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster in 1739, when his daughter Margaret married William Easton (Schoolmaster at Ewes) in Edinburgh, while when his daughter Ann married Alexander Ogilvie in Edinburgh in 1758, he was already deceased. It is known that James Inglis became Schoolmaster of the Parish School in 1756. Assuming there were not two local schoolmasters called Turnbull at the same time, then he is probably the same Walter recorded as Schoolmaster at Minto in 1733. The same Walter was probably the collector for the poor in Hawick, recorded in the 1740s. It is possible that Maizie (d.1808), recorded as daughter of the deceased schoolmaster Mr. Turnbull, was his daughter. He married Marjory Cunningham (probably as his 2nd wife) and their children included: Patrick (b.1737); Margaret (b.1739); Agnes (b.1741); Janet (b.1743); Elspeth (b.1744); and Violet (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were merchants John Ruecastle and William Oliver, junior. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1723 and 1724 he was at Highchesters. His children included Agnes (b.1723) and Janet (b.1724). Perhaps the same Walter was at Borthwick Mains in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1729 he was at Howcleuch when his daughter Janet was baptised. There are several other children born in Roberton around this time who could be his. Walter (18th .) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1721, 1731, 1734, 1736 and 1743 (although it is possible there are 2 generations here). His children, baptised in Robertson included: Bessie (b.1721); Walter (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Ann (b.1735); Robert (b.1736);

John (b.1739); Thomas (b.1741); Bessie (b.1743); and Thomas (again, b.1745). He may have been brother of John who was also at Parkhill. Walter (1702–73) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His connection to other local Turnbulls is unclear. He paid the window tax for Firth in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His first wife may have been Isobel, sister of Walter Elliot of Ormiston, the marriage being in Roberton Parish in 1738. Children of this marriage may included George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741), baptised in Lilliesleaf, with no mother’s name recorded. He married his second wife Dorothea, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Bennett. He had 3 daughters: Barbara (1754–1821), who married George Pott of Todrig; Isabella (1757–1835), who married John Grieve of Hoscote and Craik; and an unnamed daughter who may have been Dorothea (b.1761), who married Robert Laidlaw from Drumelzier. He also had a son, whose name is unknown, but whose children included Christian and John, who moved to Ontario. The payment for ‘ye bells to Lady Firth’s borile’ (i.e. announcement of the burial with St. Mary’s bell) recorded in Hawick in 1731 probably refers to his mother. Possibly the same Walter of Firth purchased the farm of Greenhouse (in Minto Parish) from Andrew Davidson in 1769. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Firth’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1789 and 1790 is probably his widow. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Cemetery along with his 2 wives and daughter Barbara; he may have died in 1777, aged 74, his 2nd wife dying in 1804. Walter (1707–97) son of Walter, he was a portioner of Ancrum. He married Betty Dun (1718–88). Their children included: Isabel (1742–98); Walter (1743–1822); Janet (1745–48); John (1747–80); James (1751–1844, ancestor of the Turnbulls of Spittal-on-Rule); and Agnes (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel. He married Mary Scott and their children included: ‘Somervel’ (b.1737), clearly named after the minister; William (b.1740); and Alexander (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were merchant Robert Taylor and William Scoon, servant to Rev. Somerville. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Mainse’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) when his daughter Ann was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (b.1761) was probably also his daughter as well as an unnamed child (b.1763). He is probably the Walter who married Betty Hume in Roberton in 1760. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1764 he married Katherine Dyce, as registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. She was probably the daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce born in 1737. Their children included: Thomas (b.1764); William (b.1766); William (again, b.1767); James (b.1772); and Robert (b.1774). The witnesses in 1764 and 1766 were Bailie Thomas Turnbull (perhaps a relative) and William Dyce (probably his father-in-law). Walter (18th C.) rented Easter Swanshiel from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1767. Walter (18th C.) of Rashiegrain, Hawick Parish heritor around the 1770s. He was probably connected with the Turnbulls of Fencick, who owned Rashiegrain a little later. He may be the ‘Turnbull, Esq; of Rashiegrain’ (with no first name given) listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued at £260 19s 4d. The lack of name may mean he was deceased at about that time and succession was unclear. It is also possible he is confused with William of Rashiegrain. Walter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Rodger and their children included: Janet (b.1769); James (b.1771); and Walter (b.1773). Margaret and Mary (b.1765), as well as Agnes (b.1771), with no mother’s name given, may also be his children. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1776. Walter (d.1776) resident of Hawick Parish who married Mary Wilson in 1773. 3 years later his death is recorded as ‘Husband to Mary Wilson’. Walter (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, being a carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural instrument maker. Gideon Scott was apprentice to him around the 1780s. Walter (1743–1822) son of Walter, he was portioner of Ancrum, like several generations of Walters before him. By 1781 he was ‘of Chesterhall’ rather than ‘younger, portioner of Ancrum’. He was listed as owner of part of Nether Ancrum in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781–1812) and James (b.1781, who farmed at Billerwell). Walter (18th C.) carrier of Belses, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1794, when his daughter Katharine married James Allan. She could have been the ‘Kathrine’ born to Walter in Ancrum in 1768. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Tower in 1778 when his son George was baptised. Walter (18th C.) resident of Denholm in 1776 when his son Thomas was baptised. Walter (b.c.1765) wright in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s

