Howa (how-u) n. former estate in Hobkirk Parish roughly to the west of the Kirk, containing the farm of Howahill and the former farms of Howabank and Howashiel. Walter Turnbull ‘of Howay’ is recorded in 1530 and Watt Turnbull ‘in Howa’ in 1565. In 1606 George Turnbull there was involved with raiding Appotside and Harwood. Gavin Turnbull in Howa is also recorded in 1606 as part of a feud between Turnbulls and the Grahams of Newton. The main house was located on a dry hill with a spring at its foot, not far from the present farm of Howahill; by the 19th century there was already no sign of the original house, except for a stand of ash trees. By the 17th century it was part of the extensive Stobs estate. It then became part of the Stonedge estate, being sold to Adam Scott in the early 18th century. In the 1800s a bronze pot was found in a drain and a battle-axe in an adjoining field (recorded as ‘Howa’ in the earliest documents, e.g. in 1567, it is ‘Howe’ in 1606 and 1677; it appears to be ‘Howa’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and on Blaeu’s 1654 map, although it is unclear precisely to which farm this refers).

Howabank (how-u-bawnyk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the more extensive farm of Howa and later incorporated into the estate of Hobsburn. Rev. Nichol Edgar is supposed to have convinced a ghost, which had been haunting Hokiirk churchyard, to instead walk a straight line between here and Hoddleswoodie.

Howacre (how-ä-kur) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once owned by the Riddells of that Ilk. It is listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1609, the description being ‘an acre of land at the east end of the town of Lilliesleaf, called Howacker’.

Howahill (how-u-hil) n. farm south-west of Bewchester, once part of the estate of ‘Howa’. It is now the main farm in this area, where there were formerly several separate steadings. Walter Deans was tenant there in the mid-18th century and is son Thomas Deans was farmer there in 1797. Walter Taylor was farmer in the 1860s and Robert Elder in the early 1900s (the area is recorded as as ‘Howa’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while the modern farm location is on Stobie’s 1770 map).

howanabei (how-un-a-bei) adv., arch. however, howbeit – ‘Howanabei, A’d lashin’s o’ smed-dum’[ECS].

howanever (how-un-i-vur) adv., conj. all things considered, however – ‘Howanever, the younger generation wadNI yaise the word ‘howanever’’, ‘How niver, A’m bletherin’[We], ‘Howanever ... another back-end comes roond ...’[DH], ‘Howanever, insteed o’ comin for the len o’ mine for the denner tables ...’[BW1978].

Howard (how-urd) n. John (1726–90) English prison reformer. He spent 2 nights in Hawick in the late 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). Sent away from the Black Bull, he stayed at the King’s Head (run by Nelly Dickson) and attended the East-end (Burgher) meeting house (which was then without a permanent minister), and apparently gave largely to the collection. He may also have attended Dr. Young’s church service (although this could be confusion). His ideas on improving prison conditions were not taken up until the 19th century, with Jethart Jail being one of the best preserved examples of a ‘Howard Reform Prison’. Thomas Earl of Surrey (1473–1554), son of Thomas, he was also 3rd Duke of Norfolk, and known locally as ‘Surrey’. He married Anne Plantagenet, becoming brother-in-law to Henry VII. He fought at Flodden and became Earl of Surrey in 1514, when his father was made Duke of Norfolk. He then led devastating raids on the Scottish Borders, including the burning of Jedburgh in 1523, which he described in a detailed letter. He became a great survivor in the treacherous court of Henry VIII (who married one of his nieces) and unusually for the time, he died of old age. His tomb, bearing his efigy, is in Framlingham Church – ‘Shall proud Surrey; shall yon Howards, Tell the king they fought with cowards?’ [JH]. Thomas 4th Duke of Norfolk (1536–72), grandson of Thomas the 3rd Duke, he commanded English forces in Scotland in 1559–60. He had several marriages, including one to Lord Dacre’s widow. He also proposed marriage to Mary Queen of Scots, was later involved in plots within England and was executed for treason.

Howarth (how-urth) n. Robert (b.1794/5) from Rochdale, he was a grocer near the top of the Back Row, listed on the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a ‘broker’. His wife was Catherine and they had sons James and George.

Howashiel (how-u-sheel) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, roughly between Midburn and Highend. It was rented by John Turnbull in the late 18th century. William Glendinning was there in 1797 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; also referred to as ‘Howashiells’).

how be (how-bee) prep., arch. how would it do to, what about – ‘How be yow clippin the gress the teime A’m sawin the seed?’ [ECS], ‘Where wull oo gang? Oh, how be gaun owre owre ti Stobs an back be the Crescent?’ [ECS] (local idiom, cf. what be).

Howburn (how-burn) n. George (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He was owed the relatively large sum of 4 pounds and 4 shillings. He was probably related to James who is recorded in 1537.

John (15th/16th C.) resident of Wester Belses. In 1502 he was absent from the court in Jedburgh when summoned by the sergeant. He may have been related to Thomas, who had remission in the same year for resetting Thomas Rutherford at Rutherford. John (16th C.) listed in Hawick’s 1537 charter as a holder of one particate of land on the south side of the High Street. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Grierson and their son James was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Lawrence Scott and William Telfer (also written ‘Houburn’ and ‘Howburne’).

Howcleuch (how-klooch) n. farm on the left just after Roberton, on the B711. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least the early 16th century. In 1535 Walter Scott of Roberton sold it to his brother Stephen Scott, and Stephen’s son John. Lands there called ‘Slak west Syde de Howcleuch’ were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae. It was owned by the Scotts of Harden from at least 1643. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Wilson, Janet Fletcher, William ‘Howatsome’, Margaret Telfer, John Armstrong, Margaret Ballantyne, Adam Little, John Wilson, Simon Wilson, Mary Scott, Walter Hobkirk and Janet Fenwick. James Richardson was there in 1683. It was mentioned in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. A mill there is referred to in the late 17th century. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Scott was there in at least 1710–12, Alexander Hislop in 1710, John Stevenson in 1716 and Robert Learmonth in 1717. John Murray was tailor there in 1712. It was sold by Scott of Harden in 1719 and then owned by the Haliburtons (of Jedburgh), perhaps through marriage to the Elliots of Swinside. John Stevenson and Walter Nichol were there in at least 1718–21, Thomas Nichol in 1722, John Anderson in 1725, Walter Turnbull in 1727, Walter Park in 1728, John Hume and John Riddell in 1731, John Pringle in 1733, William Richardson in 1734, George Heatley in 1736, William Laidlaw in 1742, Francis Scott in 1743–57, John Miller in 1743 and Andrew Davidson in 1752. In 1756 it was purchased by Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside, and direct descendant of Walter of Goldielands. It then passed to his 2nd son Charles. James Scott was recorded there in 1756, Francis Scott and Robert Elliot in 1757, Walter Deans in 1762–74, James Thomson in 1764, Robert Chisholme in 1767, John Miller in 1774 and Walter Wilson in 1788. ‘Mr. Grieve’ is recorded as owner of 2 horses there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hosocate were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802, and possessed by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Walter Scott (in 1875) and Charles Scott (in 1802) of Wauchope paid the land tax on £133 6s 8d. At the same time William Elliot of Borthwickbrae owned ‘West side of Howcleuch’. Walter Irving was there in 1812 and Thomas Irving in 1821. It was farmed by the Elliots in the 19th century. There is a walled enclosure for the Scotts of Howcleuch in Robertson Cemetery (the name first appears as ‘Houleuch’ in 1533; it is also spelled ‘Houcleugh’, ‘Houcleuch’, ‘Houcleuche’, ‘Houlecough’, etc.; it is marked on a parish map of 1650 and as ‘How-cleuch’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map, but incorrectly to the east of Hawick, while Blaeu’s 1654 map records ‘W. Houleuch’ and ‘E. Houleuch’, presumably transcription errors, and Adair’s c.1688 map shows ‘Howcleugh’; the origin is probably Old English ‘hoh cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine by the height’).

How Cleuch (how-klooch) n. name for the lower part of the Pinkie Burn in Southdean Parish, before it joins the Jed Water.
Howden Burn (how-klooch-burn) n. stream that passes Howcleuch and joins the Borthwick Water near Borthwickbrae Cottages (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as ‘How Cleuch’).

Howcleuchshiel (how-klooch-sheel) n. farm beyond Howcleuch, at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’. The residents in 1841 were mason Francis Govenlock and labourer David Storie and their families. There is a stone horse trough at the roadside. The spring flowing into it was used as a source of drinking water well into the 20th century (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

How Dean (how-deen) n. tree-lined stream between Melgund Glen farm and Minto village, containing the Howdean Burn, which runs south into the Grinding Burn. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Hawdean Syke’ formed part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park; also ‘Howden syke’ was listed as part of the boundary of the lands of Minto Townhead.

Howdean Burn (how-deen-burn) n. small stream that rises near Minto village and flows roughly southwards, through the How Dean, to join the Grinding Burn near Melgund Glen.

Howden (how-din, how-den) n. wooded hollow through which the Howden Burn flows, on the northern side of Hawick. There are many other Howden’s in Britain and several others in the Borders, e.g. a farm a little west of Selkirk and another just south-east of Jedburgh (from Old English ‘wooded hollow’).

Howden (how-din) n. former tower in Liddesdale, on the east side of the valley a little north of Larriston. The stream there is still known as Howden Cleuch, but there is no evidence of the site of the house. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 15 shillings, and tenanted by William Nixon, who was also recorded in 1544. ‘Hary Niksoun of Howden’ is recorded in 1581. ‘Dinlayre and his lands, Lareistoun, Howdoun, and Sheipshelden’ are recorded in 1632, when possessed (probably meaning tenanted) by Robert Pringle. It was combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (it is ‘Holden’ in 1541 and ‘Hawden’ in 1544; it is ‘Howden’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, ‘Houdenn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Houden’ on de Wit’s c.1680 map of Scotland’).

Howden (how-din) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 and 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £147 11s 3d. It was among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot in 1779.

Howdenburn (how-din-burn) n. area to the south of Jedburgh, around the Howden Burn, with a farm of the same name lying near the headwaters of the stream. There is a triangulation pillar there, at a height of 171 m (it is ‘Howdenn’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Howdenbank (how-din-bawngk) n. name sometimes used for the Anderson Sanatorium, built in 1911 on land overlooking the Howden Burn (at the eastern end of what is now Silverbuthall) on the site of a more modest earlier sanatorium. The whole area was also known by the same name.

Howdenbank (how-din-bawngk) n. street built in 1965 as the eastern addition to the Silverbuthall scheme. It was named after the nearby Howden Burn.

Howdenburn (how-din-burn) n. name for the area around the Howden Burn, also known as Howden. This was long one of the routes to Selkirk. Sadler Andrew Leggat was living there in 1801. The name was used in the 19th century for the northern end of Wilton Hill. There were 18 households with that address on the 1851 census – ‘...large crowds lined the Howdenburn road and the skirts of Galalaw Hill, to meet the musicians’[RM], ‘How micht I come to the auld toun? Sall I the New Road spurn, And glint the tops of the long lums Frae the brow o’ Howdenburn [WL] (also written ‘Howdenburn’, ‘Houdenburn’, etc.).

the Howden Burn (thu-how-din-burn) n. stream that is the lower part of Stichers Burn, flowing alongside Howdenbank and the A7, in the northern outskirts of Hawick, thereafter running underground to join the Teviot – ‘My thochtys like carrier doos return Tae wander through the streets at e’en. Frae Haggis-Ha’ tae Howden Burn – Frac Miller’s Knowes tae Wilton Dean’ [HI].

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. stream that flows roughly north-west to join the Teviot opposite the farm of Teindside. To the north of the stream are the remains of an earthwork, now almost obliterated by ploughing.

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Liddel about mid-way between Burnmouth and Larriston.

howdie (how-dee) n., arch. a local woman who acts as unofficial midwife, traditionally also in charge of cutting the whole cheese that was given for luck after birth, up until the 19th century – ‘She had neirly flung the sportsmen a’, An’ howfied i’ the howdies biggin’’ [WiSp].

howdie-fee (how-dee-fee) n., arch. a small amount of money traditionally given to a child at a private baptism, when bread, cheese and whisky were partaken of by guests.

howe (how) n., arch. a hollow or depression, a low lying area, often surrounded by hills, a valley, glen – ‘…An’ we hae dannert i’ the howes where flowers were ever fair’ [JoHa], ‘Hei was awanteen therech ais weel-leikeet Aibbe doon i the howe’ [ECS], ‘And grassy howes, and fairy knowes – The playground of the Callant’ [MG], ‘Yet sweet Tee’otdale to me Wi’ its howes and haughs an’ a’ …’ [TK], ‘Old tales of glamour, love and glee Lurk ’mong our heights and howes …’ [JT], ‘Or step I by Howe or hill-pass Or come I the High Road through, The leal hands hand oat a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘Is their crack o’ simmer ploys: story baths, Hotchin and croonin in howes i the grund …’’ [DH], ‘And then a lover’s hill, and the courting of a lass in the heathery howe’ [DH], ‘The howe o the nicht’ meant between about midnight and 3 a.m., ‘the howe o the wunter’ was from November to January, adj., arch. empty – ‘…And read a solemnne litanye, With a voice baith the sture and howe’ [JTe], hungry, starved – ‘In A gaed ti fill ma empy keite, for my certes! A was howe!’ [ECS] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong; the word also appears in several place names, e.g. Howcleuch, Hawden, Howford, Howlands, Howpasailey and Hobbieshowe).

howe (how) v., arch. to hoe – ‘The lad that howes the Lun-Back neeps Richt cheerily he plies his paidle’ [DH], n., arch. a hoe – ‘…Wi’ blunt auld fingers calloused frae the howe’ [DH].

Howcleuch see Howcleuch

Howedykes (how-diks) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Howdykis’, with a value of 18 pence, and with no tenant at that time. It is unclear where these lands were located.

the Howe Ford (thu-how-ford) n. former name for the ford near the modern Parkdaill, which was used to cross the Teviot to reach the Borthwick valley. The name derived from it being the lowest crossing point in the area.

the Howgate (thu-how-ga’) n. one of the oldest streets in Hawick, leading up from the Sandbed to the Loan, which was formerly the course of the main road to Carlisle. There was once a minor gate at the bottom, leading to Silver Street and the Auld Brig. There also used to be a public well at the foot of the street on the south side. The spelling was ‘Howgate’ until the latter part of the 19th century. It was extensively and sympathetically redeveloped in the period 1980–85, by Aitken & Turnbull, beginning with the east side, and is part of Hawick’s conservation area, this work winning several awards. At the back of 7A is an inscription with the letters ‘DA’ in a square and the date 1855. In about 1931 a stone cross was discovered under old plaster of No. 15, perhaps associated with a right-of-way to St. Mary’s along Needle Street. The house visible at the back of No. 18 is surely one of the oldest in Hawick. 10 pottery and clay pipe fragments found in developers’ trenches are in the Museum. No. 2 housed Pete Gow’s greengrocer’s shop in the mid-20th century and Murray the grocer was at No. 20. Much of the street is grade C listed (the origin has been suggested to be related to the Mote, but more likely is Old English for ‘way to the hollow’).

Howford

Howford (how-ford) n. farm near Ettrickbridge, once a home of a part of the Scott family. It was formerly referred to as the middle steading of Langhope (perhaps referring to the Langhope ove the hill towards the Ale Water). John Scott and Thomas Tweedhope are recorded in 1494/5 having some of their sheep stolen from there. In 1510 the feu passed from Sir William Cranston to Alexander Scott. Alexander Scott held the 6-pound lands there in 1512. The lands were claimed by Robert Scott in 1541, paying £25. Robert Scott of Howford is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and was said to have been given the lands of ‘Cowdhuse’ (i.e. Coldhouse) for his service. Walter Scott of ‘Howfurde’ married Marie, sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodnyres in 1615. ‘Howfurdmill’ was listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. Thomas Inglis (member of Ashkirk Kirk) lived there in 1762. James Murray was tenant at Howford Mill in the early 19th century. There is another Howford near Traquair – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB], ‘...A song to the pebbles to speed their way, And the sorrel horse went stiff of his wound As he climbed the steep of the Howford brae ...’ [WHO] (also formerly written ‘Howford’, ‘Howfurde’, ‘Howfurde’, etc.; it is ‘Howford’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Noufurd’).

Howford Haugh (how-ford-haugh) n. former name for the ground on the south side of the Coble Pool, i.e. roughly the present location of the High School.

Howford Sike (how-ford-sik) n. stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley near Whithope farm. The smaller streams of Whithope Sike and Holm Sike join to form it near Whithope (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Howgate see Howegate

Howgill (how-gil) n. former name for lands in the Ewes valley, possibly near the modern Hoghill. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th century. Along with Flask and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale about 1610. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 476 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Flask, Over Wrae and Glendivan. Adam Jardine was there in 1783. There were Jacksons and Lewises there in 1841 and A. Stevenson was farmer in the 1860s (it is probably the ‘Howgilsyd’ recorded in 1611; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with 2 other places of the same name on the Tarras Water to the east; it is ‘Howgill’ and ‘Howgil’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Hougill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Howgill (how-gil) n. former name for lands in the upper Tarras valley. Howgill Hill is marked on modern maps. It should not be confused with the place of the same name in the lower Tarras valley or on the Ewes Burn, both just a few miles away! (it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Howick (hö-wik) n. often confused with Hawick, it is a small village in Northumberland, east of Alnwick, famous for being the site of Howick Hall. This was the home of Charles Grey of Howick, who was variously Earl, Baron and Viscount (as well as British Prime Minister and the man for whom the tea blend is named), a later Earl (who was Secretary for the Colonies)

Howieson (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) local writer of some pieces of music for the violin in the late 1700s, published later by Adam Grant. Specifically ‘Three old Hawick Tunes from Adam Howison, his Music Book. Begun Hawick, 19th April, 1766’ was edited and arranged by K.E.R., Hawick; this consisted of ‘The Lasses o’ Hawick’, ‘Lament on the division of Hawick Common, 1777’ and ‘The New Bridge of Hawick’. He may have been father of ‘John Howison’, who was a fiddler and composer of music. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll amongst ‘ye poor’. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762).

It is possible he was the same as the writer of music Adam ‘Howieson’. Adam (b.c.1845) son of frame-worker John and Jane Cavers. He was a stockingmaker with Innes & Henderson, who subscribed to 26 copies (one of the largest numbers), and may have been a relative. He may be the Adam who married Janet Storie in 1775, and she died in 1787; their children included Robert (b.1780). He could also be the Adam whose wife Janet Walker died in Hawick in 1822, aged 62.

Howison (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remarried for the crime of resetting him and Robert Jackson. It seems likely he is the same man as ‘Adam howatson in commonsyd’ who had remissim in 1494/5 for stealing 6 sheep from James Ker in Fastheugh. His surety was Alexander Turnbull in Commonside. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Robson and their son John was baptised in 1739. Adam (18th C.) breeches-maker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert, mason in Langholm, subscribed to 26 copies (one of the largest numbers), and may have been a relative. He may be the Adam who married Janet Storie in 1775, and she died in 1787; their children included Robert (b.1780). He could also be the Adam whose wife Janet Walker died in Hawick in 1822, aged 62.

Several towns were named after them, including settlements near Auckland, New Zealand, in Ontario, Canada and in Natal, South Africa. There are additionally small Howicks in Monmouthshire and West Sussex, a Howick Cross in Lancashire and a Howicks in Surrey.

howie (how-ee) n., arch. diminutive form of ‘howe’, a small hollow – ‘On height and in howie there’s many a ewie Lamentin’ the loss o’ their lammies this day’ [TCh].

Howison (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1760); and Robert (b.1762). It is possible he is the same man as the writer of music Adam ‘Howieson’. Adam (b.c.1845) son of frame-worker John and Jane Cavers. He was a stockingmaker with Innes & Henderson, who apparently first raised the suggestion that the Burgh should purchase Wilton Lodge. In 1867 he married Jean Welsh. David (d.1628) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Henry and their children included: James (b.1808); and William (b.1810). Isobel (d.1628) resident in Riddell. She was tried in 1628 for the crime of being a witch, dispositions being taken in both Lilliesleaf and Melrose. Her name is recorded as ‘Issobell Howetsone’, and the men given a commission to try her were Sir James Pringle of Galashiels, Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. She supposedly used two spells, one to cure people and the other to cure animals. She was also said to be a ‘meter of the belt’, which seems to have been a divining method, where a belt was measured and if it had shrunk, then it foretold death for the wearer. Among the detailed accusations are that she cured a boy in Selkirk using south-running water, another boy in Midlem, who later had a calf die, a third boy who was the son of the farmer at Chapel, a child of Med Smail and a horse at Clarilaw (in Bowden Parish). Additionally she would not see the son of Andrew Riddell, who died shortly afterwards, was accused of doing something to cause the death of Bessie Riddell’s and she was said to have visited a farmer at Clarilaw in the form of a bee. She was presumably burned at the stake. John (16th C.) one of the men who in 1530 swore that William Scott of Harden did not owe more than a merk to the deceased Stephen Lauder. His surname was written ‘Hovatsone’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Jokke Howatsone’. John (18th C.) local man who was well-known throughout the Border country as a fiddler. However, little concrete is known about him. He is also said to have composed some tunes, and may be the same as ‘Adam Howieson’, or else his son. W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) states that he was half brother of John Pringle, also known locally as a fiddler and composer. However, James Wilson mentions him briefly in 1858, stating that he was grandfather and teacher of John Pringle. This means that the period of his life is not known with any certainty. He was said to have died at a relatively young age, his step-father (or perhaps father) saying, as the coffin was lowered, ‘Here lies the master of music’. He may have been related to William ‘Whaton’, who was recorded as a fiddler in Hawick in 1712 and 1718, and also to Robert ‘Whitson’, who was recorded as a fiddler in Hawick in 1744. John (18th/19th C.) from Ewes Parish, in 1794 he married Catherine Forsyth in Wilton Parish. John (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Reid in Wilton in 1804. John (19th C.) frame-worker in Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living with his family on the Kirk Wynd and in 1851 was living on the Back Row with his wife and 5 children. He married Jane Cavers and their children included: Isabella (b.1831/2); Robert (b.1834); Elizabeth (b.1835); Robert (again, b.1838); Jane (b.1841); John Cavers (b.1843); and Adam (b.1854/5). John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was a frame-worker and widower living at ‘Under Hope Park’ in 1841. His children included: Robert (b.1838/9); John (b.1843/4); and Adam (b.1845/6). Robert (18th C.) see Robert Whutson. Bailie Robert of Orchard (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1730 he is ‘Robin Huisone Mrt’ when one of his own children was baptised, and is probably the ‘Robert Huisone’ who witnessed a baptism for another man of the same name in 1730. He is probably the Bailie Howieson recorded in 1731. He purchased a bible for the Magistrates in 1734 and was involved with plans for the rebuilding of St. Mary’s in 1763. He was appointed as factor for the spinning school that was set up in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he was one of those appointed to ask the Chamberlain of Buccleuch why he had removed the Bailies’ seat from the Kirk. He is probably the Robert ‘Howison’ who acted as Bailie Depute for the Regality of Hawick in 1736. In 1738 was appointed one of the Commissioners for the construction of Teviot Bridge, and in 1739 was one of the Councillors appointed to oversee the construction of a new Parish school. He was ex-Bailie when he witnessed baptisms for smith Robert Young in 1740, for workman William Richardson in 1741, for merchant Robert Scott, for flesher Walter Sheen, and for Excise Officer Patrick Panton in 1742, and for tailor John Turnbull and for weaver Andrew Simpson in 1743. In 1744 he purchased Orchard from Archibald Crombie. He witnessed baptisms for druggist Gideon Scott in 1744, for Patrick Panton in 1745 and for carrier James Oliver and merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746. He paid tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1749, along with 5 others and ‘the Club of Hawick’, he loaned the Town money to help pay off the debt coming from building Teviot Brig. He is recorded in 1751 distributing some money among poor parishioners, which had been given in by ‘a Gentleman in the neighbourhood (tho’ not of this Parish)’ and also one of 4 people appointed by the Session as a trustee for dealing with Francis Ruecastle’s estate. In 1757 he is ‘Baillie Robt. Howieson of Orchyard’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol, as well as another for wheelwright James Aitkin. He was listed as ‘Robert Huison of Orchyard’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and in that year witnessed a baptism for Francis Gray from Weensland. He was referred to as late Bailie in 1763 (in connection with the Town borrowing to pay for the new bell). He could be the Robert who is recorded paying for use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Agnes (b.1724), who married Rev. George Dickson; Walter (b.1727); and Elizabeth (b.1730), who married Robert Scott, from the Scotts of Farns. The witnesses in 1728 were Bailie (probably Robert) Ruecastle and Francis Ruecastle and in 1730 were Robert Elliot ‘Taxman’ and Bailie Martin. After his death Orchard went to his grandson William Dickson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. The banns were read in about 1772 for him to marry Christian Ruecastle, but she eloped with Andrew Haddon from Selkirk. About a decade later he married Christian’s sister Barbara Ruecastle and their children included: John (b.1783); and Elizabeth (b.1785). Robert (b.c.1780) stockmaker in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. Perhaps the same Robert married Isabel Coltart and had children including: John (b.1804); Janet (b.1806);

Margaret (b.1808); Margaret (again, b.1810); Is-abel (b.1812); and Elizabeth (b.1814). His wife could be the widow Isabella, who was a seamstress living on the Loan in 1851. Thomas (17th C.) ‘workman’ listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Thomas (d.1714) merchant in Hawick. In 1699 he was fined for ‘forestalling’ barley from Lady Newton and from ‘Gladstanes’. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Huison’ or ‘hutson’ whose children baptised in Hawick included: Thomas (b.1692); James (b.1700); William (b.1702); and John (b.1704). He may be the Thomas who married Jean Elliot and whose children Walter (b.1709) and James (b.1711) were baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1700 were Thomas Elliot in Hummelknowes and Robert Huntlie and in 1702 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and John Scott, tenant in Branxholme. His was a merchant in Hawick with surname ‘Hoatson’ in 1713 when his marriage with Janet Miller was proclaimed in Wilton Parish. He may also be the merchant Thomas ‘Huison’ who married Margaret Scott (from Barnes in Kirkton Parish) in 1714 and who was ‘lateleie dead’ in 1715 when his widow presented their son Thomas for baptism ‘in her dwelling hous’; the witnesses were Thomas, son to flesher Thomas Wilson and Beadle Walter Scott. Walter (17th C.) baker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter ‘huison’ who in 1696 witnessed a baptism for Alexander Hislop. He could be the Walter ‘Huison’ whose children baptised in Hawick included: an unnamed daughter (b.1690); Robert (b.1692); and Charles (b.1697). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1726); Ann (b.1728); Euphan (b.1728); Isobel (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1733). He could be the William who was at Ormiston in 1723 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish; this may be the later mason in Hawick. William (d.bef. 1797) mason in Hawick. In 1764 he was witness to a baptism for James Buckham and Jane Howison (who was perhaps his sister). He married Helen Renwick from Harwood in Hobbirk Parish in 1760; she died in 1782. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1761); Jane (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1765), who probably married George Wilson in 1793; Ann (b.1770); and Helen (b.1778), probably the ‘Nelly’ who died in 1797. His wife’s name is given as ‘Jane’ in 1761. The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation. William (b.1820/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on the Loan. His wife was Isabella Duncan and their children included: George (b.1864/5); and Janet (b.1857/8).

William (b.1831/2) fuller who was living in Weensland in 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included Jane (b.1859/60) (see also Howieson; formerly spelled ‘Howatson’, ‘Huison’ and variants, hence hard to distinguish from Hewitson and Whutson).

howk (howk) v. to dig, unearth, excavate, extract, carve out, scrape, root like a pig, pull up – ‘stop howkin yer nose laddie’, ‘they got twae bob each for tatti howkin’, ‘He mæde ane pitt an’ howket it deepe . . .’ [HSR], ‘Thaye howk owt inequities: thaye akomplish ane edent enquæirie . . .’ [HSR], ‘And woblin’ lobesters’ mony feet Houk oot the howest poil’ [JL], ‘Dan howk’d the graves for a’ the folk Wham Daith had howly laid; Gif young or auld or guilt or bad Dan happ’d thm wi’ his spade’ [AO], ‘. . . Howlands (how-lindz) n. former name for part of the Langlands estate, extending between Roadhead and roughly Wilton Path, and south of Langlands Road. Walter Irvine, who served as factor for the Langlands estate, was living there in 1737. The lands were first leased from George Langlands of that Ilk in 1741, some going to David Knox in Burnfoot, and the lower part (where Wilton Grove was built) to John Ormiston. A year later the western part was leased by Hawick shoemaker Robert Oliver. The Knox family held onto their share of for several generations subsequently. The feues were renewed in 1764.
Howlands

by Robert Langlands of that Ilk to the Olivers, Knoxes and Ormstons. Each of the feuars had to pay a yearly feu-duty, as well as agreeing to grind crops at Roughheugh Mill. ‘Howlands inclosure’ was valued at £13 16s in 1788 and owned by Archibald Ormiston (and still recorded that way in 1811). The lands then passed to the Cathrae family and later were recorded being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. The land further to the east was once called Easter Howlands. The name survives in Howlands Terrace and also a house at Norwood (the name derived presumably from being relatively low lying; it is ‘Houlind’ in 1737).

Howlands (how-lindz) n. an alternative name for Newlands, as recorded on the ‘Decreet Demolishing the kirk of Hassendean’ and establishing which parts went to neighbouring parishes’ (although possibly a transcription error).

Howlands Hoose (how-lindz-hoos) n. former name for house on Wilton Path. It is listed as the residence of the Knox family in the 1851 census. They farmed lands off Langlands Road.

Howlands Mill (how-lindz-mil) n. former name for the main knitwear factory at the western end of Victoria Road. It was built for Greenwood, Watt & Co. in the 1880s, and designed by John Manuel. It originally contained 78 looms, but had enough space for as many as 300 looms in three large bays, and was powered by steam from the outset. There was an extension in the early 1900s on the site of some former cottages. It was sold in 1911 to Sime, Williamson & Co., who changed the name to Dean Mills. Later it became part of Innes-Henderson and finally Braemar. The mill was demolished in 2004 to make way for the new hospital, with the tower being the first to go, in the midst of attempts to save it. Some of the stone was used for the bases of the Steve Hislop statues in Hawick and the Isle of Man (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Howlands Nursery (how-lindz-nur-su-ree) n. former plant nursery on Victoria Road, preserved in a photograph of 1885. Turnbull’s factory was built on the site soon afterwards.

Howlands Terrace (how-lindz-te-ris) n. street off Wellington Road, built in 1890 and called after a former name for the area.

Howlet (how-li’) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is recorded as ‘Howletcruik’ in the 1541 rental roll after Saughtree. The farm was valued at 30 pence and tenanted by Thomas Henrison. It is associated with the farms of Saughtree and Pinglehole on the 1718 map of Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it is ‘Houlet’.

How Meadow (how-me-di) n. former name for a small farm between the farms of Castlehill and Chapelhill, a little to the north of Newmill on Teviot. From the Buccleuch properties survey of 1718 it was the upper part of Castleside, and had no farmhouse of its own. It had ‘Reggs’ on its west and Chapelhill around its north and east, and consisted of 35 acres, with the Newmill Burn cutting through the middle. On modern maps it lay roughly between Newmill Burn Plantation and Loch Sike Plantation.

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. village in the eastern Borders, where the Hownam Burn meets the Kale Water. Lands there were once held by the Rule family, resigned by the 4 heiresses Marjory, Isabella, Janet and Ellen in 1443. It has a church built around 1600, but extensively renovated in 1752 and 1840. The church was gifted to Jedburgh Abbey at the end of the 12th century. The parish is supposedly the birth-place of the legendary figures ‘Rab the Ranter’ and ‘the Flying Tailor’. The ‘Hownam Rings’ and the ‘Shearers’ are nearby ancient stone arrangements, and there are also several hill-forts and cultivation terraces in the area. Hownam Law, an outlier of the Cheviots, reaches a height of 449 m (1472 ft) and contains the remains of one of the highest hill-forts in Scotland. This is also the name of the surrounding Parish of wouth-eastern Roxburghshire, bordering on the Cheviots and England. The Roman road Dere Street passes through the parish, which also contains the fort at Pennymuir – ‘The mist is deep on Hounam Law, And Cheviot sits within the cloud, The drenching rain it still does fa’; The howling gusts are lang and loud’[JTe], (also spelled ‘Houman’; the origin of the name is uncertain, since there are different early variants including ‘Hunedon’ and ‘Humum’ occurring from the late 13th century).

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. Robert (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll (also written ‘Hounam’).

howp (howp) n., arch. hope – ‘For thou art my howp, O Lord God …’ [HSR], v., to hope – ‘Jock will be hame, an’ Crummie’s alive, An’ baith, I houp, are weil’ [WiSp], ‘… he sall refreschen an’ mak’ strang your haint, a’ ye that houpe in the Lord’ [HSR] (also written ‘houpe’; see also how-pit).

Howpasley Comb

stream that rises near Stock Hill and runs north to become part of the Borthwick near Craik village.
Smaller streams that feed it include Stock Grain, Ladshaw Sike, Gavel Sike, Foul Cleugh, Cat Cleugh, Hedley Burn, Rut Sike and Loans Cleuch.

Howpasley Comb (how-pas-lee-com) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Comb Sike, far to the south-west of Howpasley, just to the south of Craikhope, (see also Combe).

Howpasleyhope (how-pas-lee-hop) n. former shepherd’s cottage up the Howpasley Burn from the modern Howpasley. This marked the furthest limits of habitation of the old boundaries of Hawick Parish.

Howpasley Schuil (how-pas-lee-skil) n. former school near Howpasley, located just on the left after the turn for Craik village. It was provided by the Duke of Buccleuch for his tenants in that area, sometime before 1873. In that year it was presented to Roberton Parish. It was thereafter used as a school and also for occasional church services and as a Sunday school until 1947, after used as a school and also for occasional church services and as a Sunday school until 1947, when the pupils and teacher, Mr. Dodds, were transferred to Roberton. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1875–1947.

howt (howt) interj. expression of annoyance, objection or dismissal, tuts – ‘howts mun, deh be daft’, ‘o howts no’, ‘Howts mother, gie me the can and I'll gaun doon masel’ [JEDM]. ‘Howts, that’s nowts, ee should sei her shepherd’s pie!’ [JCo], ‘Howts in ma day ee were cool enough juist ti hev a telly’ [We] (corresponds to hoots in other parts of Scotland, and ‘tuts’ in parts of England).

hoy (hoi) v. to heave, move forcibly – ‘they were aa hoyed oot it midnight’, v., arch., poet. to hurry, walk with a brisk step, walk determinedly – ‘Yeh bit sate on the kei-stane o the brig: . . . an A hoyed strecht for the ‘clachan’ [ECS], ‘Noo, Jenny, hoy, fetch towels here An bring anither cup . . . ‘[WFC].

How Hoy (hoi) n. James (17th/18th C.) from Yarrow Parish, he married Margaret Goodfellow in Hawick Parish in 1703. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in Selkirk in 1710. John (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Douglas in Wilton Parish in 1804. John, Jr. (1755/6-81) minor Border poet, born at Gattonside. He is probably the son of John and Agnes Hardie baptised in Kelso in 1755. His ‘Poems on various subjects’ was published in in Edinburgh in 1781. He died at the age of 25. John (b.c.1770s) recorded as smith in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Perhaps the same John married Isabel Paterson and their daughter Alison was baptised in Hawick in 1813. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Mair and their children included: Helen (b.c.1853); Georgina (b.1858); James (b.1861); and John (b.1864). His wife (from Ashkirk) is recorded without him on Dickson Street in the 1861 census. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Easton and their children included: Thomas (b.1734); John (b.1735); James (b.1737); John (again, b.1738); and Robert (b.1740). Samuel (1740/1–1808) smith in Hawick, described as a ‘whitesmith’ when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Betty Flemming in Hawick in 1770 and their children included: John (b.1771); Agnes (b.1773); Samuel (1775–90); and Helen (1777–78). The witnesses in 1773 were the Burgher Congregation. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1808, a couple of months before his own death. Thomas (18th C.) married Janet ‘Moure’ in Wilton in 1727. Thomas (18th C.)

Hudshoose (hudz-hoos) n. Hudshouse, area to the north-east of Saughtree, between the Dawston Burn and the Liddel, marked on the maps now as Hudshouse Rig. In the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale the lands are valued at 20 shillings and with Philip Crozier as tenant. It is among lands in upper Liddesdale which were once held by Jedburgh Abbey. ‘Francie Batie’ was there in 1611 and Hob Glendinning in 1622. In a listing of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 occurs ‘Steid forenent the Hirdhous, Hundhous, possest be the Erle of Bucleuche’; this surely relates to these lands, although the precise location of the Stead and Hirdhouse are not clear. The farm was owned by Elliots in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, and other householders were John Forester and John Armstrong. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Bucleuch, when it was a long piece of land in the north-east/south-west direction, covering 1820 acres, bounded by Myredykes, Peel, Thorlieshope, Dawstonburn and Singdean. There were 2 houses marked on the farm in 1718, one by the Liddel, near the site marked ‘Tower (remains of)’ on modern maps, and the other close to Myredykes farmhouse. Robert Pott was tenant there in the mid-1700s. Andrew Nichol was servant there in 1799 and George Gray and John Amos were labourers there in 1801. John Turnbull was there in 1821. Archibald Scott, William Hardie and their families were there in 1841. Matthew Elliot and family were there in 1851 and it appears to have been abandoned soon after. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm.

The remains of a farmstead and probable tower are located to the south of Hudhouse Rig on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, between the Liddel Water and the side road from Saughtree to Kielder. A report from 1896 (and a visit by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889) suggests that there are remains of 3 British camps on the southern slopes of Dawston and Hudshouse Rig, but there is no evidence for this today. On the crest to the south-east are the remains of an old cairn by a sheepfold. It is said that the Highlanders crossed here in 1745, one of them dying as a result of gorging on mutton (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Hud’; it is ‘Hudishous’ in 1541, ‘Hudishous’ in 1611, ‘Hudishous’ in 1622 and 1637 and ‘Heeds-house’ in 1839; it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Hudshous’, Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Hudshouse’ and also ‘Hudshouse’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there is another Hudshouse near Dent in Yorkshire).

Hudshoose Rig (hudz-hoos-rig) n. ridge of land between the Dawston Burn and the Liddel Water. Essentially the same area is known as Dawston Rigg. On the north side, the old road passes a little up the rig, to the east of the modern B6357. On the south side, near where the Caddroun Burn joins the Liddel are the remains of a settlement, consisting of two ‘round-abouts’, as well as a linear earthwork, once believed to be associated with the Catrail (it is marked ‘Daston Ridge’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey).

Hudshoose Rig hud-stan (hudz-stän) n., arch. a stone placed transversely to strengthen a hearth – ‘Hud-stane, a flag-stone set on edge as a back to a fire on the hearth, Dumfr. Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

Hudson (hudz-in) n. Adam (b.1794/5) from Westerkirk, he was a shoemaker in Deanburnhaugh. He was recorded there in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861 (when he was listed as sub-postmaster). He married Euphemia Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1817); Thomas (b.c.1820); William (b.c.1826); Nancy (b.c.1827); Mary (b.c.1830) and Euphemia (b.c.1827).

hue an cry (hew-an-cry) n., arch. the pursuit of a suspected riever, announced by public proclamation, with a legal obligation on others to follow the pursuit. This was part of the Border Law, as laid down in the 15th and 16th centuries, and its Huggan

Huggan (hu-gin) n. Adam (1855–1904) son of Robert and Janet Cumming, he was a tobaccoist at 17 high Street. He married Mary Sinton, who was sister of Thomas Sinton, skinner, and she died in 1906. George (18th/19th C.) married Mary Thomson in Hobkirk in 1817. George (b.1809) born in Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. His wife was Isabella Marshall, and their children were: Jessie (b.c.1837); Agnes (b.c.1839); Thomas (b.1842); William (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1847); and Fanny (b.c.1850). George (c.1824–95) son of Thomas and Katherine Swan from Jedburgh, and brother of Thomas. He moved to Hawick and was a frameworker. In 1846 he married Jemima Rae in Hawick; she was daughter of John and Margaret Cumming. They lived at 7 Back Row in 1851 and 1861. Their children were: Margaret, who married James Wilson; Thomas, who married Mary Stringer; Catherine; George (b.1855); James (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Richardson; Jemima (b.1860); John (b.1863), who married Isabelle Turner; and Andrew Swan (b.1869). Jared ‘Jed’ (1939/40–) brought up in Dickson Street, he attended Wilton and the High School. He served with the R.A.M.C. for National Service, then worked for Pringle’s, William Lockie and Barrie’s. He played rugby for the Y.M. (including as part of the team that won 13 sevens in a row), and played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1959/60 season. He was Cornet in 1960 and followed for 50 years. He also won the Tradesman’s Handicap 5 times. He married his Lass, Irene Wylie (originally from Rosyth), who worked as a hairdresser and auxiliary nurse. In 2020 they were the Diamond Jubilee Principals. The couple have 2 children, Iain (Acting Father in 2012) and Stuart. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Earlside, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He may be the John whose death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1817, with his wife a year later. John (1914–89) writer of music for John Fairbairn’s poem ‘The Exile’s Dream’. Born at 8 Wellogate Place, his father, also John, was a frame worker, who died of wounds in 1918, and his mother was Isabella Carstairs Clark. He was brought up on Galdstone Street and Mansfield Road. He worked for Innes, Henderson & Co. after leaving school, but had a love of music, learning from local church organists, gaining the L.R.A.M. and L.T.C.L. diplomas, and becoming organist at St. John’s. He attended teacher training at Moray House 1836–37, then left to become music master at Buckie, Banffshire, before joining the R.A.F. in 1940. After the War he became Principal Teacher of Music at Galashiel Academy, and remained there until retirement in 1974. He taught piano in Roxburghshire for 2 more years, then moving to Edinburgh. In 1957, as an exile living in Gala at that time, he objected to the song being included in the Hawick Songs ‘Red Book’, insisting that it was no good! But his family gave permission for inclusion in the later ‘Blue Book’, allowing it to reach a wider audience. He died at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary.

Robert (b.1811) from Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a frameworker in Hawick, like his brother George. His wife was Janet Cumming (or Common), and children included: John (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1850); and Adam (1855). They were living on Walter’s Wynd in 1851. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1713 he was queried about what is probably the first recorded ‘irregular marriage’ in the existing Session records. He married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Bailie Graham in Longtown in England in 1713; this may have been an elopement. In the following year he was allowed to have his child baptised, following a rebuke before the pulpit. In 1716 several people were reprimanded for late night drunkenness and a fight at his house, the meeting connected with the fact that he ‘had disposed ane hatt to a public raffle’. He probably started the fight with William Oliver in the house of Isobel Gledstains. His children included: John (b.1714); Walter (b.1715); Walter (again, b.1718); and Janet (b.1720). There were no witnesses recorded in 1720. Thomas (b.c.1770s) saddler in Hawick. He was recorded in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia and still on the 1801 list. In 1796 he married Janet Tait. Their son John (b.1797) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with the witnesses being George Caverhill and William Wilson. He witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. Thomas (b.1785) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He married Katherine (or Catherine) Swan and the family moved to Hawick, where he was a ‘woollen hand loom weaver journeyman’. Their children (baptised in the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh) included: George; Thomas (b.1826); John (b.1828); Christian Catherine (b.1831); and James (b.1833). They lived on the Back Row in 1841. Thomas (19th C.) married Ann Turnbull in Kirkton in 1824. Thomas (1825/6–1901) from Jedburgh, son of Thomas and Katherine Swan. He came to Hawick and worked as a stockmaking. In 1851 he was living at about 17 Loan and in 1861 at 46 Loan. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Stevenson, a cousin of carrier Andrew Stevenson, and she died in 1887, aged 63. Their children were: Margaret, Janet and another Janet, who all died young; Christina or Catherine (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk; Isabella (b.c.1849); Elizabeth (Betsy) Stevenson (b.c.1851), who married Walter Thorburn; Thomas (b.1857), who died in Rhode Island; Robert (b.1862), who died in Selkirk; William (b.1864); a 3rd Janet (b.1866); and Margaret (b.1868). He also had a step-son, James Helm. William ‘in Wauchoi’ (17th C.) recorded in the 1641 Town Book as an appraiser for a horse. It is unclear which Wauchope he may have been tenant for. He may be the William who married Bessie Wright and whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick in 1644. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. His wife was Janet (b.c.1810), and their children included: Thomas (b.c.1840); Margaret (b.c.1844); John (b.c.1846); and Christina or ‘Kirsty’ (b.c.1850). They were living in the Loan in 1851 and at 1 Back Row in 1861. William ‘Bill’ (1933/4–2021) son of Walter and Ella, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1955, working for 43 years as a typesetter for the New York Daily News. Although he spent most of his working life in America, for decades he returned twice a year, for the Callants’ Club dinner and the Common Riding. He was made Mosstrooper of the Year in 2010 and was widely known in Hawick for his kindness and generosity. He married Sylvia in Peebles in 1962 and they had a son, John (formerly spelled ‘Huggon’, ‘Huggens’, ‘Hugon’ and variants).

Huggan’s Park (hu-ginz-pawrk) n. name for an area of Standhill farm. It was said that a Covenanter hid himself in the broom that grew there when he was pursued by the dragoons, probably around 1680.

Huggery-muggery (hu-gu-ree-mu-gu-ree) adj., arch. disorderly, dishevelled, in disarray, topsy-turvy – ‘Imagin iz: . . . rufflt claes, creest an huggery-muggery’ [ECS], ‘. . . a boy with dishevelled hair, unwashed face and tattered clothes, altogether a huggery-muggery, lazy-looking lout’ [JHH], adv. in a confused and disorderly state (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

Humbleton Hill see Homildon Hill

Hume (hewn, shewn, hoom) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) builder on Buccleuch Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He had an unnamed son who died in 1819. Both he and Robert are listed as masons in Hawick, when they subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, along with mason ‘J. Hume’. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1732 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Thomson in Borthaugh. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as ‘Georg Hoom collector of his Majesties customs att Alisone bank’ in Cummerdrees Parish (in Annandale). He married Janet Scott, who was from Ashkirk Parish. George (1783–1857) son of Ashkirk toll-keeper Robert and Jane Elliot, he was baptised in Elsdon, Northumberland. He was a shepherd and died in Yetholm Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Hall. George (b.c.1780s) labourer at Broadlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Rober- ton Parish in 1812. George (19th C.) married Mary Gray in Hawick Parish in 1845. Isabel (d.1829) listed as ‘tranty’ when she was buried in Hawick. She was the second of the 2 sisters known as ‘the Tranties’, with Marjory dying in about 1814. They kept a boarding house and were known to be intelligent above their station (which is what the word ‘trantie’ meant). She may be the ‘Isobel’, daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1742. J. (18th/19th C.) listed as a mason in Hawick when he sub-scribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was surely related to Adam and Robert, masons who also subscribed to the book.

James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. Perhaps he was the James of Ashkirk Mill recorded in a bond of 1673. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and they had an unnamed son baptised in 1686. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Shappelhill’ in 1684, when his wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded. He was probably tenant at Chapelhill and either the same man as the James who died around 1720, or else a close relative. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Scoon in 1685. His children included: Margaret (b.1679); and an unnamed son (b.1683). He may be the James in Chapelhill who paid for the use of the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ for his wife in 1705. James (d.bef. 1723) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1690–98. He was resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he acted as cautions for Robert, who rented part of the farm of Borthaugh. Probably the same James was in arrears for rent at Chapelhill in 1711 ‘carried for his brother’, and was also in arrears in the period 1712–18. In 1715 he was unable to pay the debt from the deceased Robert (presumably the same brother), and caution was offered by Thomas (who must have been another relative). He was recorded at Chapelhill in 1718 and 1720 when children of his were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, probably included: Margaret (b.1713); James (b.1715); Helen (b.1718); and Isobel (b.1720). In 1723 he was deceased when his widow Janet Hill and son James became tenants of Chapelhill. His widow may be the same Janet Hill who married Walter Hume in 1724. James (18th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1735. Walter acted as cautions, and so was presumably an older relative. He was possibly the son of James, who was the former tenant of Chapelhill. James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for James Reid, tenant in the Flex. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel. He is thus described in a baptismal record of 1743, probably to distinguish him from James in ‘Whitlaw’, who is recorded on the same page. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Jean (b.1741); John (b.1743); and John (again, b.1745). The witnesses in 1743 were weaver William Hood and ‘Officer’ John Telfer. He could be the deceased James whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1787. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. Probably the same James was at Harden in 1752, Mabonlaw in 1757 and Highchesters in 1762. He was either the James who married Christian Scott in Robertson Parish in 1748 or the James who married Jean Scott in Robertson Parish in 1749. His children may have included (although there are possibly 2 families here) Ann (b.1749), John (b.1750), James (b.1751), William (b.1752), Walter (b.1753), Walter (b.1754), Christian (b.1756), Peggy (b.1757) and Janet (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident at ‘Mains’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) in 1762 when his daughter Agnes was baptised. He may be the James who was fined in Robertson Parish in 1763 for an ‘irregular marriage’. James (18th C.) married Margaret Hume in Robertson Parish in 1774. James (d.bef. 1795) farmer at Chapelhill. He was tenant at Chapelhill in 1763 when a son Walter was born. He is recorded still renting Chapelhill from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1792, but by 1795 he was deceased and the farm was taken over by his son James. He could be the ‘S… Tenant Hume’ (perhaps married to Martha, the entry is hard to read) whose daughter Katherine was baptised in Hawick in 1784, with witnesses merchant James Ekron and Postmaster James Inglis. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Aitkin in 1796. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapelhill. He took over from his father in about 1795, when he was recorded at both Chapelhill and Branxholme Common. He was at Chapelhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses, and also on the Dog Tax Rolls as owner of 2 dogs. He was leasing Chapelhill and Branxholme Common in 1802 and was in arrears for Chapelhill in 1812. James (b.c.1780) baker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elspeth Wight in 1816. James (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included: Janet (b.1824); James, Jane, Elizabeth (b.1833); Agnes (b.1840). 1851 he was in Crailing and in 1861 was at Edgerston. James (b.c.1800) farmer at Chapelhill. He is mentioned in a letter of 1827 as father to an illegitimate child (with Jess Dickson of Harwood). He was probably the John recorded as tenant at Chapelhill in the period 1831–40. In 1841 he was recorded as farmer at Chapelhill, along with William (probably his brother) James (19th C.) married Jemima Lauder in Robertson Parish in 1844. John (17th/18th C.) tenant of West Highchesters in about 1713–21. His son Patrick was a witness in the court case regarding the division of Wilton Common in 1764. John (17th/18th C.) son of James. He was resident in Parkhill in 1710, Easter Parkhill in 1717 and Whithope in 1721. In 1709 in Roberton Parish he married Bessie, daughter of Adam Elliot. His children included: James (b.1704), Robert (b.1706); James (again, b.1711); John (b.1717); and Thomas (b.1721).

John (17th/18th C.) married Jean Wright in Bedrule in 1712. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Riddell in Roberton Parish in 1716. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Graham in Roberton Parish in 1718. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Wight in Hawick in 1850 and their children included: William (b.1852); Ellen Douglas (b.1853); Andrew; Walter; and John. John (19th/20th C.) hatter, glover, hosier and shirtmaker of 8 Oliver Place. He can be seen outside his shop in a 1901 photograph. Joseph of Ninewells (1757–1838) son of John and Agnes...
Carre, who was only daughter of Robert Ker of Cavers Carre. His uncle was the celebrated the philosopher and historian, David. He was a Captain in the 2nd Dragoon Guards, but retired to his family estate. He was patron of Bedrule Parish in the late 18th century, presumably a right that was inherited through his mother. He died unmarried. Joseph (1777–1855) Tony M.P. for the Borders constituency in 1812, born in Montrose. He trained as a doctor before turning to politics, eventually becoming a radical, campaigning for universal suffrage and religious freedom, moving to the Whigs and shifting to a Middlesex seat. Marjory (d.c.1814) one of the ‘Tranties’ along with her sister Isabel. These 2 unmarried sisters kept a boarding house and were said to be ‘more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life’. She may be the ‘Margaret’, daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Mary (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop at No. 3 Mansfield Road in the mid-1900s. Patrick see Patrick Home.

Patrick (17th C.) resident at ‘Chisholme and Widburne’ according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He had 2 kilns there and paid tax for 3 hearths. He was probably the Patrick who served as cautioner for his brother Robert, who leased part of Borthaugh in 1690; the two were also renting part of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692, and he was cautioner again in 1694. It seems likely that he and his brother Robert were blacksmiths. Patrick (17th/18th C.) married Anna Scott in Roberton Parish in 1727. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recorded in 1731 when he had a libel case for debt against William Tunno in Selkirk. Patrick (18th C.) recorded at ‘Callendridgerigg’ (presumably Caerlenrig) in 1726 when he married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may be his include: Magdalen (b.1730); Margaret (b.1733); Mary (b.1735); Walter (b.1738); William (b.1740); John (b.1743); Adam (b.1745); and Alexander (b.1747). Patrick (18th C.) farmer in Hawick Shiel. In 1757 he was tenant there, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making ‘bakes’ at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He may be the tenant at Slaidhills (along with Robert Elliot) in 1743 who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hogg. He may be the resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet (or Jean) Turnbull and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1737) and Patrick (b.1756). Patrick (b.c.1700) son of John, who was tenant at West Highchesters. He herded his father’s sheep there for 4 years in about 1720. He may have been related to James, who farmed at Chapelhill about the same time. He was tenant in Todshaw when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1755. He was tenant in Old Whitfield in 1764 when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common. He also gave evidence in 1764 regarding the use of some of the ‘headrooms’ on the Common. Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Scott and their children included an unnamed child (b.1790). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Helm in 1779 and their children included Peter (b.1784), John (b.1788) and James (b.1791). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Thornhaugh in 1795 and at Bowanhill in 1797. Perhaps the same Peter was a labourer at Lodgeknowe according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He could be the Peter who married Betty Dinwoodie, and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1795), Ann (b.1797), Jean (b.1800), Peggy (b.1805), Peter (b.1810) and Peter (again, b.1815). Peter (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Davidson and their children included James (b.1811), Isabel (b.1813) and Peter (b.1815). Peter (19th C.) married Janet Murray in Bedrule Parish in 1831. Peter (19th C.) married Agnes Grant in Hawick Parish in 1847. Robert (17th C.) leased quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in 1690, with his brother Patrick acting as cautioner. In 1691 and 1692 both he and Patrick were the farmers of 1/4 together, and in 1694 he held 1/4 himself again, this continuing until at least 1698. In 1696 his cautioner was James, who was hence surely related. He is recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh; he was listed ‘with two kilns’, suggesting he was a smith or other artisan. It seems likely he was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Robert (18th C.) tenant along with Walter at Chapelhill in 1725. Robert (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who in 1767 and 1774, along with Walter (probably his son) witnessed baptisms for mason John (probably also his son) and witnessed further baptisms for John in 1772 and 1776. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1738); Christian (b.1739); Margaret (b.1743);
Agnes (b.1745); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1747 were Robert Scott (probably the Bailie) and Andrew Turnbull (but it is unreadable which one). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Katherine Govenlock and their son William was baptised in 1759. Robert (b.1740) son of Walter and Helen Dryden. He was a toll-keeper, living in Ashkirk and then at Elsdon in Northumberland. He married Jane Elliot (b.1743) in Hawick in 1769. Their children included: William (b.1771), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1774); Thomas (b.1775); James (b.1779); George (b.1783), shepherd; and Walter (b.1787). Three of his children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish and the last 2 in Elsdon. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Stewart in 1793 and she died in 1797. Their children included: Mary (b.1795); and John (b.1797), grocer in the West End. Robert (d.1840) builder on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably related to Adam, who was a builder on Buccleuch Street at the same time. The pair both subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, as well as mason ‘J. Hume’. He was recorded as a mason in the death register of 1840 (along with 9 others on the same day, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). Robert (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Jane Wise and their children included Mary Jane (b.1838), Emma (b.1840) and John Robert (b.1841). Robert (19th C.) listed as grocer on ‘Front Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the son of grocer John. Robert (19th C.) shepherd at Templehall. His daughter Mary married postman Robert Thomson. Robert (b.1828/9) from Lilliesleaf, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. In 1861 he was a logger with John Davidson on Canongate. Robert (b.1834) frameworker in Hawick, son of grocer John. In 1851 he was still living with his mother on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 he was at 28 High Street. He married Isabella Elliot in 1856 and their children included: John (b.1855); Margaret (b.1856); Isabella (b.1859); Archibald (b.1861); Walter (b.1862), who became Headmaster at Drumlanrig; Robert (b.1865); Jane (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); Janet (b.1872); and William (b.1874). Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1713. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Commonside and elder of Hawick Parish. He was described as ‘Mr’ and ‘probationer’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, herd in Drydenburn. This presumably meant that he was a young preacher (before being ordained) working at the chapel in Teviothead. In 1714 he was ‘preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commonside. In 1715 he gave in the money that had been ‘mortified’ by James Grieve (farmer at Commonside) for the poor of the Parish, particularly those from the ‘highlands’. In 1716 he was ‘Mr Tho: Hume in Comonisd’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Clerk in Ramsaycleuchburn. In 1717 he was assigned the duties of collecting money from Harwood, Teindside and Comonside, suggesting that he lived in this area. Presumably the same Thomas was described in 1718 as ‘officer of the Excuse in Hawick’ when he was hauled up by the Session for his ‘irregular marriage’ to Jean, daughter of Andrew Brown, wright in Kelso. The marriage was carried out by John Middleton and witnessed by other excise agents, Thomas Burden and Andrew Lithgow. In 1719 his servant Isobel Laidlaw married John Blyth, tenant in Heap. He was ‘Mr Thomas Hume in Comonside’ in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Murray, herd in Hislop and also in 1722 when he witnessed a baptism for William Coltart, servant in Comonside. Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Scott in Roberton Parish in 1735. Thomas (b.c.1770s) resident of Newmill in Hawick Parish according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was recorded as a wright at Newmill on the 1801 ballot; William was also listed as a wright there and hence possibly his brother. Thomas (b.c.1770s) labourer in ‘Deweyhaugh’ according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was also at Deweyhaugh on the 1801 Militia ballot. Perhaps the same Thomas married Agnes Scott and had these children baptised in Cavers Parish: Williamina (b.1804); William (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Isabel Aitchison (b.1812); James (b.1815); and Barbara (b.1819). He may be the resident at Henderson’s Knowe who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Helm and their son Robert was baptised in 1822. Thomas Arthur (19th/20th C.) step-son of letter-carrier Robert Thomson. He was an apprentice gardener at Weens, then moving to Wells, Hunthill and Wolfelee. He married Margaret Oliver, daughter of the Bedrule blacksmith, and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Thomas ‘Tom’ (20th C.) employee of Turnbull & Sons, Slitrig Crescent. During WWII he was Head Warden in Hawick. Walter (17th C.)

listed as ‘broken and fled’ at Borthaugh among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He may be the Walter, married to a Scott (forename not recorded) whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Wilton in 1694. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Hardie in 1689. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Chapelhill. His son Thomas was baptised in 1718, with witnesses the older and younger William Thomson from Newmill. He is probably the Walter, living at Chapelhill, whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish in 1720. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at Parkhill in 1713 and Mains in 1720 and 1723. These are probably all his children (baptised in Roberton): Robert (b.1709); William (b.1711); William (again, b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); John (b.1715); William (b.1720); and Beatie (b.1723). It is possible that he is the same as the Walter who married Margaret Scott in 1707, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret (or Marjorie) Scott, who was step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill. Their son Walter (b.1728) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses probably (but hard to read) the Laird of Harwood and Walter Hume. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hill in Roberton Parish in 1724, the marriage also being proclaimed in Ashkirk Parish. It seems likely that his wife was the same Janet Hill whose husband James had been farmer at Chapelhill. It is unclear how closely related he might have been to his wife’s first husband. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Goodfellow in Roberton Parish in 1724. Probably the same marriage was also recorded in Ashkirk Parish. Note that there was another marriage of a Walter in the same Parish at almost the same time. This Walter lived in Roberton Parish, and may be the tenant in Chapelhill. Walter (b.1691/2) farm servant to Langlands of that Ilk at Calaburn in about 1715. In about 1740 he moved to be shepherd at Stouslie, then Heap in about 1745 and then was at Whitehaugh for about 20 years. He was described both as ‘in Mabenlaw’ and ‘in Whitehaugh’, when he was among those selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He also gave evidence regarding the use of the Common in his lifetime. Walter (17th/18th C.) rented the farm of Chapelhill along with Robert in 1725. He also acted as cautioner for James in 1735, who rented Chapelhill. He was presumably a close (but older) relative of James. Walter (18th C.) carrier at Branxholme Town. He married Helen Dryden and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1738); Robert (b.1740), who probably married Jane Elliot; Isobel (b.1742); and Helen (b.1744). It may be that his daughters Margaret and Isobel were the sisters known as ‘the Tranties’. The witnesses in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, from Newmill (who were surely related to his wife) and in 1742 were Robert and Walter Scoon, tenants in Branxholme Town. Note that in 1742 his name is recorded incorrectly as ‘Wm’. Walter (b.1748) and James (b.1750) may also have been his sons. It is possible that he is the Walter who witnessed a baptism for George Scott in Stouslie in 1742. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1745. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Wright in Kirkton Parish in 1749. Their unnamed son was baptised in 1749. Walter (18th C.) married Janet Graham in 1755, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children, baptised in in Wilton Parish, included: Walter (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1761). Walter (18th C.) married Jean McCrorqudale in Castleton Parish in 1764. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1794. His children included Betty (b.1794). Walter (18th/19th C.) married Jane Pott in Wilton Parish in 1794. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whitfield (in Wilton Parish) in 1799, when recorded as ‘Mr Walter Hume’. He married Mary Beattie in Roberton in 1796 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: James (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); and Christian (b.1802). He could be the farmer at Woodburn in Roberton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. Walter (19th C.) married Anne Irvine in Roberton Parish in 1831. Walter (b.c.1810) drover living at Chapelhill in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter, John, James and Jane. He was surely related to James, who was farmer at Chapelhill at the same time. Walter (19th C.) married Margaret Goodfellow in Hawick Parish in 1853. Walter edited ‘Fifty years’ football in Hawick, 1873–1923’ (1923). He was an early member of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Walter (b.1862) Headmaster of Trinity School. He was son of Robert, and grandson of Mary (or Margaret) Scott, who was a daughter of grocer Walter Scott. He was also known.
William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Govenlock in Hawick Parish in 1719. William (18th C.) resident of Ashirkir Parish. He married Margaret Miller in Roberton Parish in 1717. Their children included Helen (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and John (b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was a servant of Andrew Ogilvie at Branxholme in 1719 when he married Helen Govenlock (servant to William Ogilvie, also at Branxholme). He may be the ‘servant to Crumhaugh’ who was recorded as a fornicator with Isobel Govenlock in Hawick in 1720. Perhaps the same William was recorded at Chapelhill in 1723 and Highchesters in 1725. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1723) and Sarah (b.1725). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Lamb in 1753, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Jane (b.1762), who was baptised in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Helen Aitken in 1766. Their children included Robert (b.1767). William (18th C.) married Christian Renwick in Hawick Parish in 1781. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Jean (b.1789). William (b.c.1780) wright at Newmill in Hawick Parish according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Thomas was also listed as a wright there and hence possibly his brother. William (b.c.1780) servant at Wolfhopelee according to the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Southdean Parish. William (b.1810/1) born in Roberton Parish, probably from the Chapelhill family. He may be the William living with farmer James (perhaps his brother) at Chapelhill in 1841. In 1851 he was innkeeper at Tushielaw Inn and was already widowed by that time. William (19th C.) married Agnes Preston in Roberton Parish in 1847. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hume in Roberton Parish in 1850. Rev. William Roger (1865–1932) born in Edinburgh, son of John and Marjory Irvine, who was from Hawick. He attended Edinburgh University and trained for the ministry at New College. In about 1911 he contributed a couple of poems to the Rymour Club’s ‘Miscellanea’ publication, these being learned by his mother from her aunt, Miss Rodger (who was also from Hawick and was great-granddaughter of Andrew Rodger, inventor of the fanning machine). He was minister of Toiro, near Balclutha in New Zealand. He died while travelling to attend the General Assembly in Christchurch. (also spelled ‘Hoom’ and ‘Hoomie’; see also Home).

Hume’s (hewmaz) n. gentleman’s outfitters at 57 High Street, established 1860 and surviving into the early 20th century, advertised as ‘Ye Olde Hatterie’.

Hummelknowe Mill (hu-nul-now-nil) n. former corn-mill at Hummelknowes. Thomas Scott was miller there in 1642. In 1684 the tenant, Hummelknowes

James Scott, was among the men fined for attending conventicles. Robert Elliot was miller there in 1694. James Elliot was tenant in 1700 and through the early 18th century. Robert Cairms was living there in at least 1709–15 and Robert Elliot in 1720–35. John Scott was miller there in at least 1755–61. It was tenanted by Scotts for more than a century, the last miller being Walter Scott, who left in 1855. John Scott is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as Walter Glendinning. James Glendinning was a servant there in 1801. The weir was damaged in the 1846 flood. John Scott was listed as miller there in 1852 (also referred to as ‘Humble Knowe Mill’ and other variants, it is ‘Humelknowes Miln’ in 1715, ‘Humbleknow miln’ in 1753, transcribed as ‘Huntliknows’ in 1788, ‘Hummelknow is’ in 1569, ‘Humilknowis’ in 1574, ‘Hummelknows’ in 1642, ‘humbleknowmilne’ in 1700, ‘Hummelknow millie’ in 1715 and ‘Humbleknows miln’ in 1797; a mill is marked there on the east bank of the Slitrig on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Hummelknowes (hu-mul-nowz) n. farm by the Slitrig just outside Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It appears to have been owned by Robert Lorraine in 1428/9, when his son Patrick resigned the lands in favour of his niece Janet Rutherford. It was burned in 1547/8 by the English, when referred to it as ‘Hoble Knowes’. There were Croziers there in 1569 when a bond of security was signed by ‘Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis’ and 8 other family members. In 1574 this was among the lands that James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for, with Clem Crozier having been his tenant there. It was owned by the Gledstains of that Ilk in 1643. It was among the farms owned by the Gledstains family on the 1694 Hearth tax rolls, when William Glasgow was tenant and 3 other householders were listed there. James Elliot was there in 1700, William Reid in 1709 and Thomas Miller in 1717. Adam Hobbirk was shepherd there in 1723. John Hood was there in 1727 and Thomas Kyle in 1729–31. It was held by Gledstains of that Ilk until 1734, when it passed to Scott of Burnhead. Robert Stavert was there in 1737. John Crawford was there in 1776–79 and Andrew Ferguson in 1781. William Scott of Burnhead was owner in 1788 (as also reported in about 1811), when it was valued at £254. In 1799 George and James Glendinning were servants there, Robert Lawson and Robert Murray were labourers and Walter Miller wa a hedger. George Glendinning was still there in 1801. William Scott Watson was owner in about 1874. George Jobson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. It was also formerly the location for a corn-mill. The 234 m high hill above is the site a hill-fort (also ‘Humble Knowes’ and often two words ‘Hummel Knowes’); spelled ‘Hummelknows’ on some Ordnance Survey maps; the origin is probably Old English ‘hamel cnoll’, meaning ‘abrupt, steep, rounded hills’, although there is a possible connection with the old Scots ‘hummel’, meaning ‘hornless’; the name first appears as ‘Hameleknolles’ in c.1380, is ‘Homylknolle’ in 1428/9, ‘homylknollis’ in 1494/5, ‘Hamilknowis’ in 1569, ‘Humilknowis’ in 1574, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1642, ‘Humelknow’ in 1694, ‘Humbleknow’ in 1700 ‘Humillknowes’ in 1704, ‘Humbleknowes’ in 1718, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1748 and 1753, transcribed as ‘Huntliknows’ in 1788, ‘Humbleknowes’ in 1799 and ‘Humlekmnowes’ in 1811; it is mis-spelled ‘Humilkowis’ on one of Gordon’s c.1650 maps, but is ‘Humilknowis’ on another, and is ‘Humilknowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Hammelknowes’ on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Hummelknowes Brig (hu-mul-nowz-brig) n. bridge over the Slitrig, just off the B6399 leading to Ormiston etc. It is sometimes known as ‘Lover’s Lane Brig’ or ‘Greenbraeheids Brig’. It was opened by Princess Christian in 1869, and hence formerly referred to as the ‘Princess Christian Bridge’.

Hummelknoweshaugh

(hu-mul-nowz-hawch) n. farmstead on the left-hand side of the B6399 Newcastleton Road opposite the Flex road-end. The area of land between the main road and the river was formerly known as ‘Whitlaw Haugh’. The farm was also known as ‘Hankemshaugh’, ‘Hankimshaugh’ or ‘Hankumshaugh’. James Montgomery was there in 1780. The fields were much damaged in the 1846 flood, with both crops and soil being washed away. Mason Robert Scott lived there in 1841 and Walter Paterson was recorded there in 1861 and 1868 (also written ‘Hummelknoweheugh’, ‘Hummelnowe Haugh’ and ‘Humbleknowhaugh’, it was ‘Hummelknowhaugh’ in 1780).

Hummel Side (hu-mul-sid) n. hill in the upper Ale valley, to the east of Easter Alemoor. It reaches a height of 312 m.

Hundalee (hun-du-kee) n. farm about a mile south of Jedburgh, off the A68. It was long the seat of the Rutherford of Hundalee. There was a corn mill there at one time. In about the 1490s a group of Kers were indicted for oppressing the tenants, ‘casting thame out of their housis and landis’. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jed-forest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £10. The Laird of ‘Hundeley’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. There were schoolmasters recorded there in the early 17th century. The nearby ‘seaur’ on the Jed once held an ancient cave, which collapsed some time around 1880 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘hund hoh leah’, meaning ‘hound-hill-wood’; it first occurs as ‘Hundwaley’ in the 1450 retour for the Barony of Hawick; it is ‘Hundole’ in 1464, ‘Hundwellie’ in 1464/5, ‘hundole’ in 1494/5, ‘Hundole’ and ‘Hindole’ in 1502, ‘Hunduelle’ in 1504, ‘Hundellee’ in 1525 and 1526, ‘Hundolee’ and ‘Hundollie’ in 1538, ‘Hundley’ in 1541, ‘Hundeley’ in 1551, ‘Hundelie’ in 1549, 1553/4, ‘Hundley’ in 1553, ‘Hundalie’ in 1560, ‘Hundeley’ in 1564 and ‘Hundolie’ and ‘Hundley’ in 1569; it is ‘Hundalie’ and ‘Hundleie’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Hundalie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

hunder (hun-dur) n. hundred – ‘if A’ve telt ee yince, A’ve telt ee hundres o’ times’, ‘…nor clame ony mair of the said nyne hundreth merkis bot alanolerly fyve hundred merkis’ [SB1470], ‘We looked on the Jed once held an ancient cave, which collapsed some time around 1880 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘hund hoh leah’, meaning ‘hound-hill-wood’; it first occurs as ‘Hundwaley’ in the 1450 retour for the Barony of Hawick; it is ‘Hundole’ in 1464, ‘Hundwellie’ in 1464/5, ‘hundole’ in 1494/5, ‘Hundole’ and ‘Hindole’ in 1502, ‘Hunduelle’ in 1504, ‘Hundellee’ in 1525 and 1526, ‘Hundolee’ and ‘Hundollie’ in 1538, ‘Hundley’ in 1541, ‘Hundeley’ in 1551, ‘Hundelie’ in 1549, 1553/4, ‘Hundley’ in 1553, ‘Hundalie’ in 1560, ‘Hundeley’ in 1564 and ‘Hundolie’ and ‘Hundley’ in 1569; it is ‘Hundalie’ and ‘Hundleie’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Hundalie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Hunder Steps

the Hunder Steps (thu-hun-dur-steps) n. also known as the ‘Hundred Steps’ (or ‘Stairs’), and previously as ‘Jacob’s Ladder’. It is a stairway leading from the top of Wilton Path down to Bath Street. It is indicated in Wood’s 1824 map as a path, still as a path in 1850, as steps in 1859 and in 1867, and well established by the 1898 Ordnance Survey map. It never had 100 steps, the number varying with time, but currently being about 95, although there are still arguments about this! It was closed in 2002 following safety concerns, but reopened later that year after refurbishment. Although most of the surrounding buildings have been demolished, the stairs themselves survive, now starting from the back of the Sainsbury’s car park. However, the ownership of the land has been a matter of debate. The coat of arms in the wall at the foot of the steps was rescued from the Buccleuch Memorial (also called the ‘Hunner Steps’ or ‘Stairs’).

hunderth (hun-dur-th) adj., n. hundredth – ‘The 1514 Memorial was commissioned ti merk the fowre-hunderth anniversary o the incident that took place the year efter the battle o Flodden’[IWL], ‘What cood be mairi appropriate on that form’s hunderth birthday’[BW1978] (also hundert).

hunderwecht (hun-dur-wecht) n., arch. hundredweight – ‘But I’ll up throwe thir divots Afore him, massy, his lane, Ablow thon lee’in’ hunderwechts O’ marble stane!’[DH].

hundigowk (hun-dee-gowk) n. a person sent on a fool’s errand on 1st April (also huntigowk).

Hundleckleugh (hun-dal-klooch) n. former name for lands in Cavers Parish. In 1716, quarter of these lands, called Curriescleugh, were bought by Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) from Walter Scott of West Port. The precise location of the lands is unclear.

hundreth (hun-drith) n., arch. a hundred – ‘...the soume of twa hundreth meriks of vsual mone of Scotland ...’[SB1470], ‘...writtin at Hawik the penult day of Januar, in the yeir of God ane thousand fyf hundreth thre score ane yeir’[RBA1561], ‘First, anent the scool ther wad be ane hundreth pundis allowed for the maintaining of a scool in this large toune’[PR1627], ‘...their releife of two hundredth merks payd out by them as the pryce for building of the steiple loft ...’[BR1685], ‘Summa totalis is Foure hundred and Fyve bolls of victwall and Foure hunreth and twentie Eight keans’[Buc1690], hundreds – ‘...the true liberties and privileges of the sd. burgh enjoyed for some hundreth of years by-gane ...’[BR1706].

Hunewic (hun-wik) n. mentioned in a charter granted by the English King John to Henry Lovel in 1208. This is probably ‘Honeywick’ near Castle Cary in Somerset and not a variant of Hawick.

hunger (hung-ur) n. hunger – ‘...Wund, hung’r, cauld, and strength’s declension?’[JoHa] (note there is no hard g sound).

Hungersflat (hung-ur-flow) n. lands in Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of around 1376. It is recorded as ‘Hungryflat’ and with a value of 40 pence (G. Watson suggests that the name came from poor land with soil that required much manure).

hunger-gut (hung-ur-gu’) adj., arch. unfertile (of land), hungry, producing poor crops.

hungert (hung-gur) adj., arch. hungry – ‘For I was ane hungert, an’ ye gae me meæt’[HSR], ‘...That wrocht the jaw-banes, stilfed the hungert voice, and swalled to girdit bliss the void below!’[DH] (also written ‘hunger’t).

hungery (hung-u-reec) adj. hungry – ‘Gif I wer hungerie, I wadna tell thee ...’[HSR], ‘...an’ fills the hungirie saul wi’ guidniss’[HSR] (also written ‘hungerie’; note the lack of the hard g sound and the extra syllable compared with standard English).

hunging (hung-in) pp., arch. hung – ‘In witnesses of the quhilk thing to thir leitriss I haue hunging my sele ...’[SB1470] (note the odd tense, which was common in documents).

Hungryhill (hung-gree-hil) n. former farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley near Hungrey Hill on the Huntly Burn. An Ashkirk Parish record for 1727 states that ‘a man in the Hungreyhill was buried having the Mortcloath payed’. Walter Grieve farmed there around 1763 and Andrew Herbertson was farmer in 1797, when it is on the Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. It is also listed on the 1811 Horse Tax Rolls, when it was valued at £71 along with Four Rigs, and a tenement and yard in Lilliesleaf, all owned by Andrew Gray.

hunker slide (hung-kur-slid) v. to slide on ice in a crouched position, to fall down or be negligent in one’s job – ‘hei’s been hunker slidin on his job, either that or hei’s jist yissless’ (also hankerslide).
hunkers (hung-kurz) n., pl., arch. haunches, backs of the thighs, buttocks – ‘...An’ critics, printers, binders, bankers, Hae set her sae upon her hunkers’ [JoHa], ‘...hed hoakkert doon on ti ma hunkers till A gethert back ma braith’ [ECS].

hunkert (hung-ker, hung-kert) pp. hunkered – ‘...Wi spunk nor smeddum, hunkert by the ingle, An’ critics, printers, binders, bankers, Hae set her sae upon her hunkers’ [JoHa], ‘Sing hey for ane I ken – may blessings aye be on her – I wadna man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’, ‘There’s ane I ken – may blessings aye be on her – I wadna man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’ [JCG] (cf. hunder).

hun-ur (hun-nur) n. hundred – ‘she must hev telt the same story hunners o times’, ‘yin Hawick man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’, ‘There’s ane I ken – may blessings aye be on her – I wadna man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’, ‘There’s ane I ken – may blessings aye be on her – I wadna man’s worth a hunner fri onywhere else’.

Hunsdon (hunz-din) n. Lord Hunsdon was the title of Henry Carey.

Hunt (hun) n. Henry (19th C.) came to Hawick from England as a stockmaker. He later took over the licensed grocers in O’Connell Street which had formerly been Thomas Bell’s. He married Agnes Waugh in 1845 and had at least one child, Henry David.

Hunter (hun-nur) n. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) brother of Matthew, who was ‘John Crosyer kynsman’. They were listed, along with another brother Pate, and Matthew’s son Martin, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. Perhaps the same man was ‘Eddie Hunter’, servant to Robert Elliot (probably the Laird of Redheugh), listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Adam T. (1879/80–1906) son of Robert, he was a traveller for Wilson & Glenny and killed in a train accident near Arbroath.

Agnes Sophia (1777/8–1856) daughter of Dr. Henry Hunter of London, who wrote ‘Sacred Biography, Translations of Lavater’ and ‘St. Pierre’s Studies of Nature’. She was niece of Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton. She published ‘Miscellany’ in Hawick in 1811 (with a second edition in the same year). This was a small volume of essays on education and related other topics. Several of the articles were contributed by her uncle, Dr. Charters. She also wrote an account of the life of her uncle, included in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’. She became Mrs. Semple and had a son who was a doctor in London. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelie according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and John were joint tenants. Alexander (1882–1952) son of William and Margaret Paxton. He drove one of Hawick’s first taxis. He married Catherine Elliot (1877–1974), who was from Liddesdale. Their children were: William Alexander (‘Bill’, 1906–92); James (‘Jim’, 1907–43); George (1909–89); John (‘Jack’, b.1911); Percival Archibald (‘Percy’, b.1913); and Walter (b.1914).

Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outsersideg in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Hannah Laing (possibly daughter of Walter) and their children included George (b.1770/1), born at Appletreehall and baptised in Wilton (by the minister of the Jedburgh Relief Kirk). Thomas Blyth and James Dryden (who lived at Clarilaw and Appletreehall) were witnesses at the baptism. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Helen Nixon and their children included Elizabeth (b.1830), John (b.1833), Isabella (b.1837), George (b.1842) and Helen (b.1844). Andrew William (1810–60) son of George with his first wife Margaret Laidlaw. He was the first person to be baptised in the new Relief Kirk congregation in Hawick, this happening on the Haugh, since the church did not yet have its own premises. He married Elizabeth MacLean in Jedburgh in 1831 and their children included: Elizabeth (1832–1914); Margaret (1834–1908); Jane (1837–71); George (1839–1913); Andrew (1841–42); Andrew (1843–21); Thomas (1845–1942); William Andrew (1848–1913); Agnes (1851–1937); and Jessie (1853–1926). He lived in Preston for a while, where some of his children were born. He emigrated to Canada in 1842, one of his sons dying on the voyage. The family settled in Beverley Township near Hamilton, Ontario. The area was later known as ‘Hunters Corners’. He died in a horrid sawmill accident. His son Thomas started an insurance brokerage business, which still exists. Other descendants are still farming in the Hunters Corners area. Andrew Galloway (c.1809–82) from Denholm, he trained as a chemist and wrote some articles for the Encyclopædia. He founded the Glasgow business A.G. Hunter & Co., who were ‘Hat and Forage cap Manufacturers to the Queen, Prince consort and Royal Family'. He married Isabella, daughter of Hawick manufacturer William Wilson and their children included: Thomas C. (b.1833); Andrew George (b.1838); Sir William Wilson Hunter (b.1840); and John James (b.1842). He may be the Andrew, son of George, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1802. He died at Deneburn in Denholm. Charles (b.1806/7) from Lochmaben, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. For many years he was President of the Chartist Association, formed in Hawick in 1838. He married to Anne Carswell (or Kersel), and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); James (b.1836); John (b.c.1838); and Feargus O’Connor (b.c.1840), presumably named after the Irish Chartist leader. In 1841 and 1851 the family were living on the Loan and in 1861 were at No. 26 (probably now 24). Col. Edgar (d.1807) son of Dr. William and grandson of Rev. William of Lilliesleaf. He already held Midlem Mill by 1788 and also lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, specifically Chapel (valued at £300), ‘W. Scot’s acres’ (valued at £200), Porteous Croft (valued at £78), Childknow (formerly part of Raperlaw, owned by James Middlemas, valued at £82 12 2), part of Greenhouse (valued at £16 3s), Union Hall (valued at £121 10s), additional lands that had formerly belonged to the feuars of Lilliesleaf (valued at £10 6s 8d) and associated teinds (valued at £92 7s 2d). Together his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at almost £1000, making him the second largest landowner (after Riddell of that Ilk). He was also at Midlem Mill in 1797 when taxed for having a non-working dog. He was an officer with the 19th Dragoons, being placed on half pay in 1805. He was the owner of the estate of Linthill (including Midlem Mill and Union Hall). He was listed there as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He also acquired several smaller pieces of land in Lilliesleaf Parish, including Bewlie Hill, Kirklands of Bewlie, part of Chapel, Porteous Croft, Childknow, and those previously owned by Davidson of Greenhouse, William Leithead and William Redford. He was killed after falling from his horse at Clarilaw Burn near Linthill and died unmarried. His estate being inherited by his cousin, William Riddell of Camieston, with part of Lilliesleaf Moor being acquired by Sir John Buchanan Riddell of that Ilk. Elizabeth (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. Her steading was valued at 12s 6d. She was probably related to William, who was tenant at Mervinswood. George (18th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1789 he had an account with the treasurer there for mason work. George (b.c.1760) resident of ‘Parkhouses’, i.e. Burnhead Cottages. It seems likely he is the son of John and Ann Whillans who was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1757. He was listed as a mason at ‘Pityhouses’ in 1840 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In the 1841 census he was listed as ‘Ind.’ (and age 80) at Packhouses, suggesting perhaps that he was retired by then (but wealthy enough that he was not a pauper). Given the location, he may have been related to the George who was a publican in Hawick. He may be the George (no other information given) who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the resident of Wilton Parish whose wife was Margaret Cairns, and whose son John was born in 1785. He seems likely to be the ‘Mr. Hunter’, mason at Peatihouses, who built the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm that washed away in 1806, and was father of John, inkeeper of the Black Bull. He may be related to the mason George who was recorded performing work in Selkirk in the 1770s and 80s. George (1770–1857) born at Appletreehall, son of Andrew and Hannah Laing. He may be the George who is recorded as owner of 2 horses at Appletreehall on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was a tailor in Denholm according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He worked in Denholm as a tailor, and was a ‘portioner’ there. He knew the poet John Leyden, and made his clothes for him. He was later the proprietor of the Fleece Inn in Hawick. In 1808 he catered the dinner arranged at the top of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells were to settle a boundary issue. A storm began and the party had to decamp the tent and retire to a barn, and when the cart jolted on the way down he is said to have uttered ‘The deil’s in the man’ about the carter, the closest he ever came to cursing! He was recorded at the Fleece Inn in Pigot’s directories of 1825/6 and 1837. He took over from James Kennedy (of the Ordnance Arms) as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick, and served until the weigh-house was closed. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk, and early meetings of the church Managers took place on his premises. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841. It was said that old parishioners of Cavers used to frequent his inn in Hawick. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1801, and she died in 1821. Their only surviving child was Andrew William (1810–50), who was a millwright, living in Jedburgh, then Preston for a couple of years, before emigrating to Canada in 1842. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Laidlaw and Janet Davidson and she died in 1864. Their children included: Thomas Laidlaw (1823–97), who was an engineer in Gateshead; Margaret (b.1826), who may have married a Turnbull; George (b.1826), probably a twin of Margaret, who moved to Edinburgh; Janet Davidson (1828), who married James Dunlop and went to London; Hannah Laing (b.1830), who married Samuel Barnes; and Agnes (b.1833), who died in infancy. He later moved to the Round Close, where he died. In 1851 he is listed at the Round Close as ‘Formerly a Tailor (a pauper)’. He was buried at St. Mary’s. Rev. George (1829–1881) born in Earlston, son of James and Margaret Waugh, he was educated at Earlston and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1852 and became assistant at Linton and at St. Mary’s in Hawick. He was ordained as minister of Kirkton in 1857 and remained until his death. He married Ann Elizabeth Favey. George (1840/1–1916) from Minto Parish, he was son of farm-worker Andrew and Helen. He became teacher at Ringford near Kirkcudbright. He wrote an article on the history of the Parish of Tongland. His wife was Euphemia, and their children included John and Andrew. Helen (17th/18th C.) nee Shortreed. Probably from Ashkirk Parish, she married farmer Thomas Hunter, who died in about the mid-to-late 1720s. She was then tenant, along with her children (particularly Robert), in the part of Whitfield east of the Calaburn. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Huntar’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from. James (15th/16th C.) recorded among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Steven is listed right after him and so probably a close relative. James (b.1706) son of Thomas and Helen Shortreed. He lived at Whitfield for 11 years, where his father and brother Robert were tenants. He was in Carterhaugh in 1764 when he gave brief evidence regarding the former use of lands on Wilton Common; he was said to be 50 years old at that time, but that seems to have been an underestimate. He stated that he had possessed the ‘tack’ between Walter Scott of Whitfield and his father (from about 1717), but ‘lost it within these 6 years, by giving it to a boy at school to read. He is probably the James who married Janet Scott and had children: Christian (b.1745), baptised in Ashkirk; Helen (b.1747) and Thomas (b.1749), baptised in Ettrick; and Christian (again, b.1753), Walter (b.1756) and Agnes (b.1758), baptised in Selkirk. James (1734/5–63) wright from Jedburgh, who served his apprenticeship with Robert Moodie in Lilliesleaf. He died in a fall from the steeple in Jedburgh. He was buried in Lilliesleaf with a carved bust and an inscription on the tombstone: ‘Stop, Traveller, as you go by, I Once had life and Breath; But falling from A Steeple High I swiftly pass’d Through Death. Take you Example by my fate And be by me advis’d; Repent before it be too late Lest you be this surpris’d’. Local tradition states that a Mr. Moodie of Lilliesleaf had a premonition of the fatal accident, and when learning it had happened that same day in Jedburgh, arranged for the man to be interred in his own family plot; however, facts do not support this fanciful version of events, with Hunter simply having no close relatives of his own and being a frequent visitor to Lilliesleaf, where he was buried (not in the Moodie family plot). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Rachel Lockie. Their children included William (b.1803). James (b.1797/8) born in Ednam, he was a weigher at Hawick Station. He lived on O’Connell Street in 1851 and was unmarried. James (d.1859) minor local poet. His verse ‘The Gipsy’s Song’ was published in Living Bards of the Border in 1859. He died on the Kirk Wynd. James (1821–92) born in Ancrum, he was eldest son of Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’. He was cashier at Watson’s, Dangefield Mills and later a commission agent. He was recorded as a clerk and warehouseman in 1845 when he witnessed the last will and testament of William Lindsay Watson. He was also a manager of East Bank Church. In 1851 he was living at 9 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 at 2 Melgund Place. He married Helen Young, who died in 1897, aged 71. Their children were: Jane Young (b.1846/7), who married printer William Clegg Shaw; Thomas (b.1848/9), who married a Coutts of Selkirk; John Young (1850–1903), photographer; Robert (1854–1905), mill manager and local poet; Margaret D. (b.1857/8), who married Alexander Bonthorn Patrick; and Beatrice, who married Thomas Hunter. James (b.1821/2) born in Hawick Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at Highchsters...
Hunter

Cottages and in 1861 at Borthaugh Hind’s Cottages. He married Jessie Johnstone and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret and Thomas J.J. James Young (1877–1937) son of Robert, he became Headmaster of Cellardyke School in Fife and should not be confused with his uncle John Young Hunter. He was born at 4 Brougham Place and educated at Buccleuch School. He attended the Free Church Training College in Edinburgh and in 1899 became an assistant teacher at Drumlanrig School. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1900 and held positions in Dalbeattie and St. Andrews. He became headmaster at Lundin Links and then at Cellardyke. He wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Transactions. He wrote several poems of a local flavour, including ‘Hawick Lasses – 1514’ (set to music much later by David Gibb), ‘The Heart’s Name of the Callant’, ‘June Fever’, ‘The Ca’-Knowe’, ‘Follow the Flag!’ and ‘Sing me a Song, a Hawick Song’. He wrote ‘Heart’s Hame o’ the Callant’ was written for the Colour Bussing of 1899, and recited it himself. For many years, until about a decade before his death, he contributed a Hawick-based poem to the Hawick Express every Common Riding, including ‘Hawick Lasses – 1514’. He died in Crieff in his sleep and is buried in the Western Cemetery, St. Andrews. Jess nee Johnstone (19th/20th C.) one of the 5 sisters who lived to be over 80 and whose photo hangs in the Museum. She stayed at the Tollhouse above the Dunk, and was called ‘Jess o the Toll’. John (d.bef. 1535) brother of Robert. In Selkirk in 1535 Walter Scott of Roberton asked for clemency from Robert Hunter for his murder. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justiceliee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and Alexander were joint tenants. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690; this was along with his brother Thomas. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1764. In 1755 in Minto Parish he married Ann Whillans (or ‘Whollance’), probably daughter of William Whillans and Janet Stothart. Their children included: George (b.1757), possibly the mason of Packhouses; Jean (b.1759); Margaret (b.1762); Rachel (b.1764), who married Peter Kyle; and William (b.1767). The witnesses in 1764 were James dryden and Alexander Smith. He was probably related to Walter (married in Wilton in 1767) and Andrew, resident of Appletreehall.

John (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. Probably the same John was a house servant at Midshiel in 1788, working for Archibald Douglas. John (d.bef. 1837) proprietor of the Black Bull Inn at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Mary Oliver, who was from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1813); Mary (b.1816); Margaret (b.1821), who married Provost Robert Milligan; and John (b.c.1823). In 1837 his wife Mary was listed as vintner at the Black Bull, and so he was presumably deceased; in 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and she was listed as a former innkeeper there on the 1851 census. He was said to be son of a mason from Peatihouses, perhaps George. John (1824–1905) cabinet-maker of John Hunter & Sons. He was said by James Haining to be son of a mason who came from the North and lived at Peatihouses; however, this may be confusion with John of the Black Bull. In about 1879 he had 4 villas built on land at Wilton Hill, and lived in one himself, ‘Olive Bank’. Hunter Terrace there was named after his son Robert. He was associated with the Hawick Baa game in its early years. He was said to have brought together his brother-in-law, Robert Richardson, with Robert Noble, to form the partnership Richardson, Noble & Co. He married Esther (b.1825/6), daughter of spinner John Richardson. Their sons were Robert and George (manager at Abbots Mill, Galashiels).

John Young ‘J.Y.’, ‘Jye Wye’ (1850–1903) photographer, born in Hawick, son of commission agent James and brother of poet Robert. He trained in photography with John Aitken in the Arcade. He started his own business on North Bridge Street in the 1870s, then moved to 59 High Street in 1888. Following his father’s death in 1893 he also became a commission agent. He was the first Chairman of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee from 1887, with the Committee being established at a meeting in his photographic studio in April of that year. In those early days the Chairman was probably the most important member of the committee. He was also Honorary Secretary for some years, until James Edgar was appointed in 1900. Through his efforts (and those of a few others) the Common Riding revamped its traditional ceremonies and dramatically increased in popularity. He also acted as

Richard Hunter (16th C.) judge at the Common Riding Races. He was personally in charge of arrangements for the Colour Bussing for about 15 years and resigned from the Ceremonial Committee in 1895. In 1887 he encouraged James Thomson to come up with a new Hawick song, the result being ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’. He was also heavily involved with running the Saxhorn Band, and with other musical associations in the town. In addition he was an active member of the Mutual Improvement Society, the Parliamentary Debating Society, the East Bank Literary Society, the Ornithological Society and Lodge 111. He was one of the originators of the Con Club, and also helped start the working men’s flower shows. He followed cricket and keenly played bowls, being Hawick & Wilton President. Although he became lame, he was seen around town in later years on his tricycle (and is probably in the c.1890 photograph of the ‘Coffin End’). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. (Note that the poems signed ‘James Y. Hunter’ were written by his nephew). Martin (16th C.) son of Matthew, who was ‘John Crosyer kynsman’. They were listed, along with two brothers of Matthew, Ade and Pate, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. They may have been the same Hunter family connected with Wiltonburn. Mary nee Oliver (b.1781/2) born in Kirkton Parish, she married innkeeper John. Her husband was proprietor of the Black Bull at the Sandbed. However, she was listed as proprietor herself in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and so he was presumably deceased. In 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and living with her son John and daughter Margaret. The pub could have been the Royal Oak. She was still alive in 1851. Matthew (16th C.) cousin of John Crozier who is listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Matthew, son of John Crozier was also mentioned, although the precise family relationship is unclear. Presumably the same man was ‘Matthewe Hunter John Crosyer kynsman’ listed in 1544 among Crozier’s and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII; his brothers Ade and Pate, and son Martin, are also mentioned. He may be the same as the resident of Wiltonburn in 1549. Matthew (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn, recorded in 1549 as ‘Matho Hunter’ among a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers raiding their farms. He was probably related to his neighbour, Patrick. He may be the same man as the cousin of John Crozier. Patrick (16th C.) tenant at Wilton Green resident, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. It seems likely he was related to Matthew, who lived at Wiltonburn at the same time. He could be the ‘Patte’, brother of Matthew, ‘John Crosyer kynsman’, who was listed among local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544; another brother listed was Ade, as well as Matthew’s son Martin. Robert (16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. In 1535 Walter Scott of Robertson came to Selkirk to seek clemency for his part in the ‘violent killing’ of his brother John. He accepted the apology (and payment presumably), promising not to pursue Walter Scott any further over the matter. Robert (b.1701) son of Thomas and Helen Shortreed, he was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He farmed Whitfield with his father from about 1717 and continued there with his mother after his father’s death. He was later tenant in North Synton. In 1737 he was recorded in a court case in Selkirk with merchant John Tudhope and perhaps in another case in 1742. He is recorded being ‘in Selkirk’ in 1764 when he was among the men selected to perambulate Wilton Common. He also gave evidence about the use of Wilton Common in court proceedings in 1764. He is probably the Robert who married Helen Scott, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included Helen (b.1741), John (b.1743), Kirsten (b.1745), Walter (b.1747) and Helen (b.1749). Robert (d.1816) resident of Hawick. In 1788 he married Mary Welsh, who died in 1823, aged 72. His death is registered in Hawick. Robert (1819-53) grocer at 16 Howegate, son of Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’. He was born at Chesters, but lived almost all his life in Hawick. In 1841 he was grocer and spirit dealer on the Mid Raw and in 1851 was on the Howegate. In 1852 he is listed as a grocer on Silver Street. He married Jane Fleming, who died in 1883, aged 63. Their only child was Sir Thomas (b.1850), Edinburgh Town Clerk. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1854-1905) writer of poems such as ‘An Auld Man’s Common Riding’, ‘Hawick Common Riding’, ‘Oor Ain Kaillyaird’ (sent to Robert Murray in Canada), and ‘The Teri Test’, as well as the words for the song ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’. Born in Hawick, he was son of James and brother of J.Y. and Thomas. On leaving school he worked for William Watson’s as a power loom tuner, and spent some time working in Banff and Carlisle. He then became a cashier at Wilson & Glenny’s and was managed there for 25 years. He was an ardent Temperance supporter, being President of the Total Abstinence Society. He was also elder of East Bank Church, Sunday School teacher and President of the local Band of Hope. He was also Masonic Bard (for Lodge 111) and won second prize in a poetry competition for the Burns statue dedication in Dumfries. He married Margaret Douglas Turnbull, who died in 1919, aged 63. Their children included: James Young (b.1877), who also composed local poetry, and wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Archaeological Society Transactions; and Helen Rae (b.1881). He died at 13 Beaconsfield Terrace and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where his refurbished gravestone was unveiled at a special ceremony in 2005. Robert R. (1856–1938) son of cabinet-maker John, he moved into the hosiery trade, setting up Hunter & Co., Abbostford Mills, Galashiels, along with his brother George and partner Thomas Ovens. He later established Inverteviot, Hawick. Hunter Terrace was named after him. Steven (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Stevin Huntar’ in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed right after James, who was presumably related. Thomas (16th C.) listed as ‘Hountar’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). Thomas (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere Thomas (17th C.) brother of John. In 1690 the pair were joint tenants of part of Wiltonburn farm. Thomas (d.c.1725) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as tenant in ‘Langtoune’ in 1697 and tenant in Dimpleknowe in 1709. He was tenant in the eastern half of the farms of Whitfield from about 1717 to 1728, with the tenants at the end of that time being his widow and son Robert. He could be the Thomas recorded in a ‘lybell’ in Selkirk in 1719. He married Helen Shortreed in 1692 and their children included: John (b.1697); Robert (b.1701), who farmed with him at Whitfield; Beatrice (or ‘Betrech’, b.1703); James (b.1706), later in Carterhaugh; Thomas (b.1709); and Thomas (again, b.1713). Perhaps the same Thomas was living at Harden in 1716 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Thomas (b.1777/8) from Glenholm in Peeblesshire, he was a farm worker at Branxholme. In 1841 he was a servant at Branxholme Park and in 1851 he was a house servant at Branxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Janet and Grizel (or Grace). Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’ (b.1789) born in Ancrum Parish, son of John. He was a farm labourer around Hawick and then farmer himself. He had several fields up the Loan and also kept cows. In 1815 he married Margaret Dodds, and they lived at Alton, then Haysike (where they were in 1841 and 1851), as well as Chesters, before moving to Drumlanrig Place (by 1861). Their children were: John (b.1817), who went to Australia; Robert (b.1819), grocer; James, commission agent (1821–92); Margaret (b.1823), who married Alexander Purdom; Mary (b.1825), who married tailor Robert Martin; Agnes (b.1828), who married clogger John Jackson; and Jeanie (b.1830), whose husband Elliott Cowan carried on the farming activities of his father-in-law. He was grandfather of local poet Robert and photographer J.Y. The meaning of his nickname is now obscure. Thomas (b.1799/1800) from Earlston, he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, and in 1851 at Slitrig Cottage. His wife was Mary, and their children included Magdalen, Elizabeth, Margaret, John and Thomas. Sir Thomas (1850–1919) native of Hawick, son of Robert the grocer and cousin of Robert the poet and J.Y. He was educated for a while by J.A.H. Murray, and trained under Thomas Purdom, the Hawick Town Clerk. He received a first prize in Scots Law at Edinburgh University, became W.S and Notary Public in 1893 and in 1895 became Town Clerk of Edinburgh. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for the county, and heavily involved in the affairs of his local church. Provost William Scott Nichol worked in his offices for a time and he was Callants’ Club guest in 1913. Thomas (19th/20th C.) eldest son of James, brother of Robert (the local poet) and John Young. He was hosiery manufacturer with Hunter & Young of Commercial Road. The firm operated from about 1885 until 1914. He married a Miss Coutts of Selkirk. Their sons were James Young, who worked with the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh and William Coutts, who farmed near Ancrum and married Isabella, daughter of George Davidson. Thomas (19th/20th C.) commission agent, known for his geniality, who lived at 9

Carnarvon Street. He married Beatrice Hunter, daughter of commission agent James. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Johnson in 1767. Widow (17th/18th C.) see Helen Hunter. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Huntare’ among a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. William (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinswood in a rental roll of 1541. Elizabeth Hunter was one of the tenants at Mervinslaw and hence probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. Alexander and John were joint tenants, but his name occurs first, suggesting he may have been the senior one. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as coitioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Will Hunter’. William (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston Rev. William (1657–1736) minister at Lilliesleaf. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1694 and was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1695. He was a friend of Thomas Boston, who he sometimes assisted at communions. He was termed one of the ‘twelve apostles’ for being one of a group of a dozen ministers who gave a petition to the General Assembly in 1721 against an Act that had condemned ‘the Marrow of Modern Divinity’. He was referred to as ‘of Union Hall’, since he acquired lands there (part of the Linthill estate in Lilliesleaf Parish). It was probably because of him that a dissenting petition, presented to the General Assembly in 1732, was signed at Raperlaw. He married Alison, daughter of James Hogg, minister of Carnock, and later married Margaret Potts. His children included: Alison, Hogg, minister of Carnock, and later married Raperlaw. He married Alison, daughter of James to the General Assembly in 1732, was signed at cause of him that a dissenting petition, presented was approved to be added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire; in 1788 he is stated to be about to be enrolled on the list of Roxburghshire voters, but was already deceased, with his heir living abroad at that time. He married Margaret Edgar (who died in 1792) and their children included: Col. Edgar, who inherited Linthill; William; and 2 daughters. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Wait and their children included: Walter (b.1784); and Agnes (b.1786). William (b.c.1780) servant to Mr. Thomson at Billerwell according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in hokirk Parish. William (1836–1920) hedger at Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of George (an agricultural labourer in Melrose Parish) and Alison Cockburn and was born in Launder Parish. He later moved to Hawick, where he was a park-keeper and lived at 14 Linden Terrace. He married Margaret Paxton, daughter of a cabinet-maker in Nairn. Their children were: Margaret (b.1869); Alison Isabella (b.1873); William (1874–95); Mary Jane (‘Jean’, b.1877); and Alexander (1882–1952), who married Catherine Elliot. Sir William Wilson (1840–1900) possibly born in Hawick or Denholm, he was son of Andrew G. and Isabella Wilson and grandson of William Wilson, manufacturer. He was educated in Glasgow, graduating from the University in 1860. He led the open competition for the Indian Civil Service in 1861 and went out to Bengal in 1862. He was author of several books on the history of India, beginning with ‘The Annals of Rural Bengal’ (1868), which ran to 6 editions. He also wrote ‘A Comparative Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia’ (1868) and ‘Orissa’ (1872). He wrote an influential government report on Indian Muslims in 1871 and was selected to lead a statistical survey of the whole of India, ‘The Imperial Gazetteer’, on which he worked for 12 years. Additionally the report of the Commission in Education, over which he presided, revolutionised education in India. He served as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1886 and retired from active service in 1887 (when he was knighted). He then lived in Edinburgh and Oxford, where he devoted himself to working on a history of India, and contributed a weekly article on Indian affairs for the Times. He wrote several other books, including short biographies on ‘The Rulers of India’ (1875), ‘Bombay, 1885 to 1890’ (1892), ‘The Old Missionary’ (1895) and ‘The Thackerays in India’ (1897). He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Oxford and Cambridge. In 1863 he married

Hunter an Young’s

Jessie Murray and they had 2 sons. He died of influenza, having only managed to publish one volume of his planned history (with one more following posthumously). He was buried in Cumnor, near Oxford. William John ‘Big Billy’ (1934–2016) Hawick and Scotland rugby player, playing as a lock. He played rugby at the High School, then the P.S.A. and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. in 1952 and eventually became team Captain. He was a regular member of the South of Scotland side and received the first of his 7 Scotland caps in 1964. He also played for the Barbarians. He worked at the skinyards and was manager at Hawick Abbatoir, before setting up his own boarding and breeding kennels. He also played golf and showed prize-winning canaries. He married Helen and had children Alan, Derek and Stuart. William ‘Billy’ (1946–2022) son of Tom and Ina Cooper, he was educated at Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He worked at Pringle’s, mostly in the work-study department. His aptitude for figures also led him to a side-job as a bookmaker, working alongside Ian Laidlaw, Iain Logan, Richie Thomson and Angus McKechnie at the greyhounds, flapping meetings, Kelso and elsewhere. Along with Iain Logan, he ran the Wee Shop on Weensland Road for 13 years, retiring in 2016. He was a member of the Burns Club and latterly the Border Club. He married Doreen and adopted Steven (and artist in Dal- las, Texas) and Sharon (who took over the Wee Shop). He is remembered for his hospitality, love of travel and cheerful disposition (formerly written ‘Huntar’ and ‘Huntaire’).