1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was probably living on Canongate in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1789 he married Janet Hogg, from Kirkton Parish. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the tenant who was said (by Walter Deans, writing in 1887) ‘to have been a man of great strength and agility, and a famed player at the Hobkirk Ba’’. Walter (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster in Melrose. In 1796 he was recorded as ‘Mr’ when he married Euphan Dickson, who was at that time described as being from Hawick Parish; she was the only surviving daughter of William Dickson, portioner of Darnick, and held the lands of Cartlyhole, which later was where Sir Walter Scott built his mansion of Abbotsford. Their children included Isabel (b.1797), James (b.1798), Euphemia (b.1800), Nelly (b.1802) and William (b.1804). Walter (b.1776) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was at ‘Birkwood Foot’. He is probably the Walter listed at Woodfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His married Helen or ‘Nelly’ Oliver in 1806. Their children included: Mary (b.1807); Thomas (b.1809), was also a blacksmith; Francis (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); William (b.1815); Eliza (b.1818); and Helen (b.1819). Walter (18th/19th C.) doctor in Hawick from 1800, also acting as a ‘man-midwife’. Walter (b.1794/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a farmer. In 1851 he lived at No. 4 Burn Row in Wilton Dean, and was a ‘Proprietor of Houses formerly Farmer’. By 1861 he was farming 380 acres and employing 6 people at Acreknowe. His wife was Margaret and their children included Williamina, John and Ann. Walter (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. In 1896 he married Georgina Louisa, on ly child of Rev. A.C. McPhail of Hobkirk. He farmed Hartshaugh Mill, which included Kirknow, Swanshie, the eastern part of Langraw, plus Hartshaugh and Unthank. Walter A. (19th/20th C.) joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He took over the business of Douglas Taylor in 1882. He firstly married a daughter of his cousin Robert Amos, and they had a daughter Maggie. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Bonchester tailor James Grieve. William ‘de Rule’ (c.1289–1333) the first Turnbull, supposedly named for turning a bull from King Robert. He is recorded in a charter of 1313 for a piece of land at Philhaphaugh. He may have married Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Douglas, and is probably the direct ancestor of many local Turnbulls. His name is sometimes written ‘Turnbull’. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Rule, recorded several times around 1300. He is said to have met a grisly death at the Battle of Halidon Hill, challenging the English to hand-to-hand combat before the battle commenced, but being killed along with his dog by Sir Robert Benhale, with Benhale carrying his head back to England as a trophy – ‘With writhing force his neck retorted round, And roll’d the panting monster on the ground, Crush’d with enormous strength his bony skull; And courtiers hail’d the man who turn’d the bull. William of Todsawhaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1426 as being ‘de Todghishalch’ when he witnessed a document relating to Eildrig. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘Turbul’ when he witnessed the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, in 1428/9. He may be the same as the William who became Bishop of Glasgow. He may also be the William who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and the ‘Willelmum Turnbull de Philiphalch’ on the 1426 inquest for the lands of Eildrig. Another William (in addition to the Rector of Hawick of that name) witnessed the 1431 document for the lands of Heap. Possibly the same William was on the assize for lands in Bemersyde in 1425 and the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. William (c.1400–54) founder of Glasgow University. He was reported to have been a younger son of the Laird of Bedrule and noble on both sides (his mother perhaps being a Stewart of Minto). It is unclear who his father was, although he was surely closely related to John of Bedrule who is recorded in 1432. He was probably born in Bedrule Parish and baptised in the old church. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a canon law student at Louvain in Belgium. He was also for a while Parson in or near Hawick, being described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ in 1430 when appointed as Dean of the Arts Faculty at St. Andrews. He was witness to a local charter (swapping Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts) in 1431, where he is ‘Magistro Willemo Turnbule rectore de Havic’. He also wrote a letter testifying to being a witness to this, where he is ‘persone off Hawyc’ (i.e. Parson). Sometime before 1434 he was presented by James I to the benefices of the deceased Walter Stewart, Dean of Moray, although he already held the parish church of Haroyk (rectius Hawyk) in the diocese of Glasgow; he is described as being ‘a chamberlain of the pope, a bachelor of canon law, and the said king’s proctor in the Roman court, and who is related to divers barons in the third and fourth degrees of kindred’. He was in Florence afterwards and in 1439 graduated as Doctor of Canon Law at the University of Pavia. He had privileges bestowed upon him by Pope Eugenius IV, including Archdeacon of Lothian and appointment to the See of Dunkeld in 1447. He was Vicar of Edinburgh around 1446 and became Bishop of Glasgow in late 1447 or early 1448. He was also important in the Scottish court, becoming Keeper of the Privy Seal, and as such witnessing many documents for James II (e.g. in 1444 and 1446 for the Earl of Athole and in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s). He obtained a Papal Bull that led to the founding of Glasgow University in 1451, based on the granting of a tenement and 4 acres of land in the city. However, his plans for developing the new University were derailed following his death only a few years later. In 1450 he was witness the charter of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Branxholme. In about 1452 he witnessed a document for the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was stated by a later chronicler that he played a part in the downfall of William, Earl of Douglas (superior of the Barony of Hawick), who was killed by James II in 1452. He certainly loaned the King money, and earned special treatment for himself, his see and his newly adopted town (which became a regality). A tradition states that he founded Jedburgh Grammar School (although there is no evidence to support this). He probably died in Glasgow. There is a memorial to him in Bedrule Church, unveiled in 1954. A school in Bishopbriggs is named after him, as well as the Catholic Chaplaincy at Glasgow University. William of Hassendenbank (15th C.) recorded as a witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He is probably related to the later William of Hassendenbank. William of Whithope (d.bef. 1456) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott. In his letter of ‘attestation’ he is ‘Wylliam Turnbule off Qwythope’. He was recorded as witness to the 1447 charter by Margaret Cusing to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘Cusingland’. His son Philip received a charter of the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick in 1456. William (15th C.) Chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453, 1454 and 1455, and appears to be different from William, Bishop of Glasgow. William of Minto (15th C.) recorded in 1456 as ‘Willelmus Turnbule de Mynto’ in a document regarding the lands of Whitchesters; it is possible that this refers to his being witness to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. In 1458/9 his son Walter had a confirming charter for his lands in the Barony of Minto. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme in 1461, given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis. He is recorded there as ‘Wyl Turnbull of Myntou’, while George of Bedrule was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was ‘William Turnebull of Mynto’ when he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. Given that there was a suggestion that Bishop William Turnbull’s mother was a Stewart of Minto, there may be a close family connection. William (15th C.) appointed as Vicar of Innerleithen in 1475. He was said to be ‘of noble race’. By 1482 he was also perpetual Vicar of ‘Cowin’ and Canon and Prebend of Dunkeld. In that year ‘in his infirmity’ he requested that his nephew James be granted the Canonry and Prebendary, his nephew Adam the Vicarage of Cowin (although not wearing clerical dress on account of his illegitimate birth) and Adam Glendinning to the Vicarage of Innerleithen. William (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Annan when he witnessed a charter for the Church of Carlawcock in 1492/3. He may be the Master William recorded in 1490 when he was given lambs on the Crown lands of ‘Gildhouse’, because of the wars. William (15th C.) recorded as resident in ‘langhop’ in proceedings of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for several crimes, including stealing from him: 3 cows and an ox; a cow and an ox on another occasion; a grey horse; one other horse; and 60 sheep at different times. It is unclear where ‘langhop’ was, presumably Langhope, possibly the one near Todrig, but perhaps one elsewhere (or a transcription error). He may be the same William who had something stolen from him at Shielswood Meadow by Thomas Lauder of Todrig. William of Hassendean (15th/16th C.) son of Walter. He is listed as son and heir of Walter in 1479 when he leased the western part of Hartwood (which probably corresponds to Hartwoodburn). He was also son of Walter of Gargunnock in 1486, when he leased ‘Weststeid of Hartwood’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he was listed as son of Walter of Gargunnock when he infefted Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1493 he is the ‘umquhile Wilzam Trumbull of Cargun ek’ when the ward for his daughters and heirs was given to Alexander Lord Home and Duncan Forester (although whether he was already deceased then is unclear). He could be the William ‘White’ Turnbull recorded in 1494/5 when sheep were stolen from him in Harwood. He is recorded as ‘William Turnebill of Hassindene’ in a peculiar marriage contract of 1498. His 3 daughters and heirs, along with the 3 sisters and heirs of Alexander Hepburne of ‘Gargunnok’, were contracted, to John, Lord Drummond, Sir Duncan Forester of ‘Skypymche’ and John Elphinstone of ‘Erth’; each of the 3 men to have rights over 2 of the heiresses and 1/3 of their lands. He appears to have been dead by 1501, when his father’s heirs are listed as being his sisters Margaret and Janet. Possibly the same William was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482.

William (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. John Hope in Phaup was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 13 sheep from him at Huntly. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5. He and James Hall had remission for the premeditated crimes perpetrated upon Jack Brydon, with William Ker of Yair as surety. William of Minto (15th/16th C.) mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter (heir to Branxholme) were appointed as his ‘tutors’. This suggests he was still a minor at this point, and that his superior was Scott of Branxholme. He is probably the William of Minto who is recorded at the Justice-aire in 1498, apparently entering into a bond with Kers and others, that they would pursue men who were already declared as fugitives. He is listed among several men who were entered to the King at Stirling as caution for their crimes in 1499. This included the murder of John of Rutherford, for which he had remission, as well as the crime of ‘tressonable passing and remayning in Ingland’. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Trumbull of Myntow’, along with 6 other Turnbulls (including Archibald, son of John), who could have been close relatives. In 1501 money was paid according to the Exchequer Rolls for his lands of Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 17 years (suggesting that he had been a minor for that time). He had sasine for 2/3 of the land in 1501 (with the other 1/3 being held by Alexander Stewart). At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 he served as surety for George Young, resident of Minto, as well as for Robert Young, son-in-law of John Turnbull, and John Young, and was fined for their non-appearance. He was also surety for David Scott, ‘Lady’ (who had remission for raiding farms at Minto, among other crimes). Also in 1502 he was recorded at the Jedburgh Justice-aire as having stolen 120 sheep from George Rutherford at Longnewton (which were reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters). Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for David Scott called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, who had a remission for his part in several different raids, including burning and stealing from the tenants at Minto and also stealing livestock from Broadmeadows and from Haining. Furthermore, he was fined for failing to enter Walter Aitkin in the court and was surety for Thomas Young. And in 1506 Adam of Billerwell had remission for associating with him and his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands relating to the Lords Home. He was also in 1506 recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he was a witness to an indenture between the Erskines and the Kerrs for lands in Synton. He may be the William of Minto who was the first in a long list of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King; George Turnbull ‘there’ is also listed, as well as John ‘in Mynto’ and another John ‘in Mynto’, cousin of William of Minto. He may be the same William of Minto who is recorded in 1522 being asked by James V to receive George Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Greenwood (or Girnwood), with a precept of sasine following in 1525. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers who had remission for rising up against the Earl of Arran; he is there the first listed of several Turnbulls (and the ‘William Turnbill in Mynto’ also listed may be his son). And in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he had a royal pardon for crimes of treason (presumably assisting the Laird of Branxholme at Skirmish Field), along with Scott of Howpashley, Scott of Allanhaugh and Scott of Hassendean; there he was described as ‘franktenementar of Mynto’ (i.e. freeholder). In 1531 he and his son and heir William gave the ‘non-entry’ of a piece of land called ‘Nukland’ (probably Nut Bank) to his brother-in-law Ralph Davidson, and also another piece of land called ‘Chanes’. He may be the William who was listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He was also listed among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. Also that year he was fined for being responsible for certain Turnbulls from Rulewater, particularly a Turnbull of Catlee who had stolen horses and goods from Alexander ‘Berthilmow’; he had to pay for the stolen goods or else the penalty would be to ‘byrne his house, expell and hold him furth of ye cuntre’. He was recorded in 1532/3 when his son and heir William sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He may be the William ‘of Mynto’ who witnessed a document for a young William (son of John) in Selkirk in 1533. He may also be the William of Minto who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Veitch of North Sinton in 1535. He was succeeded by his son William, who was ‘fiar’ of Minto in the 1530s. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh. At the Justice-aire in 1502 he was surety for Adam son of Walter in Stouslie, who failed to appear, and so he was fined. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and Mark, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. He was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and John in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. He was recorded in 1502 among men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the people called to enter him were George of Hallrule and John Rutherford of Hundalee. His son Laurence was also mentioned in the same case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, as well as David in Bonchester. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Laird of Bedrule. He was recorded in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. His surety was Mark Ker of Dophintoun. He was distinct from William in Gatehousecote and William in Bonchester, who were also listed, but he may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Melrose 1503–07, as a rival to David Brown. The disputes of the time were resolved when he was transferred to become Abbot of Coupar in Angus, where he served until 1524. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Adam Philipaugh who was listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he was recorded as son and heir of Adam of Philipaugh when he had a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig, as a procurator of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford of that Ilk. He is probably the William who had a sasine for ‘Barbourisland’ (part of Philipaugh) in Selkirkshire in 1503. He may be the William recorded as witness to documents in Selkirk in 1527, 1530 and 1532, and owner of a tenement in 1530/1 and 1535, which he resigned in 1540. He could be the Burgess William recorded in Selkirk in 1542. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant ‘in Crag’ in 1516, when he had remission, along with several other Turnbulls, for their assistance given to Alexander, Lord Home. This was presumably Minto Craig. William (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hallrule, listed there along with Robert and Thomas in a 1516 pardon for a large number of Turnbulls for assisting the Homes against the King. William (16th C.) tenant of Rulewood recorded in the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. He is also listed as ‘in Rowlewod’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded as ‘in Roulwod’ when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the tenant of John Gourlay of Rulewood, and possibly related to the later William of Rulewood. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1533 as son and heir of the deceased John. He appointed Robert Stewart of Minto ‘as his master’ and promised to be ‘in kindly service’ to him. Stewart also promised to honour an old reversion from Thomas of Raflat to an earlier William (perhaps grandfather of this William), so that those lands would go to him or failing that to his brothers. William of Minto was one of the witnesses. Perhaps the same William witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1539. William of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) recorded in 1550 in a bond of obligation with Thomas Turnbull of Bothwell. He may be the William in Hassendeanbank who is recorded in a contract with John Gourlay of Rulewood in 1540 (probably not 1640, as recorded). Probably the same William had a sasine for a piece of land at Hassendeanbank in 1536 and sasine for a ‘merk land’ in Hassendean called Cockerheugh in 1556; this William’s son and heir was Thomas, who inherited Cockerheugh in 1622 (or perhaps there was another William between). He may be the ‘William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk’ listed as one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4. It seems likely that he was related to the Turnbulls of Knowe and he was probably related to John of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1564. It is possible he was the William who was son to Thomas and Margaret Scott, recorded in a charter for lands in Darnick in 1571, confirmed in 1616. William ‘Profit’ (16th C.) part of the panel for trying John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. It seems likely that he was relatively local. William of Minto (16th C.) son of William of Minto. He may be the ‘William Turnbull in Mynto’ listed along with William of Minto and many other Borders men in a 1526 pardon for acting against the Earl of Arran; David ‘there’ is listed afterwards, and hence perhaps his brother. He was recorded in 1532/3 as son and heir of William when he sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Branzholme. He was described as ‘fian of Mynto’ in 1533 when he was part of an inquest held at Jedburgh into the ownership of lands at Longnewton. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. It seems likely he was the deceased Laird of Minto mentioned in 1548 when Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme was given ward of his lands until such time as his heir became of age. His heir (possibly the John recorded from the 1590s) was presumably the Turnbull of Minto who was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as causer for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1565/6 he brought a case against Robert Kerr of Woodhead, over his lands of Over Ancrum. Probably the same William, Burgess of Edinburgh, was obliged in 1572/3 to remove himself from that city, on the orders of the Regent; Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety, and hence he was probably related. William (16th C.) recorded as Burgess of Selkirk when he stood as caution for someone in 1579. He also witnessed other transactions about the same time. In 1580/1 he was causer in Selkirk for John Scott in Darnick and witness for another transaction for him in 1581. He witnessed additional agreements in Selkirk in 1581. In 1581/2 he and George in Philiphaugh witnessed an agreement between the widow (Isabel Douglas) and son (Mark) of the deceased John in Philiphaugh (suggesting that the may have been related). He also witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. William (16th C.) tenant in Boucherester. In 1581 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear to answer to the charge that he stole a horse from Archie Elliot of the Hill. William (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess of Jedburgh. He was tenant of Spittal-on-Rule from 1586. William (c.1541–c.75) eldest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He had a charter granting him Bedrule in 1570/1, but probably predeceased his father. In 1573 he was recorded as ‘sone and appellant air’ of Sir Thomas, when they were listed among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He appears to have been deceased by 1576 when his brother Walter was described as son and heir of Sir Thomas. He was deceased by 1584 when the Privy Council let her uncle Alexander Home continue to have the right of choosing the husband of his daughter (and perhaps only child) Margaret, rather than yield to the claim of another uncle, Sir James Home of