Hunter an Young’s (hun’-ur-an-yunz) n. hosiery manufacturing firm of Thomas Hunter and William Young, operating on Commercial Road from about 1885 until around 1914. Their factory was in a building at 22 Commercial Road. The building was afterwards occupied by Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1922–25 and Wilglen Hosiery Ltd. from 1925 until the 1930s. The building was L-shaped, and the main part was used by the Hawick Scouts as their headquarters. The part used by the Scouts was demolished in 2000, with the part at the back left standing.

Hunter Holes (hun’-ur-hölz) n. area near the head of the Dirthope Burn in the upper Borth- wick valley, on the north-eastern side of Crib Law. Now part of Craik Forest, a bike trail goes through the area.

the Hunter Lounge (thu-hun’-ur-lownj) n. part of the Burns Club, named after Tom Hunter, who was Secretary for 19 years.
Dodd in the 17th century, and seems likely to correspond to the ‘Gledstone’s Lands’ that were once part of the Barony of Scraesburgh (which was an old name for Hunthill), mentioned as properties of the Gledstains in the 15th and 16th centuries. In 1676 Abraham Gledstains of Hunthill was served heir to these lands of his grandfather Walter Gledstains of Dod; at that point they were described being in the Abbacy of Jedburgh and Parish of Cavers. There is an inventory from 1775 in the papers of the Douglasses of Cavers. In 1788 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £50. ‘Hunthill, formerly Scott of Horselyhill’s’ is recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls among the properties of George Douglas of Cavers, when it was valued at £50. Perhaps the same Hunthill (or part of it) was included in a valuation of the lands of Elliott of Stobs in 1779 and 1811.

Hunthill (hun’-hil) n. Former name for lands that were part of Acreknowe farm. In 1788 the ‘Remainder of Acreknow, Huntlaw and Abbot’s-acre’ were valued at £151 2s 11d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the ‘Remainder of Acre-know, Huntlaw, and Abbot-acre’ were owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs and still valued at £151. It is possible this is the same as part of the lands of Huntlaw near Jedburgh.

huntigowk (hun’-ee-gowk, hunt-ee-gowk, hunt-thu-gowk) n. An April Fool trick, fool’s errand, to ‘make someone huntigowk’ is to play an April Fool’s trick on them – ‘First an’ saicont o’ April, Hunt the gowk another mile’ [GW] (additionally spelled ‘huntie gowk’, hunt-the-gowk, ‘hunty gowk’, etc.; also hundie-gowk).

Huntingdon (hun-ting-din) n. Alexander (12th/13th C.) granted the land called ‘Schotteschales’ (probably Satchells) in Lilliesleaf Parish in the period 1202–07. The grant was by the Bishop of Glasgow for his homage and service, including that of his father.

Huntknow (hun’-now) n. Former farm that was once part of Bonjedward estate, listed in 1707. In 1678 it is recorded in Bedrule Parish, owned by Andrew Ker of Wells and valued at £66 13s 4d (plus teinds). It was still recorded this way in 1788 (and continued in 1811), when owned by William Elliot of Wells.

Huntlaw (hun’-law, hunt-law) n. Farm on the B6359, just west of Hassendean and about 5 miles north of Hawick. In about the 1180s one ploughgate of land here was granted by King William to Paisley Priory; the land had previously been held by Richard the Chaplain and Walter Stewart, son of Alan. This land was still confirmed to Paisley Priory by James II in 1451/2. In 1643 the lands were listed as part of Hassendean Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by ‘Martin . . . of Huntlaw’, with the surname not listed. A 10-shilling land there was owned by Rev. Alexander Forrest, minister of Hassendean, and inherited by his son William in 1665. Alexander Forrest paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678. Adam Inglis was living there in 1682. In 1690 Huntlaw became part of Minto Parish, after Hassendean was suppressed. James Wilson was recorded there in 1694. James Cairns was there in 1765. James Blyth was a labourer there in 1801. It was formerly one of the homes of the Dicksons. In 1811 it was owned by the heirs of Archibald Dickson and valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas Drawhill was farmer there in the 1860s (also ‘Houndlaw’, ‘Huntla’ and other variants in earlier documents).

Huntlaw (hun’-law) n. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. Her name appears on the female servant roll as ‘Huntla’.

Hunt Law (hun’-law) n. Small hill to the west of Commonside farm, off the right-hand side of the A7 (travelling from Hawick). It reaches a height of 296 m. Running from here to Dryden, to the south, is a linear earthwork, stretching about 3/4 of a mile. It seems similar to the nearby Catrail. It was probably a boundary ditch for lands lying between the Back and Dryden Burns. It is possible that this area is associated with the lands of ‘Huntliehassoun’, which are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century.

Huntly (hun’t-lee) n. Area west of Wolf Rig, consisting of Huntly Rig, Outer Huntly (also called Over Huntly), Inner Huntly, etc. Although formally part of Yarrow Parish, the residents there were historically often members of Ashkirk Kirk. Robert ‘de Huntelegh’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and may have been associated. The farm there was owned by the King from at least 1456. In 1478 it was leased to John, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1494/5. Lands there remained Crown property until at least 1541. Michael Scott of Aikwood was tenant of half the lands there in 1541, the other half being occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, together paying £22. It was burned by the English in 1543, and at that time was a property of the Laird of Buccleuch. Part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1581/2 when a band of Nixons and others stole 6 cows from there. It was an estate possessed by the Scotts in the 16th century and earlier part of the 17th century. William Scott and James Telfer are recorded there in 1579 when there was a dispute with neighbouring tenant in Hutlerburn, who took a horse from there, claiming it was pastured over the march dyke. Scott of Satchells says that Outer Huntly was held by Robert Scott of Langhope for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was valued at £22 when included among lands whose superiority was held by the Earl of Home. John Scott of Huntly succeeded his father James in 1638, and Walter Scott of Huntly is recorded in 1644. A list of houses in Selkirkshire compiled in about 1680 gives ‘Innr Huntlie, southward of which about two miles lies Outer Huntlie’. A Laidlaw was herd there in 1715 and Robert Fletcher was tenant in 1717. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 and when ‘Outer Huntlie’ was surveyed in 1718. However part was held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. In 1802 Outer Huntly was valued at £313 and Inner Huntly at £14, when they were part of the Buccleuch estates; Hugh Scott of Harden also paid tax on £126 for his part of Inner Huntly. Robert Grieve was there in the 1860s and 70s – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (it is recorded in the late 12th century as ‘Huntleie’ and later often spelled ‘Huntlee’ or ‘Huntlie’; it is ‘Huntlee’ in 1456, ‘Huntle’ in 1471, ‘Huntlee’ in 1477 and 1541, ‘Huntlie’ in 1581/2, ‘Huntley’ and ‘Hundley’ in 1608, ‘Huntlie’ in 1621 and ‘Huntlies’ in 1663; it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 maps as ‘Huntlee’ and ‘Huntly’, and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Huntly’).

Huntly

Huntly (hunt-lee) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Little Cote who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. He may be the Adam whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isabel (b.1695), Margaret (b.1700), Margaret (again, b.1702) and Marion (b.1705). Isobel (b.1708) and Bessie (b.1710) may also be his children. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 and 1723 he was living at Ormiston. He probably married Marion Haddon in 1713. His children included Jane (b.1714), Adam (b.1715), Isobel (b.1717), Walter (b.1720) and William (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) recorded in 1746 when he was paid ‘for going two rounds to the country in quest of baggage horses to the military’. This was during a period where soldiers were billeted in Hawick. He was probably a carter, and likely an ancestor of the later carter Adam. He may be the Adam who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (18th/19th C.) carter whose cart doubled as the Steward’s stand at the Common Riding Races. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1720. He probably married Bessie Nichol in Cavers in 1706. Their children included: Isabel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); William (b.1712); James (b.1715); James (again, b.1717); and Bessie (b.1720) John (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Langlands in 1724. In that year he witnessed baptisms for James Ormiston and Gideon Turnbull (who also witnessed baptisms for each other). Also in 1724 he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Margaret Huntly (who was probably related to him). In 1721 in Cavers he married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Adam (b.1722); and Margaret (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John and Walter Scott. It is possible he is the same John who was previously married to Bessie Nichol. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (13th C.) recorded as being ‘de Hanteleye’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a ‘vesica’ with interlacing and the name ‘S’ROBERTI DE HVNTO-LET’. His lands were probably either at Huntly, north of Ashkirk, or at Hundalee, south of Jedburgh. Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Turnbull and their children included: Isobel (b.1679); Robert (b.1681); and John (b.1685). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter and Robert Scott. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to Walter who was also listed there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison. Probably the same Robert witnessed a baptism for Robert Wilson and Janet Huntly (perhaps his daughter). He is probably the Robert whose children included: Helen (b.1693), baptised in Hawick; and Margaret (b.1695), Robert (b.1697), Marion (b.1699) and Janet (b.1701), baptised in Cavers. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as ‘servitor to Mr Cunningham’ in 1712 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Crozier (weaver in Clarilaw). Probably the same
Robert witnessed a baptism for smith Thomas and Bessie Huntly (one of whom was surely related to him) in 1723. Possibly the same Robert witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Hardie in 1725. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1713 for William Bulloch, in 1714 for John Little, in 1720 for carrier James Henderson, and in 1743 for carrier William Gledstains. He may be the ‘Tho: hontlie’ who witnessed a baptism for John Hendry in Wilton in 1721. He married Bessie Huntly in 1709, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. Their children were: Robert (b.1710); Adam (b.1711); Helen (b.1714); John (b.1715); Janet (b.1718); Robert (again, b.1720); Thomas (b.1723); Bessie (b.1726); and Thomas (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1711 were carrier James Simpson and flesher Thomas Waugh, in 1714 were Walter Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1720 were merchants Michael Scott and Robert Robson, in 1723 were weaver William Scott and Robert Huntly (who was surely related), and in 1729 were William Tudhope and Walter Paisley. Thomas (b.1693/4) tenant in Closses. He was servant to carrier Robert Robson in 1715 and then spent 35 years as tenant in Closses, ending in 1764. He was a widower living in Newbigging in 1767 when he gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common. Thomas (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Mary (or ‘Marrion’) Thomson in 1759 and their children included Thomas (b.1760), Agnes (b.1762), James (b.1764), Robert (b.1767) and Adam (b.1771). The witnesses in 1760 and 1762 were the whole congregation. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for cabinetmaker George Scott in 1776. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Denholm, recorded in 1781 and 1785. His children, baptised in cavers Parish, probably included Janet (b.1781), Nelly (b.1782), Elspeth (b.1785) and Nelly (again, b.1790). Walter (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1717 and 1723. He is probably the William who married Margaret Blyth in Cavers in 1709. His children included: Bessie (b.1710); Marion (b.1712); Adam (b.1714); Margaret (b.1717); Helen (b.1720); Ann (b.1723); and Janet (b.1729). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dryden in Ashkir Parish, recorded as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a greyhound in 1797 (also written ‘Hundly’, ‘Huntea’, ‘Huntley’, ‘Huntlie’ and variants).

Huntlyburn (hunte-lee-burn) n. house south-west of Melrose, which was called Toftfield until bought and improved by Sir Walter Scott in 1817. Part of the estate was used to build the Borders General Hospital in the late 1980s.

Huntly burn (hunte-lee-burn) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, whose location is unclear, recorded as ‘Huntlawburn’ in 1538 and 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglases to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying the farm at that time. It may have been close to Blackburn, which was also listed, it is possible that it is Huntlaw Burn.

Huntly Covert (hunte-lee-kövur) n. plantation wrapping around Huntly Rig. There is a triangulation pillar to the north-east of there, reaching a height of 353 m.

Huntly Hill (hunte-lee-hil) n. hill between Huntly Rig and Inner Huntly, with Hutlerburn Loch to the south. It reaches a height of 352 m. A hill to the east, sometimes called Huntly Covert, contains a triangulation pillar.

Huntlyhill (hunte-lee-hil) n. former farm in the Rule valley, once part of the Wells estate. It may have been the same as ‘Rulewood’. In 1615 the Stewart of Traquair complained about Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and others not removing themselves from his lands there, and they were denounced as rebels. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused a large group of Turnbulls of cutting down a large quantity of timber from his lands there, taking away 24 horse-loads. John Murray is recorded as farmer there in 1797 (also written ‘Huntliehill’, it is ‘Huntlethill’ in 1797).

Hunwick (hun-wik) n. village in County Durham, about 10 miles south-west of Durham.

hurchin (hur-chin) n., arch. a hedgehog – ‘...in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head rise like the birses of a hurcheon’ [LHTB], ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi’ girming joye’ [JTe], ‘But were a’ the hale world to stick To their hurchin hides, I ween The liberal soul wad be richer far Wi’ a heart baith kind an’ clean’ [FL] (from Middle English).

hurdies (hur-deez) n., pl., poet. the buttocks, haunches – ‘But tho’ I get my hurdies whankan, An’ wi’ the hare-brain’d core be rankit hurdles

...’[JR], ‘Provide me lasses (muckle blunt ’twill save ye) Wi’ taper waist, tight leg, an’ weel-turn’d hurdles’ [JoHa], ‘We’re walth o’ Tweeds and hamilt spun, To hap oor hurdles frae the blast, man’ [JoHa], ‘Fegs, my lads, I daurna tell her That fair Emma is the cause, Lest she should come owre my hurdles For transgressin’ sae the laws’ [TCh], ‘Sae Wull sat crooched wi’ his hurdles chilled, His heid wi’ the black forebodin’ filled ... ’[WL], ‘Auld Warlock Hermitage There on the haugh. Sits square on his hurdles And gies a bit laugh’ [DH].

hurdles (hur-dulz) n. there were formerly hurdles races at the Common Riding. For example, in 1875, races are recorded on both the Friday and the Saturday.

hurker (hur-kur) n., arch. a wheel-guard on a cart – ‘Hurker. A semicircular piece of iron, put on an axle-tree, inside of the wheel, for preventing friction on cart-body, Roxburgh’ [JoJ].

hurkle (hur-kul) v., poet. to huddle, crouch, crouch in submission – ‘...Till sneecs did jingle, and shutters did crash, Around the queer hurklin’ bodie’ [JoHa], ‘...thou hest causet thae til hurkle doon asunder me ...’ [HSR].

hurkle-backit (hur-kul-baw-ke’), -ki’ adj., arch. having hunched shoulders, hunch-baked.

Hurklebuss (hur-kul-bus) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Hurkle Rig (hur-kul-rig) n. ridge just north of Redfordgreen, reaching a height of 371 m.

Hurklewunter Knowe (hur-kul-wun-turn-now) n. hill in south-eastern Liddesdale, at the southern end of Larriston Fells and reaching a height of 442 m. There may be a connection with the southern end of Larriston Fells and reaching a height of 371 m.

Hush

Hush (hush) n. David ‘Hushie’ (1961/2–) ‘Hushie’ local binnman, known for his many sporting achievements. He played cricket for Hawick & Wilton, rugby for the Wanderers, the Harlequins and the Greens, football for the Waverley (with a short stint at Hawick Royal Albert), and has had success on the professional running circuit. He once filled in for the Y.M. on the same day as playing for the Waverley.

hushaba (hu-shu-baw) interj., arch. used for lulling a baby to sleep – ‘Now hushaba, my little pet, Ye’ve a’ the world can gi’e . . .’ [JT].

Hussa (hu-sa) n. (6th C.) King of Bernicia (which probably included Hawick) for a few years until about 593. He was the last son of the 6 sons of Æthelric to rule the kingdom.

hussle (hu-sul) v., arch. to shrug the shoulders, wriggle the shoulders to relieve an itch – ‘Then hussled up his shoulders baith, And hastened to the door O’ [HSR], ‘A met . . . a shauchlin, husslin-shoodert skeibult wui a toozy, taaty heed’ [ECS] (also husslie: cf. hirsie).

hut (hu) pp. hit – ‘it looks like a bomb’s hut eet’, ‘hei got hut ower the heid’, n. a hit (cf. the alternative hat and the past participle form hutten).

the Hut (thu-hu) n. building at St. Leonards farm, where the Cornet and his supporters are entertained on the Thursday night, the Thursday morning and the Friday morning. There are also less formal Huts on the other mornings of Common Riding week, but the Friday morning Hut is the main event. On each occasion there is a series of songs and toast and good-natured male camaraderie. Tickets for the Friday event (available in limited numbers to non-riders) are always highly sought after. After the Hut there is the traditional singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse. The Friday morning ‘Hut’ is where the Curds and Cream repast occurs, ordered from a local farmhouse at the Thursday evening Chase the week before. This is recorded as being held at Whitchesters in 1846, Newmill on Slitrig in 1856, Crumhaughhill in 1860, the ‘Herd’s House’ 1872–76, Pilmuir 1882, St. Leonard’s 1883–1900, Pilmuir 1901–11 and at St. Leonards from 1912 until now. In earlier times a marquee was erected at St. Leonard’s. The building itself was constructed at St. Leonard’s in 1924 (following a wet Common Riding the previous year, when the tent was blown away!) and extended in 1964. Exactly when the full schedule of entertainment became a feature of these events is unclear, but now tickets are a highly sought after commodity. It usually for many people to listen outside to the entertainment – ‘It’s a’ happenin again, the great occasion is here but it a’ started this morning wi that ‘tremendous grand Hut’’ [GM], ‘The world hez mony wonderful venues, the Hollywood Bowl, the Sydney Opera House, the Albert Hall in London, the Volunteer Hall in Galashiels but nane o thum can touch the Hut’ [IWL], ‘And as long as St. Leonard’s Hut shall stand That trusty valour through the land Shall tell the story proud and grand Of Hawick on the Border’ [IWL], ‘Unlike other farm sheds, the Hut is not for agricultural purposes’ [BEL].

hutch (huch) n., arch. an embankment built to hinder water from washing away the soil (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hutcher’s Riverside (hu-churz-ri-vur-sud) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed in 1779, with a value of £1 16s 6d, and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1780 it was said to belong to Thomas Kennedy (although also said to be included in the lands of Deanfoot liferented to Robert Trotter), with a rent of 10s.

Hutchin Brae (hu-chin-bræ) n. name given to an area to the east of old Cavers house, and west of West Middle, on a side road leading to the south.

Hutchison (hu-chee-sin) n. Thomas (17th C.) carrier on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Thomas Oliver ‘Tom’ (1931–98) educated at Hawick High School, he was in the Border Schoolboys team in 1949. He studied science at St. Andrews University. He joined I.C.I., becoming a manager of the plastics division, and joining the Board of Directors in 1985. He was President of the Association of Plastics Manufacturers in Europe 1980–82, Deputy-Governor of the Bank of Scotland, Deputy Chairman of Cadbury Schweppes and on several other boards. His wife was Frances and they had 3 sons. He lived in the London area and had a house in Normandy, but stayed close to his Scottish roots (also ‘Hutchisone’).

huther (hu-thur) v., arch. to heap together, over-clothe – ‘The bairn’s fair hudder’t wi’ claes’ [GW] (also spelled ‘hudder’; cf. huddar).

Hutlerburn (hu-lur-burn) n. farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley about a mile east of Ettrickbridge (it is ‘Huthralburne’ in 1579 and ‘Hottrolburn’ in c.1680; it is marked ‘Hottrelburn’ on one of Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘Hontyr’ on
Hutton

His surname is listed as ‘Hutson’. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included: John (b.1645); and Helen (b.1653). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Grieve in Eilrig. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Dalgleish in Kirkton in 1717. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1775 he married Janet Black and their children included: James (b.1776); James (again, 1777–81); Thomas (1779–81); and Janet (b.1781), who probably married Adam Kersel in Kirkton. The witnesses in 1777 and 1781 were the whole congregation. Perhaps the same James was in Ormiston in 1784 when his son James was baptised in cavers Parish. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander, who was also listed there, was surely related. John (b.1819/20) from Ewes, he was a master clogger at 4 Howegate in 1861. His wife was Agnes and they have a son Alexander; his wife’s children from a previous marriage were Jane and RobertAnn Laurie. John Elliot ‘Elliot’ (1942/3– ) son of butcher Billy. He was Cornet in 1968, riding his thoroughbred ‘Shish Kebab’. In 2018 he was Jubilee Cornet. Ninian (b.c.1780) son of George, he was listed at Newhouses on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. His brother Thomas was also listed there in 1801. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name was written ‘Houton’, and he was surely related to Adam, who was also listed there. Robert ‘Hobby Hutton’ (18th C.) travelling pedlar who lived at Sundhope in the Hermitage valley. As described in ‘ Beauties of the Border’, he was an eccentric and irascible character, who would board with others when travelling, but refuse to stay in the same house as any other traveller, and would also fly into a rage when offered potatoes. He could be the Robert recorded in Sundhope in 1748. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Borthbrae parkhead’ in 1757. His children included Helen (b.1755), Henry (b.1757) and Thomas (b.1759). Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer at Peel in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1836. He is probably the shepherd at Peel called Hutton from whom William Oliver of Langraw collected many Border ballads. Ronald son of Jimmy and nephew of Billy, he attended Wilton and the High School, he worked in the family butcher’s shops on the Howegate and in Bourtree Place. He retired in 2003. In 1970 he married Liz Telfer and hutten (hu’t-in) pp. hit – ‘hei was hutten wi a muckle stane’, ‘...for thou hest hutten a’ mine enemies apoon the cheikbane’ [HSR].

Hutton (hu’t-in) n. Adam (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His surname was written ‘Houitone’, and must have been closely related to Robert, who was also listed in the same place. It is unclear if the modern equivalent of his name was ‘Hutton’, ‘Howiston’, ‘Whutton’, or something else. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch in 1761 and they had twins Isobel and Elizabeth (b.1762). The witnesses were Walter Scott, Commonside and Thomas Bynun, Teindside. Alasdair, O.B.E. (??– ) Conservative Member of the European Parliament for South of Scotland 1979–89. He was on the Scottish Borders Council since 2002 for Kelso Central, where he has been Convenor. He is also known as a broadcaster and has been the narrator for the Edinburgh Military Tattoo for many years. He reads about John Buchan on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Alexander (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed there, was surely related. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He married Christian Simpson in 1706 and their children included: Andrew (b.1707); and Helen (b.1709). Note that he is (presumably incorrectly) ‘Adam’ in one baptismal record. Perhaps the same Alexander had a child Jean baptised in Wilton Parish in 1694. George (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Apple-tree-Hall’ in 1811 when he was on the subscription list for Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso. Rev. George (d.c.1868) born at Camieston in Howden Parish. His parents were members of the Secession Kirk in Lilliesleaf. He was educated at Edinburgh University and then taught at several schools. He entered the Divinity Hall of the Secession Church in 1826 and in 1831 he was inducted as the 3rd minister at the Anti-Burgher Kirk of Linlithgow, East. He retired in 1863 because of ill-health and moved to Greenock for the last 5 years of his life. He married twice, having 3 sons and 1 daughter. George Sime (1851–1919) born in Newcastle, he was a tweed manufacturer in Selkirk. He married Alice Holt (b.1858) and their daughter Edith Alice (1894–1974) married Robert Scott-Noble. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kerhope, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

their children are Brian and Jacqueline. The couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Courthill according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was at Newhouses and listed as son of George; his brother Ninian was also listed there. Probably the same Thomas married Margaret Clerk in Wilton in 1802 and had children George (b.1803), Jessie (b.1804) and Margaret (b.1806), all baptised in St. Boswells Parish. William (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He could be the same as ‘Willie’ who is recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, signed in Hawick in 1574; he was left ‘threttie or fourtie pundis, as it sall pleas to his said spous and vther freindis, and he to serve his wyf befoir ony vtheris’. William (d.c.1683) shepherd in ‘Tuishope’ in 1683 when his will was recorder in Peebles Commissariot. This could have been Twislehope. William (b.1794/5) shepherd at Thorlieshope in 1861. He was Acting Father to Robert Pringle in 1965. His sons Billy and Elliot continued the family butcher’s business (formerly written ‘Hutoun’).

Hutton-Riddell see Riddell

Hutton’s (hu’n-inz) n. butchers at 16 Howegate and for a while also at 18 Bourtree Place, with its meat paste a specialty. The business was started by William Hutton at No. 6 Howegate, sometime before 1881. William’s son John continued the business and then his son Billy, who moved it to No. 16. This Billy’s wife Peggy came up with the meat paste recipe. Their sons Billy and Elliot ran the business until selling it to Grant Archibald in 2006. It became Hawick’s oldest established butchers, but closed in 2023.

huv (huv) v. have – ‘huv ee got ony left?’, ‘A huv not!’ (hev and hiv are also used).

Hyndhaughheid

Hyndhaughhead, former fortified house in Southdean Parish in the upper Jed valley, roughly between Falside and Whiteside. It was situated on the south side of the Jed Water, and there are still clear remains there. The tower was 6.2 m by 4.3 m and had an enclosure to the south-east. There are also signs of a smaller building to the east, and another larger one to the north (presumably part of the farm). To the north-east of the tower are also the remains of an old kiln. It was one of the towers burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513, specifically a force including Nicholas Harrington, Nicholas Ridley, Thomas Middleton and George Skelton. It was valued at 22 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. Margaret Oliver and her son Gilbert were there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. Dand and Adam Oliver from there were among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544 (but may have switched sides at the Battle of Ancrum Moor). This may explain why it was burned (again) in 1544, by a forced led by ‘Mr. Clefforth and Besforth’. David Oliver of ‘Hyndheuchheid’ is recorded in 1557 and David ‘in Hynhanchheid’ in 1597 was one of the Oliver chiefs. James Oliver was the tenant there in 1669, and at the time of the Hearth Tax (1690s) it was occupied by Lady Shaw (although who she might be is unclear). There were also Kers there in the late 17th century. The farm appears to have been abandoned by the mid-19th century. An area to the west contained rig and furrow, as well as old stock enclosures and sheep-folds, but all have been destroyed by cultivation. Note that Slack’s Tower and Clesslee Tower were quite close by (it is ‘Hyndhalghheed’ in 1513, ‘Hyndhaughheid’ in 1538, ‘Hyndhaucheid’ in 1538, ‘Hyndhauchheid’ in 1541, ‘Hyndawghheid’ and ‘Hyndrawghheid’ in 1544, ‘Hynochheid’ in 1669 and ‘Hyndhaughhead’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Hyndheucheheid’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but on the wrong side of the Jed, and is ‘Hyndhaughhead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hymers (hymers) n. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Edward (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when his son George was on the ballot for the Militia at Limekiln in Hobkirk Parish. Edward (b.1802/3) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish in the 1860s. He was also at Billerwell in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming 272 acres at Ashtrees, and employing 7 people. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Helen (who married Robert Cavers) and probably Mary (who married Andrew Ormiston). His name was recorded as ‘Himners in 1799. It is possible he is the George born in 1782 in Jedburgh. William (18th/19th C.) from St. John Lee in Northumberland, he moved to Hobkirk Parish and lived for a while at Limekilnedge and later moved to Jedburgh. His first wife was Hannah and his second wife was Eleanor Plummer, from Southdean Parish. Their children included: Mary (b.1800); Edward (b.1802), the 1st son; Robert (b.1803); Anthony (b.1805); William (b.1808), 4th son; and Jane (b.1810).

Hyndhope

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hind-hop) n. farm in the Ettrick valley roughly opposite Singlie, with ‘Old Hyndhope’ further uphill to the south. It was one of the 3steadings of Redford held by the Crown in the 5th century and feued to Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 Walter Scott in Haining claimed the tenancy, paying £15 13s 4d yearly. 1644 Katherine Kendall, widow of John Young, brought a case before parliament to force Walter Scott of Huntly to eject him from the lands and provide her with the duties of this farm. Several men from there were declared rebels in 1619 for cutting wood on Scott of Satchells lands at Doddhead. It became the property of Rev. Alexander Cunningham about the 1660s, and was sold to James Mercer of Scotsbank around the 1720s. Thomas Elliot farmed there in the mid-19th century and Gideon Scott in the 1860s (also spelled ‘Hindhope’, it is ‘Hyndhop’ in 1510, ‘Hindhop’ in 1542 and ‘Hindhope’ in c.1680; it is marked ‘Hyndhope’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Hyndhoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, along with the burn, ‘Hyndhoop B.’, and is ‘Hindhope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; there is another farm of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hind-hop) n. former lands in the Barony of Plenderleith, Oxnam Parish. They belonged to Andrew of Rule, passing through his 4 co-heiresses to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1454/5. The Davidsons were tenant farmers here in the 18th and 19th centuries including James, ‘Dandie Dinmont’. There were Halls there in the 18th century. William Oliver was farmer there in the early 19th century and Thomas Elliot later in the 19th century (easily confused with the farm of the same name in the Ettrick valley; written ‘Hindhope’ on modern maps).

Hyndlee (hind-lee) n. farm and hamlet on the ‘Note o the Gate’ road, south of Wolfelee, in the headwaters of the Rule valley. The lands there were an old possession of the Douglases. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. In 1541 the farm was valued at 25s, with half tenanted by George Turnbull in Bilerwell and half by Adam Rutherford in Grange. This could one of the farms tenanted by John Oliver according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. A supposed encounter there between an old shepherd and some of the fairy folk is recounted in ‘The local historian’s table book’ in 1844. The tenant there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, James Davidson, was partly the original for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Dandie Dinmont’ at ‘Charleshope’. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1785–88 and Thomas 1789–91. Walter Johnstone was a servant there in 1799, and in 1801 Thomas Armstrong was a shepherd and George Robson a servant. Andrew Scott was there in 1821. Later the farmer was David Pringle of Torquhan, succeeded in 1889 by Mr. Thornton. The stream that forms the extreme south-eastern portion of the Rule valley is Hyndlee Burn. A cairn called the Hare Cairn once stood near the shepherd’s cottage by the Wheel Causeway (note the pronunciation stresses the first syllable; also spelled ‘Hindylee’, it is already ‘Hyndlee’ in 1538, is ‘Hindy-lee’ in 1539 and 1541 and ‘hyndla’ in 1694; it is ‘Hyndlee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hyslope (hīz-lup) n. Alexander (17th C.) town treasurer at the end of the 17th century (a variant spelling of ‘Hislop’).

Hyrin (hīr-in) n., arch. payment received for being hired – ‘Syne he’ll gether his hirin’ and gae Alang on his roun’…’[WL] (also written ‘hire’ as in English; cf. hirin fair).

hyuck (hyuk) v. to throw, chuck, toss – ‘hyuck cet ower here when ee’re din, wull ee?’ n. a throw (a variant of yuck; see also chuckie).

Hyucker (hyu-kur) n. a big one, particularly a stone – ‘it was a hyucker o a stane’.

I Like Auld Hawick

The song was probably first performed in public at a farewell dinner by Hogg himself in 1879, and first sung at the Colour Bussing by R. Paterson in 1887. It is the only poetical work of Hogg's that is known. The full poem contained 7 verses, but today only the first, second and last verses are usually sung. The tune was rearranged by Adam Grant around 1930, with the publication dedicated to ex-Provost James Renwick.

I Like Auld Hawick the Best (I-lk-awld-hlk-thu-best) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, arranged by Adam Grant (although originally credited to 'M. Rosenberg'). Grant considered this to be his best musical arrangement of a Hawick song. It was published in 1900 and first sung at the Colour Bussing that year by Robert T. Paterson, then at 23 other Colour Bussings before WWII. It has a different chorus for each verse, often confusing the audience. The words may have been influenced by Jeffreys' 'Mary of Argyile'. Ker also wrote a second version of this song, which is never sung. For the last decades of the 20th century and the first decade of the 21st this song was regularly performed by Viv Sharp.

Ilk (ilke) n. place or family, usually in the phrase 'of that Ilk', meaning of the main family line, in direct descent from the original family who took their name from their place of abode. Local examples have included Chisholme of that Ilk, Guidestains of that Ilk, Langlands of that Ilk and Riddell of that Ilk, all these lines being now gone. Slightly further afield we have Rutherford of that Ilk, Glendinning of that Ilk, etc. (generally only used in Scotland; in older charters it is translated from the Latin ‘de codemun’).

the Ill Week (thu-il-week) n. period immediately after the death of Elizabeth I of England in 1603, when there was much looting and burning throughout the Borders. It is also sometimes referred to as the ‘Busy Week’. There was a belief that until the new monarch was proclaimed, the rule of law was suspended, and hence families of the Border (particularly the west marches) deter-dined to settle old scores. Raids were of such an intensity for several days that the period was given its name. There were serious reprisals by King James afterwards, particularly against the Grahams, but also Armstrongs, Croziers, Elliot, Irving, etc.

Ill Will (il-wil) n. nickname for William Airm-strong in the early 16th century.

colloquial English, cf. the more common um).

the Image Gairden (thu-i-meej-gair-din) n.
former name for a private school and its gardens.
It was situated in the Langlands/Sunnyhill area, and can be seen on the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It may have been the same building that was also known as ‘Wilton Cottage’. The school was run by Agnes, daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James Turnbull and her mother, Margaret, and was presumably a school for girls. The name came from the statuettes and carvings in the school grounds. The land there may have previously been owned by ‘Auld Cash’, and then his assistant Francis Ballantyne – ‘The ‘Image Garden’ wi’ some parks, Were soon our decent, honest Clerk’s’ [RDW], ‘Ladylaw, the F.C.
Manse and the Image Garden . . . ’ [V&M].

(im-pew-ri-ee) n. former euphemism for the sin of fornication. Until well into the 18th century ferreting out fornicators was the business of the Kirk Session, who investigated all pieces of parish gossip. Offenders were made to stand on the ‘pillar’ or ‘stool of repentance’, often for three Sundays in a row, sometimes longer. Wealthier parishioners could escape this public exhibition by paying a hefty fine.

Imrie (im-ree) n. Carswell educated at Hawick High School, he worked for Welch’s accountants. He was Cornet in 1966, the first one to be kirked at Burnfoot Church. He acted as Secretary of both the Mosstroopers’ Club and Ex-Cornets and Ex-Acting Fathers Association for 10 years.

Inchbonny Braes (inch-bo-nee-braiz) n. area on the banks of the Jed Water, only a few hundred yards south of Jedburgh. This is where pioneering incorporation (in-kor-pu-rə-shən) n. an incorporated body, specifically one of the trades guilds given a ‘Seal of Cause’ by the Town Council. In Hawick, like in other towns, their purpose was to regulate trade within the town, improving standards, imposing fines, etc. They had Burgess rights and duties and only Burgesses were allowed to be members of the trades from 1694. Each Trade had specific seats assigned to them in the gallery of St. Mary’s Kirk. They were also officially recognised by the Council (and each appointed 2 councillors from 1739), having jurisdiction over their members and all matters relating to that trade within the Burgh. Their officials were called quartermasters or deacons of trade, and in 1749 it was decided that the quartermasters should be appointed before Michaelmas each year. In 1781 it was fixed by a ruling from the Court of Session that each of the 7 trades would elect 2 quartermasters on the Thursday before the election of the Bailies in October, these men to sit on the Council for the next year, with no one being allowed to serve for more than 2 years successively (and each incorporation being responsible for electing a substitute in the event of the death of a quartermaster). By about 1810 there were about 60 members in total of the town’s incorporations. In 1836 there were 16 weavers, 6 tailors, 17 hammermen, 5 skinners, 7 shoemakers, 6 fleshers and 6 bakers. They also had a monopoly on their trade within the Burgh until about 1846. However, it was possible to trade outside the formal boundaries, e.g. on Buccleuch Street, Slitrig Crescent or Wilton. Members of the trades remained on the Council until it was reorganised in 1861, although by then the organisations were already on the wane. The 7 incorporations in Hawick were the weavers, shoemakers (or cordiners), skinners (and glovers), hammermen, fleshers, tailors and bakers (or baxters). At one point the shoemakers and cordiners may have been separate incorporations, and the status of the merchants is unclear (since they are referred to as an ‘incorporation’ in 1687). It is said that many of the records of the incorporations were carried off in the flood of 1767; however, some minute books of the hammermen, weavers and tailors are preserved in the Museum. Records exist for the trades in Selkirk, Kelso and elsewhere, which were probably similar – ‘There presently are, and shall henceforth continue, seven Incorporations within the said burgh, viz., Weavers, Tailors, Hammermen, Skinners, Fleshers, Shoemakers, and Baxters’ [RW], ‘...the two present baiyleaes of the Burgh of Hawick for themselves and in name and behalfe of the toun counsell and incorporatione thereof ...’ [BR1701].

the Independent Kirk (thu-in-dee-pen-din’-kirk) n. evangelical church that was founded in 1798 after visits to the town by preachers James and Robert Haldane, John Aikman and Rowland Hill. The efforts were continued later by Mr. Patton (later of St. Andrews) and Mr. Arthur (later of Dalkeith). Among the original members were William Thorburn, William Laiddlaw, Peter Taylor, Robert Leithead, Mr. Johnstone and David Dick. They originally met in a barn in the Backbraes and built the Tabernacle and nearby manse on the Kirkwynd in 1805 (with assistance provided by the Haldane brothers). Charles Gray was brought to Hawick as the first and only permanent minister. The congregation rose to about 150, which was the capacity of the Tabernacle. However, it had many difficulties and disappeared entirely in 1813, although it effectively led to the Congregational and Baptist Kirks in Hawick. Charles Gray accepted Baptist principles (like his patrons the Haldane brothers), leading to most of his congregation abandoning him. He subsequently left Hawick, since the number of Baptists was too small to support him. However, some carried on, to form the Hawick Baptist Church later, while others continued to worship as Independents, later becoming the CongregATIONAL Kirk. The Independent Kirk was still recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but with no minister listed. In 1839 it was described that there were only 18 members, who met in a school-room. In Slater’s 1852 directory Rev. William Munro is listed for the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place, separate from the Congregational Chapel on O’Connell Street.

indiction (in-dik-shin) n., arch. a 15 year cycle used as a way of reckoning the year in medieval times, also used to refer to the specific year within the cycle – ‘...the said yeir, month, day, hour, and place that is, Indiction and Pape before specyfit’ [JW1558] (still recorded in Hawick in a sasine of 1558).

Ingles (ing-ulz, -gulz) n. Adam L. ‘Adie’ (1914–1991) optician and jeweller by trade, with shop at the bottom right-hand corner of the Howegate. He was born at 7 Green Terrace, started work with Inglis the joiners, then moved to Innes, Henderson’s stock-room, before joining his father in his Sandbed watchmaker’s shop. He served in the R.A.F. and after the War qualified as an optician and later went into partnership with his nephew Jim. In 1971 he moved to 57 High Street, but in 1974 he set up as an optician at 2 Howegate, where he worked until he retired in 1984. He was Acting Father in 1964 and President of the Callants’ and Mosstroopers’ Clubs, but will always be remembered for his contributions to Hawick music. He had piano lessons as a child and organ lessons from George Smith (organist at St. Cuthbert’s). He was a church organist and choirmaster at St. Margaret’s Kirk from the age of 18, and continued when it merged with Wilton South about 4 years later, remaining until 1959. In that year he became organist for St. George’s West, and moved to the Old Parish in 1961 and in 1969 started a brief period at Trinity, finally moving to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1970. He composed the music for ‘We’ll Follow oor Cornet’, ‘The Callant’, ‘Auld Hawick, My Dreams’, ‘Auld Hawick where I was Born’ and ‘Borthwick Water’ and made new arrangements for many more songs. His work on the 1957 compilation ‘The Hawick Songs’, containing many revised accompaniments and several changes of key, established the versions of most of the popular songs as we know them today. He also wrote songs for other Border town’s festivals. He was accompanist at Common Riding functions for a couple of decades from 1970, was the driving force behind the Callants Club records, and wrote ‘Notes and Comments on the Songs of Hawick’, published from his notes in 1992. He was regular pianist for the Callants’, Mosstroopers’ and 1514 Clubs. For the 1514 Club he instigated the ‘Hawick Sings’ concerts and wrote the music for the Club’s song. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Alexander (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. He could be the Alexander, married to Margaret Elder, whose son Alexander was baptised in Hawick in 1791, with witnesses James Hume and John Elder (although the entry is hard to read). Alexander (1822/3–51) tenant in Blackburn, son of James. He is recorded at Blackburn in 1851, farming 11 arable acres and 1800 acres of moor, with 3 labourers on the farm. His son Alexander died in St. Boswell’s in 1902, aged 50. They are buried in Ettrickfield Cemetery. He also had daughters Isabella (b.c.1846) and Jane (b.c.1850). Alexander (19th C.) Hawick resident. In the 1887 and 1888 business directory, he is described as an artist’s colourman and picture-framer, with premises on the Exchange Arcade. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter Hall (b.1873); George Scott (b.1874), painter in Leicester; Alexander (b.1878), painter-decorator in Hawick; and William Scott Anderson (b.1884), local watercolour artist. Alexander ‘Alex’ (1878–1961) brother of W.S.A. and George, he was born in Hawick. He had a picture-framing business, and also later became a house decorator, based at 10 High Street and then Burlington House, North Bridge Street. His brother William (W.S.A.) also worked for the business. They used to display paintings by other local artists, Tom Scott being the most prominent among them. He retired to Edinburgh after the War. George Scott (1874–1952) son of Alexander and Agnes Scott. He was brother of Alexander and W.S.A. After studying at the Royal College of Art in London he became a painter and lithographer in Leicester. He was Principal of the Leicester College of Art. He had works exhibited at the Royal Academy and the Royal Scottish Academy. He painted a view of Haggishaa, as well as ‘Goldielands and the Teviot from Overhall’, ‘Scotch Fir near Wilton Dean’ and ‘Sunrise near Scarborough’, which are in the Museum. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bowanhill in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1705–94) born in Ewesdale, he was tenant farmer in Millholm in Castleton Parish. When the Duke of Buccleuch took over Millholm he was moved to be tenant of Blackburn. He married Janet Anderson, who died in 1760, aged 50. He secondly married Agnes Brydon, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children included: James (b.1762), who took over as tenant of Blackburn; Elizabeth (b.1765), who married Archibald Scott; Janet (b.1767), who married Thomas Murray; William (b.1769), who married Elizabeth Ballantyne; Alexander (b.1771), who married Margaret McLaren; Agnes Brydon (b.1773); and John (b.1781), who married Isabella Ballantyne. He is buried at Ettrickfield, next to ‘Inglis’ families of Newcastle. James (18th/19th C.) carrier, operating between Hawick and Berwick, according to Pigot’s 1825 directory. James (1760/1–1845) farmer at Blackburn, to the north-west of Newcastle. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still there in 1841. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1816, aged 55. He secondly married Isabella (or ‘Bella’) Oliver, who died in 1872, aged 87. They are buried in Ettrickfield Cemetery, along with 4 of his children, who died in infancy or were stillborn. His son Alexander (b.1822/3) succeeded as farmer at Blackburn, and he also had a daughter Janet (b.c.1827). Mrs. S.A. local artist who made a coloured sketch of a print by James Dalgleish, ‘High Street Hawick 1839’. William (b.1815/6)
born in Lyne Parish, Peeblesshire, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was at Foulage, Peeblesshire, but in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Whaupshaw in the Borthwick valley. Later he may have been shepherd at Priesthaugh. His wife was Agnes Fleming, from Drumelzier. Their children included: James (b.1842); Thomas (b.c.1844); Catherine (b.c.1847); Christian (b.c.1839); Agnes (b.c.1856), who probably married William Bell, who farmed at Langraw; and Jane (b.c.1858).

William (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1853. William Scott Andison ‘W.S.A.’, ‘Wullie’ (1884–c.1950) local artist, son of Alexander and Agnes Scott, brother of Alexander and George. His paintings are usually signed ‘W.S.A.I.’ or sometimes ‘W.I.’ He was an apprentice with Francis Scott, painter and decorator at 26 High Street, later moving to work in his brother Alex’s business. Tom Scott was a major influence on him as a young artist, and one can see similarities in their watercolour styles. He painted many scenes of long gone parts of Hawick, including a picture of the ‘Auld Mid Raw’, about 1880, which is in the Museum, inside of which was found a ‘secret’ painting of Needle Street. He made a well-known sketch of St. Mary’s from the Kirkstye in 1909 and the Museum also has ‘The End of the Wood’. He had 23 paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy. He also worked as a photographer, based on the High Street with his brother Alex and then at Burlington House, 25 North Bridge Street. A bachelor all his days, he lived at 9 Lothian Street, and was said to have a timid nature and delicate constitution. He died at a hospital in Melrose (see also Inglis).

Ingleside (ing-gul-sid) n. villa built on Buccleuch Road around 1903 for Robert L. Mactaggart, designed by J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building.

Inglis (ing-ulz -gulz) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thorbrand and their children included John (b.1642), Janet (b.1644), William (b.1646) and Janet (again, b.1649). His surname is recorded as ‘Inglis’. Adam (17th C.) listed among the deficient of Hassendean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was at Wester Groundestone, ‘Adam Inglis there out of the shire’. He could be the Adam ‘in huntla’ (presumably Huntlaw), married to Margaret Minto, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682, with witnesses Walter Knox and Thomas Wilkie. Alexander (15th C.) from the Manor family, he must have still held some lands near Branxholme. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirkstone and ‘Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branxholme were confirmed to his daughter and heir Katherine, wife of ‘Arnou Gourlan’. He may be the same Alexander ‘de Tarvate’ who witnessed a document for the Douglasses in 1457 and who witnessed a charter in 1475/6. Alexander (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1471, after the resignation of Patrick Hume. However, he appears not to have taken up the office. It is possible he is the same Alexander who became Dean of Dunkeld in 1477 and Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1480. Alexander (15th C.) son and heir of Alexander of West Tarvet. He witnessed the charter of Over Newhall, granted by David Lindsay of the Byres to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1484. In 1487/8 he had a charter for Tarvet and in 1489 had a charter for other lands in Fife, along with his wife Janet Durham. Probably the same Alexander of Tarvet is also recorded as witness to a charter in 1508 and had a grant of lands in 1513. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1791 when his son Alexander was baptised in Hawick. The entry is hard to read, but his wife may have been Margaret Elder, with John Elder as one of the witnesses. Alexander (19th C.) married Mary Miller. Their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1825. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Inglis and their children included: Jane (b.1849); and Alexander (b.1852). Alexander (1877–1964) nephew of John, to whom he was apprenticed. He then became articled to J.P. Alison, rising to an assistant there in 1896. He moved briefly to a firm in Edinburgh, but returned in 1901 when his uncle died and he inherited the joinery business. He developed an ‘Arts & Crafts’ design style. He worked on several major projects as J.P. Alison’s assistant, including the Con Club, Liberal Club and Stiches House. He also designed the Fever Hospital at Burnfoot (1902), cottages on the Cavers estate, the Stewart Memorial in St. Andrew’s Kirk, additions to the Cottage Hospital and the Golf Clubrooms, Newcastleton Hospital (c.1905), Hawick Slaughterhouse (1907), additions to Anderson Sanitorium, Turnbull’s Dyeworks office block (1911), Hawick Swimming Pool (1912) and alterations to Wolf Dee House (1913). He established a building construction course in Hawick, which was taken over by the School Board. In 1950 he became partner with his assistant Charles F.J. Turnbull. He wrote an article for the Transactions on the old Southdean Kirk. He married
Inglis

Jane Miller Cooper. Andrew (b.1806/7) born in Southdean Parish, he was a joiner at Deanbrae Cottages in Cavers Parish. He married Jane Nichol and their children included: John; James; Andrew; and Thomas. William, who was also a joiner at Deanbrae, was probably his brother. His firm may be the A. Inglis & Son who were responsible for joinery at Lyle & Scott’s factory in 1874/5. Andrew (19th/20th C.) resident of Nether Tofts. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Archibald (17th C.) son of Richard, he succeeded his father as minister of Douglas in 1654 and moved to Moffat in 1660. He was commissioned by the Synod of Dumfries to that of Lothian and Tweeddale regarding union. He was also named as a minister who refused to conform to Episcopacy in 1662, although there is no evidence to support this, since he was clearly an Episcopalian minister afterwards. About 1663 he moved to Westerkirk, was translated to Lochmaben in 1667 and then became minister at Ashkirk in 1675. It is unclear whether he served Ashkirk in the period 1679–85, when the previous Presbyterian minister, Robert Cunningham was reinstated. In any case he was moved to the Parishionage of Glasgow in 1685. He became Rector of Glasgow University in 1686, but had to flee at the Revolution in 1689. In 1694 he became Rector of Killybegs and Raphoe in Donegal, Ireland. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 when his daughter Helen was baptised. He is probably the James who married Helen Beattie in Roberton in 1730. James (1723–1806) schoolmaster in Hawick, son of Walter and Margaret Wilson, he was born in Hawick. He was father of Town Clerk James, local prankster ‘Wat’ and Hawick’s postmistress, Joanna. He was Hawick Parish Schoolmaster for a long period. He was master during the flood of 1767, when the school on Slitrig Bank was washed away. In fact he was teacher at ‘the English Schuil’ from 1756 until his death, a period of about 50 years. Apparently before his death and in several years following, his ex-pupils would meet for dinner at the Cross Keys Inn to celebrate his birthday. In 1758 he was paid 3 shillings for teaching a poor boy from Cavers Parish. Complaints about his low salary were responded to with an increase in 1768. He is recorded as serving as postmaster in 1772 and also in 1789, so he must have held this position for at least that period. He also served as Session Clerk, Precentor and Reader for the Parish, as well as Heritor’s Clerk. He was presumably the man who wrote the register of baptisms etc. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for writer (and Town Clerk) John Gledstains (who was his brother-in-law), when he is recorded as ‘English Schoolmaster’; in the same year Gledstains and surgeon James Wilson witnessed a baptism for him, and in 1775 he and James Wilson witnessed a baptism for John Gledstains. He witnessed another baptism for John Gledstains in 1781. In 1767 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Balmer. He was ‘Postmr’ in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism for what appears to be a Hume, and separately (on the same page) ‘Session Clerk’ when he witnessed a baptism for miller John Scott. He was witness for baptisms of 2 children of John Goodfellow and Janet Deans in 1784 and 1786 and for William Jackson and Jamet Miller in 1788 and 1791. He was recorded (by himself!) as Postmaster in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter Wilson and was probably the Postmaster who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk James (his
James Inglis (1793/4–1876) labourer in Newcastle. In 1861 he was on South Hermitage Square. He married Helen Robson, who died in 1873, aged 74. Their children included: Adam (d.1829), Walter (d.1841), Betty (d.1844) and Frances (d.1846), who all died young; James (1824/5–53); and Francis (b.c.1847). They are buried at Ettleton.

He may be the James recorded as grocer in Newcastle in 1835–40 and then labourer in 1841; he was a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory, along with Francis who was also a grocer. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to Thomas, who also subscribed.

James (1802/3–95) mason in Newcastle, son of John and Isobel Ballantyne. In 1841 he was living at about 5 South Hermitage Street and in 1851 and 1861 was a ‘Stone Dyke Builder’ on South Hermitage Street. In 1825 he married Isobel (d.1892), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children included Elizabeth (1825–95); Isabella (b.1827); Caroline (b.1829); John (b.1831); Margaret (1833–1921), who married John Scott; Adam (b.1835); Francis (1837–1922); William (b.1839); Alexander (Sansy, 1841–1917); Thomas (1843–74), who died in East India; Charlotte (b.1845); Robert (1847–1913); and James (b.1851), who married Isabel Edgar. They are buried in Ettleton. James (b.1816/7) from Ancrum, he was a joiner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Back Row. In 1861 he was listed as a journeyman cabinet-maker at Myrselawgreen. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, John, Robert, James T. and Andrew.

James (b.c.1820) spinner, living at the Crescent in 1825/6 directory. He ran between Hawick and Berwick once a week. James (b.1790/1) spinner from Selkirk, he lived at Appletreehall. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He married Margaret Thorburn. Their children included: John Thorburn (b.1821); Margaret (b.1823); William Thorburn (b.1826); Alexander (b.1838), who probably died young; Thomas Thorburn (b.1831); Andrew (b.1835); and Andrew (again, b.1838). James (b.1839–1876) labourer in Newcastle. In 1861 he was on South Hermitage Square. He married Helen Robson, who died in 1873, aged 74. Their children included: Adam (d.1829), Walter (d.1841), Betty (d.1844) and Frances (d.1846), who all died young; James (1824/5–53); and Francis (b.c.1847). They are buried at Ettleton.

He may be the James recorded as grocer in Newcastle in 1835–40 and then labourer in 1841; he was a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory, along with Francis who was also a grocer. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to Thomas, who also subscribed.

James (1802/3–95) mason in Newcastle, son of John and Isobel Ballantyne. In 1841 he was living at about 5 South Hermitage Street and in 1851 and 1861 was a ‘Stone Dyke Builder’ on South Hermitage Street. In 1825 he married Isobel (d.1892), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children included Elizabeth (1825–95); Isabella (b.1827); Caroline (b.1829); John (b.1831); Margaret (1833–1921), who married John Scott; Adam (b.1835); Francis (1837–1922); William (b.1839); Alexander (Sansy, 1841–1917); Thomas (1843–74), who died in East India; Charlotte (b.1845); Robert (1847–1913); and James (b.1851), who married Isabel Edgar. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, John, Robert, James T. and Andrew.
Their children were: Mary Jane (b.1869); William (b.1870); Agnes (b.1873); James (b.1876); John (b.1878); and Walter (b.1880). He died in Hawick. Joanna ‘Miss Inglis’ (b.1766) postmistress until 1809, sister of ‘Wat’ and James (since she was never referred to as her first name, she could have been a different child of James and Joanna Gledstains). She apparently succeeded in the position from a letter carrier named Tinlin who could neither read nor write. John of Manor (15th C.) son of Sir William of Manor. He had a charter confirming him in his father’s lands of Manor from the superior Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1420 he exchanged half of Branxholme with Sir Robert Scott of Murdostoun, as confirmed in a ‘letter of transumpt’ in 1431. Thus began the long association of the Scotts of Buccleuch with Branxholme and the area immediately to the south of Hawick. In 1431 he was also witness to the document transferring the lands of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His wife was Janet; her surname is unrecorded, but she could have been a daughter of Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, to whom he and his wife resigned their lands of Branxholme etc. in 1435. Sometime before this (the charter is undated) he granted the lands of ‘Kyrktoune and Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon, this being witnessed by his brother Robert, Sir Thomas, Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead (surely near relatives), as well as Robert Scott of Muthockstone and ‘James of Ra’, Burgess of Selkirk. John (15th C.) Rector of Southdean recorded in 1471 as witness to a charter granted by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to Robert Graham of Fintree. He is listed as ‘D. Joh. Inglis rectore de Soudone’. Another John was also listed as a witness, and so may have been related. John ‘Johnnie’ or ‘Step Stately’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick man recorded in 1612 along with several others for charging too high an interested on loaned money. His name is missing from the original list, but included as ‘Johne Inglis, callit Step Staitlie’ in the list of those found guilty. He appeared to answer the charge, and hence presumably paid a fine and was released. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Turnbull and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1636. He may be the John ‘Inglish’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot in 1639. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Hardie and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1650. Rev. John (d.1743) minister of Southdean. He was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery in 1711 and ordained at Southdean in 1718. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. In 1736 John Oliver became his assistant. When he died (unmarried) he left a library of 119 volumes to his successors. John (18th C.) married Euphan Rutherford in Southdean Parish in 1738. He is probably the John whose unnamed child was baptised in Southdean in 1740. John (18th C.) resident at Broadlee when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. This son could be the John listed at Borthwickbrae in the 1770s. Other children of his may have been: Bessie (b.1745); James (b.1748); William (b.1750); and possibly Margaret (b.1755), who may have married John Davidson. He is probably the John (1704/5–1780) in ‘Elbridg’ (most likely Eilrig) who is buried in Borthwick Waas along with his children Elizabeth (1745/6–75) and James (1747/8–80). He seems likely to be the John who married Margaret Roger in Roberton in 1742. John (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Grizel Beattie and their children included Janet (b.1751). John (18th C.) married Magdalene Gledstains in Hawick Parish in 1768. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1771 and Borthwickbrae in 1773. His children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773), who may be the ‘Lilias’ who married George Scott of Wilton in 1789; Margaret (b.1776); and Robert (b.1779). He could be the John, son of John, born at Broadlee in 1743. John (1770–1832) son of teacher James, he was a baker in Hawick. He is recorded as a baker on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory he was recorded as a baker on the Howegate. He may be the John, married to Martha Murray, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1796. His unnamed child died in 1808. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1832. John (b.c.1775) wright at Deanbrae. He was living at Deanbrae Bar in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included in William, James and Thomas. He may be the resident of Cavers who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John who married Elspeth Scott in Southdean Parish in 1805, with children baptised there including Andrew (b.1806) and John (b.1808). It is possible that the same John was wright at Appletreehall according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) ‘Driver’ at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. John (b.c.1780)
bathork for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Christian Hall. Their daughter Betty was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1806. John (1797/8–1861) descended from the Walter Gled-stains who was Town Clerk of Hawick. He worked as a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1838 he married Mary Blaikie, and she died in 1861 aged 62. He was father of John the local writer and museum curator. He was recorded as a handloom weaver on the Loan in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 he was a ‘Chelsea Pensioner’ and frame-worker at 2 Loan. His children were: Joan, who married Robert Whalley in Lancashire and emigrated to Australia; John (1838–1928), local poet; and Martha (or ‘Matty’, b.c.1840). He could be the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821.
John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish.
He married Margaret Lockie and their children included: John (b.1819); and James (b.1821). John (b.1808/9) from Southdean Parish, he was a joiner at Newmill Damfoot. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Susan, from Dumfries, and they had an adopted daughter, also Susan. He may be the John who married Susana Anderson in Hawick Parish in 1839. He could be related to Andrew (b.1805/6), who was also a joiner from Southdean. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Watson in Hawick Parish in 1836.
John (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish.
He married Robina Currie and their son James was baptised in 1854. John (b.1829/30) farmer at Salenside Lodge in Ashkirk Parish. He was proba-ibly son of William. In 1861 he was farmer there and living with his wife Helen, children Beatrice and William, and sister Agnes. John (b.1829/30) carter at 78 High Street. He was recorded as ‘Farmer of 10 acres & Carter’ there in 1861, living with his mother Jessie (from Crailing) and his cousin James Taylor. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880. John (1838–1928) local poet who worked in the hosiery industry and was later Curator of the Museum. Born in Hawick (in the ‘Hole in the Waa’ on Drumlannrig Square), he was son of John (a ‘woollen journeyman’, descended from the Gledstains of Cocklaw) and Mary Blakie.
It is said that his 2 grandfathers were schoolmaster in Hawick and the last Coble Pool ferryman (although other information suggests they were baker John Inglis and Peter, not Hector Bleakie, so perhaps these were his great-grandfathers). He worked in the tweed industry for Wilson & Armstrong. In 1872 he moved to Guelph, Ontario with his young family, and there worked for a hosiery firm, which was co-owned by David McCrae (father of poet John McCrae, famous for the WWI poem ‘In Flanders Field’); he wrote several poems while living in Guelph. However, after only 2 years (apparently after suffering a bereavement) the family returned to Hawick and he worked as foreman for Wilson & Glenn. His poem ‘Borderland’ was first published in Guelph in 1875. He was writer of the words for the well-known songs
‘The Banner Blue’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’, as well as ‘Bonny Brieryhill’ and many other poems contained in the book ‘The Borderland and other poems’ (1879, with 2nd edition in 1907).
After retiring he became Curator of the Museum, selling out the exhibits after the move from the Buccleuch Memorial to Wilton Lodge, and continuing in the position for the rest of his life.
He was also a Volunteer, where he was known as a good marksman, was a Director of the Haick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and also involved with the Border Bards’ Association and the Foresters. He was an elder of Wilton Church and a lifelong abstainer. He married Ellen (or Helen) D. Rodger, who died in 1907, aged 65. They had 6 children: John (1864– 1935), who married Isabella Turnbull; Andrew, who was a trooper with the Imperial Yeomanry, killed at Bethlehem, South Africa in 1900; Robert (1868–1933); William; Mary Ellen (1882–1971), who married George Storie; and Elizabeth, who died in infancy in Canada in 1872. He died in his 91st year at Wilton Lodge and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. His photograph is in the Museum. John (1864–1935) eldest son of John the poet. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children were John, Maggie, William and Douglas Rodger (1899–1989). John (20th C.) Superintendent of Wilton Lodge Park. He was in charge when Hawick won the Britain in Bloom award in
Alexander. She married ‘Arnou’ Gourlay. In 1461 she inherited the lands of ‘Kirkton and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branxholme according to a sasine given by Walter Scott of Branxholme.
Lillias (18th C.) chambermaid at Borthwickbrae in 1785, when she was working for John Elliot. She married George Scott in Roberton Parish in 1789.
She was ‘Lillie’ in 1790 when their son Robert was baptised in Wilton and ‘Lillies Englis’ in 1793 when their daughter Sophia was baptised (perhaps named after the daughter of Lord Napier, who was born at Wilton Lodge in 1791). She was probably a maid at Wilton Lodge in the 1790s, working for Lady Napier. In 1799 she went to Yair House to attend Lady Pringle, and stayed there to have her own children, 5 days after Charlotte Pringle was born at Yair. These were the twins, named Francis Napier Scott (after Lord Napier) and Alexander Pringle Scott (after the Laird of Wyliebank and Yair); on the baptism record her name appears as ‘Elanor’. She may be the same woman as ‘Elizbeth’ who was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1773, daughter of John Inglis. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the east of hers were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdyneside. She may have kept an inn or similar. Patrick (15th C.) listed on a ‘re-turn of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. He was ‘Patricium Inglise’ in 1427 on the ‘re-turn for the Barony of Hawick. Robert (17th C.) maltman in Hawick. In about 1651 he was judged by the Bailies to pay £30 to the town’s use, because he was not burdened with quartering the English army in February and March last’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Redfordgreen in 1723 and Henwoodie in 1728. He married Bessie Thomson in Roberton in 1727 and their children included Henry (b.1728). Francis (b.1723) may also have been his child. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Burnfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1804), Robert (b.1808) and James (b.1810). Robert (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfehopelee. He married Joan, daughter of William Elliot, who was shepherd at Wauchope. Robert (19th C.) married Betty Hall in Castleton Parish in 1837. Sir Simon (15th C.) uncle of John of Manor and Branxholme, and hence probably brother of Sir William. He was granted the lands of ‘Kyrrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick by his nephew John; the charter is undated, but must have been before John resigned the lands to his son Thomas in 1435. Other witnesses include Sir Thomas, Keeper and Bailie of Castle Douglas, and William of Manorhead, Laird of Langholm, as well as Robert Scott of Murthockstone. Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘dominus Symoni Ynglis’ in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, when he was bequeathed 40 shillings. He was probably a minister of one of the local churches. Thomas of Manor (15th C.) son of John of Branxholme and Murdostoun. He had a charter of the lands of ‘Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todshawhillis, Harwod and Kirkton tofts’ given by the Earl of Douglas in 1435 (having been resigned by his father and mother). In 1446 he exchanged the second half of Branxholme and other lands in the Barony of Hawick (Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw and Whitrig) for lands in Lanarkshire (Murdostoun and Hartwood) with Sir Walter Scott, thereby effectively ending the local influence of the Inglis family; in this charter he is recorded as ‘Thomas Ingelis de Mennar, dominus de Brankishame’. In 1449 he was ‘Thoma Ynglis de Murthowstoun’ when he witnessed the charter of renunciation of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was married twice, his son William succeeding to Murdostoun, while John was given the lands of Manorhead. As well as John, sons with his second wife, Christian, included Oswald and Gavin. Thomas (15th/16th C.) perhaps a descendant of Thomas of Branxholme. In 1530, with his permission, his wife Christian sold her lands of Philhope to William Brydon, Vicar of Auld Roxburgh. James Scott, Burgess of Selkirk, acted as her procurator and the ‘instruments’ were sought at the house of Janet Porteous wife of another Brydon in Selkirk. Thomas (17th C.) surgeon-apothecary in Kelso. In 1691 he and his wife Margaret Scott had a bond with Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge for the lands of Hobsburn. This was continued in a document on 1693, but discharged in 1694 when payment was made by Henry Elliot of Harwood. Given the habits of the times, either he or his wife could have been related to Elliott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, he lived at Howford. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included Isabel (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1787. He married Nelly Turner in Roberton in 1784 and their children included Robert (b.1787) and James (b.1791). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to James, who also subscribed. Walter (d.bef. 1777) resident of the Hawick area. The death of his son John is recorded in 1777. He could be the Walter ‘Engliss’ whose son John was baptised in Kirkton in 1728. Walter ‘Wat’ (1762–c.1830) candlemaker with a shop at 2 Tower Knowe. He was son of James and Joanna Gledstains and brother of James, the Town Clerk. He was a lover of practical jokes, sticking coins to the pavement, and once cooking his dog for some guests. He once tricked the exciseman with a keg of water hidden in the pool by the Auld Brig (while the keg of smuggled gin they were looking for was hidden in a friend’s house, although in the end the friend kept the gin, knowing he could not complain to anyone). He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. In 1796 he was involved in a prank about revolution breaking out in Hawick, which was believed enough to appear as a story in the British Chronicle in Kelso, and this ultimately led to the Kelso Mail appearing after the Chronicle went defunct. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1797 when he paid the dog tax – ‘For mischief and for planning plots Ye’ve aye ta’en muckle pride; Ye keep yer neighbours a’ in fear, Yer fauts they winna hide. Ye’ve aye made fun o’ other folk, At that ye never fail; Ye play yer pranks on young and auld, Ye made the Kelso Mail’ [BY].

Walter (b.c.1770s) tailor in Newcastle according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Walter (b.c.1770s) labourer at Greenhill according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Probably the same Walter was a labourer at Synton North Mains on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may have been brother of William, who was a labourer at Greenhill in 1801. He may be the Walter who married Mary Hastie, and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Helen (b.1813); and Alexander (b.1815). Walter (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Sibbald and their son John was baptised in 1835. Walter (19th C.) schoolmaster of St. Cuthbert’s School for a short period in 1893/4, between Mr. Turnbull and Mr. Gillis. Sir William (d.c.1420) probably brother of Sir Simon and also related to Sir Thomas, who was Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead, who was Laird of Langholm. He was the first of the Inglis of Murdostoun, who had a family home at Branholme. During a foray in 1395 he answered the challenge of the English champion Thomas Struthers (or Strother) and killed him in single combat at Rulehaugh. This was witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, the two Wardens of the Marches. Another version of events describes how his men surrounded Jedburgh Castle, scaled the walls with ladders and attacked Struthers (who was custodian of the Castle). They were forced to flee when the English soldiers returned from the town, and he was then challenged to combat by Struthers for breaking his oath to observe a truce. In 1396 King Robert III granted him the barony of Manor, south-west of Peebles, in recognition of this deed (all of that barony except the lands of Hundelshope, which belonged to William of Gledstains, ancestor of the local Gledstains family). He was succeeded by his son John, while another son was Robert and his grandson was Thomas. William of Murdostoun (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas. In at least the period 1485–92 he leased the lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley. It is possible that the same William was recorded as tenant of Phanu (in the Ettrick valley) in 1494/5 when he was able to compone for stealing sheep and associating with ‘traitors of Leven’. Probably the same William ‘Ynglis’ obtained remission from the King at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) of Lundlandshill (in Peeblesshire). He had a sasine for Langlandshill in about 1500 and may have been related to the family of Murdostoun. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502. He witnessed a charter for lands in Peeblesshire in 1506/7. In 1512 he was given lands at Mervinslaw by Roger Langlands of Wilton for 1 penny ‘blesh farm’, payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. He may therefore have been a relative of the Langlands family also. His brother David was also a witness to this charter. Also in 1512 he had a respite, along with John Symmonton of that Ilk for making counterfeit money. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. William (16th C.) recorded in Synton Parkhead in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between John Scott in Kirkhouses and Walter Scott in Ashkirk. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick who was among those cited by the Privy Council in 1612 for charging interest of more than 10 percent. He appeared to answer the charge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Preacher and their children included William (b.1661). William (17th C.) servant to William Lowis in Catslack-knowe in 1684 he was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. William Inglis Street, which was later known as the Half-Moon etor of the inn and attached ballroom at 64 Highwick, who was Cornet in 1827. He was proprietary Rolls.

William at Bonchester recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Salenside Lodge. William also have been father of John, who farmed at James (b.c.1828); and Jane (b.1830). He may have been brother of Walter, who was recorded at Greenhill according to the 1801 Mili-cia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. He may have been labourer at Greenhill.

William (b.c.1780) from Stow Parish, he was farmer at Salensis. He was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, farming 44 acres. He married Betsy (or Betty) Harvey, from St. Boswell's. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); William (b.1826); James (b.c.1828); and Jane (b.1830). He may have been father of John, who farmed at Salensis Lodge. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bonchester recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (1796/7–1851) merchant in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1827. He was proprietor of the inn and attached ballroom at 64 High Street, which was later known as the Half-Moon Hotel. The well near there also popularly bore his name. His property is marked there on Wood's 1824 map, and also the well on the street. In 1837 and 1841 he was on the High Street and listed as a grocer. He was still listed as a vintner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, although he was deceased by then. Late in life (in 1846) he married Jessie Best, who kept a hotel at 16 Buc-cleuch Street with her widowed mother (Margaret Best, nee Rae). Their son William was also Cornet. His wife must have survived him, since the inn also became known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’

William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1763 he married Helen Murray, from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1772. His children included Mary (b.1772) and Janet (b.1774). William (18th C.) resident of Appotside Moor when his children were baptised in Hobbkirk Parish in 1786 and 1788. His children included Robert (b.1778), John (b.1780), William (b.1782), Walter (b.1784) Isabel (b.1786); and Betty (b.1788). William (b.1769) born at Milnholm, son of John and Agnes Brydon. He lived in Castleton Parish. He could be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth (1776–1860), daughter of Francis Ballantyne, who was born at Whithaughburn. Their children included: Francis, who married Janet Scott; James, who married Helen Robson; Agnes, who married Thomas Hall; Elizabeth, who married William Hardie; Robert (d.1892), who married Elizabeth Hall; and Janet, who married James Grieve. William (b.c.1780) labourer at Greenhill according to the 1801 Militia ballot for Ashkirk Parish. He may have been brother of Walter, who was recorded at Greenhill in 1799. William (b.c.1780) from Stow Parish, he was farmer at Salensis. He was recorded there in 1841 and 1851, farming 44 acres. He married Betsy (or Betty) Harvey, from St. Boswell's. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); William (b.1826); James (b.c.1828); and Jane (b.1830). He may also have been father of John, who farmed at Salensis Lodge. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bonchester recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (1796/7–1851) merchant in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1827. He was proprietor of the inn and attached ballroom at 64 High Street, which was later known as the Half-Moon Hotel. The well near there also popularly bore his name. His property is marked there on Wood's 1824 map, and also the well on the street. In 1837 and 1841 he was on the High Street and listed as a grocer. He was still listed as a vintner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, although he was deceased by then. Late in life (in 1846) he married Jessie Best, who kept a hotel at 16 Buc-cleuch Street with her widowed mother (Margaret Best, nee Rae). Their son William was also Cornet. His wife must have survived him, since the inn also became known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’

William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was farmer at Barebacklaw in Ashkirk Parish, farming 25 acres. In 1861 he was farming 80 acres at Salensis and living with his son William. He married Isabella Glendinning (from Dumfries) and their children included: John (b.1828); John (again, b.1829); Euphan (b.1831); Helen (b.1834); Nancy (b.1836); Isabella (b.1841); and William (b.1844/5). It is unclear whether he was related to the William recorded earlier at Salen-side. He is buried in Ashkirk Cemetery. William (1818/9–1885) quarryman in Newcastle-ton. In 1861 he was living at about 7 North Hermitage Street. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1887, aged 71. Their children included: Helen (1845/6–54); Robert (1848/9–75); James (1849/50–75); and Robina (1833/4–98). They are buried in Etleton Cemetery. William (19th C.) wool merchant of Wellogate Bank. He took an early photograph of the old Town House of Hawick, also showing the Cross Well. He was for a long time a staunch member of Hawick Free Kirk, being an elder and Clerk of the Deacon’s Court. However, he resigned in 1887 after objecting to the minister allowing a parade of volunteers in the church, but withdrew his resignation after huge consternation among the congregation. He was also known for being a staunch Temperance supporter and long operated the ‘magic lantern’ at meetings of the Sunday School and Band of Hope. He married Jessie Blaikie (daughter of saddler George), who died in 1905, aged 75. William (1840/1–81) joiner in Newcastle-ton. He married Margaret Currie, who died in 1880, aged 33. Their children included James (1873–1883). He may be the William recorded at Stitchelhill Limery in 1841. William (b.1848/9) son of Cornet William of the Half-Moon Hotel and Jessie Best. He was Cornet himself in 1868. He attended school in Kirkton, perhaps where his proprietor's family had come from. By 1881 he was proprietor of the Half-Moon Inn. William (1847/8–1909) builder in Newcastle Stn, son of Peter. He married Mary Dickie, who died in 1914, aged 76. Their children included: John (1871/2–1909); Mina (1875/64), who married Robert M. Sibbald; and Jessie (1877/8–1913). They are buried at Etterlon. William (19th./20th. C.) farmer at Doorpool. He was owner in the early 20th century, when the farm was valued at about £210 (formerly 'Engles', 'Inglische', 'Inglish', 'Ingliyshe', 'Inglis' and variants; see also Ingles).

Ingls’ (ing-ul-zees) n. former carrier's firm, also known as 'the Berwick Smack', which made weekly trips between Hawick and Berwick before the arrival of the railway.

the Inglis' (thu-ing-ul-zees, -ing-ul-zees) n. family who had an early home at Brauchholme, acquired some time after 1335, and held under vassalage to the Earls of Douglas. In 1395 Sir William Inglis answered the challenge of an English champion Sir Thomas Struthers, killing him in single combat at Rulehaugh, for which the King granted them land near Peebles. In 1420 John Inglis exchanged half of the lands of Brauchholme for lands at Murdostoun (or Murthockstone, in Lanarkshire) with Sir Robert Scott of Rankiburn. In 1446 they exchanged the rest with Sir Walter Scott for other lands in Lanarkshire. However, they kept the lands of 'Kirkton Tofts', as confirmed in 1461 and passed to the Gourlay family through marriage to Katherine Inglis, heir to Alexander. Inglis’ Hotel (ing-ulz-, ing-gul-zees-hö-tel) n. former temperance hotel on Teviotside Terrace. Inglis’ Well (ing-gul-wel) n. former water supply somewhere around O’Connell Street.

the Inkle Hoose Factory (thu-ing-kul-hoos-fawk-tu-ree) n. another name for the Hawick Inkle Company built in Under Damside, off the present-day Commercial Road. It is probably the same structure known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill (adjacent to the Roughheugh Corn Mill). The building was leased in 1797 by William Wilson to manufacture hosiery, and was still known as ‘the Inkle Hoose’ long after the manufacturing of linen had ceased in Hawick. The building continued to be used by the partnership of Wilson & Watson, and when they split in 1818 it went to William Watson & Sons, who continued to use it as a stocking shop. In about 1863 this part of the business was taken over by George Hogg (also written ‘Incle’).

inlack (in-lak) n., arch. deficit, shortage – ‘De-cerns Andrew Deans, skinner, to content and pay to Walter Robson ...for the inlack of wool sold to him’ [BR1642], v., poet. to lack, want – ‘The young lions inlack, an’ thole huirig: but thaye that seik the Lord sallua inlak onie gid thing’ [HSR], ‘Thy nuil is like ane roond goblit...

Innes (i-nis) n. Alexander Pringle (1837–89) born at Robin’s Nest Cottage, Yair, he was a manufacturer of A.P. Innes & Co, which became White’s of Hawick. He formed a partnership with James Henderson in 1868, which split again in 1885, when he took over the rear part of Victoria Mills and concentrated on the wholesale market. He was President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society in the 1880s and he talked at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch park. He married Agnes Laing and their children included: Alison Mackay (b.1863); Mary Jane (b.1865); William (b.1867); Charlotte (b.1868); Agnes (b.1870); William Anderson (b.1871); and Hannah (b.1874). He died at his home, The Firs on Sunnyhill. Alexander Kedie (1855–1938) son of John and Mary Kedie, and older brother of Robert. He was born in Glasgow, but came to Hawick in the 1870s. He was a woollen merchant in the partnership Innes, Stevenson & Co. until 1892, then in partnership with F.E.H. Chambers. He later became sole partner in tweed merchants Innes, Chambers & Co., Commercial Road. He lived at Lindisfarne. He served as a Bailie around 1900. During WWI he was accused of trading with the enemy, but found not guilty. He married Annie Brydon. Their son James Brydon (b.1891) was killed at Gallipoli. When he died he left a sum of £1000, in the name of his son J.B. Innes, to be distributed to the poor in Hawick at Christmas, with preference given to soldiers and ex-soldiers. James (c.1685–1767) born in South Leith, son of wine merchant Robert. He was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated M.A. in 1704. He became the first schoolmaster of Hawick’s Grammar School, staying 1710–18. His servant Isobel Wilson got married in 1716. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Dand Gray, tenant in Weensland, when he is recorded as ‘Mr James Innes probationer’. He was then appointed Minister at Mertoun in Berwickshire. He married Christian, daughter of advocate Robert Munro in 1726 and she died in 1770. Their children were: Mary; Robert, who was a doctor; Capt. Albert; James, minister of Yester; and Anne. James (b.1756/7) from Kelso, he was schoolmaster in Bedrule from 1799. He signed the list of eligible men from Bedrule in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1799, his name appearing as ‘Ja Innes S Mr’. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was still schoolmaster, but already in his 80s, with his son William acting as assistant schoolmaster. He was still living with his son William and still recorded as schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. Lieut. James Brydon (1891–1915) son of Alexander, he grew up at Lindisfarne in Hawick. He was educated on the continent and fluent in French, German and Italian. He travelled in Europe on behalf of his father’s firm, Innes, Chambers & Co. He served with 1/4th K.O.S.B. and was seriously wounded during the charge of 12th July 1915 and found by his cousin W.K. Innes. He asked his cousin to cut off his arm and give him a cigarette; then he died, still cheering on his men. His memorial headstone in Wellogate Cemetery has his image carved into it. He left £1000 to be distributed to the poor of Hawick at Christmas. John (d.1679) from Castleton Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. It is said that ‘they were taken prisoners, stripped almost naked, and treated more like beasts than human beings’. John (c.1817–70) silk merchant in Glasgow. He spent time in Hawick in the 1850s and in 1854 married Mary, daughter of Robert Kedie from Hawick. Their children were: Alexander Kedie (b.1855), who lived at Lindisfarne in Hawick; Robert Kedie (b.1858), draper and manufacturer in Hawick; John William (b.1860); and Jessie (b.1862). Robert Kedie (1858–95) born in Glasgow, son of Hawick parents John and Mary Kedie. He was nephew of William Kedie. He returned to Hawick in 1879 as a manufacturer, becoming partner in William Kedie & Co., along with Blenkhorn and Richardson. His hobby was apparently breeding ‘Dandie Dinmonts’. He was Captain in the Border Rifles (volunteers) in the late 19th century. He married Catherine Brown Oliver, daughter of James Oliver and Jane Rutherford. They lived at the Old Manse and later at Wilton Bank. They had an only child, William Kedie (1893–1958) son of Robert and Catherine Oliver, he was born at Wilton Bank. He was educated at Cambridge, his degree being interrupted by WWI. He served with the K.O.S.B. and received the D.S.O. In 1915 he married Ivy Edith Baxter, and in 1925 he secondly married Hilda Voisey Middleton. His children included: Kathleen Betty (b.1916); Robin Frederick (b.1920); Vivian Voisey; Charles Ian; Kedie; James Alexander Kedie (b.1932); Gilliam Marie; and William (b.1935). He died at West Hartlepool.

Innes’ (i-ni-see) n. former name applied to one of the factories run by Innes, sometimes in partnership with others, particularly the warehouse operation of A.P. Innes & Co. at Howlands. J.P. Alison designed a hosiery factory for the firm in 1899.

Innes, Chambers & Co. (i-nis-cham-burz-in-kō) n. tweed manufacturers of the early 20th century. Alexander Kedie Innes became sole partner and the main factory was at 33 Commercial Road. It was badly damaged by fire in 1920 and the site purchased by the Masons in 1921 to build their new Lodge.

Innes-Henderson (i-nis-hen-dur-sin) n. Innes, Henderson & Co. Ltd., Hawick knitwear company, with their main mill on Victoria Road. The firm started in 1868 in what was basically a cottage at Wilton Grove. They built Victoria Mills on Victoria Road in 1875. In 1885 the firm split, with Henderson supplying the retail trade and using the front building, and Innes dealing with the wholesale trade from a 3-storey building behind. The firms of A.P. Innes & Co. and James Henderson & Co. operated separately until merging again in 1920 (although the exact relationship between them during the intervening years is complicated). Around this time they had the largest hosiery mill in Hawick, employing about 1100 workers. They also had a small factory on Commercial Road for a while. They supplied specially designed knitted underwear for Eric Shipton’s Everest expedition. The firm manufactured knitted goods bearing the Braemar label, and later changed their name to match. The firm finally went out of business in 1973. Records covering the period 1896–1973 exist, with the Museum having some 20th century papers.

invasive (in-vä-seev) adj., arch. offensive, used for attack – ‘...armed with sowrdys and other weapons, invasieff to the number of 200 people, who did impede them from setting the fair’ [C&L1673].

inveteet (in-vee’) v., arch. to invite – ‘It’ll be nae yuise invetin him ti come; ei’s aye that sairious-on’ [ECS].

invent (in-ven’) v., arch. to contrive, plot, devise – ‘Wha did invent that day o’ play. We needna fear to find him sune ...’ [CPM].

inventar (in-ven-tar) n., arch. an inventory – ‘The testament testamentar, and inventar of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertening to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branxholme ...’ [SB1574], ‘Ane Inventour of the Earle of Bucleuchis Tronkis quhich gois to Holland’ [SB1633] (also ‘inventor’ and variants).

Inverteviot (in-vur-tee-vee-i’) n. house just beyond Martin’s Bridge, latterly the home of Chuck Whillans.

invisible mender (in-vi-zí-bul-men-dur) n. epithet for a mender in the knitwear industry the results of whose work are nearly impossible to detect.

Invocation (in-vō-kā-shin) n. song written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant as a finale to the 1914 Pageant. It was sung by a huge chorus, accompanied by the Saxhorn Band on the 2 nights of the quater-centenary celebrations, and published by Grant in 1915. The music is now played by the Saxhorn Band during the handing back of the Flag on the Saturday of the Common Riding, and the words are rarely heard. The tune may have been influenced by the German hymn ‘Nun Danket alle Gott’. It is also sometimes called ‘Hail Great and Glorious Power!’, because of the line in the song. The words are now seldom sung, although they were resurrected for the 2004 Callants’ Club centenary commemoration service (often incorrectly or dialectally ‘The Invocation’).

inwaerd (in-wärd) adj., adv., poet. inward – ‘Thair inwaerd thoucht is, that thair houses sall contina forevir ...’ [HSR], ‘Behald, thou desyrist trouth in the inwaerd pairts ...’ [HSR].

inwairdly (in-wärd-lee) adv., poet. inwardly – ‘...thaye bliss wi’ thair mooth, an’ ban inwairdlie’ [HSR], ‘Bewaure o’ fause prophets, whilk come ti yow in sheep’s caethin’; but inwairdlie they ar ravenin’ wouffes’ [HSR].

in waird (in-wärd) adj., arch. in custody, imprisoned – ‘Item, whatsomever person that sall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, andwardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640].

the I.O.G.T. (thu-I-ō-jee-tee) n. the Institute of Good Templars, an international organisation founded in 1851, promoting total abstinence from alcohol. The organisation arrived in Hawick around 1870 and soon 5 Hawick lodges were formed: the Scottish Border Beacon; the Teviotdale; the Rose of Teviotdale; the Slitrig; and the Ever Watchful. They each held weekly meetings. The first survived the longest, and two others were formed later in the 19th century: the Hope of Hawick; and the Jubilee. They had a hall down the Round Close, referred to as ‘the I.O.G.T. Hall’ or ‘Templar’s Hall’, which was also used by many other groups, e.g. the Brethren and the Saxhorn Band.

I.O.U.S. Mechanics (I-ō-ew-ess-me-kaw-neeks) n. Friendly Society, active in the latter part of the 19th century, with separate Teviotdale and Hawick (No. 4) Lodges. It may have been set up around 1845 and lasted until at least 1888. The Teviotdale Lodge met in the Temperance Hall on the first Monday of the month. The National Archives have some undated records.

ir (ir) v. are – ‘ir ee gaun?’, ‘Whae ir oo and Whaer oo ir. Facts a’ Callants should Ken’ [JEDM], ‘Is yours a fardin’ tae? Ah then, ma gingerbread men’s a ha’penny, but here ee irr’ [JEDM], ‘... where the public toilets ir now’ [IWL], ‘Some folk ir juist born fortunate ...’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘irr’; er and ur are also used).
ir (ir) pron., arch. her – ‘Nochts ull stoap ir if she’s taen the maggott inti er heed’ [ECS], ‘A was gaan ma yirrants whan A met in wui ir’ [ECS].

ir ee (ir-e) interj., arch. will you please, if you’re willing – ‘. . . used exclusively after a request in the sense of ‘if you please’. The word willing or agreeable might almost be taken as being understood to follow the pronoun. Thus a Hawick bairn might say: ‘Mother, gie’s a peece, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a yin, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘Faither, tak’ us teh sei the Greens (the local Rugby team) this efternune, ir ee?’ [1947].

Ireland (Ir-lind) n. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’.

Irelands (Ir-lindz) n. John of that Ilk (15th C.) holder of lands in Wilton, which were commonly known as ‘Irelandis landis’. In 1454 he gave a charter of these lands to David, son and heir of Walter Scott of Kirkurd; he is recorded as ‘Johannes de Irelandys de eodem’. The family were mainly based in Stirlingshire and Perthshire; it is unclear whether he ever actually resided in Wilton, and if so where he moved to afterwards. He is recorded as witness to a charter for William Hay in 1450, signed at Perth. And either he or his father was mentioned in a charter of 1424 for lands in Perth. It has been remarked that the families of Inglis, Irelands and Scott all owned adjacent lands in the 15th century, i.e. names associated with England, Ireland and Scotland.

Irelands-lands (Ir-lindz-lawndz) n. common name for lands in the western half-Barony of Wilton, which were granted by John Irelands of that Ilk to David Scott in 1454, with the superior being Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. The lands were to be held of the Baron for the yearly fee, if asked, of one pair of spurs and one pound of cucumbers! It is unclear where these lands were. Presumably the name came from the connection with the Irelands family, and was replaced with another name (or the former name).

the Irish (thu-I-reesh) n. people from Ireland. It is said that in about 1806 there was only one native of Ireland living in Hawick, who ‘when teased by boys, was accustomed to threaten to tear their limbs from their bodies’. Many more arrived to work in the knitwear industry during the 19th century, boosting the congregation of the Catholic Chapel. Lots of labourers who worked on railway construction in the 1840s to 1860s were from Ireland.

the Irish Harp (thu-I-reesh-hawrp) n. former hostelry at 9 Baker Street, run by Frank Sheridan in the mid-19th century.

the Irish Schulmaister (thu-I-reesh-skil-mäis-tur) n. nickname of Thomas Lawler.

Irn Brew (I-rin-, ern-broo) n. orange-coloured carbonated soft drink, popular in Scotland, also known as ‘Irn Bru’. Scooch wrote a song about it in 2011 – ‘Irn Bru, Built ye up, when ye grew, Its the only thing to do, Drink, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru’ [Sco].

irni (ir-ni) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they irni the same ony mair’, ‘. . . But, tell the truth, the legs irna the same Nowadays. Weel, sin’ auld-age wumna hide’ [DH], ‘. . . awfih vexed that the Miss Lindsays irni pairt o the supper pairty’ [IWL], ‘. . . Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk irni the same somehow’ [IWL] (also written ‘irna’; usually used after the noun in distinction to irren; see also arni, erni and irnt).

irrnt (i-rin’) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘Hawick folk ir better than Gala folk, irrnt they?’ (note that this form usually precedes the noun or pronoun, cf. irni).

the Iron Age (thu-I-rin-äj, -ern-) n. period of development following the Bronze Age, characterised by the spread of iron tools and weapons, beginning around the 8th century B.C.E. New settlers arrived in the Borders around the 1st century B.C.E. and took over from the former Bronze Age residents. Tribes speaking Brythonic were already well established by the time of the Roman occupation (about 70 C.E.). Most of the examples of forts, settlements, homesteads and earthworks that pepper our local hills are from the Iron Age. A particularly good example is on Whitecarse Hill, between Chapelhill farm and Branxholme Loch.

Iron Castle (I-rin-kaw-sul) n. ancient earthwork in Southdean Parish, just to the east of Westerhouses. It occupies the top of a small knoll just to the south of Ironcastle Sike. It is about 75 m by 30 m and has been partially obliterated by a plantation. It seems likely to be an Iron Age settlement.

irregular (i-re-gew-lur) stränj adj., arch. disobedient to the Church, disqualified from ecclesiastical office – ‘The which day Session called and constituted upon a report George wallace in this paroch is married in an irregular manner to Mar- garet waugh in Hawick’ [Wil1736] irregular mairriage (i-re-gew-lur-mä-reej) n., arch. term used to describe a marriage taking place outwith the church, often by poor people, and sometimes simply involving a pledge before witnesses. Discovery of such an arrangement often resulted in a fine imposed on the couple by the Kirk Session, as well as attempts to identify the person who performed the marriage and the witnesses present, so they could also be fined or imprisoned. However, these arrangements continued in any case, presumably some being elopements, some simply to save money, and others because of religious differences. When discovered, any children produced by the union would be refused baptism until amends had been made by the couple. ‘...John Young, merchand in the toun for his disorderlie and irregular marriage . . . ’ [BR1706].

irren (i-rin) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘ee’re wfi clivver, irren ee?’ (short form of i-ru’t; could be written ‘ir’n’); cf. erren.

irreverend (i-re-vu-riad) adj., arch. irreverent – ‘James Scott, called Pedee, is fined for ane great disobedience to the bailies . . . , but gave them opprobrious and irreverent language, and sicken this day . . . ’ [BR1679].

Irvine (ir-vin, a-rin) n. Adam (b.1791/2) brewer at Whisky Houses in Hawick. A letter from him to a Selkirk lawyer, concerning a gig in 1825 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed at Whisy Houses on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he is listed as a brewer at Whisky Houses, living with his wife Henrietta and 7 children. He married Henrietta Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1813); Elizabeth (b.1815); Walter (again, b.1817); Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1819); Mary (b.1821); Alison (b.1823); John Scott (b.1825); Adam (b.1828); Henrietta (b.1830); and Andrew (b.1832). His wife was probably the Henrietta, daughter of John Scott and Elizabeth Aitkin who was baptised in Hawick in 1792. His assets were sequestered in 1842.

Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) cook at Burnhead in 1791, when she was working for William Scott.

Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (b.1704) son of James who farmed at Wiltonburn. He took over the tenancy of Wiltonburn and lived there until 1759. He was also tenant of a quarter of Burnfoot-on-Ale in about 1748-52 and a third of Mervinslaw until about 1754. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1739, 1742 and 1747. In 1739 he and William (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism at Pathhead for Adam Scott. He married Elizabeth Dunlop in Wilton Parish in 1733. Their children included: Jean (b.1734); James (b.1736); Many (b.1739); Walter (b.1742); Alison (or ‘Allie’, b.1744); Elizabeth (b.1747); William (b.1751); and Andrew (b.1754). The witnesses in 1739 were William and Walter Scott, in 1742 were 2 Walter Scotts and in 1747 were Walter and Thomas Scott. Probably the same Andrew witnessed a baptism in 1727 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn, one in 1747 for Alexander Burnet at Wiltonburn and another in 1751 for Hector Blaikie at Boathouse. He paid for the use of the Wilton bell for a funeral in 1749. He was in Mervinslaw in 1764 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common; he also gave evidence regarding the former use of parts of the Common. Andrew (1786–1870) son of Walter and Janet Smith, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He was an actuary with the National Security Savings Bank and grocer at 26 High Street. He also served as Heritors’ Clerk for the Parish of Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a grocer on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, in Slater’s 1852 directory and on the 1841 census. In Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory he was treasurer of the Savings' Bank on the High Street. A letter from him to a Selkirk writer in 1827 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was recorded in 1836 as Collector of the Poor-rates in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer, Treasurer to the Savings’ Bank and Heritor’s Clerk. In 1852 he was also agent for the Aberdeen insurance company. He was an elder and session clerk for the West End Church. He was given the ‘Gledstane Bible’ by William Smith (‘Wull the Cutler’), who may have been a relative of his mother. He married May Roger, and their children included: Walter (b.1820); William (b.1822), tweed manufacturer and merchant; Margery D. (b.1823); Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1825); Alexander James (b.1828); Mary (b.1832); and Adam (b.1836). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1759 he was recorded at Wester Mill in Wilton. He married Mary Elliot in Hawick Parish in 1758. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); John (b.1761); and Betty (b.1763). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden and in 1763 were Mr John Laurie student and church officer Alexander Bunyan. Elizabeth (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. George (17th C.) servitor to maltman John Hardie. In 1666 he was fined by the Magistrates for cutting divots at Myreslaw-green, even although his master had directed him.
Major John R. Irvine (1876–1962) pharmacist who was the first female president of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. She was daughter of bookseller Walter Phillips and Jane Law. She was an apprentice in Hawick with chemist Thomas Maben. She moved to Glasgow where she worked at the Glasgow Apothecaries Company and the Glasgow Royal Infirmary. She married chemist Peter Irvine and assisted him in running 2 pharmacies in Galasgow. The couple worked in London during WWI and she became responsible for the pricing of subscriptions in the south-east for 35 years. She was made an M.B.E. in 1928 for ‘meritorious service in connection with the National Insurance Scheme’. She was first woman to be president of the health insurance staff of Whitley Council, then of the Insurance Committee Officers Association for England and Wales and the National Association of Women Pharmacists. In 1937 she became only the third woman member of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society and became its first woman President in 1947. Her portrait (by Norman Hepple) hangs in the Pharmaceutical Society headquarters. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Aitkin and their children included Margaret and Janet, baptised together in 1684. The witnesses were James (surely a relative) and Walter Henderson. Perhaps the same John was living at Hawickshiel when he had a son Walter baptised in 1696, with witnesses Walter Irvine (presumably a relative) and William Douglas. He may be the same man as the resident of Hawick Shiel. John (17th/18th
C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is recorded as tenant in Hawick Shiel when his children were baptised in 1704 and 1706. His children included: James (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were James Gray in Whitlaw and gardener James Falsyde and in 1706 were Walter Nixon and Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel. He may also have been father of Walter (b.1696). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish in 1738 when he married Bessie Scott, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was tenant in the Flex in 1741. His daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick in 1741, with witnesses John Cavers and John Goodfellow, both at the Flex. He may be the John who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism in Wilton for William Hood in 1738. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Elizabeth Hutton and their children included: Jane (b.1743); Jane (again, b.1748); and Margaret (b.1750). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1759. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Wilton, included Thomas (b.1754), Robert (b.1755), Betty (b.1757), James (b.1759) and Walter (b.1761). The witnesses in 1759 were James Dryden and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1759), Agnes (b.1763), Walter (b.1765), Margaret (b.1767), Helen (b.1769) and John (b.1772). It is possible they are identical with the couple of the same name who previously had children in Wilton; this would only make sense if the baptism of James (b.1759) was recorded in both parishes. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1759. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Teindsideslope in 1797, when he was taxed for having 3 horses. John (b.c.1817) from Southdean Parish, he was farm steward at Commonside in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Helen. John (b.1826/7) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a rope-maker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a journeyman ‘Rope & Twine Spinner’ living at 28 Loan. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Isabella (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); Walter Scott (b.1858), who was Cornet in 1886; Margaret Scott (b.1861); and Archibald Scott (b.1868). John R. ‘Jake’ (1940– ) local Liberal councillor and Honorary Provost 1982–88. He wrote ‘The Westenders’ (1990). Peter educated at Hawick High School, he wrote ‘Scotland the Best’. He has been involved in the organisation of many arts festivals and events in Scotland. Reginald (d.c.1267) served as the 2nd Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1242. In 1245 he moved to become Archdeacon of Glasgow. He died before 1268. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Telfer and their children included: Margaret (b.1764); William (b.1766); and James (b.1773). Robert (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Nut Bank in Minto Parish in 1780. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish in 1789. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Samuel (18th C.) schoolmaster in Wilton during at least the 1760s. He is the Wilton schoolmaster who was said in 1764 to have ‘been in use to cast peats in the common moses, for the use of his family’. In 1767 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Robert Riccarton. He may be the same as Samuel in Newfield. Samuel (b.1719) son of Thomas, who was tenant at Whitehaugh, he was baptised in Minto Parish. His brother Walter lived at Northhouse. His father was also tenant at Easter Burnfoot (on Ale), and he himself farmed there in about 1745–60. He was then tenant at Newfield, near Hummelknowes. He was part of the group that founded the Green Kirk in 1763. In 1764 he gave evidence regarding the former uses of Wilton Common. He owned 2 horses at Newfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston in Cavers Parish. In 1700 he married Bessie Huntly in Cavers. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1701), who married Bessie Turnbull in Minto in 1723; Thomas (b.1703); Isabel (b.1706); James (b.1708); William (b.1710); and John (b.1713). It is possible he is the same as the Thomas who had children baptised later in Minto Parish. Thomas (d.c.1745) resident of Minto and Wilton Parishes. He was tenant in Whitehaugh for many years. In about 1731 he also became tenant in Easter Burnfoot (on Ale), and held that until his death. His children, baptised in Minto Parish, included: Alison and Bessie (b.1715); Walter (b.1717), who lived at Northhouse; Samuel (b.1719), who took over at Easter Burnfoot and was later tenant in Newfield on Slitrig; Helen (b.1721); and Adam (b.1724). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Langlands in 1722 and was at Netherhall in 1726 and 1729. He witnessed baptisms in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Charlaw and for James Young at West Burnfoot, in 1728 for John Blyth at Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton...
at Alton and in 1735 for William Nichol in Stoulsie. In the evidence regarding the use of Wilton Common in 1765, it was said that ‘Thomas Irwin in Netherhall, did cast peats in that moss 50 years ago’. He married Margaret Scott in 1718 and their children included: Walter (b.1719); Thomas (b.1722); John (b.1726); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John Scott and John Wilson and in 1726 were Adam Scott and John Irvine and in 1729 were John Scott and John ‘Dryon’. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Irvine in Minto in 1717 and their children included: Alison (b.1725); Jean (b.1728); and Margaret (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, who was in Strother in 1739. He married Helen Thorburn in Ancrum in 1735 and their son William was baptised in Wilton in 1739. The witnesses were 2 Walter Irvines, who were surely related. Thomas (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1746. Their son George was baptised in 1752. Thomas (18th C.) married Isabel Hall in Kirkton in 1753. Their children included: Thomas (b.1753); Betty (b.1755); Jean (b.1757); Ann (b.1759); William (b.1763); Janet (b.1765); Agnes (b.1767); and James (b.1769). Thomas of Newton (18th C.) recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls in Wilton Parish. He and William witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. He married Mary Easton in Hawick in 1783 and their children included: William (b.1783); and Janet (b.1787). Thomas (b.1790), with no mother’s name given, was probably also his child. The witnesses in 1787 were George Goodfellow and George Turnbull. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1696 for John in Hawicksheil Walter (18th C.) factor for the Langlands estate. He ran the estates after the death of George Langlands and before Robert was served heir in 1758. He was living at Howlands in 1737. He married Helen Scott in Wilton in 1736. His children included: David (b.1737); Mainie (b.1739); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1737 were James and Francis Scott. In 1745 he was recorded as a gardener, and the witnesses to the baptism in Hawick were merchant James Douglas and Andrew Turnbull senior. He and John witnessed a baptism for William Hood in 1738. He is one of the 2 Walters who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in Wilton in 1739 (they were surely all related). He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Noble, resident of Mervinslaw, in 1751. Probably the same Walter was factor for John Scott of Whitehaugh in 1766. His name is also written ‘Irvin’. Walter (b.1717) resident of Northhouse. He was son of Thomas and baptised in Minto Parish. His brother Samuel lived at Newfield. They were part of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He was recorded at Northhouse on the 1786–90 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Weensland in 1788. His land there was valued at £18 1s 8d and had probably been purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He was still owner according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was surely related to William, who had owned part of Weensland earlier. He is probably also the Walter who paid the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He may be the Walter who married Janet Smith in 1785 and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Andrew (b.1786), Robert (b.1788), Alison (b.1790) and Adam (b.1792). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Newfield. His wife ‘Ailey’ Thomsline died in Hawick in 1815. He was probably son of Samuel or Walter. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Tinlin and their children included James Blair Ken (b.1821) and John (b.1823). Walter Scott (1858–1936) son of John and Agnes Scott. He was a frameworker in Hawick and Cornet of 1886. His Cornet’s Lass was probably either Miss Murray or Miss Fraser, who were recording in the local press at the Colour Bussing ceremony in 1887. He emigrated to America and returned in 1887 to take up his duties as Right-Hand Man, a long journey in those days. He was honoured with a special reception, where he was presented with a gold medal and watch. He was unable to repeat the feat as Left-Hand Man, however. He married Mary Ann Carter and died in Altoona, Pennsylvania. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1739 he and Andrew (surely a relative) witnessed a baptism at Pathhead for Adam Scott. He married Janet Shortreed and their children included Thomas (b.1743) and Helen (b.1745). William (18th C.) linen draper who was Bailie in the 1770s. He was recorded as a merchant in 1779 when he acted as a witness (along with his apprentice John Nixon) for a baptism in Cavers Parish. Probably the same William was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1785. He is probably the William recorded in 1788 as former owner of 2 parts of Weensland (having purchased this from Scott of Horsleyhill) valued at £23 19s 6d and £23 8s 10d, and by 1788 owned by William Dickson of Orchard. He is probably also the William who owned the farm of Newton (valued at £238) in 1788; if so he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. He is also mentioned as a former owner of part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. He may be the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Scott in 1796. William (b.c.1765) farmer at Glendivian in the Ewes valley. His wife was Henrietta and their children included John (who took over the farm), Archibald, Isabella, Jessy, Eliza, William and Robert. His wife was a widow by 1851.

William (18th/19th C.) smith at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. A note says that ‘his age is doubted’, suggesting that he may not have been in the prescribed age range of 19–30. William (b.c.1785) listed as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census, when he was living at about 54 High Street. William of Newton (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Chamberlain Newton in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was a subscriber to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Glasgow who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (b.1793/4) farmer at Cavers Mains, listed in 1841. In 1861 he was there farming 186 acres. He married Mary H. Elliot, probably daughter of John, who lived at Shiplaw Corse. William (1824–93) son of Andrew of the Savings Bank. He was a manufacturer in partnership with ‘Allie’ Laing in the latter part of the 19th century, the warehouse at 26 High Street giving its name to ‘Irvine’s Close’. He was a local leader in politics and social reform in the 19th century. He was involved in the Hawick press and also wrote some poetry. For a while he also lived at 67 High Street. He presented a couple of Roman coins to the Museum in 1863. His wife Ellen (from England) and children Andrew, George T. and Alexander L. were living at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1861. He may be the William whose poem ‘I Love to See the Morning Climb’ was published in ‘Living Bards of the Border’ in 1859. He may be the William whose book ‘An Easter Ramble’ was published in Hawick in 1860. (the former pronunciation was ā-rin; previously written ‘Irune’, ‘Irvin’, ‘Irwin’, ‘Irvine’, ‘Urvin’ and variants; see also Irving).

Irvine and Turnbull’s (ir-vin-in-turn-bulz) n. tobacconists on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. This was a partnership between William Turnbull and one of the Ivines, possibly Andrew.

Irvine’s Close (ir-vinz-klös) n. passageway at 26 High Street leading to Laing & Irvine’s tweed business in the mid-19th century.