Turnbull

Cowdenknowes. In fact Margaret eventually married Robert French, Laird of Thornydykes and Abbotrule, but died in 1593. William of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. In 1576 he was listed among Sir Thomas, Walter (son of Sir Thomas) and Mungo Bennet in Chesters, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Acrum. He was also listed in 1576 as joint cautioner, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, for Hector, David, George and John, sons of Adam in Belses. Additionally in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who has a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Toneyhill) and others, not to harm each other; he was one of the cautioners for John Turnbull of Howden and others. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was then found liable for the fines imposed. He was also listed in 1580 along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Thomas’ son Walter and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood, in a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Minto; he signed with ‘my hand at the pen’, meaning he was unable to write. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He may be the [blank] Trumbill of Barnehills whose brother is recorded as witness in Selkirk to 2 transactions in 1581/2 (one along with James in Selkirk, who may have been related and another along with Mark, heir of Howden): he is explicitly named in another transaction in 1581/2. He was listed among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers Robert, Gavin and Hector, and uncle Andrew of Barnhills were also listed. He is also recorded on Monypen nie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Lairds in the Borders. William ‘Will the Lad’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen accused in 1590 of being involved in a raid on farm across the Border in 1588. He is cited along with David Laidlaw of Antroch and Adie Laidlaw ‘Great Legs’. William (d.1600) son of Walter of Rawflat. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was denounced as a rebel for a long list of crimes, including his murder, and although acquitted of the new charges, he was later executed for similar crimes. This may point to some sort of feud among the Turnbulls of the Lilliesleaf area about that time. William of Knowe (16th/17th C.) one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who were involved in a skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601, part of an ongoing feud with the Kers. He was also referred to as being ‘in Touneheid’. In the skirmish 4 men were left dead and many were wounded, including himself being shot ‘in the wambe, be the schot of ane pistolet with twa bulletis’. It is unclear how he was related to the later Turnbulls of Knowe. He is probably the William ‘in Munto-tounheid’ recorded in 1610 when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons) for not having found caution following being found guilty for the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamshaw brothers. William of Bedrule (c.1580–c.1625) son of Walter. He was probably the William whose letter of 1602 to Thomas Ker of Cavers (his father-in-law and presumably his superior) still exists, detailing how he took over possession of Fulton, and listing the tenants there. In 1602 he was ‘fear of Badrewle, Melros’ when he signed a bond among Border Lairds. In 1612 he was William of Bedrule, who, along with William of Hawthornside, were complained about to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. He is probably the William ‘fear of Bedrule’ who witnessed the marriage of the daughter of William of Templehall (probably his brother) in 1614. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the ‘fear of Bedreull’ whose son Thomas witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1618. In 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedreull’ when his father Walter had a bond for him with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre, for not ‘finding caution of law-burrows to him’. In 1619 he was still ‘younger of Bedrule’ when, along with his son Thomas and his servant George Douglas, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns; he had also been declared a rebel along with his father Walter and other in 1615, for not removing themselves from the Laird of Traquair’s lands of Huntliehill. Also in 1619 he was ‘fear of Bedreule’ listed among Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton who were declared rebels for removing timber and hay from their former lands of Huntliehill, then owned by Stewart of Traquair; his sons George and Thomas are also listed. He probably only succeeded his father Walter in about 1620, and although he was still called ‘Laird of Bedrule’, he lost most of his family’s hereditary possessions. He gave caution for David Turnbull of Jedburgh at the Commissioners’ Court of 1623, and probably died shortly afterwards. He married a daughter of Thomas Ker of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Thomas. He may have been the William whose only daughter Margaret married Robert French of Thornydykes and Abbotruie; however, the dates do not work out, since she died in 1593, and her mother was supposed to be Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Bewlie, who was killed in Jedburgh in 1601. He also had brothers Mark and Andrew. In 1603 he was appointed as tutor to his nephew Andrew, who was served heir to Robert in 1607. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wille Turnbull, cal-liit the guidman’ in a letter listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in 1602. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as William ‘called of Belnie’ in 1610. He was named among 8 Turnbulls and 2 Davi-sions when a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend them for failing to find caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crairlinghall and 6 Gra-hamslaw brothers; his brother Mark was also listed. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Hawthornside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 along with William of Bedrule when there was a complaint to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a dis-tant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William ‘Will’ of Braid-haugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lorraines accused by En-glishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. John ‘of Brodiehaugh’ is also listed and so pre-sumably his father or brother. In 1603 he was ‘of the Braidhauch’ when, along with Turnbulls from Braidhaugh, Mackside and ‘Harkshaw’, he was ordered to find caution of 300 merks to an-swer the accusation of stealing cattle from Hector Turnbull of Wauchope in the 1590s. He is also described as ‘in Braidhawche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. In 1606 James, son of Edward Lorraine of Harwood was declared a fugitive for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend him, after he had been declared a fugitive for theft and slaughter. William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. He was recorded in 1611 when Robert Home of ‘Carrolsyd’ was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court; however, he was acquitted. His son James was found not guilty of stealing sheep from ‘Hairlessyd’ (prob-ably Earlside) in 1622. In 1627 Robert Kerr of Cavers complained that he had acted to resist the apprehension of his son James (who had been de-clared fit for military duty), and hence should be held in Edinburgh Tolbooth until James was pro-duced. Also in 1627 he paid caution to the Privy Council, promising that he and his son James would satisfy the minister and session of Abbot-rule Kirk ‘for the insolence committit be him at the said kirk upoun Sunday the tyme Divine ser-vice’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Cross-cleuch in Bedrule Parish, along with John. With several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Taquair of cutting down and remov-ing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619, this included the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Fulton. They were denounced as rebels for failing to appear. William of Tour (16th/17th C.) caution-er for Adam Turnbull in a bond he had with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain New-ton in 1619 (registered in 1624). In 1622 he was ‘in Tour’ when he sat on the assize at the Justice Court held in Jedburgh. He is also recorded in 1622 as ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ (i.e. Rule-wood) when he had a ‘letter of apprising’ against John Elphinston of Henderstoun (in Peebleshire) for non-payment of several bonds. He thereby ob-tained the Barony of Henderstoun and half of the lands of Glensax, but sold them in 1628. He was probably son of James ‘of the Toure’, recorded in 1579/80. William (16th/17th C.) served heir to his father John in Philiphaugh in 1606, in-heriting the 5 acres there called ‘Barbourisland’. He is probably the William in Philiphaugh who was attacked by William Elliot (formerly Laird of Horsleyhill) in 1619, with Elliot attempting to stab him with a ‘whinger’ after he had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk, to till a piece of land that Elliot wanted for himself. In 1615 a debt between William Scott, younger of Harden and Walter Stewart of Kirkland was assigned to him. Probably the same William was recorded as ‘portionar of Phillophauch’ when he was on the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. William ‘Geordie’s Willie’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men un-der John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. His name was given as ‘Geordy’s Willie Trumble’ (so his father was George) and he lived at Bonchester. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of James of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was mentioned along with his father in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh. He was owner of West Lees in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. William (d.bef. 1647) recorded as being of ‘Weddellis-wallis’ in 1647, when his son Thomas of Tofts was served heir to his 5 husbandlands in Minto. It is unclear where ‘Weddellis-wallis’ might have been or if he was the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may have been the Laird of Tofts whose death before 1643 meant that the family lands in Kirkton and Abbotrule Parishes were just ascribed to ‘Laird of Tofts Turnbull’, with no forename. Also in 1643 there were £102 of lands in Minto owned by ‘Turnbull of Tofts’. Given that most of the rest of Minto was owned by the Turnbulls of Minto, it is possible that he was related to them. William of Barnhills (17th C.) brother of John of Barnhills who succeeded to the lands in 1628 and immediately sold them to William Bennet. William (17th C.) described as ‘mason in Newton’ in 1642, when, along with his brother Thomas and several other people, he was accused by Douglas of Cavers’ servant of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. William of Langraw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was ‘in Langraw’ in 1628 when served heir to his brother John of Barnhills. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £104. He may have been father of the William of Langraw recorded in the late 1600s. Rev. William (c.1606–c.67) son of Thomas of Minto, he had 3 other brothers who were also ministers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1626 and became minister of Makerstoun in 1635, continuing there until his death. In 1632 he feued lands in Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. When his brother John of Minto died, he helped arrange for his nephew John to marry (Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs), even although he was under age. He probably acted as legal guardian for this nephew, and continued to have some rights over his estates later. He was recorded as owner of Hornshole in 1643, with John (probably his nephew, or just an error in the name) holding them in his stead. Also in 1643 he is probably the ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ who was listed as owner of most of Minto (along with John, his nephew, and Elizabeth Elliott). He may be the William listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may be the William of Minto, listed along with John in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was a member of the Assembly in 1645. In 1657 he gave his consent to a ‘wadset’ between John of Minto (his nephew) and John Scott of Brieryards for the lands of Hornshole. He is probably the ‘Mr William Turnbull’ recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hornshole, as well as in Lilliciesleaf Parish. His son William became minister of Eckford, and is recorded giving his permission to a dispotion of 1671 relating to Hornshole. William of Bedrule (d.c.1607) perhaps son of Thomas and grandson of the William who died about 40 years earlier. He is recorded in the 1643 valuation of the county, as owner of half of the Mains of Bedrule, valued at £130, and Bedrule Mill, valued at £200. In 1668 his son Thomas was served as his heir in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. This Thomas would be the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. William (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £44. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where 2 Adams and a William also held lands. William (17th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. William of Bonchester (1624/5–86) recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard along with his son Adam (tenant of Doorpool) and Adam’s wife. He may have been son of Thomas of Upper Bonchester. He was probably succeeded in Upper Bonchester by his son George. Bonchester Turnbulls also later tenanted Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. It was said that the Turnbulls who farmed Doorpool were descended from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Knowe, he is recorded in a discharge of 1658 in which he was ‘tutor’ for Thomas Turnbull of Standhill. He was probably brother of John of Knowe, and it is also possible that Thomas of Standhill was another brother, in which case he was also tutor to the children (Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) of the same Thomas ‘of Chesterhouse’ in 1664 when his lands were resigned to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) tenant in Newmill on Slitrig. In 1666 James Chisholme was accused of fighting with him in St. Mary’s Kirk. He pulled on Chisholme’s bonnet when he was asleep in church, and after Chisholme fell off his seat he struck at him, whereupon Chisholme pulled out a knife and cut his leg. The corn mill where he was miller was listed as ‘the Newenmilne of Slitrig’. William (17th C.) brother of John of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of William to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is recorded among the contributors of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed on the 1684 list of men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. They were probably arrested in 1678 and condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Whether he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London and returned to Scotland, is unknown. William (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to Robert, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (or the part corresponding to Hassendean). He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1680); Robert (b.1683); Janet (again, b.1685); and George (b.1687). The witnesses in 1683 were Thomas Robson and John Brown and in 1687 were William Rodger and John Turnbull (who may have been related). He is probably the William who (in turn) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Robson and Isobel Turnbull (probably related to him) in 1684. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leyden in 1681. He may be one of the 2 Williams who witnessed a baptism for William Rodger in 1687. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably in the Hassendean area. He married Christian Oliver in Roberton in 1683 and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Agnes (b.1688). The witnesses in 1686 were Thomas Brown and Robert Turnbull (probably a relative) and in 1688 were James Redford and Richard Turnbull. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Margaret Clerk in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Margaret Hislop and their children included: Bessie (b.1686). The witnesses were Michael and Thomas, who were probably relatives. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is on a 1684 list of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of Langraw who paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He is recorded in 1693 when he witnessed a bond between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichill. His eldest son William was also a witness. He was also ‘of Langraw’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He was the last Turnbull of Langraw, his heirs selling off the lands in 1801. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at ‘floutoun’ (i.e. Fulton) in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Ruelotown on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Westwood in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier Lairds of Westwood. William (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier William of Bonchester. William (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls right after William in Bonchester. He is listed as ‘in ye midle of ye toun’, this presumably meaning Bonchester. His son George is listed after him. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William was gardner in Midshiels when his daughter Janet was baptised in Wilton in 1711. He may be the William who married Jean Scott in Wilton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Richard, who was also listed there. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Galalaw in 1697 when his son Thomas was baptised. The witnesses were George and Francis Scott. William (dbef. 1706) recorded in a ‘lybell’ of 1703 with Andrew Mitchellhill (probably his brother-in-law). He is further recorded in the disposition of goods of his widow Janet Mitchellhill in Selkirk in 1706. He was ‘late of Broadhaugh’ and perhaps descended from the earlier Turnbuls of Broadhaugh. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 when his son William was baptised. Probably the same William was still at Ormiston in 1702 when his son William was baptised. Probably the same William was still at Ormiston in 1702 when his son William was baptised.

1720 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may also be the William who was in Cavers in 1723 when his daughter Ann was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as piper in Hawick in 1702 when he married Margaret Elliot from Wilton Parish. He was also recorded as a piper in the 1706 baptism of his son. His children included: Francis (b.1703); Walter (b.1706) and Adam (b.1710). The witnesses in 1706 were Henry Orrock and merchant Robert Robson. It is possible he is the same man as the piper recorded in 1674, or otherwise his son. William (17th/18th C.) miller at ‘Harestane milne’, which may be a version of Hartshaugh Mill (otherwise it is unclear where this is). His daughter Susan (1717/8–40) was recorded on a tombstone which may be a version of Hartshaugh Mill (otherwise his son. William (17th/18th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank. In 1723 his daughter Bessie married Andrew, son of Thomas Irving in Westerhouses. His son Adam took over the farm. William (17th/18th C.) son of Richard, he lived at Minto. He got married in 1718, as recorded in Wilton and Minto Parishes (but with no wife’s name listed). William of Wesster Swanshiel (d.1731) successor to James, who was probably his father or brother. He was succeeded by his son Hector and was buried in Hobkirk. William (18th C.) shepherd in Over Southfield. He is recorded there in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Dalgleish in Alton Croft. He married Jean Byers and their children included Katherine (b.1725) and Ann (b.1729). The witnesses in 1725 were Walter Dalgleish (whose own child’s baptism he witnessed on the same day) and Robert Grieve (probably in Fenwick). William (18th C.) mason in Cavers. In 1726 his twins Hugh and Isobel were baptised. There are several other children baptised in Cavers Parish at about the same time who could be his. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Midshiels in 1733. He married Grissel Elizabeth Morton (or perhaps Martin) in Minto, apprentice in 1736 (but that is suely an error). Their daughter Grissel was baptised in 1733, with witnesses James Thomsom and Andrew Stewart. He could be the William who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Richard, resident of Midshiels. Rev. William (1703–64) son of George, minister of Tyningham (or another account says son of Adam of Doorpool and Margaret Turnbull). It was claimed (in a history of the Scotts of Bonchester written in 1834) that he was a direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule, but that there was no documentable proof of this. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1729 and became minister of Abbotrule in 1730, where he remained until his death. He paid window tax at ‘the mance’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He died unmarried. His sister Helen, married Walter Scott of Bonchester. William (1708–64) son of Andrew and Jean Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. His father was tenant at Minto Cleuchhead, and sometimes described as the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. He became tenant at Ancrum Woodhead. He married and had children, including Andrew and Thomas, who died young. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William ‘Will’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Rae in 1730. Their daughter Janet was baptised in 1730, with witnesses John Langlands and John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded as ‘Broadlees’ in 1735. It is unclear if this is the farm in Ashkirk Parish or the one in Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Shiel and their daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1735 with witnesses Robert Scott and James Dryden. William (18th C.) servant of Robert Buckham of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. Perhaps the same William was ‘junior w...’ in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Brown. He may be the weaver who witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Scott in 1747. He was probably related to the earlier weaver of the same name. William of Langraw (d.1787) last Turnbull Laird of Langraw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1786 he let the lands of Langraw to George and Walter Barry for 15 years, but died before the lease was up. He was succeeded by his closest relative, Mrs. Janet Rutherford, who had married Mr. Easton, an American settler, who sold the farm. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Langraw (valued at £104), as well as ‘Sheil’s lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know, exclusive of that part belonging to Mr Elliot of Woollie’ (valued at £68 5s). His through-stone was on Cowdie’s Knowe by Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (18th C.) glazier in Hawick, probably one of the first men of that occupation on record. In 1765 he (along with Andrew, senior) witnessed a baptism for James Clerk. His wife was Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Margaret (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); Martha (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); and Isobel (b.1767). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were Bailie Thomas and mason Andrew, senior (who were surely related to him or his wife) and in 1765 were Bailie (probably Thomas) Turnbull, senior, and Andrew Turnbull, senior. Dr. William (c.1729–96) born in Hawick, from the family of Turnbull of Bedrule, who were dissenters. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University (where he obtained his M.D.) and then at Glasgow. He settled in Wooler around 1752, where he was known for his care of the poor, and had patients sent to him from as far away as Edinburgh. He became Physician at the Bamburgh Infirmary. In 1777 he moved to London, where he lived at Well Close Square in Whitechapel and was a physician with the Eastern Medical Dispensary. While in Wooler he contributed medical articles to the ‘Ladies’ Magazine’ and the ‘Scots’ Magazine’ and also acted as medical editor for ‘Middleton’s Universal Magazine’. These included discussions of croup and diseases of women and children. He wrote medical articles for the ‘New and Complete Dictionary of Arts and Sciences’ (1778). He was preparing the publication of a practical system of medicine when he suffered a short and severe illness and died in London. His wife’s name is unknown, but her first name may have been Ann. Their children included: an eldest son, who died in the prime of life (possibly John Strother, b.1754); William, who became a surgeon with the Eastern Medical Dispensary and may be the same as the ex-naval doctor who wrote ‘The Naval Surgeon’ (1806); and a married daughter, possibly Anne. His son William posthumously published the first volume of ‘The Medical Works...Containing a Popular Treatise on Health and the Means of Preserving it’ (1805). There is a portrait of him in the form of an engraving. William of Tofts (18th C.) paid the window tax at ‘Toftshouse’ in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also recorded in an account of Lady Cavers in 1769. He was probably tenant farmer at Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and may have been related to the later James. He could be the ‘Toftses Son Will’ who was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1715. William (18th C.) resident at Damside in 1751 and 1759. He married Agnes Robinson in 1749 and their children included: Christian (b.1751); Robert (b.1752); George (b.1754); Euphan (b.1756); John (b.1758); Euphan (again, b.1759); and Agnes (b.1763). The witnesses in 1751 were John and Robert Scott and in 1759 were Thomas Scott and John Anderson (probably a relation). William (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Richardson and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for mason William Ekron in 1757. William (18th C.) Town Piper, recorded in Selkirk in 1758. William ‘Forfar’ (d.1815) tailor in Hawick. He owned property at 66 High Street, as well as the buildings behind No. 66 and 68. These were bequeathed to a relative, stockmaker Walter Murray, and later known as Murray Place. His death is recorded in Hawick, along with his nickname, whose meaning is unclear. William (1739/40–1820) tenant in Minto Townhead. His son Archibald died in 1832 and they are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the families of Andrew (tenant in Minto), William (tenant in Cleuchhead) and William (tenant in Woodhead), who are probably closely related. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Ann Park, and their son Andrew was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were James Waugh and William Riddell. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bruce and their son Robert was baptised in 1774. The witnesses were Andrew ‘Birinet’ and Alexander Bunyan. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Swan, who died in 1778. William of Burnfoot (1745–1825), son of Thomas of Burnfoot (and sometimes called ‘of Minto’), he was born in Minto Parish. He ran the farms of Burnfoot and West Buccleuch and also managed the properties of Wilton Lodge and Tofts. He also spent a few years as joint tenant (with Charles Scott of Wauchope) of Mervinslaw; they are recorded as such on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785–86 and in 1788–94. He was recorded as being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1788 on a list of voters within Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle before that was common. He was first President of the old Hawick Farmers’ Club, perhaps the first club of its kind in Scotland. An oil portrait of him was painted by John Watson-Gordon in 1821, at the expense of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, and once hung in the Tower Inn where the Club met; it was returned to the family in 1869. He leased the limestone quarry at ‘Slitrighead’ from Elliot of Harwood. He also carried out some money-lending, like his father before him. He is probably the William who was paid ‘for leading wood’ to help repair fences and for ‘banking the water’ of the Teviot at Hawick in 1785. In 1789 he and Robert Dickson were arbitrers for judging the value of a boundary dyke near Hawick. In 1797 he is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls at Burnfoot, with 4 work horses and 10 other horses. He married Eleanor (or Helen) Stephenson (of Kethorn, Durham) in Hawick in 1782 and she died in 1840, aged 84. Their children were: Elizabeth (1783–1831), who married John Renwick in 1814; Thomas Scott (1784–1867), who farmed at East Middle; Eleanor (1855–1853), who lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her sister Jane and died unmarried; Michael (1878–1849), who emigrated to Canada and died at Woodside, Brantford; Agnes (1788–1836), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William Ogilvie (b.1790), who died in infancy; Jean or Jane (1792–1806), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William (b.1794), who became a doctor; and John (1796–1875), who farmed at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. They are mainly buried at Bedrule cemetery. William (18th C.) servant on the Cavers estate. He is listed as a gardener in 1778 and coachman in 1779. He could be the William recorded at East Mains in 1782 and married to Magdalen Dryden, when their daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. Several other children baptised in cavers at around the same time could be his, e.g. William (b.1784). William (18th C.) tenant at Branxholme Town and Castlehill farms, where he was replaced by James Grieve in about 1792. William (1761/2–1842) 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was the first of the family to return to the local area, after his grandfather had been driven away, partly for being a Jacobite supporter. He farmed near Cambria, then at Grange on the Abbotrule estate, where he was joined by his brother Adam. He married Agnes Pott, who died in 1841, aged 80. Their children included: Mary, who was born in 1793; Isabella, who died aged 19; and Agnes, who died in infancy. He later farmed at West Fodderlee until he retired in 1831, moving to Bongate, Jedburgh. His family are recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. William (18th C.) servant to the Laird of Wauchope in 1786 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Mitchelhill from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Isabel (b.1788); Mary (b.1790); and Adam (b.1794), baptised in Bedrule Parish, with the mother’s surname given as ‘Mitchel’. William (18th/19th C.) smith at Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded separately from the blacksmith and just before William at Westerhouses, and also owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Westerhouses in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) footman at Midshiel in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. William of Fenwick (1760–1840) elder son of Thomas of Fenwick. He succeeded to the lands of Fenwick and Brieryyards on the death of his father in 1825. He was ‘younger of Fenwick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. He was also recorded as ‘younger of Fenwick’ among the freeholders at the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He is probably the William ‘of Rashiegrain’ listed as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is mentioned as an important Hawick Parish heritor in the 1820s and 1830s, and was one of the Orrock Trustees appointed in 1834. He was listed at Brieryyards in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1837 he was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory as William of Fenwick, residing at Brieryyards. He married Alison Turnbull and had an only son, Thomas. His trustees were recorded as owners of Brieryyards, Hornshole, Midshiel, Fenwick, Rashiegrain, Commonbrae and part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. William (18th C.) stockmaking in Hawick, who was on the subscribers list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the stockmaker (son of smith Thomas), whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816. William (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (b.c.1770) tailor in Wilton Parish. He was listed as tailor at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was at ‘Pittyhouses’ and in 1841 at Parkhouses. On the 1841 census he was living at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burnhead Cottages). Elizabeth and William (also both called Oliver) were also there, probably his daughter and grandson. William (1787–1846) 3rd son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of Wilton Schoolmaster James. He was born at Hoddleswoodie, Bonthecombe. In 1821 he became master of Hobkirk School, and served there until a few weeks before his death. He was very fond of books and collected a small library at the school. He is probably the William listed at Hobkirk among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (1794–1870) 3rd son of Adam and Betty Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. He farmed at Merrylaw and Falnash. He was left the lease of Hassendeanbank when his father died in 1810. He also took on the lease of Skelfhill, which had been in his mother’s side of the family. He was recorded at Falnash in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He is probably the William of Merrylaw who acted as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably also the William of Hassendean who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He married Margaret Scott (1810–45, who was probably born at Todshawhaugh). Their children included: Robert Laidlaw (1830–74); William Scott (1833–70), who died in New South Wales; James (1836–88), who died in Melrose; Thomas Scott (1837–77), who died in Adelaide; and Gideon Pott (b.1840). He secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably daughter of John Elliot of Binks. William (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. William ‘Wull the Bellman’ (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He was born in Melrose. He lived in a house at the end of a close beside the old Town Hall, depicted in ‘An Old Hawick Close’. It is labelled ‘Mr. Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would be at about No. 36. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with his wife Agnes and children Mary, Isabel and William. In 1851 he was at about 36 High Street and still listed as Town Officer. He was listed as ‘bellman, High Street’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 his widow Agnes was a lodging house keeper at 36 High Street. William (b.1785/6) originally from Soutlande, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Ogilvie, who may have been related to the family of Thomas Ogilvie & Sons, woollen merchants in Aberdeen. In 1841 he was on Brougham Place and listed at No. 4 there in 1851, when he was a widower. His children included: George (b.1819), cashier with Nixon’s; Joseph (b.c.1826); John Struthers (b.1829), who was a bank accountant; and Mary (b.c.1832). William (b.1794) 4th son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephen-