Irving (ir-vin) n. Archibald ‘Bauldie’ (19th C.) farmer at Shirencleuch. Christopher of Binks, ‘Kick-ma-lerie’ (17th C.) said to have been a fiddler, it is unclear where he originated from. It is also unclear why he got his nickname (since it has 2 somewhat different meanings). He became fairly wealthy and was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Binks from Simon Elliot of the Binks and is recorded there in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, paying tax on the value of £300. He is also recorded in 1678 as owner of part of the former estate of Elliot of Larriston in Castelton Parish, valued at £700. By about 1688 he had bought all of Over and Nether Larriston, Greenholm, Redheugh, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Gullenflat from Robert Elliot of Larriston, who died bankrupt. His children were: wife of Adam Beattie, to whom he gave Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Greenholm and Redhaugh in Liddesdale; and Mary, wife of Adam Elliot, who got Catlowdie in Cumberland. The lands of Binks passed to John, 3rd son of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. David (1778–1860) born in Langholm, son of Janetus and Helen Little. He was educated at Langholm Grammar School and privately there and then at Edinburgh University. He was intended for the Church, but devoted his life to literature. His first publication was ‘The Life of Robert Ferguson, with a critique on his works’ (1799), followed by ‘Lives of Scottish Authors’ (1801), ‘Elements of English Composition’ (1801, running to 12 editions), ‘The Lives of the Scottish Poets’ (1804) and ‘Memoirs of the Life and Writings of George Buchanan’ (1807, 1817). He obtained an honorary doctorate from Aberdeen in 1808. He married Ann Margaret Anderson in 1810, but she died 2 years later. He secondly married his cousin Janet Laing. In 1820 he was appointed principal librarian of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh. He published extensively on topics of Scottish literature, editing volumes for the Ballantyne and Maitland Clubs, and contributing to the Encyclopedia Britannica. Later works include ‘An Introduction to the Study of the Civil Law’ (1837), the 2 volume ‘Lives of Scottish Writers’ (1839) and ‘History of Scottish Poetry’, published posthumously. Edward ‘Reid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1591 when he is accused of joining a group of Elliots of the Hill and others in stealing from the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded as ‘redd’ Edward Urwen’. He may be the ‘Edward Irwing of Boneschaw’ listed in 1586 among ‘principallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. Perhaps the same man is Edward ‘of Beraldrone’ listed among men ordered in 1588 to appear before the Warden in Dumfries. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) part of the notorious rieving family of the West Marches. In 1590 he was ‘Geordie Kang’ when accused, along with Christie Armstrong of Barnglies and other, of rieving from Willie Graham in Leven. He was probably the ‘Geordie Kange’ who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. In 1597 he was ‘Georde Urwen alias Kange’ when the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. Along with other Irvings (probably his brothers) they were ‘Davy, Will, and Geordy Kang’ complained about in 1600/1 for a raid on Scotby in England, accompanied by Armstrongs of Barnglies and Kinmont.

Note that several earlier Irvings are mentioned in earlier English records (e.g. in 1541), who were probably related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was James ‘Irvin’, married to Isobell Liddell, whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1681), James (b.1682) and Robert (b.1684). He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Miller in Hawick in 1702 (recorded in Wilton in 1703). He could be the James in ‘aiches’ (but hard to read, possibly Stirches?) whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1704; the witnesses were William and John Scott. Other children may have included Andrew (b.1704), Thomas (b.1708), William (b.1711) and James (b.1713). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Lorraine in 1706. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Riddell. Their children included: Walter (b.1716); and James (b.1718). He may be the the James with wife ‘Riddell’, whose daughter Marion was baptised in Wilton in 1698. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Glendivan in Ewesdale in 1797 according to both the Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) accused by Taylors in 1592 of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Geordie and Tom of Rowanburn. His name is written ‘Richie Kange’. Thomas of Rowanburn (16th C.) accused in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; he was probably an Irving, since he was listed just after the ‘Kangs’, Willie, Geordie and Ritchie. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Howcleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was surely related to Walter, who was at Howcleuch in 1812. Walter (b.c.1780s) ploughman at Howcleuch, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Willie Irwing’, servant to John’s Christie Armstrong, when accused of being part of a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He may be the ‘Willie Irwing of Graitnayhill’ listed in 1586 among ‘principallis of the brokin men of the west marche’ in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. William ‘Willie Kang’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Armstrongs and others who were accused of rieving from Beacastle. He was also ‘Willie Kange’ when accused in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Geordie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. He is also complained about in 1596, among Scotsmen accused of leading raids into England. His name is given as ‘Wille Yrwen ‘Kange’’ and one of the ‘Kanges’ along with Geordie (probably his brother) in a complaint about a second raid. Associates on these and other raids included Armstrong of the Hollows, Jamie Elliot called ‘Tod’ and other Armstrongs and Elliots of southern Liddesdale. He and other Irvings were probably the ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. His brother David was listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. It is unclear what the nickname meant. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Mains (probably in Castleton Parish) in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to the George ‘Irvine’ who was at Mains in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) portrait painter in Longtown. In the Carlisle Exhibition of 1824 he exhibited these paintings: ‘W. Brown Esq. Hawick’; ‘Alexander Brown, Esq. Orchard’; ‘Mrs Dixon, Hassendeanburn’; and ‘A Dixon, Hassendeanburn’. He died aged 60. He was listed as a portrait painter in London in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’; he must have been related to John, a painter in Longtown who also subscribed to the book. William S. (19th C.) teacher in Hawick. He was President of the Hawick Branch of the Educational Institute of Scotland and Vice-President of the Scientific and Philosophical Society in the late 1800s. He also acted as Clerk to the Deacon’s Court of Hawick Free Kirk from 1887. In 1889 he left to become Headmaster of Westerkirk School (formerly written ‘Irvine’, ‘Irving’, ‘Urvin’, ‘Urwin’ and variants; see also ‘Irvine’).

Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Adam (1763–1860) born at ‘Howpathy’, which may be Howpasley, he was a shepherd at Redmoss and at Fairloans in Castleton Parish. He was a keen hunter and known as ‘The Hunter King of Liddesdale’ and is said to have served as inspiration for part of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’. He is listed as shepherd at Fairloans among heads of households in 1835–41. He was said to have said about whisky that he would like to be ‘a whaup and live by suction’. He married Helen Crozier and their children included: William (1792–1819), who served at Waterlooo; James (1795–1809); Adam (1797/8–1834); John, also shepherd at Redmoss; Helen (b.c.1800); Thomas (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Hislop and emigated to the U.S.A., settling in Elmhira, Illinois; Walter (1803–89), shepherd at Broadlee; and David (1806–94). Adam (b.1806/7) born in Robertton Parish, he was shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish. He is probably the Adam listed for the first time as a head of household at Toftholm in 1837 and still there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane. Adam (b.1816/7) son of James and Elizabeth Murray, he was born in Ewesdale. He worked as a farm labourer in Teviothead Parish. In 1861 he was at Commonbrae. He married Mary Martin and their children included Walter, Mary, Andrew, Isabella and Eliza. He died at Change-house. Adam J. (1836–1922) son of shepherd Simon. He was born in the Ewes valley. He became a shepherd at the age of 12, but emigrated to America when he was 20. In 1856 he settled in Vienna, Delaware County, New York, where he farmed with his brother. He married Francis C.
Smith. He was the last survivor of a family of 11 siblings. Alexander (d.beef. 1580) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1579/80 his son Thomas renounced his 2 half husbandlands in Lilliesleaf to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1806–94) youngest son of shepherd Adam. He was shepherd at Fair-loans and other places in Liddesdale. He was listed as head of household at Fairloans in 1835– 40 and labourer at ‘Thorliesburnfoot’ in 1841. He married Jessie Dickson. Their children included: Adam (b.1832); Janet Jardine (b.1834); Michael (b.1836); Helen (b.1837); Isabel (b.1840); and Thomas. Elizabeth (b.1774/5) from Langholm, she was a widow living at ‘Poor’s houses’ in Ewes-dale in 1851. She is described as a tailor’s widow and was probably related to Margaret. Elliot (b.1851) son of David, labourer at Thorlieshope, and Janet Moffat. He was a Police Constable in Jedburgh. In 1871 he married Helen Murray, who was a servant at Flatt. He was a subscriber to David Anderson’s poetry book in 1868. Elspeth (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Bapitc. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. Gordon, M.B.E. (1952–) born in the Haig, educated at St. Mary’s, Trinity and Hawick High Schools, he was an apprentice joiner with Brydons and worked for a while for Jock Oliver’s parcel delivery service. He joined the ambulance service in 1979 and has also worked with several charities, including being Chairman of the Border Holiday Group (arranging holidays for people with physical and mental learning difficulties). In 2011 he received the M.B.E. for his work with the Scottish Ambulance Service and Border Holiday
Group. He has been President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and on the Vertish Hill Sports Comnitee, as well as Session Clerk at Cavers Kirk.
He was Acting Father in 2010 and Common Riding Chief Guest in 2019. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Paterson in 1662 and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1688. James (17th C.) cottar in Dimpleknoe in Ashkirk Parish. In 1698 his daughter Janet married James Rule, herd in Whitslade. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobicote, recorded in 1717 and 1728. His children included: John (b.1717), baptised in Robertton; and David (b.1728). baptised in Cavers. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was probably related to the James recorded being hired at Braeaple in 1750. James (1756/7–1837) shepherd at Arkleton, son of John and Margaret Tait. In 1788 he married Elspeth Armstrong, and she died in 1815, aged 60. Their children included: John (b.1787); James (b.1789); Walter (1791–1803);
Simon (b.1793), who was a labourer at Arkleton; and Mary (b.1795). The family are buried at Ewes Kirkyard. James (1763/4–1837) shepder at Howpasley. He married Margaret Elliot (1762/3–1800). Their children included William and 2 who died in infancy. He secondly married Janet Brydon (1771/2–1850), who died at Rough-ley. Their son James was born in 1804, and also lived at Howpasley. James (1783–1871) son of
Arkleton in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was living at Sandyhaugh and described as ‘Formerly Ploughman’. He married Elizabeth Murray, and she appears to have already been deceased by 1841. Their children included: David (1810–71), who died at Meikledale Haugh; James (1811–70), who died at Tythehouse, Hobkirk; Robert (b.1813); Adam (1815–90), who died at Changehouse, Teviothead; Helen (b.1817); Henry (1819–94), who died at Torwoodlee; Mary (b.c.1827); and Isabella (b.c.1827). James (b.1799/1800) born in Castleton Parish. He was a game-watcher at Clerkleap in 1841. He was then living with his sister Eliza and daughter Jane. James (b.1804) son of James and Janet Brydon. Like his father, he was an agricultural labourer at Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Howpasley New’ in 1841, with his widowed mother living with his family. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living at about 34 North Hermitage Street in Newcastle-on-Tyne. In 1833 he married Esther Hardie (from Castleton Parish) in Roberton, their children including Nancy, James, John, Janet, Esther and Adam (b.1846). James (b.1829/30) son of Simon and Mary Jardine. He was a shepherd at Arkletonshiels in 1851. He was then living with his sister Elspeth and brother Adam. He was married by 1861, his wife being Margaret, and their children including Simon, John and James. He could be the James recorded as farmer at Arkleton in 1868. James (b.1829/30) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Borthwickshiels in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Adam, Francis, John Elliot and Margaret. John (d.bef. 1502) resident probably of the Holydean or Nisbet areas, who was killed along with James. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 there is mention of several men being declared fugitives for their parts in these murders, the surnames including Jack, Morrison, Rufy, Smith, Thorbrand and Weir. Additionally John Coltart in Rutherford was beheaded for the crime. The details of the events that led to these murders are not recorded. Since John’s name was given first, he was presumably either father or elder brother of James. John (16th/17th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘knokkeiper’ (i.e. clockkeeper) in 1608. John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull came to his house and wounded him, apparently on being ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. The 2 were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk, whereupon a group of other Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Sinton and other places) rescued the pair. The exact nature of the dispute is now obscure. John (17th C.) miller of Appotside Mill, witness to a sasine of 1632. He is also recorded as ‘Johnne Jacksonne’ in 1637 when his son William witnessed a sasine in Hobkirk Parish. John (17th C.) ‘webster’ at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Borthaugh in 1705. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) recorded at Todshaw in 1711 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1750 he married Bessie Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included Catherine (b.1752). John (18th C.) resident at Philliopeshiel in 1763 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the John who married Margaret Tait and had children, baptised in Roberton Parish, including: Margaret (b.1744); Bessie (b.1747); James (b.1748); John (b.1750); Bessie (b.1752); Robert (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); Isobel (b.1758) and Helen (b.1760). In 1753 the record says ‘the mother of the child being sponsor’, suggesting that he was not from Roberton, but his wife was. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Tait (probably in 1754) and their children, baptised in Ewes, included Bessie (b.1755), James (b.1757), Beatrice (b.1758), Margaret (b.1769) and Simon (b.1760). It is unclear if he could be the same as the Roberton John, whose wife’s name was the same. John (1719/20–80) shepherd at Arkletonshiels. He married Margaret Tait, who died in 1794, aged 63. Their children included James (b.1756/7), who was also shepherd at Arkleton. John (1787–1870) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong. He was at least the 3rd generation of his family to be shepherds in Ewesdale. At the age of 23 he married Betty Oliver (1789–1870), who was literally from across the road. They had 16 children, born in Castleton Parish: Walter (1811–92); Peter (1813–91); James (1814–95); George (b.c.1815); Jennet (1816–97); John (1818–95); Elspeth (1820–85); Jane Jardine (1821–1907); Mary (b.c.1822); Charles Maxwell (1824–77); Barton (1826–53); Adam (1828–1908); Simon (1829–95); Betty (1831–90); Margaret (1831–1914); and Ellen (or Helen, 1833–89). Around 1838 he emigrated to America, most of his family joining him in 1840, settling in Andes, Delaware County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘Hardon’ (probably Harden in Castleton Parish) in 1821.
when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He may be the shepherd John who was at Riccarton in 1835. John (b.1790s) son of Adam and Helen Crozier. Like his father he was shepherd at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He was there in 1835 (while another John was shepherd at Riccarton) and still listed there among Parish heads of households in 1841. He married Helen Moore and their children were: William (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1825); Helen (b.1827), married William Glendinning; Adam (b.1829); James (b.1831); Walter (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1838); David (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1843). John (b.1801/2) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a farmer at Bush in Ewesdale. In 1861 he was at Ewes, farming 2035 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Eleanor H. and their children included Thomas L. John (1815/6–76) clogger in Hawick, from Langholm, he was born in Ewesdale. He is listed as a clog-maker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 9 Howegate. He married Agnes Hunter (born in Wilton), who died in 1912, aged 83; she was described as a ‘vigorous woman, belonging to the family of grocers etc.’ Their children were Simon (who married a daughter of ‘Danny o the Dean’), Margaret (who died young), Thomas, Robert, Thomas (again), Mary (who emigrated to Australia with her mother, but died aged 16) and John (mill cashier). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (d.1909) son of John, he was known as a somewhat simple individual. He worked as cashier with A.P. Innes & Co. and with William Lockie’s. He was Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk in the early 1900s. Margaret (b.1791/2) shopkeeper at ‘Poor’s houses’ in Ewesdale. She is listed there in 1851, when she was unmarried. She was probably related to Elizabeth. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Philippus Jakson’. The other men were Scots, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. He is recorded in 1494/5 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. He could also be the Robert who was recorded in 1494/5 along with Adam Howatson, when Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remission for the crime of resetting them. Perhaps the same Robert is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as ‘Robertus Jakson’. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Perhaps the same ‘Robertus Jakson’ was also listed in 1501 among 10 men (mostly Turnbuls) whose fines were remitted. Probably the same Robert was described as tenant in Wolfcleuchhead in 1502 when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ to steal cattle and goods from Ninian Murray at Kershope, with John Turnbull of Dryden as his surety. He was described being ‘with the Laird of Howpasley’ at the same court in Jedburgh in 1502 when he had remission for stealing cattle and other goods from Kershope. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1509. Sir Walter acted as cauterer for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Robert (b.1832/3) shepherd at Wester Alemoor. His wife was Janet and their children included Janet and Adam. He made coin donations to the Museum. Simon (1793–1855) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong, he was a farm worker at Arkleton. He was living at Arkleton Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Jardine and their children included: Betty (b.1819); Elspeth (1822–74), who went out to America to join her brothers; Walter (b.1827); John (b.1825); James (b.1829); Simon (b.1831); William; Adam J. (1836–1922), who emigrated to New York state; and Thomas. He died at Dorniegil. Simon (b.1852) son of John, he lived at 9 Howegate. He married Margaret Stewart, daughter of ‘Danny o the Dean’, and was known as an ardent Liberal. Thomas (d.bef. 1580) son of Alexander, resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1579/80 he renounced his 2 half husbandlands in Lilliesleaf to Walter Riddell of that Ilk. This is because he ‘now dwells in England and is in service there and cannot, therefore, occupy the said roon’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Dalgleish. Their children included: John (b.1645); and Agnes (b.1650). probably the same Thomas witnessed a baptism in 1651 for Robert Elliot. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Bellledean in 1764. He married Isobel Thomson in Roberton in 1752. His children included Margaret (b.1758) and Richard (b.1760) and Peggy (b.1764). Patrick (b.1754), baptised in Yarrow, may also be his son. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1798. He married Mary Veitch in Cavers in 1782. Their children included

Robina (b.1798), baptised in Roberton. Thomas (b.c.1810) farm worker living at Broaddle in Roberton Parish in 1841. His wife was Harriet and their children included James, Robert, Janet, Thomas, Adam and John. Thomas (b.1810/1) from Westerkirk, he was farmer at Shankend in 1851. He was unmarried and living with his nephews Jeannie and Elizabeth Corbet at that time. In 1861 he was a carrier visiting Ormiston Lochend at the time of the census. Thomas (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. Walter (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, witnessed at Branxholme for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Walterus Jakson’. The document probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. Walter (18th C.) hind at Falnash. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot, cottar at Falnash. He married Barbara Scott in Cavers Parish in 1731. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: John (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); and Betty (b.1739). The witnesses to the 1737 baptism were Walter Wilson (servant to Walter Scott in Commonsdie) and John Telfer (Kirk Officer). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott in Commonside and John Telfer (Kirk Officer). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Walter (1803–89) younger son of Adam and Helen Crozier. He was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Braidie and elsewhere in Liddesdale. He may be the Walter, shepherd at Larriston, recorded in 1835–40. He married Nicholas Hislop. Their children were: Jean (b.1825); Elizabeth (b.1827), who married James Edgar, grocer in Castleton; Jean (again, b.1829); Isabella (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); David (b.1837); Margaret (b.1839); William (b.1842); Jamina; and Thomasina. His children were born at North Greenholm, Cleuchhead, Redmoss, Larriston Rigg and Larriston House. William (17th C.) son of John. He was tenant at Appotside Mill in 1637 when he witnessed a sasine. William (18th C.) married Mary [Laidlaw] in 1784. William (18th C.) married Agnes Lillico in Hawick in 1722. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Heap on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Miller in 1787 and their children included: Isabel (b.1788); Janet (b.1791); and Joan (b.1793). The witnesses in 1788 and 1791 were Postmaster James Inglis and Thomas Miller (surely related to his wife), and in 1793 were butcher George Deans and Thomas Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1817. William (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in 1835. William (19th C.) resident of Dinlabyre in 1868. William (b.1808/9) from Castleton, he was groom at Greenriver in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. William (b.1823/4) shepherd at Riccarton in the 1860s. He was possibly son of John, shepherd at Redmoss. His wife was Isabella and their children included christin, John, James and Robert T. William Douglas ‘Dougie’ (1941–2018) rugby international from Hawick. He grew up at 91 Burnfoot Road and attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He played rugby for the Y.M., becoming known as a fast winger. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. in 1958/9 and played until the 1970/1 season, turning out more than 200 times and being part of the team that won 10 sevens competitions in a row. He also played for the South of Scotland and received 8 caps for Scotland. He later coached the Y.M. and was Club President. He was also involved with the Boys’ Brigade in Hawick. He worked briefly in the knitwear industry, but spent most of his life in the building trade. When visiting Newcastle Races, he appeared in a crowd scene of the film Get Carter. He married Sheila Turnbull (sister of Cornet George) in 1964 and they had children Vivienne (b.1965), Caroline and Sandra (b.1969) (formerly spelled ‘Jacksone’, ‘Jakson’, ‘Jaksone’, ‘Jaksonn’, etc.).

Jack's alive (jawks-a-lIv) n., arch. a game played with a lighted match or piece of paper, passed between people, with the loser the one holding it when it goes out – ‘Jack's alive. A kind of sport. A piece of paper or match is handed round a circle, he who takes hold of it saying, ‘Jack's alive, he'se no die in my hand.’ He, in whose hand it dies or is extinguished, forfeits a wad; and all the wads are recovered only by undergoing a kind of penance, generally of a mirthful description; Teviotd.’ [Jos].

Jack-startles-a-stovy (jawk-star-tulz-a-sto-vy) n., arch. saying among shepherds when the hill-tops appear to undulate in the heat, heat haze – ‘He gave the term ‘Jack startles a stovy’, or ‘stoopy’ to the undulatory exhalations in hot weather, when the hill-tops appear to be running off, like a band of ‘startled’ cattle. When ‘Jack startles his stovie’, it is the signal for the children on the hills to go bare-footed’ [BNC1889] (also Jock-startle-a-stobie).
the Jacobites (\textit{thu-jə-kō-битс}) n. followers of the Stuarts in the 18th century, particularly during the two rebellions of 1715 and 1745. There were local Jacobite sympathisers, but support was not widespread in the Borders. Zerubabel Haig of Bemersyde was possibly the only local nobleman to support the Jacobites, while Elliot of Minto and others were in favour of King George. However, 16 men from Teviotdale joined the Jacobite force at Jedburgh. In mid-October 1715 about 200 horsemen under Lord Kenmure and Mr. Foster passed through Hawick, where they proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’ King James VIII; the Hawick Session records state ‘No sermon, in regard of ye tumult occasioned by a numerous multitude in arms against King George and his government’. It is also said that they ransacked Stobs for the armoury that they heard was there. Robert Patten’s ‘History of the Rebellion’ describes Hawick as ‘a small poor Market-Town belonging to the Duchess of Buccleuch at whose House the English Lords with their Relations, and Mr. Forster took up their Quarters’. 3 Jacobite divisions then met at Kelso and there was much debate about what course to follow. About 2 weeks later James’ Highland host, commanded by Lord Derwentwater and his brother Charles Radcliffe, marched south, coming to Hawick from Jedburgh. Some officers, including Derwentwater, Radcliffe and Kenmure, were quartered in the Tower, while the Highland host were encamped on the Moor. There was a near mutiny there, with the Highlanders refusing to march into England, preferring to fight the enemy on Scottish ground. They spent the night of October 29th at Hawick, and that night there was a false alarm raised, with speculation that it was a ruse to test the Highlanders. The next day the soldiers marched on to Langholm and were later convinced to cross into England. The Session book records succinctly ‘No Sermon, Kenmure, Englishes and Highlanders in ye town’. There are several other entries in the Session records of official days of thanksgiving or praying for the success of the King’s armies and such like. The country was generally in an unstable state at this time, the Hawick Minister saying in 1716 that ‘the reason was that he had not sooner begun to catechize, the countrie was in a tumult occasioned by manie rising of arms against ye present government of our sovereign, King George’. Adam Turnbull of Denesycye (near Hawthornside) was also said to be a Stuart supporter and convinced to give up his family lands and flee in 1715. During the 1745 rebellion the people of Hawick appear to have offered essentially no support; however, there were probably individuals who supported the Jacobite cause, as in the case against a Selkirk shoemaker in 1743 for ‘drinking the Pretender’s health’. Part of a force under Lord Balmerino, along with cavalry, spent the night in Hawick in November of that year, while ‘Bonnie Prince Charlie’ stayed at Larriston. Robert Wilson tells several stories about 1745 which are probably confused with events of 1715, for example that Walter Gledstains of Whittlaw was an officer under the Prince, and that a lady from Hawick followed the Prince all the way to Carlisle, but refused to be given an audience. An old man called Charles Stewart residing in Hawick Parish at the end of the 18th century was said to have been an illegitimate son of Bonnie Prince Charlie; however, many people were called Charles around that time. There is also a tale (no doubt largely fictional!) of a Hawick man who acted as guide when the army passed through in 1745, meeting with Lord Lovat, and later becoming a barber in Newcastle, where he slit the throat of one of the main testifiers against Lovat. A butter dish, said to have been used when Bonnie Prince Charlie dined at Newmill (although that seems doubtful) was presented to the Museum in 1856. Another story tells of a detachment of the Jacobite army camping near Spittal-on-Rule and after having their paymaster’s money-bag stolen the Highlanders threatened to burn Denholm, after which the money was returned. When some of the Highlanders marched up the Rule valley towards Carlisle they enlisted Sam Oliver, the Hobkirk schoolmaster to be their guide through Liddesdale. When a small part of Charlie’s army passed through Castleton they carried off a bee-hive belonging to a weaver from there; after failing to get it back he is said to have proclaimed ‘Let them go, (with a jeer), I have furnished the Prince a larger number, in full armour, with several months’ provision, than the greatest chieftan in the Highlands’ – ‘Well six full months and mair went by The Prince was then in hiding He’d rued the day he didn’a bide and sie Hawick’s Common-Riding’ [T].

Jacob’s Ledder (\textit{jə-kəbz-le-dur}) n. former popular name for the Hunder Steps.

ejade (\textit{jād}) n., poet. a term of abuse applied to a woman, hussy – ‘But canna bide the mim-mou’d jade, Who seems as if she’d rin red mad When ought is said agee’ [JoHa], ‘The slave o’ what? a sort o’ mental gaming, O’ sleekie jades, an’ foolish, fushrie rhyming’ [JoHa] (cf. \textit{yaud}).
Jaeger

Jaeger (ja-gur) n. international knitwear manufacturers, which opened its first outlet in London in 1884, founded on the dress theories espoused in Dr. Gustav Jaeger’s ‘Health Culture’. There was a factory in Hawick from the early 1970s until the mid-1990s. This was based at the former Turner & Rutherford’s Mansfield Mills, which is now flats.

Jafra the Piper (jaw-fra-thu-pur) n. nickname for James Oliver.

jag (jagw) v. to prick – ‘A jagged ma finger on a preen’, ‘The subject’s changed, it’s oot o’ time An’ no worth while to drag The dreary windbag back to licht Its blawn up sides to jag’ [FL], n. a prick, prickle, thorn, injection – ‘the doctor gien back to licht Its blawn up sides to jag’ [FL], [n., arch.]

jaggy (jaw-gee) adj. spiky, prickly, pointed – ‘deh grab that flourer, its stem’s a jaggy’, n. a nettle or prickly plant – ‘baith nettles an thistles er jaggies’ (also written ‘jaggie’).

jaicket (ja-ki) n. a jacket – ‘Drivers then aye hed ti keep their jaickets and hats on . . . ’ [DH], ‘Coost chestnut jaickets turn their white linings’ [IWL], ‘Jailiss that yout hearts should ach’ [JoHa], ‘The subject’s changed, it’s oot o’ time An’ no worth while to drag The dreary windbag back to licht Its blawn up sides to jag’ [FL], ‘Ye jairgling chaps wha stockings mak’,” Nae wonder that yout hearts should ach’ [JoHa], ‘The subject’s changed, it’s oot o’ time An’ no worth while to drag The dreary windbag back to licht Its blawn up sides to jag’ [FL], ‘Ye jairgling chaps wha stockings mak’.

jairg (jarg) v., arch. to creak, grind, make a grating sound – ‘Ye jairgins chaps wha stockings mak’, Nae wonder that your hearts should ach’ [JoHa], ‘A duist hit jairgin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei gurrl!’ [ECS], ‘Thon door’s aye jairgin’” [GW], n., arch. a creaking sound – ‘An’ yetts play jairg, and dubs play splash . . . ’ [JoHa] (cf. jerg).

James (jamz) n. name of 7 Stuart (or Stew- art) Kings of Scotland, including 2 Kings of the United Kingdom. James I (1394–1437) King from 1406, although in name only until 1424, with others effectively ruling in his absence, He had been sent away from Scotland to avoid his uncle the Duke of Albany; but was captured by the English and spent 18 years in effective captivity. He returned to Scotland and led the killing of Albany’s relatives. There was dispute over his rights to the throne, leading to him being killed.
in a plot involving the Earl of Atholl (Albany’s brother), possibly in a blocked up sewer at Blackfriars Monastery. In 1412, while captive at Croydon, he granted a confirming charter of the lands of Hawick (as well as Drumlanrig and Selkirk) to William Douglas of Drumlanrig; the charter was written in his own hand and still survives. James II (1430–60) King in the period 1437–60, he was crowned at Kelso Abbey. After the death of the Regent, the 5th Earl Douglas, he schemed to have other Douglas killed, and had the Black Douglas (William, the 6th Earl) beheaded at a state dinner. He granted John Langlands the half Barony of Wilton in 1451. His defeat of the Douglas forces at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455 led to the weakening of the strength of the House of Douglas, including their power in Teviotdale, which shifted to the Scotts. He became heavily involved in military conflicts with England, but brought peace and prosperity to the Nation for a short time. He also moved the capital from Perth to Edinburgh. He married Mary of Gueldres. He died when a cannon exploded during the siege of Roxburgh castle, and it is said that a holly bush on the grounds of Floors Castle later marked the spot. James III (c.1452–88) King from 1460. Born the Duke of Rothesay, he was apparently not a popular King and was also reportedly bisexual. He was crowned at Kelso Abbey a week after his father died. During his minority he was under the control of the Boyd family. In 1464 he granted lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Kirkurd in gratitude for services to himself and his father. He married Margaret of Denmark, receiving the Orkneys and Shetlands as a dowry. There were ongoing feuds with his 2 brothers and with other noblemen. An army was raised against him at the Battle of Sauchieburn, in which his own son fought against him. He was killed immediately afterwards by an opponent disguised as a priest. Just a few days before his death he regranted the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas, after Douglas had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him ‘against all that live or die shall’.

James IV (1473–1513) King from 1488, he was involved in the Battle of Sauchieburn against his father James III. He is regarded as an effective and popular ruler. In an attempt to make peace with Henry VII he married Margaret Tudor in 1503, celebrated in poetry as the union of the thistle and the rose (and taking place at Galashiels Market Cross). He also visited Eskdale in 1503. In 1510 he visited Rulewater to suppress some outlaws there; he is supposed to have publicly humiliated a group of about 200 Turnbulls at Spittal-on-Rule, hanging perhaps 20 of them. He removed Douglas’s lands of Hawick in 1510, but re-granted them in the 1511 charter, which contained the ‘burgh of barony’ status for Hawick. When Henry VIII invaded France he was thrown into a new conflict with England. He led the Scots at Flodden and was killed there – ‘Royal James still urged the battle, Though forewarned it would be fatal’ [JH], ‘The fatal arrow Breathless laid the royal hero; Round him youths and warriors hoary, Ended their career of glory’ [T]. James V (1512–42) King from 1513, when only 18 months old. During his minority the country was ruled by his mother and then by the Duke of Albany. Later his step-father, the Earl of Angus, tried to wield power. In 1526 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Hawick) attempted to rescue him from the control Angus near Melrose. He visited Jedburgh in both 1526 and 1529. He later turned on the Douglases, banishing the Earl of Angus and persecuting other members of that family. In 1530 he put together an army from the loyal Lairds and marched on the Borders to try to suppress the worst of the ‘Theives and lymmaris’. This led to the execution of William Cockburn of Henderland and Adam Scott of Tushielaw. He also had Johnnie Armstrong and several of his supporters hanged at Caerlerrig in a manner, which was considered grossly unfair at the time, giving rise to a ballad. He was traditionally associated with Hawick through the ‘Hab o Hawick’ episode, when he is said to have stayed at Drumlanrig’s Tower. In fact in that 1530 expedition (as traced in the ‘Household Books’) it is known that he stayed at Caerlerrig and then at Allan Water (signing a charter at Priesthaugh), and probably got no closer to Hawick before moving through Ewesdale. However, an English letter suggests that he passed through Hawick in November 1542, en route to the fateful battle at Solway Moss (although Scottish accounts say that he stayed at Lochmaben Castle). He married Madeleine of France, and later Mary of Guise. He died at Falkland Palace, after the Scots defeat at Solway Moss, apparently out of a lack of will to live. He was succeeded by his infant daughter Mary (‘Queen of Scots’). His illegitimate sons included: James, ‘the Regent Moray’; James, Commendator of Melrose and Kelso; Robert, Prior of Whithorn; Robert, Earl of Orkney; Adam Prior of Charter House;
Jameson, Lord Darnley, Commendator of Cold-ingham. James VI (1566–1625) King of Scotland from 1567. In 1570 his army gathered at Hawick for a ‘Raid’. In 1592, Francis Earl of Bothwell and others tried to capture him at Falkland, this leading to a number of Border Lairds being denounced as rebels, including Walter Scott of Harden and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He became James I of England in 1603. He was son of Mary and Lord Darnley, and was raised as a Presbyterian. He was never a very popular ruler in England, but only briefly returned to Scotland once after being crowned in London. After assuming the English throne he turned some of his attention to the Borders, setting up a commission in 1605, which appointed Sir William Cranston to ‘tame’ the Borders on the Scottish side. This spread terror across the Borders, including a huge number of hangings and forced emigrations, and led to great hardship for many local clans. However, it also led to the region becoming much more peaceful, with the ‘Marches’ now being referred to as the ‘Middle Shires’. In 1617 he returned to Scotland, staying at Drumlanrig with Sir William Douglas, and he visited Cavers house on his way to Edinburgh. Known as one of the most intellectual Kings, he fostered culture in Britain and authorised the popular English translation of the Bible. He married Anne of Denmark and was succeeded by their son Charles – ‘A tale of bygone days I sing, When James the Sixth was Scotia’s king; Oft then the Borderland did ring With sounds of sternest strife ...’ [JCG]. James VII (1633–1701) King from 1685–89. Younger brother of Charles II, he was Duke of York for much of his life, and converted to Catholicism while in exile in France. This led to his unpopularity throughout most of Britain. He made attendance at conventicles a treasonous act, but had to include tolerance to Protestant dissenters in his laws of toleration to Catholics, allowing Presbyterian ministers to return to their parishes in 1686. His is also known for having New York named after him, as well as for being heavily involved with the slave trade. The Duke of Monmouth (and Buccleuch), Charles II’s illegitimate son tried to seize the throne from him and was executed in 1685. In 1688 he was ousted in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ by the Protestant William of Orange, husband of his daughter Mary. Ministers who continued to pray for him (rather than to William and Mary) were deprived from their parishes. He died in exile in France, continuing to claim his right to the throne. His son James Francis Edward Stuart (‘the Old Pretender’) took up the Jacobite cause to regain the crown for the Stuarts.

Jameson (jām-sin) n. George (19th/20th C.) son of Christopher and Agnes Scott, from Brauxton Moor (near Flodden Field), Northumberland. He was gamekeeper at Ancrum, then Chisholm and became gamekeeper at Wolfelee in 1893. In 1877 he married Agnes Hislop. James (18th C.) surgeon of Kelso who was involved in the sale of Adderstone by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry to Capt. John Douglas, brother to the Laird of Cavers in 1750. Rev. William (c.1593–1661) educated at Edinburgh University, he was admitted as a minister at Peebles in 1617, and became minister at Langnewton. In 1621 he complained about John Ker of Langnewton and others for violently interfering with grain that was impounded for his use. In 1631 he complained that several Kers from around Ancrum, Douglas of Timpendean and others took his teinds. He was one of 51 ministers who signed a Protest for the Liberties of the Kirk. In 1638 he signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick. In 1640 he was translated to Jedburgh, but had to take on an assistant in 1658. He took part in 7 General Assemblies. His son John was minister at Eccles (ass also Jamieson).

James’s Plantin (jām-zeez-plawn-in) n. James’s Plantation, wooded area on the former estate of Synton, located just to the south of Syntroncorses.

the James Thomson Brig (thu-jāmz-tom-sin-brig) n. modern footbridge linking Teviot Road with Commercial Road, from near the bottom of Mill Port to the back of the Burns Club. It was built in 2005 and named after local poet James Thomson.

the James Thomson Statue (thu-jāmz-tom-sin-staw-yoo) n. commemorative bronze statue, sculpted by Bill Landles, with some involvement by Iain Scott. It was unveiled in 2006, beside the bridge named after the local poet. It depicts Thomson seated at his writing desk and incorporates 4 tablets with some of his best-known verses, oriented in relevant directions, while above ‘mony a costly wraith’s been twined Ti grace his honest brow’. A smaller plaque dedicates the work to Anne Redpath. A few stones built into the plinth came from the Auld Mid Raw. Thomson himself is facing ‘Where Slitrig dances doon the glen to join the Teviot waters’.

Jamie (jā-me) n. diminutive or hypocorism for ‘James’ (also ‘Jimmie’/‘Jimmy’ as well as the former ‘Jemmie’).
Jamie Adams

Jamie Adams (jā-mee-aw-dumz) n. Hawick character, probably of the 19th century. He could be the James Adams from England who was a road labourer living in Hawick in 1851 – ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Jamie Cant (jā-mee-kawnt) n. nickname of James Broon.

Jamie Jolly (jā-mee-jo-lee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Anon Jock Beowlie shuffles by, And Hie Hi hobbles ahint pell-mell; There’s Jamie Jolly watchin’ a skly, And Daft Jamie ringin’ St. Mary’s bell’ [HI].

Jamie Nichol’s Trough (jā-mee-nil-kulz-trof) n. alternative name for Mag Nichol’s Trough.

Jamieson (jā-mee-sin) n. Andrew (b.c.1800) innkeeper in Denholm who was locally well-known for his collection of historical artefacts. He was listed as a vintner in Denholm in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His personal museum is described in a poem by John Halliday, published in 1847, ‘Epistle to Naturalists and Antiquarians’, which was ‘written on viewing a collection of antiquities, preserved beasts, birds, reptiles &c., belonging to Mr Andrew Jamieson, Innkeeper, Denholm’. He married Helen Beattie in 1825 and their children included: Agnes; Margaret; Helen; and Isabella – ‘I’ve tell’t ye a’ o’ Jamie’s hame, Sae gang an’ see; Weel is he worthy o’ his fame, An’ three times three’ [JoHa].

Andrew (b.1827/8) shoemaker in Denholm. His wife was Helen and they had a daughter Isabella. Archibald (b.c.1800) watchman at a woollen factory. He was listed as a labourer at Wilton Dean among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Roadhead with his wife Isobel and their children Gideon, John, Archibald, Margaret and Agnes.

Rev. Henry M. ‘Harry’ minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Ashkirk, 1969–76. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1702. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot in Galalaw. James (b.1817/8) from Cavers Parish, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at Roadhead. He married Mary Ann McKinnon and their children included Isobel (b.c.1841). He was recorded in prison in Jedburgh in 1843. James (c.1838–bef. 1905) born in Hawick, among his childhood friends were John Inglis and James Winthrope. From a relatively poor family, he received little schooling, but from an early age had an aptitude for drawing and reading. He is probably the James living with Janet and Margaret (perhaps his mother) at Purdom’s Yard in 1841. In 1851 he was living on Mather’s Close with his aunt Janet and 2 Margarets (probably his mother and sister). At about 14 he became an apprentice with James Tait, druggist, and his employer encouraged him to pursue his literary interests. At one point he took down the words of ‘The Sunflower’, the only known surviving poem of Dr. John Douglas, allowing it to be later printed in the Hawick Advertiser. He became a member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society in 1858, reading his first paper there that year, and remaining associated with that society until he left Hawick. His first poem ‘Home Sickness’, was published in the Hawick Advertiser in 1856, and he made frequent contribution there afterwards. 3 of his verses appeared in James Watson’s ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859), namely ‘Oor Ain Fireside’, ‘My Grannie an’ her Spinnin’-Wheel’ and ‘A Voice from the Fields’. He is probably best known for his poem ‘The Aicht o’clock Bell’, about the ringing of the curfew bells in Hawick. His poem ‘Eventide in Teviotdale’ received a prize when it was published in ‘The Key’. He intended to publish a volume of his poetry, but this never appeared. He had several temporary positions in Hawick, then left the Town permanently in 1861 to train as an engraver with James R. Hope in Edinburgh. He then worked with Mould & Todd, where he renewed his acquaintanceship with the engraver C.O. Murray (brother of ‘Dictionary’ Murray). Apart from a short stint in Bradford he remained in Edinburgh until about 1888 when he moved to Aberdeen. James (1919/20–60) born in Hawick, he worked in the Post Office and joined the Royal Corps of Signals in 1939. In 1948 he was appointed Assistant Controller of Posts in the Federated Malay States, staying there until 1959 and then moving to Western Australia. His wife, Margaret Stewart Tweedie operated a store and post office there until her death in 1973, aged 60. Their children included J. Jardin (b.1943) and Kay (b.1952). Rev. Dr. John (1759–1838) Scottish lexicographer. Son of a Glasgow minister, he became a theology student at age 14 and a minister at 20. He started at Colmonell in Ayrshire and was Anti-Burgher minister at Nicholson Street in Edinburgh from 1797, accepting the call that John Young turned down in order to stay in Hawick. He helped to re-unite the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches. He was a keen antiquarian, with a particular interest in language. His 'Eymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language' (1808) was a unique work for its time, using illustration from both old and modern Scots. The Supplement, which appeared in 1825 had the assistance of people from all over Scotland; there are many descriptions therein of Teviotdale words and idioms, which are otherwise unrecorded (these are usually noted as either ‘Roxb.’ or ‘Teviot.”). One person who helped him directly was Mrs. Patrick, the eldest daughter of Rev. Young of the Green Kirk in Hawick. Others in the Roxburghshire area included Thomas Wilkie from Innerleithen, James Fair of Langlee, the Shortreeds of Jedburgh, James Hogg (the Ettrick Shepherd) and Hogg’s nephew Robert. He laid the essential groundwork for what would become the Scottish National Dictionary. He was a keen angler and later in life spent time every summer fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries.

John (b.c.1790) shoemaker in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on Main Street with his wife Janet Laidlaw and children James, Catherine, William, John, Andrew and Peter (also written ‘Jamisone’, ‘Jammison’ and variants; cf. Jameson).

Jamieson’s Croft (jā-mee-sinz-kroft) n. former croft near Hawick, the name being used long after the farmstead itself was gone. It is mentioned by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900, but the precise location is uncertain.

Jamie Tackets (jā-mee-taw-kits) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the early 19th century, known for his smuggling – ‘Wullie the Paille, Gled Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI], ‘There’s Jamie Tackets o’ Hawick, And other two also, They saddled their horses on Sunday, And off to Boomer did go’ [T] (perhaps related to the small nails).

Jamie Tamson (jā-mee-tam-sin) n. familiar name for James Thomson.

Jamie Telfer (jā-mee-tel-fur) n. ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodheid’, ballad telling of the Captain of Newcastle stealing the cattle of Jamie Telfer of Dodhead, who then goes to raise the fray. It is best known from the version in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’, where Telfer roused the Scotts, who rode off in pursuit, killing all the English and capturing their cattle, but leading to the death of Willie Scott. In another version (sometimes referred to as the Sharp manuscript and entitled ‘...i’ the Fair Dodhead’) it is the Elliots who are roused and the Scotts who refuse to help Telfer. There is much circumstantial evidence that Sir Walter changed the words to switch the Scott and Elliot roles, thereby mangling the geographical sense of the ballad; he is thus attacked in an essay by Col. Elliot. The existence of multiple versions is one of the reasons why the location of ‘the Fair Dodheid’ is uncertain. In the pro-Elliot version it is likely to be the former farmstead in the Ettrick valley near Single, while in the pro-Scott version it would make more sense if it was in the Dod Burn valley, although there is no evidence there was ever a place there called Dodhead. Andrew Lang wrote a chapter on the ballad, defending Sir Walter Scott, and arguing that in the end it is a work of fiction, rather than history. Whatever the details of the original version or its historical accuracy, it remains one of the few Border ballads where some of the action takes place in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick.

Jamie the Poeter (jā-mee-thoo-pō-i’ur) n. local nickname for James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Jamie the Scaur (jā-mee-thoo-skawr) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Dan Narry and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porrritch Jock’ [HI].

Jane Dice’s Kirn see Jenny Dice’s Kirn

jannie (ja-nee) n. a janitor, especially in a school – ‘...the tug-o-war team were trained be Jock Heggie the jannie’ [IWL].

Januar (ja-new-ar, jan-war) n., arch. January – ‘...writin at Hawik the penult day of Januar’ [RBA1561], ‘...that the said Mr Blair did upon the twenty-third day of Januar immediatlie last bypast marry the said John Young upon the above designed Margaret Clerke ...’ [PR1706], ‘Each ’eer, as Januar – end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu’ murns ...’ [DH].

Janus (ja-nis) n. column in the Hawick News, typically stirring up local issues. It was originated by Neil Mackay, but written by several contributors over the years.

jap (jawp) v., arch. to splash, bespatter – ‘Harry, all ‘japped’ over with soapsuds ...’ [RM], n. a spot of mud, splash of dirty water (also ‘jaap’).

japperty-jee (jaw-pur’-ee-jee) n., arch. wreck and ruin – ‘It’s a ‘ti japperty-jee’ [GW] (also ‘jaapertie-jee’).

jappit (jaw-pe’, -pi’) pp., arch. splashed, splattered – ‘...whan A’omwer geetin jaappeet an splairggeat wui dirrt, or dunshit wui folk’ [ECS],
the Japs

‘Ma top-coat an ma breek-feet ir aa jaapeet wui glaar’ [ECS] (also ‘jaupit’; see jap).

the Japs (thu-jawps) v., pl. occasional nick-name for people from Selkirk (originating among rugby supporters, and said to have come from the appearance of some housing on the way into the town from Hawick).

jar (jawr) n., poet. disharmony, dispute – ‘For Border chieftains soon began To blow the coal of war; And over all fair Liddesdale, Spread robbery, blood, and jar’ [JTe].

Jardine (jär-, jär-, javr-din, -deen) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in ‘Heugh-head’, although it is unclear which Heughhead this might have been. He was mentioned in 1687 when the will of his wife Isobel ‘Rickeltown’ is recorded. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for William Gardner in Hawick in 1705 and the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver James Brown in the same year. He could be the Adam who married Helen Cook in Hawick in 1702 or the Adam who married Margaret Frazer in Hawick in 1706. Adam (1758–1811) son of weaver Andrew and Betty Brown, he was a miller in Hawick Parish and may also have worked as a carter. He is recorded in 1790 as ‘Under Miller’ when an unnamed child of his died; this was on the same day as the child of miller John Scott, perhaps suggesting he was under-miller of Hawick Mill (and that the same disease took the lives of the new-born children). In 1794 he was a ‘workman’. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’, b.1759) Murray in 1783, in Ewes Parish and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1783), born at Howgill in Ewes, who married Andrew Scott, from Morebattle; Andrew (d.1787); an unnamed child (d.1790); John (b.1789/90); Isobel (d.1794), who died in infancy; and Helen (c.1796–1860), who died in Morebattle, unmarried. In 1794 he secondly married Jane Graham, who may have died in 1806. The witnesses in 1783 were John and William Murray (surely related to his wife). He died in Hawick. Adam (18th/19th C.) married Jane Graham in Hawick in 1798. Adam (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, living at Bygate in 1841. He married Jean Watson and their children included: Abraham (b.1833); and Isabella (b.1838/9). Alexander (b.1801/2) from Glasgow, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He was one of the first Deacons and first Trustees of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick, in the late 1840s. He is recorded at 8 Teviot Crescent in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet. Their children included Elizabeth, Jessie, John, Alexander Pringle, Thomas and Jean. Andrew (17th C.) tenant at Dykeraw. He was listed in 1684 among many people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Adderstoneshie listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as ‘Andrew Jirdin’ among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Andrew ‘Gyrden’, married to Janet Goodfellow, whose children Adam (b.1684) and James (b.1688) were baptised in Hawick; the witnesses in 1684 were William Swan and Patrick Bridges (both weavers) and in 1688 were William Scott of Whitehaugh (suggesting some connection to that family or area) and Robert Scott. He is probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for weaver John Jolly in 1704 and for James Leithead in 1704. He was a weaver in 1709 when he witnessed another baptism for merchant Walter Bryson. He was probably the man recorded as weaver ‘Andrew Girdin’ when he was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the ‘Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was ‘Andrew Jerden older’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver David Reid. His first wife was probably Janet Bridges (daughter of William), with children including: Thomas (b.1671); William (b.1673); Margaret (b.1678); Andrew (b.1680), also a weaver; and an unnamed son (b.1682). The witnesses in 1671 and 1680 were William Bridges (probably his father-in-law) and William Swan (who was a weaver), in 1673 were Walter Purdom and William Bridges and in 1678 were Patrick and Adam Bridges. Isobel may have been another daughter. John (b.1690), baptised in Hawick, was probably also his son. Andrew (b.1680) weaver in Hawick, son of Andrew, with his mother being Janet Bridges and his step-mother being Janet Goodfellow. He was recorded as ‘Adam [sic] Jerden younger weaver’ in one version of a baptismal record of 1709. The member of the Council recorded in 1711 was either him or his father. He was ‘younger weaver’ in 1711. In 1715 he petitioned the Hawick Session to reinstate the place for his wife’s stool in the Kirk, she having been in Ewes Parish temporarily. Probably the same Andrew was questioned by the Session in 1718 about why he was seen coming out of the Beadle’s house at a late hour of the night. He may be the weaver who witnessed baptisms for butcher Robert Hardie in 1723 and 1726 and for shoemaker George Oliver in 1745. He married Helen Cook in Hawick in 1702 and their children included Janet (b.1703), Margaret (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707), James (b.1708), Beatrix (b.1709), Jean (b.1711), John (b.1713), James (b.1717), William (b.1717), Helen (b.1718), Christian (b.1719), Andrew (b.1721) and Elizabeth (b.1722). The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Jasper Richardson and gardener William Gardner, in 1706 were James Gray (tenant in Whitlaw) and weaver James Wight, in 1708 were weavers Thomas Briggs and John Oliver, in 1709 were John and Jasper Richardson, in 1711 were weaver Thomas Briggs and gardener William Gardner, in 1713 were William Gardner and John Napier, in 1721 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker John Scott, and in 1722 were Walter Scott (probably the Minister’s servant) and John Cunningham (perhaps the Minister’s son).

Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Margaret Fraser, who was also from Hawick Parish. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, possibly Burgh Officer or joiner. In 1732 he was paid for mending the beam for the weights of the clock in St. Mary’s Kirk. And in 1735 the Bailies and Council elected him ‘to keep the town clock sufficiently to his power under the penalty of forfeiting a year’s salary’. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) probably the Andrew, son of Andrew, baptised in 1721. He was a weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Brown, who died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Isobel (b.1743); Helen (b.1745); and Adam (b.1758). The witnesses in 1743 were baker John Kedie and wright James Roger and in 1745 were Wal-ter Scott (probably the Minister’s servant) and John Cunningham (perhaps the Minister’s son).

Jardine

farmer at Riccarton in the same year. Probably the same Charles was recorded as a 20-year-old farmer at Dinlabyre in 1841. He may be the son of Walter baptised in Castleton in 1817. Gavin (d.bef. 1535) recorded as ‘unquhill Gawin Jardin’ when a charter was revoked involving the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig, in favour of him. It is unclear whether his family was local. George (b.1838/9) tailor in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living on Langholm Street with his mother Elizabeth Swan and his siblings Margaret A. and William M. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was at Dinlabyre in 1784 when one of his children was baptised. He is recorded as ‘Mr. Gilbert Jardin, Dinlawbyre’ in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was recorded in the period 1789–92 in the Horse Tax Rolls at Dinlabyre with 1 horse. His surname was ‘Jerdin’ in 1797 when described as a footman at Haggiehaugh in Castleton Parish, working for Col. William Elliot. He married Isabel Sharp (from Southdean) in 1765. Their children included: James (b.1766); Helen (b.1771); Janet (b.1773); Isabel (b.1782); and Gilbert (b.1784). Robert (b.1778), farmer at Harwood on Teviot, may also have been his son (based on his children’s names). Hector (16th C.) tenant of Swinestead in Kirkton Parish. He was in ‘in Swynsteids’ along with James Murray when they (along with several Elliots) witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains. Helen ‘Nelly’ (d.1816) resident of Hawick Parish. Her death, along with ‘Frenchmans Bastard Child’, is recorded in 1816. It is unclear whose daughter she was. Presumably the father of her child was a French prisoner of war. James (17th/18th C.) witness to a baptism for merchant Michael Briggs in Hawick in 1712. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in Lymiecleuch in 1719 when his daughter Jane was baptised in Cavers Parish. James (b.1727), William (b.1732) and James (again, b.1734), baptised in Cavers, are probably also his children. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Arkleton in Ewesdale in 1785–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 farm horses and a saddle horse. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. His name there is spelled ‘Jardane’. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He is probably the son of
Jardine

Gilbert, born in Castleton Parish in 1766. It is unclear if he was the same man as the farmer at Larriston. He may be the James recorded aged 81 in 1841, living in Castleton village with his 29-year-old daughter Janet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Jardine and their children included: Isobel (b.1801); Robert (b.1805); Janet (b.1806); Helen (b.1808); and Betty (b.1813). James (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Larriston on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He is also recorded at Larriston in 1874. He is probably related to other Jardines who farmed in Liddesdale and was probably succeeded by James. He may be the James of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He may also be the James of Thorlieshope listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1819, along with his son Walter. James (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Irving and their children included Isabel (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); and Elizabeth (b.1838). James (d.c.1810) tenant farmer at Wauchope. His sons were John and Walter. He had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood in 1763. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Oliver and their children included Elizabeth (b.1814). James (18th/19th C.) keeper of a public house in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastleton among male heads of households in 1835, and ‘late innkeeper’ 1837–41. James of Thorlieshope (1809/10–46) eldest son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He was tenant farmer at Arkleton, being listed there in 1841. His son-in-law was Dr. Charles Maxwell, who had the lease of the farm at Riccarton. He died at Arkleton and was buried in Castleton. James (b.1815/6) born in Ecclefechan, son of mason John and Agnes Halliday. He was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at the head of Silver Street, in 1851 at about 14 Loan and in 1861 at 5 Loan. Probably the same ‘hosier’ James was in Jedburgh Jail in 1868. He married Beatrix Laidlaw in Hawick in 1836. Their children included: Margaret (b.1837); Agnes (b.1839); and Walter Brown (b.1841). In 1848 he secondly married Elizabeth Rodden in Hawick. Their children John (b.1849), Agnes (b.1851) and Elizabeth (b.1853) were baptised at Hawick Free Kirk. His wife (previously married to a Ballantyne) also had children Margaret and Charles. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1839 he married Janet Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. James (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabella Beattie and their son James was baptised in 1846. James of Larriston (19th C.) recorded as a principal landowner in Castleton Parish in the 1850s and 60s. He purchased Larriston from George Scott-Elliot in 1843 for £29,000. He was James ‘Esq., of Larriston, Dryfesdahl, Lockerbie’ who was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s, and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire at about the same time. In 1874 he was listed as owner of Over and Nether Larriston, as well as Larriston Rig and Blackhope. It seems likely he was son of the previous James of Larriston. He may be the James of Thorlieshope recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and the Jardine of Thorlieshope on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. James (1852–1927) local poet, who always signed ‘J.J. Weensland’. He was a native of Dumfriesshire, being born at Broadmeadow, Ecclefechan, son of George. He was orphaned at the age of 9, and at 13 went to work for a manufacturer in Lockerbie. Not long after he moved to Weensland, where he served an apprenticeship in a tweed warehouse. He was said to be a regular attendee of evening classes. Due to an injury he gave up work as a warehouseman and became a tweed merchant, based on Croft Road. He contributed poems regularly to the local press and lived most of his life in Hawick. He served as President of the Border Bards Association in 1881. In 1896 he published the article ‘Weensland: Past and Present, et al.’ of Larriston (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Turn-was son of Adam and Margaret Murray, as described on his death certificate. He was a shoemaker in Langholm in 1861 and was described as ‘Post Messenger’ in Langholm in 1871. In 1812 he married Janet (or Jane), daughter of Walter Scott and Margaret Kennedy; she was born in Ettrick Parish. Their children included Walter, William, Thomas and James. John (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Graham and their children included William (b.1833). John of Thorlieshope (b.1811) son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He farmed at Arkleton from the time his brother James died in 1846. He is listed as ‘Esq., of Thorlieshope, Arkleton, Ewes’ in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. He was also of ThorliesHope in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was still of Thorlieshope in the 1860s. He is listed at Arkleton in 1861, farming 2000 acres and employing 1 labourer. He was listed as owner of Thorlieshope on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He remained unmarried. His support of the Liddesdale route for the railway was unpopular in Langholm – ‘Has Jardine gane to mind his dogs An’ left the maps to minin’ rogues; He may invest in tups an’ hoggs, But mind I’ve said it, His cash will sink in Plashett’s bogs As fast’s he’s made it’ [BM1907]. John (19th C.) married Ellen French. Their son Thomas Welsh was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1847. John (b.1813/4) tenant of Ruecastle farm in 1837, and listed on the 1841 census. Jean Cumming’s (jeen-ku-minz, ki-minz) n. shop run by Jean Cumming (or ‘Kimming’), situated on the north side of the Howegate in the early 19th century. It was well known for selling a wide variety of ‘small-wares’, dealing with almost everything edible or useful. The shop was in an old pended house, and was reached by descending 2 steps. It had no window at the front, but had its door in halves, so the owner could lean out the top while talking with passers-by. The room at the back had a small window and was the ‘Widow Cumming’s’ house. The building was

Jean the Ranter (jeen-thu-rawn-tur) n. character in a poem written by Old Hobbie of Skelfhill. She kept an alehouse at Branholme, and was said to indulge in witchcraft, making Capt. Maitland fall in love with her daughter ‘The Bonny Lass of Branksome’. Further information from James Grieve, tenant in Branholme Park, suggested that she was Jane Scott and kept an inn at Scatterpenny. She was presumably a widow at the time of the song, which (if it describes historical events) appears to be set about the late 17th century. It is possible she was the Jean Scott listed as a householder on the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

jeck (jek) v., arch. to discard, disband, break up, jilt, give up – ‘When we got tired of some too well-hidden, the cry would go up. ‘Oot, oot, oot, the game’s jecket up!’ [HAST1958], ‘She jeckit ’im up again, the limmer!’ [GW], to dislocate a joint, throw out of place by jerking – ‘A’ve jecket ma cuit’ [ECS] (similar to ‘jack’ in English).

the Jedburgh Hounds

Jedburgh (jed-bu-ru) n. official name for Jethart (the name first occurs in relation to ‘Jedburgh Forest’ in the early 14th century, but this modern anglicised form was not applied to the town until a document of 1630; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Jedl-brugh’).

Jeddart Justice see Jethart Justice

Jedfit (jed-fi) n. Jedfoot, former station on the Jedburgh Railway of the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. The nearby ‘Jedfit Brig’ is the main road bridge across the foot of the Jed on the A698 from Hawick to Kelso.

Jedforest (jed-fo-rist) n. another name for Jedburgh, or the area around Jedburgh, used for example by the rugby team. ‘Jedburgh Forest’ was a former barony and regality, which included Southdean Parish and other outlying lands. The Lordship of Jedforest was held by the Douglases (since at least 1324) and was granted to Englishmen during the time of occupation of Roxburghshire in the 14th century. It was later held by the Homes and came into the hands of the Crown in 1539, which resulted in a surviving rental roll of 1541, listing the tenants and values of about 40 farms. The lands were it was valued at more than £4400 in 1811. The rugged terrain was used as cover by the Scots forces harassing the English garrison at Jedburgh Castle in the 1330s and 1340s. The Lordship was referred to as ‘Jedward Forest’ in c.1680.

the Jedforest Club (thu-jed-fo-rist-klub) n. club set up in 1810 to serve the gentlemen of the area around Jedburgh, probably inspired by the older Forest Club of the Ettrick valley. The founder was William, Earl of Ancram (later Earl of Lothian) along with 23 other men. The Club met quarterly at the Spread Eagle Inn in Jedburgh, with the membership limited to 40. The members originally had to dine in a green jacket, specially made from Cheviot wool, replaced later with blue jackets. In 1834 many of the Whig supporters left the club after the Chairman refused to drink the health of the sitting M.P. (who was a Whig).

the Jedforest Hounds (thu-jed-fo-rist-howndz) n. fox hunting group, formed in the mid-19th century in the Rulewater area. The lands were set aside for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch and it attracted horsemen from a wide area, centred on Rulewater. The western boundary was the Allan Water, on the north the Teviot, on the east Dere Street and on the south the Border. Hounds have been kept at Abbotsrule in recent times. The foxhounds were transferred from Baillie of Mellerstain to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1827 and were the first ‘subscription’ pack in Roxburghshire. A new pack was put together in about 1885 by Charlie Sinclair, with the assistance of Captain Palmer-Douglas and others. Tom Scott Anderson was Master in about 1892–1903.

Jed Forest (jed-fo-rist) n. ancient forest around Jedburgh. The Capon Tree is supposed to be the sole survivor of the forest, although there are also still some old trees along the Jed Water in Southdean Parish. The lands there were formerly known as ‘Jedworth Forest’ and variants.

Jedheid (jed-heed) n. Jedhead, area near the source of the Jed Water, in the southern part of Southdean Parish. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. David Laidlaw was tenant there in 1694. James Telfer (the ‘poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree’) taught children in the area in the 1720s. William Fox was shepherd there in 1797, Robert Telfer, John Middlemas and Adam Ainslie in 1799, and James Davidson in 1801. It was also ‘Jedheads’ in 1868 when J.H. Pringle was farmer there (it is ‘Jedheid’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘jedheads’ in 1694).

Jed Murray (jed-mu-ri) n. familiar name of J.E.D. Murray.

Jed Murray’s Studio (jed-mu-riz-stew-dee-o) n. former photographer’s studio of J.E.D. Murray, on the east side of North Bridge Street. This was where his business moved from its previous premises located where the Post Office would later be built. Nos. 43 and 45 North Bridge Street were designed by J.P. Alison as a studio and house. They were built in an art nouveau style in 1899–1900, in red sandstone with interesting mosaic work and internal details. The ‘House’ and ‘Studio’ signs can still be read on the building. The Studio was in use until 1972, with the Border Club moving there in 1973.

Jeffrey (je-free) n. Alexander (1806–74) 4th son of Alexander and Janet Smeaton, he was born near Bewlie. His father was a farm steward, originally from Duns and was a member of the Anti-Bugher Church in Midlem. He worked at Lilliesleaf Mill as a boy, but was a keen reader and in 1825 entered the legal office of James Curle in Melrose, later moved to Edinburgh then Yetholm, worked for a while as assistant to the Town Clerk in Jedburgh, and eventually in 1838 became a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. He was popular and successful, especially in criminal suits and was said to be well known for taking on what seemed like hopeless defence cases. One of his most famous cases was to represent the Jedburgh bakers against the Burgh Council there, a case that he won after several years, leading to the Council going into heavy debt. He also fought to reinstate the 'Jethart Baa' when there were efforts to ban it in 1848. He was a strong proponent of the Reform Bill (which inspired the names of his first 2 children), although his idiosyncratic views kept him apart from the other local Reformers. Interested in all things related to the antiquities and customs of the Borders, he wrote 'An Historical and Descriptive Account of Roxburghshire' (1836) and 'Guide to the Antiquities of the Border' (1838). In 1855 he published the first volume of his monumental work 'The Histories and Antiquities of Roxburghshire and adjoining Districts', which was followed by 3 other volumes, the last appearing in 1864. This forms a valuable early collection of information about the county, based on a large amount of research (although it is occasionally inaccurate or wildly speculative). He also published a few other more modest works, e.g. articles for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club on the topography of Jedburgh and of Ancrum and a small guide to the antiquities of Jedburgh. He was a Fellow of the Scottish Society of Antiquaries. He married Katharine Kerr (c.1818–72) in Yetholm in 1828. They lived on Abbey Place and Castle Street in Jedburgh and their children included Francis, Charles Grey, Alexander, James, George, Katharine, Smeaton, William, Jean and Isabella. Curiously the 1851 and 1861 census entries give his birthplace as Eccles, Berwickshire. He died following a stroke suffered while at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh and is buried in Jedburgh Abbey kirkyard. A photograph of him exists. George (b.c.1780) hind at Sandystones on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish. His surname is written 'Jaffrae' and he seems likely to be related to William, who was at Pinnacle at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) 'yeoman' at Minto Kames according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He may be the William 'Jaffrae' who was at Standhill on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish.

the Jehovahs (thu-je-hô-vuz) n. members of the Jehovah's Witness movement, founded in the U.S.A. in the late 19th century, promoting active evangelism and preaching the imminent Second Coming. In Hawick the Kingdom Hall meeting house was on Buccleuch Place, in the former Teviotdale Clubrooms, and they are now based at 18 Deloraine Court.

Jeistins'-haugh (jist-ins-hawch) n. former name for a flat piece of land by the Rule Water at Bonchester. It is said to have been where local youths used to practice archery and jousting (also called the Justin Haugh).

Jemmie (je-mee) n. erstwhile diminutive form of James, later replaced by 'Jamie'.

Jemmy-linkum-feedle (je-mee-ling-kum-fee-dul) n. a frivolous person – 'These friblish characters which on the Border we call a Jemmy-linkum-feedle', too conceited to be pleased with natural feeling, too shallow to fathom his subject, and too vain to deny his reader the perusal of his most trifling and common-place remarks' [JL].

Jen (jen) n. Christian name, often a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

Jenet (je-ni') n. former version of the Christian name 'Janet', common into the 18th century (also written 'Jennet').

Jenkins (jeng-kinz) n. Daniel (b.1848) 3rd son of Tom, he was born in Mauritius. He was educated at Royal College, Mauritius and attended London University from 1865. He was a student of the Middle Temple in 1874 and called to the bar in 1883. He then became a prominent lawyer in Mauritius. He firstly married Amelia Keeley and secondly married Mary Louisa Payne. His children included Daniel Remy, William, Marie, Laura Amelia and Elsie. A small street in the western part of Port Louis is named after him. Thomas Joseph ‘Black Tom’ (c.1798–1859) probably Teviotdale’s first black resident. Born somewhere on the Guinea coast of west Africa (probably in the modern Sierra Leone or perhaps Liberia), he was possibly the son of a slave-trading chief called ‘King Cock-eye’ (because he was missing an eye). In 1803, in his 6th year, he was taken back to be educated in Britain by James Swanson (or Swanstone), who was from Hawick, son of a waiter at the Tower Hotel; unfortunately Swanson died a few days after returning from Africa. On the journey the young African became a favourite (and also the object of ridicule) of the sailors, and his first attempts to say the name of his sponsor apparently sounded like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then adopted as his own name (although there is an alternative explanation that the name may have been a variant on his African title). After a few weeks in England, Swanson brought him back to Hawick, but unfortunately died after only a few days. Tom spent the first couple of months at the Tower Hotel, where he was cared for by Mrs. Brown, wife of the proprietor. He then lived for a few years with Tom Lunn (Swanson’s brother-in-law) at ‘Shuttlehaa’ near Teviothead, learning English and particularly the local dialect. He thrived academically at the school in Teviothead, and was also the best dancer when that was taught. He was taken on as cow-herd and errand-boy for Mr. Pott of Caerlenrig and was then hired by Mr. Laidlaw of Falnash, helping on the farm and running errands to Hawick. He was further educated at an evening school in Hawick, eventually studying Greek and Latin (buying a Greek dictionary at auction in Hawick). Already being a student assistant at the school, at the age of about 20 he became schoolmaster at Teviothead; however the appointment had to be endorsed by the authorities. Although tested and approved by the local heritors (including the Hawick minister, Rev. Arkle), he was rejected by the Presbytery. So instead, an old smiddy was converted as an independent school for him to teach in (paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch and other heritors), from around 1815 until December 1818. It is said that he taught 5 days a week and on the 6th day would walk to Hawick to continue his own studies with the master of the Grammar School, Christopher Armstrong (and would also attend Hawick Kirk on the Sabbath). He was also supported in Hawick by David Moncrieff, who additionally helped get him an introduction (and funds) to take some courses at Edinburgh University (although he was perhaps only there for a month or two). He was also patronised by the Watsons of Hawick (the Quaker family of manufacturers). After this he resumed teaching in Teviothead, but was then recommended as a missionary by the Christian Knowledge Society. He said his last farewells to his male friends (and perhaps some female ones, since it was said that ‘he never was scorned wi’ a lass’). Hawick manufacturer William Watson wrote him a reference in 1818 for the British and Foreign School Society and that year he was enrolled in their teacher training college at Borough Road in London. While there he taught at a new school for poor children in Pimlico, which he helped to set up, and also taught at a school on Grafton St., Fitzrovia. In 1821 he was sent to Mauritius to be a teacher there. He never corresponded with his old friends in Hawick, so that it was generally believed locally that he had not survived the voyage to Mauritius. In fact he was a successful and respected teacher there for the next 37 years. He ran the ‘Model School’ in Port Louis and was involved in introducing several new teaching methods (e.g. singing lessons and the use of the creole dialect). He married (his wife’s name being Augustine Laurencia Jenkins) and had 4 children, who were born in the 1840s: Samuel Thomas; Thomas Lionel, who trained as a lawyer; Daniel, also a lawyer; and Mary. His later life is unclear, with a possibility that he returned to Sierra Leone and established a private school there. Certainly a man of that name is associated with Sierra Leone and his story (e.g. in the article ‘Early Religious Influences in Sierra Leone’) mixes up the 2 men; he was said to have first arrived in Freetown in 1815, ‘garbed fantastically in a Scotch kilt and having the new American flag above it’, then moving to Scotland where he attended ‘classes at Edinburgh University, acting as schoolmaster in a village near Berwick-upon-Tweed, volunteering for service with the Christian Knowledge Society, and becoming a missionary to Mauritius’. He was then said to have returned to Freetown, where he established a school in Wilberforce Street and was much in demand as an orator. In 1858 his name appears on a list of members of the Mercantile Association of the City of Freetown who petitioned for a change in the way the government was administered in Sierra Leone. It is unclear how many stories are compounded here and whether our Tom Jenkins ever returned to Sierra Leone. His local story was described in a posthumous W.N. Kennedy article in the Transactions of 1870, with further details in Rev. John Thomson’s ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’ (1878). His existence in Mauritius was already noted in the 1837 publication ‘Exemplary and Instructive Biography’ (updating an article on Tom published in Chambers’ Edinburgh Journal in 1832). M. Duffil wrote further Transactions article on this subject in 1990 and 1994. In 2003 a memorial plaque was unveiled at the old smiddy where he taught in Teviothead. Thomas ‘Tammy’ (19th C.) tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. He was ‘a dainty, cannie body, who always carried a cat in his bosom’. Thomas Lionel (b.c.1845) 2nd son of Tom. He was a student at the Middle Temple in 1862 and called to the bar in 1865. He practised at the supreme court of Mauritius.

Jenkin’s hen

Jenkin’s hen (jeng-kinz-hen) n., arch. a hen that never knew the attentions of a cock – ‘To die like Jenkin’s hen’ [JoJ], used figuratively – ‘Ti dei the daith o’ Jenkin’s hen – for the want o’ braith’ [GW].

Jen McVitie’s (jen-muk-vi’-eez) n. tripe shop, across from Laura Bennett’s on the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd, which closed in the late 1920s.

Jenny (je-nee) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

Jenny Walker’s Brae (je-nee-waw-kurz-brai) n. hill road somewhere in the Rule valley, probably a name for the road connecting the A698 with the Rule Water, between Denholm and Spittal.

Jepps (jips) n. John (b.1841) son of John and Mary Seely, from Steeple Bumstead. He was coachman to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Amos of Ruelwater. They later moved to London, where his wife died in 1870, leaving daughters Margaret and Mary (also written ‘Jipps’).

Jordan (jer-din) n. Archibald ‘Baldy’ (18th C.) brother of Alexander, a rich Newcastle merchant and banker. He served for a short period as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, being recommended to Col. Elliot of Wells in 1726. He ran the estates there (Col. Elliot being almost always in London), and instigated much planting (including 10,000 young fir trees in one purchase from Dickson’s nurseries). For his efforts he was paid £12 per year, along with grass for his horse, and allowance for paper, ink and wax, as well as the use of a modest bedroom in the mansion house.

In 1742 he surveyed the lands of East and West Mains of Hawick for the Scotts of Buccleuch, leading to their division. He paid the window tax for the Wells estate in 1753. He grew quite wealthy and purchased part of Bonjedward in 1751 (with more of the estate in 1767), followed by Haughhead (in Eckford Parish) and then Brockmoor in Warwickshire. However, he continued to serve as Wells factor for the next 2 Lairds, retiring in the late 1760s. He was probably the ‘Archibald Jordan of Boon Jedburgh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1766. He gained a large part of Lanton Common when it was divided in 1769. His only child was Jane, who married Thomas Caverhill and their son Archibald took the surname Jerdan as his heir. His rental book (covering the period 1728–60) was described in an article by A.O. Curie in 1908. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Jerdan’ who is listed paying tax in Jedburgh for having servants in her employ.

Archibald of Bonjedward (c.1770s–1842) only son of Thomas Caverhill and Jane Jerdan (who died in 1780, aged 30). He succeeded as heir to his grandfather, taking Jerdan as his surname. He was taxe for having a female servant in 1785 and in 1788 was recorded as owner of Bonjedward and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, valued at more than £2400, as well as lands in Eckford Parish. His sister Jane married Rev. Peter Young of Jedburgh. He fought a legal case to keep the estate from another branch of the family. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club and in 1810 became Captain of the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was said to be liberal in all things, but often came into financial difficulty, and had to sell off parts of his estate (in 1808 the estate was advertised for sale, entirely or in parts). He married Elizabeth Sarah Milner in 1808. They had 2 sons and 5 daughters. He and his wife died within a few days of each other, the local story at the time being that they had eaten something poisonous. He was succeeded by his son Thomas Caverhill Jerdan, who was a doctor with the East India Company, published ‘A Catalogue of the Birds of the Peninsular of India’ and sold Bonjedward to the Marquess of Lothian in 1845. His daughter Jane married John Elliot, son of William of Harwood. William (1782–1869) son of John and Agnes Stuart, he was born at ‘Lang Linkie’, Kelso, near where the Teviot joins then Tweed. His father served as Baron Bailie for Kelso (where the court was frequented by ‘Hawick Willie’), but died suddenly in 1796 when he himself was only 13. He took an interest in Border ballads and history from an early age. He spent time in Edinburgh, eventually moving permanently to London to pursue a writing career. He wrote extensively as an essayist, critic and poet, eventually becoming editor of the Sun newspaper and then the Literary Gazette (for 33 years). He also became famous for standing next to Prime Minister Perceval when he was assassinated in 1811, and being the first to grab the assassin. He helped found the Royal Society for Literature in 1826. After his retirement, in 1852/3 he published his autobiography and continued to write until well into his 80s (formerly spelled ‘Jer-dine’, ‘Jerdon’, etc.; see also Jardine).

jerkin (jer-kin) n. a close-fitting, collarless, sleeveless jacket of the 16th century, the word more recently applied to a coat of any sort – ‘...While bill-men leather-jerkin clad Came bounding down the Dean’ [JI] (interchangeable with jirkin).

jerkined (jer-kind, jir-kind) adj., pp., arch. wearing a jerkin – ‘I see the Teviot redden to Jerusalem (je-roo-saw-lum) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, also sometimes ‘New Jerusalem’. It probably corresponds to Friarshawmuir. Andrew Cunningham was farmer of 150 acres there in 1851. John Hislop was farmer there in 1868.

jesp (jesp) n., arch. a speck, stain, blemish – ‘He hasna a jesp o’ dirt on ’im’[GW], a seam or flaw in fabric (also jasp).

jessie (je-see) n. a cowardly, effeminate or weak man – ‘what’s wrong wi ee, yuh big jessie?’ (cf. jenny).

Jess McVeetie’s (jes-nuk-vee’t-ceez) n. former shop at the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rockools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinds o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies … ’[WL], Hawick bakes … ’[JEDM], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’ [WL].

Jess o the Toll (jes-oo-thur-tol) n. nickname of Jess Hunter (nee Johnstone).

Jethart (je-thur’) n. Jedburgh, town 12 miles north-east of Hawick, lying on the Jed Water, which flows into the Teviot. The town is first recorded in 854 as ‘Gedwearde’ and is claimed to be the first parish in Scotland. It was a Royal Burgh since the 12th century and was a former county town of Roxburghshire. A church was noted here from as early as the 9th century, with a priory established by David I in 1118, and the abbey shortly afterwards. The castle was handed over to the English in 1174, as part of the Treaty of Falaise, and was later occupied by the officers of Edward I and II. The town was occupied by the English by Edward Baliol in 1334, recovered by William Douglas in 1342, but claimed again by the English several times over the next century. The town was destroyed several times by the English, in 1410, 1416, 1464 and most notably in 1523 by the Earl of Surrey’s men. As well as the Abbey, a house of Carmelite friars was established in 1513. The town was long afterwards known for its pear orchards, presumably a vestige of the monk’s fruit gardens. The town was looted and burned by the English in 1544. In the 17th century it was said to be a centre for smuggling goods south of the Border, particularly malt and leather. Several early Kings of Scotland spent time there, including David I, Malcolm IV, William the Lion, Alexander II, Alexander III and Robert the Bruce, as well as Mary, Queen of Scots. The old bridge at the foot of the Canon gate, dating from the 16th century, is probably similar to Hawick’s Auld Brig. The Public Hall was designed by J.P. Alison in 1900. There are several other notable historic buildings, including the Castlegate area, which was extensively repaired in the 1970s. And of course there is the Abbey and Castle. The town had a woollen factory from at least 1728, probably the first in the district. The town is also known for ‘Jethart Hand-baa’ played at Candlemas between the ‘up-pies’ and the ‘doonies’, supposedly commemorating a defeat of the English at Ferniehirst Castle, when the Scots played with their cut off heads. Sir David Brewster (physicist), John Ainslie (cartographer) and Mary Somerville (mathematician) were born here, and the town also has connections with Mary Queen of Scots, Bonnie Prince Charlie and Sir Walter Scott. Just south of the town James Hutton discovered his ‘geologic angular inconformity’, which supported the idea that the earth is at least millions of years old. The branch railway to the town was completed in 1856. Jedburgh Callants Festival was inaugurated in 1947, and includes a ride-out to Redeswire, as well as a mounted procession to Ferniehirst Castle and to the Capon Tree, led by the Callant. Population (1991) 4,118 – ‘Dear Borderland! Blench na’ for fear! Oor Borderland, nae foe comes near! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart’s Here! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart’s Here! [T] (the town appears as ‘Jedburgh’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map; the origin of the name is ‘Jed worth’, i.e. Old English for ‘settlement by the Jed’, with ‘Jed’ perhaps being from a Celtic word for a wood; it first occurs as ‘Gedde wrda’ in 1139 and there are many variations of ‘Jedworth’ until the town officially became ‘Jedburgh’ in the 17th century; the old form survives in the local pronunciation; Terries usually talk about going ‘doon’ to Jethart, presumably because of the river).

Jethart Abbey (je-thur’-aw-bee) n. Jedburgh Abbey, founded by David I for Augustinian monks in 1138, following the 1118 priory. This may have followed an earlier foundation by Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne, perhaps in the 830s. An early chapel attached to the abbey was at Old Jeddart. It was dedicated to Mary (so that some local places called things like Ladyland may be connected with the Abbey). The lands possessed by the Abbey from early times included Lanton, Nisbet, Crailing, Ulveston, Ancrum, Alnecleive (unidentified part of Ancrum); ‘Rule Hervey’ (later called Abbotrule), Raperlaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish) and ‘Crumesethe’ (which could be Crumhaugh); many of these are listed in the 1165 charter of King William, confirming earlier grants by David I and others. Around 1280 Sir William of Soules granted the abbey lands near Castleton churchyard. It later gained lands at Winnington and Belses. Connected churches included most of those around Jedburgh, and also Hobkirk and Castleton. The Abbey contained altars to both St. Ninian and St. Mungo. The Abbey was never fully completed, being destroyed as many as nine times by the English, including by the Earl of Surrey’s men in 1523 and in 1545 by Hertford’s men. It was occupied by the English from 1547, the French took possession in 1548, fortifying it, but levelling some of the damaged parts. Note that this constant strife means that none of the records of the Abbey have survived. Although quite ruined since then, it is the most complete of the Border abbeys, with 3 tiers of arches, an 86 ft high transept tower, and a wheel window in the west gable. Part of the Abbey was used as a local place of worship until 1875. The Kers of Ferniehirst are buried here and there is also the Marquess of Lothian Memorial. Major excavations in the 1980s revealed a greater extent to the buildings and a new visitor centre was opened then. The Abbey held a great deal of land around the Borders, including superiority over the parishes of Abbotrule, Castleton and Hobkirk.
Jethart Castle

Jethart Castle (je-thur'-kaw-sul) n. Jedburgh Castle was ceded to the English under the Treaty of Falaise in 1174, but changed hands many times over the coming centuries. It was the location for the wedding feast of Alexander III in 1285, when it was said that a ghostly apparition warned of his impending death. In 1334 it was surrendered to the English by Edward Baliol and held by them for 75 years. It was destroyed by order of the Scottish Parliament in 1409, shortly after the town was recaptured. The destruction was supervised by ‘Robert de Hawyk’ a Burgess of Edinburgh. In the early 18th century it was the site of the town gallows, with construction on the old gaol beginning there in 1820, with architect Archibald Elliot. It also served as lunatic asylum and ‘bridewell’. This prison was also often referred to as ‘Jethart Castle’.

Jethart Castle Jail (je-thur'-kaw-sul-jail) n. former prison on the site of Jedburgh Castle, built 1820–23, and now housing a museum. It was designed by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum) in 3 separate 2-storey blocks, the builder being Mr. Gillespie. This was the local county jail for Hawick in the 19th century, closing in 1886, and continuing in use as police cells until 1890. It is now the best preserved example of a Howard Reform Prison, considered modern in its day – ‘I’d rather lie in the belly o’ a whale Than spend a nicht in Jethart Gaol’ [T] (formerly spelled ‘Gaol’).

the Jethart Comb (thu'-je-thur'kom) n. the Jedburgh Comb, an ancient artefact found during excavations at the Abbey in 1984. It is an ornate 12th century comb, carved from walrus ivory and decorated with a griffin and a dragon. It was discovered along with the torso of a man (who appears to have been murdered) and other artefacts in a pit in the Abbey grounds, and is now on display there.

Jethart Greyfriars (je-thur'-grä-frl-urz) n. site of a former friary in Jedburgh, excavated in the 1980s and laid out as a garden in 1993. It was home to a group of Observant Franciscans from around 1500. Also known as ‘grey friars’ or ‘begging friars’, the order were extremely rigorous in following the rules instituted by St. Francis, and led ascetic lives, going barefoot in their grey woollen robes. A superior of the convent called Home was involved in transmitting letters between Henry VIII and the young King James V. Adam Bell was a monk there, who wrote a history of Scotland up until the year 1535. The friary was burned by the English raids of 1523, 1544 and 1545, and probably never fully repaired before the Reformation.

Jethart Jail see Jethart Castle Jail

Jethart Jim (je-thur'-jim) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the mid-19th century, presumably with a Jedburgh connection – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI].

Jethart Justice (je-thur'-jus-tis) n. popular name for the form of justice in use during the riving days, i.e. hang them first and ask questions later. Jedburgh was the judicial seat of the Scottish West March. The phrase dates back to the late 16th century and was also used figuratively – ‘...For hang’t! he sae wi’ plagury bust is, He’s fit eneugh for ‘Jethart justice’’ [JoHa] (also ‘Jeddart Justice’ etc.).

Jethart peirs (je-thur'-peerz) n., pl. pears grown in Jedburgh, long famed for its orchards, these being a vestige of the days when the monks grew fruit extensively. Many different varieties were grown, mostly derived from France, but some being Scottish variants. This Jethart’s Here

(Je-thurts-heer) n. slogan of the town of Jedburgh. It was supposed to have been shouted at the Raids of the Redeswire on the arrival of the Jephburg contingent, a call that is repeated each year at the Callant’s Festival – ‘Then raise the slogan with ane shout – ’Fy, Tindaill, to it! Jethart’s here!’ [T], ‘A Rouse! for Hawick callants, They well deserve a cheer; And let nac Border man forget The slogan ‘Jethart’s here’’ [JBS].

Jethart Snails (Je-thur’s-nalz) n. dark peppermint sweets, made by the Miller family of Jedburgh, also called ‘Jasper’s Original Jethart Snails’. The recipe was handed down to Jasper Miller by a French Napoleonic prisoner of war.

Jethart staff (Je-thur’s-stawf) n. former type of weapon, consisting of a pole perhaps 7 to 8 feet long, topped with a long metal blade. It was also known as the Jedburgh or ‘Jeddart’ stave (and other variants). Its existence is recorded at least from 1513 and it was banned by the Scottish Parliament in 1516. It was also sometimes called the ‘Northern staff’, and the reason for its connection with Jedburgh is unknown, although it appears to have been only used in Scotland. Another weapon existed (also used in England) called the ‘Jethart axe’ (although this may have been invented by Sir Walter Scott), which was sometimes confused with the ‘staff’ (even in the arms of Jedburgh). The 2 may have also been known as the short staff and the long staff, and it is clear that the length and design varied.

Jobson (job-sin) n. George (b.1806/7) from England, he was farmer at Hummellknowes and coal-merchant in Hawick. In 1861 he was farming 344 acres there and employing 4 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. In 1866 he married Jane (‘Jeanie’) Dryden Blaikie (who died aged 82). He emigrated to America, and his father-in-law George Blaikie took over his business in Hawick. They had at least one child, George B.

Jocelin (jo-se-lyn) n. (d.1199) probably from south-east Scotland, possibly from a Norman family, he entered Melrose Abbey about 1150. He had a brother called Elias. He became Prior and then Abbot of Melrose in 1170. He may have commissioned the writing of the Chronicle of Melrose. He also encouraged the cult of Walthethe, who emerged as a saint. In 1174 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow, but continued to exert influence back in Melrose. During his time Teviotdale was a Deanery under the jurisdiction of Glasgow, and hence he was Hawick’s Bishop. His rights to the churches of Liddesdale (as well as Ashkirk) were confirmed by 3 Popes in 1179, 1181 and 1186. He was also a powerful political figure of his time, being embroiled in the struggles over the Borderland. He mediated a dispute between Jedburgh and Dryburgh Abbeys and he witnessed many charters. As Bishop of Glasgow he gifted the church of Hassendale to Melrose Abbey. He also accompanied King William to England when he married Ermengarde. He additionally helped establish Glasgow as a burgh with significant privileges. He died at Melrose Abbey and was buried under the monks’ choir. His seal showed a full-length figure of a bishop, with one hand raised and then still holding a crozier, with the words ‘SIGILLUM JOCELINI GLASGUENSIS EPISCOPI’ (also written ‘Jocelyn’).

Jock o the Side (jok-o-thu-sid) n. ballad about the rescue of a prisoner from Newcastle Jail and his return to Liddesdale (bearing great similarity with the ballad of the rescue of Kinmont Willie). It was first printed in Hawick in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Characters named in the ballad, as well as ‘Jock o the Side’ include the Laird of Mangerton, the Laird’s Jock, the Laird’s Wat and Hobbie Noble. The subject of the ballad was probably an Armstrong, nephew of the Laird of Mangerton, and a man of the same name is mentioned in Maitland’s ‘Complaint Against the Thieves of Liddesdale’ – ‘Then they ha’ rid tae Liddesdale Just as fast as they could ride And when they cam’ tae Liddesdale They cast the chains frae Jock o’ the Side’ [T], ‘Jock’s ghost cam yanmerin Yanmerin doon Fu o indignation For on the site o his strang to’er They built a railway station . . .’ [DH].

Jock Paisley’s Dog (jok-paiz-leez-dóg) n. dog owned by Jock Paisley in the early 19th century. Because of the Combination Laws it was difficult to organise workers’ meetings at that time, leading to one meeting at the Little Haugh being officially chaired by this dog, and passing a resolution against manufacturer William Nixon.

John (jōn) n. forename that has been popular for a millennium, clearly taken from the Bible. In the earliest records it appeared in Latin forms, such as ‘Johanne’, which could be abbreviated as ‘Jn’. The name became less common in Scotland for part of the 14th century following John Baliol’s reign. Pet forms include ‘Johnnie’ and ‘Jock’ (note the pronunciation with o rather than o).

John (jōn) n. (12th C.) son of Orm, whom he succeeded as Lord of Hownam. In about 1155 he and his father witnessed the charter granting the Church of Old Roxburgh to Glasgow Diocese. Sometime in then period 1164–70 he granted lands in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, as confirmed by his son William in around 1190; he perambulated the boundaries between his lands and the neighbouring lands of Whitting, Grubet, Clifton and Mow. He witnessed a grant to Kelso Abbey in about 1170. About 1175 he witnessed a grant of lands in Mow to Paisley Abbey by Eschina, wife of Walter, son of Alan the Steward and another charter to Melrose Abbey by Anselm of Whitting. He witnessed another charter by Waldeve, son of Gospatrik, Earl of Dunbar to Helias, son of Huctred, who was cousin of both Waldeve and his own father Orm. He was also recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh, one of the first.
known people to hold that office. However, it is not known how long he was Sheriff, and whether the office at that period just meant he had responsibility for Roxburgh Castle, or also for the county. He may have married the daughter and heiress of Robert de Landleis, from whom he acquired lands in Berwickshire. His son and heir was William ‘de Landleis’ and Hownam and his grandson was William de Ormiston, probably the first person to have that designation. His seal bore an armed knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield, and with the words ‘SIGILLUM JHNIS FILII ORM’.

John (jôn) n. (12th/13th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1195/6. He is also recorded as Dean of Roxburgh in 1204 and Dean of Teviotdale again before 1207. He is a different man from John de Huntingdon, who was a contemporary Glasgow cleric.

John Broon’s Brae (jôn-broonz-brä) n. former name for the street linking the bottom of Dickson Street with Wilton Crescent.

John Laing’s (jôn-langz) n. John Laing & Sons, hosiery manufacturers, established in 1830/1 (although this may have been as part of Dicksons & Laings, with the separate company formed in about 1851 after the death of John Laing’s father Alexander). In 1852 hosiery manufacturer John Laing is listed at Slitrig Bank. The premises at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent had previously been occupied by hosiery manufacturer Thomas Wilson. The firm introduced the first steam-driven frame to Hawick in 1858. In 1869 it is stated that the firm was the only one in Hawick producing ‘fashioned’ stockings, using merino wool and spun silk. It was reconstituted as ‘John Laing & Sons (Lanso) Ltd.’ in 1939. The company now specialises in cashmere knitwear. The firm went into receivership in 2006, with the factory at 8–9 Slitrig Crescent closing. It was bought out by Dawson International and moved to a smaller operation within the Barrie’ factory at Burnfoot.

Johnman (jôn-mun) n. Rev. William Andrew Patton (1837–1923) minister of Hawick Free Church (St. George’s) for a period of 43 years. A native of Blairingone (or Fossoyay) near Dollar, he was ordained at Darlington in 1865 and came to Hawick in 1880. Well read and interested in a wide range of topics, he wrote many articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions (e.g. about local wells, highways, bridges, pipers, etc.), served as President for many years, and was a keen collector of curios for the Museum. He is credited with re-invigorating the Society after a lull in its activities and falling off in membership in the 1880s. As well as articles from the Transactions appearing in pamphlet form, his 1892 memorial sermon to Rev. Dr. MacRae was published, and also a few other sermons. He was heavily involved in efforts to get the Buccleuch Memorial and the Cottage Hospital funded. He was said to have a great frankness of speech, sometimes to the point of embarrassment, and took up strong positions in opposition to several local issues. For example, he worked hard to have rabbit baiting stopped in the town. In addition he carried out in the local press a public argument with Provost Mitchell over gambling and drinking, and was an opponent of the excesses of the Common Riding. He also caused consternation among his congregation for allowing a parade of Volunteers in the church in 1887. He was a very keen traveller, and often gave lectures after his trips. In 1900 he was appointed first Moderator of the Hawick United Free Presbytery. Throughout his ministry he lived at St. George’s Manse on Wilton Path. He liked to tell a story of how he once preached to the Queen, meaning the Queen of the Gypsies in Yetholm. He served as Hawick Minister until his death. There is a memorial to him in St. George’s, unveiled in late 1924, when Dr. Cathels gave a eulogy. He left money to establish an educational bursary. His articles include: ‘Sermon on Church and State’ (1885); ‘Horse Racing: or the Turf and its Produce’ (1888); ‘The Religion of the People called Quakers., A Lecture’ (1888); ‘Capital and Labour: in View of the Present Railway Strike’ (1891); ‘In Memoriam: William Inglis. A Discourse’ (1891); ‘In Memoriam: Rev. Dr. Macrae. A Sermon’ (1892); ‘In Memoriam: The Duke of Clarence, with Life Lessons’ (1892); ‘In Memoriam: George Blaikie’ (1897); ‘The Archaeology of Bazaars and of Kindred Trade Associations’ (1895); ‘Unfermented Wine, or Divine Teaching on Temperance’ (1895); ‘Short Papers read at Dalkeith and Newbattle Abbey’ (1896); ‘Our Programme ; with special reference to the Monumental Commemoration of Past Celebrities’ (1897); ‘A Talk on Military Weapons, Ancient and Modern, with description of examples from the Museum and from Without’ (1899); ‘Saut Ha’ and its Tragedy, with an Excursus on the Ancient Salt Industry’ a Supplement on Salt, Social and Symbolical’ (1899); ‘After Twenty Years: An Address’ (1900); ‘The Bi-Centenary of James Thomson, Author of ‘The Seasons’, at Southdean, 8th

Sept., 1900. An Address’ (1900); ‘The Ordering of the Church of God: A Discourse’ (1902); ‘Celebration of the Semi-Jubilee of Rev. W. A. P. Johnman’ (1905); and ‘Who give Hawick an Ill Name: The Presbytery or the Press?’. John Man’s Openin (jón-manz-ʊ-pe-nin) n. former name for St. George’s Lane.

John Millar’s (jón-mi-lurz) n. grocer’s shop at the corner of Oliver Crescent and Croft Road. It existed from at least the 1950s and was one of the last old-style grocery shops to survive in the Town.

Johnnie Armstrong (jo-nea-awrm-strʊŋ) n. ballad about John Airmstrong of Gilnockie. It recounts how Armstrong, a noted Border riever, is summoned to meet the King, but is tricked and arrested along with his men. He pleads for his life, offering the King everything he can think of, but to no avail. He and many of his men were hanged on the spot, with the trees withering afterwards, according to local legend. The ballad is based on historical events, although liberty is taken with some details, e.g. it is set in Edinburgh, rather than at Caerlenrig. The tone of the ballad is essentially pro-Armstrong and against James V. It first saw print in Allan Ramsay’s collection ‘Ever Green’ (1724) and later appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) and Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. Tradition says that it was recited for Ramsay’s collection by a 6th generation descendant of John of Gilnockie himself.

Johnnie Cossar (jo-nea-kō-sur) n., arch. a large pin.

Johnnie Graham’s Stane (jo-nea-grä-umz-strən) n. feature marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, on the east side of the Whitrope Burn, just north of Hermitage village. There is nothing marked there on modern maps.

Johnnie the Whup (jo-nea-thu-whup) n. nickname for Johnnie Hope (18th/19th C.) whose family gave their names to Hopehill and Hopepark – ‘Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Soup gang up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

Johnny and the Roccos (jo-nea-and-thru-koz) n. rock ‘n’ roll band, led by Hawick-born Bob Fish. Formed in 1973, they became professional in 1973, recording their first album ‘Shakin’ all over’ in 1978, which was followed by six others, plus compilation albums etc. Particularly popular in Germany and Scandinavia, they have had a top ten hit in Norway.

John of Hawick (jón-ov-hIk) n. priest of Glasgow and notary public, recorded in 1530. There is also an earlier Rector of Hawick Church from the mid-14th century, and several other men of the same designation, making it difficult to distinguish how many of them are distinct (see de Hawick).

John of Lancaster (jón-ov-lang-kaws-tur) n. (1389–1435) 3rd son of Henry IV, brother of Henry V. He commanded English troops during the Hundred Years’ War. He was also made Duke of Bedford. In 1407/8, Henry IV granted him lands formerly possessed by Henry Percy. This included Jedburgh, Bonjedward and Hassendean.

John Oliver & Sons (jón-o-lee-vur-in-sunz) n. relatively short-lived woollen manufacturers of the 1830s and 40s. The business was run by Hawick lawyer John Oliver and his sons Thomas and William (and perhaps others). Along with William Wilson & Sons they purchased the Weensland Corn Mill and adjoining land from Douglas of Cavers in about 1835. However, although Wilson built a new woollen factory there, the Oliver land remained largely undeveloped until Walter Wilson built Teviot Mill on it in the 1850s. Thomas and William Oliver were recoded as manufacturers at Dean Mill in 1837, however, within a decade or so they were both tenant farmers.

John Paiterson (jón-pá'r-ur-sin, -pí-) n. title character of an old local song, or a short form used for the name of the song itself.

John Paiterson’s Meir Rides Foremaist (jón-pí’-ur-sinz-mär-rیدz-fœr-mäst) n. old local song, once second only in popularity to ‘Teribus’, also sometimes referred to as ‘John Paiterson’. It was discussed by William Norman Kennedy in an article in the 1863 Transactions.
The song was published in an 1887 Hawick News article in connection with the revamped Common Riding, but was already a very old song. It is played by the Drums and Fifes at specific times during the Common Riding, particularly just before the Friday breakfast, as they walk from the Kirk Wynd to the Tower Knowe via Drumlanrig Square and the Howegate. The words supposedly refer to a miller, Paiterson, who lived in the Hawick area and was known for the quality of his horses. He once entered a big race bare-back and with a straw-rope bridle, much to the hilarity of the on-lookers, but ended up winning. The King apparently wanted to buy the horse, but Paiterson instead gave it as a gift and composed the song in celebration. Another story claims that it relates to Sir John Paterson of Eccles, who rode a race on an old racecourse near Lilliard’s Edge. In fact the song is widely known (with slightly different words) throughout Britain and it has been suggested that it came from Ayrshire in the early 18th century, and related to the Patersons of Ballaired there. The tune has also been connected with a song referred to as ‘She’s yours, she’s yours, she’s nae mair oors’ which is about a race (bruise) for a bride’s handkerchief at a wedding. It is also known as (or extremely similar to) ‘The Horseman’s Port’, ‘The Black and the Brown’, ‘New Market’ and ‘The Cameronian Rant’. It was said that James Thomson attempted to put new words to the song in about 1887, but found it too difficult, and instead wrote ‘Up wi’ the Banner’. The song was part of the repertoire of Shetland fiddler John Sickle, was adapted by Martin Carthy in 1983 for the song ‘Fable in the Wings’ and has also been popular with some pipers.

Jōhns (jōn-z) n. William (15th C.) recorded as Willemni Johannis in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. So he was probably related to the Lairds there. The other men listed were all relatively nearby. It is possible his surname has some other modern equivalent.

Johnson (jon-sin) n. A.J. (20th C.) served as 6th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk.

the Johnson-Marshall Report (θu-jon-sin-mawr-shul-ree-pər) n. local government planning report of 1967, which made recommendations for the future expansion of the Borders. This included a new community of 10,000 people in the St. Boswells area (which led to Tweedbank), but no strong priorities for Hawick.

John Spencer’s (jōn-spən-sər) n. knitwear mill that occupied Heronhill House in the mid-20th century.

Johnston (jon-stin, -sin) n. Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw, recorded in the Session books of 1723 when money was given to pay a woman for teaching her son. Alexander (18th/19th C.) footman at Orchard Cottage in 1797, when he was working for Robert Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander ‘Johnson’ was living at Teindsideslope according to the 1797 ballot list for the Militia. Andrew (17th C.) resident of the Adderstone area on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed ‘wt ane kilne’, suggesting that he was a smith or similar artisan. David (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Oliver and their children included: William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). The witnesses in 1729 were Bailie Ruecastle and Robert ‘Whitsone’ and in 1731 were Walter Graham and Robert Ruecastle. David (b.1817/8) from Newlands in Peeblesshire, he was a heddle-maker on the Fore Row in 1851. His wife was Agnes, from Dumfries. He may be the same David who was listed as a shopkeeper on the Fore Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. David (1900–1982) writer of words for the songs ‘We’ll Follow oor Cornet’, and ‘My Borderland’, as well as ‘Hawick and me’ and several local poems, many included in the book ‘A Freen Among Freens’ (1974). He was born and educated in Kelso, worked as a gardener at Floors Castle and also lived in Gala, but married a Hawick girl and moved to the town. He worked as a handyman at Lyle & Scott’s Burnfoot factory and was for many years boilerman at the Victoria Laundry. He lived for much of his life in Burnfoot, hence he was sometimes referred to as as ‘the Burnfit Bard’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press. His 2 well-known songs were collaborations with Adie Ingles. They also worked together on a song for the Burnfoot competition of 1970, and another, ‘Braw Border Queens’, survives in manuscript form. He moved away after the death of his wife, and lived near his son in Arbroath, where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Elizabeth G. ‘Isabell’ or ‘Iça’ (1910/1–1981) from Hawick, she worked as a nurse in Maternity Sevices in Edinburgh and Glasgow and retired back to Hawick in 1963. She was also a keen Guide. She wrote many poems published in the local press, including ‘Ablow the Kitchen Bed’, a number of them collected into ‘Pictures in the Fire’ (1967). Rev. George (b.1550/1) became minister at Foulden in 1572 and was transferred to Ancrum a few months later. He may have been brother of Rev.
William, who was previously minister of Ancrum. In 1574 he also had charge of Old Roxburgh, Eckford, Bedrule and Abbotrule (although they may have had separate readers). He complained to the Assembly of 1578 that another man had been appointed to part of his benefice. He also attended the Assemblies of 1581 and 1589. He is recorded in 1585 refusing to subscribe to articles drawn up by Sir John Maitland. He was transferred to Crailling before 1586, but returned to Ancrum in 1588, although probably without any further connection with Abbotrule or Bedrule. In 1589/90 he was listed among ministers with a special commission in Roxburghshire for getting people to adhere to the Confessions of Faith. In 1608 he and 2 others refused to recognise the authority of a Visitor appointed by the Assembly. In 1620 he complained to the Privy Council about non-payment of dues from several people. He was deprived in 1622 for not conforming to the Articles of 1618, being declared a rebel and ordered to be imprisoned in Annadale; however, he lived until at least 1631. He lived until at least 1631. He died as ‘Father of the Church’. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1697 his daughter Isabella was baptised in Wilton. The witnesses were William Cavers and William Scott. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as tenant in Hilliesland in 1709. He married Anna Reid and their son John was baptised in 1709, with witnesses Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland and weaver James Wight. George (18th/19th C.) plasterer on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. George ‘Copper Top’ (19th/20th C.) worker at Pesco’s, known for playing rugby for Hawick R.F.C. He first played for the Greens in 1902 and was Captain in the 1906/7 season. He was also a member of the 1912 team that won all 5 Borders Sevens tournaments for the first time. He also played for the South of Scotland. Graham (b.1869) heraldic painter to the Lyon Court. Along with W.R. Lawson he designed the 1914–19 Roll of Honour for Hawick Men who fell in WWI, which is displayed in the Museum. Isabella see Elizabeth G.. James (17th C.) recorded as being ‘late servant to John Turnbull in Cavers’ in 1684 on a long list of men declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. James (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.1871) born at Lochmaw, Wigtownshire, he became gamekeeper at Harwood (on Rule) around 1900. Rev. J.B. see Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. Jessie (b.1812/3) from Minto Parish, in the 1850s she was a teacher of sewing and English on Allars Crescent. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. His name is recorded as ‘Johnne Johnstoun’. Rev. John (16th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1590, he became minister of Nisbet. He is recorded as also having Wilton in his care in 1594, but not in the following year when he held the charges of Abbotrule and Bedrule. He seemed to remain with this arrangement until 1599. He was translated to Longnewton in 1607. It is unclear what role, if any, he played in Wilton Parish. John (d.c.1682) tenant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the John the baptism (labelled ‘fornic’) of whose son Robert with Malie Lauder was recorded in 1680. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Clarilaw. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. In 1720 and 1723 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Flex. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1720 (along with David Gray in Weensland) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He married Isobel Anderson and their children included: Walter (b.1719); Agnes (b.1721); John (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); and Jean (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert ‘Lasten’ and James Gardner. John (18th C.) lived in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed child was baptised, with no residence given. He is probably the John who married Mary Scoon in Roberton in 1733. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope Mill in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Nichol in 1734. He is probably the John whose son John was baptised in 1734. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1791 he married Margaret Brown, who was from Minto. John (c.1893–1949) Hawick Registrar. He died of a heart attack. Martin (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘Martyne of the Mylne’ when he was fined along with several other men in 1609 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The others included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, although it is unclear where he was from. Michael (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at
Johnstone

Harden Burnfoot in 1771. His forename is sometimes written ‘Mitchel’. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: Charles (b.1753); Isobel (b.1755); Hugh (b.1759); and Janet (b.1771). P. (18th/19th C.) mail-guard in Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (d.bef. 1637) gardener at Branxholme for the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1637 his wife Mary (‘in Carlill’, presumably Carlisle) had a discharge for £96 Scots for her late husband’s fees during his time as gardener. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1774. The witnesses were workman Robert Turnbull and shoemaker Robert Renwick. Robert (19th C.) married Christian Linton in Hawick in 1845. Prof. Thomas Lothian (1927–2009) born in Whithburn, West Lothian, son of a railway signalman. When he was 1 year old his father was transferred to Newcastle, where he grew up. He attended Hawick High School, leaving in 1944 when he volunteered for the Royal Navy, later becoming an officer. He gained a place at Cambridge University, but chose to go to Edinburgh so he could stay close to Hawick, where he played rugby for the Trades and for Hawick R.F.C. After graduation he went to work with Professor Gunnar Myrdahl and his wife Alva, and there learned Swedish, as well as learning about Manpower Economics. He returned to Edinburgh in 1955, where he was awarded a Ph.D. for his thesis on the Swedish Labour market. He lectured at Edinburgh University 1955–65 and became the founding Professor of Economics at Heriot-Watt, where he taught all first year Economics students in the years 1966–76. He also served on many government appointed boards and committees, e.g. the Scottish Economic Council 1977–91. In 1977 he was appointed as first Chairman of the Manpower Services Committee for Scotland. In 1981 he returned to Heriot-Watt as Principal and Vice-Chancellor. In 1983 he resolved the serious dispute between striking water workers and the Government. He worked to foster stronger ties between the university and industry. He also served as President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh 1993–96. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1995. He married Joan Fahmy in 1956 and they had 2 sons and 3 daughters. Rev. William (16th C.) minister of Ancrum, probably from before the Reformation. He was recorded receiving part of the benefice there in the period 1563–71. He became Reader in 1569 and Minister in 1571. He was succeeded by Rev. George (perhaps his brother) in 1572. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘servitour to Mariones Hob’ (i.e. Robert Scott) in documents relating to a murder trial in 1612 (spelled ‘Jhonsoun’, ‘Johnnestoun’, ‘Johnstone’, ‘Johnstoun’, ‘Johnstown’, etc. in early documents; see also Johnstone).

Johnstone (jon-stin, -sin) n. Adam of that Ilk (d.1509) succeeded from his brother John in 1488. In 1493 he was charged by the Earl of Bothwell to infeft Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the lands of Roberthill in Annandale. He signed a bond of mutual agreement of ‘kindness’ with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1501/2. He was recorded at the Justice- aire in Dumfries in 1504, where his son James was surety for him and he was surety for other Johnstones. He married Marion Scott, aunt of Walter; she was widow of Archibald Caruthers of Mouswald. He was succeeded by his elder son James. Alex (19th/20th C.) plumber who served on the local Military Tribunal during WWI. Charles (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1749. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1799. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1791), baptised in Southdean Parish, where his father was minister. He studied at Edinburgh University 1711–15 and graduated M.A. from St. Andrews in 1720. He was briefly in Leiden, then in 1722 was appointed Chair of Hebrew at St. Andrews. He resigned in 1725 and moved to London, where he lived in the household of Spencer Compton, Earl of Wilmington. There he wrote political articles for ‘The Craftsman’, an anti-Tory publication. In 1733 he was appointed Governor of North Carolina, arriving in 1734 and holding the position for 18 years, longer than any other Governor. Although unpopular with many, he managed to introduce several important reforms, in law, agriculture and local government, as well as bringing in the first printer to the colony and encouraging immigration. He married (as her 4th husband) Penelope Goland (d.1741), one of the wealthiest women in the province, and he secondly married Mrs. Frances Button. His children included Penelope, Henry, Carolina and Polly. He is buried at Eden House, near Edenton. Johnston County and Fort Johnston were named after him. His salary was hugely in arrears, owing to the ‘quitrent’ controversy, with his heirs only recovering the last of the money 46 years later. When he died his plantations (at Brompton and elsewhere) had 103 enslaved people. George 'Geordie' (17th C.) from Essenside. In 1622 William Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) was recorded having a bond of security for him. But in 1623, along with William Elliot of Bonjedward, he was convicted of stealing a horse belonging to Walter Scott of Burnfoot in Ale Water and hanged (probably in Jedburgh). He was ordered to be hanged. George (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was also listed there and John who paid the land tax there in 1678. He could be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1689 for John Turnbull and 1678. He could be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1689 for John Turnbull and William Balmer. George (18th C.) owner of 3 husband-lands in Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was presumably related to the earlier George. He sold the lands to James Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1758. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend. In 1502 David Scott (called 'Lady') in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including a raid on those lands. He specifically had 2 mares stolen from him. William (surely a relative) is also mentioned as being a tenant there. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant at Templehall in Hobbkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Perhaps the same Henry was servant at Deanfoot according to the 1801 Militia ballot in Minto Parish. Herbert Benyon (19th/20th C.) of Barkers. He became a partner in Hawick knitwear firm Pringle's in 1919. Hugh (b.1814/5) from Morton in Dumfriesshire, he was an assistant gamekeeper, living at Teinside Bridge in 1841 and 1851 and Newlands (in Castleton Parish) in 1861 and 1868. He married Hannah Anderson (or Andison) in Hawick Parish in 1839 and they had children: Jane (b.1840); Thomas (b.1843); Jessie (b.1845); Isabella (b.1847); William (b.1850); Hugh (b.1852); James (b.1855); and Robert Hannah (b.1859). He was probably father of the '5 Johnstone sisters' whose photo of 1910 is in the Museum (suggesting he also had daughters Helen b.c.1833 and Violet): Mrs. Andrew Burnett [Helen] of Adderstonelee; Mrs. Reid; Mrs. Jess Hunter; Mrs. Little; and Mrs. Violet Tullie of Bowanhill. Sir James of Johnstone (c.1567–1608) son of Sir John. He was made Warden of the West Marches 1588–90 in place of Lord Maxwell, this being part of the struggle for power and feud between the 2 families. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1592 (perhaps for assisting the Earl of Bothwell), but managed to escape. His men pillaged in Nithsdale, leading to pursuit by the Maxwells, who gathered a large force. He amassed his own supporters, and surprised the Maxwell's and their force at Dryfe Sands in 1593, leading to the death of Lord Maxwell and many others. Among his own supporters were a number of men from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. He was declared a rebel, but gained respite from the King in 1594. He was made Warden of the West March in 1595, probably serving until 1598. But after failing to quell disturbances he was declared a rebel and imprisoned in 1599. But he was reappointed Warden again 1600–03. He married Sara Maxwell, daughter of Sir John, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles, and was succeeded by his son James, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry. James of Westerhall (d.1643) son of Sir James. He is also referred to as being 'of Westraw' and as such in 1600 was among Border chiefs charged with keeping order. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and was succeeded by his son Sir James. He may also have had a son Francis, who married an Edmonson and may have been the man of that name who was an associate of the Covenanting Richard Cameron. Rev. James (d.1622) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1598, he became minister of Minto Parish in 1607. However, he was suspended later that year for being absent from 2 Synods and was deposed at the end of 1608 'on a confession of fornication'. In 1611 the Presbytery 'all with ane voce givis consent and approbation to his admission to the holie office quhich and quher it sall pleas God to appoint him to serve' and that year he became minister of Westerkirk. Sir James of Westerhall (d.1699) son of James and Isabella, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden (or Walter Scott 'Auld Wat' of Harden); it has also been suggested that his wife's name was Isabel. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the 1670s and sat in Parliament for Dumfries 1689–99. He married Margaret, daughter of John Bannatyne of Corhouse. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was 1st Baronet, followed by his younger son Sir William. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1682 (and hence was in the former Hassendean Parish). He married Bessie Turnbull and their children included: John (b.1679); and Robert (b.1682). The 1682 witnesses were John Armstrong and John Turnbull (probably related to his wife). In 1682 he also witnessed baptisms in Robertson for tailor Andrew Donald and for George Hood. James (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths and was surely related to George, who was also listed there, as well as John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for Thomas Knox in 1690. James Raymond of Alva (1768–1830) based in Clackmannanshire, he also held lands in Selkirkshire. In 1785 and 1802 he is recorded paying the Land Tax on Hangingshaw, Lewishope, ‘Scadarig’, Wester Kershope, Sundhope, Hollandrig, ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’, Sundhopehead, Shaws, ‘Bailliesles’ and Helmburn. His name was used in a case involving a swindle over a game licence in 1828, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was succeeded by his son James. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhill in Ashkirk Parish, recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James of Alva (1801–88) son of James Raymond and Mary Elizabeth Cholmeley, he succeeded to the Alva estate in Clackmannanshire. He lived at Hangingshaw in Selkirkshire. He was listed among the landowners of Roberton Parish in 1841. He was M.P. for Clackmannanshire and Kinross 1851–57, and was a J.P. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He firstly married Augusta Anne, daughter of Fletcher Norton, and secondly Sarah Mary, daughter of Lt.-Col. H.P. L’Estrange. His son Maj. James Henry L’Estrange lived at Hangingshaw. Rev. James Barbour (1815–85) 4th son of Walter and 2nd child with his 2nd wife Agnes Carlyle, he was born at Bridekirk near Annan. His elder half-brother John was an early photographer in Birmingham. He was educated in Maxwelltown and Dumfries and in 1835 went to Birmingham to work as a draughtsman in an architect’s office. He turned to religion in 1838, ran the local Scots Church Sunday School, became a member of the Independent Chapel in 1843 and attended classes at the New College in Edinburgh from 1844. He was a missionary at Culross 1846–47 and was licensed by the Free Presbytery of Dunfermline in 1848. After short periods at Stanley and Gatehouse he was ordained as the first minister at Wolfelee Free Kirk in early 1849. He lived at Denholm, until the manse was built. He was also known as a painter. He described his encounter with a ‘will-o’-the-wisp’ somewhere in the Rule valley, on his way back from preaching at Cramling. He moved from Wolfelee to St. John’s, Warrington in 1862. He resigned in 1875 and settled in Glasgow, finally moving to Dumfries in 1878, and drifted back to the Established Church. In 1839 he married Mary Maiben, daughter of Robert Whyte from Edinburgh; she died in 1860. In 1868 he married his 2nd wife, Janet Stavert, from Saughtree. His children included: probably Agnes Francis (b.1840), who died in infancy; Mary Whyte (1842–1925), who married James Cash; Robert Whyte (b.1844); James Carlyle (1846–1873) who died in Africa; Agnes (b.1848), married Andrew Tait; Walter (1850–84), baptised in Cavers, also died in Africa; Bryson (b.1853), baptised in Hobkirk, became an oriental merchant; John Carlyle (1855–1927), born in Hobkirk, became a doctor; Margaret Elliot (b.1857), born in Hobkirk, married John Robert Galloway; and William Johnstone (b.1860), born in Hobkirk, but died in infancy. He was buried in Hobkirk Churchyard. Note that his surname is sometimes given as ‘Johnston’. Sir John of that Ilk (d.1383) son of Gilbert. He was appointed one of the Warden of the West Marches in 1371 and it is said that he fought against the English Borderers in 1378. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was also a Warden of the Marches. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. John of that Ilk (1507–67) son of James of that Ilk and Mary, daughter of John, Lord Maxwell. He served as a surety for entering John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh in 1530/1. In 1543 there was a ‘bond of manrent’ with him signed in Hawick by Nichol Graham ‘of Meskeswaye’. He married Elizabeth Jardine and secondly Nicola, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance to ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’. He served as a Commissioner to keep order on the Border in 1552. However, he and 2 of his sons were declared fugitives in 1564. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir John, since his son James died before him. John of Hermiston (16th C.) recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish from John, son of George Ker of Faldonside. In 1564 he was ‘lard in Hirdmanstonne’ when he had a marriage contract with Marion Wilson; ‘Jok Wilsone’ was one of the witnesses and probably related to his wife. He was ‘of Hyrdmestoun’ in 1580 when he gave sasine of lands and houses in Hermiston to his son Patricki and his son Patrick in turn gave sasine of lands in ‘rindaill’ to his wife Marion Wilson.

(who was presumably not Patrick’s mother, otherwise the document would have said so). His wife Margaret (or Marion) Wilson also promised not to dispose her possessions to anyone except his daughters Margaret and Marion. He was in 1580 ‘seik in body and haill in Mynd’ when he stated that he had never received any of the children’s part of the goods and gear of Christian, daughter of John Pringle ‘of Bow’ and therefore does not owe them anything (this suggests that he served as a tutor for these children). John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale. Sir John Laird of Johnstone and Duns kellie (c.1550–87) eldest son of James. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane in the 1570s. In 1571 he had a bond with other Johnstones, signed at Branxholme, where he must have been visiting at the time. In the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme he was still owed ‘for the rest of his tocher gud, ane thousand and foure hundreth merkis’: he was also named as an executor of the will. He was recorded as surety in 1573, 1575 and 1576, in the register of the Privy Council and in 1574 pledged for the behaviour of many of his friends and associates, in an attempt to settle his dispute with Lord Maxwell. In 1578/9 he was cautioner for the appearance of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and his family. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1582 he was appointed Lieutenant of the West Marches, Nithsdale, Galloway and Liddesdale, and Provost of Dumfries. In 1564/5 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, younger of Buccleuch, and sister of Sir Walter Scott; in 1588/9, 1591 and 1596/7 she was recorded as ‘Dame Margaret Scott, Lady Johnnestoun’ in legal cases. Their children were: Sir James, who married Sara Maxwell, daughter of the 4th Lord Herries; Elizabeth, who married Sir Alexander Jardine; Margaret, who married Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall; Grizel (or Sara), who married Sir Robert Maxwell of Spottes and then Sir Patrick Vans of Barnbarroch; and Simon. John (17th C.) recorded in ‘elmur’ (i.e. Alemoor) in 1661. He married Jean ‘Gaie’ and their daughter Janet was baptised in Ashkirk in 1661, with witnesses James and Walter Chisholme. John (17th C.) paid the land tax for part of Hermiston in 1678. The lands were half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130. He may have been son of Walter, who paid the tax in 1663 and is surely related to George and James, who were recorded at Hermiston in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1702, his wife also being from Ashkirk. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1716, when he was described as herd in ‘Brodlie’ (i.e. Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish). John (d.1794) brewer at Whisky Houses. He died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Little Cote in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was farmer at Eastcote (the same place) on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He was also listed at Eastcote in 1795 when one of his children was baptised. His children included Bellow (b.1792) and Janet (b.1795). John of Alva (b.1734) son of Sir James of Westerhall and brother of Sir William Johnstone Pulteney. He bought a fraction of the Philiphaugh estate from John Murray in the late 1700s. In 1788 (and still stated that way in 1811) he is recorded as owner of Whitfield in Wilton Parish and Todshaw in Robertson Parish. He married Elizabeth Caroline, daughter of Col. Keene and was succeeded by his son James Raymond. John (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish Kirk who left along with the minister to form Hawick Free Kirk during the Disruption of 1843. He served as Session Clerk 1855–61. Rev. Matthew Pool (1843–1910) born near Annan, he studied in Edinburgh and was ordained at Symington in Ayrshire in 1869. He served as minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George’s) 1873–79. He was involved in national and local Liberal politics, and had a particular interest in education. After Hawick he moved to the Free Middle Church, Greenock, despite a petition by the Hawick congregation for him to stay. In 1871 he married Jane B. Milligan. He retired in 1907. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510 when he inherited the half lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf from his father Quentin. He was probably ancestor of George and James, who were at Hermiston in the late 1600s. Patrick (16th C.) received sasine of 3 husbandlands of land in Hermiston from his father John of Hermiston in 1580. On the same day he gave sasine to Marion Wilson, his father’s wife, of half a husbandland in ‘rindaill’, at that time occupied by William Elliot. He was ‘in Hyrdmestoun’ in 1581 when he witnessed an arrangement where Katherine Scott, widow of Robert of Colifort, resigned her lands of Hundleshope to her son Thomas. Quentin (d.bef. 1510) father of Patrick. His son inherited the lands of Hermiston from him in 1510. Richard, O.B.E. (?– ) pupil at Trinity and the High School and keen local cricketer, he became Professor and Vice-Dean at Stirling University. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 2004 for services to language, having been Director of the Scottish Centre for Information on Language Teaching. Robert (d.1530) part of the family of Johnstone of that Ilk, although the exact relation ship is unclear. He was known as a riever and was killed by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme 'to gratifife the King' shortly after the Border raid that James V organised in 1530 to suppress the thieves on the Border. This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Johnstones. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 at the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale. He appears to be listed as Keeper of Hermitage at that time. Robert (16th C.) from 'Kirkhelme' (i.e. Kirkholm) in Annan-dale. In 1574 he purchased a tenement in Hawick from Thomas Short. In 1579 he sold the same tenement in Hawick to David, brother of Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. This piece of land was on the north side of the High Street, between the tenements of Simon Sanderson and George Halliday. The transaction was done in Selkirk, with his brother James in 'Rammarhill' as a witness. It is unclear how a man from Annandale came to hold lands in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married a Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely related) and William Hall. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son John was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were Thomas Johnstone and John Minto (who were probably both related to the couple). Robert (19th C.) mason in Hawick in the mid-19th century. Robert (1821/2–96) born in Kelso, he worked in Hawick in the 1850s. He then moved to the Langholm area and returned to Hawick to be gardener at Brieryyards around 1870, moving later to Cleadon, near Sunderland. He married Catherine Shine in 1850 and they had 9 children: Denis William; Margaret: Robert; Janet; Alison; Catherine Marion; Jane; Agnes; and Mary. Rev. Samuel (17th/18th C.) minister at Southdean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and went to Southdean in 1690. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly. He was to have been translated to Oxnam in 1699, but instead went to Dundee. He was the last of the neighbouring parish ministers to preach at Hassendean in 1693. He married Isobel Hall, and one of their children was Gabriel, political writer and colonial governor. Simon* Syme* (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshie. In 1623 he entered James Graham in Moffat Water at the Commissioners’ Court. It is unclear if his lands were Foulshie in Castleton or elsewhere. Thomas (15th C.) listed on a ‘retoir of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. Perhaps the same Thomas was on the 1429/30 ‘re- tour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. Thomas (15th C.) bequeathed 20 shillings in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Thome Jhonsoun’. Thomas (16th C.) son and heir of ‘master’ James, Burgess of Selkirk. In 1534 there was a marriage contract between him and John Scott in Hawick. John Scott agreed to pay 80 merks as a dowry for the marriage of Janet, his daughter. Additionally after 1 year, the couple were to be vested in John’s house, then after paying 50 merks (‘in pennies and pennyworths’) were to receive sasine. The agreement was done in the room of William Brydon in Selkirk. Additionally, Janet Scott had sasine (in conjunct fee) for his tenement in Selkirk. However, later in 1534 Thomas, nephew of the deceased James (presumably cousin of this Thomas) had sasine for this same tenement; this Thomas is probably the son of Bailie Thomas who was given sasine of another tenement as heir of his grandfather Thomas in 1535/6. Also in 1534 he complained that some men had broken an arrangement over the carved bed that he held heritably, and at the same time John Mitchellhill admitted he possessed the best gown of the deceased ‘master James’. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1536 as son and heir of the deceased John, Burgess of Selkirk. He inherited 2 rigs that had belonged to his father and his grandfather Thomas. He also resigned a tenement to James ‘Keine’. He is probably the Burgess, married to Helen Rutherford, recorded in 1543, when his wife received a tenement from him in liferent. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1651 for Robert (who was surely related) and in 1652 for James Henderson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their children included Helen (b.1656) and Is- abel (b.1658). The witnesses in 1656 were James Easton and Archibald Elliot. Thomas (17th C.) married Marion Dodds in Ashkirk Parish in 1647. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Helen (b.1657) and Janet (b.1659). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Chisholme and their children included Margaret (b.1748), Janet (b.1750) and John (b.1752). Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstonestiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. Perhaps the same Thomas was a servant to James Fairbairn at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant at Hyndlee in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend around 1502 when the farm was burned by a group of Armstrongs, Turnbulls and others, led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws. His fellow tenant farmers were Thomas Young and his son, also Thomas, as well as Simon Leitch. His name is recorded as ‘Johnesone’ and Gilbert is also mentioned there.

William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their son George was baptised in 1661. William (17th C.) landowner in Lilliesleaf Parish. According to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £130 for part of Hermiston (probably the part that had formerly belonged to Robert Scott of Whitslade). He is probably related to John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Huntly in 1727 when his son James was baptised Sir William (1729–1805) 2nd son of Sir James, 3rd Baronet of Westerhall and Barbara, eldest sister of Patrick Murray, 5th Lord Elibank. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and was a friend of Adam Smith and Robert Adam, as well as a patron of Thomas Telford. He served as an M.P. in 7 successive Parliaments. He married heiress Frances Pultney (probably the part that had formerly belonged to Robert Scott of Whitslade). He is probably related to John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Huntly in 1727 when his son James was baptised Sir William (1729–1805) 2nd son of Sir James, 3rd Baronet of Westerhall and Barbara, eldest sister of Patrick Murray, 5th Lord Elibank. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and was a friend of Adam Smith and Robert Adam, as well as a patron of Thomas Telford. He served as an M.P. in 7 successive Parliaments. He married heiress Frances Pultney and changed his last name when he inherited extensive estates near Bath. It is said at one point that he was the wealthiest man in Britain. He was involved in the construction of the main road up the Ewes valley (now part of the A7), following an Act of Parliament of 1763. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but ‘will scarcely swear’ (i.e., was unlikely to vote); his brother John was also a Selkirkshire voter, having purchased part of Philiphaugh. He was said to be extremely rich when he died. He had no sons and only one daughter, Henrietta, who became Countess of Bath and married her father’s cousin Sir James Murray, but had no children. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. His son was tenant at Tower. William (18th/19th C.) listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Junior’, when he was farmer at Tower with 3 horses. He is listed after the farmer at Spittal, who was presumably his father. Probably the same William ‘Farmer Tower’ was listed in 1797 among men balloted to serve in the Militia; in 1798 it is explicitly recorded that he was balloted in place of James Thomson, gardener at Stobs. However, he then paid £10, presumably to avoid serving and in 1799 was listed among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish’. William (b.1792/3) born in Canonbie, he was a road contractor, living at Campknowes in Ewesdale in 1841, 1851 and 1861. By 1861 he was listed as a ‘Wood Contractor and Farmer of 21 acres’. His wife was Isabella and their children included William (a gamekeeper), Elizabeth, Janet, Isabella and Helen. William (1853/4–1938) farmer at Greenhead (or Greenheads) and butcher in Denholm. As a youth he looked after the steam engine in Weensland Woollen Mill in Hawick, then working in the dyeing house for Robert Greenwood. He married Greenwood’s daughter at the age of 16, but unable to provide for he, went out to New Zealand, finding a permanent job as an engineer and dyer in Dunedin. His wife refused to join him (after 7 years absence) and he returned to the Borders, where he took over running the family farm and bought butcher’s shops in Denholm and Ancrum. After living for a few years in Denholm, the family moved to Greenhead in 1902. He married Jane Maria, daughter of Robert Greenwood; she died in 1942, aged 89. Their children were: Bessie S. Johnstone, who died aged 9; William (b.1897), well known artist; and Mary (d.1962). William ‘Wullie’ (20th C.) local Scout leader and piper who served with the K.O.S.B. and was killed in WWII. His pipes were returned to Hawick and Rob Lyle played them at the Menin Gate decades later. William (1897–1981) artist, born in Denholm above the butcher’s shop on Main Street. He was the only son of William (farmer and butcher) and Jane Maria Greenwood. His maternal grandfather was Robert Greenwood, textile designer with Wilson & Glenny’s. He grew up at Greenhead farm near Selkirk, where his father farmed from 1902. He left school early, put off by the authoritarian style of education. He was inspired by his cousin John Maxwell, who was a tweed designer, and at an early age influenced and encouraged by Tom Scott. His work on the farm kept him from active duty until the last months of WWI. He then studied in Edinburgh and Paris, incorporating surrealist ideas into his paintings, often inspired by the Borders countryside. He lived briefly in California, and settled in London in 1931, where he taught at a secondary school, and developed radical ideas on how to develop artistic abilities in children. Along with Francis George Scott and Hugh MacDiarmid, they planned a renaissance of Scottish arts. He was one of the more influential painters of his time, particularly as Principal of the Cambertown School of Art (1938–48) and of the London Central School of Arts and Crafts (1948–61). He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1954, and an honorary degree by Edinburgh University, where many of his paintings can be seen in the Talbot-Rice Gallery. He painted a portrait of Francis George Scott (his cousin) in about 1931. He also published books, including ‘Creative Art in England’ (1938), ‘Child Art to Man Art’ (1941) and an autobiography, ‘Points in time’ (1980). He married Flora Macdonald of San Francisco, who was evacuated back to the U.S. in 1940, along with his daughter Elizabeth Jane (b.1931). He later married Mary Jane Bonning and had another daughter. He retired to Satchells farm near Ashkirk in 1960, later moving to Ettrick then near Crailing. He then had a late burst of creative output, with the help of the patronage of Hope Montagu Douglas Scott. He also in this period made a series of plaster reliefs with assistance from local plasterer George Turnbull. There are 2 short films about his life and art. He died at the Cottage Hospital in Hawick and is buried in Denholm. William ‘Bill’ nephew of Bill McLaren, he was educated at Ha-wick High School. He became a rugby commenta-

the Joogly Brig (thu-joo-glee-brig) n. popular name for a wooden footbridge over the Borthwick, near Borthaugh farm, officially known as ‘Borthaugh Footbridge’. It was built near the site of the former blacksmith’s shop, and provided a popular loop walk for several decades. The builder was local joiner David Taylor, who made a laminate with bolted wooden spars to form one gentle curve over the roughly 60 ft span. But unfortunately the weight of the bridge caused it to buckle, forming an extra rise in the middle. The bridge eventually became unsafe and was replaced by a more stable metal bridge in 1966.

Jordan Sike (jor-din-sik) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising on Steele Knowe (near the A6088 at Charlie’s Hill) and running to the north to joint the Jed Water. Between the stream and Steele Knowe, to the east, there are extensive signs of old agricultural development, including rig lines, grouse shooting butts, enclosures and boundary banks. These extend to connect with boundary dykes around Northbank Tower, and seem to show 3 distinct phases of development. There are also the remains of 3 round-ended buildings and several turf huts in the area. On the west side is a field system, an old drove road, disused quarries, shooting butts and several enclosures and boundary banks. Near the head of the stream is the start of a boundary bank, which runs for about 3 km towards Lethem.

(jus-tis-är) n. circuit court of the Crown. Through much of its history Scotland’s justice was administered in 2 regions, divided by the River Forth. Hawick lay in the southern region, sometimes also for this purpose called ‘Lothian’, presided over by the Justiciar for Lothian. Circuit courts would be held twice a year, generally in the spring and the autumn, with Jedburgh being the usual location for cases relevant to Hawick (but aires were also sometimes held at Roxburgh and Melrose). The route was often from Jedburgh to Lauder, then Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigton, Ayr, Dumbarton and Stirling. Records still exist for such courts held in the periods 1493–1504 and 1507–1513, these being among the oldest local documents that give some detailed insight to life in the Borders. The court may have been effectively replaced by the Commissioners’ Court in the later 16th century.

Justicelee (jus-tis-lee) n. former lands in Jedforest, recorded in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants were William, Alexander and John Hunter, and the lands were valued at 18s 9d. It is unclear where these lands were, but they are listed after Rouchhirst and Old Jedburgh. It is ‘Justice-lee’ in 1684 when John Laidlaw from there was on a list of Covenantant fugitives.

justifiæt (jus-ti-fl-ec, -i) pp., poet. justified – ‘For bie thy words thou salt be justifiæt, an’ bie thy words thou salt be condemet’ [HSR].

the Justin Haugh (thu-jus-tin-hawch) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, part of the farm of Nether Bucharston and on the Weens estate. The name appears in a 1606 charter for Hobsburn and Weens, where it formed the southern boundary. It was said to be a level field, presumably near the river, and must form part of the modern village of Bucharston Bridge. Tradition says that this haugh was once used for jousting matches, but there is no direct evidence for this (also written ‘Justinhaugh’), it is the ‘Justing hawche’ in 1606 and in 1887 Walter Deans calls it ‘Jeistings’-haugh’; the name is perhaps related to jousting; see also Jeistins’-haugh.

kailyaird (kāl-yārd, kāl-yird) n., arch. a kitchen garden, small back garden – ‘Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yaird!’ [T], ‘... and where there sall be an necessity to set aine ladder in ane lint or kail-yard, the party skaithed is to have satisfaction ...’ [BR1660], ‘The path leading to it is a’ growing green, Nae trace o’ the kail-yard is now to be seen’ [DA], ‘Till yer heart shall bliss the bonnie buss In oor kailyaird’ [RH], ‘But nane o’ them a’ my feelings regard, Like the auld plum tree in grannie’s kailyard’ [RF], ‘... And it’s no to be compared Wi’ the ‘bonnie, bonnie breer bush In oor kailyaird’[TCh], ‘... And syne the kail-yard pick for body, Grated or diced and spurtled throwe’ [WL], ‘Where’s a’ the pochers gane? Yince yin could tell At sicht, thon thrissles i the douce kailyaird We ca society ...’ [DH] (also written ‘kail-yard’).

Kailyaird Wud (kāl-yārd-wud) n. Kailyard Wood, wood just south of Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined steading with enclosed enclosure there.

kaim (kām) n., arch. a comb, the ridge of a hill, long, steep-sided hill-crest – ‘...And high hung the hills, wi’ their star-topped kaimbs’ [JoHa], ‘At the kaim o the nicht, A turnt roond for another keek ahint’ [ECS], v., arch. to comb, used figuratively as a threat – ‘... Butte, with the kente was in his neif, He kaimed the kerlyn’s buffe’ [JTe], ‘A’ll kaim eer heid for ce!’ [GW], ‘... wi’ their ‘cleir hair’ kaimed owre their young shoouders ...’ [DH], to dress a haystack with a rake (also spelled ‘caim’ and ‘caimb’; the word survives in the names of some local places, e.g. Kaimend, Kaim Law and Minto Kames).

Kaim Cleuch (kām-klooch) n. small stream that rises on the southern side of Kaim Law and runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig near Hummelknowes Bridge.

Kaimend (kām-end) n. farm, south of Ormiston, in the hills to the south east of Hawick. Part of the area was formerly also known as Hilliesland. James Rathie was farmer there in 1797 and William Rathie was labourer there in the same year. James Rathie was tenant in 1801, with his sons William and James also listed there. Robert Scott was farmer in 1841 and until at least the 1860s (also written ‘Kaim End’), it is ‘Cambend’ in 1797 and ‘Combend’ in 1801 and 1811; note there is also a village called Kaimend in South Lanarkshire and a house in North Berwick; the name probably derives from ‘kaim’, which is old Scots for a comb or the ridge of a hill).

the Kaimend Hills (thū-kān-end-hilz) n. hills to the east of Hawick. One of the peaks, Kaim Law, is 238 m high, lies to the west of Kaimend farm, contains a hill-fort, and was sometimes referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’. The other main peak, sometimes called ‘the second Kaimend’, is 275 m high, lies to the south of the farm, and is named Whiteacres Hill on modern maps.

Kaim Law (kām-law) n. the highest peak in the Kaimend Hills to the immediate south-east of Hawick, reaching a height of 238 m (777 ft). It has also been referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’ and has a well-defined hill-fort on its summit. This measured about 110 m by 30 m and had ramparts and ditches that are still easy to see. The entrance was probably to the south-west, and there are indications of oval huts inside. The fort at the nearby Castle Law is surely associated in some way.

the Kale (thū-kāl) n. popular name for the Kale Witter and its valley – ‘The sweetest flower I ever saw In blossom upon hill or dale, It was a beauty, bloomin’ braw, Upon the bonnie banks o’ Kale’ [TCh].
Kale Witter (kāl-wī'-ur) n. river rising in the Cheviots, passing through the villages of Hownam, Morebattle and Eckford, and flowing into the Teviot. The river is about 20 miles (34 km) long. The first bridge over the river was probably the one at Eckford Mill, built in the 1690s. There is also a chain suspension bridge at Kamaleshell, built around 1836 by Capt. Sir Samuel Brown. Douglas Hall edited the book ‘Kalamwang: a miscellany’ (1999) – ‘Where you slip suddenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lower-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppers and bowers’ [WL] (the origin of the name may be from an early Indo-European root ‘kal’, meaning ‘hard’).

the Kames (thu-kān’z) n. former area in Minto Parish, also called Minti Kames (also written ‘Kaims’; it is probably the place transcribed as ‘the Cayves’ after Minto in a list by Sir Ralph Bulmer in 1548/9).

Kameside Park (kām-sūd-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was owned by Lord Minto, valued at £65 14s, and had livery held by Sir John Dalrymple. However, in 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Brown, with a rental of £18 (it was ‘Kaimside park’ in 1780).

Kames Moss (kām-mos) n. boggy area by the old railway line at Minto, near the farm of Minto Kames. It is referred to as ‘Minto Kaims Moss’ by James Murray in 1863. It is related to the former lands of ‘Kaymes’, part of Belses, recorded being leased by Thomas Hamilton (then Lord Binning) to Walter Davidson in 1632. The area to the south of the farm now contains Kames South Loch, with Kames North Loch further north towards Stanhill (cf. Minti Kames).

Kames Muir Park (kām-mwew-pawrk) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. In 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Smail, with a rental of £8 (it was ‘Kaimsmuir park’ in 1780).

Kang (kawng) n. nickname used for a branch of the Irvings in the 16th century.

Kapleston (kaw-pul-stin) n. former farmstead in the headwaters of Tarras Water. Kapleston Sike and Kapleston Hill are marked on modern maps ‘Kepelstoun’ is on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Cepilstain’ and ‘Kepilstoun M.’ on Blaet’s c.1654 maps.

Kate Dalrymple (kā'-dawl-rim-pul) n. tune that the Drums and Fifes sometimes play, along with ‘Stumpy’, at the end of the Common Riding for the Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father to dance the Bull Reel to. It is a well-known traditional reel, and was for many years the theme music for BBC Radio Scotland’s ‘Take the Floor’. It was first published in 1750 as ‘The New Highland Laddie’, while the modern name apparently comes from a famous beauty, perhaps influenced by the Gainsborough portrait of ‘Mrs. Grace Dalrymple Elliot in the 1770s.

Kate the Cuddy Wife (kā'-thu-cu-dee-wīf) n. nickname for a former Hawick resident, probably from the 19th century – ‘Kate the Cuddy Wife, Tammy Landar, Wullie Gotterson, Jockie Eye; Auld man Fox was never madder Than when the callants chased his kye’ [HI].

Katey’s Cross (kā'-eez-kros) n. local name for a meeting point near Lethem in Southdean Parish, where there used to be a market. It corresponds to the small hill called ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’, where there are remains of a former settlement and tower. Whether there was ever a market there is unknown.

Katharine Elliot Centre (kath-rin-e-lee-i'-sen'-ur) n. centre for social education of learning disabled and physically disabled adults, built by the Borders Regional Council in 1973 and named after Dame Baroness Katharine Elliot of Harwood, Chair of the Social Work Committee at that time. There is also an adjacent supervised housing facility built in 1980. The land had previously been allotments, and during WWII had been the site of Nissen huts for housing prisoners of war.

Katharine’s Court (kath-rinz-kör’) n. housing development off Howdenbank, named after Dame Baroness Katharine Elliot of Harwood. The housing was built adjacent to the Katharine Elliot Centre in 2000.

katie (kā'-ee, kā-tee) n., ins. an effeminate man, also abbreviated form of katie-beardie.

katie-bairdie (kā'-tee-bär-dee) n., arch. the loach (also katie-beardie).

katie-beardie (kā'-ee, kā-tee-beer-dee) n. insulting term for a woman with a mustache, a small catfish, loach or stickleback, e.g. Gasterosteus aculeatus or Cobitis barbatula – ‘...Like gumpin’ eels ablow the Albert Brig, Or ‘latties’ in the deep Cat’s Pule’ [WL] (there are several variants, including just ‘beardie’; formerly katie-bairdie, cf. beardie-loachie).

kavie (kā-vee) n., poet. a hen-coop – ‘I mean the hubbub ’boot yon braw-built kavie, Where sits... a clocker trim, and twa-three burds’ [JoHa], ‘An’
gin ye’d like a worthy weel-fill’d kavie O’ bonnie, healthy, hardie, mettl’t burdies . . . ‘ [JoHa].
Kay (kā) n. Rev. George (d.1766) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1729, he was licensed by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1734 and became minister at Collessie in 1739. He was presented to Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1741, as-sistant and successor to John Ritchie. However, he moved to Dysart (Second Charge) after only 2 years. He then went to St. Cuthbert’s (Edinburgh) in 1747, New Greyfriars in 1752 and Old Greyfriars in 1754. He was given a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1759 and was Moderator of the General Assembly the same year, as well as being made Chaplain of Stirling Castle.
He married Charlotte Sheriff in 1747 and their children were David, Charles and Margaret. He later married Ann Forth. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as brother of Adam Scott in ‘aldnershope’ (probably Anmelshope). Scott had remission for a series of crimes, including resetting him, particularly in the theft of 80 cattle and goods to the value of 100 merks from George Mid-demas and Matthew Paterson out of Dryhope.
It is unclear if he was perhaps Scott’s brother-in-law or if ‘Kay’ was a nickname and he was also a Scott. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick.
He married Helen Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1757); Andrew (b.1759); and William (b.1761). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation and in 1759 were Rev.
James Laurie and William Dyce. Thomas (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1734 he was a witness to the notorial instrument in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs.
He married Jean Briggs and their children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1737), James (b.1739) and Helen (b.1742). The witnesses in 1739 were weaver John Scott and ‘Senior Shoemaker’ George Oliver. It seems likely he was a son of Walter, who was also a tailor in Hawick.
Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1716
he presented for baptism the illegitimate child of Walter Scott, brother to the Laird of Whitslade; this suggests that he played some role within the church. In 1721 his son Robert was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath with Thomas Weddell.
In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for waulker William Hood. He married Margaret Pringle and their children included: Adam (b.1713); and John (b.1715) (also written ‘Key’).
Kay Wud (kā-wud) n. Kay Wood, small plantation on the southern slopes of Ruberslaw, north of Town-o-Rule. It contains an old enclosure.
the Kazba (thu-kaz-baw) n. name for the No. 10, adopted around 2000, and sometimes called ‘the Kazba Venue Bar’.

Keane (kēn) n. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484. His name is spelled ‘Keyne’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne Kene’ in 1528 when he witnessed the ‘precept’ infesting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Kene’ when witness to the document proclaiming William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, as the Baron of Hawick in 1428/9; most of the witnesses were local men.
Kearney’s (kēr-neez) n. chemist’s shop in the station buildings in the early 20th century.
keb (kēb) v. to give birth to a still-born lamb, to lose a lamb at an early age – ‘Ewes are said to be

kebb (kē-bi’) pp., adj., arch. having lost
a lamb.
kebbuck (kē-buk) n., arch. a whole cheese –
‘And kebbucks and cruppocks snow, But Jenny Muirhead brought a capon’ [ES].
keb-hoose (kē-hooz) n., arch. a small farm building where a ewe is confined in order to adopt motherless lambs.
keb-park (kē-pawrk) n., arch. a field set aside for ewes that have ‘keb’ lambs.
keckle (kē-kul) n., v. cackle – ‘Her handsome shape an’ glancin’ een Wad gart a farmer
Kedie see Kedie
Kedie (ke-dee) n. Adam (b.1747) son of George and Agnes. He was an elder of the Burgher congregation at the East-end Kirk. In 1791 he signed the call to James Henderson on behalf of the ‘seventy-six persons [who] could not with their own hands sign the call’. He is probably the Adam ‘Kedy’ who rented the ‘best’ mortcloth in 1771. He married Margaret Stewart (c.1756–1820) and their children included: Elizabeth (‘Betty’, 1772–1850), baptised in Hawick and married James Grant; Agnes (‘Nancy’, 1774–1841), baptised in Wilton, married William Jones; George (1777–1834), baptised in Wilton, married Christie Archibald; Christie (1778–1868), who had sons Adam and Andrew: James (1779–1860), baptised in Wilton, married Margaret Hume and died in Ohio; William (1781–1828), baptised in Wilton, married Margaret Telford; Janet (1784–1849), baptised in Hawick, married William Graham; Isabel (1785–1881), who married Daniel Mabie; Adam (1790–1820), married Mary Thompson; Margaret (b.1790), twin of Adam, died in infancy; Margaret Telford (1792–1874), born in New York; and Mary Thompson (1797–1830), born in New York. The family emigrated to America in 1795, settling in New York state. He died in South Kortright, Delaware County. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston Andrew (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1630. This is probably the earliest local record of this family name. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1691, along with William, he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop and Janet (perhaps his sister). His son William was baptised in 1691. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1740) and Andrew (b.1743). Daniel (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was at North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the Daniel who witnessed a baptism for John in Ashkirk in 1690. In 1709 he was tenant in Wester Burnfoot. He married Bessie Elliot in 1691 and their children included: Isobel (b.1692); Thomas (b.1694); Anna (b.1696); Bessie (b.1698); William (b.1701); John (b.1704); Mary (b.1707); and Jean (b.1709). The witnesses in 1694 were John and Andrew Riddell (who lived at Dryden). Daniel (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Remnasion and their children included Isobel (b.1696). David (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1688 and their children included James (b.1696). It is possible that his name was ‘Dand’ rather than David. George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He was probably married to Agnes Elliot or Scott and had a son Adam in 1747, baptised in Hawick (whose grandson would become a prominent real estate developer in Chicago). He may be the George who had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1740 and the George whose daughter Isobell was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1740. In 1763 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve and Isabel Scott. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and ‘Clerklandes’. His name is listed as ‘Umphra Cadzou’ and he was probably related to William, who was also there, as well as Walter in Greatlaws. George (1777–1834) eldest son of Adam, he was baptised in Wilton Parish. He emigrated to America in 1795, along with the rest of the family. He settled in Stamford, New York. He married Christie Archibald, whose family came from Midlem, and they had 5 children. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1652 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Brown. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Telfer and their children included James (b.1716). James (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 among the residents of Ash Kirk Parish receiving poor money. James (18th C.) married Janet Currer in Ashkirk in 1742. James (1779–1860) son of Adam and Margaret Stewart. He was baptised in Wilton Parish and emigrated to America with his parents and siblings in 1795. He married Margaret Hume, who was from Gordon in Berwickshire. Their son John Hume (1815–1903) became a lawyer, real estate developer and politician in Chicago, giving his name to Kedzie Avenue in Chicago and Kedzie Street in Evanston. Other children were Adam, Allison Hume, Margaret, Isabella Bunyan, Robert Hume, Mary E. Austin, Mary E. Kent, Elizabeth Bunyan, George Lawson and Jane Ann. James (b.1814/5) forester and factor at Abbotrule Grange. He presented a fossil to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Elizabeth, William and Helen. James (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Helen Elliot and their children included James (b.1840), Anne (b.1842), John (b.1845), Andrew (b.1847), Betty (b.1850) and William (b.1852). James (19th C.) blacksmith of the Fore Row in the latter part of the 1800s, succeeding from James Bowie. It was probably his nephew William who was killed in South Africa in 1899. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Greatlaws. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of ‘Grett Law’ and Clerklands. His name is listed as ‘Jok Cadzou’ and he was probably related to William and Humphrey, who were at Clerklands. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1689 and their children included: Isobel (b.1690); and William (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were George Scott and Daniel Kedie (probably related to the couple). In 1690 (along with Andrew), he witnessed a baptism for William Hislop and Janet (who may have been his sister). John (d.1786) baker, probably son of Thomas, who was said to have been a centenarian. He is probably the John who was Cornet in 1737. He is probably also the ‘baxter’ John, son of Thomas, who was made a Burgess in 1737. He witnessed baptism in 1741 for baker David Haig, in 1742 for shoemaker Robert Wilson and in 1743 for weaver Andrew Jardine. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Scott in 1765. He may be the ‘John Keidzly’, the entry into whose ‘stackyard, on the south or south-east side of the high road without the West Port of Hawick’ was described in 1767 as the starting point for the perambulation of the Common undertaken as part of the court case brought for its division; he also owned houses on the Loan just beyond there. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Brown. He is probably the John who was paid 1 shilling in 1783 for ‘liberty for the Dran in his Park for the Well’; this was presumably the pipe running down to the Pant Well. He is probably the baker who in 1783 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter Wilson and Joan (his daughter). He firstly married Betty Turnbull from Liddesdale, and their children included: Thomas (1743–1811), also a baker; and Janet (b.1745), who married Archibald Douglas. His second wife was Betty, daughter of wright John Pringle. Their children were: Betty (1754–1823), who married David Kyle of Melrose; Joan (1756–1840), who married shoemaker Peter Wilson and had 14 children; John (1759–1826), also a baker; George (b.1763); and Mary (b.1765), who married George Rutherford, a Kelso farmer. The baptism in 1743 was witnessed by shoemaker Robert Oliver and William Oliver junior, the one in 1745 by John Ruecastle and William Scoon and the one in 1765 by Alexander Bunyan and James Brydon. The 1763 baptism of George was witnessed by his grandfather Thomas. He is said to have been 85 when he died, placing his birth in 1700/1, but it seems likely he was born later. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as farmer at ‘Slackhills’ in Hawick Parish. This is probably Slaidhills. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He is probably the John whose daughter Isabella (b.1786/7) married Hawick tailor Walter Riddle. John (1759–1826) son of John and Betty Pringle. He was also a baker, but moved to London. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Peter and Joan (his sister). In 1785 he married Isobel, 3rd daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1805. He later married Mary Anderson, who died in 1831. His children were: Mary (b.1789), who married soldier James Thomson; Elizabeth (b.1791), who married farmer Robert Goodfellow; Williamina (b.1793), who married a Mr. Clark and their son Robert became a bookseller in London; Isobel (b.1795), who married first a Fairbairn and then a Warland; Jacky (b.1799), who married a Mr. Notman; John (b.1800), who was a sailor; and Jean (b.1810), perhaps also known as Janet. He also had an unnamed child who died in Hawick in 1797. John (b.1804) son of Thomas and Mary Scoon. He is probably the tobaccoist John who lived at 13 Howegate with shoemaker John Douglas and John’s wife Elizabeth, who was his sister. He was there at least from 1841 to 1861, and was unmarried. Robert (b.c.1759) probably a baker. He married Janet Adamson. Their children included: Robert (b.1790); Philip (b.1793); and Jannet (b.1795). Robert (1790–1869) Hawick baker of Silver Street, son of Robert and Janet Adamson. He was probably the Silver Street baker and spirit dealer listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and whose house, on the south-east side of the Auld Brig, is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was also listed as a Silver Street baker on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. His business was one of those said to have suffered severe damage during the 1846 flood. In 1841 his house was described as ‘Head of Silver St’ (presumably meaning at the corner with Kirkstyle). In 1861 he was described as a farmer of 8 1/2 acres, living at 1 Kirkstyle. His wife was Janet Farsyth (and she died before 1861). Their children were: Thomas (b.1816), baker and Cornet; William (b.1818), draper; Janet (b.1820); Mary (b.1823), who married John Innes; Jane Charters (1826–1912); Joan (b.1838); and Janet (b.1842).
A portrait of him exists with his wife and son William. Robert, J.P. (1844–1915) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Fraser. He lost both parents as a child and was raised by his uncle William. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and the Episcopalian School in Hawick. He was an apprentice with his uncle, later joining the retail merchants Stewart & Macdonald in Glasgow, where he eventually became managing partner. He also served as Director of Glasgow Chamber of Commerce and as Director of the Glasgow Night Asylum for the Houseless, and was associated with the Trades' House, Merchants' House, Commercial Travellers' Benefit Society, Glasgow Savings Bank, Athenæum and Western Infirmary. He married a daughter of William Forsyth and had 2 daughters and 1 son. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Donaldson in Ashkirk Parish in 1659. Their children included William (b.1660), Thomas (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Andrew Riddell (who may also have been at Dryden). In 1691 his son Thomas had a bond with James Haddon in Selkirk. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas in Dryden. In 1691 he had a bond recorded in Selkirk. He is probably the Thomas recorded as tenant in Dryden in 1717. He may be the same Thomas who married Janet Brown in 1705 and whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Isobel (b.1708), William (b.1717) and Mary (b.1718); they also had a son ‘Ebenezer Kidsly’ baptised in Hawick Parish in 1723. Thomas (c.1662–c.1763) farmer and then baker in Hawick. He is one of the earliest recorded members of the local family. He could be the Thomas ‘Kedzee’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott of Alton in Wilton in 1722. He was admitted as a Burgess in 1728, with his name then recorded as ‘Cadzie’. His wife’s name is suggested to have been Betty Hitcher (although that surname is otherwise unrecorded locally), and also Fletcher (which seems more likely); she died before 1732. His children with Betty Fletcher were: Thomas, who died in infancy; John (said to be 85 when he died in 1786, but this may be incorrect), also a baker and made a Burgess in 1737, when he was probably also Cornet; Thomas again; another son; Isobel; Janet; Mary; and 2 other daughters, the 5th daughter being born in 1720. He was a witness to the baptism of his grandson George in early 1763 and it said that he died soon after in his hundredth year. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Over Southfield in the 1720s.

He emigrated to America along with the rest of the family in 1795. In 1826 he moved to Michigan, purchasing land there, setting himself up as a farmer, and helping establish the local church. He married Margaret Telford and they had 16 children. William ‘Willie’ (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was shepherd to Elliot of Hindhope. He was grooms for the Jardines at Arkelton on the 1861 census. He was known as a breeder of greyhounds. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John, Margaret, William and Andrew. His older children were born in Bedrule Parish. William (1818–80) Hawick draper, son of baker Robert. He served his apprenticeship with Charles Williamson and took over the business in partnership with Walter Armstrong when Williamson left for Australia in 1839. By 1853 he was running his own draper’s business at the Tower Knowe. He also ran a small tweed manufacturing business, William Kedie & Co., which was taken over by Innes, Blenkhorn and Richardson, who built Riversdale Mills around 1880. He was a Trustee and one of the first deacons of St. George’s Kirk and was involved in setting up the West End Mission. Despite being heavily involved with the Free Kirk, in 1850 he purchased the Old Manse from the established Kirk, and then lived there. In 1861 he was living on Old Manse Lane, with his sister Jane C. and niece Joan. He also raised his nephew, Robert. William (1879/80–99) nephew of Mr. Kedie, blacksmith of Drumlanrig Square. Born in Hawick, his family moved to Dundee when he was 7. He served with the 2nd Battalion, Black Watch, and was killed in action in the Boer War. the Kedie Hoose (thu-ke-dee-hoos) n. popular name for the building where generations of Kedie’s lived, last occupied by Robert Kedie in the mid-19th century. It was a 2-storey thatched house located roughly where the spiral staircase of the Exchange Buildings was later built. An old building, it was full of ‘holes, boles and wee windows’. It had a baker’s shop on the ground floor, and in the early 19th century Mrs. Kedie kept an inn there. During the great flood of 1767 about a dozen people used a ladder across to the house to escape when trapped on the Auld Brig. It was said that the street ‘was stripped to the very rocks’ between here and Ekron’s houses. The house was said to have been the lodgings of theologian Thomas Chalmers. The house was demolished in 1863 to make way for the Exchange, but can be seen in a photograph of 1860. It was also known as ‘Kedie’s Gable’ and ‘the Brig-end’, and should not be confused with ‘Kedie’s Buildin’.

the Kedies (thu-ke-deez) n. local family of some importance in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the name also written ‘Kedzie’ and other variants. Isobel ‘Kedyea’ is recorded as mother in a Hawick birth record of 1650. A branch of the family lived in the same place for seven generations, on the west bank of the Slitrig, near the mill, known as the ‘Kedie Hoose’, before the tenement was torn down in 1863. The family were also sometimes referred to as the Old Manse Lane Kedie’s and produced 3 Cornets. The 20-mile long street Kedzie Avenue in Chicago (and its associated subway stations) is named after a descendant of this Hawick family. There were burgesses of Selkirk called ‘Cاذzow’ recorded in Selkirk in the early 16th century and people called ‘Kaidyea’ in Ashkirk in the 17th century (also sometimes ‘Kedzie’, ‘Kedzie’ and other variants; the name may be related to Cadzow near Hamilton).

Kedie’s (ke-deez) n. William Kedie & Co., also known for a while as Kedie, Darling & Co. Ltd., Hawick woollen manufacturers of the latter part of the 19th century, with main factory at Riversdale Mills. William Kedie, a High Street draper, started his small tweed business in the mid-1800s, and when he died in 1880 it was taken over by his nephew Robert Innes, with Blenkhorn and Richardson as silent partners. Innes died in 1895, and Adam Darling became a partner in 1898. The firm went into increasing debt in the early 1900s and was incorporated into Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. around 1910.

Kedie’s Buildin (ke-deez-bil-din) n. building at 7 Tower Knowe, near where the Kedie family had previously lived. It was built by Harkness the builders and is beside the steps to the Millport.

The site was probably the location of the original Mill of Hawick. It is the first house on the North side of what was effectively the High Street, and was occupied by William Kedie, draper in the 1850s. The site was much later known as the Tower Cafe (also known as ‘Kedie’s Shop’ and not to be confused with ‘the Kedie Hoose’ on the other side of the Tower Knowe, or the Ruecastle Tenement formerly at 7 High Street).

Kedzie (ked-zee) n. Adam (1746–1818) son of George Francis and Agnes. In 1770 he married Margaret Stewart (1756–1820), recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes. Their children were: Elizabeth (1772–1850); Nancy (1774–1841); George (1777–1834); Christie Archibald (1778–1868); James (1779–1840); Margaret Hume (1780–1865); William (1781–1828); Margaret Telford (1792–1874); Janet (1783–1849); Isabel (1785–1881); Adam (1790–1820); Margaret, who died in infancy; and Mary (1797–1830). In 1795 he emigrated with his wife and eight children, staying in Bovina, Delaware County, New York, before moving to Stamford, Connecticut. His grandson John Hume Kedzie was an important real estate developer, with Kedzie Avenue in Chicago and Kedzie Street in Evanston named after him. Kedzie Avenue is a very long street running north/south through Chicago, with a subway station of the same name (spelling varies, e.g. ‘Keidzea’; see also Kedie).

Kedsie (kedz-lee) n. farm west of the A68 beyond Earlston, with a nearby hill of the same name (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Cada’; it is first recorded in about 1200 as ‘Caddysleya’ and is ‘Kedsleidoors’ in 1643; it seems likely that there is a connection with the local Kedie/Kedzie/Kedzlie family).

Keir (keer) n. James (19th C.) married Martha Rutherford in East Bank Kirk in 1830. William of Whitehaugh (d.1818) possibly son of Thomas of Powisholm and Elizabeth Elliot, heiress of Whithaugh. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale from perhaps 1772 to 1818. He lived at Milnholm, near Langholm, where he is recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s and the dog tax in 1797. In 1787 he advised the Duke that some people in Liddesdale were petitioning for land to create a village, which would become Newcastleton. He was in charge of the plans for the town’s layout. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the William ‘of Raniston’ listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. His agricultural improvements were the focus of a 2004 Ph.D. thesis at Edinburgh University by Brian Bonnyman. He was succeeded as Chamberlain by James Davidson. Whitlaugh seems to have been inherited by William, who was probably his nephew. However, it is unclear how many Williams there were. He died at Milnholm. He is probably the man of the same name whose book ‘A Summons of Wakening; or, the Evil Tendency and Danger of Speculative Philosophy exemplified in Mr. Leslie’s Inquiry into the Nature of Heat, and Mr. Malthus Essay on Population’ was published in Hawick in 1807. William of Whitlaugh (b.1810) son of Thomas and Eliza Elliot, he was born at Langholm. He probably inherited Whitlaugh from his grandfather. He acted as estate improver for the Duke of Buccleuch. He resided at Potholm, near Langholm until 1848. In 1851 he is recorded at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish, as farmer of over 2,000 acres and employing 18 labourers. He was at Whitehaugh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at Whithaugh, which is recorded as a house having 8 rooms with 1 or more windows. He was recorded as ‘Wm. Kerr’ at ‘Whithough’ in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of Whithaugh in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He was probably the ‘Kei [sic] of Whithaugh [sic]’ listed among local ‘Hard-riding Dick’s’ in H.H. Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865). He served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Castleton. He was President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was also a breeder of prize cattle. His wife was Janet. He died without issue and Whithaugh was inherited by his nephew William Little.

Keith (keith) n. Sir Alexander of Dunnotar and Belses (1786–1832) son of Sir Alexander, he was an accountant in Edinburgh. He was recorded as owner of parts of Belses (purchased from Bennet of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was knighted when George IV visited Scotland in 1822. He was owner of the lands of New Belses, Belses Mill and Belses Muir according to an estate plan of 1826.

Sir Edward (c.1280–1346) son of Robert, who was Great Marischal of Scotland. He is probably the Edward mentioned in a letter from Edward I in about 1300, granting him licence to take any of the goods from ‘Monsire Guilliam de Galeys’ (i.e.
William Wallace). His brother Sir Robert succceeded their father as Great Marischal and commanded the cavlary at Bannockburn. He is referred to as ‘de Kethe’ when, along with his wife Isabella de Synton, he claimed the Sheriffsdom of Selkirk from Edward I in about 1305. Isabella was the sister of the previous Sheriff, Andrew de Synton, and heiress to the Synton estate. He had a confirming charter for his lands and offices from David II. His account as Sheriff was recorded in 1328. He secondly married Christina (or Christian), daughter of Sir John Monteith, Lord of Annan; she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk. His children included: Sir William;
John of Inverugie, who married Mariot de Chen;
Catherine; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Sir Thomas Erskine. Jean (presumably Janet) is recorded as his heir in a charter of 1368. It is unclear whether he or any of his children played any role locally. But Joneta married an Erskine, suguggesting that the Synton estates passed through er to that family. His seal is attached to the Declaration of Arbroath. He died at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His seal was divided into 6 vertical regions and decorated with lozenges, with a digonal stripe on top. Janet or ‘Joneta’ (c.1345– 1415) youngest daughter of Edward and Christina Menteith. She was also great-grand-daughter of the 11th Earl of Mar (resulting in a long-standing claim of the Erskines to the Earldom of Mar). She made David de Barclay (in Selkirk), then David Hamilton of Cadzow and finally Sir Thomas Erskine. In 1368 she is described as ‘Jean Berclay, daughter and heir of deceased Sir Edward Keth, lord of Syntou’m. One of her sons was Robert, 1st Lord Erskine, who probably inherited the Synton estates from her. William (13th/14th C.)
recorded in a financial record of 1335/6 as having forfeited the lands of Nether Harwood to the English King. His other ands included ‘Tochensside’ and ‘Bondyngtone’. He could be the 2nd son of Sir Robert, Marischal of Scotland, who is recorded opposing the peace between England and Scotland in 1335.

Kelloe Plantin (ke-lö-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the west of Borthwickbrae.

Kelly (ke-lec) n. Fr. Daniel (d.1943) priest at S.S. Mary & David 1938–42. He came from the neighbouring parish of Selkirk. He was responsible for significant redecoration of the interior of the church, and cleaning of the exterior. He resigned his charge in 1941 due to ill-health, remaining as assistant for another year before retiring fully. Elizabeth see Ruecastle. Frederick (19th C.) highwayman, whose accomplices held up carts of drink and other goods around Langburnshiel and Whitrope in the early 1860s. Fr.
Thomas (1896–1963) born in County Leitrim, Ireland, he was ordained a priest in Glasgow in 1925 and served in Glasgow, Airdrie, Saltcoats, Glasgow (again), Newmains and Portobello before arriving in Hawick as Chaplain of St. Mar-garet’s Convent in 1961 (formerly spelled ‘Kellie’, etc.).

Kelly Cleuch (ke-lec-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Rain’s Hill and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel Water between Hewis Bridge and Dinlabyre. It is probably associated with the former farm of Killoley.

kelpie (kel-pée) n., arch. a young mischievous being, associated with water – ‘Fierce drove the storm, with sleet and rain, The waters rose and raged amain, And oft we heard the kelpy’s cry Amid the tempest’s melody’ [JTe], ‘...’Bout bogles, bronies, ghasts an’ fays, an’ kelpies o’ the limn’ [JJ].

the Kelpie (thu-kel-pee) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Kelsae see Kelsi

Kelsi (kel-si) n. Kelso, 21 miles north-east of Hawick, built at the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. It was an abbey town from 1128 and traditionally a market town for farmers, artisans and particularly shoemakers. The lands of the village were granted to Kelso Abbey in 1343, and it became a Burgh of Barony in 1634. It was governed by the Baron Bailie (appointed by the Duke of Roxburgh) until well into the 19th century. The town and abbey were partially destroyed by the English in 1523 and again in 1542 and 1545. The town was largely destroyed by fire in 1684, when it is said that 306 families lost their homes. It is renowned for its Georgian, Flemish-style Square, with a bull ring in the centre, plus the 1816 ionic-columned Town Hall, and 1761 Cross Keys. The first stone bridge of 1754 was an important crossing point for the Tweed (swept away 1797) and Rennie’s 1803 bridge was the model for the Waterloo Bridge. Kelso remains an agricultural centre, with tourism, fishing, a Race Course and light industry. Ednam House (built 1761), the Corn Exchange (1855) and the octagonal Parish Church (1771–73) are important historical buildings, and Floors Castle is just a mile to the west. The Turret House serves as a local museum. The route between Hawick and Kelso would have directly followed the Teviot for centuries; the improved road (essentially the A698) was completed in the late 18th century. Kelso Civic Week is in July and was inaugurated in 1937. It comprises the Kelso Laddie’s Reel, a ceremony at the Trysting Tree, commemorating the old Whimmen’s society, and ride-outs, including one to Yetholm. An older tradition is St. James Fair, formerly in August and now in September. In the 18th century there was an annual meeting organised by the whipmen, which involved torturing a cat in a barrel at the Berry Moss. ‘Guide to Kelso’ was published by J. & J.H. Rutherford in 1880. Population (1991) 5,989 – ‘Bosom’d in woods where mighty rivers run, Kelso’s fair vale expands before the sun; Its rising downs in vernal beauty swell, And fring’d with hazel winds each flowery dell’ [JL] (the name is from the Old English ‘calc-hoh’, meaning ‘chalk hill’, or perhaps from Old Welsh ‘calch’ plus Old English, meaning ‘heel-shaped spur of land’; it first appears as ‘Calceho’, ‘Calcho’ and ‘Calkou’ in the 12th century; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Cailso’; the local pronunciation ‘Kelsey’ appears in the 16th century; often also written ‘Kelsae’).

Kelsi Abbey (kel-si-aw-bee) n. Kelso Abbey, founded in 1128 by monks from Tiron, France, having been originally founded in Selkirk in 1113, with a charter by David I. The grants from David included lands in Lilliesleaf, as well as elsewhere around the Borders. It was dedicated to Mary and St. John in 1143 and the rights and lands of the monks were confirmed in a charter by Malcolm IV in 1159. It is the most ruined of the four Border abbeys, but was once the largest and wealthiest, having possessed the revenues of 33 parishes; it was not until about 1430 that its superiority was overtaken by St. Andrews. The founder was Prince Henry, son of David I, who is buried at Roxburgh. The infant James III was crowned at the Abbey in 1460 after his father was killed nearby. The last Abbot was James Stewart, illegitimate son of James V. It was burned in 1523 and then partly destroyed by a force of Spaniards in Hertford’s 1545 invasion, and burned again in 1547. Part of the Abbey was later used as a prison, and then as the parish church till 1771. Only the western section remains of a once much larger construction, with memorial additions for the Dukes of Roxburgh. The ruins are open to the public, although with minimal information no visitor centre and unlike the other Border abbeys no entrance fee either! (spelling varied over the years, with ‘Kelcho’ turning up in 1159, ‘monasterii de Kelchou’ in 1249 and ‘Calco’ still appearing in 1550).

Kelsi Brig (kel-si-brig) n. name generally used for the main road bridge across the Tweed at Kelso. The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony in 1754, but the central arch collapsed before it was completed, killing 7 workmen. The eventual cost was a staggering £3,000. It became the only substantial bridge between Peebles and Berwick, and was presumably heavily used for traffic going north from Hawick. The bridge fell into disrepair, however, and was swept away in a flood in 1797. The new John Rennie design was built 1800–03 at the huge cost of about £18,000, and it was said to be the prototype for the Waterloo Bridge in London. It has toll-houses at the northern end, this being the location of a riot by the townspeople in 1857, frustrated with paying the bridge toll for over 50 years.

the Kelsi Chronicle (thu-kel-si-kro-nee-kul) n. the Kelso Chronicle, founded in Kelso in 1783,

it was the first newspaper published in the Borders. It was renamed the British Chronicle or Union Gazette in 1784, and was discontinued in 1803, but resumed again in 1832. Merging later with the Border Pioneer, Jedburgh Gazette, etc., it ran until 1932, eventually becoming part of the Southern Reporter. Because of its Liberal stance (in opposition to the Tory-backed Kelso Mail) it often covered newsworthy events in Hawick. It is also useful as a source of local death notices and obituaries, particularly before the first Hawick-based papers appeared.

Kelsi Junction (kel-si-jungk-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Kelso branch line, south of Newtown St. Boswells. This linked Hawick with Kelso and points towards Tweedmouth (1851–1964), as well as to Jedburgh via another branch (1851–1948).

the Kelsi Mail ( thu-kel-si-mal) n. the Kelso Mail, or Roxburgh, Berwickshire and Northumberland Gazette, one of the earliest newspapers published in Roxburghshire. It started in 1797, and was one of only printed sources of local news for about 50 years, before the first Hawick newspapers started. It was founded by James Ballantyne (friend and later publisher of Sir Walter Scott) and was staunchly pro-Tory. The first Hawick agent was John Nixon. It ceased publication in 1945. The same company started publishing books (at the suggestion of Sir Walter Scott), moving to Edinburgh in 1802, and publishing many of Sir Walter’s novels.

Kelsi Wull (kel-si-wul) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Willie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; There’s Kelsi Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Willie Goudlands leadin’ the Band’ [HI] (presumably a William with a connection to Kelso).

kemp (kemp) n., arch. the plantain, Plantago major, particularly the stalk and seed-head (noted by J. Jamieson).

Kemp (kemp) n. James (b.1822) son of William and Elizabeth Ketchin, he was an ironmonger in Galashiels. He is probably the Mr. Kemp of Gala who, in 1856, donated to the Hawick Archaeological Society a mastodon tooth and other fossils and rocks. John (19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was also an early member of Allars Kirk. It is possible he is the same man as the cooper. John (b.c.1790) from Melrose, he was a cooper in Hawick. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and recorded at about 16 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower around the Crown Close and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a cooper on the High Street. In 1861 he was a widower at 4 Melgund Place (probably the modern No. 9). His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Catherine, Margaret and Jane. Rev. Joseph William (1872–1933) born in Hull, son of a policeman. His parents died when he was young, and he had minimal education. He attended night school, then the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow, where he was baptised. He became minister at Kelso Baptist Church in 1897 and moved to Hawick Baptist Church in 1898. During his brief ministry several new features were added to the congregation’s work, e.g. open air services on Sunday evenings, and services were sometimes also held in the Theatre on Croft Road. He remained until 1902, when he moved to Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh. He vastly increased the congregation there, moved to New York in 1915, then Auckland in 1920. He established the New Zealand Bible Training Institute in 1922 and became President of the Baptist Union of New Zealand in 1929, but earlier illness returned and he died a few years later. He was said to be temperamental and difficult to work with. He was extremely conservative in his theological principles, fighting against what he saw as the evils of dancing, card-playing, the theatre and cinema. He wrote some short books, including ‘The Soul Winner and Soul Winning’ (1916). He married Winifred Binnie in 1897, and they had 2 children. He is buried at Auckland, and it is reported that 6,000 people attended his funeral.

Kemp’s Castle (kemps-kaw-sul) n. popular name for the remains of a settlement near Blawearie. The hill there is essentially the northeastern spur of Borthwickshiel Horn, and reaches a height of 349 m. The main enclosure is an oval about 50 m by 40 m, defined by a bank with an outer quarry ditch. The entrance is on the east side and there are as many as 5 hut circles inside. Another fainter enclosure to the south-west measures about 90 m by 75 m and contains other hut circles. This may be an early iron age settlement. There are signs of cord rig on the eastern slopes (there are other Kemp’s Castles elsewhere).

Kemp’s Close (kemps-kloes) n. occasional name used in the mid-19th century for a passageway at 7 High Street, named after the cooper’s there.

Kennedy (ke-mu-dee) n. Aitchison (1889–1914) son of James Aitchison, who was a butcher’s clerk in Hawick. In 1913 he got married, but he enlisted when WWI broke out, being a private in the Black Watch and was killed in September 1914 after only 22 days in France. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was charged tax for 2 hearths. Alexander Allan (19th/20th C.) manager of the Wells estate in Rulewater from 1885. He had previously been at the Earl of Seafield’s Strathspey estate. In 1877 he married Emma Groves from Gloucestershire. Andrew (b.1820/1) painter-decorator, who had a younger brother Robert. He was also known locally as an artist, painting ‘The Hawick Common-Riding of 1846’ which is in the Museum, along with portraits of some prominent Hawick men of his day, e.g. Tommy Roberton (which he donated to the Archaeological Society along with other items). He was also responsible for decorating the Victoria Bridge when it was first built. In 1841 he and his brother were recorded on the High Street (probably about No. 71). He lived near the Millport Steps, moved later to 12 Teviot Crescent (which became the Burns Club) and feuded land at the foot of Baker Street. He is listed as a painter at Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth Morgan, and thier children included: Mary (b.1850); Elizabeth (b.1852); Robina (b.1854); Thomas; Margaret; and William H.G. The first 3 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. David (1839–1907) born in Kilmarnock, he moved to Hawick in about 1861. He had a chemist’s shop on the High Street. In 1875 he found a large quantity of old coins while digging the foundations for a house on the High Street, these apparently having been deposited there in about 1555. In 1869 he married Helen Crichton, daughter of Gideon Ker. Their children were: Annie; Maggy; and Robert (b.1875), who took over the chemist’s shop. Esther (1820/1–1900) well-known resident of Ettrick Brigend. She ran’ a shop there for decades and knew everyone in the valley. She was noted for her ‘force of character, quick and keen discernment, ready expression and high descriptive power’. Gilbert (15th C.) Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick. In 1470 he swapped these benefices with their children included: Mary (b.1850); Elizabeth (b.1852); Robina (b.1854); Thomas; Margaret; and William H.G. Vittoria. Based on the baptismal records for some of his children, he was in 1809 based at the army barracks in Christchurch on the south coast, part of the force defending Britain from the threat of invasion by Napoleon's army. He was on the battlefield at Waterloo and was also part of the occupying army in Paris after Waterloo. From another birth record, he was probably in Ireland in about 1818, shortly before retiring from the army. He attained the highest grade of a non-commissioned soldier and apparently turned down a commission. He was known as one of the best artillerists in his regiment. After retiring he was miller at Spittal-on-Rule briefly, but then became landlord of the Ordnance Arms (which he presumably named), which was also known as the Cannon Inn, at 12 High Street. He is recorded there in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the 1841 census. He also served as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, and served as 'Preses' of the Relief Kirk Session. It is said that his only child with his first wife was born in Ireland, probably while he was stationed there, but actually James D. was baptised in Hampshire, and this may instead have been the birth of Robert, with his 2nd wife. He may also have lived for a while in Kelso, since that is where his son William N. was born in 1821. He married twice, firstly to Sarah Damone (who died in 1812) and secondly to Lucille (or 'Angelique Lucilla') Hervieu. It is said that he met his second wife during the time he was in the occupying force in Paris, and that to begin with neither of them spoke a word of the other's language. His children included: Priscilla (1804–91), christened in Chitchurch, Hampshire in 1809; Anne (1806–91), also christened in Hampshire in 1809; John, also christened in Hampshire in 1809; James Damone (b.1809), also in Hampshire; Robert (1818–92), perhaps born in Ireland; William Norman (b.1821), born in Kelso; Lucilla (b.c.1823), who married Thomas Kedie Pringle; and Frederick (b.1825), born in Hawick. Priscilla (d.1891) and Anne (d.1891), who were buried along with Robert in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh (and said to be of Church Hill House) were additional children with his first wife, and appear to have lived as spinsters in Edinburgh. James (b.1803/4) frame-work knitter in Hawick. He was on the Kirk Wynd in 1841, the Back Row in 1851 and Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Janet Bower in Wilton in 1830. Their children included: Catherine (b.1831); John (b.1834); and Ann (b.1836). In 1836 he secondly married Isabella Stavert, and she died before 1861. Children by this second marriage included: Oliver (b.1839); Margaret (b.1841); Helen; James; Thomas; and Jane (b.1855). James Damone (1809–73) bookseller, bookbinder and printer of Sandbed and Teviot Square. He was son of James and Sarah Damone and brother of Robert and William Norman, and said to have been born in Athole Ireland when his father was stationed there; however, he was christened in 1809 in Christchurch, Hampshire (just 2 weeks after his birth) along with his brother John and sisters Priscilla and Ann. He was a bookbinder's apprentice with Archibald Rutherford in Kelso, worked for a short time in Jedburgh and then in 1829 set up as a bookbinder, bookseller and stationer in Hawick. He also became a printer in 1836 and in 1842 he published 'The Hawick Observer and Scottish Border Intelligencer', the town's first newspaper. He also operated 'Kennedy's Circulating Library' in the 1830s to 1850s, being listed this way in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was listed as a bookseller, stationer and bookbinder, as well as a printer, at the Sandbed, in Pigot's 1837 directory. In Slater's 1852 directory he was a bookseller, stationer and printer and also a book-binder. Additionally he acted as life insurance agent for the Association of Scotland. Many local books were published by his firm, including 'Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Bucleuch' (1887) and 'The Hawick Tradition of 1514' (1898). His first premises were on the other corner of the Sandbed, but he quickly moved over to No. 2. He was an elder of Hawick Parish for 25 years and a Town Councillor for 10 years. He also served as Burgh Treasurer. He married first Alison Rutherford and then Christian Lamb. He had at least 10 children, including: James (b.1828); Francis Rutherford (b.1830); Alison (b.1832); Sarah Damone (b.1834); Priscilla (1836–80), who is buried along with her cousin Robert in Edinburgh; Anne (b.1837); William Rutherford (b.1839); Charlotte Matilda (b.1843); Walter Phillips (b.1854), who ran the firm of W. & J. Kennedy, along with his brother; and John William (b.1857), who also ran the family business. He died suddenly at a Town Council meeting. At the time of his death he was the oldest shopkeeper and oldest member of the Kirk Session in Hawick. James (19th C.) listed as collector at the Town Steel-yard on the High Street, in Pigot's 1837 directory. James (b.1808/9) frame-worker in Hawick, living at 77 High Street in 1851 and

and Janet Bower. He married Helen Rutherford in Hawick in 1855. Their children included: James (b.1856), who probably died young; Helen (b.1857); William (b.1859); Janet (b.1861); John Bower (b.1863); Jane (b.1865); James (b.1866); Oliver (b.1868), who donated the Medway Cup; Thomas (b.1871); Catherine (b.1873); and Agnes (b.1874). John William (1857–1934) son of James Damone and brother of Walter Phillips, with whom he ran the firm W. & J. Kennedy. He became an expert on the history of the Borders and was said to have had a quiet disposition. He suggested and organised the erection of the Johnnie Armstrong commemorative stone at Teviothead, unveiled in 1897. For the 1903 edition of 'Hawick Common-Riding Songs’ his researches uncovered the names of the Cornets from 1713 to 1718. He also contributed to the Transactions of the Archeological Society and was a member of the Society for 59 years; during the period 1907–33 he served as either President or Vice-President. His published articles included: ‘The Scottish Borderers at Marston Moor, 1644’ (1902); and ‘The Teviotdale Regiment. David Leslie’s March from Hereford to Philiphaugh’ (1903). He also helped James Sinton compile his bibliography of Hawick-related works. He married Annie Scott Edie, who died in 1940, aged 71. James D., M.B.E., was their son. They also had 3 daughters, Lucille and Peggy being long-time workers in the family shop. John (d.1985) from the bookseller’s family. He rose to a prominent position within the Forestry Commission, which started awarding a trophy in his name to encourage multi-purpose woodlands. Oliver (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Sinton in Cavers Parish in 1808. Oliver (19th C.) married Sarah Ann Henson. Their son Thomas Oliver was born in Hawick in 1874. He was probably the Oliver born to James and Isabella in Hawick in about 1839. Oliver (b.1868) son of John and Helen Rutherford, he was born in Hawick. He was a stockingmaker to trade, moving to Southend to set up his own company, and using ‘Medway’ as his trade name. He presented the Medway Cup in 1927, to be competed for at the Common Riding Races. A cousin on his mother’s side was Isla Coulton, nee Scott. He is probably the Oliver who either married Jane Beattie in Hawick in 1906, Isabella Hughes in 1911 or Euphemia Haldane Davies in 1916. Robert (1777/8–1860) blacksmith of Melgund Place. He was son of shepherd James and Janet Fulton and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1818/9–1882) son of James of the Ordnance Arms. He was older brother of William Norman and younger half-brother of James Damone. It is possible he was the Robert, born in Ireland, who was a weaver living on O’Connell Street in 1841, aged about 25; this would match with his father being based in Ireland for a while. However, he later became an engineer. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Plea for the Common Riding’, being a strong Common Riding supporter, despite being an exile. He also wrote an inauguration ode on the unveiling of Prince Albert’s Monument in Edinburgh and verses on the erection of the Bruce Statue in Stirling. He was a civil engineer who spent much of his life in India and retired to Edinburgh. However, he was said to be ‘a frequent visitor at Hawick, especially at the Common-riding time, when he liked to forgather with Hawick worthies, and get his memory refreshed with local reminiscences’. He donated a large collection of Indian artefacts to the Museum in 1863, as well as a number of coins and hunting and fishing trophies from India. He was described as ‘one of the most munificent of the donors to whom the Museum has been indebted’. He would annually bring the old snuff horn of his brother’s over to Hawick for the Snuffling. He married Sarah Eliza Ross (1829/30–1861) and their son Robert Ross (d.1861) died in infancy in Madras. He is buried in Grange Cemetery, Edinburgh. Robert (b.1824/5) born in Wilton, brother of Andrew. He was a painter, living with his brother Andrew in 1841. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh and described as a Master Painter employing 1 man. Robert (b.1827/8) born in Hawick, he was a basket-maker. He is recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1847, 1867 and 1869, Selkirk Jail in 1859 and 1865 and Dumfries Jail in 1871. In 1851 he was living with his mother and siblings in Jedburgh and in 1861 was in Melrose. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Michael, Margaret and Catherine. Robert (1875–1948) son of David and Helen Crichton Ker. He took over his father’s chemist’s shop on the High Street. He sold the shop in 1910 and emigrated to Canada the following year. He married Annie Wilson Miller and their children were David, John and 2 daughters who died young. He returned to England in the 1940s. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith in the Sandbed. In 1719 he is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He also had another discharge in 1727 and perhaps others in 1729, 1730, 1733 and 1736, as well as bringing a law suit against Alexander Scott for debt. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Hawick Kennedys. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Hutcher’s Riverside in Minto Parish in 1780. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Armstrong and their children included: Thomas (b.1808); John (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); James (b.1815); James (again, b.1817); Mary (b.1819); an unnamed child (b.1821); Robert (b.1823); Margaret (b.1825); and Catherine (b.1828). Most of his children were baptised in the East Bank Kirk. Thomas (b.1805/6) from Fife, he was a coach-builder. He lived on the Backdamgate in 1851, employing 5 men and was listed as a coach-maker there in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife Ann was from Midlothian and they had children Thomas D. and Montague. Sir Thomas Lawrie ‘Jock’ (1928–2013) born in Hawick and educated at Hawick High School, he joined the R.A.F. in 1946 and became a pilot officer in 1949. In 1971 he was appointed Deputy Commandant of the R.A.F. Staff College, Bracknell. By 1979 he was Deputy Commander-in-Chief, R.A.F. Strike Command. He retired in 1986, with the rank of Air Chief Marshal. He also served as Deputy Lieutenant for Leicestershire and Lord Lieutenant of Rutland. He married Margaret Ann Parker and had a son and 2 daughters. Walter Phillips (1854–1913) son of James Damone and Christian Lamb. He learned about the book trade in Edinburgh, and ran the business W. & J. Kennedy with his brother John William. He was a teacher in the Science and Technology School in the late 19th century, who moved to be one of the teachers in the Buccleuch School. In 1874 he was one of two young men who raised a petition to get the School Board to support a mathematics class in the town. Eventually this led to a committee, independent of the School Board, which organised classes in science and art, which were later found a home in the Buccleuch Memorial. His contribution to technical and scientific education in the town was immense. He was also involved with the Archæological Society. In addition he was a Volunteer for over 30 years, retiring with the rank of Major. He married Jane Law and secondly Emma Landlees. Jean (later Mrs. Irvine, b.1876), first woman President of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society, was his daughter. Dr. W.P. (b.1899) was his son. After his death former pupils subscribed to the establishment of the Kennedy-Dechan Prize in science and mathematics. Walter Phillips (1899–1983) son of Walter Phillips. He was born in Hawick and educated at the Buccleuch Memorial Institute and George Heriot’s. He graduated with a B.Sc. from Edinburgh University in 1920 and a Ph.D. in 1927. He became a doctor and for a while was Professor of Physiology at the Royal Medical College in Baghdad, then moving to the Ministry of Health in London. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and is listed as ‘Wm Kennitie in Park’ (although it is unclear where ‘Park’ might be). William (b.1790/1) born in Hawick, he was living at 7 O’Connell Street in 1841 and 1851. He was working as a woolen spinner. His wife was Margaret Leithed, but she died before 1851. Their children included William and Thomas. Probably the same William was living in Hawick when listed among heads of household in Wilton Kirk in 1835. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was living at Allars Crescent in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife Jane was born ‘At Sea’. Their children included William, James, Catherine, Margaret, Barbara, Thomas and Jane. William Norman ‘Norman’ (1821–1865) son of veteran James and Lucille Hervieu, from France. He was christened in Kelso. He was younger brother of Robert and half-brother of James Damone. He trained as a book-binder, probably with his half-brother. He was Inspector of the Poor in Hawick for about 15 years, but succumbed to fever after visiting a sick pauper. He was a founder of the Archæological Society, being its first official member, acting as Secretary ‘pro tem’ in the first months, then being the first Treasurer (personally paying for the publication of the initial reports) and a regular contributor to the early Transactions. Despite his life being cut short, he contributed no less than 48 papers, on a wide range of subjects, as well as articles published in other places. Essentially an early folklorist, his descriptions of Hawick characters (mostly presented at the Archæological Society, but published after his death) formed the basis for Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’. They are an invaluable source of information about ordinary Hawick people in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, containing examples of local dialect and numerous funny stories! They formed part of what he referred to as ‘The Local Ethnology of Hawick and Neighbourhood’, suggesting that we might one day have seen the publication of a full-scale book. His writing shows a skill that stands out compared with most of his contemporaries, suffused with a strong empathy for his fellow humans, with liberal views that seem quite modern (e.g. in his comments about the African-born teacher Tom Jenkins). His liberal views seem sense of humanity. He was probably the Mr. Kennedy who donated to the Archaeological Society in 1856 ‘some very interesting fossil remains from the greywracke quarry at St. Mary’s head of Slitrig Crescent’. He was also one of the first (in 1858) to suggest the Catrail was a boundary connecting between streams rather than a defensive ditch. In addition, he performed early examinations of local hill-forts, and was elected a member of the Society of Antiquarians of Scotland. He was the first to compile a list of the ministers of Hawick Parish. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Dialogue Aenent the Auld Brig’, another poem on the same subject (intended for the Auld Brig competition, but never entered) and others that appeared in the local press. In 1863 he presented to the Museum some items he had found while St. Mary’s Kirk was being renovated. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, and personally reinstated the ‘Snuffing’ tradition. He wrote a short history of Common Riding traditions, published posthumously from notes of a book he was working on. He had also been working on the Burgh records to trace the Town’s history, and had extensive notes on the history of manufacturing in Hawick, all of which he was intending to compile into some kind of book. He became a friend of Rev. James Morton (author of ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ and editor of the John Leyden collection), and helped him with preparation of a supplement to Dr. Jamieson’s dictionary of the Scottish language. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square with a servant, and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shopkeeper at Teviot Square. He later lived at Stonefield Cottage, where he is listed in 1861. He married Matilda Cox, who was born in Ireland. Their children included: James Robert (b.1850); Charlotte Elizabeth (b.1851); Lucille Hervieu (b.1853); William Norman (b.1856); Robert (b.1857); John Ross (b.1861); and Matilda (b.1863). His portrait was painted by his brother Robert. He is also in another portrait (by John Guthrie) along with fellow Archæological Society founders Alexander and Robert Michie, and there is an early photograph of him. His death came unexpectedly after he attended to a feverish woman in the West-end, not being able to find anyone else to help. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William Norman ‘Willie’ (b.1856) son of William Norman. He dispensed the snuff at the Snuffing in the late 1800s and early 1900s. There is a photograph of him with the snuff mull in 1907. He may have been the proprietor of the Tower Hotel and married a daughter of Andrew Minto (formerly written ‘Kennety’, ‘Kennisday’, ‘Kennidie’, ‘Kenitty’, ‘Kennitie’ and variants).

the Kennedy-Dechan Prize (thu-ke-nu-dee-dee-kin-priz) n. science bursary prize fund at the High School, set up in memory of Walter Phillips Kennedy and Martin Dechan about 1915. The initial fund was subscribed to by former pupils, raising over £1100, with later donations by the Callants’ Club. It was used to award gold medals to 3rd year High School pupils who excelled in science and mathematics. More recently the prize has been given to final year pupils. University prizes in these subjects, available for 3 years, were also originally awarded.

Kennedy’s (ke-nu-deez) n. W. & J. Kennedy, booksellers, bookbinders and stationers shop at 2 Sandbed. It was founded by James Damone Kennedy, then continued by his sons Walter and James. They also ran a circulating library around the 1830s. They published many local books, and were the town’s pre-eminent bookshop for decades. The business left the Kennedy family in the early 1960s, being run by Frances and Allan Hobkirk, but retaining the old name. It closed in 1971 after 142 years, following a compulsory purchase order by the council as part of the Howegate redevelopment scheme; however, the planned realignment of the property never materialised.

Kenneth Sike (ke-nith-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south to join Foulwood Sike.

kent (kent) n., arch. a long pole, staff, particularly used by shepherds to help jump over streams – ‘…Butte, with the kente was in his neif, He kaimed the kerlyn’s buffe’[JTe], ‘…Hadna’ the maister’s heavy kent Fawn whack upon her riggin’[WiSp] (mentioned in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1620 relating to an attack on Hawick High Street ‘with lanceis, staulffis, swerdis, long kentis or grite trees’).

Ken the Horse (ken-thu-hors) n. sobriquet for the Equestrain Monument or 1514 Memorial. The joke comes from the use of the statue as a landmark, particularly when giving directions, which invariably start with the question ‘ee ken the horse?’. The phrase was a focus of the speech given by Ian Landles when the monument was moved in 2003. A ‘Ken the Horse’ supporters group was started in 2009. In 2010 the Enterprise Group at Hawick High School used the ‘Ken the Horse’ brand to raise money through car stickers and other merchandise. In addition a song was written by Iain H. Scott, and some cartoons were produced.

Keown (kyoo-in) n. George (1941/2–) from New Zealand, he came to Scotland in 1967 and became teacher at Burnfoot School. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and gifted a trophy that has been competed for since 1968 by Hawick primary-school rugby teams. Returning to New Zealand he married Peggy Morgan, who was also a teacher (and the couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020). He was a Head Teacher for 29 years and retired in 1999. He played rugby until he was 40. Returning to the area in 2000, he and his wife became supply teachers. Their children are Barrie (who played rugby in Hawick and joined the police) and Raelene.

the Keown Trophy (tlu-kyoo-in-trō-fee) n. rugby prize, competed for annually by primary schools in Hawick since 1968, gifted by George Keown.

Ker (ker, kawr) n. Adam (15th C.) Clerk of Glasgow Diocese who was the notary for the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9, following the death of William’s father. It is unclear if he was attached to a particular local church. Adam (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolfelee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Adam (d.bef. 1489) owner of the lands of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk, which were the eastern desmesne lands there. In 1489 his son Thomas was retoured as heir to the lands of ‘Sant Elene Shaw’, including ‘le Kyrk croft’, ‘Caponland’ and ‘Gersland’, by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. He is probably ancestor of the later Kers of Shawes. Adam (d.bef. 1579) only son and heir of William of Shawes. In 1528 he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to John Scott and in 1530 he was recorded receiving yearly rent for lands in Selkirk. In 1530/1, with the consent of his father William, he gave sasine of lands in Selkirk to George Chapman and other lands to John Morlaw. In 1533 he and his father sold a tenement to John Brydon. He was in ‘Sanct Helyne Schawe’ in 1534 when he resigned an annual rent. In that same year he is recorded as heir of William and husband of Janet Newton when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them at ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’. In 1540 he and his father resigned a tenement in Selkirk and along with his wife (‘Janet Neutoun lady of Dalcoif’) had a transaction involving Little Newton in Lauderdale (with a further transaction for the same lands in 1552). He was recorded as a juror in 1541. He was involved in further transactions in Selkirk in 1543/4 and 1544. In 1545 there were letters debating several men who had incurred sentences of excommunication at the insistence of him and his wife. In 1550 he and his wife ‘Jonet Newton of Dawcowe’ had an instrument for lands in ‘Nether Carlowre’. He married Janet Newton, who was heiress of the lands of Dalcove in Berwickshire. He was deceased by 1579 when his son Thomas had sasine for his daughter Elizabeth’s lands of ‘Sancthelingschaw’ with tower and other lands in Selkirk. In 1583 his son Thomas was served as heir to his wife Janet Newton of Dalcove. Adam (b.1808/9–79) from the Hawick area. In about 1832 he emigrated to Galt in Ontario. In 1850 he was elected as Clerk and Treasurer, serving until 1858. He was then Mayor of Galt in the period 1868–74. Alexander (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. Hw was listed as ‘Willis Elchie’, so that his father must have been called William. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. Alexander (d.1817) 2nd son of John. He was employed in the naval service of the East India Company, but retired due to bad health. He was ‘Alexander Carre brother-german to John Carre of Cavers’ on the 1780 roll of electors in Roxburghshire. He was also listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1780s. He succeeded to Cavers Carre and Hundalee on the death of his brother Capt. John in 1798. However, he was first listed on the Horse Tax Rolls at Cavers Carre in 1792. In 1800 he married Ann, eldest daughter of Robert Boswell, W.S. Immediately afterwards he had a new part of the house built at Cavers Carre. After getting into financial difficulties he sold Bedrule in 1801, part of this having been in the family since 1528. Belses was also sold about the same time. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 (and still listed in 1819). He died without issue and Hundalee went to the Marquess of Lothian (as nearest male heir to Lord Jedburgh), while he left Cavers Carre to his sister Elisabeth. Her son William Riddell Carre later succeeded. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.1444) 2nd son of Henry, he was the first Ker to be designated ‘of Cessford’. In 1420 he was witness to the charter for Branxholme, granted by William Inglis to Robert Scott. He may be the Andrew who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 to decide on some lands in Hownam and another in
Ker

1427 to decide on inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. He was served heir to his brother Richard in 1428, although he is called ‘of Altonburn’ even before that. In 1429/30 he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he held the lands of Primside for loaning a sum of money to Andrew Rule (with some suggestion the date is really much earlier). However, in 1432 these lands were resigned by Andrew Rule to his son George, who had married Margaret Ker (his own daughter). In 1433/4 he had a charter of half the lands of Borthwickshiel from George Crichton of Blackness. He is probably the Andrew who in 1437 was on the retour for deciding on ownership of the East Mains of Hawick. Also in 1437 he had a charter from William Earl of Douglas for the lands of Primside. He was probably the ‘Andree Ker’ who was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk in 1439, when Grahamslaw was infested in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1439/40 he acquired Primside outright from the daughters of Andrew Rule, and finally the lands of Plenderleith and Hindhope from the Rules in 1454/5 (although that was finalised by his son Andrew). In 1441 he and his son James had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Lempitlaw with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had a grant of the Mains of Hownam in 1443. He married a daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Other children included: James, who had a charter of Primside in 1444 and may be the same man as James of Linton; Thomas, who also held lands in Primside and probably Gateshaw; and Margaret, who married George Rule of Primside. He was still alive in August 1444, and died close to Christmas that year. Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.bef. 1484) son of Andrew, who he succeeded in 1445. He was probably the originator of the left-handed family tradition. He became prominent as a supporter of the Earl of Angus and was given lands in Jedforest. He was ‘younger’ in 1441 when he witnessed a charter for the lands of Cessford. It was either him or his father who was ‘Andro Ker lord of Awtounburne’ in 1445 when Henry Wood leased his tenantry of Harden Wood (within Borthwickshiel) to him. In 1446 he was ‘Andrea Ker de Awtounburne’ when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. Also in 1446/7 there was a retour at Newark to decide that he was his father’s heir in the lands of Primside. In 1447 he was a witness to the charter of Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Hawick Burgess) to Sir Walter Scott of Branhulme. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ in a 1448 document whereby Stephen Scott gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford. In 1450 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. In 1450 he had a passport of safe conduct for 3 years to travel the Earl of Douglas. He was Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailie in Eckford (along with Stephen Scott) in 1454. In 1453 he had a mutual bond of manrent with Sir Robert Colville. In 1456 he was accused of bringing Englishmen to burn Eckford, Crailing, Grahamslaw and Jedburgh, but was acquitted. Also in 1456 he and his brother James were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest, for which he had the lease of the farms of Bowerhope and Ashiestiel. In 1457 he was made Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest by George, Earl of Angus; in place of his seal the agreement used the seal of David Pringle of Pilmuir, since he ‘had no seal of his own present’. He was named in an indenture between Scottish and English Commissioners in 1458. In the early 1460s he sided with Robert, Lord Boyd, in seizing power from the young King James III. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh (to Archibald Douglas) and also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirtton Mains and the Flex (between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gedystains). In 1468 he and his son Walter were involved in an arrangement with Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, when they acted as procurators for Henry Wardlaw of Torrie (and Wilton). In 1469/70 he witnessed the granting of the Governorship of Hermitage to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Earl of Angus. In 1470 he was a witness to another charter for the Douglasses of Cavers, and was one of the bailies appointed by the Earl of Angus to give sasine of these lands in 1472. In 1470/1 he was indicted for helping the English, bringing in the traitor James Douglas, involvement in the battle in which the Laird of Rutherford and others were captured, wounded or killed, helping Robert, Lord Boyd, in capturing the King for a period, and involvement in plotting to kill Andrew, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland; he appeared before a jury and was acquitted, with the decision witnessed by several Border Lairds. In 1471 his son and heir Walter took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiel and Harden Wood. Also in 1471 he had a debt relating to Crown lands. In 1475/6 he was witness to a document relating to Kirkurd for the
Ker

Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1479 he received the ‘fermes’ (i.e. rental fees) of Jedburgh. He may be the Andrew who was infefted in the lands of Crailing and Hownam by Alexander Home in 1484. He was said to have married a daughter of William Douglas of Cavers (although this may have been his father), and secondly married Margaret Tweedie (or perhaps Herries). His children included: Andrew, younger of Cessford, mentioned in 1464/5, who died before his father, and married Margaret; Walter of Caverton and Cessford, who succeeded; Thomas, who became the 1st Laird of Ferniehirst and is usually spelled ‘Kerr’; Robert, Abbot of Kelso; William of Yair and Boothill; Ralph of Primsied Loch, also called ‘Radulpho’; and Margaret, who married Sir James Sandilands of Calder. James of Linton and George of Samuelston may also have been his sons (but both of these are open to debate). Andrew (d.bef. 1479) eldest son of Andrew of Cessford, but he died before his father. He is mentioned in 1464/5. He may have married a Hepburne, and after his death his wife married a Haliburton, Laird of Dirleton (she was probably the ‘Mariota’ who was wife of George, 4th Lord Haliburton of Dirleton). His only child was Margaret, who in 1479 renounced all claim to the Barony of Cessford in favour of her uncle Walter. Andrew of Gateshaw (15th/16th C.) perhaps son of James. In 1498 he was in dispute with the Abbot of Melrose over the ‘herezeld’ of his tenants. In 1510 he and Thomas, brother of Philip Scott of Headshaw, were accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. His sureties were his son Lancelot, along with James of Whirrig. Sir Andrew (d.1526) Laird of Cessford, son of Sir Robert (who died before he could succeed). In 1503 he had sasine for Cessford, ‘Hunteisleand’, Auld Roxburgh, Alitonburn, ‘Bordinislands’ and Castleside. In 1508/9 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh and in 1511 a confirming charter for Cessford, Caverton (called ‘Rutherfurdislands’), ‘Fetheringamyslands’, Hownam, ‘Penniside’ and Smailholm. He served as Warden of the Middle Marches (possibly along with his brother Ralph) about 1503 and again in 1515. He probably fought at Flodden. In 1519 he had a charter of half the lands of Hassendean from William Elphinstone, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1525 he was named on a bond for keeping peace on the Border. He was killed at the Battle of Skirmish Hill by James Elliot, a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch. The spot was once marked by a crudely inscribed stone, the location known as ‘Turn-again’. This event led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers that lasted decades, and led to the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Patrick Crichton of Crichton Riddel, and was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. His other children included: Mark, Commendant of Newbattle; Andrew, who married Marion Pringle, perhaps the Andrew in Auld Roxburgh whose will is recorded in 1585; Catherine, who married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes and was granted lands in Smailholm in 1524; and Isobel, who married Sir William Sinclair of Roslin. In 1524 his wife ‘Ann Cre[... ‘]’ (either the same as Agnes Crichton, or a 2nd wife) resigned her lands in Selkirk. Andrew of Primsied and Greenhead (d.bef. 1537) son of Ralph. He is probably the ‘Andreas ker filius Radulph’ who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives. In 1519 he witnessed a document in Selkirk and was involved in another document in 1520. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers (led by Walter Scott of Bramsholme) who had remission for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He was ‘of Greenhead’ in 1527/8 when he agreed to appear at a tribunal in Selkirk. In that same year he and his wife Marion Pringle had a sasine for the lands in Maxwell Fields. In 1529/30 he was still ‘of Greenhead’ when he witnessed a pledge relating to crimes done against George of Linton (who may have been a relative). In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. Also in 1530/1 he had documents involving the lands of Softlaw. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1532 Robert Scott, tutor of Howpasley and George Scott of Blindhaugh agreed to pay him a fee for the marriage of Janet Scott of Howpasley to Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun. Also in 1532 he purchased the lands of Birkenside from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He witnessed a document in Selkirk between the Kers of Mersington and Shaws in 1534. In 1535 he was involved in a dispute with Thomas Ker in Yair; there he is ‘in Prumsydloucht at his dwelling place called Grenheid’, making it clear that Andrew of Primsied and Andrew of Greenhead were the same person. In 1537 he ordered Walter Scott in Synton to leave certain of his lands. In 1538 he and his wife Marion Pringle were absolved from paying past fees on ‘Mabyllynflat’ to John Turnbull of Hassendean, with their son Gilbert to pay in future. He claimed tenancy of Broadmeadows in 1541. He also claimed tenancy of ‘Myddilsteid of Hartwod’, as well as ‘Blakeimines’, Baillielee and half of Phaup. He was said to be one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (although already deceased by then). He married Marion Pringle and was succeeded by his son Gilbert of Primside; in 1536/7 his wife refused to act as his executor ‘because of the great dangers it will incur’ and in 1539/40 his wife and son obtained the non-entries from Janet Newton and Adam Ker. In 1544 his widow had an agreement with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme that Scott would pay her for rents on her lands of Broadmeadows. His daughter Janet appointed John Douglas, Burgess in Edinburgh, as her procurator in 1533. Andrew of Graden (d.bef. 1563) younger son of Ker of Cessford. In 1528 he had a charter for ‘Water Hoelaw’, formerly belonging to Mark of Dolphinston. In 1529 he witnessed an instrument of sasine for the Kers of Dolphinston. He was listed in 1561 among men who had to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. He married Helen Ker and was probably succeeded by Andrew. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded ‘in Scheilstok-brayis’ in 1567 when Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, was ordered to present him. He was described as her ‘householder and servant’. Sir Walter Ker of Cessford (and his son Thomas) were also instructed to present him, since he lived on their lands. He presumably lived at Shielstock-braes, in Morebattle Parish. He may have been succeeded by James. Andrew (d.c.1573) son of Andrew of Cessford and brother of Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1538 he was among a group of local Lairds accused of assisting ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ and ‘called Jock of ye Green’ Rutherford. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1551 he was ‘broder to Cesfurde’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. Andrew (d.c.1582) described as ‘in Lyntoun’ in Roxburghshire in 1582 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he might have been related to Andrew of Linton. Andrew (d.c.1585) described as ‘in Auld Roxburgh’ in 1585 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. He may have been a younger son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. Andrew of Linton (16th/17th C.) probably son of James and grandson of George. He is recorded in 1581 when his procurator warned Thomas Ker of Maisondieu (and his wife Isobel) to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money. He was involved in the slaughter of Robert Pringle, tutor of Blindlee, in about 1586. In 1590 Thomas of Cavers Carre was his surety not to harm Thomas of Mersington. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William of Cessford not to reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He is probably the Ker of Linton listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden and who also subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1599 he and his son William gave a charter of lands in Duddingston to John, Burgess of Edinburgh. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. Probably the same Andrew signed the bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace in 1602. In 1603 he was among Scots and others, subordinates of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who ‘had been put to the horn’ for not paying feu mails for their lands to the Queen’s Chamberlain, with Robert of Haining not entering them in court. He married Katherine, sister of Sir Andrew of Greenhead and their children included: William, his heir in 1599; and George, who is probably the George who succeeded to Linton. Sir Andrew of Falkendal (d.1599) son of George of Falkendal and nephew of Sir Andrew of Cessford. His estate was on the Tweed, south-west of Galashiels. His curators were Andrew of Hirsel and Alexander, 5th Lord Home. He complained against Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1564, resulting in Robert being warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He and his children were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his son and heir George was to marry Janet, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, but the Kers did not fulfil this part. He was said to have held a pistol at the side of Mary, Queen of Scots in 1566, when she was forced to watch the murder of David Rizzio. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. He served as surety in 1569 for Lanie Armstrong of Whitaugh, as well as Hob Elliot (‘callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis’), and was also surety in 1571 and 1572 and then in 1573 for some Elliots. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1572/3 he was surety for James Langlands of that Ilk and for William Douglas of Cavers; they were swearing that they would not help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles... in their feud with the Elliots. He is listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. In 1580 he was recorded as superior of the lands in Darnick for which John Scott was hereditary feuair. In 1581 the same John Scott owed him for ‘unpaid fermes’. He acted as Deputy Keeper of Liddesdale in the early 1580s. His brother John was listed among Border criminals in 1586/7. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590/1 he was cautioner for William of Cessford not to reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden. Roberton, Lord Seton was his surety in 1592. In 1594 his eldest son George and another son Walter had bonds for not harming Thomas Falside of that Ilk and Patrick Livingstone of Saltcoats. In 1595 he was surety for Lancelot of Gate-shaw not to harm Elizabeth Cranston, widow of Lancelot of Little Newton. In 1596/7 he was a Border Commissioner for dealing with the English. In 1598 he and his son and heir George were involved in a bond. He firstly married Elizabeth Johnstone of Elphinstone and in 1573 secondly married Margaret Stewart, who was the widow of reformer John Knox and sister of the Regent, the Earl of Arran. He had 4 sons and 3 daughters, including: George, who succeeded: John, whose daughter Mary married William Elliot, Parson of Bedrule; and Margaret, who married Andrew Ker of Yair. In 1632 Robert, son of Andrew of Faldonside (either him or a later generation) succeeded to lands in Peu-Rule. In 1599 his widow Margaret Stewart and son George had a bond for Robert Falside of that Ilk not to harm them. He had wills registered in Edinburgh in 1599 and 1614. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of the Hirsel and Littledean (d.1573) son of Mark of Dolphin-ston and Littledean, and descended from the Kers of Cessford. His father Mark was ‘of Littildene’ in 1529 when he had an instrument of sasine for lands in Oxnam, once belonging to his grandfather, John Ainslie of Dolphinston. He is probably the Andrew of Littledean who in 1539 witnessed a bond between the Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott. He is probably also the ‘Dande Carr of Litleden’ who in 1541 was accused along with Sir Walter Scott of Buc- cleuch of being responsible for the death of an Englishman. He was said to have been granted the lands of Hirsel (in Berwickshire) in 1542 after being the first man to report to the King about the Scottish victory at Hadden Rigg. Also in 1542 he made a raid into England, taking priso- ner the Constable of Etal and others. In 1546 he witnessed a document for Ainslie of Dolphinston. In 1547 he and his son Walter of Dolphinston were listed in the summons for those accused of murdering Darnley. In 1550 he was ‘of Dol- phyntoune’ in an instrument regarding lands in Haining and another granting him the lands of Maxton and Littledean. He was Provost of Ed-inburgh 1548–50 and was knighted in 1552. He is probably the ‘Dand Ker’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. He is ‘Andro Ker of Hirsell’ in 1552 when indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; his son Walter was also listed. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. He may be the same as Sir Andrew of Littledean who was to satisfy George Rutherford in 1560 as part of resolving the feud create by the murder of George’s father, George Rutherford of Longnewton; he was also to ask forgiveness from Sir William Cranston ‘for being upon the ground quhair Sir Walter Scot of Bukelewch Knycht was slaine’, this being Cranston’s uncle. He was among those required by the Queen in 1561 to appear in Jed- burgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives. In 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565, but helped by the notary. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. In 1568/9 he was one of the main Kers to sign a contract with Sir Wal- ter Scott of Branxholme relating to the slaying of Sir Walter’s father in Edinburgh. They had to appear at the church of Melrose ‘to make hommage for the said slaughter’ and his grandson John Kerr was to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister of Sir Wal- ter (and if not, then another son was to marry another relative of Scott of Buccleuch); however, this does not appear to have happened. He may also be the ‘Andro Ker of Litleden’ who signed the bond for suppressing Border thieves in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for Sir William Ainslie and was ‘Sir Andro Ker of Hirsell Knycht’ when a bond was made with John Edmondson of that Ilk. He is probably the ‘Andro Ker of Litleden knycht’ who signed a bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He firstly married Margaret Cranston and secondly Euphame Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall, widow of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included; Walter of Liddleean; and an illegitimate son James, who in 1604 held the teinds of Rutherford, Maxton and Liddleean. His will from 1573 is registered in Edinburgh. Sir Andrew of Caverton (d.bef. 1564) son of Sir Walter of Cessford. He was the heir to the Cessford titles and estates, but died before his father, and his brother William succeeded. He was one of the men named in 1552 for their involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1562 he and his father (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Additionally he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1562. He may be the ‘Andro Ker of Hietoune’ (i.e. Heiton) who is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. In 1556 he was contracted to marry Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, but the marriage does not appear to have happened. He had 2 daughters (perhaps illegitimately), Grisel and Bessie, to whom his mother, Dame Isobel, served as ‘tutrix’ after his death. Andrew of Graden (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier Andrew of Graden. He was also known as ‘tutor of Graden’. He was named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Elliot son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redhouse and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Karr alias the tutor of Gradoun reset by Robine Ellot’ (suggesting he was already declared a fugitive). It is unclear how he was related to other Kers of Graden. He is probably the ‘Andrew Carr Robin Elliot’s man’ recorded in a separate case in 1590 when a group of Ellots and others were accused of stealing from the ‘Hewrde’ family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher ‘of the Whithall’. Andrew of Newhall (16th/17th C.) probably son of Robert. His tutor was James Ormiston of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1591/2 when Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, was cautioned for a complaint against him by tenants in Langnewton. This seems to have been part of a long-running feud. In 1592 he was released from Blackness Castle, with Sir Robert promising to presented him to the court if requested; his brothers Robert and James are also mentioned being exiled. In 1595 Sir Robert was declared a rebel for failing to present him and the Earl of Morton continued to complain that there was no promise made to stop harassing his tenants in Longnewton. Andrew of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by William and had other sons Andrew, Robert and Thomas. He was recorded in a transaction in Selkirk in 1582, involving James in Yair and others. Also in 1582 he warned James to accept redemption money from him for annual rents. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1591/2 his cautioner was George Pringle of Blindlee that he would keep the peace. In 1602 there was a letter against him and his sons William (his heir), Andrew, Robert and Thomas telling him not to encroach on Selkirk Common. Also in 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1607 he was ‘bailie in that part’ when he gave sasine for Broadmeadows. He was involved in a dispute over lands with the Burgh of Selkirk according to documents of the period 1611–15. The 1611 ‘Letter of Lawburyrows’ from James orders him and his ‘men of Yair’ (many of whom are listed) to stop molesting the inhabitants of Selkirk; his sons Robert, Mark and John are also named. In 1612 another letter with the King’s seal suggests that Selkirk should refrain from riding the marches and he should refrain from pasturing animals on Selkirk Common. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He married Margaret Ker of Faldonside and had at least 4 sons and 6 daughters. His son John became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1611. Sir Andrew of Greenhead and Primsdie (d.bef. 1617) possibly son of Gilbert and grandson of the earlier Andrew of Greenhead and Primsdie. He was ‘Dand’ in 1576 when he and his father Gilbert of Primsideloche signed a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. He is recorded in 1586 when he was surety for John Rutherford of Hunthill and vice versa, the penalty being the large sum of £10,000; he was also surety for William Kerr of Ancrum and he was later denounced as a rebel for not appearing. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council; his brother Walter of Lochtour was also listed. He is probably the Laird of Greenhead listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1593 John of ‘Lumphoy’ was cautioner for him not to reset associates of the Earl of Bothwell. He was denounced in 1597, along with Walter Scott of Todrig and Robert Scott of Bowhill, for not restoring teind sheaves to Mr. James Durham. He was juror on a retour in 1600. He was knighted in 1602 and served as Deputy Warden of the Middle March 1597–1602. In 1602 he was appointed ‘warden and justice of the Middle March’ during the absence of Robert, Lord of Roxburgh. Also in 1602 he was surety for Archibald, Bailie to Lord Roxburgh, and his son George, to answer for a murder. He married Alison, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie Marshall and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Gilbert of Locktour may have been his 2nd son and William of Greenhead may have been an illegitimate son who was naturalised in 1622. His daughter Alison married Ralph Ker of Dalcove. He was said to have had 7 sons, known as the ‘seven lads of Greenhead’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of the ‘goodman of Quhytemure’ in 1618 when he was among men of the Selkirk area accused of illegally carrying guns. His brother was presumably tenant in Whitmuir. Andrew (16th/17th C.) served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1625–27. It is unclear whether he is one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Graden (17th C.) after the Battle of Philiphaugh in 1645 he spent 7 Sundays in sackcloth at his parish church as punishment for supporting the wrong side. In 1648 he in the army of the Engagement under Hamilton, with his sons Henry and Andrew. His children included: Henry of Graden; and Andrew. Andrew of Sunderland Hall (d.bef. 1667) recorded being deceased in 1667 when his son Robert became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Andrew of Linton (d.bef. 1688) son of Andrew of Linton, as recorded in a receipt of 1625. As a Kirk Elder, he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce the National Covenant in 1638. He was recorded in the Roxburghshire Valuation Roll for 1643; his valuation was £2043 6s 8d, and that of Lady Linton £1620. He was recorded as grantee in a deed of 1663 and as granter in another of 1673. He married ‘Isobell Main’, as recorded in the baptism of their son James in Kelso in 1641; he was there ‘Laird of Lyntoun’. He probably secondly married Elizabeth Home, recorded in a deed of 1673, who was a widow in her testament of 1688. Their children included: Henry, who succeeded; Jean, who married Sir James Cockburn of Ryslaw; William, ‘son of the Laird of Lintoun’, recorded in a deed of 1663; George; and James (b.1641). He was probably succeeded by Henry (likely his son) who was recorded in the valuation of 1678. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Oakwood. Along with Robert Nelson in the same place and Robert Harvey in Broadmeadows, he was fined for non-conformity and forced to flee. This was probably around the 1670s. Sir Andrew of Cavers (1630–76) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He was ‘fiar thairfo’ listed after his father in 1648 among the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was probably the Andrew, son of Sir Thomas, who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 and probably the Andrew ‘fear of Caveris’ who witnessed a contract relating to Appotside in 1654. He succeeded to the lands of Bedrule, as well as others, having a deed under the Great Seal in 1649. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was still ‘fiar of Cavers’ in a deed of 1663. His lands were confirmed by Parliament in 1672 and included the Barony of Bedrule, as well as Rucastle, Menslaws and others. He allowed Thomas Turnbull, chief of the Bedrule Turnbulls to stay at Bedrule Mill and part of the Mains until he found another home. However, he himself died without a male heir and the lands and titles reverted back to his father in 1678, before he was succeeded by his cousin John of West Nisbet. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, and she died in 1661. The marriage contract gave his wife ‘ane annual rent of 3000 merks furthe of the barony of Bedroull, tenmandrie of Caveris, Milrig, and Peilquarters, Belches, Woodenis, and Pendicle Hill’ They had 4 daughters: Agnes, who married her cousin John Ker of West Nisbet; Anna, who married Mr. Murray of Deuchar; Margaret, who married Matthew Sinclair of Hermandston; and Jean, who married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. In 1689 his daughters were served as heirs to him, his father Thomas and his son Thomas. Andrew of Wells (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He was brother of Lord John of Locktour and owned lands in Rulewater, including Wells. He witnessed a baptism for Henry of Linton in 1671. He paid the land tax in 1678 for Huntknow in Bedrule Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d, as well as land valued at and £409 in Hobkirk Parish; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. In 1698 his lands were inherited by his daughter Joan and her husband John Murray of Ashiestiel and later owned by Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.1665) served heir to his father Sir Andrew of Greenhead in 1617, he was created a Baronet in 1637. In 1612, when ‘younger of Greenhead’, he and his brother Thomas, were among a group of 60 or so men accused of aggressively coming to the lands of Hartwoodmyres. His lands in Selkirk are mentioned in 1629. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. He defended Smallholm Tower against a band of English musketeers in 1640. In 1641 he was a Commissioner for maintaining peace on the Border and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He owned land in Bowden, Kelso, Selkirk, Sprouston and Yetholm Parishes in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was also an M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1645 and 1648/9. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Amandale. In 1649 he was on the Commission for the plantation of kirk's. He supported the Covenant and was imprisoned in Edinburgh and fined in 1662 after the Restoration. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. Also in 1658 he was recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk over rent. In 1660 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle with Pringle of Greenknov and presumably fined. In 1661 he sold the lands of Thistlestone, as well as Heiton Mains and Mill to James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. He owned a large amount of land in Kelso Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1634 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and in 1664 he married Katherine, widow of David Carnegie of Craig, daughter of John, 1st Earl of Wemyss; in 1684 she was fined £16,000 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. His children included: Gilbert (b.1635), who was baptised in Kelso, with the Earl of Roxburghe as one of the witnesses, and presumably died young; Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Isabel (b.1650); Gilbert (b.1651), who married Sophia, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton; and Margaret (b.1654). Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.bef. 1676) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He was Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1658/9 and 1669–74. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburgh. He appears to have had a marriage contract with Mary, Countess of Buccleuch (while she was only about 12), but this did not go ahead. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Alexander Don, 1st Baronet of Newton, and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1669); Andrew (b.1673); Jean (b.1673); and Jean (again, b.1674). However, he died without a surviving heir and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. The witnesses in 1673 birth were William and Gilbert, probably his brothers. After his death his widow married Sir Roger Hogg of Harcarse. Andrew of Littledean (17th C.) son of John of Littledean. He married a daughter of Sir James Dundas of Arniston, Governor of Berwick. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded; John of Blackburn in Berwickshire; and Mark of Blackburn. Andrew of Faldonside (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1700 when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was also recorded in 1705 when his son George became a writer’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Andrew (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Henry of Linton. His father sold off most of the family estates in 1699. However, he may have been left a small part of the old family lands by his father. He is probably who was meant by ‘Linton’s interest younger’ in the Hearth Tax rolls of the 1690s, with 12 houses listed below that. He was a grenadier and married Mary Culpeper. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Ruecastle in 1701. Andrew of Littledean (17th/18th C.) son of Andrew. In 1666 he married Isabel, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston. Around 1673 he registered arms. He was a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. He was succeeded by his son Walter. Andrew of Roughleeenuk (d.bef. 1731) recorded as deceased in 1731 when his son Robert signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. Andrew (18th C.) married Jane Clapperton in Hawick in 1771. Their children included Andrew (1773). Andrew (b.1775) joiner in Minto. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was recorded in a...
Ker

directory of 1852. His wife was ‘Effy’ according to the 1841 census. He was probably the Andrew who married Elspeth Turnbull and had children Thomas (b.1810), Mary (b.1810) and Euphry (b.1814). Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Chaise driver’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) wright at Bonchester Bridgend according to the ballots for the Militia in Hob Kirk Parish in 1799 and 1801. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Their children included Margaret (b.1605), Jeany (b.1807) and Andrew (b.1811). Ann (b.1801/2) from Jedburgh, she was wife of grocer Gideon. She ran the grocer’s show on the Fore Row after her husband’s death. She is listed in the 1851 census as ‘mistress employing one woman’ (her niece Margaret Story) and in Slater’s 1852 directory as a grocer and spirit dealer on ‘Front Row’. Archibald of Graden (17th/18th C.) perhaps son of Henry. He married Helenor, daughter of Sir James St. Clair of Roslin. His children include: Alexander, who became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and Henry (b.1698). He was already deceased in 1708. Catherine (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. She married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, who died in about 1562. In 1564 she complained to the Privy Council that officers of the Queen had removed her teind sheaves from Over Crailing. She produced a document from Andrew Home, Con mandor of Jedburgh, granting her these teinds for 5 years. She also argued with her son Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst over her rights to these teinds. She is referred to as ‘Dame Kathrene Ker, Lady Pharnyhirst’ and signed ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1566 her son Sir Thomas was ordered not to molest her or her other children and servants. George (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. He was said to be ‘noble on both sides’ when there was a request in 1418 for him to be given the benefice of the Church of Kinghorn. However, there was a dispute over this in 1420 because of another incompatible benefice. George of Samuelston (15th C.) possibly son of Andrew of Cessford. In 1451 William, Earl of Douglas granted him a charter of Huttonhall, along with his 3 natural sons. He received a pension in 1477 for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. He firstly married Elizabeth Carmichael and secondly married Marion Sinclair, widow of George Home of Wedderburn. His children were: George, who married Mariota St. Clair and died without issue; and Nichola, who became his heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. George (15th/16th C.) Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He was let the farm of Fairnilee in 1501, his name appearing as ‘Master George’. James, son of his late brother, was also joint tenant of Fairnilee. He is probably the ‘Maistir George Ker’ who was among the men to whom to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts in 1506/7 (the others including Ralph of Primside Loch). He could be the ‘Master George’ who was listed (along with Lawrence and his brother George) being indicted for oppressing the tenants of Handalee. He is probably the Rector of Morebattle and Prebendary of Glasgow who appointed Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1514, and is recorded in many documents in the 1510s and 20s, preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1523 he married Isabel, daughter of Lancelot Ker and his testament is recorded that same year. George of Linton (15th/16th C.) son of James of Linton. In 1509 he was son of the deceased James when he had sasine for lands in Linton. In 1514 he was son of the deceased James of Linton when he appointed Master Thomas, Canon of Glasgow (and perhaps a relative) as his procurator. In 1517 he had a deed with Robert of Sunderlandhall. His brother german Robert is recorded in 1524. Either the same or a later George of Linton is recorded several times in the Protocol Books of Selkirk in 1535–40; his son and heir James is also mentioned. He appears to be separate from the George who was Canon of Glasgow, Vicar of Morebattle and Rector of Auld Roxburgh. In 1525 he was recorded as tutor to the children of his deceased uncle, John Liddell (and John’s wife Margaret Whitehead). In 1529/30 a group of Elliots and Armstrongs pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘alias Flas_kvold’ into ward in Fairnilee to answer for raids and other crimes perpetrated against him. The witnesses to the pledge included Martin in Liddlean, George in Falside and Andrew in Greenhead. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In 1531 he witnessed a document for Thomas in Yair and another for David Pringle of Smallholm in 1532. In 1534 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. He may be the same as George of Linton who was accused (along with Walter of Cessford and Mark of Littledean) by

Sir Walter Scott of raiding his lands at Newark and in the Borthwick valley, and also of burning Cunzierton and killing two Halls in 1537. George of Linton’s son and heir James was granted lands in Primside by Walter of Cessford in 1537. In 1538/9 he infefted his brother Robert in the lands of Easter Blakelaw. In 1539 George, son of Robert in Crooked Shaw (perhaps his brother) served as his bailie. In 1539/40 he witnessed a transaction for the Kers of Primside and Shawes. In 1540 he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, Thomas in Sunderlandhall and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. In 1541 he and his wife Elizabeth Ker had sasine for the lands of Linton. Also in 1541 he was tenant of Fairnilee in Ettrick. In 1542 he witnessed a precept of sasine for Lancelot of Gate-shaw. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He is probably the Laird of Linton who was among those locals giving their pledges to England in 1544. He was witness to a bond of assurance in 1545. In 1546 he gave to his son and heir James some lands in Linton. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1552. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was also listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. George of Gate-shaw (d.bef. 1566) son of Lancelot. Along with his father, he has sasine to land in Primside and Hownam. He succeeded to his father’s lands in Selkirk in 1544 and then sold them. In 1544 he was ‘of Gaitshaw now living in Fastheucht’. Also in 1544 he was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English. In 1545 he witnessed a sasine giving part of the lands of James Riddell (younger son of John of that Ilk) to his wife Janet Ker (who may have been related). He was one of the Kers who was involved in the burning of lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1547/8. He was ‘George Ker of Gaitshaw’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. He witnessed an instrument relating to the Haliburtons in about 1552. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft (listed separately from George of Linton, showing that they were different men). In 1564 his brother Richard was one of the Kers who signed a bond with the Scotts, pledging not to attack each other. He was part of a contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1569. He married Janet Edmondson and was probably succeeded by Richard, his brother. George of Faldonside (d.1553) son of Sir Robert of Caverton. He is mentioned in a record involving lands in Linton in 1542. He is recorded as advisor to Sir Walter of Cessford, his nephew. He was already deceased in 1563 when his son John leased his lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Haliburton, co-heiress of Dirleton. His children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Margaret, who married Robert Haig of Bemersyde; Richard; John, recorded in 1586/7 as brother of Andrew; and Isabel. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘sometime tutor of Gradane’ in 1580/1 when he sold some land near Melrose. He was surely related to other
Kers associated with Graden. George (16th C.) servant to the Warden, Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581/2 he responded when Walter Scott came to Hermitage, on the track of a band that had raided Harwood on Teviot. Along with another servant and tracking dog, they followed the trail, but found too large a group of Elliots, who would not let them search for the stolen goods. George of Cavers (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of Cavers and brother of William (who may have died before their father). He may be the George of Cavers village who was recorded as a main actor in a performance of the folkloric ‘Robin Hood’ in 1610. He may be the George in Linton who in 1615 was sought for the murder of Robert, son of Thomas of Priorhall. His children included: William, who probably succeeded; and Jean, who married James Pringle of Galashiels. He may also be the Laird of Linton whose son James was a candidate for Professor of Philosophy in Edinburgh in 1611. George of Faldoiside (d.1612) son of Andrew. He is recorded along with his father in 1598 in a bond not to harm certain neighbours. In the same year he was cautioner for his brothers William, John and James, he was also surety for Robert Haig of Bemmerside not to harm Ralph of Shaw and his brother Walter had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother Walter not to harm James Stalker, writer in Edinburgh, and vice versa. He may have been father of Sir Walter, last of Faldoiside. He was ‘apparent of Fawdounsyde’ in 1594 when the will of his wife Cecil Lundie was registered in Edinburgh. George of Cavers (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded as son and heir of Thomas when he was signatory to a caution for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope in 1592. He signed the ‘General Band’ among Border Lairds as ‘appeirand of Caveris’ in 1602. He is probably the ‘son and apparent heir’ recorded in 1603 as surety in relief for Thomas of Cavers. He is recorded as ‘apparent of Cavers’ in 1618 when he became cautioner for William and Walter Middlemas, not to harm George Turnbull of Belses or his family or servants. Also in 1618 he was cautioner for his brother Robert not to harm John Ker of Langleweton. He was ‘fiar of Cavers’ in 1622 when he served as caution at the Justice Court and was ‘of Cavers’ when he served in the same capacity in 1623. In 1622 he was still heir apparent when appointed to assist Sir Andrew of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. He may not have lived long enough to succeed formally. In any case, his son Sir Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas. Other sons included: John, who acquired West Nisbet; and Robert, who acquired Middlemas Walls. His son John may be the ‘brother to Caivers’ who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. Another son may be James, recorded as ‘brother-german to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers’, who became a merchant’s apprentice in 1634. Gideon (b.c.1776/7–1843) from England, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, listed there in 1837 and 1841. His mother was Eleanor (1736–1819). He was recorded on the Fore Row there in 1841, along with wife Ann and 3 children. His first wife was Elizabeth (1767–1826). He secondly married Ann Storey, who died in 1875, aged 74. Their children were: Agnes (1833/4–51); John (1834/5–65), an engineer in the Navy; Robert (‘Bob’, 1838/9–64), who worked at the Auction Mart; and Helen C. (or ‘Nelly’, b.c.1842), who married chemist David Kennedy. His wife ran the shop after his death, selling the property in 1862. Early photographs exists of his wife and 3 children separately. He is buried in Hawick. It is possible he was the hosier named Gideon who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1537 when he had sasine for the 20 merk land of ‘South Syntoun’ (i.e. Synton). This was done in Edinburgh, with witnesses at Synton including Thomas in Sunderlandhall and William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh. It is unclear if he is the same as Gilbery of Primside. Gilbert of Primside Loch and Greenhead (16th C.) son of Andrew of Greenhead and Primside, and grandson of Ralph. He was already ‘in Greneheid’ in 1536/7. ‘Gilbert Ker, young Laird of Greneheid’ was also among the men accused in 1537 of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. A precept of 1537 names him as son and heir of Andrew of Primside Loch. He was involved in land transactions in Selkirk in 1538; in one he was clearly recorded as son of Andrew and Marion Pringle when charged to pay the future ‘fermes’ on ‘Mabyllynflat’ to John Turnbull of Hassendean. In 1539 he witnessed a document for William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh, along with James in Greenhead. It is possible he is the same Gilbert who was ‘alderman for the time’ for the town of Selkirk in 1539. In 1539/40, along with his mother Marion Pringle, he received the non-entry of lands in Town Yetholm from Janet Newton and her husband Adam Ker. In 1540 he witnessed William

Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with with witnesses including George of Linton, Thomas in Sunderlandhall and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He was probably the Gilbert of Greenhead who was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at Pinkie in 1547/8, and the ‘lard of Grenehed’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1551 he sold the lands of Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) to Gavin Elliot (later of Horsleyhill). Also in 1551 he was ‘of Grenehed’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed (as ‘of Grenehed’) among Kerrs in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kerrs. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1560 he was the first person named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kerrs and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was recorded in 1563 as ‘of Primsydelock’ when he purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from William Douglas of Cavers. The witnesses include William, Commendator of Melrose and Mark, 2nd son of Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh (who were surely relatives). Also in 1563 he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Yetholm, ‘wadset’ to him, his wife Elizabeth ‘Admanstoun’ and their 3rd son Walter, by James, Earl Bothwell. He was one of the Kerrs who is listed as an exception in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1564/5. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlleshope with the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was one of the men to sign the bond to suppress thieves in the Border. Also in 1569, Sir Walter of Cessford was surety for him. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branholme as surety for a bond of the late William Douglas of Cavers; other sureties were his son and heir Andrew, as well as the deceased William Ker of Yair. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for Braidmeadows and Middlestead. In 1576 he and his son ‘Dand’ had a ‘bond of manrent’ with Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. His son Robert was recorded in 1581, promising to pay the minister of Selkirk. He received money for lands in Selkirk in 1581/2. In 1582/3 there was caution for him not attacking the tenants of James, Commendator of Melrose and others, with James Veitch of North Synton and John, younger of Littledean as his cautioners. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, along with his son Andrew. He is probably the Gilbert of Greenhead listed as a servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he witnessed a document in Edinburgh in 1591. He may be the ‘George Karr of Prumsydelock’ who was accused in 1590 of resetting rieuer Peter Oliver. He married Elizabeth Edmondson of that Ilk and his children included: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; and Katherine, who married Andrew Ker of Linton. Other children may have included: Ralph of Broadmeadows; James of Middlemass Walls; Walter of Town Yetholm; and John of Raperlaw. A younger son of his was said to be Lancelot of Gateshaw and Crookedshaws (but this is disputed). Gilbert of Lochtour (d.c.1635) possibly 2nd son of Andrew Ker of Primsideloch and Greenhead. He presumably received Lochtour (part of the estate of Primsideloch) from his father. He was listed as juror on a retour in 1600. He was appointed as one of the 2 executors to Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who died 1606/7. He married Gavin’s daughter Esther; his wife was one of the 3 heirs portioners to Stobs in 1607 and sold the lands to Gilbert Elliott (‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’), her half-brother. He sold Bailielee to the same Gilbert Elliott in 1609 and in 1628 he sold him ‘Moiddlesteid and Black-midding’ in Ettrick Forest, with the permission of his wife Esther Elliot and his son and heir John. In 1611 he and his son Robert had a charter of Town Yetholm. In 1612 Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres complained that he and other Kerrs (including his brothers William and John) and others had ‘rave up and tilt over agane’ the fields and attacked the house at Hartwoodmyres; however, he was acquitted for lack of evidence. In 1622 he had a bond of caution with Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was in a legal dispute with the Minister of Yetholm over teinds in 1623. Also in 1623 he was a curator for his grand-nephew James Kerr of Chatto. His children included: Robert, younger of Lochtour (d.1624); John, who succeeded; William, called ‘Mr.’ in 1616, suggesting he may have trained for the ministry; and Mark, recorded in 1616. Gilbert of Lochtour (d.1666) son of Sir John of Lochtour. He was heavily in debt when he succeeded. In 1651 he made an agreement to ell his estate to Sir John Wauchope (his mother’s 2nd husband), this being finalised in 1661. He married Jean, sister of Inglis of Elveston and had children John and Rachel. Gilbert (b.1651) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead and brother of Sir William. A baptism of an earlier Gilbert was recorded in Kelso Parish, with his father listed as ‘Andro Laird Greinheid’ and his mother ‘Elspeth Scot’; presumably he was named after this earlier sibling who died. In his own baptism record, his father is ‘Andrew Baronet Kerr’. He is recorded in a deed of 1673. In Edinburgh in 1684 he married Sophia, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton. Their children probably included Elizabeth, Andrew, John, Margaret and Roger. Henry (d.bef. 1399) son of John. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh from at least 1349. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. His accounts as ‘vicecomitis de Roxburgh’ are recorded in 1359. He was collector of the contributions from the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh in the Exchequer Rolls from 1360. He is probably the ‘Henrico Kerre’ who witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas, in about 1360. He had a document for safe passage into England in 1363, which was revoked by Edward III in 1363/4. His wife was Elizabeth St. Michael; after his death she resigned her lands of Whitchester (in Hawick Parish) to be granted to her second husband, Sir John Maxwell of Pollock. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert of Altonburn. Henry ‘Harry’ (d.1642/3) only surviving son of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh. He is probably the ‘Henrie, Lord Ker’ named in 1642 to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. Since he died before his father and had no sons, the succession went to his sister’s husband, William Drummond. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, 10th Earl of Erroll. His daughter Margaret married Sir James Innes and his great-great grandson, Sir James Innes-Ker would later become 5th Duke of Roxburgh. Another daughter, Anna, married John, Lord Fleming. Col. Henry of Graden (17th C.) son of Andrew. He was ‘Captain Harrie’ in 1648, when he fought alongside his father and brother ‘Coronet Andrew’. He was a J.P. in Roxburghshire and persecuted Covenanters in the ‘Killing Times’, assisting Adam Urquhart, Laird of Meldrum. He is probably the man recorded as ‘Harrie, fiar of Graden’ in 2 deeds of 1663. He captured the Covenanters Archibald Riddell and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe near Selkirk in 1680. He is ‘Laird Gredden-Ker’ when he was juror in a trial in Argyll in 1681. In 1688 part of his estate was claimed by Pringle of Crichton through wadset. He resettled the family across the valley at Wester Hoselaw, which was renamed Place-Graden or New Graden (and which the family had owned since 1528). He married Lilias, daughter of John Rutherford of Hunthill and sister of Robert, Lord Rutherford. His children included: Archibald; and Lilias (b.1658), who was baptised in Jedburgh. The marriage was stated in one source to have been in 1666, but must have been earlier. Henry of Linton (b.1641) son of Andrew of Linton and Isobel ‘Main’, his baptism is recorded in Kelso. In 1674 he sold parts of Linton (including the Park) to Robert Pringle of Clifton; he sold much of the rest of Linton to Andrew Pringle of Clifton in 1699 (although bequeathing a small part to his children). In about 1675 he carried the ‘great Mourning banner’ at the funeral of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburghe. In 1678 he paid £1132 6s 8d on land tax in Linton Parish and is in the Roxburghshire Valuation records with the value £1431 6s 8d (which is considerably less than the value in 1643). His wife ‘The Ladie Lintoun’ was taxed for the teinds of Hadden in Sprouston Parish in 1678. He is probably the ‘Lintone Elder’ who paid the hearth tax on ‘his hous & offices houses & tuo kilnes’, for 8 hearths in all in the 1690s. He married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Home of Harcarse. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded and married Mary Culpeper; Christian, who married John Kerr of Frogden; Elizabeth, who married James Scott of Bowhill; Henry; James; Janet; Julian, who married Francis Armstrong of Whithaugh; Mary, who married Robert Scott, tenant in Park in Liddesdale; Sophia, who married Gilbert, brother to Sir William of Greenhead; and William (b.1671). The 1671 baptismal witnesses were William, Earl of Roxburghe, Andrew of Wells and Robert Pringle of Clifton. Henry of Graden (1698–1751) son of Archibald. He lost his father when he was young, was raised as a Catholic and was sent into the Spanish Service. In 1728 he moved to the Irish Regiment. He was part of the court proceedings for the succession of the Rutherfords in 1738 as ‘grand-nephew and heir of line to the last Lord Rutherford’. He took up arms again in 1745 as one of the few Border Lairds who joined the Jacobite army. He acted as Aide-de-Camp to Prince Charlie. In Staffordshire he captured the spy Captain Weir. He was captured and spent 2 years in prison in London; although sentenced to death, he was eventually pardoned and spent his last years soldiering in Spain again. Isabella (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, she married Sir William of Cessford. She was granted certain lands in her own right. She may be the ‘DEM ISBEL KER’ recorded in an inscribed door lintel at Holydean. In 1563 she complained that Thomas and John Young were occupying her quarter of Hassendeanbank without paying ‘mail ferme’. Her children included Sir Andrew (who succeeded to Cessford), William (who succeeded his brother), Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). She also served as ‘tutrix’ for her grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Isabella (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh and brother of William, Master of Roxburgh. She married James Scrymgeour, 2nd Viscount of Dudhope. In 1634 she was served heir to one third of her brother William’s lands, including part of Alton near Hawick. Her sister Maria was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. James (14th/15th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. In 1412 the Pope wrote to the Abbot of Melrose, requesting a cure for him. James (15th C.) witness, along with several other local men, to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1427; no designation is given, so it is unclear what family branch he belonged to, but he could have been related to Andrew, who was on the same panel. Probably the same James was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. He may be the same ‘Jacobum Ker’ who was on the ‘retour’ for the next Douglas of Drumlanrig to inherit the Barony of Hawick in 1450. James (15th C.) son of Andrew and brother of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He had a charter of Primside in 1444 and a charter for Bonnington in Linlithgow county in 1452. In 1456 he and his brother Andrew were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest. He could be the James who gave consent to his son’s entry for a debt to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1471. It is possible he is the same man as James of Linton. James of Gateshaw (15th C.) perhaps son of Thomas. In 1471/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Margaret and John Home of Ersilitoun, Whitrig and Crailing. He may have been succeeded by Andrew. James of Linton (d.bef. 1509) 2nd son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. His father was probably the Andrew of Altonburn who died before 1450, but it is possible he was son of the next Andrew (who died in about 1480). He was probably the first Ker of Linton, although it is unclear exactly when he gained the lands and from whom (although the lands were held by Thomas, Lord Somerville in 1426). In 1452 he appears to be recorded being brother of Andrew of Altonburn when the King granted him lands in Bonnington. He served as surety for some Border thieves in 1502, including the sons of William Elliot, known as ‘Hob the King’ and ‘Dand the Man’. He was also surety in 1502 for a man who had remission for a murder in Selkirk. He was succeeded by George, who is recorded as his son in 1509 and 1514. Robert of Crookedshaws may have been another son. His son George was tutor (in 1525) for George’s uncle John Liddell; this suggests his wife was a Liddell. James (16th C.) recorded in Whitmuir in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. William in Whitmuirhall was also recorded in 1531 and may have been related. In 1541 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Patrick Murray of Falahill. In 1542 he witnessed a document in Selkirk for Robert, Vicar of Lindean. He was probably an ancestor of the later James in Whitmuir. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. In 1550 he witnessed an instrument relating to lands in the Hirsel. He may have been succeeded by a later James of Whitmuir. James of Mersington (16th C.) probably son of Thomas. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534 when he proclaimed a letter of obligation to the Kers in Shaws. His procurator, Thomas McDouglas went to ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’, pounded on the door and 3 times repeated the promises (which are not specified). In 1537 he was witness to a precept for the lands of Ker of Primsideloch. In 1541 he was involved in a dispute over lands with Alexander Pringle of ‘Cragelthe’. He is also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Ironically the same James of Mersington was one of the cautioners for Sir Walter when he was in ward within Edinburgh Castle in 1540/1. He was a juror on retours in 1550 and 1551. He married Janet Wauchope and had at least 6 sons and 1 daughter. His son and heir...

Thomas is recorded in 1557 and 1561. James of Fairnilee (16th C.) recorded in 1534 when he was witness to a letter of obligation between James of Mersington and the Kers in Shaws. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherford and Homes. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitemuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitten. James (16th C.) recorded in Greenhead in 1539 when he witnessed a document for William, Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He is probably related to the other Kers of Greenhead, e.g. Gilbert of Prim-side, who was also a witness. James (16th C.) presented to the Vicarage of Ashkirk in 1550. He may have been Vicar at Linton in 1569. James (16th C.) son and heir of George of Linton. He had a charter as heir apparent of his father in 1537. However, he appears to have predeceased his father and his son Andrew succeeded to the Lairdship. James of Whitemuir (16th C.) perhaps son of the earlier James. He is recorded in the 1560 bond between the Kers and the Ruthfurds. He signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. His lands appear to have been in Sprouston and not those near Selkirk. Perhaps the same James in ‘Qhit-mur’ witnessed a transactions for other Kers in Selkirk in 1581 and 1582. He could be the ‘Goodman of Qhitmuir’ who in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. His son Ralph inherited the lands of Whitemuir in Sprouston Parish from him in 1603. James (16th C.) son of Thomas in Yair. He is recorded being in Yair in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk for the Turnbuls of Phliphaugh. In 1581 he received redemption money for an annual rent from Thomas of Sundlandhall. Also in 1581 he had sasine for Catslack and Mountbenger. In 1582 he had a dispute with a messengar acting for Andrew of Yair. Also in 1582 he is recorded as lawful son of the deceased Thomas in Yair and brother of Robert when warned by Andrew of Yair to accept redemption money on his lands. He could be the James of Sundlandhall recorded in a decree under the seal of Queen Mary, regarding a dispute over lands of Yair with the Burgh of Selkirk. James (16th C.) mentioned as Keeper of Hermitage Castle (under the Earl of Bothwell) in 1583. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (16th C.) accused of leading a group to the lands of James Sinclair in Ewingston, where oxen were killed and 4 horses stolen. In 1586/7 Sinclair complained that the horses had been re-set by John Scott of the Palace, servant to George Scott of Synton, with Scott of Synton declared as a rebel for not appearing in court. James of Mid-dlemass Walls (d.c.1595) younger son of Gilbert of Primsid Loch and Greenhead. He was described as ‘of Middimest-Walls’ when his wills were registered in Edinburgh in 1595/6 and 1607. James of Lintalee (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Ralph. He is recorded in 1586 when Dan Moscrop was his surety to appear before the Privy Council and was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was listed in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders. He was among Kers and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels; his son William is also listed. He was juror in Oxnam in 1602. He was recorded as part of inquest into lands in Rulewater in 1610. In 1616 he was removed from Lintalee by William Douglas, Earl of Angus, with John Douglas made tenant there instead. His sons George and William and William’s son Thomas was recorded in the case heard by the Privy Council in 1617. Although he complained about unfair removal, it was found to be lawful. James of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his son Walter and his servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Rev. James of Grange (c.1601–1694) younger son of Sir John of Littledean and Margaret Whytlaw, Lady Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1621 and was licensed to preach in 1623. He was presented to Abbotrule Parish in the middle of that year and ordained there in 1624. He was Laird of Grange in Abbotrule Parish, presumably being granted these lands by the Baron after becoming minister. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (presumably Grange) valued at £400. In 1646/7 he was one of the chaplains for Lord Lothian’s regiment. There was a complaint about his behaviour (along with John Scott of Hawick), at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles. He was deprived in 1662 when Episcopacy was re-established, and confined to his Parish (rather than be ousted, like the younger ministers). In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 he paid tax on £433 6s 6d for lands in Abbotrule Parish. He was also offered Howman Parish in 1672, but it is unclear that he accepted it. In 1678 he and his daughter-in-law (presumably wife of James of Grange) paid the land tax on £433 6s 8d in Abbotrule Parish. He was found guilty of preaching to a ‘field conventicle’ in 1680 when he delivered a sermon to an overflowing congregation of about 500 people in his house at Grange. He was imprisoned for several weeks but released on caution. During the times of persecution when he was harassed by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum’s soldiers and is supposed to have prophetically said ‘Sir, I was a minister before you had a being, and will be one when you are gone’. His wife was also accused of witchcraft at a meeting of the Presbytery, but ‘most unjustly’ and the charge shown to be unfounded. Surviving till the Revolution, he was restored to Abbotrule in 1690, but may not actually have resumed his former position, probably due to infirmity of age. When he died he was ‘Father of the Church’, i.e. the oldest minister. He married Christian Airth and their children were: James of Grange; an unnamed child; Isabella, who died unmarried before 1683; Elizabeth, also dead before 1683; Eupheme; and Andrew. His ‘oye’ (probably grandson) John Turnbull had a son baptised in Hawick in 1704. James of Whitmuir (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he and several others were in dispute over Selkirk Common. James of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. James. He held the same lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish as his father. His wife (name not given) paid the land tax along with his father in Abbotrule Parish in 1678. He is probably the James of Grange who contributed £300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1689 his eldest son John was served heir to his sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the lands of Grange. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as servant to the Laird of Whitslade in 1717. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Jean (b.1714), Andrew (b.1715) and Barbara (b.1717). James (1739/40–92) schoolmaster at Bedrule. He married Helen Turnbull, who died in Ancrum in 1812. Their daughter Jean died in in Lanton in 1803. They are buried in Bedrule cemetery. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Cairns (resident of Wiltonburn) in 1780. In 1777 he married Margaret (‘Peggy’) Cairns and their children included: Betty (b.1782); Walter (b.1785); Nelly (b.1789); and Betty (again, b.1792). An unnamed child (b.1779), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his. James (d.1794) gardener to Mr. Dickson, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) cooperator of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1812/3) from Kelso, he was headmaster at Drumlanrig, the ‘Ragged Schuil’, from about 1860. He married Margaret Macgregor in Kelso in 1855. Their children included: Tom (b.1856), who became a great Hawick Common Riding supporter; Margaret Clark (b.1860); Agnes (b.1862); Mary (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1866); William Macgregor (b.1868); and James (b.1870). Janet (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and John Lauder. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Janet (b.c.1815) grocer and spirit dealer on the Kirkwynd. She is recorded there in 1841 with her infant children James and Alison. John (d.1340s) recorded in a letter to Edward III in either 1340 or 1347/8, when his death is mentioned. With his brothers Henry and Thomas, they were ‘the greatest enemies the writer had in the forest in the company of William Douglas’. He was killed in combat with the English, ‘from a blow …through the body and through his hakeon and habergeon’, while his 2 brothers were taken prisoner. It seems likely he is related to the first John of Altonburn. John ‘of the Forest of Selkirk’ (d.c.1360) the first known ancestor of the Kers of Cessford etc. He became the first Laird of Altonburn (or ‘Auldtonburn’), acquiring the lands from John ‘of Coupland’ in 1357/8, with witnesses including William of Gledstains, William ‘de Roule’ and Alexander of Flex, just 3 years after the lands had been passed from Adam of Rule. About the same time he witnessed a grant for lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He is probably the John on an English panel of inquest held at Roxburgh in 1357/8. Robert Riddell of Riddell witnessed 2 charters to him in 1357 and 1358. In 1361 he was on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Nether Crailing. He is probably the ‘John Kerre’ who was in 1363 granted custody of the Teviotdale lands of William Rutherford until William’s heir reached majority. He married Mariota (with unknown surname, but possibly daughter of John of Copeland) and was succeeded by their son Henry. John (14th/15th C.) recorded as ‘John de Ker’ in 1405. He was one of 12 Scottish prisoner in Calais who were put on a ship to England, and although they tried to take command during the voyage they were held for ransom. It is unclear if he was related to the Border Kers. John (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. In 1428 he made a request to the Pope to be confirmed in the perpetual vicarage of Largo. John (15th C.) mentioned in the document of 1479 resigning the lands of Broadlee (in the Barony of Hawick) by Robert Turnbull to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Ker’. Probably the same ‘Johanne Ker’ was witness to the saisine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. John (16th C.) son of George of Faldonside, and presumably therefore brother of Sir Andrew of Faldonside. In 1563 he leased his lands of Hirsel in Lilliesleaf (Parish) to 4 men. In 1586/7 he was ‘bruther to Andro Ker of Faudon-syde’, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (16th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Kippielaw. In 1581 he renounced his rights to lands in Bowden to his father and mother Elizabeth, while his father and mother assigned to him the Kirklands of Bewlie, with 2 acres at the east end of Lilliesleaf. John of Raperlaw (16th C.) younger son of Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch. He was servant to Lord Glamis 1585–86. In 1586 he and his wife Janet Gib had a Charter for lands in Raperlaw and ‘West Bernis’ in Roxburghshire. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of George of Cavers and brother of Thomas of Cavers. He was a burgess of Edinburgh. In 1603 he and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that Thomas, after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, would pay his fines or re-enter. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Ker of Langnewton, recorded in 1621. He is listed as ‘Thomes Johnne’, so presumably his father was Thomas. Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh (d.bef. 1631) son of Walter of Littledean and grandson of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. In the 1508/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts he is named as the son and heir of Walter, and promised in marriage to Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when ‘he beis of perfyte age, fourteene zeiris outrun’: however, the marriage does not appear to have taken place. He was still son and heir of Walter of Littledean in 1588 when he was cautioner for brothers of Cockburn of that Ilk. In 1589 he promised to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he and his brother Mark had a bond for not harming certain Homes. In 1593 there was a letter of ‘lawburrows’ against him, his father and brothers, brought by his ‘sometime spouse’ Juliane Home and members of her family, the Homes of Wedderburn, not to molest her in the liferent of Littledean. Also in 1593 there was an order for the Warden of the Marches and Sheriff of Roxburgh to apprehend him, since he was already excommunicated and denounced as a rebel, guilty of adultery and other crimes. Further complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn in 1593/4 accuses him of ‘double adultery’ for also enticing the wife of Hamilton of Innerwick to cohabit with him at Spylaw. In 1595 he was involved in a quarrel with Sir Robert of Cessford, who assaulted him in Edinburgh. He led a raid into England in 1597. In 1598 he had ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden declared a rebel for failure to pay for profits coming from Borthwickshiel, ‘specified in a decree of removing’. In 1599 he tried to make Scott of Buccleuch answerable for Scott of Harden’s non-appearance, but this was unsupported by the courts, because it was a civil and not criminal matter. In 1600 Andrew of ‘Mylnerig’ was surety for him that he would keep the King’s peace. He may be the Sir John who signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. Also in 1602 he complained about Kers from the Morebattle area stealing livestock from his farms. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1605 and 1607. In 1608 he had a charter for the Baronies of Maxton, Linton and Town Yetholm. He was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and in 1618 was appointed by the King as one of the commissioners for keeping law and order in Ewesdale and the Debatable Land. In 1611 he exchanged the Hirsel for the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1624 was granted all of the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh that had been resigned by James, Earl of Home; he was thereafter known as Lord Jedburgh, although this was later disallowed on the basis that the title lay with the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1619 he had charters for the Lordship of Jedburgh and the lands of Nisbet. In 1621 he complained about being banned from intercommuning with his son John of Langnewton and was given permission to meet with him as the parties tried to settle their differences. Also in 1621 there was an Act of Parliament forbidding him from using the Jedburgh title and in 1622 he lost it for good to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1576 he married Juliane, 3rd daughter of David Home of Wedderburn, but she divorced him in 1589 and remarried James Hoppringle of Whitelaw. In 1589/90 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk.
Ker

In 1621 there was a complaint that he, with several of his servants and associates, attacked John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw and others, killing one of their dogs, and later shot at Haliburton and his associates near Fairnington. He was declared a rebel, along with several associates. In 1621 his father, Sir John of Jedburgh complained that he had been unfairly barred from intercommuning with him, and was allowed to do so to help the parties resolve their disputes. In 1622 there was a complaint against him by Rev. William Jameson, that he had violently interfered with grain that had been impounded for the minister’s use. He was served heir to his father in 1631, with his legitimacy not being questioned, despite the potentially illegal marriage of his parents, because of the time that had passed. The name of his wife is unclear, but she could be the Margaret Ker, called ‘Old Lady Littledean’ who was charged at the court in Jedburgh in 1684 with not attending her parish church and was fined. His children were: Andrew, who succeeded; Jean, who married Sir John of Lochtour; and Esther, who married Sir Hugh Wallace of Craige.

John of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 as holder of the infeftment and sasine of Barnhills. He complained that ‘Dandie Davidson, pretended tenant of the said lands’ and a gang of Davidsions and Turnbulls harassed his tenants and pastured their animals there. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns. John of Lochtour (d.1644) son of Gilbert, he succeeded since his older brother died before their father. In 1624 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of Town Yetholm, Cherrytrees and Hayhope. He married Janet, co-heiress of George Falside of Cothroppill. His children included: Sir John, who succeeded; Andrew, who had sasine of Town Yetholm in 1639; and Margaret, who married Rev. Robert Know of Kelso. John of Langnewton and Littledean (16th/17th C.) son of Sir John of Littledean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh. He was known as ‘of Langnewton’ while his father was still alive.

In 1618 Robert, son of Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre complained that he had sent his servant after him on horseback to attack him with a sword and pistol. He served as cautioner for his servant not to wear ‘hagbuts and pistols’ and for him not to harm the family of Thomas Ker. In 1619 Sir Andrew of Oxnam complained that he and over 100 men came at night to Oxnam Moor to break up and steal the ‘grite number of turvis’ cut for Sir Andrew there; there was insufficient proof to convict any of them, but it was presumably part of some dispute over rights on common moors. In 1621 there was a complaint that he,
Erle of Roxburgh. In 1644 he made a new indenture of his lands to himself and his wife ‘in lifierent’ and to his son Robert ‘in fee’. In 1645 he contributed supplies after the accidental burning of Kelso. He served as a Commissioner of War for Roxburghshire. His sons Robert, Andrew and Henry all featured in the funeral procession for the Countess of Roxburgh in 1675. John (17th C.) tenant in Middleknowes. He was witness to discharges for the teinds of Harwood and Appotside in 1655. For a further document of 1656, relating to the lands of Appotside, he was ‘baillie in that part’. John of West Nisbet (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He married Jean, daughter of Sir James Kerr of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. His son John married his cousin Agnes Ker of Cavers. John (17th C.) gardener in ‘Knows’ (probably Hassendean Knowe, since he is named right after men from Hassendean). He is on the huge list in 1684 of men declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of James of Grange, and grandson of the minister of Abbotrule. In 1689 he was served heir to his father’s sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the annual rent totalling £88 (corresponding to 2200 merks) of the lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish. It is unclear if the family continued its ties with Abbotrule after this. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. John of Cavers Carre (d.1737) eldest son of John of West Nisbet and Jane Kerr of Crailing. In 1684 he inherited the Cavers Carre lands and titles from his uncle Sir Thomas. This included the Barony of Bedrule and lands in the Rule valley as well as lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth. He may have adopted the spelling ‘Carre’ after he succeeded. He is recorded in several local bonds in the late 1600s with the Elliots of Harwood, Stanedge and others. He was also served heir to his uncle Robert (through his mother’s side), Lord Jedburgh, in 1693. This included annual rents from Appletreehall, as well as many lands around Jedburgh. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1720, along with his son Ralph and their servant James Carre. He married his cousin Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, whose son Thomas succeeded to Cavers Carre; John, who succeeded his nephew Thomas and probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of Riddell; James; and Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Don in 1705. He secondly married Miss Home, daughter of Lord Kimmerghame and their children included: George, who became Lord Nisbet. John of Gateshaw (17th/18th C.) son of Robert. He was 11th and last Laird, selling the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1749. His eldest son Robert was also involved in the sale. John (c.1680–1741) 1st Duke of Roxburgh. He was a younger son of Robert, succeeding to the Earldom of Roxburgh on the death of his brother Robert in 1696. Among his possessions were those formerly held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, including the church lands of Lilliesleaf, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, plus the lands of Hassendeanbank, Cappitrig and Alton near Hawick. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1703. He became Secretary of State for Scotland in 1704. He helped bring about the union with England, and was created Duke in 1707 (the last Scottish peerage created) in relation to this. He was one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1707–10. He was also Keeper of the Privy Seal of Scotland and again Secretary of State for Scotland in the British Parliament. However, he opposed Walpole in Parliament and was dismissed from office. In 1727 he was one of the pall-bearers for Sir Isaac Newton’s coffin in 1727 and also served as Deputy High Constable of Scotland at the Coronation of George II. He had the teinds of Hassendeanbank from Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch in 1734, bought Cockerheugh from Walter Scott of Cockerheugh in 1737 and bought ‘Ladylands’ from Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1739. In 1745 he had the family valuables taken to Caverton Mill for safety while the army of Prince Charles passed through Kelso. He was succeeded by his only son Robert. John of Cavers Carre (d.1746) 2nd son of John of Cavers and Nisbet and Agnes Ker. He was an advocate. In 1742 he succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate after the death of his nephew Thomas. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748. He may have used the spelling ‘Carre’ for his surname. He married Elizabeth Monteith, heiress of Fox Hall. His children were: John, who succeeded; Robert, Captain in the Navy; Stair Campbell, army Captain; and Agnes. All of his children except John died unmarried. John Strother of Littledean (d.1779) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1739. In 1746 he married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Torwoodlee. He secondly... married Jean, daughter of Harry Maule of Kellie and widow of George, Lord Ramsay; she died in 1779. He thirdly married Frances, daughter of James Dean of Woodhouselee, widow of William Wishart (Principal of Edinburgh University) and of Dr. John Scott of Stewartfield. He was succeeded by his eldest son, Walter. John (d.1766), eldest son of John of Cavers, whom he succeeded to the estates of Cavers Carre and Hundalee. He paid the window tax in 1753. He and his son John were recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane Reid and their children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, in the East India Company’s naval service; Janet, who died young; and Elizabeth, who married William Riddell of Camiestown (and whose son Robert Riddell Carre would succeed to Cavers Carre). In 1763 he secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell, 4th Baronet; she died in 1806. John (18th C.) smith at Hawickshiel. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included Isobel (b.1758) and Thomas (b.1760). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Walter Scott and James Laidlaw. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiels in 1766. John (1740–1804) 3rd Duke of Roxburghe, son of Robert, 2nd Duke, he was known as a great book collector. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Hassendeanbank with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh. It is said that he was attached to the oldest daughter of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, but was unable to marry her, since King George III married her younger sister. He remained unmarried. He was appointed Lord of the Bedchamber, Knight of the Thistle, Groom of the Stole and Knight of the Garter. He collected valuable and curious books, and the sale of his collection (of about 10,000 volumes) led to the establishment of the Roxburghe Club. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of large amounts of land in Roxburghshire, in Ancrum, Bowden, Eckford, Hownam, Kelso, Lindean, Lilliesleaf, Makerstoun, Maxton, Morebattle, Oxnam, Roxburgh, Selkirk and Sprouston Parishes. In 1797–8 he served as chair of the Lieutenancy Committee in Roxburghshire. He sold his lands of Hassendeanbank to the Elliots of Minto in 1799. Probably the same John was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Hundalee Mill and other lands. He had no surviving children and after his death there was a dispute over succession; he was eventually succeeded by a distant cousin, John Bellenden-Ker. Capt. John of Cavers Carre (d.1798) eldest son of John and Jane Reid. He was a Captain in the army. He was still ‘of Cavers junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1766, and retired from the army, living at Cavers Carre and at Hundalee. In 1777 he had much of the old house at Cavers Carre demolished, but did not manage to have it rebuilt. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire (and supporter of the Conservatives). Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of Cavers Carre and other lands in Bowden Parish, as well as Bedrule Mains, Bedrule Mill, Corsecleuch and Fulton in Bedrule Parish, Belses Mill in Ancrum Parish and other lands in Jedburgh Parish. He was taxed for having male servants (both within Jedburgh and outside, presumably at Hundalee) from 1778–97, the number varying from 4 to 1. He was a bachelor in 1785–91 when taxed for having a female servant; in 1789 he was paying the tax at Hundalee. He was also taxed for having horses in the period 1785–97, in some years in Jedburgh as well as in Bowden Parish. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was Provost of Jedburgh and played a leading role in the politics of that burgh. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Alexander. However, a child called John ‘to John Carre Esqr. of Cavers’ was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1784, and was probably his child (perhaps illegitimate). John Strother of Littledean (1757–95) son of Walter, who he succeeded in 1789. He was a Major in the Scots Greys, died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (1834/5–65) son of Gideon, who was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Raw. He was born in Hawick and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School. He became an engineer with the Royal Navy. His ship H.M.S. Driver was wrecked off Bermuda in 1861, and then spent about a year on H.M.S. Racer off the coast of America during the Civil War. Partially deaf, he was invalided from the Navy, returning to 3 Bridge Street in 1863, but dying only 2 years later. An ‘ambrotype’ photograph exists of him in uniform and many letters from him to his family survive. Lancelot ‘Lance’ of Gateshaw (d.c.1543) son of Andrew. In 1510 he served as one of the sureties for his father, who was accused of murdering John Murray of Falahill. He was accused of 2 raids into England in 1515. In 1522 his tower at Gateshaw was burned by the English, perhaps in retaliation; he strengthened his pele and built ‘New Gateshaw’ nearby. He is recorded in documents of 1527, regarding tenements in Selkirk. Probably the same Lancelot is recorded in a land transaction in Selkirk in 1528 and as witness to others in 1529/30. In 1530 he was among Border lairds who came to Jedburgh to find surety for crimes for which they were responsible. In 1532 he had sasine for a piece of land in Selkirk and another for a tenement in 1533. He may be the Lancelot who wadset tenements in Selkirk in 1539. Also in 1539 he (along with his son George) was infief in the liferent of parts of Primside and Hownam as heir to his father Andrew. His brother ‘sir Peter’ acted as his attorney in 1539, when he paid rentals to William and Adam of Shaws. He is probably the Lancelot who witnessed a sasine for George Ker of Linton in 1541/2. In 1541/2 he sold a tenement in Selkirk and another for a tenement in 1533. Also in 1539 he (along with his son George) was infief in the liferent of parts of Primside and Hownam as heir to his father Andrew. His brother ‘sir Peter’ acted as his attorney in 1539, when he paid rentals to William and Adam of Shaws. He is probably the Lancelot who witnessed a sasine for George Ker of Linton in 1541/2. In 1541/2 he sold a tenement in Selkirk to Alexander Hall. He was a juror on a retour in 1542 and in the same year was in dispute with Mark of Dolphinston over the wardship of John Mow of that Ilk. In 1544 he was deceased when his heir was recorded as George of Gateshaw. He also had other sons, including Richard, who succeeded George. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ of Gateshaw (16th C.) probably son of Richard and grandson of the earlier Lancelot. He is recorded in 1587 when John Cockburn of Ormiston served as his cautioner. His brother ‘Markie’ was recorded in 1588 and 1588/9. Also in 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He is probably the Laird of Gateshaw listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1595 Andrew of Faldonside was surety for him not to harm Elizabeth Cranston, widow of Lancelot of Little Newton. He was a juror on a retour in 1600. He was probably succeeded by James. Lancelot (d.c.1593) recorded being in Little Newton in 1593 when John in Broomlands of Kelso had surety not to harm his widow Elizabeth Cranston. At the same time his brother George and some Ainslies had surety for not harming his widow. In 1595 Andrew of Faldonside was surety for Lancelot of Gateshaw not to harm his widow. He was ‘in Lyttill-Newton’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1593. He had first married Jane Dickson, whose will was registered in Edinburgh in 1578. Maria (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghie and brother of William, Master of Roxburghie. She married James Haliburton of Pitcur and secondly married James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk. In 1634 she was served heir to her brother William in many lands around Kelso, Sprouston, Maxwell-heugh, Midlem, Whitmuirhall, etc. Included in the list is a third part of the lands of ‘Altoun propo villain de Hawick’. Her sister Isobella was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. Mark of Dolphinston (d.1551) 2nd son of Walter of Cessford, younger brother of Sir Robert of Caverton. He was also referred to as ‘of Maxton and Littledean’. His sister married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He owned Borthwickshiel in 1502 when it was burned by a group of Armstrongs from Liddesdale. Also in that year he was fined for failing to enter into court several men to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver: Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule; William Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Bedrule; John Turnbull, called ‘Blue John’; Andrew Turnbull; Alan Davidson, ‘Taboner’, John Turnbull in Jedburgh; John Turnbull in Wells; and Adam Turnbull in Wells. Furthermore, in 1502 he also served as surety for John Oliver (who had been involved in some raids around the Jedburgh and Rulewater areas), was also surety for Robert and Ingram Olivers (whose crimes were several raids and 2 murders), was fined for not entering several men (including an Ainslie and men from Auld Roxburgh and Caverton) into the court and was surety for Adam Graham, son of the Laird of Little Newton, as well as other men. In 1505 he had remission (along with others) for crimes perpetrated upon John Rutherford and others. In 1507/8 he was witness to the document for Scott of Whitchesters relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1515 he headed a band of Kers and others who stole 200 cattle, 30 horses and took 40 prisoners from Redewater. He may be the Mark ‘of Cessford’ who in 1522 led a raid near to Warkworth, telling the Earl of Northumberland that they could ‘give him light to put on his clothes at midnight’, but apparently the group forgot to bring fire-lighting equipment and so they killed a woman there instead; in retaliation the Earl of Northumberland had Plendergast and Black Hill raided and burned. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who had a bond to assist the Earl of Angus. He was ‘of Littildene’ in 1529 when his son and heir Andrew had an instrument of sasine for lands in Oxnam. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep the ‘broken men’ and thieves in check. In 1530/1 he was witness to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being granted the hereditary office of Bailie of Melrose Abbey. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He is probably the Mark in Littledean recorded in 1534 along with his son Andrew; goods were seized at ‘erin heuch’, which belonged to his son and not to him. He was warded in Dundee in 1535. In 1539 he is recorded as the founder of the altar of the Holy Rood in Selkirk. In the early 1540s he served as a kind of deputy to the Warden of the Middle Marches, his name showing up many times in English letters. In 1542 he was said to have gone with his brother Dand and son Davie to Kelso Abbey and taken all of the King’s sheep that were there. He witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and William Cairncross of Colmslie in 1544. In 1545 he was ‘Mark Kar of Littleden’ among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. About 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. He was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at the Battle of Pinkie. In 1549 he was one of the Kerrs (along with Walter of Cessford and George of Linton) accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding his lands at Newark, as well as his lands in the lower Borthwick valley. In 1550 he resigned his lands in Lessuden to his 2nd-born son, John. In about 1501 he married Marjorie, daughter and heiress of John Ainslie of Dolphinston. His children included: Sir Andrew of the Hirsel; John; Mr. Thomas; William, recorded in 1550; Robert, a natural son, legitimised in 1558, who was given the lands of ‘Cammastoune’; and Janet, who married John Haitlie of Mellerstain. His testament is recorded in 1551. His direct descendant Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean lost a legal battle in 1812 to be declared the rightful heir to the Roxburgh titles. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1531 he gave up all claims to the lands of Philiphaugh, in favour of Robert Turnbull, tutor of Philiphaugh. Also in 1531 he had a precept of sasine read out in which Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him lands in Selkirk. Additionally in 1531 he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. He was probably the Mark who in 1530 headed a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from travellers they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. He was probably the Mark who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. In 1531/2 and 1532 he was a Bailie in Selkirk. He was probably the son of Robert and Elizabeth Gledstains recorded in 1533, when his mother gave up her liferent of a tenement to the church. His heir Thomas witnessed a document in 1535 and he himself witnessed a further document in 1536. He may be the Mark who purchased a husbandland (occupied by Alexander Scott) from Patrick Murray in 1536 and a maltkin and yard from Peter Porteous. He may be the same man as Mark of Kippieslaw. Mark of Kippieslaw (16th C.) recorded ‘in Kippie’ when he witnessed a court case in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he bound himself to discharge George Mitchellhill and William Bennet of contracts, as well as acts made with Melrose Abbey through John Scott in Thirlestane. He also witnessed a document relating to John Rutherford of Hunthill in 1535. Also in 1535 he and Robert Turnbull agreed to each hold half of the lands of ‘Philhop’ (but Philiphaugh is probably meant) until John Turnbull (son and heir of the deceased Ralph) came into entry of the lands; they held the wardship of John Turnbull and it seems that he received Robert Turnbull’s half ‘by reason of an omission of his marriage contract’. In 1536/7 John Turnbull of Philiphaugh (then described as his nephew) came of age, and appointed him as curator for his lands. In 1537 he renounced his claims over a maltkiln in Selkirk, in favour of Peter Porteous. He is listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mitag in 1539/40. In 1551 he acted as attorney for John Ormiston regarding lands in Smailholm. 1542 he witnessed a precept of sasine for Lancelot of Gateshaw. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street, along with several Kerrs and others. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in an undated document from the 1550s resigning lands in Midlem to his younger son Andrew. He and his son Robert of Lochtour were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his name appears as ‘Mark Ker of Kippieschaw’. It is possible he is the same man as the contemporary Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas in Kippieslaw, who is recorded in 1562/3, was his son and heir. An inventory of his ‘gudis and geiris’ was made in 1579, with his son Thomas and grandson Robert mentioned; he was at that time ‘seik in body and haill in mynd’. Mark ‘Markie’ (16th C.) brother of Lancelot of Gateshaw. In 1588 he and William of Hayhope were accused of wounding William Methven, minister of Langton. Mark (d.c.1569) described as ‘tutor...
Ker

of Graden’ when his will was registered in Edinburgh in 1569. He was surely related to other Kers associated with Graden. Sir Mark of Dolphinston (d.1607) son of Sir John of the Hirsel and Littledean. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He died without issue and his widow secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn. Mark (16th/17th C.) younger son of Walter of Littledean. He was probably trained the the priesthood, since he was known as ‘Mr.’ In 1588 he was appointed Commissary of Coldstream Abbey. He was also Commissary of Lauder and owner of the lands of Brotherstanes. His son Andrew was the first Ker of Morriston in Berwickshire. Mark (17th/18th C.) gardener at ‘Newtown Kerr’ in Bedrule Parish. In Edinburgh in 1712 he married Agnes, daughter of Edinburgh gardener John Weir. Matthew (15th/16th C.) agent appointed by George, son of Robert Scott of Whames in the action of 1505, where George claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton. Ralph of Primside Loch (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Cessford. However, he may be confused with the son of Thomas of Kersheugh and Ferniehirst. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker, fratiri Wateri Ker de Cesfurd’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands, the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who was a bailie appointed by Alexander, Lord Home, to infeft Andrew Ker (perhaps his father) in the lands of Crailling and Hownam in 1484, and also the ‘Radulpho Ker de Primsyd louch’ further directed in 1489. He is probably the ‘Rudulfo Car’ who leased the lands of Broadmeadows in 1488. Also in 1488/9, he and his brother Walter were directed by the King to infeft George Douglas, Master of Angus, in lands in Berwickshire. In 1491 he was mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Ruecastle and he and his wife were mentioned in relation to the lands of Middlestead. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker’ who acted as surety several times at the Justice-aires held in Jedburgh in 1493 and 1494/5, as well as at Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1494 he was ‘Radulphum Ker’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives (also agreed by his son Andrew and by William Turnbull of Minto, among others). In 1499 he was recorded as ‘Radulphus’ brother of Walter of Cessford in a document relating to George, Master of Angus. Also in 1499 he was tenant in Broadmeadow, Bailielee and half of Phaup in Ettrick. In 1501 he served as pledge for Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1501/2, along with his wife, he had the gift of the ward of ‘Hownum, Cesfurd, Cavalton and Primsid’ through the decease of Walter of Cessford; he is recorded as being ‘of Prymsidloch’. In 1502 he was surety for several Olivers and a Waugh who had killed Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelshop’. In the same year he was also involved in a respite with William Ker and James Elliot in ‘Quhitmer’ and Alexander and Patrick Gray in Greenhead, involving thefts by the Elliots. Also in 1502 he had a charter of appraisal for the lands of Falside in Jedforest after being yielded by George Douglas, Master of Angus for not delivering one of his tenants to court. Additionally he was also surety for the Douglasses of Swinside and for Lawrence Rutherford, as well as being fined for failing to produce a riever. He may be the Ralph ‘in le grenehed’ who was fined in 1502 for failing to enter Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He held the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. And in that year both William Scott in Fenwick and James Scott in Ashkirk had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Cauldshiel. In 1503 he had a financial agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done in Jedburgh, with the procurator being Gavin Douglas, Provost of St. Giles. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1509 he and his wife Margaret Rutherford sold lands in Heiton. Also in 1509 he was ‘de Prymsidlowich’ in an agreement with George Douglas, Master of Angus, done at his house of ‘Grenheid’. In 1510 his son Andrew was declared a rebel and his goods forfeited after he failed to appear for killing John Brown, assisted by William in Whitmore and his brother James. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the Erskines, over lands in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land within Synton, rights to take over the lands of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisbet. Another condition was that the Erskine’s would not sell any neighbouring lands to John Murray of Falahill (his brother-in-law), for reasons that are unspecified. He married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and secondly married Margaret Rutherford. His children included: Andrew of Greenhead and Primside; George of Cavers Carre, who was probably father of Thomas.
of Cavers Carre; William, Commendator of Kelso; and John, recorded in 1553. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Abbot of Kelso. He may be the same as Ralph of Primside (although it appears that 2 nearly contemporary men of the same name are sometimes confounded). In 1532 he was granted a tack of the lands of Cavers Carre by his brother Thomas. He married Marion Haliburton, and their armorial bearings were carved in stones saved from the old house and built into the new one in 1800. His eldest son was George. Ralph of Lintalee (16th C.) recorded having the tack of Lintalee in 1541. He is also recorded as juror on a retour in 1560. He was probably succeeded by James of Lintalee. Ralph (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Rafe Ker’, but it is unclear where he was from. Ralph (16th C.) entered into ward in England ‘for the bill of Newton’, with a bond given by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, sometime during the time of the Regent Moray. In 1573 he broke his ward and was with Lord Hay of Yester, with Sir Walter’s bond forfeited. It is possible that he was the Ralph, son and heir of Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws, who in 1581 married Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean; he was given most of Dalcove and Shaws, with his father keeping 2 husbandlands of Dalcove that were occupied by the Newton family. He could be the ‘Raulff Ker of Shaw’ who escaped from Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1590. In 1598 there were bonds to resolve a feud between him and Haig of Bemersyde. He was recorded as a juror in returns of 1600 and 1601. He is probably the ‘Raiff Ker of Scharis’ who signed (‘with our handis at the pen’) a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He may also have married Alison Ker of Primsideloch. Ralph (16th C.) servant of Mark Kerr, Commendator of Newbattle. In 1597/8 he was ‘Raulff Ker’ when his master complained that he had been attacked and captured by Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and ‘Jedwartfield’. Richard of Altonburn (d.1437/8) son of Robert and grandson of Henry (although these generations are confused). He had a charter for several lands from the Earl of Douglas in 1412. As well as Altonburn, he held ‘Wawtyswelys’ and ‘Quitebancode’, in the regality of Sprouston. He may be the Richard ‘Kere’ who witnessed an agreement between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn in 1432. He appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn in 1438 (even although Andrew appears to have been known as ‘of Altonburn’ before that). Richard of Gateshaw (d.1577) brother of George and younger son of Lancelot. He was named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, trying to end the family feud. In 1565 he was charged for disobeying the Warden of the Middle Marches. He had sasine for lands in Primside from Walter Ker of Cessford in 1566/7 and was inffefted as heir to his brother. In 1571 he entered into a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His children included: Lancelot; who succeeded; James; Adam; and a daughter, who married Elliot of Larriston. He made his will in 1576, registered in Edinburgh in 1577. Robert (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document appraising horses in Berwick in 1311/2. His name is given as ‘Robertus del Ker’. He may be an early ancestor of the Border family. Robert of Altonburn (14th/15th C.) probably son of Henry. In 1404 he had a charter for the lands of Smallholm and others from Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He had 2 sons: Richard, who appears to have died without issue; and Andrew, who succeeded after the death of his brother. Sir Robert of Caverton (d.1500), younger of Cessford, eldest son of Walter. In 1490 he had the lease of Bowerhope in Ettrick Ward. In 1490/1 he had a charter for lands in the Barony of Haldane. He is probably the Sir Robert who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492. He was an ambassador to England in 1492. He acted as surety at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh in 1493 and was also fined for non-appearance. And he was probably the Sir Robert who acted as one of the sureties in 1494/5 for Robert Langlands after the murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw, paying £20 when Langlands failed to appear. He was Master of the King’s Artillery to James IV and Warden of the Middle Marches. In 1499 he was tenant of Singlie, Erncleugh, Altrieve and Bowerhope, along with his father. He was murdered by 8 Northumbrians, who were imprisoned in Fast Castle until they died. He married Christian Rutherford of that Ilk. Since he died before his father the Cessford titles and estates were inherited by his son Sir Andrew. Another son was Thomas of ‘Marsingtoun’. Robert ‘in cavertoun’, recorded in 1502, may also have been related. He is sometimes said to have died in 1511, and even erroneously referred to as Sir Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the story going that in he was murdered by an English trio called Starhead (or Starked), Lilburn and John ‘the bastard’ Heron, this being used an excuse for King James embarking on the invasion that led to Flodden; it was said that Starhead was hunted out in York and had his head returned to Sir Andrew Kerr, while Lilburn was delivered to Scotland by the English King and Heron escaped in a coffin after spreading a rumour that he had died of the plague. Since the date of 1511 is incorrect, it seems unclear, unfortunately, how much of the rest of this good story is also factually correct; it seems to go back at least to John Pinkerton’s 1797 ‘History of Scotland’, where it appears under the year 1511, although it may be that Pinkerton meant that the capture of the murderers came to a head at that time. Robert (15th/16th C.) 4th son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn. He was Abbot of Kelso 1468–1506. He and his brother Ralph had sheep stolen from their farm at Cauldshiel by William Scott in Fenwick. Robert (d.bef. 1526) tenant in Sunderlandhall. He purchased Ashy-bank from Sir William Douglas of Cavers and sold it back to him in 1498. Possibly the same Robert ‘de Sonderlandhall’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor. Probably the same deceased Robert of Sunderlandhall was recorded in 1526/7 when his son and heir Thomas is mentioned in a document in the Selkirk Protocol Books. In 1530 his widow Margaret Hunter assigned lands near Selkirk to her 2nd son, James. Robert (d.bef. 1533) Burgess of Selkirk. In 1533 his widow Elizabeth Gledstains resigned her tenement and orchard into the hands of her son Mark and Bailie James Scott, to donate them to the chapel in Selkirk. It is possible he was the ‘Robert Carre of Selkrigge’ listed among men who were to mediate between Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus and his wife, Margaret, Queen of Scotland, in an agreement of 1517. Robert of Crookedshaws (16th C.) probably son of James of Linton. He is probably the ‘brother german’ of George of Linton recorded in a record in Selkirk in 1524. He was a Burgess of Edinburgh, having that right through marrying Elizabeth, daughter of farrier John Harvey. They had a son George. Robert of Graden (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Car of Greyden’ when he signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He is listed as ‘Robin’ in 1547/8 among the Kers who burned lands in Alemoor belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, the raid led by supporters of the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers. He may be the ‘Robin Ker, broder to the Lard of Fernherst’ who was said to have sided with Sir Ralph Evers at ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ (i.e. Ancrum Moor) in 1545. He was ‘Robert Carr of Grayden’ in 1544/5 when said to have been put to the horn for the slaughter of the Rutherfords. He may also be the Robert, brother of Walter of Graden, who witnessed a charter other Kers involving Primside in 1537. He is probably the Laird of Graden named in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; in the same bond there were arrangements made for addressing a broken marriage contract involving him, together with Rutherford of Hunthill and Ker of Newhall. He may be the Robert of Graden who was one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. Robert of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Mark of Kippielaw. He and his father were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. Robert of Newhall (16th C.) listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He had apparently been responsible for the murder of William Rutherford of Longnewton and was to come to Ancrum Kirk and offer his sword to George, son of William of Longnewton. He married Margaret Rutherford and had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Andrew, who succeeded to Newhall; and James and Robert, mentioned in relation to harassment of the tenants of Longnewton in 1595. Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1552 he was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Robet Ker, elder, burges of Edinburcht’ named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He is probably the ‘Roberte Carr sone to the Lorde of Grenehede’ listed in 1541 among Kers, Scotts and others who were accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas of Kippielaw. He is mentioned as executor for his grandfather Mark of Kippielaw in 1579. In 1581 he was involved with a transaction between his father and younger brother John, regarding lands in Bowden, Bewlie and Lilliesleaf. He was a servant to Sir Walter of Cessford in the period 1581–87. He is probably the Robert of Kippielaw who in 1594 was serry for Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch to answer a complaint against him by William Cranston, younger of that Ilk. He married Agnes Pringle. He may be the Robert ‘in Kippielaw’ whose son Robert became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1618. Robert (16th C.) son of Gilbert of Primside Loch. In 1581 he represented his father and their tenants in an agreement to pay the minister of Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) local cleric. He was titular Archdeacon of Teviotdale after the Reformation and is so recorded in 1582. He was minister at Linton, Mow, Yetholm, Morebattle and Hownam. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as lawful son to the deceased Thomas of Yair. His brother James had a warning to accept redemption money from Andrew of Yair. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1617 when he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Yair in their feud with the Scotts of Bonnington. Robert (d.1622) recorded as being ‘in Bewlie’. He was executed in Edinburgh for perjury. He had apparently been bribed to lie by Andrew Turnbull in Belses in a case of stealing he brought against the Midlemasses. Robert (16th/17th C.) portioner of Fairnington. In 1618 his son Andrew became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1621 his son John was among a list of associates of John Ker of Langnewton who were accused of attacking John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw and others. Sir Robert ‘Habbie’ (1570–1650) of Cessford and 1st Earl of Roxburgh, son of Sir William of Cessford. He was committed to ward in 1587 for incursions on the Border. He was knighted at the coronation of Queen Anne in 1590. Also in 1590 he killed William Kerr of Ancrum, part of the feud between the Kers of Cessford and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst; however, in 1591 he obtained a remission for his involvement. He was Deputy Warden of the Scottish Middle March from about 1594 to 1603, and assisted his father as Deputy Warden before that. He served as Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591–92 and Deputy Keeper in 1593. In 1594 he, along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, he had a commission to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was an extremely powerful Baron and carried on a great feud with the English Warden Robert Carey, although they apparently grew to respect one another after he was a prisoner of Carey’s at Berwick. In 1595 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to present Andrew of Newhall. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation between him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and Thomas of Cavers Carre over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 his sureties were Robert, Lord Crichton and Andrew of Romano Grange. He was a Privy Councilor in 1596 and 1599. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1600 when listed among leaders ordered to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. There is a document of about 1600 recording a challenge on him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, with the combat to involve only short swords; it is unclear if either party was injured, but it could not have been very serious. He was created Lord Roxburgh in 1600, accompanied James VI when he ascended the English throne, and was made the Earl of Roxburgh in 1616. He was Bailie of Kelso Abbey in 1602 and appointed his son as Commendator. In 1605 and 1606 there were formal apologies to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst (for the death of William of Ancrum) and compensation of 10,000 merks, which effectively ended the family feud. In 1606 he was served heir to his father Sir William, and in 1610 inherited further lands, including Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to the Baron in 1643 (probably to be regranted). In 1618 he was listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in Teviotdale and in 1619 was appointed with increased powers. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Cessford, in the lands of Cessford Mains in 1623. His Book of Family and Household expenses for the period 1619–30 shows much of what life was like for a wealthy Border Laird in this period. He was one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Walter Scott, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. He was Lord Privy Seal of Scotland in 1637. His properties are listed in the 1643 valuation roll for the county, including land in Hassendean (valued at £550), Lilliesleaf (valued at £1060), Ancrum (valued at £1970), Bowden, Eckford, Kelso, Lindean, Makerston, Maxton, Morebattle, Roxburgh, Smallholm and Sprouston Parishes. He took part in the ‘Engagement’ of 1648 and was deprived of the office of Privy Seal. He married Margaret Maitland and then Jean Drummond. His children were: William, who died unmarried; Jean, who married her cousin John Drummond, 2nd Earl of Perth; Isabella, who married James Scrymgeour; Maria, who married Sir James Haliburton of Pitcur, and James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk; and Henry, who married Margaret Hay, but died before his father. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir William Drummond, who changed his name to Ker. He died at Floors and was the first of the family to be buried at Bowden Kirk. He was effectively the last of the male line of Ker of Cessford. His daughters Maria and Isabella were served heir to their brother William.
in several lands in 1634 (including Alton near Hawick). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 along with ‘Lancie Airmestrang’ when they were claimed to be from his Majesty’s Guard when sent by the Scotts of Harden to remove Lady Bonnington from her house and lands at Newhouse on the Ettrick Water. He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) son of Andrew of Faldonside. In 1632 he was served heir to his father in the Mains of Feu-Rule, also called Hallrule, with the mill there, plus Deanside and lands in Bowden. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Perhaps the same Robert ‘of Fadenside’ was listed as owned of lands in Lindean Parish in 1678. Robert (d.1682) 3rd Earl of Roxburgh, son of William (who had been born Drummond). He was served heir to his father (as well as his mother) in 1675, inheriting a large amount of land in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including Alton near Hawick and the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk. He paid the land tax for property in Ancrum Parish, Ashkirk Parish and several other parishes in 1678, as well as the teinds of Lilliesleaf Parish and the Kirklands of Bewlie. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale (her mother being Jane, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch). His children included: Robert, who succeeded as 4th Earl; and John, who succeeded his brother. He may also have had another son, William, who was ‘brother-german to Roxburgh’ in the Durien Scheme list of 1695. He was lost at sea in the ship ‘Gloucester’ when it wrecked off Yarmouth Sands, while proceeding with the Duke of York from London to Leith. He is said to have cried out with an offer of money for a boat, and his butler tried to save him on his back, until grabbed by another drowning man. Robert of Newhall (17th C.) recorded as a member of the Committee for War in Roxburghshire in 1648. He is probably the Laird of Newhall whose deceased brother John had 2 sons who became apprentice merchants in Edinburgh: Andrew in 1630 and Archibald in 1632. Robert of Gateshaw (17th C.) 10th Laird, he was son of John. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire 1661–86. He was recorded in a bond in 1663. He represented the Hays of Errol in the funeral procession of Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburgh, in about 1675. His son John succeeded him and sold the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. Robert (d.1696) 4th Earl of Roxburgh, eldest son of Robert, 3rd Earl. He was served heir to his father’s extensive lands and titles in 1684, including lands previously held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, the lands and advowson of Lilliesleaf Kirk, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, and Alton near Hawick. He also inherited his grandfather William’s lands of Hassendeanbank and Cappitrig. In 1695 he was appointed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his younger brother John. Robert (d.bef. 1718) gardener in Hawick. In 1718 his daughter Janet married John, son of James Simpson and in 1721 his daughter Mary married cooper John Aitken. It is likely he had a son Robert, also a gardener, who married Jean Gledstains in 1721. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married gardener James Dunn (and for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1713), as well as Jean who married Walter White (for whom his son Robert witnessed a baptism in 1725). Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick, possibly son of Robert. In 1721 he (along with gardener James Dunn) witnessed a baptism for weaver Walter White and Jean Ker (perhaps his sister). In 1741 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James White. In 1721 he married Jean, daughter of William Gledstains of Kirklands. Their children included Isobel (b.1723), Patrick (b.1725), Margaret (b.1727), William (b.1729), Janet (b.1731), Robert (b.1735) and Adam (b.1742). In 1723 the witnesses were Walter Purdom and smith John Scott, in 1725 were William Gledstains (probably his father-in-law) and Bailie James Scott, in 1731 were William Tudhope and Robert Boyd, and in 1742 were ex-Bailie James Scott and junior mas- son Andrew Turnbull. He may be the Robert who (along with James Gledstains) witnessed a bap- tism for Adam Scott in 1726. He is probably the gardener of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Winthrope. He may be the Robert who was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions ‘east the water’ to help pay for the Teviot Bridge in 1740, and who served as a Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Robert (c.1709–55) 2nd Duke of Roxburgh, only son of John, the 1st Duke. He married his half-cousin Essex, daughter of Sir Roger Mostyn. He was succeeded by his son John (b.1740). He also had a son known as ‘Lord Robert’ (b.1747), who seems to have been made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh at the age of 2. He also had 3 daughters (none of whom married). Lt.-Col. Robert of Cockertoun (1747–1781) younger son of Robert, 2nd Duke of Roxburgh and brother of John, 3rd Duke. He was known as ‘Lord Robert’ and under that name seems to have been made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh at the age of 2. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He stood unsuccessfully as Roxburghshire M.P. in 1790, objecting to the addition of several people to the roll and the refusal of some of his supporters, claiming that he was ‘duly elected by a majority of legal voters. Thomas of Gateshaw (15th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of Altonburn, with his mother being a Douglas of Cavers. He was recorded as owner of Gateshaw in 1451, being the first Ker of those lands. He may also have owned part of Primside. He may be the Thomas who had a passport of safe conduct to travel with the Earl ofDouglas in 1451. He was probably ancestor of later Kers of Gateshaw, perhaps being father of James. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Adam of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. In 1489 he was retoured as heir to his father’s lands of ‘Sant Elene Shaw’, including ‘le Kyrk croft’, ‘Caponland’ and ‘‘Ger-land’, by Ralph Ker, bailie to George Douglas, Master of Angus. Thomas (d.bef. 1534) recorded in documents preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is possible that he was a son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. In 1514 George Ker, Vicar of Morebattle (and Canon of Glasgow) invested him in the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. About the same time he complained about his removal from the choir of Glasgow Cathedral. In 1516 he granted a dispensation to marry (within the usual bounds of consanguinity) to Ingram Elliot and Elizabeth Scott. He witnessed other documents in 1516 and 1520. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when he died, which was sometime before 1534. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) grandson of William. In 1523 he was granted his grandfathe’s lands of Stevinston in Peeblesshire from James Douglas, Earl of Morton. Witnesses included James and Robert Ker. In 1530/1 he gave sasine of his lands in Lindean. In 1531 he was in dispute with Patrick Murray of Falahill over the lands of Cranton Riddell. Also in 1531 he was an arbitrator for a feud between the Scotts and Veitches of Synton. In about 1532 he wit-nessed a marriage agreement between Gavin Elliot and Margaret McDougall. He could be the Thomas in Selkirk who in 1530 was part of a list of men from the Selkirk area who acknowledged that they had taken men, horses, meal and other goods from men they thought were traitors of Annandale, but understanding they were legitimate travellers from Moffat had returned all the goods. In 1532/3 he was witness to a request for an inquest into succession for the deceased John Scott of Roberton. In 1534 he witnessed a trans-action in Selkirk for John Waugh of Heap. In 1535 he promised to take down a dyke impinging on Selkirk’s North Common. In 1536 he delivered money to Andrew of Primsideloch for redemption of lands. In 1539 he complained that men from Selkirk had perambulated the boundaries of Yair (presumably while marking their Common). Also in 1539 he witnessed a bond between Scotts regarding the illegitimacy of Thomas son of Adam Scott and took sasine for lands in Sekirk. In 1542 he witnessed a precept of sasine for Lancelot of Gateshaw. He witnessed a document relating to Lord John Borthwick and Walter Ker of Cessford in 1543. He had an instrument for lands with James of ‘Myll’ (probably Molle). He married Elizabeth Crichton and was succeeded by his son William. Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) recorded several times in the period 1531–37 as ‘Master Thomas’, suggesting he was a cleric of some sort. In 1531/2 he was part of an inquest to rule on a land arrangement in Selkirk. In 1533 he declared that he was lawfel tenant of Sunderlandhall. In 1535 he promised to remove part of a dyke impinging on Selkirk Common. Also in 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherrfords and Homes. In 1536 he came to the market cross in Selkirk to represent his ‘brother german’ Walter Scott, requested the debt to be repaid by Andrew Shortreed on behalf of Adam Gledstains. His name appears to be scored out and ‘Thomas’ could be an error for ‘William’. In 1536/7 he wit-nessed a document for Marion Pringle, widow of Andrew of Primside. In 1540 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Linton and of Whitmuirhall and another for the Pringles of Whitten. In the same year he witnessed William Brydon resigning the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas, with with witnesses including Gilbert of Primside, George of Linton and Andrew in Auld Roxburgh. His son John was recorded in 1543. He may have married a Ker of Boghaugh and was probably succeeded by another Thomas. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) son of William or possibly Ralph. He was listed as ‘Thomas Ker of the Yair’ in 1564 when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was recorded in a dispute of about 1570, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was probably succeeded by his son William.
He is probably the Thomas of Yair who was deceased in 1581 when his lands in Selkirk are mentioned. His sons Robert and James are recorded in 1582. Thomas of Mersington (16th C.) son of James of Mersington. His lands were in Eckford Parish. He was recorded in 1557. In 1561 he was ‘eldest sone to James Ker of Mersington’ when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He, ‘his fader, bruder, and thair bairnis’ were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1590 Thomas of Cavers Carre was surety for Andrew of Linton not to harm him. He is probably the Ker of Mersington listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. He was also a juror on a retour in 1591. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. His will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1595. Thomas of Kippielaw (16th C.) son of Mark. He was recorded in Kippielaw in 1562/3 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1563 he was involved in deals for lands in Midlem, Bowden and Eildon, when his wife Bessie Ker is also recorded and he was also stated to be son and heir of Mark in Kippielaw. Additionally in 1563 his eldest daughter Margaret was one of 2 choices of wife offered to William Davidson by Walter Riddell of that Ilk. In the inventory of his father’s goods, he was listed as son and heir, with his own son Robert being next in line, and another son John being mentioned. In 1580 he received £30 in payment from Walter Scott of Headshaw for 10 bolls of oats. He was recorded in 1581 as grieve to Sir Walter of Littldean as part of a marriage contract with Andrew Douglas of Friarsshaw. In 1581 he was recorded in a financial arrangement with Andrew Douglas of Friarsshaw. Also in 1581 his 2nd son John renounced land in Bowden in favour of him, his wife Elizabeth and son Robert; in return he assigned the Kirklands of Bewlie and 2 acres in Lilliesleaf to his son John. He also had a daughter, Elspeth, who married Thomas Pringle. Thomas (16th C.) son of the Sir Walter of Cessford. He was presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1565, although these were very unclear times for such titles and benefices. He stayed in the office until about 1570, then it went to his father in the period 1570-72. After that when it passed to an unnamed person who was hostile to the Reformation and this was the end of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. Thomas of Dalcove and Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as son of the deceased Adam and brother of Elizabeth when he received sasine for his sister’s lands of St. Helen Shaw. Robert acted as bailie for the transaction and may have been related. He was a ward of Thomas of Mersington. He was mentioned in a transaction in Selkirk in 1580, involving the mill and lands of Shaws, and another involving a payment to him in Selkirk. He also witnessed other transactions in Selkirk in 1580. Also in 1580 he transferred ‘Schaw Milne’ from James Gowdie to Peter Sharp. He was recorded as Thomas of Dalcove in 1581, along with his son and heir Ralph, when they gave sasine of lands in Dalcove to Janet, daughter of Walter of Littledean as part of a marriage contract of Ralph with Janet. Additionally his son Ralph assigned to him 2 husbandlands in Dalcove occupied by the Newton family and he gave Ralph his lands of Shaws, reserving for himself a tenement in liferent. In 1583 he was served heir to his mother, Janet Newton in the town and Mains of Dalcove. He married Isabel Ker. David, ‘son of Thomas Ker of Schawis’ was recorded in a disturbance in Merton Kirk in 1598/9, along with ‘Thomas Ker of Dalcovie’ (suggesting this was a different Thomas). Thomas of Maisondieu (16th C.) received sasine of lands in 1580 from Thomas of Sunderlandhall. In 1581 he and his wife Isabel were ordered to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money. He married Isabel, daughter of George Ker of Cavers Carre; her will was registered in Edinburgh in 1591. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters. Thomas of Sunderlandhall (16th C.) perhaps son of an earlier Thomas. He is recorded in 1580, along with his wife Margaret Ker. He gave sasine of lands to Thomas of Maisondieu and his wife Isobel Ker, with his brother Robert mentioned too. Also in 1580 he was principle tenant of Sunderland when he admitted Patrick Gray as his tenant and also when he witnessed an instrument giving John, Lord Flemming, sasine of half of Sunderland. In 1581 he and his wife Margaret Ker warned Thomas in Maisondieu and his wife Isobel to appear at Lindean Kirk to receive redemption money, and they also gave sasine of a tenement in Selkirk to George Mitchellhill. Also in 1581 he paid redemption money to James of Yair and Thomas Elliot in Yair, and sold a house and yard in Selkirk. In 1582 he acted as cautioner for James in Yair. He may be the Laird of Sunderlandhill listed among Borderers who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. n 1600/1 he was cautioner for...
Ker

Gideon Murray of Elibank. He signed a bond to keep the peace in 1602. He may have been son of the earlier Thomas of Sunderlandhall. Thomas of Whitmuirhall (16th C.) perhaps son of John of Whitmuirhall and grandson of an earlier Thomas.
He was recorded in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. In 1581 he purchased lands in Dingleton from John Mabon; his wife Marion Ker is also mentioned in the agreement. Additionally he loaned money to Adam Marshall based on other lands in Dingleton. He could be the ‘Goodman of Quhitmuirhall’ listed in 1590 among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1590 his cautioner was Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh. Thomas of Cavers (d.c.1628) son of George, he was the 2nd Ker of Cavers Carre.
He succeeded since his older brother Andrew predeceased their father. He may be the ‘Thomas Ker sumtyme of Caveris’ who was listed as a traitor along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1571/2. In 1579 he witnessed transactions done at Riddell between the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Todrig and between Andrew Riddell and the Scotts of Todrig. He may have been the Thomas of Cavers who was recorded in the ‘pacification’
given to Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and his followers in 1581 and who also witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1590 he was acquitted of the stealing cattle from Englishman Richard Fenwick, was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents, was accused of not keeping his bond to enter a Scottish prisoner and served as surety for Andrew of Linton. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders and in the same year Patrick Murray of Falahill was his surety. In 1592 he was cautioner for the good behaviour of James Scott of Whithope; one of the signatories was his son and heir George. In 1594 he was temporarily imprisoned for not helping fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his supporters. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst with Sir Robert, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William of Ancrum. In 1596 he brought a case against Englishmen for raiding his lands. He is recorded in a discharge of 1597 and on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds about the same year.
In 1599 there was a complaint that the clerk of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire had refused to register letters of horning against him raised by a Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1600 he was on the ‘retour’ for Ker of Cessford. In 1601 Adam Scott ‘the Peck’ was hanged for stealing from him at Nether Whitlaw (as well as a long list of other crimes), and he also complained against other En-GLISHmen who had stolen sheep from him. Also in 1601 he was mentioned having about 8 years ear-erly been attacked and hurt as part of the feud between the Kers and Turnbulls. Additionally in 1601 he served as cautioner for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst to present certain Turnbulls of Bewlie and elsewhere at Edinburgh Tolbooth; his had to pay 2000 merks, which the Laird of Ferniehirst was ordered to repay. A letter from Turnbull to him in 1602 discusses possession of Fulton and mentions a number of tenants in that area of Bedrule. In 1603 he had a charter from James V for the lands of Cavers Carre and others.
Also in 1603 his brother John and other burgesses of Edinburgh served as sureties that after being freed from ward in Edinburgh Castle, he would pay his fines or re-enter; additionally his sureties to re-enter when requested were James Pringle of Galashiels, William Laude of Whitslaid, Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk, and his brother John.
In 1607 he was surety for James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. In 1611 he and his son George, along with Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst had complaints against them by Hamilton of Innerwick.
In 1620 he was involved in a dispute with the Cairncrosses of Colmslie, with his sons William, Andrew and Robert also mentioned. In 1623 he gained possession of much of the remaining lands of Bedrule from the Turnbulls, probably through defaulted loans, this included Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws, Speirmanlands and Ruecastle.
He was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire in 1628.
In 1618 his son Robert complained about being attacked by the servant of John, son of John of Jedburgh. He married Isobel, daughter of Riddell of that Ilk. They had at least 6 sons and 2 daughters, including: George, who succeeded; Robert;
Janet who married William Turnbull of Bedrule;
Grisel, who married Robert Straiton of Straiton Mill; William, recorded in 1631, along with his own son, Walter; Mark; and John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to George Haniburton in Pinnacle, he lived at Langnewton. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew of Ox-nam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. Sir Thomas of Cavers Carre (1593–1681) son of George. He was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in 1629. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longmorn of taking his teinds. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the 'Confessions of Faith'. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is recorded as owner of part of Samieston in 1643 as well as lands in Bedrule Parish valued at £1565, consisting of the Town of Bedrule, Menslaws, Corgiecleuch and Fulton, and also lands of Belses in Anrcrum valued at £291, as well as lands in Bowden, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes. In 1644 he was commended, along with Sir William Scott of Harden, for helping organise the tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to repel the (Royalist) forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and in 1643–44 and 1648–49 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He also held the lands of Stanedge, Lurgiescleuch and others in Hobkirk Parish in the 1640s. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He held lands in Abbotrule (as well as Kelso) according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was recorded in a discharge of 1663. He became Baron and Laird of Bedrule in 1668, perhaps earlier. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He paid the land tax in Ancrum, Bedrule, Bowden, Jedburgh, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes in 1678. Also in 1678 he was served heir to his deceased son Andrew’s lands and baronies, including the Barony of Bedrule and lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth; his Bedrule lands were valued at £1632 in 1678, and included land formerly belonging to Turnball of Bedrule. These lands were later conveyed to John, son of his brother, John of West Nisbet. Also in 1678, 1679 and 1680 he had discharges for annual rents in Selkirk. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir John Riddell of that Ilk, but she died in 1635. He may then have married another woman, whose name is not known. In 1638 he re-married to Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfirrane, and she died in 1682, aged 85. His children included: Sir Andrew, son of his 1st wife, who succeeded to Cavers Carre; Isabel, who married Hugh Scott of Gala; Grizel, who married Patrick Home, Lord Polwart; Margaret, who married Alexander Haliburton of Newmains and secondly Alexander Wedderburn (and also possibly Matthew St. Clair of Herdmanstoun); and Elizabeth, who married James Erskine of Shielfield. Another daughter may have been Christian, who married Francis Scott of Mangerton. He may have also had a son James, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1632. Thomas of Kippielaw (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1631 when his brother Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Dryden in 1726. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for William Loraine, resident of Borthaugh. Thomas of Cavers (1724–40) son of Robert and grandson of John of Cavers. In 1738 he succeeded his grandfather. He went abroad for his health with a tutor, but died at Naples. His uncle John succeeded to Cavers. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1856–1932) writer of ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’, ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’, and many poems, such as ‘Roond Aboot Hawick Moat’ and ‘Under the Shadow of the Moat’. He was born in Kelso, but raised in the schoolhouse of Drumlanrig school in Hawick, where his father James was head teacher. He trained as a draper and then worked in the hosiery trade, with John Laing’s and then Pringle’s, where he was a traveller. He was a keen sportsman, particularly of cricket, rugby and cycling. He played in the first official rugby game in Hawick, a match with Langholm in 1874, and captained the Greens 1877/8 (being only the second Captain) and 1880/1, as well as acting as club secretary. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward for 12 years from 1900. He was a great Common Riding supporter, being Secretary of the Committee 1908–23, as well as Treasurer for many years. He was also a founder member and first President of the Callants’ Club; he was additionally responsible for honouring the annual dinner guest with an acrostic verse. He was a member of Lodge 111, writing their history in 1898, and acting as their Bard. Enjoying singing, he was a member of Hawick Choral Union, and sung some of his own compositions at gathering of the Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club; ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’ would be later transcribed from memory by Adam R. Grant, and ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot
Ker

Meat’ recovered from notes found after the death of Adam Grant (senior). He also wrote episode 7 of the 1914 Pageant, based on the story of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press and the Border Magazine, often using the pseudonym ‘Tee Kay’. In 1889 he married Isabella, daughter of James McDonald and Isabella Luke, who was from Melrose. Their children were: William, ‘Bill’ (1895–1917), who died in WWI; Edith, ‘Ede’ (b.1897), who married Jimmy Russell from Peebles, a motor engineer and great friend of Jimmy Guthrie; Ronald, ‘Ronnie’ (b.1898), who emigrated and never returned to Hawick; Ruby (b.1903), who married an Alexander and spent time in India; and James, Ralph and Thomas who died in infancy. His wife appears to have suffered from mental health problems and died in Dingleton. He had a second family with Janet McDonald in Edinburgh, consisting of Thomas McDonald (b.1912), a daughter who died at birth and another daughter who was given up for adoption. His poetry is collected in the book ‘Some Thought of Mine in Song and Verse’ (1924); it contains 66 poems and 26 acrostics. He also wrote ‘Short Historical Sketch of Hawick St. John’s Lodge of Freemasons’ (1892). Late in life he moved to Edinburgh and then to Glasgow (to be near his daughter Edith), where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, with the epitaph ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’ on his gravestone. Walter of Caverton and Cessford (d.1501) 2nd son and successor to Andrew. In 1450 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to William Douglas of Cavers for the lands of ‘Blackpule’ in the Barony of Cavers; he was there stated to be son of Andrew of Altonburn and grandson or nephew of Douglas of Cavers. He witnessed a charter for James, Earl of Douglas in 1454 and another for William Douglas of Sunderland in 1465. In 1471 he was son and heir of Andrew when he took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. In 1472 he was (along with Andrew of Cessford and David Scott of Buccleuch) appointed bailie for the Earl of Angus in order to give sasine of certain lands in Liddesdale to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1473 he had conferred upon him the Bailliary and Justiciary of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1474 he had a charter of the lands of Cessford, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, Primside and others, which had been resigned by his father, confirmed in 1481. In 1475 he founded a perpetual chaplainry in Kelso Abbey. In 1479 his niece Margaret resigned the Barony of Cessford to him, as well as the lands of Fel-Rule and others. In 1483 he was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1484 his brother ‘Radulpho’ was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1488 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh. Also in 1488 he was a commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. He had several passports of safe passage in England and concluded a truce with England in 1494. In 1489, along with James Riddell of that Ilk, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1493. Also in 1493 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. Also in 1494 he was a Commissioner on the Border, as recorded in an indenture at Coldstream. In 1494/5 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and also served as surety for several people. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1498. In 1499 he was Sheriff of Dumfries when he witnessed the sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus gaining his local titles. Also in 1499 he had a charter from James IV for the site of the ruined castle and town of Roxburgh. In 1501 he and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain compounded the fines of 25 men (mainly Rutherfords), according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1502 Adam Scott had remission for several crimes, including burying and pillaging farms pertaining to him on the waters of Borthwick and Ale. His sons were Sir Robert and Mark of Dumphinston and Littledean. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir Andrew. A younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch (and was previously married to Philip, eldest son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells). Sir Walter (d.1584) of Cessford, son of Sir Andrew. He is mentioned (along with several local Scotts) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs/Kers and the Scotts. As part of the arrangement one of his daughters was supposed to marry a son of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was among the Lairds of the Borders who submitted themselves to the King in 1530 to keep better order. In 1531 he was granted his father’s lands of Hassendeanbank by the superior, William Cunningham, the ceremony taking place at Hassendeanbank. Also in 1531 he had a sasine for his father’s lands of Hownam Mains. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was Warden of the West Marches in 1536 when he bound himself to keep Edgerston Castle and to apprehend Robert Rutherford. In 1538 he was convicted (along with James Douglas of Cavers and others) of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’, thereby breaking an earlier ‘band’. In 1536 he resigned the lands of Hassendeanbank to the Baron, William, Earl of Glencairn, and then had a sasine for them (along with his wife) in 1545. In 1537 he granted the lands of Primside to James, son and heir of George of Linton. In 1541 he was tenant of Windydoors in Tweed, as well as Bowerhope in Ettrick. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In about 1544 he was recorded as Bailie of the lands of Kelso Abbey. In 1544 he was removed from office as Warden of the West Marches, accused of plotting with the Earl of Angus, assisting the English, and using the office for his own ends. He was among the local Lairds listed as having given pledges to the English in 1544. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 250 of the 500 soldiers who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Cesfoorth’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he was gifted the bailliary of Ashkirk by the King, but in the following year burnt much of the Ale valley in retaliation for Scott of Buccleuch’s force attacking Ferniehirst and Cessford. In 1547/8 he and other Kers supported the English at the Battle of Pinkie and in burning lands of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh for this, but released to sign a bond of loyalty along with the Scotts. In 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to be able to post summonses against him, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others at market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assisting the English in carrying out destruction; this specifically included the raiding of farms in the lower Borthwick valley, ‘clois tyme of harvist, of the cornis, cattell, guidis, geir, insicht, barnis, byris, biggingis, peilles, places, stables, howss, and duelling places’ pertaining to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. There was a further complaint that he had stolen goods from Scott of Buccleuch at Newark. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1550 and was reappointed in 1559. He was implicated in the murder of the same Sir Walter Scott in 1552, along with several other Kers and accomplices; in 1552 he pleaded for mercy to the Privy Council on behalf of the Kers, saying that they had been put to the horn, had their goods seized and were being pursued by the Scotts. In 1553 it was decided not to mete out further punishment and in 1553/4 he led a group of Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers and was also part of another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Also in 1561 he was reappointed as Warden of the Middle March. In 1562 he and his son (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was the first man who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. A letter is preserved from 1563 in which, as Warden of the Middle Marches, he authorised a certain Englishman to travel without harm. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his son William with Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1564 there was a list of Borders lairds who swore to support him, with proclamations being made at the mercat crosses of Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick and Selkirk. In 1564/5 he led the signatories of the bond with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his supporters, to end the family feud (partly over the slaying of the previous Sir Walter of Branxholme), promising to go to St. Giles Kirk and ask forgiveness on his knees from God and from the Laird of Buccleuch for the murder of his grandfather. In 1565 his lands at ‘the Burnes’ were raided and burned, with 2 of his servants killed, by a group of men from Lidlesdale; this embroiled him in the ongoing feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he had 2 of his own servants warded in England for crimes committed by servants of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and John Rutherford of Hunthill, this included a servant called Thomas Ker. In 1567 his son Thomas had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was an opponent of Mary Queen of Scots and fought against her supporters at Langside in 1568. In 1569 he was surety for Gilbert of Primside Loch and John Rutherford of Hunthill was directed to relieve him of a debt. Also in 1569 he held part of the benefice of Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1569 and 1571/2 he was one of the men to sign bonds to suppress the Border thieves. He supported the Regent Moray at Langside in 1568.

and fought for the young King at Leith in 1571. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He served as cautioner for ‘Hekky’ Armstrong in 1573 and separately for a group of Elliots, as well as being surety for the Bishop of Dunkeld in 1576. In 1576 he had a ‘decreet of transumpt’ for the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1577 he wrote to the Regent Morton about the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and Kers. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfordfs. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop the feud between him and his son William, and the Rutherfordfs of Hundalee, Hunthill and Edgerston, plus the Bailies of Jedburgh, George Douglas of Bonjedward and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1582 he was the main signatory of a bond to heal a feud among the Kers, instigated by the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton by Kers of Graden and Davisons. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst; in 1560 she was ‘dame Ysabel Ker lady of Cesfurd’ when she purchased quarter of the timber from Melrose Abbey. He was succeeded by his sons Sir Andrew and then William. His other children included Thomas (Archdeacon of Teviotdale), Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Hunthill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). His wife, Dame Isobell, was ‘tutrix’ for their grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1586 (as well as that of his wife ‘Dame Isobel, elder, relict of Sir Walter Ker’).