a doctor and became Senior Physician of Huddersfield Infirmary (where his portrait hangs). His choice of location was probably influenced by the connections with his father’s wool sales. One of his sons was Vicar of Penniston in Yorkshire and Canon of Wakefield Cathedral. He died in Huddersfield. William (18th/19th C.) butcher at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory William (18th/19th C.) hosier manufacturer on Backdamgate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1836 he was assigned the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Menslaws (1794/5−1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howegate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory his partnership is listed as ‘Irvine & Turnbull’, although it is unclear who the Irvine was. In the 1837 directory he was listed as a tobacconist himself on the Howegate, and is probably also the same man listed as a grocer and ‘virtual dealer’ there. He was also listed as a Howegate tobacconist and grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jessie. In 1841 and 1851 he was a widower living at about No. 3 Howegate with his 4 children: John (b.1828), a baker; Andrew (b.1830), millwright; Margaret (b.1832); and William (b.1835). William (19th C.) farmer at Minto Townhead in the 1860s. He is surely related to the earlier farmer of the same place with the same name. William (b.c.1810) draper who was living at about 10 Slitrig Crescent on the 1841 census. His wife was Jean. William (b.1816/7) wood merchant on Havelock Street. In 1861 he is recorded employing 3 men, and was at about No. 12. His wife was Isabella and their children included William, Agnes, George and Isabella. William (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Orderock Place and listed as a journeyman grocer. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is a greengrocer on the High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, William, John and Margaret. William (b.1819/20) head groomsman on the Minto estate in the 1860s. He was a non-resident voter of Cavers Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included William, Isabella, Janet and John. William (1830−1906) youngest son of James, Schoolmaster in Wilton, with his mother being Margaret Dalgleish, who later ran the ‘Image Garden’ school. In 1864 he co-founded the Edinburgh auctioneering firm Lyon and Turnbull. He married Jane Barbour and their children were William James, George Barbour, Charles Henry, Dr. Frederick John, Isabella Barbour, Margaret Mary and Jane Barbour. William Scott (1833−70) son William, farmer at Falknash and Merrylaw, his mother being Margaret Scott. He studied at St. Andrews University 1847−9. He died in New South Wales. William (d.1891) son of David (who made his fortune in India) and grandson of Thomas of Fenwick. He was born in India and lived for a while with his uncle William at Brieryyards. He leased the farm of Muirdean, near Kelso, then moved to the Channel Islands. In 1874 he returned to the Hawick area to deal with the family estates when his cousin Thomas died. He lived at Briery-yards and was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He also became a member of the Borders dining and coursing club, the Forest Club. In 1873 he was ‘Treads’ Steward’ at the Common Riding Races and was again a Steward in 1875 (when listed as ‘junior’ of Brieryyards). He later moved back to the Channel Islands, where he promoted the Presbyterian Church. He sold the Rodono estate and other lands in 1890. In 1836 he married Christian Hogarth, who pre-deceased him. His sons (all born at Makerston) were: David, who succeeded; William of Kilburn, Guernsey; and Dr. George Hogarth of Kelso. William (19th C.) farmer at Orniston Parkhead, recorded in relation to Stobs estate in the 1850s. He was probably related to James, farmer at Billerwell. William (19th C.) shepherd at the Pietsnest in Hobbirk Parish. He was one of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk, along with his wife, Euphemia Armstrong. He was also made an elder in 1851. William George (b.1844) son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He continued the tenancy in Spittal-on-Rule after the death of his father. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. He married Mary Mitchell, daughter of George Greig of Eccles in 1894. They had 4 children. William Scott (b.1856) son of James, who was tenant at Billerwell. He was educated as a chemist, but preferred the life of a farmer. He was tenant at Tythhouse in Rulewater. He married and had 3 children. William (19th C.) stocking-maker, who was elder of the Hawick Free Church around 1875. William (b.1854/5) son of John Struthers and grandson of weaver William. He worked for a long time with Thomas Purdom

Turnbull an Scott’s (turn-bul-an-skots) n. engineering firm based at 16, 18 and 20 Commercial Road. They moved into these buildings (previously the Urban Electric Company) when the company was established in 1933. The main office block is unusual in Hawick in having a Tudor style. The company were originally millwrights, but now specialise in custom-built heating systems. It started as Turnbull & Aitkin, later becoming Turnbull, Aitkin & Scott, and changing to Turnbull & Scott in 1955. More recently the firm moved to Burnfoot.

Turnbull an Sons (turn-bul-an-sunz) n. Charles Turnbull & Sons, a photography company of the latter part of the 19th century. Based on Jamaica Street in Glasgow, the firm branched out to Greenock, Kilmarnock, Hawick and elsewhere. In Hawick they set up their studio at 7 North Bridge Street in 1886, but only lasted until 1889. The building may have continued as a photography studio (under the name Torrance) until 1893.

Turnbull-Robertson (turn-bul-ro-burt-sin) n. main carpet manufacturing company in Hawick, operating in the second half of the 18th century in Orrock Place. It was founded by William Robertson in 1752, with Thomas Turnbull and others joining in 1769. They feuded the land in the middle of the Sandbed in 1791, and the houses they built there were demolished in 1987.

the Turnbulls (thu-turn-bulz) n. local family, powerful during rieving days. The name is traditionally ascribed to when William de Rule saved King Robert from a bull, being rewarded with lands and the name of ‘Turnebull’. The first recorded instance of the name is a William Turnebull of Philiphaugh (possibly the same ‘William de Rule’) in 1313. Other lands in the Ettrick valley followed, as well as Minto and Bedrule in the 14th century. By the 15th century the family controlled much of the Rule valley and also held lands around Denholm and in the Borthwick valley. Closest to Hawick, there were Turnebulls Laidrs at Whitelowe in 1454, Hornshole in 1456, Penchrise in 1464/5, Harden until 1468 and at Hassendeanebank through the 15th century. In a panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5, out of 21 prominent local landowners there were 4 of the surname Turnebull. Although no Turnebull collected a peerage, at the height of their influence they were as powerful as the Douglases, Scotts, Kerrs, Elliots and Armstrongs. Like other Border clans they played an important role in frustrating the English, but were also involved in feuds and power struggles on the Scottish side of the Border. A feud in Teviotdale with the Rutherfords was noted in Parliament in 1479. Probably because they never rose to the nobility, their strength was challenged, their lands lost and the family eventually dispersed. In one incident in 1510 James IV publicly humiliated 200 Turnebulls at the ‘Deed Haugh’ near Ruelemouth, and it is said that as many as 20 were hanged. In 1516 about 45 Turnebulls (and a few others) were pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King (the document survives among the papers of the Dukes of Roxburgh and gives a valuable record of the main family branches at that time). They are said to have sided with the English in some raids, but they fought for the Scots at Ancrum Moor in 1545, and were probably at the Redeswire in 1575. They once held towers at Minto, Barnhills (base of Minto Crags), Bedrule and Fulton, much of which passed to the Elliots and others. The Turnebulls of Bedrule and the Turnebulls of Minto appear to have been the most powerful branches in the 16th century, but their power waned in the early 17th century, with the Minto branch being involved in a serious feud with the Kerrs of the Jedburgh area in the years around 1600. Both of the main baronies were sold off before the last quarter of the 17th century. However, a related branch, the Turnbuls of (Hassendean) Knowe were important local landowners until well into the 18th century. Descendants of the Turnbuls of Minto moved to Burnfoot, and were among the founders of the textile trade in Hawick. The Great Seal of the Turnbuls used to be in the possession of the Turnbuls of Burnfoot, before it moved to Canada when Michael Turnbull emigrated. There have been at least 18 Hawick Cornets with this surname. It seems likely that the roots of all Turnbuls can be traced back to an area within 20 miles of Hawick. Trumbles are probably derived from this family, through the early local pronunciation, and the French and French-Canadian family Tremblay may also come from Turnbuls who fought in France during the Hundred Years War. The clan as a family association was revived in 1977 by Hawick man John Turnbull. A book ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbuls’ was written by R.E. Scott in 1977. A statue, commemorating the turning of the bull and sculpted by Angela Hunter, was unveiled near the Heritage Hub in 2009 – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, Wi’ a the Turnbuls at his back’ [CPM], ‘Between red ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fringed with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull; Where Turnbuls once, a race no power could awei, Lin’d the rough skirts of stormy Ruberslaw’ [JL].