Walter of Littledeean and the Hirsel (d.c.1598) son of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. He was probably the Walter of Dolphinston who witnessed an instrument regarding land in Mellerstain in 1550. He was a servitor of the Governor of Arran 1545–46. He was listed in 1552 among the men claimed to be involved in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as son and heir of Andrew of Hirsel in 1553/4 as one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. In 1561 he was Walter of Dolphinston (son to Sir Andrew of the Hirsel) when appearing before the Privy Council. He is the ‘Wat Ker of Dolphingtoun’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford, and who was also listed among Borderers to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. In 1567 he was of Dolphingtoun among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Robert Ker, younger, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1568/9 he is listed as being ‘of Dolphingtoune’, son and heir apparent of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel, in the bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his eldest son John is also mentioned being contracted to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the ‘Watt’ of Dolphinston who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Walter of Caverton as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Borthwick Mains in 1575. In 1576 he was surety for William Ker, younger of Cessford and was also involved in a dispute with others, including the Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he complained to the Privy Council about the Haitlies and others. In 1581 his daughter Janet received sasine of lands in Dalcove from Thomas of Dalcove (as part of a marriage contract with Ralph, heir to Dalcove) and he received payment in redemption for the annual rent of Dalcove. He signed the 1582 bond between various Kers, following the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, 1588 and 1591. He was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain ‘bills’ of English complainant. In 1590/1 he was subject of a case before the Privy Court for non-payment, his son Mark appearing for him. In 1596 his sureties were his son Andrew of ‘Mylnnerg’ and James, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1551 he married Euphemia, daughter of John Edmondson of that Ilk. His children included: Sir John of Littledeean, the Hirsel and Jedburgh; Mark, Prior and Commendator of Coldstream, and ancestor of the Kers of Morriston; Andrew; James; and Robert. They are mentioned in a case brought against them by Julian Home, divorced wife of John of the Hirsel, to not molest her in her agreed liferent of the lands of Littledeean. Walter of Lochtour (16th C.) son of Gilbert and brother of Andrew of Greenhead. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. Walter (16th C.) witness to a Hawick sasine in 1622 for Allan Deans. He is described as ‘ianitore’, i.e. a porter. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew and brother of George of Faldonside. In 1598 he had a bond not to harm the Halliburtons, while the Halliburtons had a bond not to harm him or his 4 brothers. In 1599 there were assurances for him and his brother George not to harm a writer in Edinburgh. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622, along with his father James of Bewlie and his father’s servants Andrew Turnbull, Thomas Leithead, John Wight and Robert Winthrope. There was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Walter of Faldonside (d.1664) probably son of George of Faldonside. He is recorded in a dispute with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1622. He died without issue and this line of Kers became extinct. Walter of Littledean (d.bef. 1739) son of Andrew. He married the heiress of the family of Strother of Fowberry in Northumberland. He may also be the Ker of Littledean who married Jean, daughter of William Elliott, merchant in London, and grand-daughter of Gilbert of Stobs. His children included: Andrew, who had an illegitimate child with his maid, but died before his father; John Strother, who succeeded; Barbara, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum; Katherine, who married John Blackadder of St. Leonard’s; and Robert, who became an apprentice to the Lord Provost of Edinburgh in 1734. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Cowan in Borthaugh and for William Telfer in Borthaugh. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1758). The witnesses in 1751 were: Margaret (b.1749); James (b.1755); and Mary (b.1791).}

Zare’ when he witnessed a financial agreement in 1795. He also owned Nenthorn and East Bolton in Northumberland. In 1805–12 he was one of the 4 people who claimed succession to the Dukedom of Roxburgh. He was descended from the heirs male of the 1st Earl of Roxburgh. He lost the legal battle and this is supposed to have ruined him. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1797 he married Jane, daughter and heir of Matthew Forster of East Bolton. His children were: Walter Forster, last of the male line; Matthew, who died young; Thomas Collingwood, who died without issue; Eleanor (d.1861), who married William Gray of East Bolton; and Essex, who married John Edward Gray, her brother-in-law, and is said to have been the original for ‘Di’ Vernon in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Rob Roy’. Walter Forster of Littledean (d.1841), son of Walter. He was a Brigade-Major in the 9th Regiment and died in Madras. Thus ended the male line of Kers of Littledean. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1494/5. In 1502, along with James Elliot (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, he had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William Elliot and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Additionally, in 1502 Walter, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was accused of stealing a grey horse from him (but had remission for this and other thefts). William of Mertoun and Yair (d.bef. 1512) younger son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He was tenant in the King’s lands of Yair in 1469 and re-granted the lease in 1476. He was witness to a sasine in 1471 for the lands of Borthwickshielis and Harden Wood. He was also referred to as being ‘de Martoun’ (Mertoun, in Berwickshire). In the period 1486–1499 the lands of Yair were let to him and his son William, with his son to have both steadings if he visited the Roman court. In 1493 a man obtained remission for stealing sheep from him. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood and Adam Cranston in Oakwood each had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Yair. In 1494/5 he served as surety for William Stable in Yair, as well as William Turnbull and James Hall in Selkirk. Also in the same year John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing sheep and cattle from his farm and tenants at Yair. He was also tenant of Williamhope as recorded in 1477 and 1499. In 1503 he was ‘de Zare’ when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. He continued to have the lease of Yair until at least 1504. He witnessed a bond between Turnbulls at Caerlenschrig in 1505. In 1505 he was appointed as Coroner and Serjeant of the county of Selkirk. He had a charter for the lands of Boithhill in Peeblesshire in 1507. In 1511/2 he was ‘in Yare elder’ when he witnessed a document in Selkirk. His wife was Christian. His son and heir was probably also William, and may have died at Flodden. William (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of the Laird of Cessford. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale, recorded in 1491 and again in 1510/1. However, it is unclear if he was ever confirmed in the office. William (15th/16th C.) son of William of Yair and Boithhill and grandson of Andrew of Cessford. He leased the Crown lands of Yair along with his father from 1486. In 1499 he had a lease for Yair, along with his father. In 1509 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor; he was there described as ‘juniorem de Zare’. By 1512 his father was deceased when Yair was leased to him and his mother Christian. He was probably succeeded by his son Ralph. Thomas of Yair was recorded in 1528, and surely related, perhaps grandson. This is the family commemorated in Melrose Abbey by the description ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. It is possible that he died at Flodden. He is probably the William in Yair who was deceased in 1532 when his daughter Margaret leased land from David Pringle in Yair. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Schaw’ in 1528. He claimed that James Murray had a false sasine for his lands of Shaw in Selkirk. His only son and heir Adam gave sasine to John Scott for lands in Selkirk. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1529/30 and was mentioned in another document in 1530, along with Adam of Shaws. In 1530/1 he and his son Adam sold their rigs in Selkirk to John Morlaw. In 1531 there is a document in which John Aitchison owed him money. In 1533 he and his son Adam sold a couple of tenements in Selkirk. In 1534 they were ‘of Sanct Helyne Schaw’ when they sold 2 separate halves of a tenement. Also in that same year he is recorded at ‘the tower of St Helyne Schaw’ when James of Mersington gave a letter of obligation to them. In 1535 he and his son sold a tenement to William Currier. In 1539 he resigned a tenement to Hector Newton and another in 1540 to James Doby; Janet ‘in St. Helyne Schaw’ also gave her consent and may be his daughter. His son may be the Adam who, with his mother Marion Pringle, received non-entries in 1539/40; in that case his wife was Marion Pringle. William (16th C.) recorded in ‘Quhitmureha’ (i.e. Whitmuirhall) in 1531 when he witnessed an agreement between Scotts and Veitches regarding Synton. James in Whitmuir was also listed and probably related to him. In 1533 he assigned part of ‘Quhitmureha’ to his ‘beloved cousin’ John; Bailie Mark and Robert, Vicar in Lindean, were the witnesses. He also witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. In 1535 he was on an assize for a dispute involving Rutherfords and Homes. He was probably deceased by 1540 when Janet Ker, widow of William of ‘Quhitmureha’ made an agreement along with her son William and George of Linton. William (d.1566) probably son of Ralph of Primside. He was Commendant of Kelso Abbey in the period 1559–66. In 1563 he witnessed a sasine for Spittal-on-Rule, sold by Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of ‘Primsyde-loch’ (probably his cousin). He could be the same as the ‘vmquhile William Ker of Zair’ recorded in 1574 as a surety for a bond between William Douglas of Cavers and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘William Karr brother to the said Master George’ who in 1541 was offered by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. He was murdered in 1566. William of Yair (d.1572) probably son of Thomas. He married Christian Pringle and had 2 sons and 6 daughters, including Andrew who succeeded. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1582. Sir William of Cessford (c.1543–99/1600) 2nd son of Sir Walter. He was ‘younger’ in 1569 when he served as surety for John Elliot of the Park. He may have been the Sir William of Caverton recorded in 1571, when he served as cautioner for 4 inhabitants of Hawick. He was ‘youngar of Cesfurd’ in 1571/2, when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was surety for William Douglas of Cavers, James Gledstains of Cocklaw, John Graham of Little Newton, Hector, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, and several others, who were swearing allegiance to the Crown and not to help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He was still younger in 1573 when he was surety for presenting an Elliot. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with Turnbull of Bedrule over lands in Nether Ancrum. In 1577 he was involved with disputes with Davids and Taits. In about 1578 he and his father were involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was younger of Cessford in 1581, and recorded as Warden of the Middle March and Keeper of Liddesdale, when he was bound for the re-entry of Armstrongs and Elliots. He was also Warden and Keeper in 1583 and again from 1585, assisted by his son Sir Robert. He was also Provost of Jedburgh and Keeper of Jed Forest. He inherited Sir Walter’s lands, including Hassendeanburn and Cappitrig. In 1583/4 he was Warden when he headed a list of Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1585 he was among the noblemen listed as having their forfeitures lifted. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He was listed as Bailie Principle of the Barony of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf in 1589. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. In 1590 the King ordered that he or his son Sir Robert would be Provost of Jedburgh for as long as they were Warden of the Marches. He was Warden of the Middle March in 1590/1 when a case was brought against the Scottish Wardens, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his cautionsman. Also in 1590/1 his cautioners were Andrew of Faldonside and Andrew of Linton that he would not reset Sir Robert (younger of Cessford), who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of William of Ancrum. He served as a Privy Councillor in 1592 and was a Commissioner for the King in actions involving Spain in 1588 and the Jesuits in 1589. He served in Parliament in 1597 and 1599. In 1562 he married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was widow of James Tweedie of Drummelzier. In about 1588 he secondly married Jean Johnstone, widow of Alexander, Lord Abernethy. He succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert who became 1st Earl of Roxburghe. Other children included: Sir Mark of Ormiston; Margaret, who married Sir William Scott of Harden (as his 2nd wife). William of Linton (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ in 1612, when the Lord Advocate listed a large number of men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. He may have been related to Robert Kerr of Newton, possibly even his son. Rev. William (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton, his mother being Elizabeth Ker. His elder brother was James of Linton. He was minister at Lindean from 1569, deprived around 1599, but still mentioned as Vicar in 1606. He may also have been Bishop of Lismore in Ireland. In 1619 there was a complaint against him and his wife regarding a contract between them and Archibald Ker, Bailie of Bowden and his son George; he and his wife were ordered to be apprehended and have their goods seized for non-appearance. He married Marion Steill and their children included James, M.A. William of Linton (16th/17th C.) son of George of Linton. He was recorded in 1625 along with his son Andrew inflicting Robert Pringle in lands in Clifton. His wife’s name is unknown and his children included: Andrew, who succeeded; William; Mark, portioner of Clifton; James; and Margaret, who married Sir William Scott of Harden (as his 2nd wife). William of Yair (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew. He is recorded in 1619 when he was still ‘younger’. There was a complaint before the Privy Council that he ‘ryding on ane little naig upon the head of the water of Reule’ when James Loraine in Appotside threatened him with a hagbut, which misfired, and he only escaped being fired at again when some others intervened. He was still ‘appeirand of Yair’ when directed in 1621 to apprehend some rebels for the murder of his cousin James Dalmaho. He is probably the William ‘fiar of Yair’, whose son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1625. He is recorded along with his son Andrew in 1633. The Kerrs of Yair are buried at Melrose Abbey. William of Linton (17th C.) see William Kerr. Sir William Kerr of Greenhead (d.1721) succeeded his brother Andrew as the 3rd Baronet of Greenhead in 1676. He paid the land tax in several parishes in 1678. He was fined for supporting Covenanters in 1684, but was also in that year one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In 1684 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh. In 1688 William, son to his deceased butler, William Ker (who may have been a relative) became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1686, and again in 1702 and 1706. He was thus a member of the last Scottish Parliament, and voted for the Union. He then served on the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 and 1704 and Colonel of the eastern regiment of militia (appointed in 1689). His brother Gilbert is recorded in sasines in 1710 and 1712. Following his death there was a legal challenge in 1726 between his grandson (also Sir William) and Walter Scott of Whitfield, William Scott of Thirlestane and Walter Scott of Woll. William ‘Bill’ (1895–1917) eldest child of Hawick poet Tom. He became an apprentice at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at the age of 14. He enlisted in 1914 and became a Corporal in the Lothian and Border Horse. He was killed in action at Salonika in Greece. He is buried at Sarigol Military Cemetery and is listed on the Royal Bank’s War Memorial in Edinburgh (see also Kerr).
Ker

Kereti (ke-re-tee) n. Gerard (d.1363) canon of Amiens, and councillor to the King, who also held the Rectorship of Hawick. In 1346 he obtained papal permission not to be ordained for 7 years, in order to enjoy the ‘living’ of several parishes. He was canon of Amiens and clerk and councillor of King Philip VI of France (who lost the battle of Crécy that same year and died in 1350). It is unclear whether he was in France during this period. His brother Henry, Rector of Villers-en-bois in the Diocese of Amiens had the same petition in 1346. He may be the same ‘Guido Kieretti’ (or ‘Quiret’) who was Archdeacon of Glasgow over at least the period 1342–61 (also spelled ‘Kerete’).

kerlin (ker-lin) n., arch. an old woman – ‘Still puirtith, wi’ her poochless kernes, Will damn wi’ night’ [JoHa].

Kerr (ker, kawr) n. Abraham W. (19th C.) clothier of Kerr & Mackenzie, 72 High Street. This could be the premises of the ‘Mr. Kerr’ recorded near there on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Charlotte, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson, and later re-married. Adam (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with William Miller, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. Alexander Boyd (1810–67) younger son of Gen. Thomas William, his grandson Alexander Nairne would succeed to the Abbotrule Lairdship. He was born in London (when the family still owned Abbotrule). He had a military career with the 24th Madras Native Infantry, ending as an Honorary Colonel. He was involved with suppressing the rebellion at Coorg in 1837. In 1838 he married Jane Helen Campbell, daughter of Lt. Gen. Alexander Murray MacGregor and Lady Charlotte Sinclair. Their children were: John MacGregor, whose son would succeed to the Abbotrule title; Charlotte Sarah Fanny; Amelia Margaret, who died young; Helen Isabella Ramsay, who died unmarried; and Charlotte S.F., who married J. Pringle, surgeon of the East India Company; and another who died in infancy. He retired to Edinburgh and is buried in the Cannongate. Alexander Nairne ‘Alec’ (1882–1964) elder son of John MacGregor, born in India and educated at Marlborough. He joined the Army in India and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel; he also served in East Africa in WWI, for which he received the Military Cross. He was also a keen sportsman. He became the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin William in 1919. He married Eva Theresa Wayne and their only child John Kinloch became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1405) son of Thomas. He was Cup-bearer to King Robert III. He married a daughter of Edmonson of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.c.1450) son of Thomas. He accompanied the Earl of Douglas to Rome in 1450. He is mentioned by Thomas the Rhymer. He married Jean, daughter of Crichton of Crichton and was succeeded by his son Ralph. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1488) son of Ralph. He married Mary, daughter of Herbert, Lord Herries. Their children included: Thomas, who succeeded to Kersheugh and may have been the first of Ferniehirst; and John, ancestor of the Kerrs of Greenhead, Chatto and Sunlaws. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of Ferniehirst (d.c.1545), son of Thomas of Smailholm and Margaret Kerr of Ferniehirst (although other accounts say he was the eldest son of Thomas of Ferniehirst and Catherine Ochiltree). He could be the ‘Andream Ker de Vuercraling’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He served as surety for Simon Young in Roughlee in 1493, as well as Adam Kirkton. He was ‘Andream Ker de Farnyhryst’ in 1494 when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1501/2 when he held the half Barony; William ‘Elwald’ was there described as his follower (perhaps acting as his Bailie). In 1502 he was fined for failing to produce Patrick and Philip Turnbull in court. In 1502 he served as surety for David Oliver (‘Nae Guid Preist’) in ‘Stryndis’ (probably ‘Strange’ in Rulewater) who had a remission for several raids around the Jedburgh area; he was also surety for another David, Robert, ‘Little John’, Matthew and Martin Oliver, all in the same place. He was also surety for Jedburgh men in 1502, as well as for his brother William. Additionally in 1502 he resigned lands in Oxnam to John Fawlaw of Soflaw. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. In 1509 he resigned part of the Barony of Oxnam. In 1510 he was involved, along with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch, in an indenture with the Erskines, Barons of Synton. He witnessed the 1512/3 charter of Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill. In 1526 he was involved in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’, where he supported the Earl of Angus and others against the Scotts and Elliots, who tried unsuccessfully to capture the young James V. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. He was mentioned (along with several local representatives of the Scott family) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs who were briefly imprisoned for not keeping thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliots and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1538. In 1541 he claimed to hold the lands of Ashiestiel in feu. He became Bailie of Jedburgh Forest in 1542. Documents of the early 1540s give him and his son Robert the rights to various lands, as well as the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1544 he and his son John were taken prisoner by the English during a raid on Rulewater. He swore fealty to Henry in order to be released, and sided with the English army in 1545. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth and had at least 7 children, including: Thomas, who pre-deceased him; Sir John, who succeeded; Janet, who married George Turnbull of Bedrule, and secondly married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Isabel, married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; Christian, married Sir James Douglas of Cavers; Margaret, who married James Menzies from Perth and secondly a Hay of Smithfield; and Robert of Ancrum, whose family carried on the Ferniehirst title after Sir John’s line died out. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrew Karr man to Robine Elliott’ in 1590. He was accused of being in a group led by William of the Steele who stole livestock and prisoners from Catton in England. Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (d.1631) 1st Lord Jedburgh, eldest son of Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst. He was ‘younger of Farnieherst’ in 1583/4 on a list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. His curators were William Douglas of Cavers and Robert Ker of Ancrum. He succeeded to Ferniehirst on the death of his father in 1585. In 1587 he served as surety for Rutherfords and Frasers, that they would appear before the Privy Council. In 1587/8 he had a charter confirming the bailiary of the lands belonging to Jedburgh Abbey (which had been held heritably by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him). In 1588 he was on a list of Borders ‘masters and landlords’ ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He was involved in an ongoing feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird who was accused of being responsible for a group of 100 men raiding part of Tynedale in 1589. In 1590 his servants John Chalmers and John Kirkcaldy were killed, leading to bonds by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch not to molest him, and by 1595 he had a contract affirming he was satisfied that Scott had made amends. Also in of Ferniehirst who held a 'wadset' in 1606 with Teviotdale 1600–03. He is probably the Andrew disbursing money. He served as Warden of West servitor James Turnbull of Hobsburn is recorded ordered to pay the penalty. Also about 1601 his cautio her Thomas Ker of Cavers were ordered to produce 'Eckie Turnebulle of Stanyleg' and he avoided trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the le- dered to enter 'brokin men and utheris, inhab- itants of Liddesdale'. In 1594 he and his brother Thomas were denounced as rebels for a bond they made with Sir Robert Ker, apparent of Cessford. In 1595 he inherited half the Barony of Feu-Rule from his father Sir Thomas. In 1595/6 there was an interim reconciliation of him and Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre with Sir Robert Ker, younger of Cessford, over the murder of William Ker of An- crum. In 1596 he had a bond for the good be- haviour of several Kerrs and others; in 1602 he failed to appear to answer for many of them who were at the horn for murder and other crimes in Jedburgh. In 1597 he sat in Parliament as a min- or baron. His initials, and those of his wife, were inscribed at Ferniehirst Castle in 1598. He was listed among leaders ordered in 1600 to appear before the Privy Council to give advice about peace on the Border. He acted as Captain of the King’s Guard and Commissioner of the Mid- dle Shires from around the time of the Union of the Crowns. He was also Provost of Jedburgh during the slaying of his brother Thomas by a band of Turnbulls in 1601; several Turnbulls were convicted in a protracted court case, including a counter case against him and several Kerrs and other supporters for killing and maiming some of the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the le- gal system was somewhat stacked in favour of the Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). In 1601 he was found to have failed to produce ‘Eckie Turnebulle of Stanyleg’ and he and his cautioher Thomas Ker of Cavers were ordered to pay the penalty. Also about 1601 his servitor James Turnbull of Hobsburn is recorded disbursing money. He served as Warden of West Teviotdale 1600–03. He is probably the Andrew of Ferniehirst who held a ‘wadset’ in 1606 with Walter Scott of Todrig for the lands of ‘Harden- head’. In 1615 he had a remission for the murder of several Turnbulls and other crimes taking place while he was a Commissioner. In 1619 he was re- corded as Captain of the Border garrison, with Sir William Scott of Harden as his Lieutenant. He was created Lord Jedburgh in 1622 and in- herited served lands from his father in 1625. He served as an Extraordinary judge of Session and a Privy Councillor. In 1629 he is recorded gaining the Barony of Feu-Rule (as well as other lands) as heir to his deceased son, Sir Andrew, but died himself soon afterwards. In 1631 he granted a confirming charter for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1584 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Andrew Stuart, Master of Ochiltree. He had a son who died before him, as well as 6 daughters, and was succeeded by his half-brother James of Crailing. His children were: Sir Andrew of Oxnam, Master of Jedburgh (d.1628); Margaret, who married Sir John Macdowall of Garthland; Jean, married Thomas Kennedy of Pinwhirrie; Alison, married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Anne; Mary; and Lilias, married a Mc- Culloch. Sir Andrew of Oxnam (d.1628) Master of Jedburgh. He was son of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, but died before his father. As heir- apparent of his father, he was referred to as ‘Mas- ter of Jedburgh’. He held land in the Rule valley and specifically the Barony of Feu-Rule. He be- came owner of the lands of Appotside in 1610. He appears to have removed Robert Elliot ‘in Gled- stains’ in 1610, not accepting him as a ‘kindly tenant’. He had a ‘contract of wadset’ for the lands of Templehall and Brewlands with George Turnbull in 1612. In 1615 he had remission for the slaughter of Hector, son of Walter of Bewlie at Lilliesleaf about Martinmas 1604, and of Hec- tor Turnbull of Stenedge in 1611. It seems likely he was acting as an agent of the Commissioner for the Middle Shires, Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. However, there appears to have been an ongoing feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbulls. He was appointed Captain of the King’s Guards in 1618 and was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in the same year. In 1619 ap- pointed as a Commissioner for Teviotdale, in the absence of Robert, Earl of Roxburgh. In 1622 he still sat on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. He was also one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He married Margaret Kerr, 3rd daughter of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian; she was widow of Lord Hay of Yester, and usu- ally called ‘the Lady Yester’. He had no issue, and in 1629 his lands of Ashiestiel were inherited by his father. His funeral procession was elaborate, with a great number of local lairds carrying banners and other regalia from Jedburgh Castle to the Kirk. Andrew of Sunlaws and Chatto (d.1661) son of the first James of Chatto, and uncle of John of Chatto and Sunlaws. He is easily confused with a nearly contemporary Andrew of Chatto. He purchased the lands of Chatto, Sunlaws, etc. from the Earl of Traquair after John of Chatto and Sunlaws had been forced to sell them. He was a supporter of the Commonwealth cause in Scotland, who was made Sheriff and Commissary Depute for Teviotdale. In 1649 he and Sir William Scott of Harden wrote an account of the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, which was published in 1908 as part of Walter MacFarlane’s ‘Geographical Collections’. He was captured by Scottish Royalist forces in 1653 and brought to Borthwickbrae by a small force under Sir Arthur Forbes, who were pursued by an English Commonwealth force. There was a skirmish at Philip, where he was released, but run through the thigh by an English trooper in the struggle. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wright of Gladwood. His children were: Joan; Christian, who married his cousin, John of Chatto; and William, said to be ‘a weakly boy’, who was served as his heir in 1678. Andrew of Chatto (1628–1705) son of Sir Thomas of Redden and Jean Ker, daughter of James of Chatto. He married Isabella, daughter of George Cranston of Bold, who died in 1675 aged 36. He secondly married Agnes (d.1718), daughter and coheir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. His children were: George (1657–88); Andrew of Chatto (1661–1702); James (1664–65); John (1665–95); Thomas (1657–1714), goldsmith in Edinburgh, whose son James of Bughtrig was M.P. for Edinburgh; James (again, 1669–1712); William (1673–1731), whose son William was a Bailie in Kelso; Jean (b.1659); Agnes (1671–763); Isabella (1675–75; Robert (b.1678); Charles (1680–bef. 1759); and Henry (b.1682). He was ancestor of the Kerrs of Buchtrig and the Haie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) son of Mary Kerr and John Kerr. He inherited half of the lands of Fodderlee through his mother. Andrew (18th C.) farmer at Hudshouse and Singdean. In 1755 all the stock from his farms was sold off and the Duke of Buccleuch advertised for a new tenant. It is unclear what happened to him afterwards. Andrew (18th/19th C.) servant at Stobicote, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Andrew was servant at Newton in Kirkton Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Andrew (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a carter in Newcastle. In 1841 he was at about 9 South Liddell Street and in 1851 and 1861 at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Turnbull and their children included: William (b.1816); Isabel (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); John (b.1823); Andrew (b.1826); Robert (b.1829); Mary (b.1835); and Betty (b.1838). Andrew (1826–1900) born in Castleton Parish, son of Andrew and Helen Turnbull, he was a farm worker. He was a ploughman at Grenhill Cottage in Ashkirk Parish in 1861, farm Steward at Greenhill in 1871, agricultural labourer at New Belses in 1881 and farm worker at Old Belses in 1891. In Lilliesleaf in 1853 he married Catherine, daughter of Andrew Gray. Their children included: Andrew (1854–1930); Jane Isabella (1857–98); Walter Sturrock (1861–1924); and James (b.1867). Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquess of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. In 1642 she and her sister Jean were served joint heirs to their father in many lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. She married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. Her sons included Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian and Charles of Abbotrule. Charles (d.1690) 2nd Earl of Ancrum, son of Robert, the 1st Earl and his 2nd wife Anne Stanley. He sat in the Scottish Parliament as a Peer 1671–81 and was said to be a Parliamentary speaker of note. He sold Ancrum to Sir John Scott of Kirkstyle in about 1670. In 1678 and 1680 his lands in Abbotrule were valued at £572 and those in Hobkirk at £300. He married in 1662 and had a son who died before him. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother’s family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotsrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father’s lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1674...

he was part of the dinner party at Swanside, after which James Douglas of Cavers was murdered by Andrew Rutherford (for which he was tried and executed). He is said to have spent much time in London and received a ring from King Charles for having the best manners at Court. In 1678 he paid land tax on £300 in Hobkirk Parish and £572 in Abbotrule Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr Charles Kerr’ who was listed holding the teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1666 he married Cecily (or Cecil), only daughter (by his 2nd marriage) of Patrick Scott of Langshaw and Ancrum. His children were: William, the eldest son, who succeeded to Abbotrule; Charles (b.1669), who died young; Robert (b.1671), who also died young; Patrick (b.1673), who farmed at Lustruther, and was mentioned in his brother’s entail; Cecily (b.1670); and Margaret, who appears to have been his daughter who married John Scott of Gorenberry. His son William was served as his heir in 1680 (which may have been while he was still alive). Little else is known about him. Charles (c.1734–56) 5th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of William. He succeeded to the Lairdship in 1752 when still quite young. He entered the service of the Honorable East India Company, probably being introduced through Col. Elliot of Wells. After receiving a commission in 1754, he died only 2 years later, it is said in the defence of Calcutta. Since he died without children, he was succeeded by his brother Patrick. Charles of Wells (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. It is unclear how he was related to other Kerrs. This was probably the ‘Wells’ near Jedburgh (where he paid the Land Tax in 1771). Charles (1767–1821) 7th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of Patrick. He was educated at the Royal High School in Edinburgh. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to David Erskine and became a Writer to the Signet in 1789. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott at school, and was to serve as the inspiration for ‘Darsie Latimer’ in Scott’s ‘Redgauntlet’; some of their correspondence was published in ‘Walter’s Postbag’ (1932). In 1792 he succeeded to the Abbotrule estate, which was probably already in debt. In that year Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed stayed with him on the way to their first ‘raid’ into Liddesdale. He is recorded in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of Abbotrule. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. In 1811 he was recorded as owner Gatehousecote, parts of Grange (formerly possessed by John Elliot) parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford (formerly possessed by George Dickson and George Elliot), Doorpool, Midquarter and ‘The Parks of Abbotrule’; together they were valued at about £1100. He married Mary Ann Thompson from Peel, Isle of Man, who was only 16 at the time; he was on the island to escape creditors. He was known for debts, gambling and duelling, and fled to Jamaica, where he worked as a clerk. In 1792 he returned to claim his inheritance following the death of his father. He immediately sold off Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester, but for some reason the sale was never completed, and he had them back again. In 1804 he also had a stable block built, bearing his initials. He purchased the neighbouring farm of East Fodderlee in 1806. He joined the Roxburghshire Cavalry and became recruiting officer. By 1800 he had fought 4 duels and purchased a commission as Paymaster of the 68th Regiment of Foot (the Durham Light Infantry). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In about 1814 he arranged to sell the unenclosed slope of Bonchester Hill to George Cleghorn of Weens, but desiring to change the deal at the last moment, it fell through; he blamed Cleghorn for this and is said to have had all the trees cut down on the hill to spoil the view from Weens. He then returned to the army and was Paymaster for the Royal Dragoons, perhaps serving at Waterloo. He sold East Fodderlee in 1815. In 1818 he was forced by his creditors to sell all of the Abbotrule estate (to Robert Henderson), ending his family’s connection with the area, although the Lairdship passed to son Patrick and still survives in name today. His children included: Margaret (b.1790), who married John Oliver, younger brother of William Oliver Ruthford of Dinlabyre; Mary Anne (b.1795); Patrick (b.1796), who succeeded; and William (1800–23), who died at Penrith. He may also have had an additional daughter. He died at Weymouth only 3 years after selling the estate. Charles (d.1835), M.D., younger son of William, who bought Gatehouse. He was Assistant Inspector of Hospitals for the Army Medical Department and was knighted for his services in 1822. In 1801 he purchased his brother’s estate from his creditors. After retirement he lived at Corbethouse, while he allowed his brother to live at Gatehouse. In 1835 he bequeathed his estate to his nephew William. Rev. Charles Alexander Gray (1933–) educated at
Kerr

Kerr was retiring in 1986. Christian Hawick 1967–9. He went on to become a Priest in Birmingham and then Rector in Musselburgh, retiring in 1986. Christian of Chatto and Sunlaws (18th C.) eldest surviving daughter and heir of William. She was known as ‘Lady Chatto’. She extended the house at Sunlaws and had a new one built at Chatto. She married her cousin Charles Kerr, but they had no children. She left the estates to her distant relative William, son of Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frodgen. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1787/9) from Denholm, she was a grocer in Newcastle upon. In 1852 she was listed as a shop-keeper in the village. She was also called ‘Hunter’, which was probably her married name. She lived at about 22 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 she was living with Betty Hutton or Waugh, and in 1851 and 1861 with her niece, also Betty Kerr. George of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebattle Parish in 1526. He witnessed a charter in 1535. A transaction with George Ker of Linton in 1540 makes it clear that he probably the same man as George, son of Robert ‘in Cruikitschaws’ (i.e. Crooked Shaws). He made a pledge to serve the English King (along with many Kers and others) in 1544. He may be the ‘Johnne Ker of Corbethouse’ listed in 1553/4 among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then James. George (d.c.1579) described as ‘in Hetoun in Teviotdale’ in 1579 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. George (d.c.1580) described as ‘in Redden’ in Sprouston Parish in 1580 when his will was registered in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers associated with Redden. George of Lintalee (17th C.) recorded as ‘George Kerr of Lintly’ in 1628 when he was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of Lady Isobel Kerr, wife of William, Viscount Drumlanrig, when she was buried in Edinburgh. In 1628/9 he was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh; there he is ‘of Lintilly’. George (17th C.) described as portioner of Forderlee in 1631 when he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lessuden. He was ‘of Fotherlie’ when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1643 (with James Ker, who may have been related). He must have been related to the others Kerrs of Forderlee. George (18th C.) servant to the Douglases of Cavers in 1755. He married Isabel nichol and their children included: Betty (b.1752); Margaret (b.1755); Nelly (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1759). George (d.1782) resident of the Kirkwynd. His death registration records him as ‘George Kerr Kirkwind’. He could be the George who married Betty Aitkin (also from Hawick Parish) in 1763. He seems likely to be the George who is recorded in 1811 as previous owner of the lands called ‘Allers Garden’ (then owned by John Scott), which seem likely to have been in the modern Allars Crescent. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1822 he married Helen Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their son James was baptised in 1824. George (19th C.) married Margaret Lambe in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. Gilbert of Gateshaw (b.1749) son of William and Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge. His father was the Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburgh, who purchased Gateshaw from Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1758, bringing it back into Ker hands. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1780 he was ‘younger of Gateshaw’ when added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. Around 1800 he took over as factor of Wells estate from his uncle Gilbert Eliott of Otterburn. This also meant he was given the key of Gibraltar, a memento of his relative Lord Heathfield, which he took back to Gateshaw when he retired about 1818. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hood of Stoneridge, Berwickshire. They had 9 children: William, who succeeded his uncle, Sir Charles; Lieut. John of the 19th Regiment, who died in Ceylon; Gilbert of the Royal Navy; Thomas, merchant, who died in Jamaica; Jane; Eliza; Cecilia; Margaret, who married Francis Brodie; and Agnes. It is said that his large family resulted in financial problems, so that Gateshaw was purchased from his creditors by his brother Charles. James of Corbet (16th C.) son of George and brother of Andrew, who he succeeded. His estate was also called ‘Corbethouse’ and included the tower of Gateshaw. He was listed as being ‘of Corbithows’ in 1560 when he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. His father Andrew of Corbethouse, had been killed by John Rutherford of Hunthill and his friends as part of this feud. As part of the arrangements to resolve the feud his daughter ‘Haufie’ was to marry William, 2nd son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1561
he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was also listed as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scots and the Kerrs. However, he was one of the men involved in signing the further bond between the Kerrs and the Scots in 1568/9; he is also listed there as being 'of Corberthous'. He may be the James in Corbet whose son John witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1582. In 1588 and 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the ‘James Karr laird of Corbett’ recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with an Englishman. His sons John and Andrew were among men accused in 1590 of theft and reset from Woodend, with his sons John and James being accused in a separate case in 1590. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Keiton. He was succeeded by his son John and also had a daughter Lilias (who married a grandson of the Earl of Bothwell). James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst, He was among Kerrs and others who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. James of Chatto (d.1615) 3rd son of Kerr of Grenehead. He may be the ‘James Carr of Grenehead’ who was a deputy of the March Warden recorded in 1583; however, it is possible there are 2 generations of Jameses here. He is recorded as son to the Laird of Greenhead in 1586 when instructed to enter into court his servants George Middlemas and Archie Elliot. He could be the James ‘sone to the Laird of Greenhead’ who was named in the complaint by the Hones of Wedderburn against the Kerrs of Littledean in 1593. He became the 1st Kerr Laird of Chatto after purchasing the lands there in 1595. In 1612 he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging too much interest on loans. He later bought other lands, including Sunlaws from William Rutherford in 1614 and Hangingshaw, Gartshawfield and Pennymuir near to Chatto. He married Christian, sister of Sir John Stewart, Earl of Traquair. His children included: James, the eldest son, who succeeded; Andrew, whose daughter Christian married her cousin John; Margaret, eldest daughter, who married Andrew Scott of Aikwood; and another daughter. His widow remarried to William, brother to Sir Robert of Ancrum. In 1622 some men were accused of stealing some of their cattle from ‘Hakkerstonne’. James of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1631) eldest son of James of Chatto. He was said to be extravagant in habits and left debts for his successor. He married Joan, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. He was succeeded by his son John and also had 3 daughters. In 1625 his ‘son natural’ James became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Sir James of Oxnam and Crailing (d.1645) succeeded from his brother Thomas, being served heir in 1603. He was son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Janet, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was half-brother of Sir Andrew, Lord Jedburgh, and succeeded to the title of Lord Jedburgh, although he did not assume it (perhaps because there was a more valid heir, their distant cousin, James, grandson of William who was full brother of Andrew Lord Jedburgh). His family were in reduced circumstances compared with the times of his father. In 1611 he had a charter for some of the lands in Roxburghshire forfeited by Lord John Maxwell. In 1619 he complained that more than 100 men came to Oxnam Moor, breaking up most of the turfs that had been cut for him there and taking away the rest; this was presumably a dispute over the rights on common land. In 1620 he had a charter if lands of Belses, conferred on him by Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee (his father-in-law). In 1622 he was stated to be Captain of the Guard to the Privy Council for the Borders. He is probably the Sir James ‘of Craebinhall’ whose servant William Scott had a son who became an apprentice in Edinburgh in 1628. He served on Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1630. He is probably the Lord Jedburgh who granted a deed to the lands of Barnhills in 1633 (hence had superiority over these lands). He was also known as ‘of Hundalie’ having inherited that estate from his wife Mary, daughter of James Rutherford of Hundalee. His children included: Robert of Crailing, 3rd Lord Jedburgh; and Jean, who married John Ker of West Nisbet. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzie’) Oliver, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Janet (b.1793) and James (b.1796). James (b.c.1800) green grocer at about 73 High Street. His wife was Elspeth and their children included Elizabeth and James. James Alexander eldest son of John Kinloch, he is the 12th Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Alice Gibbs. James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1840). Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. She married George Turnbull of Bedrule, who died shortly before 1528. In 1530/1 she married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (as his 2nd wife). She held a third of the lands of Bedrule from her first husband. She received the ‘liferent’ of the Lordship of Jedforest as part of the marriage contract with her 2nd husband. Because they were ‘second and third of affinity, thriddis of consanguinity, and thrid and ferd of affinity’ they had to ask for special permission from the Pope. In 1546, as part of the marriage contract she was required to come to Lilliesleaf Kirk to received a sum of money; she protested that she was in dispute with Walter at that time (perhaps it was during the divorce) and would not accept the money. However, this marriage ended in divorce, with no children.

Sir John (d.1562) of Ferniehirst, 2nd and succeeding son of Sir Andrew. He was son of Andrew when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for the Kers of Dolphinston in 1529. In 1538 he was Chamberlain for the Crown’s lands of Jedforest, and was still Chamberlain in 1539, with the returns made by his brother Robert. He served as Depute to his father, who was Warden of the Middle Marches, being recorded in this role in 1541. In 1542/3 he had to appear to answer the charge of murdering Sir John Striveling of Keir. In 1544 he was taken prisoner by the English, along with his father, following a raid on Rulewater. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He served as Bailie of Jedburgh Abbey’s lands in 1546 and was Bailie of Jedforest both under the Crown and the Earls of Angus. He was probably the ‘lard of Fernyherst’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1547 and 1548 there are records of several bonds (with Elliots, Armstrongs and others) for entering prisoners with him at Ferniehirst. In 1547/8 he was one of the Kers who was accused of supporting the English at Pinkie, and of ravaging the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme later in 1548. This included the farms of Goldielands, Todshawhill, Whithope, Wiltonburn, Borthaugh, Todshawhaugh, Wilton Green and Whanes. He was knighted in 1548. He led a force that recaptured Ferniehirst from the English in 1549, from which event the motto of the Kerr’s of Abbotrule derives, ‘J’Avance’. It is also sometimes suggested that this event is the origin of the ‘Jethart Baa’, the balls representing the heads of English soldiers. A chronicler of the time describes how they butchered the entire French garrison of Ferniehirst. He was part of the feud between the Scotts and the Kers; in 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to post summons against him and others at the market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assistance of the English in carrying out local destruction. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was knighted in 1552. He was indicted for his part in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552, along with several other Kers and his brother-in-law James Douglas of Cavers. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. Also in 1553/4 his estate was given to his sons Andrew and William, following his non-appearance to answer charges of murdering Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1557 he complained to the Regent about the behaviour of the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule raiding his lands. He purchased the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 he (and his son Sir Thomas) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. There was a decree of 1562 at his instigation, against the ‘invaders’ of his lands of South Synton. In 1561 and 1562 he raised a court action regarding disputed lands in Feu-Rule, in which he claimed half the Barony and 2/3 of the other half, resulting in a ‘decreet of division’ with Agnes Herries. He appears to have acted as some kind of assitant Warden, since there are several bonds with him in the late 1550s and early 1560s for the capture of thieves. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. Their children were: Sir Thomas of Oxnam and later Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married John Hay, Lord Yester; Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lundin; Andrew of Nethergogar; William, Parson of Bedrule; and John. In 1562 it is recorded that the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially the Parish of Hobkirk) was divided between him and Agnes Herries. John of Shaw (d.1688) brother of Andrew of Kippielaw, he lived at Hyndhaughead in Southdean Parish. In 1665 at Smailholm he married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Etthal. Their children included: Margaret (1666–90); Alison (1668–1725), who married Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee and was probably mother of Alison who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest; Thomas, Robert and Marie, who died young; William (b.1679); and Marie (again, b.1681). He died at Hyndhaughhead and is buried in Southdean Kirk. John of Chatto and Sunlaws (17th C.) son of James and Joan Murray. He was forced to sell his estates to his great-uncle the Earl of Traquair, although they were later bought by his uncle Andrew. He married his cousin Christian, youngest daughter of Andrew Kerr. His children included Henry, who married Miss Wauchope of Edmonstone, and whose daughter Barbara married Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and had a son who became William Scott-Kerr of Chatto. John of Gogar (17th C.) received the ‘ward and non-entry’ of the lands of Whitslade in the period 1663–72. John (1665–95) 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto and Isabella Cranston. He is said to have died at Hawick, so he must have been related to Robert of Foderlee, presumably either his nephew or cousin. He was recorded being ‘off fotherlie’ in 1690 among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Foderlee) and Bessie Kerr (who may have been related to him). He is probably the ‘John Ker in Fotherlie’ recorded in Abbotrule Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John ‘of Foderlie’ whose will is recorded in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) servant of Walter Pringle, proprietor of Roughheugh Waulk Mill. In 1713 the Bailies heard a ‘process of riot and assassination’ against him, brought by Alexander Buchan, surveyor of ale in Hawick. John of Cavers Carre see John Ker. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Miller and their children included: William (b.1779), botanist; Andrew (b.1791); and Robert (b.1793). In 1816 he made a declaration (included in the Hawick Parish birth records), along with James Miller (labourer at Northhouse), stating that his son William had been born in Hawick in 1779. John William Robert (1794–1841) 7th Marquess of Lothian, son of William, 6th Marquess. He was styled Lord Newbottle until 1815 and Earl of Ancram 1815–24. He expanded his family estates, including acquiring Bonjedworth, Timpendale and other lands. He was a Conservative politician, serving as M.P. for Huntingdon and was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in the House of Lords. As Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire he was charged with keeping the peace during some of the troubling elections of the early 19th century. In July 1841 he entered Hawick with a troop of dragoons who had been waiting at Hassendeanburn in order to quell the near riots. He married Cecil Chetwynd-Talbot and was succeeded by his sons William Schomberg Robert and then Schomberg Henry. John MacGregor (1839–1915) born in India, only son of Alexander Boyd, his son was to become the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule. He joined the East India Company in 1856 and served with the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, eventually becoming a Commandant in the Army. He retired as a Colonel after serving for 32 years. He married Janetta Margaret Nairne of Dunsinnan House, who reached the age of 100. Their children were Janet Frances, Alexander Nairne (who succeeded to the Lairdship), Ida Margaret, Lorraine MacGregor and Evan Sinclair. He was very keen on shooting, fishing and golf. A portrait exists of him as a child, as well as later photographs. John Kinloch (1924–94) only son of Alexander Nairne, he became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his father, although the family had long ago sold the estate. He followed the family tradition into the Indian Army and was seconded to the Singapore Police after WWII. He married Janet Barbara Ferguson and their children James, Andrew and Rosemary were born in Singapore, with Georgina following after their return to Britain. Loraine MacDowall (19th C.) eldest son of Gen. Thomas William Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He was born in Ceylon, served in India with the 65th Native Infantry, retired as a Lieutenant and became a merchant in Edinburgh. He married Mariane White and they had 4 children, with William Alexander succeeding to the Abbotrule Lairdship title. Margaret (c.1570–1645) daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian. She first married James Hay, 7th Lord Yester and then remarried to Sir Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. She was thus known as Dame Margaret, Lady Yester, and was founder of Lady Yester’s Church in Edinburgh. She still owned land in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1643. In her will she left money for the poor and schoolmasters of the parishes of Jedburgh, Sprouston, Hobkirk and Oxnam. In Hobkirk Parish the sum of £100 still yielded significant interest in the early 19th century. Mark (d.1584) 2nd son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. He became Abbot of Newbattie in 1546 and Commendator of Newbattie at the Reformation in 1560. In 1547/8 he was among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as brother of Sir Walter of Cessford in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Helen, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. He was succeeded by his son Mark, who became 1st Earl of Lothian. Other children included: Andrew of Fentoun and Romanno Grange, who married Isabella Whitlaw; George; William, who married Jean, daughter of James Johnstone; and Catherine, who married William Maxwell 5th Lord Herries of Terregles. His will was registered in Edinburgh in 1586 and that of his wife in 1596. Mark (1553–1609) son of Mark, Abbot of Newbattle. He became Master of Requests in 1577, Privy Counsellor in 1587 and Lord of Parliament in 1591. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1594 he was ‘lord of requensis’ when appointed a deputy justice for Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. In 1597/8 he was ‘Lord of Neubottle’ when he complained about Scotts from Gamescleuch, Glack and ‘Jedwartfeild’ attacking and capturing his servant Ralph Ker. He was created 1st Earl of Lothian in 1606. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Maxwell, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles. He was succeeded by his son Robert. His other children included: Margaret, who became Lady Yester; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry; and Lilias, who married John, 8th Lord Borthwick. Mary (17th/18th C.) only daughter of Robert of Fodderlee. She married John Kerr in 1686. In 1689 she was infested in half of the lands of Fodderlee, and in turn her son Andrew was infested in these lands in 1695. She was recorded as owner of Fodderlee in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. She was recorded as owner of ‘the east side of Fotherlie’ in 1707, with a value of £80. Mary nee Scott (b.c.1813) keeper of a lodging house at 6 Cross Wynd. Her brother was James Scott, engineer and millwright. She married Thomas Kerr, who was a blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. However, she was already a widow by 1851. Her children included Margaret, Euphemia, Mary and Andrew. Ned (17th C.) merchant listed in Hawick among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. The forename given may be an error, since it is essentially unheard of locally at that time. Nichola (15th/16th C.) daughter of George of Samuleston and his first wife, Elizabeth Carmichael. She became her father’s heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. The couple were granted the lands of Samuleston according to a charter of 1497. Her name is sometimes confusing written ‘Nicolas’. Patrick (17th/18th C.) younger son of Charles, 2nd Laird of Abbotrule. He was described as ‘of Lustruther’. He married Agnes, daughter of Andrew Ker of Bloodylaws, and they had a son, William who is recorded in 1741. Patrick (18th C.) preacher at Teviothead from 1757 until about 1763 When James Erskine took over). His subsequent history in unknown. It is possible he was the Patrick who was ministed at Caerlaverock Castle and moved to Eskdalmuir about 1762. Patrick (d.1791) 6th Laird of Abbotrule, a younger son of William. He inherited the estate from his brother Charles in 1756, but there was some complication over the confirmation of his succession (specifically, the establishment of the death of his brother), which did not occur until 1762. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Abbot’. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Francis Pringle and Walter Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1768. He was the driving force behind suppressing the Parish in the 1770s, possibly in part because of a falling out with the minister. He supposedly then took some of the best glebe lands for himself and had the manse pulled down. It is said that 17 years later, following a Sunday Sacrament at Southidean, a pale horse appeared to the minister and elders, with a ghostly apparition of the hated laird; this was also the same day that the Laird died (although the story no doubt improved with the telling!). He was apparently bad tempered, and in later years seldom left the estate. In 1780 he objected to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto being on the Roxburghshire electors’ roll (on account of having sold the liferent of much of his property to others); in addition he objected to addition of all the liferenters of parts of Minto and Headshaw proposed by Elliot. Clearly this was part of a political battle between the Whigs (including Elliot and his invented supporters) and the Tories (which must have included Kerr himself). In 1785 he had the surveyor John Ainslie make a series of estate plans for him, but apparently failed to pay for them. In 1788 his estate in Southidean Parish was valued at £940 4s 8d, and he also held feu-duities of lands in Hobkirk Parish and teinds for lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his privately circulated description being that he was then ‘Embarrassed in his affairs. A family’ and in the election probably a supporter of ‘the Marquis of Lothian, but thinks himself indifferently used by the Marquis’s Truestees’. In 1766 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Hay of Huntingdon and Mordington. His children were: Charles (b.1767), who sold Abbotrule; Thomas William (b.1768), who became a General; Margaret (b.1769), who remained unmarried; Beatrix (b.1770); and Amelia.
Wilhelmina (b.1771), who had a sketch made of her, lived in Edinburgh and died unmarried. After his death his widow lived on South Bridge in Edinburgh. Patrick (1796–1864) 8th Kerr of Abbotrule, and the first one not to own the family estate, which had been sold by his father Charles. He became a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, having joined at age 15. He married Margaret Lewis and their daughter Mary Ann kept a school. He may also have married Helen Mitchell. He died at Chepstone and was succeeded by his uncle’s grandson William Alexander. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1350) early local ancestor of the Ferniehirst branch. About 1330 he was given lands near the Jed Water, with the Douglases as superiors, possibly being the first family member to settle in Teviotdale. The lands were previously known as ‘Scræsburgh’, known by him as ‘Kersheugh’ or ‘Kershaugh’ and were essentially the same as what was later called Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Ralph of Kersheugh (d.c.1460) son of Andrew. He married Mary, daughter of Towers of Innerleith. His sons included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Robert of Yair. Sir Robert of Ferniehirst (d.1511) see Sir Robert Ker of Cessford. Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum (d.1588) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1539 he made the returns for the Crown land’s of Jedforest, with his brother John as Chamberlain. He had a charter of the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum in 1542. He also had a charter for a third of the lands of Dirleton, and also Newton in the Barony of Bedrule. He may be the ‘Robyn Ker’ who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. In 1551 he served on the panel for David Home of Wedderburn inheriting lands in Ettrick Forest. He became quite wealthy, and was involved in dubious activity around Jedburgh, at one point taking several Burgesses prisoner. It appears that in 1548 he applied for an assurance from Somerset that he could travel to his own house in order to serve the English King. The house he built at Ancrum had an inscription ‘Robert Ker and Isobel Home Founder and Compleitar 1558’. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was in ward in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1564, as a result of accusations by Andrew of Falkodside. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs in 1564/5. He was in ward in Edinburgh in 1565, with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Rutherford of Hunthill, younger, as sureties. He was released, but this was an error and he was ordered to present himself again to be warded in 1565/6, with a case brought against him by William Turnbull, Burgess of Edinburgh, resolved shortly thereafter. In 1567 he signed a bond to support the infant King James on the throne and was also among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was a surety for George Rutherford of the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. He was in ward in 1571 and also ordered to pay for a cask of wine. There is an existing list of his ‘plenishing’ as removed by the Jedburgh authorities (led by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, along with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords) in 1571; in 1573 he complained about the raid on his house, but the authorities ruled that he had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, and had no right to complain.

In 1571 and 1574 he was surety for his illegitimate sons Robert and William. In 1582/3 he was fined by the Privy Council along with Martin Elliot of Braidie and Gavin’s Jock Elliot for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots from Ramsiegill. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He signed a marriage contract in 1586 between his son Robert and Helen Grahamslaw of Newton. Either he or his son was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace in 1617. He married Isabel, daughter of David Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son William, and was grandfather of Sir Robert, the 1st Earl of Ancrum. Other children were: Robert of Newton; Thomas, who became a cordner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1596; Catherine, who married Henry Haliburton of Mertoun; and Isobel, who married George Douglass of Bonjedward. Robert of Newton (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum. In 1586 he purchased Newton, in Bedrule Parish from John Grahamslaw. Also in 1586 he served as surety for his brother William of Ancrum to appear before the Privy Council; he was also surety for William Kirkton at the same time. He was later in 1586 denounced as a rebel for not appearing. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was among those who complained that William Ker of Cessford had reset his son Sir Robert Ker, who was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of his brother William of Ancrum. In 1592 his surety was James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose. In 1594 he was denounced as a rebel for an assurance signed with Sir Robert Kerr, heir apparent of Cessford; along with his brother William he was warded in Dumbarton Castle. He married Helen, daughter of the same John Grahamlaw and was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Euphemia Douglas. He and his wife were declared rebels in 1601 for failing to make payment to Sir William Stewart of Traquair; Stewart complained in 1603 that although they had been in the Jedburgh Tolbooth, they were then freely living in their own house, and so they were to be denounced once more. In 1619 there was a dispute between his wife and her son-in-law John Scott of Huntly; so he must have had a daughter who married Scott of Huntly. Robert (d.1624) eldest son of Mark, he was 2nd Earl of Lothian. He married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Campbell, 7th Earl of Argyll. Without surviving male issue his elder daughter Anne became Countess of Lothian in her own right and married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. In 1641/2 his daughters Anne and Joanna were served heirs to many of his lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. Robert of Newton (d.c.1639) son of Robert and uncle of Robert, Earl of Ancrum. In 1622 he (or perhaps his father) gained lands resigned by his cousin Sir Robert Kerr of Ancrum. His lands included Newton in Bedrule Parish. In 1628 he was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He married Euphemia Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Sir Robert 1st Earl of Ancrum (1578–1654) son of William of Woodhead and Ancrum (who was killed in 1590) and descended from the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His brother William is recorded in 1602. Also in 1602 he was cautioner for some Rutherfords in Jedburgh and he signed the bond among Border lairds for keeping the peace, when he was Provost of Jedburgh. He was made a Knight of the Bath in 1603. He was served heir to his father in 1603 and his grandfather in 1608. He followed King James to London and spent much time in Court; however, he was forced to flee the country, having become involved in the feud between the Maxwells and Johnstones, in which he slew Charles Maxwell in a duel. He then spent time on the Continent, where he collected art (later presenting them to Charles I). Restored to his post in the Royal Bed-chamber, he acted as Charles I’s advisor on Scottish affairs. He as Captain of the King’s bodyguard until 1613 and served as Keeper of the Privy Purse. In 1630 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with his son Sir William. He was created Earl in 1633 and had his portrait painted by John Eycks. He was known for his interest in the arts, and wrote poetry himself. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony, and sister of the wife of Sir John Riddell of Riddell. He secondly married Anne Stanley, only daughter of the 6th Earl of Derby (whose portrait was painted by Cornelius Johnson), and widow of Sir Henry Portman. His children (all but the first by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who became the 3rd Earl of Lothian; Charles, who became 2nd Earl of Ancrum; Stanley, who died without issue; Vere, who married Dr. Wilkin-son of Oxford; Anne, who married Col. Nathaniel Rich of Stondon; and Elizabeth. There is an interesting correspondence (sometimes called the An-crum papers) still in existence between him and his son, covering the last 30 years of his life, during some of which he was living in Holl-land to escape Cromwell’s England, as well as his creditors. He was a friend and supporter of the poet John Donne and was bequeathed one of the most recognisable portraits of him when he died; this is now in the National Portrait Gallery. He died in Holland, being reduced to poverty in late life. Robert (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He acquired the lands of Middlemas Walls (also called the Mains of Softlaw). He is probably the ‘Robet Ker of Cavers’ who complained to the Privy Council in 1628 about William Turnbull in Braidhaugh obstructing the apprehension of his son James, and for ‘hurting and wounding him’. In 1643 he is ‘of Middlemistwalls’ when recorded owning lands on Sprouston Parish. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas of Middlemas Walls. Robert of Prieston (17th C.) owner of the north part of Prieston in 1678. He was listed in 1680 among Borderers convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking ‘the Tower and Castle of Hawick’; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. Robert of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded in 1685. He must have been a son of one of the landed branches of the Kerrs; he was surely related to John, the 3rd son of An-drew of Chatto, who was born in 1665 and died at Fodderlee in 1695. In 1686 his only daughter Mary married John Kerr. Robert (d.1692) son of Sir James of Crailing and Marie Rutherford. He inherited Sundalee through his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee. He repurchased the Ferniehirst estate from the Earl of Lothian. He became 3rd Lord Jedburgh in 1670. He paid land tax for Riclarton, Ferniehirst, Hundalee, Over Crailing and other lands in 1678. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick and widow of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth. He had no children and was succeeded by his distant relative William, eldest son of the 1st Marquess of Lothian. However, the estates of Hundalee and others were inherited by his sister’s son, John Kerr of Cavers. He was effectively the last of the male line of Kers of Ferniehirst. His will is recorded in 1693. Robert (1636–1703) eldest son of William, he was 4th Earl of Lothian from 1675, became 3rd Earl of Ancrum in 1690 and 1st Marquess of Lothian in 1701. He was a volunteer in the Dutch War in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. About 1685 he raised a troop, with Sir William Elliott of Stobs as Lieutenant, to round up local Covenanters. He supported the Revolution of 1688 and served the government of William III. He married Jean, daughter if the Marquess of Argyll. He had 10 children, including: William, who was known as Lord Jedburgh before he succeeded; Charles; John, of the 31st Regiment, who became a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1705; Mark, commander of the 11th Dragoons, who is mentioned in the song ‘Johnnie Cope’; and Mary, who married James, Marquess of Douglas, and was mother of the Duke of Douglas and Lady Jane, who had twins at the age of 52, with the succession argued in court. Robert of Cavers (17th/18th C.) son of John and Agnes Ker. His name is often written ‘Carre’. He succeeded to the patronage of Bedrule Kirk, as well as the Cavers Carre lands. In 1718 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Milne of Ballnillo, and she died in the following year. He secondly married Helen, sister of Sir Walter Riddell, Baronet of Riddell. His son Thomas inherited the estate, but died in his youth. The lands then went to his brother John. However, patronage of Bedrule went to his daughter Agnes and her husband John Hume of Ninewells and Ferny Castle (brother of David Hume the philosopher). He also had another daughter, Margaret. Robert (b.c.1780) shepherd at Southdean according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.c.1790) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is probably the Robert in Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 5 Montagu Street. His wife was Helen or Ellen and their children included Robert (carpenter), John, Francis and Walter. Robert (b.1822/3) son of tailor Robert. He was a joiner in Newcastle. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cavers. Their children were Margaret, Robert, an unnamed daughter, John, Walter, John Cavers, Helen, Janet, and Francis Napier. The family emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Effledge. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Schomberg Henry (1833–1900) 9th Marquess of Lothian, son of John, the 7th Marquess and brother of William Schomberg, the 8th Marquess. He spent much of his life in the diplomatic service, in Lisbon, Tehran, and then several European cities. He was Colonel of the 3rd Battalion Lothian Regiment. He contested Roxburgh county for the Conservatives in 1868, losing to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. He lived for a while at Monteviot. He gained the lands of Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from John Edmund Elliot of New Belses in 1872. He also served as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire and was also Deputy-Lieutenant of the county from 1885. He was also Rector of Edinburgh University, Secretary of State for Scotland, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Gold Stick of Scotland, etc. Lothian Street in Hawick was named after him. In 1865 he married Lady Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott and hence was son-in-law of Walter, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. His children were: Cecil Victoria Constance, who married John Walter Douglas-Montagu-Scott; Walter William Schomberg, who died from a gun accident in Australia; Margaret Isobel, who lived to 96; Schomberg Henry Mark, died in infancy; Mary, who married Henry Kidd; Helen Victoria Lilian, who married Col. Frederick Walter Kerr; Robert Schomberg, who succeeded, but had no sons; Victoria Alexandrina Alberta, who married Maj. William Gosling; and Isobel Alice Adelaide, who married James Cospatrick Hepburne-Scott. The Lothian titles were inherited by the families of his brothers Ralph and then Walter. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1389) son of Ralph. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Somerville of Carnwarth. He was succeeded by his son Andrew.

He may have had another son, John, who settled near Aberdeen. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1430) son of Andrew. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Home of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, and had other sons Thomas and James. Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst (d.1499) son of Andrew of Kersheugh. He was the first of his family to be designated ‘of Ferniehirst’. He probably built the original tower there, sometime around 1490. He also had a new charter of his lands from Archibald, Earl of Angus. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1476 he is listed among other Border Lairds in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Colville of Ochiltree (who died at Flodden). It is unclear if they had any sons, but they also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Sir Thomas of Smailholm (with whom he is easily confused, and indeed some genealogies have claimed they are the same man). Thomas of Smailholm (d.1484) son of Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (whose name is usually spelled ‘Ker’). He was probably the builder of the original Smailholm Tower in the 1470s. He may be the ‘Thom Ker’ who was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh, daughter of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, through whom their son probably gained the lands of Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. Other children include: Ralph of Primside, ancestor of the Cavers Carre branch; Thomas, Abbot of Kelso, d.1528; George; and William, who had a charter of Langlee and ‘Gallastongis’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst’s lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Lintalee (15th/16th C.) first man named on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme in 1517. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. He may be related to the later Ralph of Lintalee. Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst (d.1585) eldest son of Sir John and Catherine Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Thomas Karr son to John Kerr’ who in 1541 was offered on behalf of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. In 1561/2 he (and his father Sir John) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1562. Also in 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. Later in 1562 he was ordered to appear before the Privy Council and to remain in ward, along with his brothers Andrew and William. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, accompanying her to Dumfries in 1565, and helping her escape from Lochleven in 1568. In 1564 he was listed as the ‘Lard of Pharnyhirst’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was involved in a feud with the Homes about 1564. Also in 1564 he was warded in Edinburgh Castle, at least partly for non-payment of teinds to the Commendator of Jedburgh; it is also reported that he and his brothers Andrew and William forcibly took the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen. In 1564/5 he was specifically listed as an exclusion in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts, while his brothers Andrew, William and John were listed as part of the bond. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with John Rutherford of Hunthill) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, with he himself being warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, and then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Additionally he was a surety for Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1565 and was among those summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundale and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered not to molest his mother, Dame Katherine Ker, or her other children and servants. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He was also ordered to present a number of Turnbulls and others to answer charges of raiding into England. In the period 1568–72 he was ‘tacksman’ of the parsonage and vicarage teinds of Bedrule. In 1568/9 he is still explicitly excluded from the bond signed between the Kers and Scotts. In 1569 he also signed the bond to suppress thieves on the Border. In 1569 he and some others were sureties for George Rutherford in the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1570, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, he raided into England, with Sussex and Hunsdon retaliating by demolishing Ferniehirst the same year. He was Baron of Feu-Rule, as well as holding other local titles; however, he appears to have forfeited these temporarily. His mother brought a decree of removal against him in about 1571. He was accused of treasonous acts in 1571 (and confirmed in 1574), probably meaning that he had not given up Catholic sympathies. In 1571/2 he fled from Edinburgh, meeting his supporters under Alexander Trotter and was reset at Ancrum Woodhead by Robert Kerr. He later fled to France, but returned several years later and was rehabilitated in 1581. In 1581 he gained the estates, baronies and lordships given up by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. This included the Barony of Feu-Rule and lands of Hallisle and others. In 1581 he also had a ‘benefit of pacification’ from the King, for crimes committed by him and his followers in the period 1567–74. There was a dispute between him and Thomas Turnbull, Baron of Bedrule, as well as the parishioners of Bedrule, over the rights of the benefice, the teinds etc.; this must have been at least somewhat related to the Reformation and the ouster of the Catholic priests. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He may have been temporarily Keeper of Hermitage in 1563 when some Elliots are recorded in a bond to enter Jock Elliot with him. He was Warden of the Middle Marches, appointed sometime in the 1570s and perhaps again in the last couple of years of his life. He certainly served as Warden of the Middle Marches and Keeper of Liddesdale Castle by 1583. In 1585 a fray took place following a meeting of the March Wardens, in which Sir Francis Russell was killed (the English first saying it was an accident, but later accusing him of deliberately plotting the murder). His Royal Commission for pursuing offenders in order to keep peace on the Border was revoked in 1585, since he was found to be using this power to pursue his enemies for his own purposes. As a result he was committed to ward in Aberdeen, where he died. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh. Other children by his first marriage were: Julian (or Janet), who married Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, and Thomas Hamilton, 1st Earl of Haddington; Margaret, who married Robert, Baron Melville; Mary, who married James, son of William Douglas, 6th Lord Morton; and William, who married Elizabeth Lyon and was also called Kirkaldy of Grange. Portraits exist of him and his wife. In 1569 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; this was part of the 1564/5 bond between the Kerrs and the Scotts, and he was still owed £1000 of dowry money according to the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott. In 1573/4 his wife was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiestiel (while he was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (his mother) and Andrew Kerr (his brother) were harassing her farms. Their children included: Sir James of Crailing; Thomas of Oxnam; Ann, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 his son and wife were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. In 1592/3 his wife Jean Scott, ‘Lady Pharnyhirst’ was in dispute with Sir Robert Ker of Cessford over crops from Redden. Thomas of Oxnam and Over Crailing (d.1601) younger son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and brother of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, who was Provost of that town. There was a serious feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbulls in the later years of the 16th century and early years of the 17th. He and his servants Andrew Hogg and George Gardner were declared as rebels in 1596 for the murder of Henry Oliver in ‘Hyndmureheid’; he claimed that they had a ‘relaxation’, and in 1599 the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was accused of failing to bring the men to justice. He was killed at Jedburgh Rood Day Fair in 1601 in a fight between the 2 families, when about 30 Turnbulls and allies from the Minto area came to specifically seek him out. He was slain along with his servant George ‘Glaisher’ (or ‘Glaidner’), while on the other side Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and John Middlemas (brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel) were killed, and several men were seriously wounded. A number of Turnbulls were murdered in the following years by members of his family, including Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, who may have been one of those responsible in 1601. The case continued until 1604, with Hector Turnbull of Lilliesleaf declared a rebel for the murder of him and his servant. He had no children and his brother Sir James succeeded to the Oxnam and Crailing titles after his death. Sir Thomas of Redden (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Ancrum and Woodhead. He is probably the Thomas of Ancrum who in 1628/9 was part of the funeral procession for Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. He may be the Thomas ‘Ker of Ancrum’ whose lands in the...

Lordship of Liddesdale are recorded in 1632. He spent much time abroad in the army and after his return was knighted in 1633. In 1637 he objected his daughter Jean marrying Sir John Ker of Lochtour, but the marriage went ahead later anyway. In 1643 he appears in the county valuation records for Sprouston Parish as being ‘of Gateside, his lands in Reddin’. He married Jean, daughter of James of Chatto. Their children were: John (d.1645); James of Redden, whose successor was Capt. Charles of Redden; Andrew of Chatto; Jean, who married Sir John Kerr of Lochtour and secondly Sir John Wauchope of Nithsdale; Katherine; Christian; and Vair (b.1636). He secondly married Mary Douglas and they had daughters Margaret, Mary and Anne. He also had an illegitimate son, George (b.1639), with Agnes Wilson. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as being ‘of Ancrum’ when his extensive lands in Liddesdale were listed in a Privy Council document. It is unclear who he was, since Sir Robert was Laird of Ancrum at that time (and would become 1st Earl), but he may have been the same as Thomas of Redden, brother of Sir Robert. His Liddesdale lands included Catlee, Dinlees, Over and Nether Tinnisburn, ‘Civishill’, Staneygill, Foulwood, ‘Wilwigholms steid’, ‘Megie Twedmes’, Whisgills, Baltonholm, Copshawholm, Gillfoot, Christie’s Hill, Pollock and Kirkhill. He was also part of a bond, recorded in 1637. Thomas William (1678–1825) 2nd son of Patrick, the 6th Laird of Abbotrule and brother to Charles, the 7th Laird. He was born in Southdean and entered military service as a Lieutenant in the 73rd Highlanders (Black Watch), eventually becoming a Major General. He may have served as Governor General of Ceylon and it is said that Raeburn painted his portrait. He married Sarah Anne, daughter of William Ker of Meadow House in Berwickshire, and she died in 1812, aged just 26. They had 5 children: Loraine McDowall, who was a Lieutenant in the 65th Native Infantry and later a merchant in Glasgow, and whose son William Alexander succeeded; Margaret Amelia, who married John, son of Francis Brodie; Alexander Boyd, whose grandson Alexander Nairne succeeded; Charles, who died young; and Sarah Anne, who married Alexander Maclean, minister of Carnwarth. The 3 oldest children were shown in a painting along with their mother. He is buried at Cannongate Cemetery, Edinburgh. Thomas (c.1810–bef. 1851) blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Scott in 1837; she was probably daughter of millwright Gideon Scott, who lived next door at 8 Cross Wynd. The 1841 census records him at No. 6, living with his wife Mary and children Margaret and Euphemia. There were further children, Mary and Andrew, but he died before 1851, when his wife was a widow running a boarding house at the same Cross Wynd address. His daughter Mary married Rev. Robert Fordyce, minister at West Port. William (16th C.) brother of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1529/30 he had a charter for the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum. He could be the ‘Willelmo Ker’ who witnessed the ‘precept’ by Sir Walter Scott of Branholme infefting his son David in his lands in 1528. He may be the William who was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill in 1525. It is possible that he was the William who had 101 sheep of his stolen by the Olivers of Strange according to a case at the 1502 Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh; the Olivers had remission for these thefts, their surety being Andrew of Ferniehirst. He was also listed as brother of Andrew in a 1502 case where he was pledge for ‘gilbert chiriadane’ in Jedburgh. William (d.c.1563) a younger son of John of Ferniehirst. He was presented to the Kirk of Bedrule in 1557. In 1562 he was recorded as sometime Parson of Bedrule (and spelled ‘Ker’). Also in 1562 he is probably the William, along with his brother Thomas of Ferniehirst, and their other brother Andrew, who were ordered to remain in ward, or be fined £1000; this was presumably related to accusations against his brother Thomas. In 1563 he is recorded along with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Sir John Allan in a ‘crown precept’ brought by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and the parishioners of Bedrule, charging them to produce their writs proving that they are entitled to the benefices of the parish. This suggests some dispute over who was the minister in this time of the Reformation. Probably William held much of the benefice (like in pre-Reformation times), while John Allan was the actual minister. In 1564 he was accused along with his brothers Thomas of Ferniehirst and Andrew, were accused of forcibly taking the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen parishes. William of Ancrum and Woodhead (d.1590) son of Robert of Ancrum and brother of Robert of Newton. In 1572 he was convicted for the murder of 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and in 1574 was obliged to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1578 he was excluded from a bond by the Kers and Rutherfords, since he had been declared a fugitive for the murder of John Rutherford and others in Jedburgh. He was still ‘younger’ of In about 1583 he obtained the gift of the ‘escheat of the liferent’ of the lands belonging to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, his son Walter and Mungo Bennet of Chesters. He was described as William of Ancrum in 1586, when he had an obligation to Hugh Nisbet of Reishill. He was son and heir apparent of Robert in 1585/6 when 6 he was involved in a court case with the Bailies of Jedburgh about whether lands granted to him were in their jurisdiction; they also blamed him for the murder of 3 local men and said he was in a feud with the Moscrops. In 1586 he insisted that the Sheriff of Teviotdale should enter him into possession of the lands of Bedrule, Chesters and Halden, but failed to appear personally. Also in 1586 Andrew Ker of Greenhead served as surety for him to appear before the Privy Council; at the same time he was surety for his brother Robert and they were both stated to be sons of Robert of Ancrum when reminded to appear ‘to answer touching the quietnes and gude ordour of the Middle March’. They were all later denounced as rebels for not appearing. He was also denounced in 1586 for not appearing to answer charges of stopping the Commendator of Melrose collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is probably the Kerr of Ancrum listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander (or Archibald) Dundas of Fingask, who was widow of Sir David Home of Fishwick. Their children were: Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Sir Thomas of Redden; Isabel, who married John Ker of Corbethouse; William of Overton, Sunlaws and Linton, Groom of the Bedchamber to James VI and Charles I; Andrew, who probably died abroad, unmarried; and George, probably Canon of Glasgow. He was killed by Robert Ker (younger of Cessford), who was later 1st Earl of Roxburghe; in 1590/1 there were cautioners appointed for other Kers not to reset Robert Ker and his accomplices, who were ‘at the horn’ for his murder. The feud between the 2 families was not resolved until letters and payments made in 1606. William (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Newton’ in 1612 among men accused of charging too much interest on loans. This was probably the Newton in Bedrule Parish, and he was surely related to the other Kers of Newton. It is recorded that the appeared to answer the accusation and hence probably paid a fine and was released. William of Overton and Sunlaws (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Ancrum and brother of Sir Robert of Ancrum. He was sued for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and others in Jedburgh in 1601, but was never convicted. He was among Kers and others, dependents of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who in 1601 besieged and burned a house in Jedburgh, and were declared as rebels. Probably the same William ‘of Lintoun’ was in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. He was on an assize in 1622. Also in 1622 he was appointed to assist Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in keeping peace on the Border. In 1625 he had a charter of the lands of Overton from his father William of Ancrum, and was styled ‘of Linton’ in a confirming charter of 1629; this makes him easy to confuse with the Ker Lairds of Linton, to whom he was not closely related (however, it is not clear if it was the same Linton). In 1630 he was served heir to his brother George, Canon of Glasgow. He served as Groom of the Bedchamber to both James VI and Charles I. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Ker of Littledean and the Hirsel. Their children included: James; Janet (or Joneta), who married Lancelot Pringle; William, who married Anne, daughter of Philip, Lord Wharton; Henry; Letitia (or Lettice), who married Alexander Popham of Littlecote; and Anne, who first married a younger brother of her sister Letitia’s husband, and secondly married Philip Lord Wharton, father of her brother William’s wife! He was still alive in 1640.

William (16th/17th C.) Sheriff-Clerk Depute of Roxburghshire, recorded in 1620 when he was witness to a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. He may be the ‘William Ker’ who signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. William of Newton (17th C.) son of Robert, from whom he was served ‘heir special’ (perhaps meaning he was underage) in 1639. This was composed of Newton, including the newly built mill, and ‘lie Smiddielands’. He was confirmed in the lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) in 1642/3. He is probably the ‘W. Kerr of Newton’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1646–47 and 1656–58 he was one of the Roxburghshire representatives in Parliament. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was Lieut.-Col. of the regiment of horse raised in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined. He was probably the Laird of Newton who paid the Land tax on £853 in 1663 and 1678. He married Agnes, daughter and co-heir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. He may also have married Janet, daughter of Sir William Murray of Dunearne. He had 3 daughters, Euphemia (who may have been 2nd wife of William Kerr of Cherrytrees), Agnes and Margaret (who married Andrew Kerr of ‘Sowcoatt’, possibly Chatto). Another daughter may have been Christian, who married William Turnbull of Sharplaw. He could be the William of Newton whose will is recorded in 1691 (unless that was the next generation). Sir William (1605–75) Earl of Lothian, eldest son of Sir Robert, Earl of Ancrum by his 1st wife Elizabeth Murray. In 1630 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis), along with his father. His 1631 marriage to Anne Kerr (daughter and heiress of Robert, 2nd Earl of Lothian), who was countess of Lothian in her own right, made him 3rd Earl of Ancrum. A series of letters between him and his father still exists. He married Anne Kerr, who was Countess of Lothian in her own right, and was elevated to the peerage as the 3rd (or 1st) Earl of Lothian. His marriage reunited the Ferniehirst and Cessford branches of the family. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. He raised the Teviotdale Regiment (also known as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’) in 1639 as part of the Covenanting force. The Regiment crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640 and when Newcastle was captured Lothian was made Governor, with a garrison of 2,000 men. He resigned after the Battle of Fyvie, and the Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed the next year. He had a confirmation of the Lordship and Barony of Jedburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was appointed as one of the Colonels of Foot for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Also in 1643 he was recorded as holder of the teinds for much of Jedburgh and Linton Parishes, as well as the lands of Over Ancrum, Woodhead, Braidlaw, Palacelhii and Belhes, the teinds of Over Ancrum and lands in Longnewton Parish. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He acquired Ferniehirst and Riccalton in 1646 (from the creditors of Andrew, Lord Jedburgh), but in 1669 settled them on Robert Kerr of Crailing (later Lord Jedburgh). He became Scottish Secretary of State in 1649, and was one of the Commissioners negotiating with Charles II in 1650. He lived much of his life at Newbattle Abbey, but also held lands at Fernieeles and Templehall (part of Harwood on Rule), which he is recorded giving over for a loan from Walter Riddell in 1649 and 1652, and then transferring to Mark ‘Carre’ (presumably a relative) in 1658. He was also the 1st Kerr of Abbotrule, acquiring the land perhaps around 1642, and gained the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1649, later selling it to Elliott of Stobs. Like many others, he was fined in 1662. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in the parishes of Ancrum and Crailling, Hobkirke, Jedburgh, Longnewton and Oxnam. His children were: Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian; Sir William of Halden; Charles of Abbotrule; John; Anne; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaret; Vere; Henrietta; Lilias, who probably married Thomas Lewin of Amble; and at least 4 other children who died young. A portrait exists of him. William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1653–1721) only son of Andrew. Although apparently expected not to survive to succeed, he lived to a reasonable age. He became entangled in litigation and sold Ormiston to William Elliot of Wells. In about 1675 he took part in the funeral procession for Jean Ker, Countess of Roxburgh. He paid the land tax in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1678. In 1673 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden. They had 7 children: William (d.1705); John, who married Margaret, niece of Sir William Kerr of Greenhead, and was disinherited; Elizabeth (b.1683); Christian, who succeeded; Robert (b.1687), who died after being transported to Maryland; Margaret (b.1689); and Joan (b.1690). He secondly married Grizel Por teous. William of Newton (17th/18th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Newton. He is recorded related to Bedrule teinds in 1692. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 6 hearths at ‘the place of Newton’ in Bedrule Parish, and whose several tenants are also listed. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. Probably the same William sold Newton (although perhaps not permanently) to the Marquess of Lothian in 1707. Along with his wife, he was probably the ‘Newton Ker and his Ladie’ who gifted communion cups to Bedrule Kirk in 1716. William (1661–1722) 2nd Marquess of Lothian, eldest son of Robert. He inherited the title of Lord Jedburgh in 1692, and thus sat in the Scottish Parliament. He was Colonel of

son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, William the 'Lady Abbotrule' who paid the window tax. Consisent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not merks for his daughters. The year of his death is rule. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 would bear the name and arms of Kerr of Abbot- entail in 1737, where it is stated that his heirs are now unknown. He executed a deed of that a portrait of him was painted, but its whereabouts are now unknown. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 merks for his daughters. The year of his death is said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not consisent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was the 'Lady Abbotrule' who paid the window tax. William (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before succeeding his father in 1722 and with this title was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1716. He served many times as a Representative Peer. He was Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly 1732–38. He lived at Monteviot, where he paid the window tax in 1748. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Kemnay, and secondly married his cousin, Janet, daughter of Lord Charles Kerr of Cramond. His children were: William, who succeeded; Robert, who died at the Battle of Culloden; and a daughter. William (c.1695–1752) 4th Laird of Abbotrule, son of William. His year of birth is unknown, and he only became Laird 5 years before his death. He paid the window tax at Abbotrule in 1748. In 1751 he sold off part of the family estates (including Macks- side, Broadhaugh, Templehall, Hartshaug Mill, Kirknowe and Blackcleughmouth) by roup within John's Coffee House in Edinburgh. He married Mary Brown of Cumberland and they had 7 children: Margaret, who died unmarried; Charles, who succeeded; Ann, who married Thomas Short- reed of Easter Essenside; Alexander; Patrick, who later succeeded his brother Charles; William, who died unmarried; and Cecily. William Henry (1713–1775) 4th Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was the first to use the title Earl of Ancrum before succeeding. He was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot, then Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons, being wounded at Fontenoy in 1745 and seeing his brother Robert fall at Cul- loden in 1746. He was a Representative Peer in Parliament. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Caroline, only daughter of Robert D'Arcy, Earl of Holderness, great-granddaughter of Frederick, Duke of Schomberg (who was shot at the Battle of the Boyne by his own regiment). His children were: William John, who succeeded; Louisa Kerr, who married Lord George Lennox; and Wilhelmina Frances. William (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1763 he was one of the men appointed by the Council to arrange for the collection of money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary's. He may be the William whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. William of Gateshaw (1707–94) descendant of George Ker of Linton, and Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His father was Andrew, merchant in Kelso and his mother was Marie Cranston. In 1758 he pur- chased Gateshaw (previously a seat of a branch of the Kers) from Sir William Scott of Ancrum.
Kerrfield Burn

In 1765 he also purchased Corbethouse. He became Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to John, Duke of Roxburgh. He was charged for having a male servant in 1778 and 1779. He was recorded as active among the freeholders of Roxburghshire in a meeting of 1780, acting on behalf of Walter of Littledean. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. At that time he was also listed as owner of lands in Morebattle Parish. He may be the Kerr who was mainly responsible for the rebuilding of Gateshaw. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1739. Their children were: Andrew, who died young; Gilbert, who succeeded to Gateshaw; John, died young; Sir Charles, who succeeded his brother Gilbert; William, W.S. in Edinburgh; Robert, Lieut.-Col. in the East India Company; John, died young; Cecily, died young; Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Miller. He grew up at the time that Dickson & Turnbull was established in Hawick as a prominent plant nursery, and it seems reasonable to imagine that this had an effect on his career choice. He became a gardener at Kew and a hunter of plants. He may have been the first professional full-time plant collector in the West. At Kew he was instructed by Sir Joseph Banks and was sent to China in 1804. There he discovered many species, including Euonymus japonicus, Lilium lancifolium, Pieris japonica, Nandina domestica, Begonia grandis and Rosa banksiae. He additionally collected plants in Java and the Philippines. He sent back to Kew Gardens some 238 plants that were new to European science, including the shrub named after him, Kerria japonica. In 1812 he was sent to Colombo in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to oversee the gardens at King’s House and on Slave Island. He died there 2 years later, apparently as a result of opium addiction. Borders Distillery named a gin after him. William John (1737–1815) 5th Marquess of Lothian, son of William Henry. He was Colonel of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards and later Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1770s. In 1788 his lands included Ferniehirst and Over Crailing in Jedburgh Parish and parts of several other parishes in Roxburghshire, namely Ancrum, Crailing, Hownam and Oxnam. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Chichester Fortescue of Dromiskin and cousin of the Duke of Wellington. His children were: Mary, who married Gen. Frederick St. John; William, who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married John Evelyn Pierrepont Dormer; Charles Beauchamp, who married Elizabeth Crump; Vice.-Adm. Mark Robert, who married Charlotte MacDonnell, Countess of Antrim; and Maj.-Gen. Robert, who married Mary Gilbert. William John (1763–1824) 6th Marquess of Lothian, son of William John, 5th Marquess. He was founder of the Jedforest Club in 1810 (when still Earl of Ancrum) and was Lord-Lieutenant for Midlothian and Roxburghshire. He was Provincial Grand Master of the Masons 1815–27. He firstly married Harriet Hobart-Hampden, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire and secondly married Harriet Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son John William Robert. He died when visiting the Duke of Buccleuch in Richmond on the Thames. William Schomberg Robert (1832–70) 8th Marquess of Lothian. He was eldest son of John, the 7th Marquess. He was said to be a promising scholar at Oxford, but died while still relatively young. He married Lady Constance Harriet Mahonesa Chetwynd-Talbot, his cousin. He was succeeded by his brother Schomberg Henry. William Alexander (1831–1919) eldest son of Lorraine MacDowall. He served in the Army in India, being awarded the Victoria Cross for action during the 1857 mutiny. However, he apparently had to leave the military after striking his superior officer. He married Harriet Atty from Rugby. He published some books on riding and cavalry tactics. He became the 9th Laird of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin in 1864, although the family no longer owned any land locally. Having no children, he was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Nairne. William (20th C.) proprietor of a grocer’s shop on Drumlanrig Place in the mid-1900s. It also contained a sub-post office (occasionally spelled ‘Karr’; see also Ker).

Kerrfield Burn (ker-field-burn) n. stream on the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It is listed in a description of the lands of the farm in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. ‘New Kerrfield Houses’ were described as being to the west of there.

kerrie-haundit (ke-ree-hawn-dee’, -di) adj., arch. left-handed (said to relate to the left-handed Kerrs of Ferniehirst, and their purpose-built spiral staircases; also ker-haundit).

Kerriot Rig (ke-ree-i’-rig) n. place name in the headwaters of the Ewes valley, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Kerriot rigg’. It is probably the same as Carewudrig).
Kerr Pool (ker-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water in the southern part of Roxburghshire, south of Kershopefoot.

the Kerrs (thu-kerz) n. important local family, being in the Borders since the 12th century, obtaining Jedforest in 1457 and building the original Ferniehirst Castle around 1470. Kers from the counties of Stirling, Edinburgh, Peebles and Ayr signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The Borders family had two main branches, the Kerrs of Ferniehirst and the Kers of Cessford, who intermarried and occasionally feuded. The spelling often (although not always) distinguished the 2 branches; additionally the Cavers Carre family preferentially used the ‘Carre’ spelling. They were Wardens of the Middle March for generations, dominating the history of the area around Kelso and Jedburgh. They were also associated with rieving, and received their motto ‘Sero Sed Serio’ (Late but in earnest) at Ancrum Moor. The family are traditionally left-handed, starting with Sir Andrew Kerr, who apparently found it to be a useful trait at Flodden. The name may derive from the Gaelic for left-handed, or from the Norse for ‘small wood’. The Dukes of Roxburghe and the Marquesses of Lothian are derived from Kerr ancestors. Closer to Hawick, a branch of the Kerrs were Lairds of Abbotrule in the late 17th to early 19th centuries, with a motto ‘J’avance’ – ‘The Douglass cam’ frae Liddisdale, Wi’ the young laird o’ Buccleuch; And there were Kerrs and Cockburns bairth. All knights of honour true’ [JTe], ‘His record is unbroken, A’ the world avers, Their names are on the Empire, Oor Eliots, Scotts, and Kers’ [JBS] (although a distinction is often made between the ‘Ker’ and ‘Kerr’ spellings, the difference is less clear in older texts, and ‘Ker’ is almost unknown now; there are several different theories for the origin of the name).

Kerryrig Park (ke-ree-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Kersel (ker-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His daughter Bessie was born in 1692. Adam (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Isobell (or Helen) Jackson. Their children were baptised in Hawick, including: John (b.1718), also a shoemaker; Marion (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); Agnes (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1720 were Thomas Tinlin and William Sinton, in 1723 were Wright James Pringle and shoemaker Andrew Scott, in 1729 were Benjamin Thomson and Patrick Angus and in 1731 were James Scott and Walter Purdom. He may be the Adam from whom 3s. 2d. was received by the Town Treasurer in 1755 ‘for Rowly-powly loft’; this was presumably for his right to sit there. Adam (18th C.) gardener at Abbotrule and Weens. In 1767 he is recorded as a gardener at Abbotrule. He was listed as ‘Adam Carsal’ gardener at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. His name is recorded as ‘Kerswall’ ‘Carswell’ and variants at Weens in the period 1785–88. In 1757 he married Betty, daughter of George Stevenson. He is probably the Adam whose children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Jean (b.1761), possibly the Jean who married Adam Goodfellow in Wilton in 1788; Agnes (b.1764); John (b.1767), who married Ann Tinlin; and Betty (b.1769). He is probably also the Adam whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included: George (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); Adam (b.1776); and James (b.1780). Adam (1745–1811) shoemaker in Hawick, son of John, and grandson of shoemaker Adam. In 1789 he (along with shoemaker Robert Oliver) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Turnbull. He married Ann Scott in 1769 and she died in 1800. Their children were: Ann (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam; William (1775–76); and Agnes (1778–79). It was probably his (later) daughter Agnes who is recorded dying in 1810. Adam (18th/19th C.) joiner at Horsleyhill. His surname appears (with ‘Rusle’ crossed out) on the list of men balloted for the Militia in 1797 and again in 1798. In early 1799 he paid £10 to avoid serving. It is possible he is the wright Adam ‘Helson’ or ‘Kelson’ who was at Hassendean on the 1801 Militia ballot. Adam (b.c.1770s) wright of Hawick. He was listed as a wright on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia in Hawick Parish and was still on the list in 1801. He married Jean Turnbull in 1799. Their children included: an unnamed child, who died in Hawick in 1802; Helen (1803–82), who married James Hardie; Elizabeth (1806–51), who married George Fiddes; Jean, who died in 1812; Jane (1816–56), married Walter Rae; Joan (c.1818–92), married Walter Graham Harley; and another unnamed child died in 1820. Helen may be the female servant, along with her sister Joan, living with John Hislop’s family at about 15 High Street in 1841; she was in Jedburgh by 1851. He was listed as a joiner on death certificates. Adam (1772/3–1853) resident of Kirkton Parish.

Kersel
In 1805 he married Janet (1781–1851), daughter of James Hutton and Janet Black from Hawick. Their children included: James (c.1818–64); and Adam (c.1820–59). There were surely more children, but no baptismal records have been found, perhaps because they were members of a secession church. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1831, where he was a farmer and member of the First United Presbyterian Church in Galt. They are buried at Cedar Creek Cemetery, North Dumfries, Waterloo County. Adam (1796–1862) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd, son of John and Anne Tinlin. In 1822 he married Margaret Dryden (1789–1861) from Galashiels. They probably had 9 children: John (b.1820), who died in infancy; an unnamed daughter (d.1821); Ann (1822–77), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth ('Betty', c.1824–1900), who married Robert Walddie; Margaret (c.1826–96); Agnes (c.1828–1912), who married John Laidlaw; John (c.1830–92); Janet (c.1832–1904) married Thomas McCabe; Charlotte (1835–1925), married John Scott; and Esther (1837–83), married George Davidson in 1855 and emigrated to Galt, Ontario, secondly marrying Andrew Hewie (originally from Berwickshire) in 1872. His unnamed daughter died in Hawick in 1840. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 they were living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1861 he is described as ‘Shoemaker now Pauper’ and he died at 12 Kirk Wynd. Note that his name is sometimes transcribed ‘Harswell’. Adam (c.1820–59) probably son of Adam and brother of James. He most likely travelled to Canada with his family in 1831, settling in the Kitchener-Waterloo area of Ontario, where he was a farmer. He is buried in Cedar Creek Cemetery along with his family members. Adam (b.c.1851) son of John and Elizabeth Tait. He was probably born in Hawick. He married Isabella Waugh and their daughter Jean married M. Gordon from Hawick. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed son (b.1768), Agnes (b.1770), Adam (b.1773) and Betty (b.1766). James (c.1818–64) said to have been born in Hawick, probably of Adam and Janet Hutton. He emigrated to Canada along with his father and family and married Mary Jane Cranston, from Yetholm. Their children were Adam, Robert, James, Adam Cranston, Alexander, Andrew, Margaret and Jessie. He lived in North Dumfries Township near Waterloo in Ontario. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is probably related to the Robert recorded in Minto a decade later. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Hep according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was born in 1693. It is possible that he was also father of shoemaker Adam (whose first-born son was called John). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Alton in 1724, Borthaugh in 1727 and Drinkstone in 1729. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Agnes Oliver in Wilton in 1718; she was also from Wilton. Their children baptised in Wilton included: Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); and Marion (again, b.1732). Note that his surname is listed as ‘Carsel’ and ‘Carsell’. The witnesses in 1724 and 1727 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were William Scott and James Cavers. He may be related to the John recorded at Wester Heap in 1694. The funeral recorded in Wilton in 1737 for Adam in Alton was probably for his son. John (1718–88) son of Hawick shoemaker Adam. In 1745 he married Agnes Leithead in Hawick Parish. Their children included Adam (b.1746), who was also a shoemaker. John (b.1767) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam. He was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He may be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia (but if so, must have been born a little later than 1767). He is easily confused with the John who was born about 5 years later. He married Ann (b.1761), daughter of Robert Tinlin (‘Rob the Naig’). Their children included: Adam (1796–1862), the Hawick shoemaker; Ann (1805–73), who married Charles Hunter; Margaret (1809–70), who married Thomas Newall and George Didsbury; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia. Agnes (b.c.1803) and Janet (b.c.1807) were probably also his children, and died young. The witnesses in 1796 (when his name is incorrectly given as ‘Adam’) were shoemaker Walter Scott and miller John Oliver. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1806 and the deceased shoemaker John whose daughter Janet died in 1811. In 1841 his wife, brother-in-law John and son John were living on the Fore Raw (suggesting he was already deceased). John (b.1772) son of Adam and Ann Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. Family tradition says that they lived at the Mid Raw. He is likely to be the shoemaker in Hawick recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia, and still on the list in 1801. He was probably the progenitor of ‘Karsells’ in the United States, Canada and Australia, with his children likely being: Robert (b.1800), who emigrated to the U.S. in 1832; Nancy, who married Charles Hunter and emigrated to the U.S. in 1852; Adam (b.1803), who emigrated to Canada; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia in 1852. None of these baptisms are in the Parish records. Note that he is hard to distinguish from the John who was born about 5 years earlier. John (c.1810–90) son of John and Ann Tinlin, he was born in Hawick. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Stocking Maker Journeyman’ living on the Fore Raw with his mother and uncle John Tinlin; his age was given there as 26, but that was probably an underestimate. In 1851 he was a frame-worker, living next door to shoemaker Adam’s family on the Kirk Wynd. In about 1847 he married Agnes (or perhaps Ann) Henderson and the family emigrated to Australia in 1852. Their children included Robert (b.c.1849–97), Margaret (1851/2–1935, also known as Agnes), John, Ann and James. The first 2 children were born in Hawick. He died at Moonambel, Victoria. John (b.1829/30–92) son of Adam and Margaret Dryden. He was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 4 Weensland and in 1861 at 3 Kirkwynd. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Tait, who was from Kelso and died in 1892. Their children were: Elizabeth (c.1849–1911), who married Edward Wilson; Adam (c.1851–1928), who married Isabella Waugh; Margaret (c.1853–1914), who died unmarried; William (b.1855) and William (again, b.1856), who both died in infancy; John (1858–1892), who emigrated to New Zealand; Robert (1860–1930), who married twice, but had no children; and two more Williams (b.1863 and b.1865), who also died in infancy. John (b.1858) son of John and Elizabeth Tait, he was born in Hawick. In 1881 he emigrated to New Zealand. His children were John Edward, Adam (‘Jim’), Robert (‘Roy’) Tait, Herbert, Kenneth Henry, Doris Guest, Norman, Jean Myrtle and Thelma Bettsworth. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children include: Jean, who married James, son of John Scott in 1726; Margaret (b.1704); and William (b.1706). He is probably related to the John recorded in Minto a decade earlier. Jean, who married James Scott in Minto in 1733, may have been his daughter, as well as Margaret, who married Thomas Thomson in Minto in 1736. Robert (1800–92) probably son of John, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking weaver in Hawick and then in Edinburgh. He spent 12 years in the Navy, where he lost his sight in an accident. In 1832 he emigrated to Ohio, U.S.A. and later lived in Bloomington Indiana. He married Margaret Anderson and secondly Eleanor W. Finney. He lived to the age of 92. His descendants changed their surname to ‘Karsell’. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Helen Halliday is recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1839. She was a widow and pauper living on the Back Row in 1851, with her grand-daughters Janet Kersel and Helen Elliot. Robert (19th/20th C.) local manufacturer. In about 1903 he went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, Teviot Crescent (formerly written ‘Carsel’, ‘Carsell’, ‘Carswell’, ‘Karsell’, ‘Kersall’, ‘Karswell’, ‘Kersell’, ‘Kersill’, ‘Kersel’, ‘Kerswel’, ‘Kerswell’ and variants).

Kersel’s (ker-selz) n. small knitwear firm of the 19th century, probably preceding the founding of the Barrie & Kersel partnership.

Kershaw (ker-shaw) n. James (b.1795/6) weaver from Lancashire, who worked as a weaver in Hawick. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street (at the former No. 8). He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) McBirnie, who was from Denholm and related to John Leyden. Their children included John (1835/6–98), Thomas (b.1837/8), Janet (b.1838/9), Samuel (b.1842/3), Abraham (b.1845/6), James (b.1846/7), Mary (b.1849/50) and Edward (b.1858). John ‘Jack Kaish’ (1835/6–1898) eldest son of James and Betty McBirnie, he was a noted Hawick character who was only about 4-feet tall. He had stunted growth in his legs, but had a stocky build. Having an aptitude for learning, he was at one point intended for the ministry, but family circumstances meant that he became a frameworker. He was said to have a great memory, a stock of common sense, a huge store of amusing anecdotes and to be well liked by everyone. He was a keen angler and won medals at the Buccleuch Bowling Club, where he was made a life member. In politics he was a Liberal and he was also a member of Masonic Lodge 111. He died unmarried and was buried by his brother Masons. A photograph exists of him, staged playing bowls.

Kersheugh (kers-hewch) n. farm on the Jed Water, just south of Glendouglas. It was a home. of the Kers from early times. This is probably the place written as ‘carshuyoill’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when Andrew Douglas was there. John Douglas was there in 1797 and Andrew and Robert Douglas in 1801 (it is ‘Corysheuch’ on Pont’s c.1654 map, matching the former local pronunciation).

Kershope (ker-shup, -sup) n. area on the Border, immediately south of Newcastleton, alongside the Kershope Burn, with Kershope Forest stretching off into Cumbria. The farms of Scotch and English Kershope are across the Border from each other here. Lands here were granted by William de Rossedale to the hospital of St. Peter in York, probably in the mid-12th century, as recorded in a copy made in the early 14th century; the grant describes the boundaries of the lands as ‘the fosse of the Galwegians and the rivulus running from thence into the Lydel, and on the other side of the fosse straight to the high moor, and so by the watershed of the moor as far as the old way of Roxburgh, and as said way falls into Creshope from above the shealings which were Eadulf’s’. This was presumably the same as the lands recorded as ‘Greshoppa’ given to the same priory by William ‘de Russendale’ and his wife, as confirmed by King Malcolm and the ‘Gressheope’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276. Being right on the Border, the area must have been regularly subject to raids.

In 1494/5 Stephen Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for stealing 80 cows from there along with some Englishmen, and for killing John Murray. In 1502 Robert Jackson in Wolfcleuchhead had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ to steal 14 cows and goods from there, as well as raiding ‘le pele de kershop’. It is further recorded in 1502 that Adam Scott had 23 sheep and a horse stolen from him there. In 1541 the lands were valued at 10 merks, but said to be then waste ‘except for summering’. In 1551 it was listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddesdale where meetings could take place between the Justiciar of Liddesdale and the English Wardens. In 1552 it was written by the English that ‘From the foot o Cryssop unto the head of Cryssop three several Watches, and in every Watch four men; whereof one to be at Craighill-foot, and the other two beneath, and the Searchers for every Watch nightly to be appointed by the said John Musgrave’. Gilbert Eliott of Stobs had sheep there (perhaps on the English side) in the early 17th century. In 1633 rental was owed from there by the Earl of Buccleuch to Sir Richard Graham. In about 1645 a flock of 50 sheep, belonging to the Earl of Buccleuch, was stolen from there, but the shepherd followed the thieves to an alehouse at Kirklinthe in Cumberland, where he accosted the thieves, warning them that other men were also following, whereupon they fled, and he recovered the stolen sheep. The Scottish farm is shown on the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 1007 acres, bounded by the Border, Sorbietrees, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and Flicht; the farmhouse appears to be close to the modern Kershope Bridge. The farmer there in 1797 was Henry Hutton – ‘When cauld, sleet and showers stain the braes o’ the Kershope, They slightly skim o’er the sweet lass o’ the shiel’ [DA], ‘Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr’d the Southrons flee Wi’ mony a clash and clure’ [TK] (the name first appears as ‘Greshoppa’ and ‘Creshope’, in the mid-12th century; it is ‘Kershope’ in 1494/5 and 1500, ‘Cresoppe’ in 1584, ‘Kershoipe’ in 1633 and ‘Carshop’ in about 1645; it is ‘Kirsop’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas and ‘Kershope’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map at the modern position of the twin farmsteads of Scotch and English Kershope; its origin is probably the Old English ‘cærse hop’. meaning ‘cress valley’).

Kershope (ker-sup) n. former name for lands in the Ward of Ettrick, which were Crown lands at one point. They should not be confused with Kershope on the Border. They are located to the east of Yarrow village, with Easter and Wester Kershope marked on modern maps. The lands were owned by the Crown from about 1456. In the late part of the 15th century the lands there were raided by Stephen Turnbull (brother of the Laird of Whithope), stealing 80 cattle belonging to John Murray of Falahill. The lands were leased by John Murray, then to brothers John and Ninian, then to John’s widow and son in 1486, by Baldred Blackadder in 1488, then Ninian and John Murray in 1490. In 1499 the lands were let half to Thomas, son of John Murray, and half to Ninian Murray. Then on the death of Thomas Murray, half was let to James, son of Peter Murray. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and in 1510 was feued half to John Murray and half to James, son of Peter Murray. Adam Scott was there in the early 16th century, with his son William complaining in 1533 that the Scots of Howpasley and Dryhope raided the farm. In 1533 Isobel Murray (wife of Alexander Elliot) assigned her lands there to her ‘brother german’ Michael the Kershope Burn

Scott. In 1541 the ‘Est Syde of Kershope’ was occupied by John Murray and the western side by Michael Scott. In 1555 Robert Scott of Bowhill was served heir to his brother Walter in half a steadying there, called ‘Westsyde de Kershop’. In 1610 Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited his father’s half land of ‘Forrestae de Kerhoip’. A 1649 description of Selkirkshire states that ‘Kershope Burn comes off the March of Kirkhope and falls into Yaro beneath Deuchar’. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1731. Wester Kershope was held by Johnstone of Alva in 1802 (it is ‘Kershop’ in 1456, 1468 and 1486, ‘Carsope’ in 1499 and 1501; it is marked ‘Kersup’, ‘Cershope’ and ‘Corshope’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps, and ‘Kersupp’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

the Kershope Burn (ku-ker-shup-burn) n. stream that forms part of the Scotland/England Border for about 8 miles near Newcastleton, and flows into the Liddel. The area was once more heavily populated and there are many signs of former cultivation and settlement along its banks, including settlements, cairnfields, hut circles, rig and furrow lines and sheepfolds. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘Kyrsope is a smale becke and desceneth from the wast grounde called Kyrsope heade. It devydes the realmes from the meare dyke untill it meet with Lyddall, and is from the head unto the foote without habitacion, and at the foote of it is the fortes’ (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘cress valley’).

Kershopefit (ker-shup-fi) n. Kershopefoot, hamlet on the south (i.e. English) side of the Kershope burn, just where it meets the Liddel Water. It is ‘Kyrsope fott’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as ‘Kyrsofoote’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked ‘Kirsopefote’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, and ‘Kersop foot’ and ‘Kersop fute’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kersehopefoot’ in 1821).

Kershopeheead (ker-shup-heed) n. Kershopehead, a farm on the English side of the upper Kershope Burn. It is ‘Kyrsophe hed’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is ‘Kyrsopehead’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked ‘Kirsopheade’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Land. The name also appears to have been used to describe the area around the head of the Kershope Burn, near Flight Moss. This is probably the area referred to as ‘Cahopethead’ in about 1645, when a group of Armstrongs left stolen sheep there, when they went off to look for food, only to find that the English owners had followed them and recovered the booty.

Kersley (kers-lee) n. Leonard (1882–1918) son of William and Hannah Shackell of Winchester. He worked as a printer with Allan Watt’s and also at the Hawick News and opened a draper’s business at 8 Myreslawgreen. He was a Lieutenant in the Salvation Army and served as Vice-President of the Hawick Trades Council. He was Lance Corporal in the K.O.S.B. He was killed in WWI. In 1907 he married Margaret (‘Meg’) Young, daughter of Walter Nisbet; she continued to run the shop until 1936 died in 1970 and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. They had children Victor William (1909–2002) and Margaret (b.1916) and lived at 2 Morrison Place. The circumstances of his death in June 1918 are not known; he is buried at Dusans British Cemetery, France. Prof. Leonard ‘Len’ (1938– ) son of Victor William and Helen Haig. He was educated at Hawick High School and gained a Ph.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is Professor in the Physics department at Aberystwyth, researching in atmospheric physics. In 1970 he married Jill Wallace and they have 2 children.

kerve (kerv) v., arch. to carve – ‘But nowe thaye brik doun the cervet wark thero’ … [HSR], ‘…wi’ horn hannels kerved into a’ kinds o’ whurly-whas …’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

Kessy (ke-see) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [III].

ket (ke) n., arch. the meat of a diseased animal, especially a sheep – ‘She had twined the kett (ket) n., arch. a spongy kind of peat, containing many coarse fibres.

kettit (ke-tee’, -ti’) adj., arch. spent, emaciated – ‘Till, peeled o’ flesh by vile ambition’s nither, ’Tis kettit sae its ribs scarce hing thegither’ [JoHa], ‘Ketteet-oof = spent, exhausted [in the sense of having ‘run done’, or of being no longer fertile or productive’ [ECS].

Kettle Hill (ke’-ul-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just to the soth of Burnmouth farm, with Shielden Sike to the northi.

kickmaleerie (kik-ma-lee-ree) n., arch., poet. a trifle, knick-knack, particularly referring to furiture or decoration – ‘Sae mony kickmaleeries In my house do not suppose’ [JR] (see also whig-maleerie).

Kick-ma-leerie (kik-ma-lee-ree) n. nickname for Christopher Irving. He was said to be a fiddler, which was another meaning of the phrase.

kick the can (kik-thu-kun) n. children’s game in which one person tries to find the others before any of them can kick a can that is placed at base – ‘It niver cost oo owt ti play kick the can. What fun oo hed though’ [We], ‘... whaever was first ti kick the can, now if hei ran by mei an kicked the can, A’d ti gain away an hide, an hei was left ti dae’d’ [DaS].

Kidd (kid) n. name of a travelling dentist of the mid-19th century, who set up shop at Bunyan the Barbers, 29 High Street, charging sixpence for an extraction. He could be the Thomas D., retired dentist from Lilliesleaf, who is recorded at the Crown Inn in 1871.

Kidd (kid) n. David (d.1835) mason in North Greenholm. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. Helen see Margaret.

James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at ‘Borthwickshields Eskdal’ (although it is unclear what this means) in 1780 and at Borthwickshields in 1785. He is probably the James who married Isabel Forsyth in Robertson in 1779. His children included: Kathrine (b.1780); Margaret (b.1782); and John (b.1785). He may be the James, son of John, born in Robertson in 1747.

John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1753. He married Margaret Watson in Robertson in 1746. His children included: James (b.1747); Jean (b.1750); Bell (b.1753); and John (b.1756). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91, and was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Lilliesleaf. In the 1788 cart tax roll he was listed as ‘Robert’. He may be the John who married Agnes Winthrop and whose children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included John (b.1782) and George (b.1784). James (b.1787), David (b.1790) and Thomas (b.1797), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his children. He could be the ‘old man from Alewarter’ of that name who is recorded dying in Hawick in 1805. John (b.1782) son of the earlier John. He was a ploughman at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Margaret ‘Maggie’ (16th C.) resident of the Saughtree area, also known as ‘Helen’ in a different version. She was said to have fathered several children to Robert (or perhaps William) Elliot of Larriston (or perhaps Redheugh), according to a Liddesdale tradition. According to different version, these offspring included Gilbert Elliott, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ or Gilbert, who was recorded as ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ in 1603. She is said to have lived at a place called ‘Kidd’s Walls’, but had to be moved by Elliot when his wife discovered her. She then lived in a small tower he had built at Hartsgarth, the ruins of which were used to build the house there, according to Thomas Elliot of Meikledale. A different version of the story (recounted by Jeffrey) has her being poisoned by the Elliot women and with her dying breath cursing the family to die single and despoiled. Note that about 200 years later Robert Elliot of Redheugh married a woman of the same name, suggesting that there may be some con founding of stories (also written ‘Kid’).

Kidd’s Linn (kids-lin) n. waterfall on the Staneshiel Burn on the farm of Dinlabyre in upper Liddesdale. It is also known as ‘Kitty Linn’ or ‘Kitty Linns’. There was formerly a shepherd’s cottage there, where Ninian Hislop was in 1835.
James Armstrong was shepherd in 1851. Meg, the wife of an earlier shepherd claimed to have had an encounter with the Devil, pushing him over the precipice near her house. This inspired some lines entitled ‘The Deil’s Dead’, to which Newcastle poet David Anderson composed the reply ‘The Deil’s no dead’ (it is ‘Kittylins’ in 1835).

Kidd’s Scar (kidz-skawr) n. clifftop region by Craikhope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley. An enclosure and some old ring enclosures are visible near there on aerial photographs.

Kidd’s Waas (kidz-wawz) n. supposed site of the former house of Helen (or Maggie) Kidd, who tradition says was a lover of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, tragically poisoned by his family to end the unsuitable match. In Jeffrey’s history of 1864 he identifies a site on the hillside on the opposite side of the valley from Saughtree schoolhouse. Shepherd Frank Turnbull identified a similar site according to a report of 1889. However, it is unclear whether there are any remains there now.

Kidd (ki-dee) n. Rev. William (1818/9–49) from Coldstream, he became minister at Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk in 1843. However, he died suddenly of cholera only 6 years later; he visited a family with the first cholera case in Lilliesleaf village and was dead the next morning. He married Grace, daughter of Rev. Robert Cranstoun of Morebattle and left a young family.

Kid Sike (kid-sik) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near the farm of Comnonside.

Kielder (keel-dur) n. village over the Border into England, in the Cheviots, where the Kielder Burn meets the North Tyne. Also the name of the general area, including Kielder Forest Park and Kielder Water. An old barn there was used in the mid-19th century for ‘Tynehead Preaching’ in the summer, with services attended by people from both sides of the Border. Kielder Castle was originally a hunting lodge, built for the Duke of Northumberland in 1775. A haugh near there was the location for a ball game played between men from Liddesdale and men from North Tyne in about 1790. An old gun found near there is in Hawick Museum – ‘Whar Kielder meets wi’ the Tyne, Masel an’ ma kinsmen three, We tackled the Percies nine – They’ll never mair meddle wi’ me’ [T], ‘The eiry blood-hound howl’d by night, The streamers flaunted red, Till broken streaks of flaky light O’er Keeldar’s mountains spread’ [JL] (note often misspelled ‘Keighler’).

Kielder Forest (keel-dur-fo-rist) n. Britain’s largest forest, and the largest man-made forest in Europe, covering over 230 square miles in Northumberland. Managed as a commercial forest, mainly planted with Sitka and Norway Spruce, it is also used as a recreational area.

the Kielder Stane (thu-keel-dur-stän) n. a boulder marking the Border, since at least the time of the Rievers, about 3 miles east of Deadwater, now in the Kielder Forest. It is said to be unlucky to walk round the stone 3 times counterclockwise.

Kielder Witter (keel-dur-wit’-ur) n. largest man-made lake in Europe, in the North Tyne valley of upland Northumberland. It is about 8 miles long, with 27 miles of coastline, covers some 2,684 acres, and is said to contain enough water to submerge all of England to a depth of 8 m. It supplies water to much of Northumbria, and is a recreational centre attracting a huge number of visitors (sometimes called ‘Kielder Lake’ or ‘Kielder Reservoir’).

Kildowan (kil-dow-in) n. villa on Wilton Hill, roughly opposite the Police Station. It was built for manufacturer William Lyle in about 1883.

Kilford (kil-furd) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly on the opposite side of the valley to Riccarton in Liddesdale. It is near the Kilm Burn, suggesting that the name is connected. However, the precise location of this tower house is not known. This is probably the ‘Kylsfurd’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 24 shillings, and with Henry and William Nixon as tenants. ‘Grey Will of the Kyls Ford’ is recorded in 1563, when there was a bond for apprehending him. In 1586 it is referred to as ‘the tuentie four schilling land’ when half of it was occupied by Martin Elliot of Braiddlie and released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632 (it is ‘Kilfurde’ in 1586 and 1632; it is labelled as ‘Kilfurde’, and probably not ‘Kilsurd’ on Blaeu’s map).

Kilgarth (kil-gawrth) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map between Todscleuch and Tailleycleuch, on the opposite bank of the Liddel valley from Larriston. There is no evidence of a former house in the area. It is probably the ‘Culgrath’ recorded in the rental roll of 1531, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Clement Crozier. It may be the land referred to as Culgatis in a leased of 1586 (possibly the same as Kingarth).

the Killin Hoose (kìllìn hùs, -hùs) n., pl. popular name for the period of Scottish history roughly 1660–88 (and particularly the early 1680s) when Covenanters were persecuted for their beliefs.

killit (kìl-ìt) pp., poet. killed – ‘Wharfor ye be wutnesses untill yoursels that ye ar the childer o’ them whilk killet the prophets’[HSR], ‘An’ the husbanmen tuik his servents an’ nevellet ane, an’ killet anither, an’ stanet anither’[HSR].

killogie (kìl-ì-gì) n., arch. a kiln, the open space in front of a kiln fireplace – ‘A muckle . . . motor-laarie – a perfect killogie for reek – cam snorkin an dunnerin bye’[ECS], ‘The mill chimilh smuiks leike a killogie’[ECS] (also kiln-logie and kill-ee).

Killoley (kìl-ì-lee) n. former farm in Liddesdale, said to be near the site of the Chapel at Dinlabyre (the existence of which is uncertain). It may also have been known as Killoley Chapel. The name could be related to Kelly Cleuch, which is about 1 km to the north. It is listed in the c.1376 rental list in the charters of the Douglases of Morton, recorded as ‘Killoley cum Mylneholme’ and worth 5 merks. In 1541 it is valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Nixons. John and William Nixon were there in 1544. ‘Daud Niksoun of Kewly’, recorded in 1581, could also have been a tenant, as well as ‘Hobb Nixon of Kellely’ in 1590. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is ‘Kellilee’ in 1541, ‘Kellell’ and ‘Kellee’ in 1544, ‘Calleley’ in 1590/1, ‘Keellie’ in 1595, ‘Killillie’ in 1667, ‘Kellllie’ in 1691 and ‘Kel-ly’ on Pont’s c.1608 map).

Killoley (kìl-ì-lee) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant of the lands of Heuchhousehill, along with John Nixon. His name is given as ‘Kelleelee’, and is surely related to the nearby lands of Killoley.

killpatrick (kìl-pà-trìk) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Storie and their unnamed child was baptised in 1682. The witnesses were ‘students’ Robert Cunningham and William Gledstains.

call’t (kìl-t) pp., poet. killed – ‘Wiles he saw a herlin soon, And whiles killt a troot . . . ’[DH] (not obviously Hawick).

Kilmeny (kil-me-nee) n. large house on Wilton Park Road built for ex-Provost George Wilson around 1879, designed by John Guthrie. It was later the residence of Charles J. Glenny. It was gifted to the Education Authority by George Heron Wilson in 1929 and used as a hostel for country girls attending the High School. For a brief period it was run as a hotel. In the years 1948-57 it provided accommodation for district nurses (the name could be related to the poem by the Ettrick Shepherd).

Kilnbrae (kiln-brae) n. former name for the Mill Path, in use in the 17th century, named after the kiln that stood there. This may be the kiln that 2 men climbed onto to escape the Slitrig flood of 1767 (also written ‘Kiln Brae’ as well as ‘Kiln Peth’).

Kiln Brae (kiln-brä) n. region just south of the farm of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. The farmstead of Kilnbraehead was once there.

Kiln Burn (kiln-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which rises on Mervins Law and runs roughly north-east to join the Jed Water near Old Jeddart.

Kiln Cleuch (kiln-klooch) n. possible name of lands near Abbotrule. A court case involving John, son of Gilbert Oliver ‘in kilclewis’ is recorded in 1502. It is possible that it is the same place as Kilnsike).

Kiln Croft (kiln-kroft) n. area of land near Hawick Mill, part of which was taken over for the section of Wellowgate Cemetery opened in 1849 (this may be an error for Kill Croft).

Kiln Green (kiln-green) n. public park land on the haugh in the north of Langholm, between the A7 and the Ewes Water. It was said to be the location where the rescue of Kinmont Willie was planned in 1596.

Kilnheugh (kiln-hewch) n., arch. the open space in front of a kiln, where the kiln-man could shelter, a ‘killogie’ (used by John Hogg).

Kilnhill (kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road and west of Bramblehall, also known as ‘Trinity Kilnhill’, presumably named after a kiln that once stood there (perhaps associated with Bogleibarns).

Kiln Knowe (kiln-now) n. hill above Limekiln Edge, reaching a height of 430 m and containing a triangulation pillar.

Kilnknowe (kiln-now) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, lying to the north-west of the Kirk Manse. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. It was ‘Killknow’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, when owned by Gilbert Eliott and valued at £80. Andrew Hood was tenant there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George Henderson was a weaver living there in the 18th century. Along with other parts of Abbotrule estate, it was sold by William Kerr in 1750. James Notman was there in 1788. In 1788 it was valued at £80 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. John Minto was mason there in 1801. He was still owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811, when it was ‘Killknow’ and valued at £47 5s. It was also written ‘Kllknowe’ (it should not be confused with Kirknoe, which lies directly to the north).

Kilnknowe Junction (kiln-now-jungk-shin) n. junction where the Peebles Railway Extension joined the Waverley Line, just north of Galashiels.

Kiln-logie (kiln-logie) n., arch. a kiln, the fireplace of a kiln – ‘I found the decent old miller lighting in at the kiln-logie’ [BCM1880] (also killogie and kill-e).

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, former name for the Mill Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, a lane connecting Wilton Path and Underdamside, named after the kiln for drying oats at the Roughheugh Flour Mill. The name disappeared by the early 20th century. Also a former name for Mill Path (e.g. on Wood’s 1824 map) after the drying kiln there.

Kiln Pots (kiln-pots) n., pl. local name for a series of hollows on the hillsides of the upper part of the farms of Peel and Myredykes in Castleton Parish. They vary in size from about 4 to 12 feet, and occur naturally as a result of erosion of the rock there.

Kilnsike (kiln-sik) n. ruined fortified 16th century farm-house on the road between Jedburgh and Chesters, just to the east of Westerhouses. It measures 11.5 m by 7.5 m, with the ruin still having 3 walls to the first floor. The lands were valued at 25 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. The tenant there in 1541 was Andrew Oliver. It is ‘kilnsyk’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls when there were 2 hearths there (it is ‘Kilsyke’ in 1538 and ‘Kylsyke’ in 1539 and 1541).

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream that joins Ironcastle Sike to the east of Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. The remains of Kilnsike Tower are near the head of the stream and the Iron Castle settlement near the foot. There is also an area of rig lines there.

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running south to join the Black Burn to the north-west of Newcastle ton. It rises on Kiln Rig and the farm of Woolhope is on its banks, with Kiln Knowe near its mouth. The area also contains old sheepfolds, boundary dykes and at least 6 peat-covered cairns higher up (‘Kill Syke’ and ‘Kill Rig’ are marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

kilt  (kilt) n. traditional dress worn formerly in northern Scotland, and in the Lowlands on celebratory occasions, also known as a ‘skirt’, v., poet., arch. to hike up skirts, tuck up clothing so that the legs are free – ‘For Mangerton-house Auld Downie is gane, Her coats she has kilted up to her knee …’ [CPM], ‘The trout walloping about were too much for mother, so she kilted her coats and waded in and went home with a load of trout’ [JeC] (from Danish).

King

King (king) n. Christina (b.1827/8) daughter of James, she was a niece of Janet, who was housekeeper at Abbotrule. She also worked on the estate, being in charge of the poultry and milking. In 1888 she moved into Hawick. James (16th/17th C.) local man described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 list of people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. James (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Marjory Park, who was also from Hawick. Probably the same James and ‘Mader’ (or Martha) Park had children Adam and William Elliot baptised in 1807, the baptisms recorded in both the East Bank Kirk and Minto Parish. They also had children George Elliot (b.1810), unnamed (b.1812) and John (b.1814) baptised in the East Bank Kirk. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at North Synton, recorded on the 1791–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1799 he was listed at North Synton on the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. James (b.c.1780) herd at Standhill on the 1801 Militia ballot for Ancrum Parish. James (b.1796/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a farmer at Dimpleknowe near Ashkirk. In 1861 he was at Dimpleknowe, farming 200 acres and employing 6 people. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. His wife was Sarah. By 1868 W. Douglas was recorded as farmer at Dimpleknowe, perhaps his son. James (1916–93) born in Hawick, brother of Harry and Thomas, with his mother being Elizabeth. He was a Sergeant Major in the 6th Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders, who received the Distinguished Conduct Medal in 1944. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £2 3s 11d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (b.1810/1) servant to the Henderson family at Abbotrule. She served as nurse and later as housekeeper. Her niece Christina also worked on the Abbotrule estate and later moved to Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) tenant in North Synton. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia; in 1799 he was ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Ashkirk parish’ and he was still tenant on the 1801 Militia ballot. He must have been related to James, who was farmer at North Synton at about the same time, perhaps his brother. He could be the John, son of William, who was baptised in Ashkirk in 1775. John George (d.1860s) brewer of Hawick. He died at his brewery, aged 34, and is buried in Wellogate cemetery. His widow later married R.R. MacQueen of West Port Church. Mark (18th/19th C.) cooper who lived in a small thatched cottage in Abbotrule. He was a staunch Anti-Burgher, and was known locally as ‘Maister Clairk’s recruiting sergeant’ (Rev. James Clerk being the minister of the Townhead congregation in Jedburgh). His son Jamie followed his father’s beliefs and would alternate between attending the church in Jedburgh and Hawick West. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he and his wife Marion Turnbull gave a tack of land to Stephen Bulman. This was an acre of land called ‘Halhill’ between the ‘Mercat gait’, the street that passes to Langnewton Mill and ‘the Watter’. Richard (1685/6–1752) Kirk Officer in Ashkirk. He married Betty Holywell, who died in 1756, aged 65. They are buried in Ashkirk. Robert (b.1786/7) from Jedburgh, he served in the Artillery and later lived in Lilliesleaf. He was listed in the 1851 census as a Chelsea Pensioner, living with his wife Martha Riddell and children John, James and Robert, as well as his brother-in-law James Riddell. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He was a member of the Burgher Kirk in Lilliesleaf. In 1873 his article ‘Some Jedburgh Characters’ was published in the Transactions. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Redford and their children included: John (b.1775); probably the farmer at North Synton; Margaret (b.1778); Agnes (b.1784); and Mary (b.1786).

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for members of the family which ran the King’s Head in Hawick, e.g. Andrew Scott. the King (thu-king) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the Queen’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century. Also a nickname for an early Robert Elliot, recorded in 1500. the King (thu-king) n. nickname for Thomas Douglas in Hobkirk. Kingarth (king-arth) n. former lands just to the south of Riccarton, perhaps associated with some of the remains of buildings in the area (possibly the same as Kilgarth). King Nellie (king-ne-lee) n. nickname for Nellie Dickson. the King o the Dean (thu-king-o-thu-deen) n. popular name for a large tree in Denholm.
the King o the Wud

Dean. It was adjacent to ‘the Queen o the Dean’, but closer to the bank. It was among the trees swept away in the Denholm Flood of 1806.

the King o the Wud (thu-king-ö-thu-wud) n. large oak tree on the Ferniehirst estate, at the top of a small ravine, to the east of the Capon Tree. It once reached a height of about 78 feet, with a circumference of 14 feet – ‘How many years, O King, have ye looked from your high throne down On the broad white road into England, on the winding stream of the Jed . . .’ [WHO].

the Kings (thu-kingz) n. theatre on Towerdyke-side, in the old Corn Exchange buildings, having live shows and theatrical productions, the name being current in the first half of the 20th century. There were films of the Common Riding made especially for showing in this theatre in at least 1929, 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934. It became part of the Odeon cinema chain and was also called the Odeon. It was later renamed the Classic and the Odeon in 1992. The name was also used to describe the Kings Hotel on North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century – ‘...For the Kings tippence oo paid Or jookeet in doon the Arcade’ [IWL].

the King’s Airms (thu-kingz-ármz) n. former inn in Newcastleton. It was located on Douglas Street and later became the Commercial Inn and then the Liddesdale Hotel. In 1837 the proprietor was Sussanah Rutherford and in 1852 was William Scott.

king’s claver (kingz-klá-vur) n., arch. mellilot, a kind of clover, Melilotus officinalis.

the King’s Common Street (thu-kingz-kó-min-stree-) n. former name for the road that connected the Howegate with the Newcastleton Road, in use in the 17th century. The road ran through the Kirkwynd, over a ford at the foot of ‘Manse Lane’ and up the ‘Kilnbrae’. It is mentioned in the Town Book in 1710.

king's covenanter (kingz-kuv-in-an'-er) n., arch. a children’s street game involving a child calling 'King’s Covenanter, come if ye dare venture’ and trying to catch any who run over, with the captive replacing the captor.

king’s ellwand (kingz-el-wawnd) n., arch. the stars in the Belt of Orion, the foxglove, Digitalis purpurea.

Kingsgrame (kingz-gráum) n. former name for a hill in the upper Yarrow valley. In a description of Selkirkshire written in 1649 it is stated to be the source of both the Crosscleuch Burn and the Altrie Burn, suggesting that it was an old name for the Wiss or Fall Law.

the King’s Heid (thu-kingz-heed) n. the King’s Head Hotel, a former inn located at 13 High Street. James Dickson was probably proprietor in the latter part of the 18th century, with his wife Nellie running it after this death. William Scott (‘Wullie the King’) was proprietor in the early 19th century. It may also have been the name of ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s inn at the Sandbed for a while.

the King’s High Street (thu-kingz-hI-stree’) n. common name for the High Street in old charters and sasines. Also known as the ‘King’s Highway’, the ‘King’s Street’ and similar terms. The name also applied to the continuation of the modern High Street as the main thoroughfare via Silver Street, the Howegate and the Loan and out of Hawick to the north and the south (it is ‘the kingis streit’ in 1579 and ‘the King’s hie streit’ in 1688).

the Kings Hotel (thu-kingz-hó-tel) n. hotel at 23 North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century. It was built as Northville, a private house, in the late 1800s. It then became a temperance hotel, Gibson’s, and sometime after WWII it had become the Kings. It also expanded into the adjacent building. For a few years it was run as the Roxburgh Inn, but by the mid-1990s the building had fallen on hard times and was empty for about a decade. In 2005 the main building was converted into housing units.

Kingside Loch (king-sd-loch) n. body of water south-east of Bucleuch. Kingside Loch Sike flows into it from the east. It is listed in 1649 among the lochs in Selkirkshire (possibly the body incorrectly marked ‘Pott Loch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Kingsmoorloch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

the King’s Rantin (thu-kingz-rawn-tin) n. former celebration (at public expense) by the local dignitaries on the King’s Birthday. Such a celebration was recorded being held for George I (whose birthdate was 28th May) in 1724 and the expenses are recorded in 1732. It moved to 30th October in 1733, the birthday of George II. In 1739 it is recorded that festivities began at 10 a.m. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not pay the expenses. The festivities grew in size, particularly during the reign of George III, celebrated on the 4th of June (shortly after the Common Riding). This was George III’s actually birthday, but the same day was also celebrated throughout Britain as George IV and William IV’s official birthdays. There was a function in the Council Chambers of the old Town Hall, with the alcohol traditionally being supplied by the Bailies. The excess of the celebration was denounced in James Hogg’s lines ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rants, nor Bailie’s messes’. There were displays of home made fireworks in the town and rival ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ bonfires. In the 18th century this was a major focus of activity for the town’s youth, with material being collected for about a month before, and regular raids on the opposing gang’s store of fuel. The bonfires lit at each end of town were said to be a very old tradition, but ended about 1800. In the early years of the 19th century the King’s health was drunk outside the Town Hall by the Magistrates and their guests ‘Highland fashion’, with glasses thrown over the shoulders and women of the town catching them in their aprons. In later years there was also a parade through the town – ‘Payd that night ye likkor was got to Ranting 2 4 0’ [BR1732].

King’s Rig (kingz-rig) n. ridge on the northeast side of the Maidens, crossed by the Catrail. A stream there (which joins the Harwood Burn and ultimately the Slitrig) is called King’s Sike (the connection with any King is obscure).

kinly (kin-lee) adj., poet. burning – ‘Let kinlie cools fa’ apon thame: let thame be thrawn intil the fire’ [HSR].

Kinly Stick (kin-lee-stik) n. song written around 1870 by William Easton. It follows a satirical story about two well-known contemporaries of Easton’s, George (also sometimes referred to as Dick) Whillans (‘Kinly Stick’) and John Mitchell (‘Heather Jock’), who pawn the very shirts on their backs in order to get more drink. A fifth verse was added later (by 1909, and probably not much earlier) about visiting Milmoe’s pawn shop. The song is clearly based on the song called ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, with words and music written by Henry Clay Work in 1865 (he also wrote ‘My Grandfather Clock’, ‘Marching Through Georgia’ and ‘Father, Dear Father’). The song followed right after the American Civil War, and the chorus evoked images of the Liberty Bell; it was therefore extremely popular at the time in the U.S. The Hawick words can be seen as a direct parody of Work’s, being about ringing the bell at the bar, rather than in the church! Other parodies also exist, including ‘Strike the Bell, Second-mate’ and the more modern ‘Strike the Bell, Landlord’. Adie Ingles suggested that the Australian sheep-shearing version, ‘Click Go the Shears’, was brought back from there by Mitchell (Heather Jock) himself, but there is no evidence that he ever left Hawick (and the Australian version is clearly itself a parody of ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, first published in 1891). Note that the words of the chorus are almost always slightly altered compared with the published version. The accompaniment was slightly changed for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, with an attempt to restore some cheer to the music. It has been covered by some others artists, e.g. the Caern folk trio in 1969. Scocha recorded a ‘punkified’ version on their 2006 CD ‘Gie’d Sum Wellie’ – ‘…Ring the bell, Kinly, Stick, ring the bell’ [WE], – ‘…And the Kinly Stick he’s mortal And he lies upon the flags’ [WE].

Kinmont Willie (kin-mon’-wi-lee) n. nickname name for William Airmstrong who was rescued from Carlisle Castle in 1596 by the Bold Buccleuch, as immortalised in the ballad. He lived at Morton Tower (also called Sark Tower), west of Canonbie, and was the Armstrong chief in that area. According to a letter from Lord Scope, there were 500 (although this is clearly an exaggeration) horsemen, supporters of Buccleuch and Kinmont involved in the assault on Carlisle Castle, ‘appointed with gavlocks and crowes of iron, hand peckes, axes and skillinge lathers’, getting in at a corner of the outer court, undermining the postern door and carrying away Willie. English reports say that 2 watchmen were killed and a guard of the prisoner injured, the action being easy because the night watch were sheltering from the weather. It is also claimed that Johnstones and Ivings were lying in wait near the Border, in case the band of rescuers were pursued and needed help. Further details are available in (probably biased) English accounts of the subsequent investigation. It is said that there were meetings a few days before with certain Englishmen to plan the raid, and that some of the watchmen at the castle had been paid off. An exact roster of the rescuers is not known, but Scott of Satchells gives a list of 33 Scots who rode with their chief, and we can assume that many Armstrongs also took part. An English informer claimed that the party included: the Laird of Buccleuch (Sir Walter Scott, later 1st Lord of Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Goldielands (probably son of the Laird); Walter Scott of Branchholm (probably an error for Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Harden (either ‘Auld Wat’ or a son of his); (Walter) Scott of Todrig; William Elliot of Gorenberry (or perhaps a son); John Elliot, called of Copshaw (also perhaps a son); the Laird of Mangerton (Archibald Armstrong); the young Laird of Whithaugh (probably Simon) and his son (perhaps Lancelot); 3 men of ‘Calfhills’ (probably Armstrongs of Calffield); Sandy Armstrong, son to ‘Hebbye’ (son of Abraham of Woodehouselee); 4 sons of Kimmont Willie, Jock, Francke, Geordie and Sandy; Willie Bell ‘Red Cloak’ (Laird of Blackethouse) and 2 of his brothers; Walter Bell of ‘Godesby’; 3 Armstrongs from Tweeden (perhaps Hector, Jock and Ringan); John Armstrong of Hollows and his brother; Christie Armstrong of Barnglies and Robbie of Langholm (probably his brother); the Armstrongs of Chingills; and ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ (the Ivings) – ‘And when we came to the lower prison, Where Willie o Kimmont he did lie, ‘O sleep ye, wake ye, Kinmont Willie, Upon the morn that thou’s to die?’ [T] (also ‘Kynmont’, ‘Kynmonth’ and variants; ‘kimonts tower’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map).
kinnelt called by this name. The stone drinking trough exists, although is no longer used by travellers (the origin is possibly from drovers stopping for a smoke there; also spelled ‘Kinnelcuttie’ and ‘Kinnel Cutty’).

kinnelt (ki-nul) pp. kindled – ‘...when his wrath is kinnelt onlie acause’ [HSR], ‘An’ ane fire was kinnelt in their clan ...’ [HSR], ‘...hed kinnelt a lunt an war thrang poachtin aboot an maskin to’ [ECS], ‘...Scrapped his buits aye at the door, Kinnelt the fire, an’ never swore’ [IJ] (also spelled ‘kinlet’ and variants).

kinnen (ki-nin) n., poet. a rabbit – ‘Make kinnen and capon ready then, And venison and capon ready then, And venison in great plentiful, We’ll welcome home our royal king, I hope he’ll dine at Gilnockie’ [CPM].

the Kinnin Braes (thu-ki-nin-bräiz) n. area in the Ale valley near Ancrum – ‘Before my tottering feet should fail In life’s late wintry days, Oh, let me hear the voice of Aill Amang the Kinnin Braes’ [WP].

Kinninghaa (ki-ning-haw) n. Kinninghall, farm between Cauldmuil and Cavers. It is near the former farm of West Mains. Robert Scott was farming here and at Little Cote in the 1860s (also written ‘Kinning Hall’ and sometimes ‘Kinnelhull’; the name was introduced by an owner after the town in Norfolk, Kenninghall).

Kinninghaha Hill (ki-ning-haw-hil) n. Kinninghall Hill, hill in Cavers Parish, just to the east of Deanbrae, reaching a height of 217 m (718 ft). Its summit contains fragmentary remains of a hillfort, with 2 sets of ramparts and possible hut circles inside. To the south-west are the remains of a possible enclosure.

kinnle (ki-nul) v. to kindle – ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinneld till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH].

kinsh (kinsh) n., arch. a lever used in quarrying, v., arch. to twist, tighten by twisting, to steal, pilfer, filch – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rockbools, or the bains ‘ll kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘That greedy gullmaw ov a callant hed kinshed the haaf o the fookie-meat A brocht hyimm’ [ECS], ‘Thae ill-deedie callants kinsh’t a hash o’ aipples’ [GW] (this is ‘kinch’ elsewhere in Scotland).

kip (kip) n., arch. a turned-up tip, especially of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce climb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kipps’ [HSR] (also written ‘kipp’; the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip; see also kip-nosed and kippit).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. small hill to the south-east of Heip Hill, also known as Kippielaw, reaching a height of 218 m. The name may also have been formerly synonymous with Heip (or Heap) Hill itself (marked ‘The Kipp’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Kippielaw (ki-pee-law) n. former house to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared in the late 19th century. John Ferguson was there in 1790. The nearby hill, above Greensidehall, reaches a height of 218 m, and is also known as ‘the Kipp’. There are several other places with the same (or similar) name around Scotland – ‘The tiny yellow tormentil Is peeping here and there, The hollows of the Kippilaw Are never dry or bare’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘Kipielaw’ and ‘Kippilaw’, it is marked ‘Kiplaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is presumably the same as that of the place of the same name 10 miles to the north-east in Bowden Parish).

Kippilaw (ki-pee-law) n. farm in Bowden Parish, off the B6359 between Lilliesleaf and Bowden village. There were once Kers there (the origin is probably the Old English ‘coppeled hlaw’, meaning ‘hill with the summit cut off’; it first occurs as ‘Kyppeilaw’ in 1552, then ‘Cyppelaw’ in 1567 and ‘Kypypilaw’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

kippit (ki-pi, -pi’) adj., arch. turned up (of the nose) – ‘She hes a kipeet nose, an A’ve harrd eet said that’s a sein (sign) o a short temper’ [ECS] (also written ‘kippeet’; see kip).

Kippy (ki-pée) adj., arch. quick-tempered, hasty – ‘Wholes she’s aa richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an’ oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS], having an upturned nose.

Kip’s Park (kips-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779 (and 1811), when valued at £102 7d. The rental for ‘Kipp’s park and inclosure’ was £28 in 1780. It was probably associated with the modern Kipps Plantin, but it is unclear who ‘Kip’ was.

Kirk (kirk) n. a church – ‘the whole family we’rt ti kirk on Sundis’, ‘... But he must pass the lone kirk stile, Before he reach’d her dwelling’ [JR], ‘An’ I say alsua untill thee, That thou art Peter, an’ upon this roke I wull big my kirk’ [HSR], ‘Though time has wrocht a change or twae On kirk and tower...’ [IWS], ‘And A pick oot fer ablow iz Every weel kent kirk and mill’ [IWL], ‘ti make a kirk or a mill o’d’ means to do what you like with it, v. to pass through a formal church attendance, particularly applied to the Cornet during Kirking Sunday, often capitalised – ‘It is the day the Cornet is Kirked’ [BEL] (the origin of the word is the Old Norse ‘Kirkja’).

Kirk (kirk) n. Charles (b.1808/9) born in Dunfermline, he was a lawyer in Hawick. He was for a while in partnership with Walter Haddon. He had offices at the corner of the Sandbed and Buccleuch Street and was agent for Western Bank, which failed in 1857. He was an early Trustee for St. George’s Kirk. In 1852 he was listed in Slater’s directory as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street, as well as agent for the Edinburgh insurance company and for the West of England company. In 1851 he was living at about 20 Buccleuch Street, and was ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire & in practice’. In 1861 he was listed as a Solicitor, living at 3 Buccleuch Street. In the 1860s he is recorded as the Depute-Clerk for the court, which met every other month in Hawick. He was also the local collector for the Inland Revenue. His wife was Margaret B., and their children included Charles M., Mary, James H. and Margaret H. James (d.c.1820) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1798–1818. He was previously schoolmaster at Haddington, and came to Hawick to replace Thomas Barrie. He also applied for the position of Hawick postmaster in 1802, but appears not to have been successful. In 1799 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Nicholson. He married Eleanor Whitehead in Haddington in 1794, and their children included John, Edmond, Marion, Maria, James and Isabella; all but the first were born in Hawick. He resigned in 1818 and was then teacher in Leith. In 1821 his daughter Elizabeth married Nicholas Whitehead in Leith, but which time he was deceased. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a local connection. Rev. John (19th C.) minister of the Brighton Street Evangelical Union Church in Edinburgh. In the Spring of 1848 he came to Hawick to assist John Rutherford in leading a special ‘mission’ of prayer meetings and sermons. He joined at the end of the first week and stayed for the following 6. This led directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick. He returned to Hawick about 1858 to conduct some revival meetings and again returned in 1864 as the Rev. Prof. Kirk to induct the new E.U. minister David Hislop. 3 of his sons became ministers, including Rev. Edward Bruce, who was also a noted amateur astronomer. William (18th C.) collier of Musselburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1753. James Wilson suggests that he was probably a ‘coal viewer’ (but it is unclear what that means).

the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. The Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.

Kirkandrews (kirk-awn-drooz) n. area in the north of Cumbria, just over the Border off the A7, with an 18th century church and a 16th century occupied peel tower nearby. This was an important part of the English West March, owned by the de Soulis family, then passing to the Douglases and Grahams. The associated parish was part of the Debateable Land’ (also written ‘Kirk Andrews’).

Kirkbank (kirk-bawngk) n. former station on the Jedburgh Railway, off the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway.
Kirk Borthwick

Kirk Borthwick (kirk-bor-theek) n. former site of the chapel that served parishioners in the western part of Wilton Parish (which may even have been a separate Parish of Borthwick in early times) and the name used for the surrounding area. It lay near Borthwickbrae and close to Borthwick Waas cemetery. The precise location is uncertain, but it was probably on the north side of the road on a level platform on the East bank of the Kirk Cleuch, which is a narrow ravine leading up through the lands of Borthwickbrae (however, some accounts place it on the south side of the road). It was probably founded in the late 1200s and was either originally part of the Diocese of Glasgow (like much of Teviotdale), or belonged to the monks of Melrose Abbey (who held lands and pasture rights in the area). It is said that it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It could be the church of Borthwick referred to in the charters of Glasgow in about 1150, consecrated by Robert, Bishop of St. Andrews. The land there was referred to as Kirk Borthwick by the time of Robert the Bruce, but only as Borthwick in the first half of the 13th century. A spring about 500 m to the north-west is known as ‘Lady’s Well’, and presumably connected with the church. If the chapel was once in a separate parish, it was certainly annexed to Wilton by the early 14th century. In 1612 it is recorded that half of the living was given to Francis McGill by the minister of Wilton, and as late as 1688 it was listed as part of the charge of the Wilton minister. It was used as the church of the new Borthwick Parish for a while, until Robertson Church was built in 1659, at the centre of the enlarged parish (which was suppressed soon afterwards before finally becoming Robertson in 1689). It was probably in use until the 1650s, but ruined soon afterwards. John Langlands of Wilton (and later Hawick) may have been the last minister to preach there. It is said that the foundations of the church could still be made out up until the mid-19th century (also known as ‘Borthwick Kirk’ and ‘Borthwick Waas Kirk’; the name occurs as ‘Kirkborthewyc’ in the early 14th century).

the Kirk Cleuch (tu-thu-kirk-klooch) n. stream to the north of the road roughly opposite Borthwick Waas Cemetery, and believed to have been the approximate location for Kirk Borthwick.

Kirkgate (kirk-gā’) n. name used between about 1837 and 1882 for the street formerly known as Old Churchyard and now called St. Mary’s Place. The house at 8 Kirkgate was run as a private school by William Murray, the forerunner of St. Mary’s and later Trinity schools.

kirk-gaun (kirk-gawn) adj., arch. church-going – ‘Wullie being a ‘kirk-gaun’ man, and a hunter of new ministers, he had many a quaint remark to make about the various styles of preachers and preachings’ [RM], ‘Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun . . . ’ [DH].

Kirkhaugh (kirk-hawch) n. former name for lands that were part of the Hawick Common. They were mentioned in 1725. However, it is unclear where these lands were.

the Kirkhaugh (tu-thu-kirk-hawch) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Hobkirk. In 1618 there was a wadset for ‘the former two acres of land with a day’s wark meadow adjacent thereto lying in the Kirkhaugh beside the Kirk of Hopkirk’.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the east of the old Buccleuch Kirk on the Rankle Burn, reaching a height of 397 m. The name presumably comes from the former church.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the west of Ettleton churchyard in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 282 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. There is a hill-fort on the summit, and the extensive remains of a farmstead and field-system on the eastern slopes, possibly the lands of Side where ‘Jock o the Side’ lived. There are terraces, with rig lines and other signs of cultivation to the north-east. On the western side is an enclosure and associated building and ‘lazy-beds’. To the west is also the remains of an old farm at Greenburni on a spur of land called The Tongue.

Kirkhouse, former name for a freeholding near the boundaries of Wilton Glebe, Easter Howlands and the southern part of Roughhead. Presumably named for its proximity to lands related to Wilton Church.

Kirkhooses (kirk-hoo-seez) n. Kirkhouses, former seat of a branch of the Scott family near Ashkirk. The land was presumably attached to the Kirk, either historically or geographically. The first Laird was James, who was a younger son of George of Synton. John, his son and heir had a confirming charter in 1609, when it is ‘Kirkhousis’, and probably the same John was recorded there as early as 1579. In 1579/80 a document was witnessed there regarding the murder of David Dalgleish in Harehead, involving the Scotts. The lands were valued at £143 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls James Rutherford paid for 6 hearths and there were 6 others listed there, including a blacksmith, Thomas Brown. In 1698 James Matheson was smith there and Francis Elliot was also there. Thomas Scott was there in 1724 when he was given money by the Parish. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the ‘five merk land’ (and other lands in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. The ‘five-merk land of Kirkhouse’ was recorded in 1753. By 1788 (and also according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811) it was owned by Thomas Wilkinson and with the same value as earlier – ‘...Andrew of Sallinside he was one, With James of Kirkhouse, and Ashkirk’s John’ [CWS], ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (also called ‘Kirkhouse’; it is ‘Kirkhous’ in 1579 and ‘Kirkhousess’ in 1627).

Kirkhope (kir-kup) n. settlement in the Ettrick valley just west of Ettrickbridge. ‘Old Kirkhope’ lie in the hills above and has a ruined tower. The farm was owned by the Crown from about 1456. It was leased by Sir Thomas Cranston from at least 1471, for his fee as Bailie of Ettrick Forest, passing to John Cranston until about 1490 and then to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502 it is reported that John Scott in Walls had remission for stealing 3 of Lord Cranston’s horses from here. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Sir William Cranston in 1510. Alexander Scott was tenant in 1536. Lord Cranston still claimed the lands in 1541. There were Turnbull tenants there in the early 16th century. Thomas Johnstone paid rent to Melrose Abbey for the lands in 1557. The lands were owned by the Cranstons of that Ilk in the late 16th century, passing to the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1594. The house was listed among the principal seats of Selkirkshire in an account of 1649. It was said to be ‘sometimes a Dwelling of the Lairds of Harden, about which is the largest Wood in all the Forrest’ in a description of about 1680. The lands remained part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. The Scotts of Harden sold them to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early 18th century. James Matthewson was there in 1702 and Gideon Scott in 1785. It is also the name of an ancient parish of Selkirkshire, which was reconstituted in 1852 out of part of Yarrow Parish – ‘Ho! for the blades of Harden! Ho! for the ring of steel!’ The stolen steers of a hundred years Come home for a Kirkhope meal!’ [WHO], ‘The kye are weary o’ more and fern And ’tis many a mile to the Kirkhope Burn’ [WHO] (it is ‘Hirkhop’ in 1471, ‘Kirkhoup’ in 1557 and ‘Kirkhope’ in 1564; it is ‘Kirkhop’ and ‘Kirkhope’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps, while on Blaeu’s 1654 map it is ‘Kirkhoope’ and ‘Kirkhoope wood’, but far from the correction location, and it is marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as ‘Kirkhoop’).

Kirkhope Toor (kir-kup-toor) n. 17th century peel tower located about 7 miles west of Selkirk, near Kirkhope, built on the site of an earlier tower burned by the Armstrongs in 1543, and restored in the 1990s. It was a stronghold of the eldest sons of the Scotts of Harden. In his youth ‘Auld Wat’ brought Mary Scott of Dryhope ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ here and allegedly later ‘Young Wat’ brought ‘Muckle Mou’ed Meg’ – ‘In the mystic hush of the morning hour Came the clatter of hoofs from Kirkhope Tower ...’ [WHO], ‘...To Yarrow where the Swire climbs Around grey Kirkhope Tower’ [WL].

kirkin (kir-kin) n. a ceremonial attendance at church, especially by councillors after an election. The term was also used in the 19th century (and earlier) to refer to the attendance at church of the bride and groom, usually on the Sunday following their Friday marriage ceremony.

the Kirkin (thu-ki-kin) n. ceremonial church service that takes place in the Cornet’s church on the Sunday morning beginning the week of the Common Riding. Traditionally lily of the valley is worn, and it is the first time for sporting the Cornet’s tie. The Principalis, in formal dress (morning suits and tie hats), walking behind the Halberdiers, lead the ‘Cornet’s Kirk Parade’ from the Council Chambers to the church. Behind the Principalis come the ex-Cornets in order of year, then the ex-Acting Fathers and finally the rest of the supporters, all walking in pairs. At the church the parade meets the Provost and Bailies and the service is also attended by the Lasses. There the Cornet and his Lass is presented with a bible, and afterwards the party goes for the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch. The ceremony was initiated in 1887, when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John’s Kirk) invited the Common Riding supporters to his church on the following Sunday, after he had accepted an invitation to the Cornet’s breakfast. For many years it took place on the Sunday immediately after the Common Riding, rather than before. The officiating minister is sometimes referred to as the ‘Cornet’s Chaplain’. The 1914 ceremony was part of the Quarter-centenary celebrations and also the 700th anniversary of the consecration of St. Mary’s, being attended by an estimated 4,000 people in the churchyard. In 1891
there were both Episcopalian and Evangelical services in a tent on the Haugh on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Kirkin Sundi (kir-kin-sin-di) n. Sunday preceding the Common Riding weekend, when the Cornet is ‘Kirked’. After the Cornet’s Kirk Parade and church service, there is the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch, and then the Principals are driven to Hornshole for the laying of the wreath at the 1514 Memorial. This ceremony is carried out by the Cornet’s Lass (and done by the 50-year Lass in 2001 and 2020). Then the Principals go to the Mair to inspect the course before the events of the following week. The day is also referred to as Exhibition Sundi. Note that before the Common Riding was revamped in the 1880s, there had been an ‘old custom of visiting the race course’ on the Sunday before, as a sort of practice for the racing that was to come.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf adjacent to Bewlie. This was ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’, which were part of the Earl of Roxburgh’s lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1643, valued at £90 and subsequently sold to Riddell of Camieston. In 1678 the Earl of Roxburg paid land tax ‘for the kirklands of and teyndes of the paroch’. Walter Scott of Whitfield (later Harden) owned these lands in 1720 when they were leased to James Shiel and John Mathieson. ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’ were still valued at £90 in 1788 when owned by Duke of Roxburgh. In the mid-19th century the lands were purchased by Riddell of Muselee (also ‘Kirklands’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and said to pertain to the Vicar. Presumably these lands were near the original site of Castleton Parish Kirk.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. Rev. Robert (1906/7–85) born in Glasgow, he became minister of Orrock Church in 1932 and moved to Edinburgh in 1939. During the War he served with the Royal Marines and was awarded the M.B.E.

the Kirkland (thu-kirk-lind) n. former name for farm lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch, and presumably once attached to the Kirk of Hawick. It is possible they were related to the ‘Kirkton’ and ‘Kirkton Tofts’ recorded in early documents. They are mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when the land produced ‘aittis’, ‘corne’ and ‘peis’, and ‘Willie of Allanechauch’ was given ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. Probably the same land is described as ‘ye Kirkland’ in a 1627 valuation of the Parish of Hawick; it is listed among the lands closest to the Town, consisted of 32 acres, was owned by the Lord of Buccleuch and ‘payand presentlie 32 bolls in stock, estimat in stok to 12, and 3 bolls of teynd’ yearly. In 1692 the lands were described as consisting of 34 acres, and were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to John Scott, ‘Sodger’, Thomas Scott, ‘Laird’, Andrew Clerk, Robert Ruecastle and Walter Ruecastle (also written ‘the kirk land’, etc.).

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. alternative name for the lands of Wilton Glebe, originally belonging to Wilton Parish Church. This could be the ‘kirkland de Wiltoun’ where Thomas Williamson was farmer in 1493. The name survives in Kirklands Hotel on West Stewart Place. It is also the name of a house in Denholm, behind the Church.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. name sometimes formerly used to describe the lands attached to Hobkirk Kirk, somewhat more extensive than those later called the Glebe of Hobkirk, and originally being in the Barony of Abbotrule. Hector Turnbull of Hartshaugh possessed these lands in 1580 and had a charter in 1604 which described them as ‘the kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, with the Manse and Glebe being explicitly excluded. His grandson Adam inherited these lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in 1622, along with ‘Viccarishall’.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. former name for land attached to Bedrule Kirk. In 1557 a complaint was made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst that Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others had invaded his lands there, beating his servants; this may have been part of a dispute over ownership. In the 16th century (as confirmed in 1581) it was ruled that this ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’ belonged to Sir John Stewart of Traquair rather than Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. house and small estate on the south of the Ale Water, to the west of Anrum and adjacent to the graveyard. The house dates from about 1830, and there is an enclosed parkland with large lime trees. John Richardson (lawyer, occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott) lived there in the 19th century, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there in 1864.

Kirklands Hotel (kirk-lindz-hö-tel) n. long-time hotel in Hawick, situated in West Stewart Place. It was built as Viewforth for hatter George...
Kirklea

Porteous in 1878. It was designed with a mixture of Dutch, French Renaissance and Gothic elements, and had a later extension to the east corner. I. Washington Wallis lived in it for a while, and John Farrar Blenkorn rented it for a few years. Prior to WWII it became a temperance hotel and after the War was run as a regular hotel. It ceased to be a hotel in 2007. It is a grade C listed building.

Kirklea (kirk-lee) n. house built in 1859 as manse for Ashkirk Free Kirk. That church closed in 1909. In 1917 the poet W.H. Ogilvie leased the house and later purchased it.

kirkless (kirk-lis) adj. without a church – ‘Sae try to make yours’l content, Though kirkless aye, ye’se never want’ [RDW].

kirk-mense (kirk-mens) n., arch. a first appearance at church – ‘Gaein (an article of dress) kirk-mense or Sunday-mense, respectively, is to let the first occasion on which it is worn be a church service, or fall on a Sunday. According to an auld frait this must invoke some kind of blessing on the article and on its wearer’ [ECS] (also Sundi-mense).

Kirkmichael (kirk-mi-kul) n. John (d.1435) Scottish cleric who was important in France. He was Rector of Lilliesleaf from at least 1410, when he was promised a future Canonry of Glasgow. In 1413 he was given a Canonry of Glasgow and the Prebend of Ancrum (vacated by the death of John Dalgleish). In 1418 he was studying in Orleans when the Pope granted him the Parish Church of ‘Carrale’, despite already holding a Prebend of ‘Ahnicoum’ and the vicarage of ‘Lilliskle’. He became a Canon of Orleans in 1419. As Chaplain to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, he was present at the Battles of Beaugé in 1421 and Verneuil in 1424. He became Bishop of Orleans in 1426 and interacted with Joan of Arc, instituting the annual parade to commemorate her relief of Orleans in 1429. He held the benefice of Lilliesleaf Kirk until 1429. He also held the Canonry and Prebend of ‘Ahncram’ (there are varying spellings, but probably Ancrum is meant) in the Diocese of Glasgow. He is also known as ‘John of Carmichael’ and ‘Jean de StMichel’.

Kirknowe (kirk-now) n. former farm near Hobkirk Church, once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It was described as lying between Langraw and the Church, and is described in older deeds as being in the territory of Langraw in the Parish of Abbotrule. The farmhouse stood on a high bank above Kirkstile. The farm lies to the west of the Parish Kirk and the place is still shown on the modern Ordnance Survey map. It was owned (or perhaps tenanted hereditarily) by the Shiel family from before the Reformation, with half being sold in 1666. It was valued at £78 in 1643 when owned by Walter Shiel and also in about 1663 when Walter Scott was tenant. Thomas Boston paid tax on £78 there in 1678. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, with Jean Bennet and Isobel Turnbull also residents. John Mair purchased the farm in 1704 and his son Richard sold it to William Elliot of Wolfleee in 1751. Andrew Mair was wright there in 1739. Peter Smith was tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Half of the land was owned by James Riddell in 1788, with the other half being owned by William Turnbull of Langraw (and a small part of that half by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfleee). ‘Boston’s half of Kirknow’ was recorded among the lands owned by Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and continued in 1811), with another part owned by William Oliver of Langraw; the other half was possessed by Alexander Anderson. Thomas Renwick was a mason there in 1799. The farm of Wester Swan was incorporated into it in the early 19th century, under the ownership of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfleee. The other half of the original land was called Hobkirkstyle. It should not be confused with ‘Kilknowe’ or ‘Kilnknowe’, which is also in Hobkirk Parish (also spelled ‘Kirknow’ and ‘Kirk-knowe’, it is ‘Kirkeknowe’ in 1590; it is marked ‘Kirkknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; Tancred writes it once as ‘Kirkwood’, presumably in error).

the Kirk o the Lowes (thu-kirk-o-thu-lowz) n. Church of St. Mary of the Lowes (or Lochs), former place of worship in Yarrow Parish, near St. Mary’s Loch. Situated on a terrace near the foot of Copper Law, there is now nothing but a mound to indicate its position. It was originally the ‘Forest Kirk’, dedicated to St. Mary and built in perhaps the 12th century. It was formerly the location for meetings and the signing of documents, e.g. one for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood in 1488. It was abandoned around 1640 in favour of Yarrow Kirk, nearer the centre of the Parish. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scots and others broke open the doors of the church looking to murder Sir Peter Cranston; they were unsuccessful and were later bound over not to harm him or his servants in the future. In 1575 ‘Maister Johne Scott’ was minister there, with responsibility over Ashkirk, Ettrick New Kirk and Rankleburn. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch held half of the benefice of the church in 1568–72 (it is ‘Lowis K.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Kirk of Lowis’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Kirkpatrick (kirk-pawt-reek) n. Roger (16th C.) recorded as Rector of the Nether Kirk of Ewes in 1556. The Parish was stated to be vacant in 1567 and 1574, and so he presumably did not survive as minister after the Reformation.

Kirk Pool (kirk-pool) n. former name for a pool in a bend in the Teviot near the site of Hassendean Kirk, opposite Hassendeanburn and Knowetownhead.

Kirk Raw (kirk-raw) n. Church Row, name used as an address in the mid-19th century. It probably refers to houses in the Kirkstyle or St. Mary’s Place.

Kirkrig (kirk-rig) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1780 ‘half of the Kirkrig’ was included in lands in Dryden and Clews whose different had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

kirk-riggin (kirk-ri-gin) n., arch. church roof timbers, ‘a kae in the kirk-riggin’ means a noisy misbehaving child.

kirk(s) n., pl. churches. There were once many more of these in Hawick than at the present day, the proliferation of Church of Scotland churches being a result of the factions that developed within Presbyterianism in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many of the churches have gone by several different names at different times. A list of the various names that have been used for different church buildings in Hawick (ignoring smaller organisations that may not have had a permanent meeting place) includes: Allars Kirk/the Relief Chaipel/the Relief Kirk/the Cross Wynd Kirk/the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Kirk; the Anti-Burgher Kirk/the First Secession Kirk/the Green Kirk/the West End Kirk/the West End Meetin Hoose/the West End United Presbyterian Kirk; the Baptist Kirk; the Burgher Kirk/the Second Secession Kirk/the Associate Kirk/ the East End Meetin Hoose/the East Bank Kirk/the East End Kirk/East Bank United Free Kirk/East Bank United Presbyterian Kirk; Burnfit Kirk; the Congregational Kirk/the Evangelical Union Kirk/the E.U. kirk session (kirk-se-shin) n. a body consisting of minister and elected elders in the Presbyterian church, dealing with matters of religion, membership, discipline etc. in a particular parish, being the lowest court of that church – ‘The kirk-session, in compliance with recommendations from the superior courts, were in the frequent practice of setting apart days for public fasting and thanksgiving’[RJAW].

the Kirk Session (thu-kirk-se-shin) n. body of elders and the Minister of Hawick Parish Kirk, also referred to as simply ‘the Session’. They were appointed to oversee the good conduct of the congregation, and formerly would meet each week, directly after the church service. Two elders were appointed to supervise each of the districts of the Parish, 4 in the Burgh itself and 3 in the country part. The duties they carried out in the 17th and 18th centuries were later mainly taken over by the School board, police and Parish Council. It appears that the main heritors of the Parish also served as part of the Kirk Session, at least for the enactment of some of the business. The minute books of the Session meetings are an invaluable record of civil as well as ecclesiastical matters in the 18th and 19th centuries. The first existing Session Book covers 1711–25 (and is quite comprehensive), the second 1751–68 and the third 1785–1826 (these 2 recording only minutes of the more important meetings). There are also Kirk Treasurer’s books from 1723. A Session Book covering 1700–04 still existed in 1857 (and some extracts are given in James Wilson’s ‘Memories . . . ’ book), but disappeared before the end of the 19th century. All previous books, like earlier communion plate etc., probably went with the former ministers, like they did elsewhere in Scotland around the time of the Revolution.

Kirkside (kirk-sid) n. street in Denholm, running along the north-east side of the Green and running past the church.

Kirksteed (kirk-steed) n. recorded in 1541 as ‘Kirkstead’ on the rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was listed as having no tenant. It is uncertain where exactly these lands were.

Kirk Steps (kirk-steps) n. another name for the Kirkstile, in use in the mid-19th century.

the Kirkstile (thu-kirk stil) n. short street leading to St. Mary’s Church, formerly known as Easter Kirkstile, and also formally the address of the Church. This is where the Snuffing takes place on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. The street consists partly of a bridge over the Slitrig, which was built to replace the ‘Auld Brig’ in 1852, paid for by William Elliot (who had Tower Mill built). This bridge is about 13½ feet wide and about 5½ feet lower than the Auld Brig, and with no central pier (i.e. less obstructive during floods). There was once a building of some sort here (perhaps a storage building for the church), referred to in 1686 as ‘the church stile building’ when someone was fined for stealing lime from it. When the old church was demolished in 1763, a large part of the steeple fell here, and the material had to be carried back up for making the new building – ‘. . . there’s peace owre the Kirkstile wa’’ [JEDM] (also written ‘Kirkstyle’, ‘Kirk Stile’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).

Kirkstile (kirk-stil) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, adjacent to the parish kirk, and once forming half of the lands of Kirknowe. It was held by the Shiels since before the Reformation. It passed from John Shiel to his grandson John Stevenson in an agreement ratified in 1759. In 1779 it was sold to a Riddell, then passed to Alexander Anderson and then Peter Smith. A part of the lands held a cottage and blacksmith’s shop (also called ‘Hobkirkstile’ or ‘Hobkirkstyle’; sometimes spelled ‘Kirkstyle’).

Kirkstyle (kirk-stil) n. former cottage near the church in Ewesdale. It was the site of the only inn in the parish in the 18th century. John Chisholme was there in 1757. It was occupied by 5 separate households in 1841.

Kirkstyle Place (kirk-stil-plis) n. name occasionally used for the Kirkstile.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. hamlet on the A6088, about half-way to Bonchester, roughly 4 miles from Hawick. This has been the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since about the 1830s (when it replaced the Wellogate Birneyknowe and Forkins road). It has a church, the present one dating from 1841, and once contained a school. It is also the name of the surrounding small parish, which is probably the same as ‘Cavers Parva’ recorded in Medieval times. Kirkton farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. Arthur and William Douglas in Kirkton are recorded in 1569. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Barty Crosar’. The ‘4 and 2 merk lands’ of Kirkton were sold by Sir Gilbert Elliott to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1655. There was a blacksmith’s there, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James Douglas was at the farm there in 1718. The lands were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. George Heatley was living there in 1797. Thomas and James Oliver were farmers there in 1797 and Andrew Oliver and William Dalgleish were there in 1801. A small ball of gneiss with projecting knobs was found there and is now in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow. A stone axe was also found there. Note that there are many other Kirktons throughout Scotland, and also an old name of lands near Branxholme (also spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirktonne’, ‘Kirktown’, 'Kirkside', 'Kirk Steps', ‘Kirksteed’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).
‘Kirkton’, etc.; the name is first recorded in 1458 as ‘Kirketoune’; it is ‘Kirkton’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Kirktoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is simply ‘the farm by the church’, combining the Old Norse ‘kirkja’ with the Old English ‘tun’.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. former lands somewhere near Braxholm, referred to also separately as Kirkton Mains and Kirkton Tofts in the 15th and 16th centuries and still recorded in the 17th century. It could be the same lands referred to as ‘terra ecclesiastica’ in the 1420 charter, when half of the lands of Braxholm were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. In 1446, when the other half of Braxholm and neighbouring lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm by Thomas Inglis of Manor, the deal included superiority over ‘certain lands of Kirktoun’, lying in the Barony of Hawick. In 1484 these were lands (along with East Mains) which James Douglas of Drumlanrig and his wife already held when James inherited the Barony of Hawick. Later the lands passed to the Douglasses of Cavers, with ‘Kirkton and Kirkton Mains’ still being mentioned in Douglas deed of 1662. It seems reasonable to suppose that these lands were connected with the former chapel near Chapel Hill. However, it is also possible that these were in fact the same lands as those in Kirkton Parish, if they were a detached part of the Barony of Hawick (it is ‘terrarum de Kirktoun’ and ‘Kyrktoun’ in 1446).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Ewes, near Sorbie, near where the Kirkton Burn meets the river. This was ‘Kirktoun’, confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. Hector Armstrong of Hillhouse was in ‘the Kirktoun of Ewiscale’ in 1590/1. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 583 acres of pasture and 83 acres of corn land, both shared with Brieryshaw farm, which was owned by the Laird of Byrecleuch. It was bounded by Glendivan, Bush, Sorbie, the lands of Sir William Johnstone and Burngrains. The Byers family were there in 1841 and William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Kirktoun of Sorbi’ in 1426, ‘Kirktoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Kirktoune’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. Adam (15th C.) tenant in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for several crimes. He was specifically said to have been involved with theft, reset and inter-communing with the English, as well as for being with the Duke of Albany during the rebellion and for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam in Oxnam Mains was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Probably the same Adam in Crailing had remission in 1502 for bringing in Englishmen to steal livestock from Mellerstain. Adam of Stewartfield (d.bef. 1571) perhaps son of William. He was Steward of Jedburgh Abbey in 1543. He was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the English in 1544. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm at Goldielands and elsewhere. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as tenant of the farm of Swinnie under Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Kerr complained to the Queen that a group of men ‘boddin in feir of weir’ came to his farm and dug up peats and terrorised him. He may be the same ‘Adam Kyrkton’ who witnessed a bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls, Ellots and others promised to bring in William Nixon. Possibly the same Adam is listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. The line ‘Wi’ Kirkton, Newtoun, noblemen’ in the ballad ‘The Battle of Red-Swire’ may refer to him. He may be the same man as Adam of Stewartfield. Adam of Stewartfield (16th/17th C.) succeeded his grandfather William of Stewartfield in 1606 and inherited lands in Bonjedward from his father in 1611. He married Grizel, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Huntthill. The marriage contract was witnessed at Woollee (i.e. Wolflee) House in 1612, with Cranston of that Ilk and 2 other Cranstons (who owned the estate at the time) on the record. His son William was served as his heir in 1642. Alexander (17th C.) Provost of Jedburgh, elected in 1620. He represented Jedburgh in Parliament in 1617 and 1630. Along with John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bonchester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. Andrew (16th/17th C.) graduated from Edinburgh University in 1617 and became minister of Oxnam Parish. Probably the same Andrew, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1619 and 1623. He married Elizabeth Knox and had sons John and Thomas. George (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm and Buccleuch. He may have been related to Robert, who was also involved, and was listed along with other men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. John (d.1538) associated with the Kirk of Bedrule. After he died, in 1539, Bernard Baillie was presented, but refused by the Archbishop. John (16th C.) officer of the Warden of the Middle March, William Ker of Cessford. In 1583 he appeared at a day of truce with the English Warden, in place of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Robert (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with John Peacock, servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes, and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. Perhaps the same Robert was listed in an act in against a Frenchman in Edinburgh in 1550. Robert (17th C.) resident of Jedburgh Parish. His son William was baptised in 1666, with witnesses Andrew and William. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh. He was a witness to a document relating to Harwood and Hawthornside in 1631. William (15th C.) listed as ‘Wyll of Kyrktoun’ in 1454 when he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also recorded as ‘William of Kirkton’ when he was witness to a ‘tack’ of David Scott, younger of Branxholme in 1478. Since several of the other witnesses were connected with Jedburgh Abbey, this seems likely to be the local Kirkton. He may be the same William ‘Kirkton’ listed among Border lairds in an action registered with Parliament in 1476. He could be the William who had a saisine for Bonjedward in 1483. Perhaps the same William ‘kirktoun in kirkton’ was recorded in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for crimes against Ingram Oliver in Jedburgh. Either the same William, or a later one, was fined in 1502 for failing to ‘give suit’ at the Justice-aire for his lands of Bonjedward; in 1503 he presented John Smith as suitor at the Justice-aire for these same lands, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his procurator. A probably related ‘William Kirkton’ was one of the men who signed the pledge to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace in Edinburgh in 1524/5. William of Farnington (16th C.) recorded in 1581, along with his sons Mungo and John. In a transaction involving Haliburtons, there was mention of a 1580 decree from the Lords of Council in which Walter Haliburton in Ancrum evicting them from his lands in Ancrum Spittal. William of Stewartfield (16th C.) son of Adam, who he succeeded as Steward of Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed along with Olivers of Southdean in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners. His surety was for £1000, twice that of the other men; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was separately listed in 1572/3, with George Douglas of Bonjedward as surety. He could be the ‘William Kirkton, officer of the Middle March’ recorded in 1586 when William Ker was his surety to appear before the Privy Council; he was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for not appearing (and was then described as a Bailie of Jedburgh). He is listed on the list of ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590 and is probably the Kirkton of Stewartfield listed in Monnepennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. There may be 2 generations of Williams here. William (17th C.) son of Adam of Stewartfield. In 1642 he was served heir to his father’s 3 husbandlands in Bonjedward, as will as the lands of Stewartfield. Probably the same William is recorded as owner of lands in Ulston in 1643 (spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirtoune’, ‘Kyrktoun’ and variants).

the Kirkton Burn (thu-kirk-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Earlsdie, runs through Kirkton and alongside the A6088 till past Cauldmill, joining the Teviot near Hornshole. Alongside the stream to the south of Birneyknowe is the start of a linear earthwork, which runs about 800 m to end near the road connecting Stobs with Boucher. There are some signs of enclosures at both ends, suggesting that this was a boundary related to grazing rights. On the upper section, an exposed part of the basaltic dyke which runs across Roxburghshire was used by geologist David Milne-Home in 1842 to illustrate his theory of a crack being filled by lava.

Kirkton Hill (kirk-tin-hil) n. hill behind the Kaimends, south-east of Hawick, and south of the village of Kirkton, reaching 275 m (897 ft). It is the site of a hill-fort and there is evidence of settlements there from the Iron Age to medival times. The fort was oval, measuring roughly 190 ft by 170 ft, with double or triple ramparts, probably with an entrance on the south-west. The interior of the fort appears to have been later converted into a settlement, with at least 9 huts. An even later enclosure, about 60 ft by 50 ft, containing 2 scooped courts, may date from the 15th or 16th centuries.
Kirkton Hoose

Kirkton Kirk

Kirkton Kirk (kirk-tin-kirk) n. church in Kirkton. Before the Reformation it was a Rectory, and it is known from at least the time of the Ragman Rolls. However, it does not seem to have had its own minister (separate from that of Cavers) until about the time of the Reformation. In the earliest times it was ‘Cavers Parva’ and the patronage was held by the Lovels. There was a dispute over the patronage between The Archbishop of Glasgow and the Crown in 1509, with Glasgow being recognised in 1551 and at the Reformation the patronage was held by the Earl of Bothwell. It is recorded that the Parson died in 1562 and the ‘tacksman’ of the Parsonage teinds was William Douglas of Crook in the periods 1562–63, 1566 and 1566–72. The former church was described in 1838 as ‘in a very bad state of repair’. The location is close to the eastern boundary of the Parish, which was inconvenient for those living further west, but meant that some families from Cavers Parish would attend Kirkton. The present church dates from 1841, and contains some panels from the previous building. A stone slab that had formed the ‘stool of repentance’ was discovered during the demolition of the previous church building and in 1861 it was presented to the Archaeological Society (but seems to have subsequently disappeared). The church was remodelled in 1906, with J.P. Alison as architect (replacing the more ambitious plans that were deemed too expensive by the Session). During remodelling 2 inscribed stones were installed in the walls, one having a crudely carved sword from about the 16th century and the other reading ‘HOW SHORT IS TIME HOW LONG ETERNITY 1688’. The Manse was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. It was rebuilt in about 1760 and around 1840 converted into use as a byre and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built near the church in 1866. A Liszt organ was installed in 1893, presented by R. Ballantyne in memory of his parents. Due to falling rolls, the church was linked with Cavers (being served by a single minister) in 1955 and united with it in 1976. Cavers and Kirkton were linked with St. Mary’s in 1976–88, with Hobkirk and Southdean 1988–96 and with St. Mary’s and ‘Auld Pairish’ in 1996. Since 1955 the church has only been used for occasional special services. 2 pewter cups are still held by the Kirk, but other communion plate appears to have disappeared. The oldest surviving communion token is from 1734, is made of lead, heart-shaped and bears the initials ‘K.K.;’ another similar token is from 1761. A roll of the ministry is: Maurice Lovel in 1296; Patrick ‘of Albania’ in 1453; William ‘Amuligane’ (probably Milligan) in 1545; Archibald Heriot, until 1550; William Cranston (Vicar and Parson), 1550–67/8; George Douglas (Vicar and Parson), 1567/8–c.97; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Watson in 1588; John Douglas (Parson and Vicar), from 1597; Walter McGill (Parson and Vicar, along with Cavers), from 1606; James Scott 1616–c.19; Robert Brownlie 1620–c.45; Andrew Pringle 1646–50; Gavin Elliot 1652–62; Alexander Forrest 1664–83; Alexander Burnet 1684–85; Patrick Cunningham 1687–c.1706; John Douglas 1707–50; Alexander Glen 1751–57; Thomas Elliot 1758–63; James Erskine 1764–74; Alexander Gordon 1775–85; James Hay 1785–86; Benjamin Dickson 1787–1800; John Elliot 1801–17; Adam Laidlaw 1818–34; William Stewart Martin 1834–57; George Hunter 1857–81; David Cathels 1882–92; John Stuart 1892–1930; William Robertson 1931–40; George E. Cowe 1940–51; James B. Primrose 1951–55; William Welsh 1955–75; Duncan Clark 1976–84; Alexander C. MacCartney 1985–87; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96; David W.G. Burt 1996–98; William P. Taylor 1998– (it appeaars to be ‘Kirkton’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and is ‘Kirkton’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Kirkton Loch

Kirkton Loch (kirk-tin-loch) n. small body of water north of Kirkton village and just south of Cavers Knowe. It was marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map, but on modern maps is called ‘Long Moss’.

Kirkton Mains

Kirkton Mains (kirk-tin-mänz) n. lands near Hawick, probably adjacent (or perhaps identical to) ‘Kirkton Tofts’ near Branxholme. They are mentioned in 1464/5 along with the Flex in a dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) and Alexander Gledstains. Douglas had a sasine for these lands and the Flex, along with the associated mill, the sasine being delivered at the ‘capitale messuagium’, i.e. principal dwelling house. There was also a mill there. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirktoun, with thair pertinentis, lyand in the barony of Hawic’ were among those to be infested to James, heir to Drumlanrig, as part of his marriage contract in 1470; this is probably the same as (or part of)
Kirkton Manse

Kirkton Mains. The lands are mentioned alongside Crumhaugh in Hawick’s 1511 Charter, as part of the Barony of Hawick held ‘in property’ by the Baron. This suggests a location perhaps near Martin’s House or Branxholme Bridgend: however, there is still a possibility that these lands were in the Parish of Kirkton, but somehow associated with lands nearer to Hawick. In 1545 these lands were specifically mentioned in the inheritance of James Douglas of Cavers, as lands he possessed in the Barony of Hawick, and again when infested to his son William in 1558. In that year the ‘liferent’ was granted to the mother of the new Laird, Christian Kerr, the value being 40 shillings and held ‘in blench ferm for one penny of asked’ from the Baron of Hawick. The lands are mentioned (again coupled with those of Crumhaugh) in the return of James Douglas for the Barony of Hawick in 1572. In 1594 the lands of ‘Cruhauch and Kirktown of Manys’ are ratified to the Baron Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with many others in the Barony and it is still listed among the Baron’s lands in 1615 (it is ‘Kyrktonemanys’ and ‘Kirktoine Maynis’ in 1464/5, ‘Kirktoon Manys’ in 1511, ‘Kyrkton Manys’ in 1511/2, ‘Kirktoon Manys’ and ‘Kirktoone Manys’ in 1514, ‘Kyrktoon Manys’ in 1545, ‘Kirktoon Mannis’ in 1559, Kirktoon Manis’ in 1572, ‘Kirtoun of Manys’ in 1594, ‘Kirktoon Manys’ in 1615 and ‘Kirktoon Maynes’ in 1686; see also Kirkton Tofts).

Kirkton Manse (kirk-tin-mawns) n. former minister’s house in Kirkton Parish. It was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. A new house was constructed in about 1760. Around 1840 this was converted into use as a barn and stables, before eventually becoming the church halls in 1933. A new Manse was built in 1866 and is now a private house.

Kirkton Parish (kirk-tin-pa-reesh) n. small parish a few miles to the east and south of Hawick. It is narrow, being about 8 miles long by 2 miles wide, running north-east to south-west, and bounded by Cavers, Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. It corresponded to the mediaeval ‘Cavers Parva’ and had the status of a Rectory before the Reformation. It formally became a separate parish in the 16th century, and was part of the Diocese of Glasgow. A church existed there at least from the time of Edward I. The Parish is bounded mostly by Cavers, but also by Hawick and Teviothead. The boundary with Cavers used to pass straight through the farm of Cavers Mains. The extent of the Parish formerly included farms as distant from Kirkton village as Winnintonrig and Acreknowe. The lands of Middle were partly in the parish, but included in the Barony of Cavers. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 and the total value was £4526 13s 4d in 1678. In the early 19th century there were 4 heritors, namely, Elliott of Stobs, Douglas of Cavers, Douglas of Adlersstone and Dickson of Tofts. In 1838 it was stated that there were no villages, no toll-bars and no public houses in the Parish. Parish records exist from 1707, although not all births were registered, and only a small fraction of marriages and deaths; there are gaps in baptisms 1710–15 and 1738–42, as well as several gaps in the marriage records. The population in 1755 was 330. There was a proposal in 1766/7 to suppress the Parish in favour of a new parish in the western parts of Cavers and Hawick (which became Teviothead).

Kirkton Schuil (kirk-tin-skil) n. former school in the Parish of Kirkton. It existed since at least 1669, when it was recorded that the position of schoolmaster was vacant. The building was situated on the left hand-side of the A6088 a few hundred yards before reaching the main settlement of Kirkton, where Clints Cottage was later built. There were about 50 pupils there in the 1830s. The school later moved to the building later known as Athole Cottage until a new building was constructed in 1887. The school closed in 1963. The Borders Archive has school registers for 1890–1939 and log books for 1873–1963. It was once run by the joint Cavers and Kirkton School Board. Thomas Wilson was schoolmaster until the mid-1780s, Walter Scott taking over for a few years (including 1787) and then being succeeded by Andrew Scott. The schoolmaster from 1834 to the 1860s was Thomas Little. John Turnbull was recorded as schoolmaster in at least 1903–06. The ridge overlooking the school has the remains of a hill-fort, consisting of a summit area and a plateau slightly below it, with triple ramparts, but no existing evidence of internal structures; it is about 115 m long by about 40 m, but tapering to the north-east.

Kirkton Tofts (kirk-tin-tofts) n. lands mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, along with Branxholme, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig, Todshawhills and Harwood, but all in the barony of Hawick (transcribed as ‘Kalkistoftis’). This might appear to refer to the farms of Tofts in Cavers Parish, near to Kirkton, but it is hard to see how this could have been in the barony of Hawick. An undated charter some time before this (and probably before 1426, since Robert Scott was a witness) has John Inglis of Manor and Branhholme granting the lands of ‘Kyrktoone and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirktoone and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branhholme were confirmed to Katherine, daughter and heir of Alexander Inglis, along with her husband ‘Arnou Gourlau’. And in 1521 ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branhholme were given to John Gourlay, as heir to his deceased father, John Gourlay of Rulewood; since the lands appear to have been close to Branhholme, perhaps they were associated with Chapelhill Kirk. This may be the place (or places) transcribed as ‘Toftis, Kirkwod’ in the 1594 and 1615 lists of lands for which the Baron of Hawick was superior (see also Kirkton Mains).

Kirkton see Kirkton

Kirkurd (kir-koord) n. small parish and former barony in western Peeblesshire. Lands there were held by the Scotts from perhaps the early 13th century, and they were probably given the superiority of the barony in the early 14th century. Certainly the superiority was confirmed to Walter, son of Robert Scott in 1389. The family would later move their headquarters to Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire to become the Scotts of Branhholme and Buccleuch, although they continued to hold these Peeblesshire lands until the mid-17th century. Individual pieces of land within Kirkurd were held by Douglas of Dalkeith and Cockburn of Henderland. In the early 16th century there was some dispute over the lands between Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and James Murray of Falahill. In the later 15th century the lands were considered part of the Barony of Branhholme. By 1574 the lands were valued at 80 merks, when they were considered as a separate barony of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still recorded as an 80-merk land in 1653. The church there was long the property of Soutra Hospital (also written ‘Kirkurd’, ‘Kirkhurde’, ‘Kirkurde’, ‘Kyrkourde’, ‘Kyrkurd’, ‘Kyrkurd’, etc.; it is ‘Ecclesia de Orda’ in the 1170s).

the Kirk Walk (thu-kirk-wawk) n. former popular name for the route between Cavers and the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, via Denholm Dean, which the Douglases of Cavers walked every Sunday through the 18th and 19th centuries.

Kirkwood (kirk-wood, -wud) n. Alexander (19th C.) first pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served the new church, perhaps intermittently 1846–52. He probably preached in Allars Crescent. W.M. Anderson took over from him. Lord Archibald Johnstone ‘Archy’ (1946– ) politician, born in Glasgow. He obtained a degree in Pharmacy at Herriot-Watt University, became the first sabbatical student President there, retrained as a solicitor, and was a partner in Hawick with Andrew Haddon for a while. He was elected M.P. for Roxburgh and Berwickshire in 1983, is a member of the Liberal Democrats, has been party Chief Whip and also spokesman on welfare issues. He holds the record for the longest period as Hawick’s Parliamentary representative, serving 1983–2005. He has taken part in some Common Riding Ride-outs. He was knighted in 2003 and became Lord Kirkwood of Kirkhope in 2005 after stepping down as M.P. Rev. James (c.1650–1709) born in Dunbar Parish, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1670, was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1676 and became Chaplain to the family of Sir John Campbell, Earl of Caithness (and later Breadalbane). He was then assistant at Wemyss and was presented to Minto Parish by Walter Riddell of Minto in early 1679, becoming minister later that year. However, he was deprived in late 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’, i.e. refusing to accept Episcopalianism. He went to Colmonell Parish around 1682 or 1683. Then in 1684, through the influence of Dr. Gilbert Burnet (Bishop of Salisbury) he was given the modest living of Astwick in Bedfordshire. He is said to have been ‘outed’ with his consent in 1702, and moved to Ireland. His last known places of residence were back in his native Haddingtonshire. He worked hard to circulate Gaelic copies of the Bible, and to promote libraries in every parish. He was a member of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge and a founding member of its Scottish equivalent in 1709. He left some papers to the Presbytery of Dunbar detailing his efforts to circulate the Bible throughout the Highlands in Gaelic. His books were later transferred to the collection of the General Assembly. He wrote ‘An account of the design of printing about 3000 bibles in Irish’
Kirkwud

(c.1689), ‘A Discourse of the right way of improving our Time’ (1692), ‘An Overture for Founding and Maintaining Bibliothecks in every Paroch throughout the Kingdom’ (1699, 1889, based on which he is sometimes given the title ‘Father of the Free Libraries’), ‘A Copy of a Letter anent a Project for erecting a Library in every Presbytery, or at least every County in the Highlands’ (1702), ‘A memorial concerning the disorders of the high-lands’ (1703) and ‘A New Family Book, or the True Interest of Families (1690, 1693). With the exception of the last one, all of these were published anonymously. He appears to have died unmarried.

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 as ‘Kyrcwd’, with a value of 40 pence. It was in the section called ‘Forresta’, but the precise location is unclear (perhaps near ‘Kirk Hill’ or near the old Castleton Kirk).

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former name for lands listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511 and 1572. It is possible that this is an error for ‘Birkwood’ (it is ‘Kirkwod’ in 1511 and 1572).

Kirkwudheid (kirk-wud-heed) n. former name for lands near Winninton Rig. They were listed as ‘lie Over et Nether Kirkwodheid’ as part of the Lordship of Winninton in 1610. ‘Kirwood’ was listed among lands in the Barony of Winninton in the late 17th century.

The Kirk Wynd (thu-kirk-wynd) n. old road from Drumlanrig Square to the Slitrig, named for its proximity to St. Mary’s Church. It was referred to as a ‘vennel’ in a 1610 sasine. By the 19th century it had become a very over-crowded street. Most of the older buildings were demolished in 1973/74, with a car park by St. Mary’s church and a road through to Slitrig Bank being constructed. Some houses were restored and inhabited in 1984. It is the site where the Drums & Fifes assemble to begin the main day of the Common Riding at 6 a.m. on the Friday.

Kirndean (kyn-deen) n. farm just south of Dinlabyre, on the Liddel Water, to the east of the road, about 4½ miles north of Newcastleton. In 1541 it is valued at 1 merk on the rental roll of Liddesdale, with tenant George Armstrong. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1589 acres, bounded by Dinlabyre on the east, Sorbitrees and the Border on the south, Dykeraw and lands of the Laird of Whitaugh on the west and Whitehaugh on the north; a house is shown near the modern farmhouse and another far to the south-east. It was one a home of the Armstrongs and then by the Elliots from the early 17th century until about 1950. ‘Fightin Charlie o Liddesdale’ is described in the notes to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’, and is meant to have been an Armstrong or Elliot from here. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1681 and 1682. Andrew Murray was tenant there in 1694. Adam Elliot was farmer there in 1797, Thomas Elliot in 1841, Henry Elliot in 1851, William Scott Elliot in 1861 and Thomas Murray in 1868. It is said that William Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century, and had an interaction with his neighbour ‘Little Robbie o the Castleton’. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. In an area of open moorland to the east lies the remains of a homestead, about 100ft across, which is labelled on the Ordnance Survey map as ‘Homestead Moat’ (and may correspond to the position of the other house marked in 1718), although there is no indication that the ditch was ever water-filled. 3 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirnton’ in 1797 and of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirnton’ in 1797 and 1818, ‘Kirtle’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, ‘Kirn-doly’ on the 1718 map, and ‘Kirntown’ on the Ordnance Survey map of Scotland. knitwear  (ni’-wair)  _n._  generic name for knitted clothing, particularly machine-knitted garments. Weavers were certainly a prominent class of workers in Hawick from the earliest records in about 1640. The knitting of stockings is said to have been introduced into Scotland during the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, i.e. the 1650s. The local origins of the industry are in traditional linen and woollen manufacturing, the latter perhaps being developed through the sheep farming of the local monks. The availability of sheep, and the abundance of sources of water-power were the natural seeds for development. Spinning a weaving were originally a domestic business, but people employed specifically as weavers were already a reasonably large fraction of the population of Hawick when the Burgh records begin about 1640. In 1728 the Council encourage the manufacturing of ‘tarred wool’ by helping with the rent of workhouse and ‘to pay £20 yearly to the dresser of coarse wool’. In 1736 it is recorded that ‘at Kirkcudbright, Hawick, Monygaff, and other Places near the Wool Countries, several Packs of tarred Wool have been washed and cleaned, and some of it sorted and combed, spun, and wrought up into Blankets, and other coarse Goods, by private Hands, for their own Use’; the names of Hawick’s first encouragers of local industry are not known. There is early reference to a fulling mill, and wool was spun for manufacture in other towns. By the mid-1700s there was a small factory making linen checks, and from the 1750s Hawick had small factories manufacturing carpets and linen tapes. John Hardie introduced stocking frames in 1771, initially making hosiery from linen and worsted, but gradually giving way to lambswool. In about 1776 there were 65 looms in Hawick, making linens and woollens (including carpets) and just 6 stocking frames. By 1791 there were 14 men and 51 women employed in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, making about 3500 pairs of lambswool hose and 600 pairs of cotton hose annually. In 1816 there were 7 carding mills with 44 ‘scribbling’ machines and 100 spinning jennies; the Town spun 12,000 stones of wool annually, and manufactured 328,000 pairs of stockings on 510 frames. Hawick grew as a hosiery (stockings etc.) manufacturing centre from the later 18th century into a producer of a wide range of knitwear in the late 19th century. In 1836 there were 16 separate establishments in the woollen trade, employing more than 1,600 people. There were over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories, where there were more than 1200 stocking frames and more than 200 weaving looms, making more than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well as other items. In 1839 it was stated that items being manufactured included ‘yarns, under clothing, flannels, plaiding, shaws, tartans, druggets, cloths of various descriptions, lamb’s wool hosiery of the finest texture, and blankets’. Attention switched from hosiery to tweeds from the 19th century. By 1850 there were 268 weaving looms and 3465 people were employed in the industry. In 1869 it was estimated that there were 64 set of machines, 52,864 spinning spindles, 270 power-looms and 100–150 hand looms, with 1.8 million pounds of wool being carded annually. In 1875 there were 653 power-looms for tweed, as well as 1017 hand frames and 86 power frames for hosiery. Around 1900 there were 18 hosiery and 14 tweed manufacturers in Hawick. It took many decades for the word ‘knitwear’ to popularly replace ‘hosiery’ as the description of Hawick’s main industry; there are conflicting claims about which company used it first, but it seems likely this portmanteau word was coined in Hawick. Innes, Henderson & Co. used ‘knit wear’ in 1924, with a brochure in 1929 having it as one word, while the minutes of the Board of Pringle’s first used it in 1945 – ‘Though I’m forever roving My heart is interwoven With the fabric of this old mill town’ [DF].

knock  (k-nok)  _n., arch._  a clock – ‘For taking doume & mending of the knoik’ [BR1701], ‘...and now for mending of the knocke and putting her to chap again’ [BR1701], _v., arch._  to strike – ‘...he shall keep the Town’s knocke in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient case and condition, without cracke or flaw for knockinge and choping hourly night and day’ [BR1702], ‘...lykewise that oyl be furnished yearlie for the knoike, and towes for the bell ...’ [BR1704] (there were many spelling variants).

Knowe (now) n. hamlet to the east of Hassendeanburn, on the opposite side of the Teviot from Ashybank. It was nearer to the river, with ‘Knowetoonheid’ being a little to the north. It was at one time referred to as the East Mains of Hassendean. Thomas Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £279 10s. John Turnbull paid tax on £227 8s for land there in 1663 and Thomas Turnbull in 1678. The lands became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The Turnbulls of Knowe, related to the Minto branch of the family, held land here for many generations, before it passed to the Horsburghs of that Ilk through marriage. Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths for ‘Know and his servants’; in fact Thomas Turnbull of Knowe acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire.

Anthony Turnbull paid tax for 22 windows there in 1748. Thomas Scott and John Gray were living there in 1799. The lands were listed as owned by David Simpson of Knowe on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £227. Edward Heron-Maxwell of Teviotbank was owner in about 1874. A glass stirrup-cup used by this family is in the Museum. Their arms showed an ear of rye between 3 bulls’ heads. Andrew Reid farmed there in 1797 (also formerly spelled ‘Know’).

Knowesouth

Knowesouth (now-sowth, noo-sooth) n. mansion on the A698 road to Jedburgh, now a private nursing home. The estate was held by a branch of the Rutherford family (descended from the main Edgerston stem) from about the mid-17th century, who sometimes spelled their name ‘Rutherford’. The lands were valued at £484 in 1678. The farms of the estate featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century, with 4 hearths in the house and 19 tenants listed. Robert Bonnar was there in 1690. John Rutherford paid tax for 26 windows there in 1748 and 1753. Labourer James Young was there in at least 1797–1801, gardener James Oliver in 1799 and George Hope in 1801. When Thomas Rutherford died in 1796 and his brother Capt. John Rutherford died unmarried in the early 19th century the inheritance of the estate was disputed between the husbands of different daughters. It eventually went to Thomas’ nephew Charles Scott. He sold it to William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre, who had a mansion built there in about 1835. However, in 1838 Rutherford sold it to George Pott (who had already purchased the neighbouring Ruecastle). Robert Oliver and John Rutherford are recorded as farmers there in 1797 and James Young was a servant. George and Gideon Pott of Dod lived there in the 1840s to 60s. There is an oil painting of the old house, probably from the mid-19th century. The house was re-built around 1870 for William Oliver Rutherford on the site of the earlier house. It has a spectacular 18th century lectern-type ‘doocot’ (although largely hidden by trees). About 500 m to the south-east are the possible remains of a settlement (also spelled ‘Knowsouthe’, it was ‘Knousooth’ in 1694; it may be marked on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map as ‘Cowsmouth’ and ‘Cowismouth’ on one of Gordon’s c.1650 maps, but is not on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Knowesouth Burn (now-sowth-burn) n. stream that rises on the north-west slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish and runs roughly northwards, past the farm of Knowesouth to join the Teviot. On the west side of the stream are the remains of a settlement. It consists of a roughly circular enclosure, about 43 m in diameter, with another bank outside, lying between 2 gullies. This is probably the ‘encampment’ described in the 1837 parish summary in the New Statistical Account.

Knowetonheid (now-toon-heed) n. Knowetonhead, hamlet about 4 miles north-east of Hawick, between Hassendeanburn and Teviot Bank. It is on the east bank of Hassendean Burn and a little to the north of the old farm of Knowe. It was locally also known as simply ‘Toonheid’ (or ‘Townhead’) and was formerly known as ‘East Mains’ of Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Turnbull held it in the late 15th century. It appears to have been part of the lands owned by Robert Scott of Alton in 1643 and owned by Thomas Gray in 1678, when it was ‘Now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. It was owned by the Turnbuls of Knowe in the 17th and 18th centuries, although their house was probably nearer to the river than the modern farmhouse. It was farmed by William Little around 1700. In 1797 Adam Trotter and James Hilson were listed as joiners there and John Armstrong was a servant. The farmhouse contains a carved wedding plaque, showing ‘1628 TT HT’, probably the marriage of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with his wife perhaps being Helen Turnbull; it was presumably taken from the old house of Knowe. There are 2 carved stones built into the wall, one showing 2 dragons, and the other a lamb bearing a cross or banner; these may have been from Hassendean Kirk. In the county valuation of 1788 it is recorded as ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Knox (noks) n. Adam (b.1826) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was the first Cornet from Wilton, being elected at a public meeting in 1856 after the first nominee had declined and then the Council had refused to be further involved. He is shown as Right-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. He worked as a ‘flesher’ (i.e. butcher). Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was probably related to George, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) married Marion Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Thomas in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (1690/1–1768) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Kirkwood, who died in 1768, aged 74. Andrew (1756/7–1830), tenant of Mainhill, who is recorded on the same headstone, is probably his grandson. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1789. Andrew (18th C.) married Mary

Elliot in Wilton in 1771. A.O. (18th/19th C.) residing at Wilton Mill, he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Archibald (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Douglas. Their children included: Agnes (b.1818), baptised in East Bank Kirk; and Hendry (b.1825), baptised in Hawick Kirk. Dan fictional character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘Son of a Duke’s farmer’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. David (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: John (b.1721); Isabel (b.1723); Bessie and Eliza (b.1725); Marion (b.1728); James (b.1730); and Mary (b.1735). David (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1741. This was when he feuded part of the lands of Howlands from George Langlands of that Ilk. His wife Helen Young held the lands in liferent and his son James (gardener in Hawick) as his heir. Along with his brother James, he is ‘of Howlands’ when listed among the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765, with his son James representing him and his brother. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Whitlaw, along with James, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The pair were probably the uncles of William, who was later farmer at Meikle Whiltaw; they were said to have succeeded as tenants to John Gledstains. He could be the David who married Isabel Burnet in Hawick in 1788 and whose daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick in 1788. David (b.1821) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was farmer at lands off Langlands Road, before it was developed. In 1851 he was living at Howlands House on Wilton Path, farmer of 34 acres, employing 2 men. In 1861 he was assistant farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. In 1852 he married Ann Scott, from Newcastleton. Their children included Agnes (b.1853), William and John. David (b.1820/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Martinshouse. In 1861 he was farming 116 acres and employing 4 people. He was also recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes. George (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. He may be the George, married to Janet Robson, whose children baptised in Roberton Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included Agnes (b.1684), Thomas (b.1687) and Andrew (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were John Knox (who was surely related) and John Brown. They also had a daughter Margaret (b.1695) baptised in Wilton. George (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Leitch in Wilton in 1761. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Gordon in 1799 and their children included: George (b.1802). George (b.c.1805) stockmaking of Howdenburn, and early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. He was son of George, who was a private in the 16th Regiment of Foot, and Agnes Gordon. He lived with his sister Janet. A sketch of him exists. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with James, as residents of ‘Cordlane’. It is unclear where this was, but James Davidson in Raperlaw was accused of stealing 40 sheep from there. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Henry at ‘Cordlane’. James of Howlands (18th C.) brother of David, with whom he was joint owner of part of Howlands. In 1765 his nephew James represented him and his brother in the court case over the division of Wilton Common. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick, son of David and Helen Young. He is named in the 1741 disposition of part of Howlands to his father, his mother in liferent and himself in fee. They were obliged to grind their grain at roughheugh Mill and pay ‘thirle-dues’, as well as ‘unthirle-dues’ for other grain. The infeftment was confirmed in 1764. In 1765 he was ‘in Howlands’ when he represented his father and uncle James (who were both ‘of Howlands’) in the court case over the division of Wilton Common. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh in 1788, valued at £15 3s. He is probably the James who married Jean Irwin in Wilton in 1756 and had children: David (b.1757); Andrew (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); Helen (b.1762); James (b.1766); Jean (b.1768); Andrew (b.1770); Walter (b.1771); John (b.1774); and Isabel (b.1780). The witnesses in 1780 were Robert ‘Irwin’ (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Rae. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw along with David on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably ancestor of James who farmed at Little Whitlaw a few decades later and possibly uncle of William, who farmed at Meikle Whitlaw. He may be the same as James, gardener at Damside. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Damside who was also a volunteer. He spotted the beacon on Crumhaugh Hill at the False Alarm of 1804 (although confusingly sometimes this is said to have been ‘Walter’; he ran down the Loan and the Howegate waving his gun, with a crowd running after him, reached the Tower Knowe and fired his gun as a signal, gaining the prize of 20 shillings. He could be the James, who, along with Walter, is described in the 1808 will of ‘Auld Cash’ as ‘late in Damside now at Silverboothall’; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and Walter were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbuthall, and he is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (later owned by auctioneer James Oliver). It seems that he must have been from the next generation compared to the earlier gardener, who was son of David; he may well have been son of that James. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Little Whitlaw. His brother William was farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was ‘Thomas’ or Thomasina Elliot and their children included: David (b.1813); Robert (b.1821); Archibald (b.1823); Janet (b.1827), who married Thomas Turnbull in 1847; and Thomas, who was cashier at Haddon & Turnbull’s. He was probably nephew of David and James who were earlier at Whitlaw. In 1851 he was recorded there, farming 97 acres and employing 3 people. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Hope in 1814 and their children included: James (b.1815); Betty (b.1817); James (again, b.1819); Thomas (b.1821); Jean (b.1824); Margaret (b.1826); and Helen (b.1830). James (19th C.) resident of Harden in Castleton Parish in 1868. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. He was probably related to Agnes, George and Thomas, also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for George in 1684. John (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1761 for William Nichol and Janet Blaikie. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (1763/4–1832) son of William, tenant at Newhouse. He farmed at Faldonside. He married Janet Scott, who died in 1836, aged 58. Their children included William and Jean, who died in infancy. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrice Stewart and their daughter Margaret (b.1842) was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1843. John (b.1828) son of William. He was a baker in Melrose. He took over his father’s tenancy of Meikle and Little Whitlaw. However, he gave them up in 1895. He died without issue. Rev. Robert (1660–59) eldest son of Robert, who was probably the grand-nephew of the reformer John. He became minister at Kelso in 1633. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He used some vaults in the old abbey as his manse, adding to the chambers used by his father. He firstly married Margaret, sister of John Ker of Lochtour and secondly Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Rev. Robert (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was recorded living at Cavers in 1677. Hence he may have been private chaplain or tutor for Douglas of Cavers. He wrote to Rev. Wylie (the former tutor at Cavers) about the apparently supernatural case of Sir George Maxwell of Pollock, and also about the ‘ethart’ spirit, which accompanied a lady who lived ‘in the West marches’ of Scotland. He is recorded in Cavers in 1683 and 1684 in discharges to the treasurer of Selkirk for annual rent. He became assistant minister at St. Mungo’s in Glasgow in 1688, but was forced to give up on account of being an Episcopalian. He was presented to Peebles in 1690, and although he was not settled, he ‘continued to possess the Kirk by violence’, eventually being forced to withdraw. Robert ‘Robbie’ (20th C.) played rugby for the Y.M. and then Hawick R.F.C. He was part of the championship-winning side in the 1920s. He was associated with the Y.M. for the rest of his life. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Jean Turnbull in 1682. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham and Margaret Knox (perhaps his sister) in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Andrew was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Johnstone and Andrew Knox (who was surely related). Thomas (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He was probably related to George, who was also listed there, and seems likely to have been an ancestor of the later Thomas who farmed at Firth. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Heath Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, George and John, who were also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Laing in Minto in 1718. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Andrew (b.1720); and George (b.1723). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included: Marion (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1747). Thomas (18th in 1759 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Waugh at Groundstone. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Firth, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Firth in 1797. He married Barbara Turnbull and was father of the poet William (b.1789), who was baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. Other children were probably Jessie (b.1790), Dorothea (b.1794), Thomas (b.1796) and Henrietta (b.1798). His wife has previously been married to George Pott of Todrig. He may have been related to the earlier Thomas at Newhouse. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of James, farmer at Little Whitlaw. He worked in the woollen trade for a while and was then cashier at Haddon & Turnbull's. He lived at Ebony Cottage. He was described as ‘an intelligent and kindly man off business, but somewhat to be feared if immersed in business’. He married Isabella, daughter of Benjamin Hall and Mary Wilson. Thomas ‘Tom’ worked in the Tourist Information Centre in Hawick, where he became known for singing to visitors. He wrote the song ‘Where Sitrig Meets Teviot’. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1653). Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer in Minto in 1797 when he was taxed for having a greyhound. Perhaps the same Walter was listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d, which was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) shopkeeper in Wilton, with a grocer’s shop. He also ran carts, carrying coals etc., with the help of his sons. It seems likely he was son of James, gardener at Damside; in the 1808 will of ‘Auld Cash’, he and James are described as ‘late in Damside now at Silverbouthall’; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and James were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbouthall. He was probably the ‘Mr. Knox’ who owned land around and to the north of Langlands Road, according to Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as farmer at Howlands among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1837 he was mentioned as an example in the House of Commons investigation into ‘fictitious voters’; along with his sons Walter and James they rented Hutlerburn in order to have votes in Selkirkshire. He married Elizabeth Hart in Wilton in 1808 (or ‘Betty’) and their children included: James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1817); and Helen (again, b.1819); David (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton: John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stirches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He married Elizabeth Oliver (or Smith) in 1838 and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Jessie Smith (b.1838); Walter (b.1840); Elizabeth (b.1842); and Maria Smith (b.1844). William (1721/2–96) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Janet Smail, who died in 1791, aged 60. Their son John (b.1763/4) was tenant at Faldonside. They also had 2 children who died in infancy. William (1732/3–77) tenant farmer at Dunstane Moor in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Cairns, who died in 1772, aged 34. His brother James (1726/7–1805) is recorded on the same headstone. William (1762/3–1825) tenant at Belses farm. He married Margaret Hume, who died in 1859, aged 91. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–16); Margaret (1803/4–16); Barbara (1801/2–08); and 3 children who died in infancy. William (1789–1825) local poet, born at Firth, near Lilliesleaf, he lived for a while at The Cottage, near Orchard. He was the eldest son of Thomas, a Lilliesleaf farmer, and Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott of Todrig). He was educated at Lilliesleaf Parish School until aged 12 or 13 and then spent a few years at Musselburgh Grammar School. He was a good friend of Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick, the husband of his sister Jessie Elizabeth. His family farmed at Todrig, where Henry Scott Riddell was a herd in his youth, and later farmed at Langhope. He himself tried unsuccessfully as a farmer at Wrae near Langholm when he was 23, lasting about 5 years. His family moved to Edinburgh in 1820, where he worked as a journalist, wrote sacred poetry, and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. His publications include ‘The Lonely Hearth and other poems’ (1818), ‘Songs of Israel’ (1824) and ‘The Harp of Zion’ (1825). The ‘Harp of Zion’ was supposedly recalled entirely from memory after the printer lost the manuscript copy. His poem ‘Mortality’ (also known as ‘Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?’ published in ‘Songs of Israel’) was a favourite of Abraham Lincoln and it was also said that the Emperor of Russia had it printed in gold and hung on the palace walls. He was described as short, but handsome, with a fair complexion and light hair, and was said to recite his compositions enthusiastically. Stories are told of him taking shelter at Stainton’s Smiddy on Melgund Place and also at Cauldmill Smiddy, where the smith quoted one of his own lines of poetry to him, obliging him to confess that he was the author of those lines, leading to an invitation to hospitality and a long night of conversation (it seems likely that the stories are both inspired by one event). He died at Leith after suffering a stroke, aged only 36, and is buried in New Calton Cemetery in Edinburgh. The Museum has an original letter of his. There is a tablet to his memory in Lilliesleaf Kirk. ‘Some Correspondence Printed for Private Circulation among the Poet’s Relations and Friends’ was published in 1891. William (18th/19th C.) from Lilliesleaf Parish. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Walterloo County, Ontario, where he called his farm Langside, after the place he left in Lilliesleaf. He emigrated with his sister Jessie (who married Robert Leithead), and their farm was next to that of his cousin Charles Scott, who was also from Lilliesleaf. He later moved to Toronto. William (b.1796/7) farmer at Meikle Whitlaw and later at Little Whitleaw. His brother James was tenant at Little Whitleaw. He was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later than this); they could have been the David and James recorded at Whitleaw in 1797. His wife was Nancy Scott (listed as ‘Mina’ in the birth records of her children). In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 64 acres at Meikle Whitleaw and in 1861 was farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. His children included: Williamina (‘Mina’, b.1819), who lived at 11 Glebe View; Isabel (b.1820); David (b.1822), who went to Canada, but returned to Scotland to farm at New Hope, Kirkpatrick Fleming; William (b.1824); James (b.1826); John (b.1828), baker in Melrose, who succeeded to the farms; Margaret (b.1831); Agnes and Jessie (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). One of his daughters became Mrs. Rutherford from Moffat. William (19th C.) married Rachel Sutherland in Hawick Parish in 1848. William (19th C.) married Agnes Riddell in 1850, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes (sometimes written ‘Knocks’ and ‘Nox’ in early records).

knugle (ni-, nü-gul) v., arch. to squeeze with the hands and knees, to give artificial respiration (also knuizle).

knuizle (ni-, nü-zul) v., arch. to press the body, especially an injured person (also knuigle).