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, founded in 1819, with their main premises at 1–4 Slitrig Crescent and also later on Victoria Road/Carnarvon Street. The Slitrig Crescent premises were on Slitrig Dam, from which water was taken (and polluted water returned). In 1871 the firm employed 40 people. There was a major fire at the Slitrig Crescent works in 1940. The Victoria Road cleaning and dyeing works was to the west of Albert Mills, just over the mill lade, built in the early years of the 20th century. The central office block had a 70 ft high chimney tower, emblazoned with a distinctive ‘T’; it was all was demolished in 1990. The surviving administration building was constructed in 1911, with designs by Alexander Inglis. It has a harled facade with red sandstone details, maing it quite unique among Hawick factory buildings. The corner water tower is particularly distinctive, with architectural elements of the Modern Movement. An additional concrete building was constructed in 1920, and also demolished in 1990. The company had the largest dyeworks in the Borders, but went into liquidation in 2000. Part of the buildings were occupied by N. Peal, cashmere manufacturers from 1990 until 2006.

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. Turnbull’s grocery and wine shop at 51 High Street. It was established in 1855 and kept in the same family for 4 generations. The firm also made its own blended whisky, which they stored in a bonded warehouse on Walter’s Wynd. There was also a specially brewed ginger beer and other Turnbull-labelled products. Although the shop closed in the 1980, the firm continued with personalised whisky labelling before closing entirely. However, it was re-established by the 6th generation in 2008 at 4 Oliver Place.

the Turnbull Statue (thu-turn-bul-staw’-ew) n. larger-than-life statue outside the Heritage Hub on the site of the former Exchange Buildings. It was sculpted by Galashiels artist Angela Hunter, funded by the Turnbull Clan Association and depicts William of Rule ‘turning the bull’. It was unveiled in 2009.

turneeppy (tur-nee-pee) adj., arch. having a flavour suggesting the cow was fed on turnips, particularly said of butter.

Turner (tur-nur) n. Alan (1939–2020) artist who lived at Bairnkine near Jedburgh. In 2007 he starred in a short film shot around Hawick, called ‘Jess (alien sheep dog)’. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Quhytlawhouse’ (presumably either Whitlaw or Whitlaw Haugh) in a 1612 document where many people were accused of charging more than the allowed percentage on loans. Andrew (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He is mentioned in 1767 as possessor of a garden and ground in Hawick; he was probably father of William, who owned the Wheathole at the same time, both men being Burgesses of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1760 and 1772 for William (probably his son) and in 1761 for gardener John Lamb and Janet Turner (probably his daughter). He is probably also the Andrew who witnessed 2 baptisms in Wilton in 1769, 3 others in 1770 and another in 1772 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk or similar). He is probably the Andrew who was married to Isobel (or Agnes) Aitkin, with children baptised in Hawick including: Janet (b.1736), probably married gardener John Lamb; William (b.1738); and Betty (b.1744). Francis (b.1778/9) born in Dumfriesshire, he worked at Whitfield farm. In 1835–41 he is listed as labourer and overseer at Whitfield among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as farm overseer at Whitfield in 1841. In 1851 he is listed there as a shepherd. He lived with his sister Margaret. George (18th C.) recorded as ‘Junior’ in Hawick when he paid the cast tax in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) carrier who operated between Galashiels and Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is listed leaving from the Grapes every Saturday, bound for Galashiels. John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Johrne Turnair’. John (18th C.) groom at Midshields in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. J.S. (19th C.) prominent member of Hawick Golf Club in the late 19th century, being Club Captain. He may have been the first person to achieve a hole in one on the Verity course. Richard (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill. He is recorded in 1684 when his son John is listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. In another version of the list he is recorded as John. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Euphan Lamb. Their twins William and Betty were baptised in 1766. The witnesses were shoemaker Andrew Scott and gardener William Scott. William (d.1799) recorded in the register of deaths in Hawick Parish as ‘late Kendal Carrier’. William (d.bef. 1815) gardener in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1785 and 1787. He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1738. He is probably the William who married Agnes (also called Janet) Lamb in 1757 in Wilton Parish and had children baptised in Hawick: Janet (b.1758); Agnes (b.1760); Margaret (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1765); Jane (b.1767); Margaret (again, b.1770); Rebecca (b.1772); Mary (b.1773); and John (1778–1997). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were gardeners Andrew Turner (perhaps his father) and William Aitkin, in 1767 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were Andrew (again) and John Lamb (perhaps his wife’s brother, whose own wife was Janet Turner). The death of his wife Agnes Lamb is recorded in Hawick in 1815. William (19th C.) grocer on the High Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (formerly ‘Turnair’ and variants).

Turner an Rutherford’s (tur-nur-in-ruthur-fordz) n. hosiery manufacturers that operated at least from 1885 until 1955, based at Mansfield Mills. The partnership was between Mr. Turner and John Rutherford, and they moved to Mansfield Mills in 1891. It may be that the firm never recovered from the 1955 fire, which destroyed part of the older buildings; at that time they employed 300 people. Their minute books and ledgers are stored in the Museum. Braemar took over the factory about 1969 and it later became Jaeger before being converted into flats.

Turner’s Corner (tur-nurz-kör-nur) n. former popular name for the sharp corner on Liddesdale Road by Lynnwood Cottage. It was named for the manufacturer who owned the property there. It was later also known as ‘Fraser’s Corner’. The road was eventually straightened to accommodate the passage of tanks from Stobs.

Turner’s Holm (tur-nurz-hööm) n. area near where the Kershope Burn meets the Lidder Water. This was traditionally the site of the duel between William Armstrong of Greena and Forster of Stanegarthside (according to Sir Walter Scott, the name came from ‘tourney’, since games of chivalry were formerly practised here.

Turning Back the Clock (tur-nin-bawk-thu-klok) n. musical play written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, performed in the Exchange Hall in September 1912 for a Cricket Club fundraising bazaar. It was described as ‘A pathetic burlesque comedy in two acts’.

turnin hook (tur-nin-hook) n. a hand-held implement used in the knitwear industry, similar to a crochet hook, specifically used for turning up ‘run down’ stitches on a knitted garment.

turnit (tur-nee’, -ni”) pp., arch. turned – ‘Thou hest turnet for me my murnin’ intil dancin’ ...’ [HSR], ‘...yis, monie ane time turnet he his angir awa, an’ didna stur up a’ his wrath’ [HSR].

the Turnpike Act (thu-turn-pik-awkt) n. parliamentary act of 1768 which improved the roads in the Borders, specifically between Kelso and Hawick (now the A698), Jedburgh and Lander (now the A68) and Hawick and Galashiels (now the A7). The Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss road (sometimes referred to as Mosspaulgreen to Haremoss) was also part of this general improvement. The work was paid for by landowning subscribers, who recouped their money through the tolls. This led to Toll-bars being set up at all the major routes out of Hawick.

name sometimes used for the toll gate over the main road in one of the directions in and out of Hawick. It is explicitly used in the 1767 description of the Common to refer to the toll-bar at the top of the Loan – ‘...and from the Ford by the north dykes of the Common Loan into the Turnpyke Bar and the West Port of Hawick’ [C&L1767].

Turnpikeheid (turn-pik-heed) n. Turnpikehead, former name for a farm near Bonchester Bridge. William Telfer was there in 1868. It may be the same place known earlier as Roundabouts, near Chesters.

Turnpikeside (turn-pik-sid) n. former cottage in Southdean Parish, presumably beside the turnpike. Thomas Oliver was farmer there in 1797.

turnt (turn) pp. turned, became, grew – ‘Ferrer on, the road turnt bieldect o baith seides ...’ [ECS], ‘...for A’ll owwn A was dry again, turnt, lang or this!’ [ECS]. Sic a muckle man ee hev turnt!' [ECS] (see also turn).

turse (turs) n., arch. a bundle truss – ‘For, though thy mou’ is something wee, A mighty turse, O’ moral ills, is spued by thee – An empty purse’ [JoHa], a large bundle tied up like sticks or straw – ‘The quantity of broom to complete the thatching amounted to 290 turses, and a turse was probably a large bunch tied up like straw’ [WaD], n., arch. to truss, bundle.

Turvill (tur-vill) n. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) stockingsmaker from England who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. Along with his brother Henry, and several other Englishmen, he helped introduce cricket to the Town. In 1841 he is recorded at about 57 High Street, along with Sibbald, who may have been his wife (also written ‘Turville’).

Tushielaw (too-, tu-shee-law??) n. hill at the western end of the B711, reaching a height of 435 m. Tushielaw Inn is at its base, and nearby on the hillside is the ruined Tushielaw Tower (dating from about 1600, but built on an earlier house). This was home of the Scotts of Tushielaw, from at least the mid-15th century. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, being part of Ettrick Forest that was forfeited by the Earl of Douglas. William Scott held the lease in 1484 and Walter Scott (also of Howpasley) in 1488. John Burnett was recorded there in 1494/5 and recorded stealing 71 sheep from William Hall, who was also there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Scotts of Tushielaw branch later included Mary (of the ballad ‘Mary Scott’) and Adam ‘the King of Thieves’. William Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. In 1586 the farm ‘and the Kirkbank’ were raided by a gang of Armstrongs, who stole 200 cattle, 1000 sheep, 9 horses and ‘the whole insight of both steadings’. There was a feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane in the 17th century. The lands were once part of the parish of Rankinburn. The lands of the Laird in Selkirkshire were valued at £1615 in 1678. The lands were sold to Michael Anderson in 1688, and Andersons continued as Lairds until the mid-19th century, with the Chisholmes of Stiches also often living there. There was a fire there in the 1760s – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht to stand in awe; And affen checked the plundrin’ bands Of famous Tushilaw’ [ES] (variously written as ‘Tuschelaw’, ‘Tuschelelaw’, ‘Tushelaw’, ‘Tuschelelaw’, etc.; it appears as ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1455, ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1456, ‘Turneschelelaw’ in 1468, ‘Tureschelaw’ in 1471, ‘Turschelelaw’ in 1477, ‘Trusschelaw’ in 1484, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1488, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1490, 1494/5 and 1503, ‘Turschelelaw’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1507, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1513, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1524/5, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1526, ‘Tusschelaw’ and ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1528, ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1530, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1541, 1564 and 1573, ‘Tweschelaw’ in 1574, ‘Tuschellaw’ in 1579/80 and 1580, ‘Tuschelaw’ and ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1581, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1583/4, ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1602, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1607, ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1619, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1633, ‘Tuschillaw’ in 1636, ‘Tushielaw’ in 1649, ‘Tushillaw’ in 1662, ‘Tushellaw’ in 1676, ‘Tushallaw’ in 1687 and ‘Tuschelelaw’ in 1690: it is ‘Tusselyla’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is obscure, with theories including ‘tor-schele-law’, i.e. ‘rock sheiling law’ and ‘throssil-law’, i.e. ‘thresh law’).

Tushielaw Inn (too-shee-law-in) n. inn in the Ettrick valley, at the road junction of the B711 from the Northwick valley to the B709. It was once an important coach house.

The Tweed is a river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed's Well north of Moffat (interestingly only about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan, and forms part of the line of the Border in its course. Internationally renowned for salmon fishing, its main tributaries are the Ettrick, Gala, Leader, and of course the Teviot – ‘...I bid your pleasing haunts adieu! Yet, fabling fancy oft shall lead My footsteps to the silver Tweed, Through scenes that I no more must view’[JL], ‘Slitrig, Borthwick, and the Teviot swell Tweed’s praises to the sea, Blending all the Border’s music in a glorious harmony’[GHB], ‘...The sunny smile of an auld, auld toon where the Teviot twines to Tweed’[JYH], ‘Three crests against the saffron sky, Beyond the purple plain, The kind remembered melody Of Tweed once more again’[ALg], ‘Then no dirge be mine when my brief days dwine, But this be the tune for me – Tweed’s glorious song, as she rolls along To her tryst with the grey North Sea’[WL] (the name is very old and its origin obscure although it could be related to the Sanskrit root ‘tav´ as’ to surge, the same as the Sanskrit root ‘tav´ as’ to surge).

The Tweed is famous. It began in Hawick probably with Wilson & Watson manufacturing ‘Scotch plaid-ers’ [WL] (cf. towmond). Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Watson & Sons’ clients Messrs. Harvey in London in around 1832, with ‘tweed’ (or perhaps ‘tweed-i’, meaning ‘tweed-ed’) being misread as ‘tweed’ when the customer reordered. Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Watson & Sons, with client James Locke of London in 1826 (and yet another account suggested it was Watsons and Locke). We shall probably never know which of these versions is correct, but it seems likely that it was due to a misreading of an order from a firm in Hawick, probably with an influence of association with the River Tweed. By 1850 it was estimated that the weight of yarn used annually in Hawick to spin tweed and other woollen cloth was about 1,250,000 pounds.

The Tweed (thnu-tweed) n. Tweed River, principal river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed’s Well north of Moffat (interestingly only about a mile from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at Berwick, forming part of the line of the Border in its course. Tweedbank (twee-din-bawngk) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, close to (or perhaps the same as) Hillhouse. Labourers Francis Nichol and Johna Armstrong lived there in 1841 and William Jardine and family in 1851 (it was ‘Twyd Bank’ in 1841).

Tweed Burn (twee-din-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale that runs to the west to join the Liddel Water north of Mangerton. There was once a spring here, said to famous for its ‘petrifying qualities’, with calcified formations on the moss around it. The stream also contains some waterfalls – ‘An’ bauld wi’ hindberries frae the syke, I lap an’ ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the ‘Tweed burn’[ECB] (the name is said to derive from it being a boundary between Mangerton and Whithaugh).

Tweedheid (twee-din-heed) n. farmstead in eastern Liddesdale, near the head of the Tweed Burn, a mile or so north of Scotch Kershope. Andrew Pott was shepherd there in 1797 and John Crozier in 1835.

Tweedenside (twee-din-sid) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, situated on the south bank of the Tweed Burn. Stobie’s 1770 map shows it to the west of the farmsteads of Catheugh and Spoutgills.

Tweedie (twee-dee) n. Mary (1768–1845) born in Lasswade, she married Arbroath merchant William Renny. She was grandmother of Sir William Renny Watson and moved to Hawick later in life. She is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery.

Tweedmouth (tweed-mowth) n. town that is effectively the industrial part of Berwick, but on the English side of the Tweed.

Tweedside (tweed-sid) n. pipe tune dating from at least the late 17th century, with several alternative sets of words – ‘From Teviot’s banks I see them wind their way: ‘Tweedside’, in sad farewell, I hear them play’[JL].

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team (tweed-vaw-leo-mown’-in-res-kew-teem) n. organisation formed as a volunteer group in 1966 and is now a registered charity. It has helped in many search and rescue operations in the Border hills. The organisation grew out of the Cheviot Walking Club in the early 1950s, with the first search and rescue team set up in 1963 and named the Borders Search and Rescue Unit. This was in response to the growing number of inexperienced hikers walking the Cheviots. This outfit split into 3 sections (based at Yetholm, Duns and Gala), with the Gala-based section being renamed Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, with police officer Tony Robinson as its first Team Leader. From humble beginnings, the group has grown into a well organised and experienced group, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

Tweedy (twee-dee) n. Lawrence (15th C.) sub-Prior of Melrose Abbey. In 1484 he gave a grant of bailiary to David Scott of Branchholme and his son Robert, covering the Abbeys many lands, including Melroseland, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale (formerly ‘Tuedy’ and variants).

tweel (tweed) n., arch. twill, a fabric having diagonal parallel ribs, which was abundantly manufactured in Hawick in the late 18th and early 19th centuries before a clerical error changed the name to ‘tweed’.

twiner (twi-nur) n. someone who twists wool into thicker yarn – ‘There are about 30 twiners in our works. There were other twiners working at the same kind of yarn’[HAd1868].

twinset (twin-, twun-set) n. a knitwear garment consisting of a cardigan worn over a short-sleeved, tight-fitting sweater. The style appears to have originated at Pringle’s around the 1940s, helping launch the company into the heights of fashion. Pringle’s designer Otto Weisz is said to have... thought of the name after seeing a woman pushing twins on Hawick High Street (also written ‘twin-set’ and ‘twin set’).

the Twirlees (twi-twir-leez) n. former name for an ill-defined area of the Wellogate, being associated with the approach to open country on the east side. The name is believed to have originated from a turnstile which was at the end of a straight lane running roughly from the end of the present Park Street to the Braid Road. The turnstile was there up until around 1885, and was a simple cross-wise pattern of two bars revolving on a post, probably installed to protect the town from horse traffic or straying cattle in that direction (there is no evidence to support a suggestion that the origin may be a corruption of ‘Tuileries’ from the Napoleonic War prisoners quartered in Hawick).

Twirlees Road (twir-leez-rôd) n. street in the Wellogate running from the top of Brougham Place to Orchard Terrace, named in 1908. It follows the line of the former path leading to the Braid Road with a turnstile at the end, which is believed to have given its name to the area. The path ran roughly from the top of the present Park Street to the top of the steps at Braid Road. The turnstile was there until the mid-19th century, and consisted of two wooden bars fixed cross-wise onto a strong post.