Knyvet (ni-vi’) n. Sir Henry (c.1506–bef.1547) of Charlton, Wiltshire, son of Sir Thomas and Muriel Howard. He was one of the lieutenants of the Earl of Hertford during the 1545 ravaging of the Borders. He married Anne Pickering in 1537. Their son Thomas was famous as the captor of Guy Fawkes (older form of ‘Nivet’ with many spelling variations).

the K.O.S.B. (thu-kä-ö-es-bee) n. the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1869 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a ‘loyalist’ force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The regiment undertook a march from Berwick to Dumfries, partly as a recruitment drive. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced ‘first fourth’, i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. ‘For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borders on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915’ was written by Gavin Richardson in 1987 and ‘After Gallipoli: the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, The King’s Own Scottish Borderers 1916–1918: Egypt, Palestine and the Western Front’ in 1992. ‘Borderers in Battle: The War Story of the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, 1939–1945’ (1948) was written by Hugh Gunning.

the Kosbies (thu-koz-bees) n., pl. popular name for members of the K.O.S.B.

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1856 after delivering a lecture ‘in the cause of European Freedom’. The visit was organised by Peter Laidlaw, Alex Hogg and others. A large crowds turned out to watch his carriage arriving in Hawick. One of the welcoming banners in Hawick had been made by James ‘Dictionary’ Murray and said ‘Thy Kingdom Come’ in Hungarian. He talked to the crowd from a window of the Tower Hotel and delivered 2 speeches in East Bank Kirk over his 2-day visit. He was later in Galashiels, Kelso, Jedburgh and Selkirk. In Glasgow he stayed at the observatory with John Pringle Nichol, who had been a teacher in Hawick. His first name is also written ‘Lajos’. Unable to improve the situation in Hungary, he died in exile.

Kowe (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) notary for the sasine giving James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was a presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

krame (kräm) n., arch. a temporary merchant’s booth, stall at a fair – ‘Assolzies George Makwetie fra the claim perseeb be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, ma or fewer, allegit taken away fra his crame in Hawick’ [BR1655], ‘...for the stealing and theftuously away taken out of his craime in open market ane pair of single soled shoes’ [BR1680], ‘Sally Machusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI], ‘Gibbie the Gowk’s no’ sic a gowk but he’ll pack up the krame a’ right enough’ [JEDM], ‘Rows of ‘krames’ laden with toothsome dainties ...’ [BM1907], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘...Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame ...’ [DH] (also spelled ‘kraim’, ‘craime’ and ‘crame’; still in use to refer to stalls up the Moor at the Common Riding, although it is now obscure elsewhere in Scotland; from Mediæval German or Dutch).

krame-wife (kräm-wif) n., arch. a female stall-holder at a fair etc. ‘...and on Hopekirk Bu’ morning the krame-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trott, and clagam on the old through stones’ [WaD] (also written ‘kraim-wife’).

Kristenbury Crags (kris-ten-bu-ree-krawgz) n., pl. Christianbury Crags, a rocky outcrop near the farm of Flatt on the English side of the Ker-shop valley. It can be seen in the distance from parts of southern Liddesdale.

Krucrewch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for ‘Crook’ or ‘Crouch’.

KS (kä-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

the Kumfy Mill (thu-kum-fy-nee-uhl) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Shush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

kyme (kI) n., pl., arch. cows, cattle – ‘Item sex ky viz. foure ky with followaris and twa with cauf price of the pece ourheid £8’ [SPB1579], ‘...Betide me life, betide me death, These three ky shall gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me. ‘ky’; this was once the common plural form of ‘cow’; see also kine).

Kyle (kil) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howegate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the trade and then was tobacconist at 3 Tower Knowe. He was Cornet in 1872. He married Jessie S. Elliot, who was daughter of Hawick’s first cabinet minister, and died in 1885, aged 29. His son William was Cornet in 1905. Their other children included Thomas, Lizzie H. and William, none of whom reached adulthood. Andrew (1729/30–1833) born at Heughhead farm in Castleton Parish. He was tenant farmer at Braedlie on the Hermitage Water. He was farmer at Demainholm on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls, and Braedlie in 1794 and 1797. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean, daughter of David Murray, and she died in 1834, aged 83. He died in his 94th year and is buried at Etterston. Their children included: David (1776–1861); William (1776–1855); John, recorded as his son on the 1799 Militia ballot; and probably Arthur, who later farmed at Braedlie. His daughters could be the ‘Miss Kyles’ recorded at Braedlie in the 1830s. Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Midtodhills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabl, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1908, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1908); William (1842/3–1903); Mary Anne (1844/5–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Etterston. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braedlie in Castleton Parish. He was listed at ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–38. He was probably son of Andrew, who was farmer at Braedlie in 1797. He was brother of David, who also farmed at Braedlie. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (18th C.) resident of Melrose. In 1776 he married Betty Kedie, daughter of Hawick baker John, the marriage being proclaimed in both parishes. They had several children in Melrose. In 1782 his daughter Betty died in Hawick. He could be the proprietor of ‘The George’ in Melrose, which was frequented by Sir Walter Scott, hence he found his way into Sir Walter’s work ‘The Monastery’; he was son of a baker from Galashiels and died in 1805, aged 52. David ‘Auld Kyle’ (1777–1861) farmer at Braedlie (or Broadlee) in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray, and brother of Arthur. He was recorded as a shepherd at Braedlie in 1797 on the list of Castleton Parish men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castleton’ and he was a shepherd at Broadlee on the 1801 Militia list. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliott (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833). Anne married shepherd William Glendinning. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Halbert Noble’ in 1861. He was described in H.H Dixon’s ‘Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)’ (1865) as a keen hunter, once competing against Routledge, Laird of the Flatt. He hunted hare in his youth, switching later to foxes, hunting with Dandie Dinmonts. As a farmer, he had a peculiarity of having all his tups horned. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hilliesland, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1848); Janet (b.1850); Isabella (b.1853); James (b.1855);
John (b.1857), who was Cornet in 1885; Beat-rix (b.1861); Helen (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1867); and Frances (b.1869). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same George was cottar in Castleside in 1762; he married Margaret Laidlaw and had several children baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including Thomas (b.1762), Agnes (b.1763), Mary (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Isabel (b.1771), and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastleton, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93), James John (d.bef. 1797) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains in 1761. He married Agnes Mitchellhill in 1751 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); Adam (b.1762); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1762 were Walter Cook and Thomas Cowan. Note that his fore-name is sometimes given as just ‘John’ and his wife’s surname sometimes as ‘Mitchel’. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Esther Scott and their children included: Agnes (b.1787); Esther (b.1789); John (b.1791); William (b.1794); Robert (b.1796); Beatrix (b.1798); and Adam (b.1802). The witnesses in 1791 were William (surely a close relative) and Thomas Brown. The death of his daughter Beatrix is recorded in Hawick in 1815. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in 1798. James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), also died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gardener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrix Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and wood-turner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastleton in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Kyle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Helen Beatie and their children included: Janet (b.1756); Robert (b.1759), also a mason; and Sarah (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were smiths James and Robert, who were probably related to his wife. He was deceased before his son Robert died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Thomas Lookup and in 1779 for wright James Hogg. John see James John. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. He and his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Ettleton. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. On the 1799 ballot for the Militia he was recorded as a gardener at Cavers. He was also recorded as gardener at Cavers in 1800 and on the 1801 Militia ballot he was a gardener at Cavers who ‘wants th sight of an eye’. His children included: Mark (b.1798); Alexander (b.1800); and Thomas (b.1801). John (1781–1851) son of butcher James and Mary Porteous, he was a merchant and hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. He was listed as a stocking manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and may also have been the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street. ‘John & James Kyle’ was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861 – ‘...Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style’ [MB]. John (b.c.1770s) son to Andrew in Braehead, according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was recorded as a ‘Drover’ at ‘Broadlee’ on the 1801 ballot (along with his brother David). John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as ‘Wilton Lodge Garden House’. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John ‘the Nether Wulton Youth’ (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwitton, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman Skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He attended his 59th Common Riding dinner in 1899, this being said to be a record. He was also a keen Mason, being Master of Lodge 111. On Old Year’s Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, framesmith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Ettrick Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (b.1857) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgence of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. His Cornet’s Lass was probably either Miss Murray or Miss Fraser, who were recording in the local press at the Colour Bussing ceremony in 1887. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1885, having won the Queen’s Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watchmaker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 year’s of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as ‘an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts’. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodworking, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He established an educational trust for the High School, the Andrew, Agnes and John Kyle Bequest Fund. Robert (d.1801) mason in Hawick. He was son of John, who was also a mason. His wife Betty Turnbull died in Hawick in 1815. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear how he was related to other Kyles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Hummelknowes in 1729 and 1731. His children included: Mark (b.1729); and John (b.1731). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Groundistone in 1737. His name is written ‘Cayle’ in 1737 when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Scott and William Lunn in Wilton. He married Marion Sliman and their children included: George (b.1737); and Isobel (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were Robert and William Scott. Thomas (19th C.) brother of John, William and Richard. He was a commercial traveller for John Laing & Sons, and his son was also Thomas. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1830s–1921) son of Thomas, he worked for John Laing & Sons for about 60 years, mainly as a commercial traveller. He was secretary of the Trades Committee for several years, Clerk of the Course at the Moor for 11 years and member of the Race Committee and Ceremonial Committee. He was known as a good cricketer and was a keen supporter of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife Jane Ferguson, daughter of Mrs. Burns of the Crown Hotel. William (c.1709–98) born at Burnmouth in Castleton Parish, son of William and Isobell Moffet. He was tenant at Heughhead. He and his son were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800); George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (1776–1855) son of Andrew in Braidlie. He may be the resident of Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same William was farmer at Braidlie in 1797 when he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in Castleton Parish. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun’; he was ‘now Farmer Greenholm’. He was also farmer at Greenholm on the 1801 ballot. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘William, junior’ (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the flesher listed in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buccleuch Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret. In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener. William (19th C.) recorded at Greenholm among the gentry living near Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholm recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839. William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Lea-haugh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Farmer of about 300 acres more or less’. He married Robina, daughter of joiner John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829–1909); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Lea-haugh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. He died at Lea-haugh and is buried at Ettleton. William Elliot ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WWI and also played for Scotland. In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly ‘Cayle’, ‘Kyel’, ‘Kyll’ and variants).

the Ladies’ Circle (thu-lä-deez-sir-kul) n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??

the Ladies’Clothin Society (thu-lä-deez-klo-thin-su-sl-i-‘ee) n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.

ladies’ gairtens (lä-deez-gär-tinz) n., pl., arch. the striped ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea picta.

the Ladies’ Pool (thu-lä-deez-pool) n. former name for a shallow pool below the Cauld, on the north side of the Teviot (with the ‘Cat’s Pool’ being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Cauld. Boys who went in that side were called ‘jessies’ (also sometimes ‘Lady’s Pool’).

ladies’ purse (lä-deez-purs) n., arch. the shepherd’s purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calceolaria.

the Ladies’ Purse (thu-lä-deez-purs) n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

ladies’ purses (lä-deez-pur-seez) n., arch. flowers of the calceolaria.

Ladies’ Sate (lä-deez-sä’) n. Ladies’ Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies’ Slack (lä-deez-slawk) n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh’s Hill, just to the north-east of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Ladies’ Well (lä-deez-wel) n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the ‘Lady’s well, or Our Lady’s Well’ described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of ‘Lady’s Well Meadow’ being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.

Ladies’ Edge (lä-deez-ej) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Lady’s-edge’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

the Lads (thu-lawdz) n. name sometimes used to refer to followers of the Cornet, particularly the unmarried and/or younger ones. Since 1961 the upstairs gallery at the Common Bussing has been reserved for ‘the Lads’.

the Lads’ Gallery (thu-lawdz-gaw-lu-ree) n. middle section upstairs in the Town Hall, specifically during the Colour Bussing ceremony, when it is taken up by the Cornet’s supporters. Each ‘Lad’ has a ribbon pinned on him by one of the Maids of Honour. It has become traditional for programmes to be made into paper aeroplanes and thrown down towards the Maids of Honour at the end of the proceedings.
Ladshaw Sike (lad-shaw-sik) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley. It rises on Ladshaw Fell, joining Gavel Sike and Stock Grain to become part of the headwaters of the Howpasley Burn.

Lady (lá-dee) n. former house on Hermitage Water, located on the north side of the valley between the Castle and Braidlie, at the foot of what is now Lady’s Knowe (marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Lada’).

the Lady (thu-lá-dee) n. nickname for David Scott of Stirehes.

Lady Appotside (lá-dee-aw-pî-síd) n. name used to refer to Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood and Appotside.

Lady Day (lá-dee-dâ) n. Feast of the Annunciation, 25th March, formerly the beginning of the New Year. The phrase is recorded in the local Commissioners’ Court for 1622, shortly after the beginning of the year had been shifted to 1st January. It was used to denote the end of the hiring period beginning with Whitsunday.

Lady Highchester (lá-dee-hî-ches-tur) n. title of Margaret Hamilton, wife of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (or ‘Haychester’).

Lady Howpaslot (lá-dee-hó-pas-lo’) n. name used to refer to Lady Scott of Howpasley.

Ladykirk (lá-dee-kirk) n. village on the Tweed in Berwickshire. The site was an important one for Scottish-English diplomacy, e.g. it is where John Balliol acknowledged Edward I as his feudal superior in 1291 and where a treaty was signed between the 2 countries in 1559. Originally Upsettlington, its name was changed around 1500 by James IV after he nearly drowned there, it being a popular crossing point for armies. The church dates from the early years of the 16th century, and is the oldest surviving church building in the Borders. The mansion there was built in 1799, but demolished in the 1930s and replaced by a new house in the 1960s (it is ‘Lady K’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Ladyland (lá-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called ‘Hassendean Ladylands’ and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburgh before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Elliott along with Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburgh and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once parton (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (lá-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and ‘formerly stated in Cavers parish’. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were ‘Langtoun Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh’. The lands were probably connected with ‘Ladies’ Well’ and ‘Lady’s Edge’, which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like ‘Hassendean Ladyland’ in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both formerly being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).

Ladylaw (lá-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lá-dee-law-sen’-ur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny’s factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lă-dee-law-hoos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosalee Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Alison. Alison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. In 1953 the house was split into 2 dwellings. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lă-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family. It was built for Wilson & Watson’s, then taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenny’s, with whom it remained for a century. A water wheel was installed by Melrose’s in 1885 and repaired in 1920, when it was used along with steam engines. Following a major fire in 1959, the mill was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre and later replaced by Lidl supermarket (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Ladylaw Place (lă-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The Wilton branch of the Co-op was here in the mid-1900s. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called ‘the Pedlar’s Field’.

the Lady Riders (th-lă-dee-ri-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider’s Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furor over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

lady’s gairtens (lă-gär-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady’s Knowe (lă-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223 m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady’s Pool (thu-lă-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about ‘Yedie Broon’ recounted in 1863 (descending to there from Haggishaaa to clean off the sticky treacle toffee).

the Lady’s Pool see the Ladies’ Pool

Lady’s Scar (lă-deez-skawr) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Lea haugh Cottage.

Lady’s Sike (lă-deez-sik) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lă-dee-stir-cheez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Symington (lă-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written ‘Sumington’. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summington’. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as ‘Farnington’.

Lady’s Well (lă-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as ‘a well of excellent water’. It lies only about 500 m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.
Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with ‘Our Lady’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring lying between Wauchope and Templehall farms, close to the Wauchope Burn, in Hobkirk Parish.

Lady Synton (lā-dee-sin-īn) n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lā-dee-tōd-īg) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitehaugh (lā-dee-whī’-uf) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitehaugh.

Lady Whitslade (lā-dee-whī’-slād) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitslade (e.g. in 1707).

laid (lād) pp., adj., arch. smeared with butter, tar or other substance, to protect from the weather or vermin (said of a sheep’s fleece, or the wool produced from it) – ‘Cheviot wool laid with tar and butter, per stone of 24 lbs. English, 10s. 7d.; ditto laid with turpentine, 14s. 2d. … ’ [RGJH].

laidman (lād-mun) n., arch. a carter who works for a miller, delivering corn – ‘Aw mind … the first barley mill in Ashkirk Mill, when Aw was a young chap and the miller’s laidman there’ [BCM1880].

laidner (lād-nur) n., arch. a larder, hence winter’s provisions, particularly referring to an animal slaughtered and cured for winter food – ‘The lands of meikle whitlaw sett by rentall right To Francis Gledstanes of Whitlaw during his lifet ime for gentleman Srvice with ane fat mart at ladner tyne or price throf’ [Buc1692].

laid-treis (lād-trīz) n., arch. a large frame to fix to a farm cart to allow it to take an increased load.

Laidlaw (lād-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ from Whitside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbushie’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglases, Turnbulls, Shielis and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladelie Greetleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘greatt leges’” in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawghe’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawe’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was named ‘Eddie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladelie Greetleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘greatt leges’” in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreahawghe’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawe’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1656 his son James with Bessie Grieve was baptised in Hawick. This child was born illegitimately, with witnesses John (surely a relative) and James Grieve (probably related to Bessie Grieve). Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Laidlaw and their children included Walter (b.1669) and Margaret (b.1673). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Ledon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.)
Laidlaw

resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at the Markair in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised. Adam Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: David (b.1711); and Adam (b.1715). The witnesses in 1711 were Walter Scott in Newbigging and James Scott in Nether Southfield. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at the Markair in 1716 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Bell and their children included: Violet (b.1729); Simon (b.1730); and William (b.1734). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1731. Adam Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Wester Burnfoot in 1736, Brieryyards in 1741 and Galalaw in 1747. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for John Hood in Hornshole. He married Violet Bonar and their children included: Thomas (b.1736); William (b.1738); Helen (b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and Violet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1736 were Archibald and John Scott, in 1741 were John and Walter Scott and in 1747 were John and Thomas Scott. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Veitch and their children included: Adam (b.1754). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1787–90. Rev. Adam (1753/4–1834) licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1778, he was ordained as minister at South Shields in 1782, and promoted to St. James’, Silver Street, Newcastle in 1784. He was presented to Southdean Parish in 1809 in competition with John Richmond, who was preferred. However, he became minister at Kirkton in 1818 (although it is unclear what he did in the interim), where he remained until his death. In 1820 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). In 1786 he married Mary Laidlaw, who died in 1849. Their children included William, Adam, Thomas, John Whitfield, Robert and David. He could be the Adam, student of divinity who witnessed a lease for Simon in Boos Mill in 1773 (suggesting a relationship). Adam (b.1814/5) mason who worked with his uncle Andrew Rodgie Michie. He was disabled in an accident, and had to give up being a builder, becoming a coal agent instead. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent at the Station for Edmonton Colliery. After his uncle’s death in 1854 he ran his own builders firm. They built Heronhill and several other local villas and started work on the Exchange Buildings, although the first arch caved in and the firm was replaced. He is probably the builder of this name who was a Hawick Town Councillor for Wilton Ward, retiring in 1869. He married Margaret Cathrae in Wilton in 1838. In 1841 he was living at the North Toll Bar. He later lived at Kirkhouse in Wilton Parish and then farmed at Ancrum Craigs. His children included: Adam, who was a clerk; Thomas C., who carried on the farm; John Michie; James, who farmed at Trowmill; and Marjorie (or Margaret Michie), who married a farmer named Elliot, later married D. McBurnie Watson, and was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for commuting with Rutherfords and Grahamslaws who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Roberton in 1802. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley. He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to the ‘Scots Magazine’ and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote ‘Lucy’s Flittin’’. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beattie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the ‘fairy court’, he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerry and perhaps also at Ropelawshiel, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749); Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John (again, 1769–99), buried at Roberton; and Andrew (b.1774). He is buried at Teviothead. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Askirk Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included: Charles (b.1767). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Jean Elliot and their children included Barbara (b.1797). Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded in a legal case in 1814, involving Hawick lawyer Gilbert Amos. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Susanna Rutherford in Roberton Parish in 1819. Barrie (1921/2–2004) international rugby referee from Hawick. He played for Hawick Harlequins. Bennet (16th C.) listed as tenant in Northbank in 1541 along with ‘Belle’ and Thomas, paying 22 shillings yearly. His first name is recorded as ‘Bennete’. Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William. He was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother-in-law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Anterhauch’ (i.e. Antroch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1590 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladley of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of rieving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brydon and their son David was baptised in 1686. David (17th C.) tenant at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden’s father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden’s paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children who may be his included Margaret (b.1759), James (b.1761), Agnes (b.1768) and John (b.1770). David (b.1784) son of Robert, he was an agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. He was a hind at Todshawhaugh on the 1812 ballot for the Militia. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whithope. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert (b.1826); George (b.1827); Isabella (b.1831); Helen (b.1834); Margaret (b.1836); and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branhstone Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knowe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knowe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to Hawick, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), who died in infancy; Margaret (1823–1913); Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1819), who died in infancy; James (1825–95); and James (b.1826). Gideon (1802/3–1900) born near Tushielaw. He knew the Ettrick Shepherd in his younger days, met Sir Walter Scott and Professor Wilson and was present at the Carterhaugh Baa. He died at Singlie Inch and was then the oldest resident of the Ettrick valley. Gilbert (19th C.) married Margaret Lamb in Kirkton Parish in 1823. Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabel ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdom. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ who he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbulls and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded at Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1651 appear to be William and Walter Laidlaw. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnielees in Hob Kirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick. He is probably the James in Branxholme Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colterscleuch and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branxholme), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hislop’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as a herd in Ashkirk itself in 1715. He married Margaret Hislop and their son James was baptised in 1715. It is possible he is the same James from Hawick who married Margaret Hislop. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Roberton parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. He married Bessie Armstrong in Cavers in 1701. His children baptised in Caves included: William (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Walter (again, b.1706); Janet (b.1708); James (b.1711); Thomas (b.1716); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Robert (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1724). James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘coater’ (i.e. cottar) at Branxholme Park in 1708. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Adam
(b.1703); and James (b.1708). The witnesses were Walter Grieve ‘in Park’ and James Grieve in Commonside. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His marriage is recorded in 1715, with no wife’s name given. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at the Marklair in 1722. Perhaps the same James married Marion Laidlaw in Hawick in 1721. He had an unnamed child baptised in Roberton in 1722. James (18th C.) tenant at Berryfell in the 1730s, where several of his children were born. He leased Over Cassock from Walter Scott of Harden in 1738. He married Margaret Mack in Cavers Parish in 1733 and their children probably included: an unnamed son (b.1734); Helen (b.1736); James (b.1738); James (again, b.1740); and Betty (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1737 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. It is unclear if he could be the same man as the tenant at Berryfell. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1738. James (18th C.) resident of ‘Mains’ (i.e. Borthwickbrae Mains) in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Bessie (b.1749) was probably his daughter. He may be the James living at Parkhill in 1736 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (d.1756) shepherd at Wigg. His son William was wright in Toon-o-Rule. It seems likely that he is closely related to James, who was progenitor of the Laidlaws of Weensmoor. James (b.c.1738) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He lived at Weens, Weensmoor, and Bonchester Bridge. In 1764 he married Margaret Scott. Their children were: John (b.1765), who married Margaret Buckham; William (b.1768), who farmed at Weensmoor; Thomas, who died in infancy; James (b.1771); Janet (b.1774); Thomas (again, b.1776); Walter (b.1780), born at Weensmoor, gardener at Raby Castle; and Euphemia (b.1783), who married Walter Elliot from Hawick. He may be the James, son of John who lived at Parkhill. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Oliver and their children included: Thomas (b.1769); Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1776); Agnes (b.1778); and Mary (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1773 were Thomas Rutherford and Robert Riddell. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Hawickshiels blacksmith John Ker in 1760. James (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodburn, recorded on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Learmont, who died in 1797 (the result of a drowning). Their children included: Janet (b.1771); James (b.1774); Robert (b.1778); and John (b.1785). The witnesses in 1771 were John Bridges, senior and Alexander Bunyan and in 1774 were the whole congregation. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Meadshaw in 1780 and 1786. His children included Walter (b.1780) and James (b.1786). He may be the James who married Isobel Scoon in Roberton in 1777 and whose children included Beatrice (b.1791). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1795 he married Janet Darling and she died in 1810; the word ‘sauglay’ appears to be written after his name, and although it is unclear what it meant, it is probably the same as ‘Saughlaw’ applied to Walter in 1787 and 1795. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. James (1795–1838) son of hosiery manufacturer William. He was a hosiery finisher, and lived for several years at West Port House. He married Ann Affleck, from Peebles and she died in 1834. He died leaving a young family of 4 sons and 1 daughter: William (b.1821) the eldest; Thomas (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); Catherine (1828–1841); and Walter (b.1832). James ‘Jimmie’ (1797–1879) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was born at Lanraw. He was miller at Hallrule Mill, recorded in Pigot’s directories of 1825/6 and 1837, as well as Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed at Hallrule in 1841. He was tenant of Hallrule Mill farm in the period 1825–55, and all his children were born there. He was later farmer at Hartshaugh Mill, where he was recorded in 1868. For a while he also transported grain across the Border by horse and returned with coals. By 1871 he was farming 237 acres at Hartshaugh Mill. In 1826 he married Isabella Turnbull at Greenriver House, and she died in 1871, aged 73; she was daughter of Henry Turnbull and Betty Stavert. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betsy, 1827–1906), who married Andrew Murray; William (b.1829), who took over at Hartshaugh Mill, but moved to Canada and died unmarried; Henry (1831–89), who had an accident that affected his brain; Helen (b.1833), who lived at old Hallrule House and cared for her brother Henry and father James; John Douglas (1835–1911), who emigrated to Toronto; Isabella Grieve (b.1838), who married George Scott; and probably James Douglas. He and his wife are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. James (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was miller at Trow Mill. His wife was Isabella Walker and their children included George and Andrew. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Hislop and their children included George (b.1865). James (19th C.) son of builder and farmer Adam. He worked as a mason and also farmed at Trowmill. He later emigrated to Australia, where it is said he was very successful. James C. (b.c.1880) son of local painter and artist T.H. He helped his father to illustrate the book ‘Hawick Characters’ (1901). James Armstrong (1911/2–44) son of Robert and Ellen, he was born in Hawick. He served as a Lance Corporal with the 1st Singapore Volunteer Corps. He was captured by the Japanese and killed on the Rakuyo Maru, one of the ‘Hell Ships’, which were torpedoed by US submarines. Janet (b.c.1775) listed as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when she was living at Hallrule with the Smith family. She was probably a widow of a local Laidlaw. J.B. (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Jock (1920–2001) born in Makerstoun, nephew of piper Daniel. He joined the Queen’s Own Cameron Highlanders as a boy and served with them during WWII. He was one of only 79 survivors from his battalion who made it back to Britain after the fall of Dunkirk. In 1945 in Burma he led his company into battle, probably the last time this was done in the British army. After the War he lived in Hawick for a while, where he as Pipe Major to the Scout Pipe Band. He then moved to Banbury in Oxfordshire, where he helped found a new pipe band. He was honorary piper to the Dunkirk Veterans’ Association and the Burma Star Association. In later life he lived in Springwood village, near Kelso. He married Margaret and they had children John and Sandra. John (d.bef. 1502) resident of Lilliesleaf. Archibald Douglas in Efledge had remission for his murder. John (16th C.) tenant in Bank, recorded in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He held half of the farm. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Rouchhirst according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. John (16th C.) tenant in a small part of Harelawcleuch in 1541. He was probably related to Patrick, who was one of the tenants in the other part. John (16th C.) tenant in ‘Waldospindillas’ (i.e. Wattie’s Spinnels) in 1541, paying 44 shillings yearly. He was probably related to other Laidlaws who farmed nearby. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Ladlay of Breerbush’ on a 1544 list of Scotsmen who gave their allegiance to the English King. ‘Edde’ from Whiteside was the only other Laidlaw listed. His lands were probably Brierlee, near Edgerston. John (17th C.) tenant in Antroch in Jedforest. In 1602 he is recorded as ‘Jacques Laidley in Ancrauch’ when Thomas Turnbull, younger of Minto, was his surety not to harm Jock Rutherford in Tofts and his sons; Thomas Rutherford, younger of Hunthill, was surety for the Rutherfords of Tofts not to harm him. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wadeshill in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John (17th C.) resident at Shankend in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 3 hearths. John (d.1712) resident of Craikshiel. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1712 after his death, his brother ‘being sponcer for ye child’. He may be the John who married Mary Murray in Roberton in 1707. He may have been related to ‘Will o Phaup’, who was born at Craik. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1708 he was described as ‘servitor to Adam Elliott of Arcleton In Harwood’ when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Adam Elliott and Bailie Walter Graham. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Shiel. In 1721 he married Janet ‘Betie’ (i.e., Beattie) from Eskdalemuir. They had a daughter Mary, baptised in 1722, with witnesses James Gray, elder in Whithlaw and merchant Robert Robson. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. In 1721 he married Christian Scott. They had a daughter, Bessie (b.1726). This baptism was witnessed by James Grieve and Robert Scott. He appears to be distinct from the tailor who lived in the same place, but they were probably related. John (18th C.) resident at Phillippines in 1726 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included Janet (b.1729). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Ann (b.1732) and Helen (b.1741). He emigrated to Canada, becoming a grain merchant in the Toronto area. He later settled in Lumsden, Saskatchewan. He married Annie Louise McKeggue. Joseph (19th/20th C.) cashier with Andrew Oliver & Sons. He was Sunday School Superintendent for Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95 and Session Clerk 1889–95. He may be the same Joseph who had a villa built around West Stewart Place about 1880. Ken see Thomas A. Kenneth Lancelot (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Northbank in a 1669 rental of Jedforest. Lawrence (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with James, probably his son or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. Lawrence and James were also tenants there, and perhaps related. Lionel (17th C.) recorded in 1590 along with Thomas of Haugh. They were accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (b.1794/5) grocer at Robertson Glebefoot. She was there in 1841, along with Agnes, who may have been her daughter. In 1851 and 1861 she was listed as a ‘Huckster’ at Howcleuchshiel. She could be the Margaret, born to John and Janet Waugh in Wilton in 1796. Margaret Shiel (19th/20th C.) lived at Hazelwood and was made a Justice of the Peace in 1921. Marion (d.c.1685) resident of Abbotrule whose will is recorded in 1685. Nelly (b.1777) youngest daughter of William, wright of Town-o-Rule. She was christened ‘Nelly’ rather than this being short for something (although the 1841 census lists her as ‘Helen’). She worked on farms and took up residence at the Sclenty. She was mainly self-educated and was a keen reader. At the age of 49 she became the teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’, which Mrs. Cleghorn set up in Hobkirk Parish. She was always known as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’ although she was never married. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but very fond of teaching. She is listed as a teacher at Sclenty Hall in 1841. She is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) probably name of ‘Rennye Ladley’ recorded in 1590 when accused of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. This was along with Thomas of Haugh, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee. He was probably from somewhere in the Jed valley. It seems likely that the same ‘Ninian Laidlo’ was listed along with Olivers of Southdean and William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners; this was probably related to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in part of Harelawcleuch in 1541, along with John Oliver and Richard Oliver. He was probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father’s manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreecall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first ‘reformed’ Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as ‘unconventional in manners and address’. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothbury. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in knawis edzartoun’ in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias ‘Rutherford’), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Borthwick and their children included: John (b.1640); and Isobel (b.1644). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wigholm and their children included William (b.1655). Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with

Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshill and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan ‘Bellinden’ and their children included William (b.1676). Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish whose son James was baptised in 1693. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Anderson. He was recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonside in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume ‘preacher’ and Walter Purdom. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Falnash in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Elrigh in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Thornyhaugh in 1741 when his son Thomas was baptised. Robert (b.1743), Walter (b.1745) and John (b.1747) were probably also his children. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for James Nichol. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for 5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Falnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary (b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Falnash; John (b.1761); Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (again, b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of ‘Ridge’, while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonside) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son David was baptised in 1784. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792–97. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Janet Scott, who was from Cavers Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falnash. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Falnash. Robert (d.bef. 1804) wright at West Port. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1804 and the death of his wife Margaret Scott in 1809; the couple had married in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grieve in Robertson in 1786 and had children Agnes (b.1788) and Robert (b.1791) baptised in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1796 as ‘Residenter in Denholm’. He married Margaret Blyth and their children included Betty (b.1796) and Andrew (b.1798). Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors in Drumelzier Parish. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. He married Dorothea Turnbull, who was probably daughter of Walter Turnbull of Firth, a previous occupant of Greenhouse. Their children were Robert (b.1782), Walter (b.1783), Dorothea (b.1785), Elizabeth (b.1786), Barbara (b.1788), Robert (again, b.1790), Alexander (b.1792), William (b.1795), Agnes (b.1797), Mary (b.1799), Robert (once more, b.1800), Elizabeth (again, b.1802) and Mary (again, b.1803). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carried in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Beatrice Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert ‘Auld London’ or ‘London Laidlaw’ (1792–1878) son of William, the first of the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Atten. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had ‘only been a fir deal between him and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced ‘Auld Lunan’. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825): Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockings maker Robert whose infant son’s death is recorded in 1822 – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’[HI]. Robert (b.1799) only son of Thomas, he was farmer at Nether Cassock, like his father. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jean Beattie and his children included Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Blake and their children included Betsy (b.1853). Robert (b.1820s) 4th son of Thomas. He became a small hosiery manufacturer in Glasgow, then in 1886 emigrated to New Zealand (although this may have been a generation later). Robert ‘Robbie’ (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father’s fields up the Loan. He was Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Perthshire, who died in 1910, aged 48. Their children included James (who died aged 25 at Burnflat Cottage), John (who died in infancy), Robert (who died aged 17), Stewart (who died in infancy), another Robert (who died in infancy), Rachel, Eliza (who married Robert Oliver Pott, from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdom, he was born at Bonchester. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as ‘the Selfridge’s of India’, at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy's School, which opened in 1877, with a girls' school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst. He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it 'Bochester'; the street that it is on was later called Bochester Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to 'The Warren' at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World's Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being 'of Wolfelee'. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bochester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published 'By the Way', about a trip he took around the world. Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for 'Auld Hawick My Dreams' and 'Teviotdale', among other songs. He was son of stocking-makers Thomas and Robina Henderson and born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth. Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 Sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as 'Symone Laidlaw' and he may have been a 'presbyter', along with Thomas Falconer. Simon (18th C.) tenant at Birkswood in Ashkirk Parish in 1762. He was later farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to a tack of 1773, with the Riddells of that Ilk. He was also tenant there according to the 1789–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Anderson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Adam (b.1762). The witnesses in 1762 were William (perhaps his brother) and William Anderson (surely related to his wife). He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld. His name is recorded as 'Steven Ladley of the Banke' and others named are 'Rennye', Thomas of Haugh and David of Roughlee. He is surely related to Ninian, who was recorded as tenant ‘in the Bank’ in 1572/3. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with ‘Belle’ and Bennet. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Lawrence and James were tenants in another part of Letham and probably related. Thomas (d.1543) tenant of the Earl of Angus. John Musgrave led a party of Englishmen on a raid into Scotland in July 1543 in which he was killed trying to recover the spoils from his farm. It is unclear where his farm was, but since the Douglases held much of Southdean, it could be that he was the tenant of Letham. Thomas (16th C.) son of Lyle. He was listed as ‘Lyalles Thome’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men were local Scotts, Oivers and others. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley. In 1590 he was accused by John Forster of having reset Clement Crozier (son of Martin) and William Oliver of Lustruther. He was recorded as ‘Thomas Ladeley of the Hawge’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and

He is probably the Thomas who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1767 for herd John Scott and in 1771 for Thomas Elliot in Newmill. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick. He was on the ballot list for the Militia in 1799 and again in 1801. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He was thus probably closely related (perhaps brother) to the the carpet-making Laidlaws. In 1795 and 1797 he witnessed baptisms for William. He married Margaret Stewart and their children included William (b.1796). The witnesses in 1796 were Walter (perhaps his brother) and Walter Tinlin. He could be the son of William and Isabel Birnie baptised in Hawick in 1772. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death of ‘Mr. Laidlaw Gaugers Child’ is recorded in 1804 and the death is in 1811 of ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’, spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Crowhill according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same Thomas was a labourer at Synton according to the 1801 Militia ballot in Ashkirk Parish. Thomas (d.1823) farmer at Falnash. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the ‘Mr Laidlaw of Falnash, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence’ who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Margaret Beattie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Thomas of Cavers Parish whose son Robert was baptised in 1771. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Agnes Glendinning and their children included Thomas (b.1814). Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker who moved to London. In 1815 the death of his mother, Anne Hogg, is recorded in Hawick. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the resident of Cavers Parish who married Amanda Wood and whose children included Anne (b.1817), Thomas (b.1820), Helen (b.1823) and John Young (b.1826). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin’s Clem Crozier, James Douglas of Earlside and John Henderson of Plenderleith. He was also listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with ‘Eddie’, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshills. Additionally he and ‘Eddie’ were accused in 1590 of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld and along with ‘Rennye’, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old town’ in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. ‘Martin Laidlae, yr.’ was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Rouchhirst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Antwoch’ (i.e. ‘Antroch’) in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest. Thomas (17th C.) tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married to ‘Euphan Bellinden’. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Lor-}

Janet Hobkirk and their children included Janet (b.1827) and Robert (b.1829). Thomas (1801/2-28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufacturer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who married Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbaulk. In 1841 he was living at Easter Branxholme Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Hannah and their children included John, David, Peter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He carried on his brother William’s grocer’s business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Catherine. Thomas ‘Chinnie’, ‘Secky’ (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw & Sons from 1855, and built the mansion house he called ‘Sillerbuthall’ (completed in 1866). His name is entered onto the Land Tax records in about 1874 as owner of Dovemount and Silverbuthall (acquired in 2 parts from James Scott) and also for owning ‘Souter’s Acre’ that was formerly part of the Whitehaugh estate. He was recorded at Silverbuthall in 1868. He was the third son of William, and continued to develop the family business. He acquired Lynnwood Mills from William Nixon in 1864, carrying out more yarn spinning, while giving up hosiery, but extending Teviot Crescent Mills. It is said that he was an easy-going boss until he found out he was being cheated by some of his employees, and thereafter was much harsher; this probably explains his nickname of ‘Secky’ (and perhaps also ‘Sheckum’). His manner was described as being brusque and unaffected. In the 1850s he served on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was a Conservative in politics and was Councillor for North High Street Ward 1861–66. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce, being President for a while. He was for many years Chairman of Hawick Gas Company. He also helped found St. Andrew’s Free Church, and deacon there for a long time. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Grierson, and she died in 1898, aged 66. Their children were: William; Robert Grierson, Daniel McGowan, who died aged 6 after an accident with a pony; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Elizabeth (again), who married solicitor Henry Cousins; Jane Beatrice (b.1868), who married Anton Becker of Leeds; Margaret Isabella (b.1871), who married E. Jenkins, of the Bank of Scotland; and Kate, who lived in Edinburgh. He was buried at the Wellogate and his sons William and Robert G. wound up the family business about a year later. Several stories are told about him (in notes by James H. Haining). Thomas (19th C.) stockig-maker in Hawick. He married Robina Henderson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1864); Robert Henderson (b.1866), who died in infancy; William (b.1868); John Henderson (1870), a tailor who emigrated to Boston and settled in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, with his son Alexander Fraser being a leader in the Canadian co-operative movement; Robert Henderson (b.1872), song writer; and William (again, b.1874). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Paterson and their children included Mary (b.1871). Thomas Hill ‘T.H.’ (1846–1915), J.P., born in Annan, son of John, he became a master painter in Hawick. One of his schoolmates was the artist W.E. Lockhart. He was apprenticed to a painter in Annan in 1860, came to Hawick in 1866, but then worked in England for a few years. In 1870 he purchased the business of Alexander Wilson in Hawick and moved there permanently, living at 13 High Street. He encouraged his workers to attend classes in the Art School and his firm became known for its quality of decoration. He had a reputation locally as an artist, particularly in black and white. He illustrated Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’, Goodfellow’s ‘Guide to Hawick’, Mrs. Oliver’s ‘Upper Teviotdale’ and Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. He also painted a back view of the old Town House. He additionally designed Christmas cards for a London firm. At a lecture in Hawick, entitled ‘The Teviot from its Source to the Sea’, while Mr. Domingo read the lecture he painted in watercolour several illustrative pictures. He joined the Town Council in 1883, immediately becoming a Bailie, retiring after 3 years, but returning later to serve for many more years. He was the ex-Bailie Laidlaw who was on the initial Common Riding Ceremonial Committee of 1887 and served as a Race Steward. He was a keen bowler, serving as President, Secretary and Treasurer of the Buccleuch Club.
and was President of the Border Bowling Association. He was President of the Border Counties’ Master Painters’ Association, a Fellow of the Incorporated Institute of British Decorators and on the committee of the Association of Master Painters in Scotland. In 1901 he published the article ‘Decoration as a means of making Home Beautiful’. In 1868 he married Jane Scott, daughter of Gavin Pow and sister of John Pow. Their children included: Mary Bell (1870–1944); Bessie (b.1872); John (b.1874); Hannah H. (b.1877); Guy (b.1878); James C. (b.1880), who was also an artist; Thomas Hill (b.1881); Andrew S. (b.1889); and William Poole (b.1891). Thomas A. Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1936–) son of Jean and Arthur of 6 Northcote Street. He started cycling at age 15, and became extremely successful. He won the Scottish Daily Express 3-day road race in 1957, later winning the Scottish 100 mile championship in record time. He was the only Scot in the 1960 Olympic Games team and in 1961 was the first Scot to complete the Tour de France, leading during the 16th stage. He emigrated to New York in 1964, where he worked as a carpenter, and later moved to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. In 2005 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Cycling Club at a special dinner. An annual event in Hawick, the ‘Ken Laidlaw Sportive’, was named in his honour. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded is 1502 as brother of Robert ‘in knawis edzartoun’ and also in the same place. He was ‘alias Ruthirfurd’, although it is unclear by he would have had this nickname. His brother was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Laidley in Ormiston’ on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. This is probably the Ormiston near Hawick. He is probably related to William in Little Cavers, who was also on the list of fugitives, and John, who was at Ormiston in 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deambrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same Walter had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Isabel (b.1696); Bessie (b.1701); and Janet (b.1713). Walter (1659/60–1712) tenant in West Deloraine. He is buried in Borthwick Waas, along with 6 of his children. He could be the Walter whose children baptised in Ettrick Parish included: an unnamed son (b.1695); William (b.1696); Helen (b.1696); Jean (b.1697); William (again, b.1697); an unnamed son (b.1699); and Margaret (b.1706). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 when he was paid by the Council ‘for a sled fut when ye robbish was taken away at he crose’. He was presumably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinney and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1720). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) shepherd in Roberton and Hawick Parishes. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736 and was recorded as ‘herd’ in 1742. He may be the man of that name who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1725 for George Dickson, herd in Rashiegrain. He married Janet Chisholme in Roberton in 1731. Their children included: Margaret (b.1732), Janet (b.1733) and Margaret (again, b.1736), baptised in Roberton; and Walter (b.1742), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1742 were Walter Hogg and John Elliot (both servants). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpet factory. In 1796 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas (perhaps another brother) and in 1797 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784); Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. The names of his children suggest that he could also have been a son of William and Isabel Birnie, but his baptism is not recorded in Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Saughlaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglay’, recorded in 1810. He may be the Walter whose son James died in Hawick in 1781. Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadshaw, son of James and Isabella Scoon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter (b.1780) labourer at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Wilton Place. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth. Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote ‘Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity’ (1901) and ‘Poetry and prose’ (1900, 1904, 1908) – ... a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Border Scot t glaciers, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed’ [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Castleside and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thomas (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1651 for John Stewart and perhaps one for James. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Grieve and their children included John (b.1648). William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Brewbuse’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Whillans and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1681. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably related to Walter in Ormiston, who was also on the list of fugitives William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dodburn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) herd in Wester Essenside. He married Mary Elliot in 1697. Perhaps the same Laidlaw (with no forename given) was herd in Huntly in 1715 when his son John was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Anderson in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Anderson in Cavers in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1710) and Robert (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Sharp in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret Scott. William ‘Will o Phaup’ (1691–1784/5) born at Craik, he was the maternal grandfather of James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’. Hogg wrote that he was ‘the last man of this wild region who heard, saw and conversed with the fairies; and that not once but at sundry times and seasons’. He was a shepherd at Upper Phaul on the Ettrick Water. His gravestone in Ettrick Kirkyard bears the inscription ‘Here lyeth William Laidlaw. The far-famed Will o Phaup. Who for feats of frolic, agility, and strength. Had no equal in his day’. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730), the eldest daughter, who married Robert Hogg, and was mother of James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’; William (b.1735); Agnes (b.1738); and Janet (b.1741). One of his direct descendants was the Canadian author Alice Munro (nee Laidlaw), winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. William (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Bedrule in 1726. William (18th C.) married Margaret Graham in Hawick in 1728. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadleeshiel when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727, 1730 and 1737. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reid in 1725 and had children John (b.1727), Thomas (b.1730), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735) and Bessie (b.1737). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1725 and their son John was baptised in 1726. William (18th C.) married Agnes Bell in Robertson in 1739. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Grizel Scott in 1744. William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o-Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. In 1762 he married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Kirkton Parishes; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Bettie (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Robertson) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Robertson in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) roadman in Hawick. He married Helen Grieve in Wilton Parish in 1764. His sister-in-law Grieve died in Hawick in 1800. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768). William (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1769. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Birnie (or Burnett) in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1759); Isabel (b.1762); Margaret (b.1765); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were the whole congregation. Given the names, it is possible that he was father of William of the carpet factory, as well as father of Walter and Thomas. William (18th C.) married Margaret Moffat in Robertson in 1770. William (18th C.) married Jean ‘Bleekie’ in Southdean in 1772. William (18th C.) married Janet Hood in Hawick in 1774. William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory. However, it seems that he may be the son of William and Isabel Birnie born in Hawick (so perhaps the bothers returned to Hawick rather than coming as complete outsiders). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirk. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the ‘Tabernacle’ was built next door to his wife’s family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. In the early part of the 19th century he set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focussing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), ‘Shaffles’; Robert (b.1792), ‘Auld London’, who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lynnwood; Grace, who married draper George Borrowman; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. The witnesses in 1795 were James Rae and Thomas (who was surely related) and in 1797 were Thomas and Walter (perhaps both his brothers). William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Hartshaughe near Bonchester (although Tancred states he was born at Wester Swanshiel). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinsalwre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaughe Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknovke, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also recorded as farmer at Greatlaws in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799; a note says ‘Selkirk Y’, suggesting perhaps that he was a volunteer with the Selkirkshire Yeomanry.

William (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott’s factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including ‘Lucy’s Flittin’ (which appeared in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopædia. ‘Recollections of Sir Walter Scott (1802–1804). Edited from the M.S. in the Laing Collection, University Library, Edinburgh’, by James Sinton, was published in Hawick in 1905.

William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Easton in Wilton Parish in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included: William (b.1807); James (b.1809); and John (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Boongarrie Griggend in the early 1800s. William (18th/19th C.) married Isabel Glendinning in Cavers in 1819. William ‘Auld Laidlaw’, ‘Shaffles’ or ‘The Auld Laird’ (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the travelling agent for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the ‘Robin Hood’ on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter’s post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howe-gate, with his stocking-shop behind; this is probably the place marked ‘Laidlaw’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing ‘Teribus’ out of season, at the Bailleys’ dinner, and he would sing the ‘Auld Sang’ at the married men’s Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to ‘Radicals’ seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Daniel McGowan (1826–54), who built Hopehill; Thomas (b.1829); and Peter Fisher (b.1830). They also had daughters: Margaret (b.1820), who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846; Jane (b.1826); Jessie (1833–41); one who became Mrs. McGInly; and 4 others who died in infancy, probably including Grace (b.1816) and Jane (b.1822). He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845, the marriage also being recorded in Hawick. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the ‘Auld Kirk’, despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary’s Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist.

William (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their children included: William (b.1807); James (b.1809); and John (b.1811). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Janet (b.1805); and Agnes (b.1807). William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William’s brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of ‘Shaffles’. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He could be the ‘Wm. Laidlaw'.
Laidlaw

Laidlaw, Loan’ who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an ‘Out door Labourer’ and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Armstrong Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemas in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) married Sarah Ormiston in Hwick in 1854. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hwick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobkirk family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. He married Margaret Jamieson in Cavers in 1836. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, ‘Auld London’. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838); George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 labourer. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Boucher, farming 152 acres and employing 3 people. He farmed at Bonchester for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In Hob Kirk in 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastleton), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderty; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfrewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councillor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory. William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynnwood Spinning Mill from Nixon’s. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. In 1851 he married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William (b.1851) of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waldie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an ‘Annuitant’ at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clari-law in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty. William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosier manufacturer William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later. In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick’s property. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was ‘William Laidlaw, jun.’ on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer’s business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw’s Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins!
Laidlawhope

In 1844 he married Elizabeth Middlemas, from Ednam. Their children included: James, J.P., who was Provost of Jedburgh; John, J.P.; William; Alexander; Isabella Broomfield (who married Robert Huggan); and Ann, who was unmarried. He and his wife held their diamond wedding anniversary in 1904. He remained strongly a Teri at heart and was known for his stories of Hawick in olden times, one of his earliest memories being the celebration for the coming of age of the future Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. He died at Cumledge Mills and is buried in Preston Cemetery, Berwickshire. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Sanderson in Hawick in 1852. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grierson he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Welloigate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Fodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth ('Bessie', 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They were involved with gold mining and prospecting and served in the Australian Bushmen’s Corps in the Boer War. After marrying he moved to California where he became a fruit grower, and his wife Rev. Alice Z. Laidlaw was pastor at the church in Narod. (formerly spelled ‘Ladlaw’, ‘Ladley’, ‘Laidla’, ‘Laidlay’, ‘Laidlæ’, ‘Laidlea’, ‘Laidlie’, ‘Laidley’, ‘Laidlo’, ‘Laidlow’, ‘Laidlue’, ‘Laidly’, ‘Loudlaw’, etc.).

Laidlawhope (läd-lup) n. former farm in Liddesdale, probably on the Laidlohope Burn. It is listed as ‘Ladlawhope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Ladilhope’ and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the ‘Ladhope, of the laird of Howpasettes lands called Scott’ which were burned by the Armstrongs in 1544 (although ‘Lairhope’ could be meant). It is probably the ‘Ladhope’ listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchilhill (it is ‘Ladhope’ in 1718).

Laidlaw Place (läd-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw’s (läd-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howegate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. A weir was built in the Teviot to channel water along beside Teviot Crescent to power the mill; this was Laidlaw’s Cauld. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. Their ‘tenter grounds’ were carried off in the 1846 flood, as well as coal from the engine house. The company was listed at Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture, selling off their hosiery equipment in 1865. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The firm retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.
Laidlaw’s Cauld

Laidlaw’s Cauld (lād-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw’s Mill nearby. It was built in about 1834 by Gideon Scott & Sons, and obliterated the piece of ground known as the Fairy Faulds. Traces of it in the form of undressed stones between wooden supports, can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, coming out opposite Dickson’s & Laing’s Mill; the open lade was filled in in 1914. A second branch ran to the foot of Croft Road and came out near the Henderson College (now Dovecote Mews). The rubble-built Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘But when we came to Laidlaw’s Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay’ [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace (lād-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2). It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder’s yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn (lād-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kiln Knowe, above the Slitrig’s headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. This is related to the farm of ‘Ladlawhope’ recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverley Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written ‘Laidlerhope’ by Smail in 1880).

laif (lāf) n., arch. a loaf – ‘A made a fa-iasable mael oot pie-soop, ... caaied flesh, picklit ingans, an’ae skrimp o laif’ [ECS], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], also used to distinguish bread from other baked goods – ‘Howt! A’m fair staad o laif, end on. Let’s sei a hymm-backen scone’ [ECS] (note that the plural is usually ‘laifs’; see also laives).

laif-breid (lāf-breid) n., arch. loaf-bread, flour-based bread baked as loaves, as distinct from other baked goods such as oatcakes.

laigh (lā, lāch) adj., arch., poet. low – ‘... the said Francis Scott, his tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with the yeard and per-timents lying within the town and burch of Ha-wick’ [BR], ‘... set, let, or hire any of their houses, high or laigh, back or fore, to any families or per-son, strangers, whatsomever, without the first ac-quanting the present Magistrates...’ [BR1699], ‘The first ae guide that they met wi’, It was high up in Hard haulgshire; The second guide that they met wi’, It was laigh down in Borthwick water’ [T], ‘...a tenement of houses, high and laigh, back and fore, with that piece of ground lying at the back of the said house...’ [DCW1742], ‘Then Johnie let a spear fa’ laigh by his thigh, Fala, &c. Thought weel to hae slain the innocent, I trow...’ [CPM], ‘...They fand their tree three ells o’er laigh – They fand their stick baith short and sma’. laighest (lā-chist) adj., poet. lowest – ‘...an’ thou best freet my saul frae the le-chist hell’ [HSR], ‘...an’ queerlie wrought in the leachist pairts o’ the yirth’ [HSR].

laigishin (lā-gi-shin) n., arch. a large, cumbersome quantity (related to the local word for ‘legacy’).

laik (lāk) adj., arch. lacking, wanting – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 lbs of vicarage’ [PR1627].

Laik (lāk) n. James (b.1740) son of Thomas, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1785–91 he was listed as house servant at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliott. In 1785 his name was listed as ‘John’. In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as ‘Luke’.
could be the James ‘Loch’ whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774 or the James whose daughter Susana was baptised in Hobkirk in 1799. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was living in Hallrule in 1739, when he had twins baptised. His children included Thomas and James (b.1739). Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. His children included Christian (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1717). Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded in Billerwell in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Gledstains of Hillesland. He was licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1711 and presented to Southdean Parish in July 1716. However, the parishioners refused to sign the call in December and he ended up as minister at Longframlington, Northumberland. He was recorded in the Hawick Parish Session records of 1713 (presumably during a sermon) reminding parents to send their children to school, and also as a substitute in 1714 when Hawick’s minister was absent. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: James (b.1740); Agnes (b.1744); Margaret (b.1753); and John (b.1756); (also written ‘Laick’ and ‘Lake’ and probably the same as ‘Leck’).

Lailsell (lāl-sel) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 along with ‘Carlinghall’ (probably Carlin Hole), ‘Brounishall’ (probably Broon’s Hill) and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It may be a transcription error for somewhere more familiar.

Laing (lāng, lān) n. Adam (1818/9–1900) Hawick stockmaker apparently noted for his gentlemanly bearing. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street and in 1861 was living at 5 Slitrig Bank. In 1844 he married Agnes (1824/5–1902), daughter of James Hogg, the writer of ‘Teribus’. They had 8 children: Jane (b.c.1845) or Jeanie, who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlefield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Adam (1859–1918) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick, co-author of ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with R.S. Craig, and author of ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901). The book ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ was significant in establishing the connection between the Hawick Flag and Hexham, which overcame criticism at the time about the lack of historical evidence for the events of Hornshole. The 3rd son of Walter of Denholm Hill and Marguer Scott, he was educated in Denholm and at Teviot Grove Academy. He was an apprentice with Purdoms, trained further in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick to work with W.M. Syme. He served as Burgh Chamberlain for 16 years from 1891, before becoming the first Burgh Treasurer. He was one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club, its first Honorary Treasurer, and Vice-President during WWI. He was one of the founders of the Teviotdale Cycling Club, won a couple of Musspaul to Hawick races, and was also involved with other local sports organisations. He helped get the Liberal Club premises built and was Club Treasurer for many years. He was a member of the Archaeological Society and the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He also acted as Secretary of the Public Library and Secretary and Treasurer of the Museum. In addition he was heavily involved in erecting many of the monuments and plaques carried out in his day, as well as helping resuscitate Musspaul. He was a keen Common Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilmuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton’s bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg’s ‘Flodden Field and the Colour’, inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother from about 1802, with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1815 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the ‘A. Laing’ whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in...
1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). They also had a daughter Agnes (b.1816). In 1824 he secondly married Janet, daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin (their mothers, both Donaldsons, being sisters); the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. They had 2 surviving children: Margery Donaldson (b.1827), who married William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Minto in 1720, the wedding being recorded in both Minto and Kirkton Parishes. His children, baptised in Minto, included: Janet (b.1721); Martha (b.1723); Andrew (b.1727); David (b.1729); Andrew (again, b.1730); Hannah (b.1733); and James (b.1741). Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Aytoun in Berwicksire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.1727) married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Aukleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick’s minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (d.1781) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days’ work they did on the West Port. He may be the David ‘Leing’ who was one of the witnesses for the ‘irregular’ marriage of George Wallace and Margaret Waugh, recorded in Wilton in 1736. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid ‘for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack’. He was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. He witnessed a baptism for John Richardson in 1772. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He married Helen Wallace and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of: Robert (b.c.1748); and Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. The witnesses in 1742 were Robert Pringle, Excise Officer and wright Robert Pringle. He could be the David who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. His death is recorded in 1781 as ‘Auld David Laing Mason’. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander (from about 1802) and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills (from 1815). He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1 Wilton Bank, which was probably the same place as Springbank. He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddes in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Warkworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howegate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary’s. David (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Junior Mason’ in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. This suggests that he was a grandson (or other close relative) of the earlier mason of the same name. David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault; this led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the ‘D. Laing’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1898) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Haddon. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads ‘At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal’. That first game took place at Shepherd’s Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play Wales for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosiery business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson’s, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the ‘Artists’ Rifles’, and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeacourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archæological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree

to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire.

His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire, perhaps the Walter baptised in Westerkirk in 1694; John,

Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, ten-

John ‘Lang’, whose children included Alexander

(b.1727), Isobel (b.1730), Andrew (b.1734) and

James (b.1736). John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730–66. He also acted as ‘factor loco tutoris’, i.e. in place of one of the young Duke’s guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756.

In 1736 he rented ‘Stitchelhill and Leyes’ in Lidddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laing who purchased the lands of Easter and Wester Burnfoot (on Ale) from Walter Scott

in 1736. He lived at ‘The Roan’ and also held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in Castleton Parish in 1748. He is recorded in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg

ing the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as ‘of Burnfoot’ (on Ale Water);

he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, in the description of the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765 (when he was said to be owner of Easter and Wester Burnfoot) and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was also ‘of Burnfoot’ when listed as one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage to his niece. In 1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. He is recorded in the register of sasines in 1779. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. John (1744–1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), also a manufacturer, who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger (who also married a Donald) and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John from Hawick recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his ‘opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick’; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1799 his apprentice Thomas Thomson was on the ballot in Hawick for the Militia. He was a mason from Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshaughraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosiery manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father’s death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Buccleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery, employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their included: Janetta McNaught (b.1844); Alexander (b.1846) and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; Grace Anna Wilson (b.1849); John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Thomas Anderson (b.1851), manufacturer; Patrick Anderson (b.1853), also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddes, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin of John, the hosier manufacturer. His draper’s firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Janet Thomson, and their children included Ellen Ann (b.1840), James (b.1844), Ellen (again, b.1846), David (b.1848) and William (b.1849/50). Their children were mostly baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. He may be the shoemaker living with the Paisley family on the High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street, employing 9 men and in 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. He was unmarried in 1861. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was educated in the school where J.A.H. Murray was teacher and then at Branham College in Yorkshire and in Europe. He became a partner... in the family firm in about 1875. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was a staunch Liberal in politics, serving as President of the Hawick Liberal Club. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Linden Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and served as President in the 1860s. He was also a strong supporter of local science and technical classes and was a Director of the Hawick Building and Investment Company. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year’s day mixed hockey match against the Grieves of Brauxholme Park. John A. (20th C.) Engineering Director at Pesco’s 1920–61. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick. He married his cousin Florence Laing. He rode motorbikes in WWI until he learned to fly, becoming a pilot with the RAF in 1918, where he is credited as an ace with 5 victories. He is said to have been the first person to fly over Hawick. He was wounded in a motorcycle accident while on leave in 1918. He later worked as an engineer with John Melrose & Sons and lived well into his 90s. Marjory (17th C.) said to have thrown stones at dragoons at a conventicle held on Ruberslaw and then taken to Edinburgh Castle. This is based on a story told by Andrew Haddon. She may have been from Earlside, like William, a Covenanter fugitive. However, it is unclear if she ever existed and may be a fiction based on a name given in a poem about the Killing Times by the Ettrick Shepherd. Marjory (17th C.) grandmother of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn. She was said to have been named after an ancestor from Earlside who threw stones at dragoons at a conventicle. Maurice (1885–1955) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was younger brother of Walter, George and Ivan. He was a successful district hockey player and later South selector. He served with the Royal Field Artillery in WWI and became Captain. He married Sheila Brown of Galashiels (unrelated to the other Browns who had married into this family). They had one son (who worked at the Cape Observatory) and several daughters. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the ‘Balcary Laings’. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. In 1916 he married Sarah Grey Gunn ‘Cissy’ (1894–1988), 2nd surviving daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcar. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. He commanded ‘C’ Company in the Battle of Romani in 1916, securing the Suez Canal, and receiving the Order of the Nile from the Sultan of Egypt. Patrick Anderson (20th C.) from the Balcar Laings, son of Norman. He served with the 51st Highland Division at Dunkirk and later transferred to the Reconnaissance Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1945. He set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing, in 1955. He married Shirley, daughter of Hawick lawyer Guy H. Armstrong. There children were Hugh and Lucinda Steen. Robert (16th/17th C.) merchant of Hawick, probably a tanner. He gave evidence in the 1612 case of the death of Jock Elliot. He was ‘in the Kirkyaird of Hawick priking some skynnis’ (showing that at that time the churchyard was used for many purposes) and found Elliot ‘hingand in his awin belt; quilk belt he cuttit, and thair being lyfe in the defunct, was brocht out, bot shortlie thairefter he deceist’. He may have been the same Robert who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in Hawick in 1656. Robert (18th C.) footman at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Jean Blake in Wilton in 1816. Robert (b.1815/6) stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living with his brother Adam on the Mid Raw. In 1851 he was at about 9 Loan and in 1861 at 23 Loan. He married Jane (or Jean) Hogg in 1843; she was from Ashkirk Parish. Their children included: Adam

Laing

(b.1842/3); Jean (b.1844/5); Jessie (b.1846/7); and Robert (b.1849/50). Thomas (18th C.) married Isabel Stevenson in Southdean in 1755. Their children included Betty (b.1756) and Christian (b.1759). Thomas Anderson (1851–1920) son of manufacturer John and grandson of Alexander. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Patrick. He was an Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Branxholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the ‘Netherwud Laings’. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a ‘writer’ in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is ‘clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh and ‘Tenent of Park’ when his ‘servitor’ Walter Little married Janet Scoon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnston of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John’s lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawhaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Bruntfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710). Only his wife witnessed the baptisms, since he was forbidden from attending because of the scandal he caused by getting his niece (Agnes Scott) pregnant, having the child over the Border and then pressuring her and others to swear that there was no bastard child. The witnesses in 1703 were weaver Robert Tinlin and glover James Burn. Walter (d.bef. 1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersberg and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Robert (b.1772), John (b.1775) and Margaret (b.1776). Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill, born in Hawick Parish. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Ferguson and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was alive in 1851, when recorded as ‘Farmer & Tacksman of Quarry’, living with his son, along with 4 servants and labourers. He was dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. It is possible he is the Walter, married to Agnes Mather, whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1829. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included Robert (b.1810) and James (b.1812). Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret Scott from Wilton, and their children included: Walter (b.1852); Christina (b.1854); Thomas;
Adam; and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine’s and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Linden Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnball in Hawick in 1844 and she died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnball died before reaching adulthood; he was probably the John Turnball baptised in Wilton in 1855. Hawick Free Kirk. Other children included: Alexander (b.1847); and John (b.1851), who was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnball and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan’s death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlside, brother of James, who was Bailie. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenant supporter, the accusations including that he was ‘present at divers house and field conventicles, keept at Lilsliemuir, Hassendeanmuir, Blackriddelhill, or about or near the said places, where he has heard John Welsh, Samuel Arnot, Mr. G. Semple, Mr. Riddell, Mr. Robert Traill, Mr. George Johnstone, Mr. John Blackater, Mr. David Williamson, and divers other declared rebels’, as well as being a local ringleader and resetting rebels. Refusing to give up any names, to pay the 500 mark fine or accept Episcopalianism, he was sentenced to be deported to the slavery plantations in Virginia. After 3 months in jail, he was sent on a prison ship from Leith to Gravesend. However, the person in charge of them could not find Ralph Williamson, who was to keep them in prison until the transport ship was available and so they were set free in London. Like many of the others (including Alexander Peden), he probably made it back to Scotland. He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’ in 1684; he was then recorded being ‘in Hawick’. Their crime was ‘rebellion and reset of rebels’, meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. Local tradition says that he died on the journey and his body was thrown overboard. He may be the William ‘Lynes’ whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls, listed after the house of Earlside in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and others for William Veitch (or Welsh) in 1675 and 1683. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680. It is said that he had a brother James in Hawick. The James who was tenant in Earlside in 1683 may have been his son. William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councilor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. He may be the William in Hawick (married, aged 28) who gave evidence in 1681 in the trial of Covenanters who hd attacked Drumlanrig’s Tower. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688. He was ‘late balyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Wm Laing laite Bailyea’ who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694: this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with ‘Mr James’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for glover James Scott. He was ‘balyie’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1686 for schoolmaster John Purdom and ‘late Bailie’ in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for the same man. He also witnessed a baptism for merchant John Forman in 1707, for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for wigmaker John Scott, for glover James Scott and for tailor John Scott in 1709, for smith Thomas Huntly in 1714, for Henry Paterson.
in 1716, and for miller Robert Elliot and for William Ogilvie (who married his daughter) in 1718 and 1720. He could be the same ex-Bailie who in 1721 gave the excuse that he could not mount the ‘pillar’ of repentance in the Kirk because he was ‘valetudinarianie and troubled with an unceasiness in his hough and feet’; the Session allowed him instead to pay a fine and be rebuked in his usual pew; it is unclear what his transgression was. In 1716, 1718 and 1721 he witnessed baptisms for John Ekron. He was probably the William born in Hawick in 1652/3, son of James and Helen Elliot. This William married Jane Thorbrand (probably daughter of Bailie James), and their children were: James (b.1676); Jane (b.1678); Walter (b.1680), who married Jane Bruntfield; David (b.1681); Margaret (b.1684), who married James Gledstains; Helen (b.1686), married a Grieve; Anna (b.1688), who married John Watson, Clerk to the Regality and then John Scott in 1724; John (b.1689); and Martha (b.c.1690), who married William Ogilvie. The witnesses in 1676 were William Elliott of Stobs and Thomas Scott of Whitslade, suggesting that he had some standing in the Town at that time. The witnesses in 1680 were William Scott, glover and Mr John Purdom and in 1688 were James Scott and Robert Wright. In 1720 he was ‘late bailie of Hawick’ when he and Isobel Tait were recorded as ‘Fornicators’ when their daughter Mary was baptised. He is probably the William ‘Lang’ mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the west of his, which by then belonged to James Scott. William (1715/6–74) Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He had a house on the Fore Row, referred to as ‘the Chamberlain’s Hoose’. He may also have been related to the William who, in the 1720s, owned a small corn farm and yard to the north (i.e. in Wilton Parish) of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He succeeded as Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest in 1735, taking over from Walter, probably his father; he served in this capacity until 1766. He was recorded in a Selkirk libel case in 1737. His brother was James, and he must also have been related to John, who was Chamberlain for Liddesdale (probably his uncle). Gilbert was probably another brother. Hudshouse (in Castleton Parish) was rented to him and his brother by the Buccleuch estates in 1742. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Meikledale from William Scott. He left these lands to his nephew, William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Sinton Mains. In 1813 he brought a case against John Smith, carter in Selkirk, claiming that Smith had taken his cart and harness when they were with an innkeeper in Edinburgh (also spelled ‘Lainge’, ‘Layng’, ‘Laynge’ and ‘Leing’ in earlier documents; at early times it could be confused with Lang). Laing an Irvine’s (läng-an-ir-vinz) n. wholesale tweed merchants of the 19th century, with their main factory built in 1856 at the corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street. They were effectively an offshoot of Dicksons & Laings, being tweed manufacturers and later tweed merchants. For a while they operated out of Stonefield Mill. They also had a mill in Peebles. At the 1867 Paris Exposition the firm gained a bronze medal as a manufacturer of cloth. They went bankrupt in 1868, and the building later had many uses. They also traded at 26 High Street, which was sometimes called ‘Irvine’s Close’. The partners were Alexander (‘Allie’) Laing and William Irvine. The company partially reformed as Irvine, Grierson & Stevenson. There were also later firms of Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which merged into Currie, Lee & Gawn. Laing Terrace (läng-te-ris) n. short street off Dovemount Place, built in 1872, and named after the Laings of Dicksons & Laings. It was essentially built to provide nearby housing for workers at Wilton Mills.

lains (länz) n., pl., poet. loins – ‘For my lains ar fillet wi’ foulsume deseese, an’ ther is nae su-undness in my fleisch’ [HSR], ‘Let thair eyne be derkenet that thaye seena, an’ let thair lains con-tinwallie shak’ ’ [HSR].
lai[p (läp) v., arch. to lap – ‘A dog or cat licks or lapes (= laps) milk, etc.’ [ECS], ‘... the cuill, silver Teiot, where it laippeet bye leafy Monteviot’ [ECS], ‘The dog’s laipin’ a’ the kittlin’s milk’ [GW] (also written ‘lape’).
lai[pie-luggit (lä-pee-lu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. lop-eared, having prominent or protruding ears (also ‘laipy-luggeet’ etc.; noted by E.C. Smith).
lair (lär) n., arch. lard.
lair (lär) n., arch. a place of shelter for livestock – ‘... and sometimes they would go through the burn to their night’s lair, and at other times they would not go so far on the common’ [DCW1765], ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], a final resting place, burial plot v., arch. to drive livestock to an enclosure – ‘That part of the Common called the west end of the little Bailie Hill, where Mungo Armstrong used to lair the black cattle under the lair

charge in the middle of the day’ [C&L] (from Middle English; the word exists in several local place names, e.g. Cherry Lair, Dimnott Lair, Evelair Hill, Lairhope, Lair, Lamblair Edge, Lamblair Hill, Lamblair Knowe, Lamblairs, Marklair and Nolt-lair).

lair (lair) n., arch. learning, education, lore – ‘...Left him scarce ane, nor durst he cock His trusty gennet; for girt fo’k Had now found out by college lair, That God had giv’n them ilka hare’ [JR], ‘As little can lair make a weak mind produce strong thoughts’ [JoHa], ‘Yet though I canna dive into the deeps, Not ‘natomise the joints o’ classic lair ...’ [JoHa], ‘I like to encourage lair, my lads, An’, if the morrow’s clear’ [WiSp], ‘...an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days aboot the sterns an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (also lear).

laird (laird) n. a landowner, landed proprietor, nobleman, lord – ‘For here’s the laird’s Jock, the laird’s Wat. And Hobie Noble, come to set thee free’[CPM], ‘The King has come to see us a’, Our Highland lairds and ladies bra’ [BY], ‘I envy not the laird his wealth, the lord o’ his degree ...’[JoHa], ‘...Wagtwawe an’ the young Scram-meldykes, The laird o’ Hunter’s Ha’’ [WiSp], ‘My father was laird o’ a weel stockit malin’’[JT], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’’ [WL], ‘There was no belly-crawling dedication to some laird who had promised to take a dozen copies’ [DH] (also sometimes capitalised; in Scotland the word was applied to the owner of a estate of any size and hence is closer to the English ‘squire’ than ‘lord’).

Laird (laird) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Cornet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676 and a contemporary Walter in 1707. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Duddie Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Weloigate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (thu-laird) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Lairdhope, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

Laird’s Hill (lairdz-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just north-east of Old Howpasley, reaching a height of 343 m.

lairdship (laird-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘...and the said lairdship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ...’ [SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lairdz-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (thu-lairdz-waw) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘...And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his name to these features.

lairge (lairj) adj. large – ‘...aw just went rum-maging aboot, an’ then aw saw a lairge fire, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lairj) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘...and obligt that the sd. persones shall give satisfactione to ye kirke as orthodox and largie’ [BR1689].

lairgeness (lairj) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The discriptiovne of Valter Scot of Govdilandis his qvalities. ...Heir lys bvreit lairgenes & lavtie genes & lavtie ...’ [MI1596]. the side road from Teviothead at Bowanhill. The Lairhope Burn passes here

lairger (lur-jur) adj. larger – ‘Weel, neither tae haud not tae bin’ was the wife! She donned her best bonnet, an’ lairger than life’ …’ [BM1900].

Lairhope (lur-hop, la-rup) n. former farm above Falmash on the Lairhope Burn, with a small loch nearby. The track here used to be (before about the mid-18th century) part of an alternative road from the south towards Hawick, crossing over to the upper Borthwick valley via Old Howpasley. The main lands were originally ‘Lairs’, with the ‘hope’ being attached, and later the base name being lost. It may be the ‘laris’ where Robert Turnbull was recorded in 1493 and ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’ is recorded in 1501. It seems likely to be the ‘towne callid Ladduppe in Tyvidaill, of the
Lairhope Burn

Larde of Howpasleis callid Scot’ which was burned by a band of Armstrongs in 1543/4. Matthew Little was tenant there in 1576. Hob Armstrong was there in 1586/7. Patrick Nichol was there in 1618 and Andrew Armstrong in 1623. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘50 lb., vicarage 10 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Parkhill. Walter Scott of Newton was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £266 13s 4d. It is listed along with ‘Lares’ in the list for the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. Janet Grievie was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Hislop was there in 1698. James Nichol was tenant there in 1705 and John Nichol was herd in 1711. The farm was purchased by the Buccleuch estates from the trustees of Elliot of Fenwick around 1756, when it was referred to as the ‘5 merkland of old extent of Lairs alias Lairhope’. James Renwick was there in 1786. In 1788 and 1811 it is ‘Larehope’ when valued at £266 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Anderson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, George Rutherford in 1841 and Walter Elliot in 1851 and 1861. On the south-east slope of Lairhope Braes are the foundations of several buildings and enclosures of unknown age, probably a township by the side of the former main road (it is probably the ‘Larishop’ of 1500, and is ‘Lairhowp’ in 1576, ‘Lairhoip’ in 1618 and 1623, ‘Lareshope’ in 1686, ‘Larehop’ in 1698 and ‘Larehope’ in 1711; it is marked ‘Lairhoope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; ‘lair’ is Scots for a place where animals sheltered).

Lairhope Burn (lá-rup-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Hazelhope Burn to become Falnash Burn. It rises around Pike Hill and is fed by smaller streams such as Ruthedale Sike, Hare Grain, Lousey Hass and Crib Sike. There is a marshy area around Lairhope farm.

Lairhope Braes (lá-rup-bráz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howpasley.

lairn (lärn) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairned eet fri ma fither’, ‘... gie me understan’in’, that I may learn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘Gin I hadna traveilled,’ the first ane said, ‘I had never lairned.’ ‘Gin I hadna my buiks,’ quo the second ane, ‘I had naething airned’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’, ‘This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages ... and other three in the end of the account are set down, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowrin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at me’ [JEDM], ‘... Lainin hunders o Hawick rugby boys The basics o the game’ [IWL].

lairnt (lärn’t) pp. learned – ‘... And mony generations syne, Cauldrife, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘... that’s where hei lairnt about the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spair-scial Is oo speak in oor ain way. And now that oo huv lairnt ee, Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lärz) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Lares and Laireshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Lariestofts).

laishur (lä-shur) n. leisure (also formerly leasur).

lait (lät) v., arch. to allure, entice (noted as an old Teviotdale word by J. Jamieson).

laith (láth) adj. loath – ‘... An’, wi’ a look that seems to say, ‘I’m laith’, Trys them with fire ...’ [JoHa], ‘I’m sure I’m neither laith nor lazy, Though my auld baines be stiff and crazie’ [JoHa], ‘To hurt the creatures I’ll be laith, Gar but the owner pay the skaith’ [JR], ‘I was be laith to advise ye to aught that’s no for your weelfare’ [JTe], ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy horns frae me ... ’ [TCh], ‘Bit ‘nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweerhide not thou thy horns frae me ... ’ [JoHa]. ‘Ye glowrin’ idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at me’ [TCh], ‘Bit nae man can tether tieme nor teide,’ an, sweerdrawn an laith tho A was ... ’ [ECS], ‘... Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Frae the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon ... ’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith ... ’ [MB].

laithly (láth-lee) adj., poet. loathsome, horrible – ‘Aboon the aizles’ dying gleid, The laithly kerlyn satte’ [JTe].
Laitin (lā'-in) n., arch. Latin. The following gem is meant to have been recited by a Hawick pupil in the early 1800s – ‘Cæsar Galliam intravit summa diligentia omnibus copiosis (Cæsar entered Gaul on the top of a diligence, his forces going in the omnibus).

laives (lāvz) n., pl., poet. loaves – ‘An’ they say until him, We hae here but five laives an’ twa fishes’ [HSR] (note that the plural is usually ‘laifs’; see laif).

Lakes Haugh Park (läks-hawch-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed ‘Lake’s-haugh’ in 1779, with a value of £36 9s 10d. It was among lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1779, but disputed in 1780.

Lamb (lawn) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their twins James and Janet were baptised in Hawick in 1689. The witnesses were William Swan and Patrick Bridges. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Miller and their son Adam was baptised in 1705. Adam (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Perhaps the same Adam married Janet Linton in Hawick in 1778 and had a daughter Isabel baptised in Hawick in 1779. He may also be the Adam who married Agnes Hogg (also from Hawick) in 1794. Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Gibb, and secondly married Mary McQueen in Wilton in 1852. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Adam (b.1832/3) born in Hawick, he was a framework knitter. In 1861 he was living at 2 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Ann, from Wilton. Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. She is probably the Agnes Lamb who married Robert Young, who was a baker at 75 High Street. Alexander (19th C.) married Margaret Hume in Southdean in 1848. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. He is probably also the Andrew ‘servant to Andrew Ogilvie’ (of Newlands, who was associated with Branxholme) on the same list; he was thus listed twice. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Janet Armstrong in 1707. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Cavers Parishes. Archibald (17th/8th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1698. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1741. His children included: Ann (b.1741); and Archibald (b.1743). He is probably the Archibald who married Agnes Oliver in Cavers Parish in 1739. Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary ‘Wiems’ (i.e. Weens) in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included: James (1791–1804); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). John (b.1793) and Adam (b.1795), with the same mother’s name, but the father’s name given as ‘James’, seems likely to also be his children (suggesting he may also have been known as ‘James’). Benjamin (b.1829/30) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was in Jedburgh Jail in 1851 and 1852. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1799 when her illegitimate child was buried in Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded being ‘about Bonjedburgh-mill’ in 1684 on a list of Covenantant fugitives. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed baptisms in 1742 for William Stewart in Groundestone, in 1748 for Walter Telfer in Galalaw, Robert Easton in Wiltonburn and John Martin in Clarilaw, and in 1751 for Walter Ker in Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) gardener who married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); and George (b.1768). The witnesses in 1760 were John Laidlaw (probably related to his wife) and James Bridges. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Paisley in 1778 and their children included: John (b.1779); George and Robert (b.1780); Margaret (b.1781); and George (again, b.1789). George (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School James (b.1791); Agnes...
Lamb

Lamb (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). 1773–87. He may have been the first to use the title of ‘Rector’. He resigned from the position, presumably to take up another position elsewhere. It is not impossible that he could be the George Lamb described as a schoolmaster and formerly a dissenting minister, who performed ‘irregular marriages’ at Lamberton Toll near Berwick, dying in 1816, aged 68. He is recorded as ‘The Rev. Mr George Lamb’ in Hawick on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick who married Janet Laidlaw. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. George (18th/19th C.) married Betty Grieve in Roberton Parish in 1807. George (18th/19th C.) married Janet Murray in 1818. The marriage was recorded in both Wilton and Cavers Parishes. Helen (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. The baptism of her son Adam is recorded in 1698. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.c.1683) tenant in ‘Whitrige’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitriggs or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included William (b.1692) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) married Margaret ‘Ghast’ in Cavers Parish in 1705. He is probably the John whose children (with no mother’s name given) baptised in Cavers included James (b.1706) and Janet (b.1708). James (17th/18th C.) married Helen Beattie in Kirkton Parish in 1719. James (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1724. His children (although with no mother’s name recorded) probably included Helen (b.1726), Bessie (b.1728), John (b.1730), William (b.1732), Ann (b.1735), Agnes (b.1739) and James (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son Benjamin was baptised in 1766, with no mother’s name given. It is possible he is the James who married Bessie Goodfellow in Hawick in 1757. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Weens in 1793 and their children included John (b.1793) and Adam (b.1795). It is possible that he and his wife were related to Benjamin and his wife Mary Weens (who were married in 1790). James (d.1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1766/7) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851. James (b.c.1785) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 59 High Street with his wife Elizabeth and son James. James (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige Shank’, i.e. Elrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. In 1861 he was an agricultural labourer, living at the farmhouse on Hawick Moor (probably St. Leonard’s). His wife was Catherine (or Christina) ‘Rennelson’ from Melrose. Their children included: James; John (b.1829), baptised in Roberton; Catherine (b.c.1831); George (b.c.1833); Jane (b.c.1836); and Walter (b.c.1839). James (19th C.) married Jessy Cairns in Bedrule Parish in 1835. James (19th C.) married Helen Anderson in Hawick Parish in 1841. James (b.1817/8) woollen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 48 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella, James, Thomas and Elizabeth. He is probably the James who married Margaret Cairns in Hawick in 1841. James (19th C.) married Agnes Hudson in Roberton Parish in 1851. The marriage date may be an error, since their children included: Adam (b.1849); James (b.1851); and Margaret (b.1853). Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stirches. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont. John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caver- ton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (17th C.) resi- dent of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1633. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirk- yard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him. He is probably the John whose chil- dren, baptised in Bedrule, were Janet (b.1690), Marion (b.1693), Helen (b.1693), Bessie (b.1694) and Helen (again, b.1697). John (17th/18th C.) married Janet Miller in Ashkirk in 1699. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1729 he married Janet Scott, (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. Presumably the same John had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, wit- nessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boon- raw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included John (b.1714). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 witnessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw and in 1732 witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Netherhall. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her sur- name is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their chil- dren included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably rhe John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stirches. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1729 he married Janet Scott, who was also from Wilton. Their children included: Agnes (b.1730); John (b.1732); Margaret (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); George (b.1740); Jean (b.1743); an unnamed child (b.1745); and Janet (b.1753). John (b.1706/7) tenant in Drinkstone from about 1742. He was tenant of Drinkstone when he brought an action before the Justices of the Peace in Hawick about other tenants using his ‘headroom’ and was told that he ‘might hound as muckle as he liked, but not poind’. He was one of the witnesses who gave evidence in 1764 regarding the use of Wilton Common. He described how at one time he seized a horse be- longing to William Hill in Roughheugh when he found it grazing on the ‘headroom’ of Drinkstone’ and did not return it till Hill had paid him a shilling, but ‘returned him the shilling the next time he saw him in Hawick market, for it was not the money he wanted, but to show the man he would preserve his head-room’. He may be the same as the John who married Janet Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Mary was baptised in 1759. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1761), John (b.1763) and William (b.1765). John (18th C.) married Anne Johnston in Bedrule Parish in 1763. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1765) and Margaret (b.1769). John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for William Turner and Agnes Lamb (perhaps his brother-in-law and sister). He married Janet Turner in Hawick in 1755 and their children included Agnes (b.1757), William (b.1760) and Andrew (b.1761). The wit- nesses in 1757 were the whole of Wilton Congrega- tion, in 1761 were Bailie Robert Scott, merchant, and gardener Andrew (who was surely related to his wife). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ha- wick Parish. In 1787 he married Isabel Welsh, also from Hawick. Their daughter Joan was bap- tised in Hawick, probably in 1789. The witnesses were Andrew Elliot and Thomas Miller. He is probably the John whose son Andrew died in Ha- wick in 1800. John (b.1778/9) born in Wilton, he worked as a labourer and drainer. He was a widower living at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1851. John (b.c.1780) servant to William Pringle at Bedrule according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castle- ton Parish who married Annie Graham. Their children included Jean (b.1810), Betty (b.1812) and William (b.1814). John (b.c.1790) hand- loom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixons Mill’, which probably meant Lynnwood Cottages. In 1851 he was on Slitrig Crescent. He married Betty Scott and their children included Andrew, James, John, Adam, Robert, Agnes and Margaret. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is re- corded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was also listed as a needle-maker in Slater’s 1852 di- rectory. His wife was Janet and their children in- cluded Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Ben- jamin, Agnes, Isabella, Janet and John. John (b.1793/4) handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed with his wife Mar- garet and son John. He is probably the John who married Margaret Helm in 1837, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. John (19th C.) married Jane Sheen in Wilton Parish in 1851. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786–88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft ‘of old and new’, but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of ‘rock boots’ from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’.

Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Duncan in Ashkirk in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a ‘fisher’ in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with baptismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Bailie James Deans. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Duncan in 1720 and their son George was baptised in 1721. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1722. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Jane Renwick. Their son William was baptised in 1751. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Ormiston in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Duncan in 1720 and their son George was baptised in 1721. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish in 1851.

Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosiery dresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Manitoba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick stocking-maker who was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). He was sentenced to 1 year in prison. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Slubber Journeyman’ living at about 62 High Street (with Benjamin, perhaps his brother). By 1851 he was living in Selkirk. He married Margaret Murray in 1840 and their children included Helen. His second wife was Isabella Young and their children included James, Mary, Isabella and Elizabeth, with step-children Margaret and Robert. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Ewesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (19th C.) married Ann Walker in Wilton Parish in 1846. Thomas (1851–1939) slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Elizabeth Henderson. Their children included Jessie (b.1809) and Andrew (b.1811). Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was listed as a cooper in Hawick on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. The Town Treasurer borrowed £200 from him in 1827, ‘to pay the price of the subjects purchased from the heirs of John Turnbull’. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6 Sandbed. He married Christian, daughter of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b,1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Damone Kennedy. Walter (b.1814/5) frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 23 High Street and in 1861 was at 5 Tannage Close. He married Jane (or Jean) Scott in 1835 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1837), Agnes (b.1842), James (b.1849) and Walter (b.1851). William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers Parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister’s son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambuskenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet ‘Badie’ (i.e. Beatrice) and their son David was baptised in 1669. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘walker in Bonjedburgh’ in 1684 on a list of Covenanters fugitives. He was presumably a waulker. William (17th C.) married Isobel Leyden in Robertson Parish in 1686. Their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). Perhaps the same William earlier married Margaret Penman and had a daughter Margaret (b.1682) in Robertson. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Penman and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1682. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isobel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Bonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stirches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter ‘Ana’ was baptised in 1702. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Taylor in Cavers in 1707. Children baptised in Cavers who could be his include Archibald (b.1708), William (b.1710), George (b.1713), Ann (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and John (b.1719). William (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Renwick in Wilton in 1711. William (b.1712), baptised in Wilton, was probably his child. Additionally, Janet (b.1717), Rachel (b.1723), Elizabeth (b.1725) and Anna (b.1727), baptised in Ashkirk, were the same couple’s children. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alymoor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull in 1721. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Chisholme and their children included: William (b.1719); Margaret (b.1721); John (b.1723); Robert (b.1725); and Isobel (b.1727). He could be the William who got married in Wilton in 1718, with no bride’s name given. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Bonraw in 1724 and Stirches in 1729. He could be the William who was in 1765 said to have been a tenant of Little Stirches decades earlier. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719. Their children included: John (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stirches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He may be the William who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He could be the William ‘Ballad Singer’ who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Scott. Their daughter Mary was baptised in 1730. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isobel ‘Culbertson’. Their son James was baptised in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Scott in 1736. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Thorburn and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Anne Sinclair (whose name is also written ‘Sinkler’) and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1754. William (18th C.) married Mary Noble in Hawick in 1761. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1766. His wife was from Minto Parish. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. William (18th C.) recorded in a marriage in Hawick in 1787, with no wife’s name given. William (18th C.) married Helen Miller in Hawick in 1788. William (d.1815) recorded in the Hawick death register as ‘Betty Ingles’s Husband’. It is unclear why he would have been recorded in this way, but presumably by the time of his death his wife was more well-known in the Town than he was. The couple married in Hawick in 1791. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Teinside Bridgegden according to the Militia ballot for Cavers Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included Janet (b.1799), Thomas (b.1801), Elizabeth (b.1804), Mary (b.1806) and Jemima (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Rutherford and their son Thomas was baptised in 1816. William (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their son William was baptised in 1837. William (18th/19th C.) married Ann Taylor in Hawick in 1848. Rev. William (1812–77) born in Hawick Parish, he was son of cooper Walter and Christian Phillips. He was educated at Edinburgh High School and University and licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) Chapel of Ease 1843–44 and was then translated to Edinburgh, where he remained until his death. He married Christian Archibald MacDougall, daughter of Joseph Yair, minister of Eckford. His children were: Helen Josephine (b.1869); Walter minister of Lauder; Christian (b.1871); William (b.1874); George (b.1875); and John Yair (b.1877) (also formerly written ‘Lambe’).

the Lamp (tha-lawmp) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church ‘... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors’. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary’s (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation. The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, At matins, mass, and vesper hymn, Cast here its rays subdug and dim’ [WNK].

Landles (lawn-dulz) n. Andrew (1819–53) originally from Northumberland, he was born in Tweedmouth, son of David and Margaret. He moved to Hawick in the early 1840s, working as a master framesmith; he was thus the progenitor of the Landles in Hawick. In 1841 he was living in Tynemouth with his wife Mary and daughter Margaret. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square (probably 12 Sandbed), employing 4 men. He was listed as a framesmith on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife (actually widow) and 3 children were living at the 2nd back house of 8 Howegate in 1861. In 1839 in Hawick, he married Mary, daughter of David Affleck, who was living in Hawick, but born in Wigtownshire. It is unclear what his connection to Hawick was that would enable him to meet his wife and then move to the Town permanently. Their children included: Margaret or ‘Maggie’ (b.1839/40), who married a Brown, brother of Thomas Brown who married a granddaughter of Robert Burns; Maria (b.1843/4); David (b.1846/7); and Andrew (b.1853). He went out to Australia in the Gold Rush in 1853, but died there. Bailie Andrew, J.P. (1853–1940) son of Andrew. He was a Town Councillor from 1909 and Bailie in the 1920s, as well as J.P. from 1913. He worked in the woollen industry all his life. He was involved with setting up Hawick R.F.C., and wrote a memoir of those times in the early 1920s. He was also involved with the Volunteers, the Foresters and the Home Mission. He retired from the Common Riding Committee in 1932 after 40 years of service. He married Sarah, daughter of Valentine Godfrey, and she died in 1941. He was grandfather of Wullie and great-grandfather of Ian. His children were: Andrew, Professor of Music at Eugene, Oregon; David, who died young; Thomas, who was a policeman and member of the Brethren; William, who was a hosiery worker and artist; John Chapman Gray ‘Chap’, who was Cornet and Provost; Jessie, who married confectioner Alexander Murray; and Mary Affleck, who married baths attendant Frederick Crozier. He and his wife are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Andrew (1877–1944) son of Bailie Andrew. He emigrated to Eugene Oregon, where he was a Professor of Music. He married Sarah Calderhead. His son Andrew was 5 when the family emigrated and died aged 95 in 1999; his ashes were returned to Hawick in 2001. Andrew ‘Andra’ (??–??) uncle of Ian and brother of Wullie. He was a stallwart committee man of the Archæological Society and known for his sense of humour. David (d.1832) recorded dying in Hawick, with his surname given as ‘Landle’. It is unclear whether he was related to the other Hawick people of this surname. David (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Charlotte Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1871), Ian William (1952–), B.E.M., High School History teacher, and son of Wullie. Educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1974, he then trained as a teacher at Moray House, returning to Hawick as a teacher in 1975. He later became Head of the History Department, retaining the position until retirement in 2009. He was the instigator of the battlefield tours for pupils and later adults from Hawick. He is writer of the words and music for ‘Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame’, ‘My Teviot Valley’, ‘A’m Comin’ Hame’ and other more impromptu songs set to well known tunes (e.g. ‘Safeway’ and ‘Teelio’). His poems include ‘The Vertish Hill’, ‘The Man that oo Ca’ Bill’ and ‘Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair’. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in ‘the Hut’ from Adie Ingles. He has also been star of the annual Panto and played ‘Gibbie the Gowk’ in ‘The Gutterbludes’. He is a public speaker extraordinaire,

tainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in in-umerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn, ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archaeological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000, Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs, as well as Hawick R.F.C. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ ran for 40 years until 2020. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. In 2013 he was awarded the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL].

John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swim and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of Bailie Andrew. He was a policeman and then worked with Urban Electric Co. in Hawick. He was a leading preacher with the Open Brethren. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson ofOrm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swynyshe’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lauder. William ‘Wullie’, M.B.E. (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thorburn of Walkerton before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have lo-lections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fel-

William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He was born in Langlands Bank and attended Hawick High School. He worked as a message-

Lang (lawng) n. formerly a common nickname for someone who was tall, e.g. ‘Lang Jaymie’, ‘Lang Jock’, ‘Lang John’, ‘Lang Roger’, ‘Lang Sandy’, ‘Lang Tam’, etc..

Lang (lawng) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Cicely Davidson in 1750. Their children included: Eupham (b.1751); Isabel (b.1753); John (b.1755); James (b.1757); Margaret (b.1759); and William (b.1761). Alexander (18th C.) married Christian Wilson in Hawick in 1786. Alexander (19th C.) agricultural labourer in Minto Parish. He was living in Minto village in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1825 in Jedburgh he married Elizabeth Thomson, who was from Maxton Parish. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); Janet (b.1829); William (b.1830/1); Mary (again, b.1834); and George (b.1840). Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Anne Brizmour and their son James was baptised in 1820. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Buckholm and their son Alexander was baptised in 1854. Andrew (1712–53) writer in Selkirk, son of John (Selkirk Deacon of Trades) and Isobel Murray (from Philiphaugh). He was recorded as the Procurator Fiscal in Selkirk in 1751. In 1741 he married Henrietta Chisholme, widow of Robert Mercer; she was daughter of William Chisholme of Broadlee and Ann Rutherford (daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth). Their children included: Isobel (b.1742); Henrietta (b.1743); John (b.1744); and Katherine (b.1752). He drowned in the Ettrick and left a son John and 4 daughters. In 1761 his widow had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk, on behalf of herself and her son John; she had several other discharges in the years until 1782. Andrew (1783–1842) son of John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire. He was also Sheriff Clerk and served under Sir Walter Scott. His son John was also Sheriff-Clerk and his grandson was the author, also Andrew. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Several letters relating to his legal work are preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in the period 1825–29. In 1809 he married Margaret Suter (1787–1874) who was from Ross-shire. Their children included: Elizabeth (1811–40); John (1812–69); Jean (1814–45); Andrew (b.1817); Gideon Scott (1819–80) a pastoralist and writer in Australia; Mary (1820–1904); Margaret Suter (1821–1875); William (b.1823); Mark Pringle (1824–25); Henrietta (1828–1901); and Diana Scott (1829–98). Andrew (1844–1912) author, born at Viewfield in Selkirk. His parents were John, who was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and Jane Plenderleath Sellar. He was descended from a family of trades deacons in Selkirk, and he also had Chisholmes of that Ilk and Mur-rays of Philiphaugh among his ancestors. He was educated in Edinburgh, St. Andrews, Glasgow and Oxford, and lived most of his life in London. He became a journalist, writing extensively for the Daily News and for Longman’s Magazine. He wrote such a varied selection of things that many people of the time believed he was a pseudonym for a whole group of writers! His collections of fairy tales and writings on angling are still widely read, but he was also a poet and essayist. For works of local interest, he edited Scott’s Waverley Novels, as well as his Poems and Ballads, wrote ‘Sir Walter Scott and the Border Minstrelsy’ (1910) and ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’ (1913, with his brother John). He is buried in Selkirk and the cottage hospital there was renamed the Andrew Lang unit. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son George was baptised in 1714. James (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1728. His surname was written ‘Laun’. Janet (18th C.) laundress at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Janet (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish married to Betty Leithead. Their daughter Betty was baptised in 1791. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Isabel Brotherstone in 1785. Their children included: Alexander (b.1786); Margaret (b.1788); Cicely (b.1791); Christian (b.1795). John (1812–69) son of Andrew, he was Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire like his father before him. He was a member of the Jed-forest Club. He inherited Overwells (near Jedburgh) from his maternal uncle Gideon Scott. In 1843 he married Jane Plenderleath. His son Andrew was the famous author, while his 2nd son, Patrick Sellar, succeeded as Sheriff-Clerk.
John (d.1941) cousin on Andrew the author, and brother of Florence and Margaret, who both married Robson-Scotts. He worked for the Indian Civil Service. In 1923 he purchased Cleithaugh from the Duke of Roxburghe. He also purchased Mervinslaw for the shooting. He was a member of the Roxburghshire District Council. He married Winifred Ethel Laurie from the ‘Annie Laurie’ family). Their son William died when his aircraft crashed in 1941. Their 2nd son, John, was a Commander in the Royal Navy and inherited Newton. His wife remained at Cleithaugh until her death in 1958. John Robert (20th C.) 2nd son of John of Cleithaugh. He was a Commander in the Royal Navy. In 1967 he inherited Newton (near Bedrule) from his cousin Marjorie Robson-Scott. He married Jennifer Douglas and their children included Rear-Adm. John Stewart (b.1941) and Alistair Laurie (b.1943). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish who married Janet Notman in 1794. Their children included Alexander (b.1795), Nancy (b.1798) and Cecily (b.1800) (at early times this could be confused with Laing).

Lang airm (lawng-ärm) n., arch. to ‘make a lang airm’ means to help oneself at the table – ‘Now make a lang airm’ [GW].

Langam lily (lawng-um-li-lee) n., arch. the dandelion (a joking reference to Langholm).

Langbaulk (hum-bawk, lawng-bawlwk) n. farmouse on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the ‘Lumbback’ road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797, 1801 and still recorded there in 1841. John Halliday (of ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’ fame) was living there in 1847. Francis Henderson was there in the mid-20th century.

Langbaulk Road (hum-bawk-röd) n. more recently spelled Longbaulk, but pronounced ‘Lumback’, this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the ‘New Road’ was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbaulk farm steadings. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called ‘Longbaulk Road’ is a dead end, with ‘the Lumback’ continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the ‘New Road’ was built there was for a long time a notice that read, when coming towards Hawick, ‘No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar’ (the name either means ‘a long hard pull’ or refers to a long ‘baulk’ or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbaulk Toll-Hoose (hum-bawk-töl-hoos) n. former toll-house on the New Road, being now the first house on Parkdall.

Langbits (lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead (written ‘Langbittis’).

Lang Burn (lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Slitrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiel. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flosk Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1562 (it is probably the tributary of the Slitrig marked ‘Langburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langburn (lawng-burn) n. former farm on the Long Burn. It was once separate from the modern Longburnshiel. William Telfer was her there in 1759. In 1801 the tenant was John Oliver, while William Stevenson was at Longburnshiel. William Foster was a servant there in 1801.

Langburnshiels (lawng-burn-sheela) n. Longburnshiels, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastleton road, once site of the ‘Turf Hotel’ used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood, being listed as ‘Langburne’ among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. It could be the ‘Lanyburne’ where William Oliver was recorded in 1618. Robert Oliver was there from around the 1760s and John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797 and in 1799 the residents included William Turnbull, Francis Armstrong and William Robson. The tenants were William Stevenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carruthers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just ‘Langburn’ in 1790; this may be the place marked ‘Shells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langbyre (lawng-bir) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lynniecleuch. It was included in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Elliots of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lynniecleuch when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (it is ‘les Langbyre’ in c.1380; it is marked on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (lawng-kärn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, satuated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastleton Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when it was said to contain ‘several stone coffins of various sizes standing exposed’. There is a nearby standing stone marking a boundary of the Debatable Lands.

Langleuch (lawng-clooch) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. ‘Langleuchside’ was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. ‘Langleuchside’ is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Fairnside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century. It could be the ‘langcluch’ recorded in 1502 when John Winthrope, James ‘aronyk’ and Robert Paterson had 60 sheep stolen from there by Patrick, son of Adam Scott in Harwoodhill.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crunhaughhill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built. It is now the name for the general area of these 2 streets – ‘For haddock, plaice and cod, They came frae Ramsay Road, Fri Myrslewgreen they came, Langcroft yins din the same’ [IWl].

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-kre-sin') n. Longcroft Crescent, loop off Longbault Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’ which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-röd) n. Longcroft Road, street connecting Langcroft Crescent with Longbault Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’.

Langdale (lawng-däl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring 4.5 x 1.75 x 0.75 inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

lang drink o witter (lawng-drin'k-ö-wi'-ur) n. colloquial expression for a tall, skinny person.

Lang Eld-ridg (lawng-eeld-rig) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

toucher (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – ‘Jimmy Rae’s no cuttin hair ony langer’!, ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruit!’, ‘...and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer ...’ [BR1644], ‘He reas the text with haly anger, for now nae langer at Haremoss You’ll hear auld Mary’ [HSR], ‘Some say it is a gross abuse, Some count o hevin been there a sicht langer’ [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

langest (lawng-ist) adj. longest – ‘Aye’, he said, things lest langest efter they’re dune’ [JHH] (note the lack of the hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flö) n. Long Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map (see flowe).
the Lang Field (thu-lawng-feelt) n. name for the field of the Common, to the east of the road between Pilmuir and Pilmuir Rig farms.

Langflat (lawng-fla’) n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmonth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is ‘Langflatte’ (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mi-akis) n. Longformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing the 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovocete (the origin is ‘church meadow of Maccus’ in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrope Burn just south of Whitropefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-huts. ‘Langgrainfit’ was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. stream that runs to the east to join the Black Burn near Mosspaull. It rises on Wisps Hill and forms part of the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire.

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. small stream that rises on Lambair Hill and flows north-east to join Singdean Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Langgrainfit (lawng-grän-fit’) n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called ‘Camehill’. There was a dispute among the Cunninghams, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Belton) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that ‘Langhassendean’ was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 also refers to ‘Eister Hassindene’, so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as ‘Lang Hassindean’.

Langhauch see Langhaugh

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackcleuch. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a ‘horning’ in 1607 for William Scott of Howpashley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falnash was served heir to his father’s 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of ‘Langshaugh water’ were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Calflshaw. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1788 and ‘Langhaugh Water’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. (it is ‘Langhauch’ in 1511, ‘Langhauch’ in 1572, ‘Longhauch’ in 1610, ‘Langheuch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhauche’ in 1647; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, between Netherraw and Harts-garth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert ‘Elwald’ was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. Archibald Elliot from there was recorded in 1618. It was one of 3 farms... that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a ‘wadsett’ until James Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’) paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Olivers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is ‘Langhalgh’ around 1376, ‘langhalch’ in 1494/5, ‘Langhauch’ in 1612, ‘Langhauch’ in 1618, and transcribed as ‘Lahauche’ in about 1624; it is marked ‘Langhaugh’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Longhaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Brewhlands. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1502. It is mentioned in 1767 as ‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh’ (it is ‘le langhalgh’ in 1502, ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaughe’ in 1649; it is marked on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map as ‘Langhauch’, is also ‘Langhaugh’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Longhaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.
Langholm Castle

'banana', 'saut herring', thistle and floral crown, as well as the flag) through the streets and the unique 'Crying of the Fair' (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop's 'Echoes from the Border Hills' (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book 'Langholm as it was' (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – 'The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell ...' [DH], '...was a gaird on the mail coach afore hei took over the Croon Inn in the Langum' [BW1979] (it is 'ye Langhame' on Sandison's c.1590 map, while 'Cast. of Langhoome' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-un-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ewes Water, once home of the Armstrongs. It may have been built in the 1520s after Johnnie Armstrong of Gillockie was granted lands in Langholm. It seemed to be taken by the forces of the Scottish Regent in 1529 (before Armstrong and many of his followers were captured at Caerlenrig). The castle was largely demolished in 1725. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls, although it clearly once extended over a much larger area. It is also known as 'Langholm Tower'.

Langholmite (lawng-un-i) n. person from Lanholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawng-un-stree) n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawng-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccleuch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawng-hop, -up) n. Langhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow's lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the 'Eststeid de Langhop', 'Middilsteed' and 'Weststeid'. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the 'grassum' there. In the 1480s they were leased to Ainslies, Cranstones and John Scott of Todshawhaugh. In 1490 and 1501 they were assigned to Alexander Scott and his mother, Robert Scott of Stirches, Patrick Home and William Cranston of that Ilk. The land remained Crown property until at least 1502. Adam Ewart was recorded as tenant there in 1502. In 1510 the west steering was feuded to Thomas Cranston, the middle steering to Sir William Cranston and then Alexander Scott, and the east steering to Walter Scott; the middle steering was also called 'Howford', suggesting this was the place on the Ettrick, further to the north (making it unclear whether this was the same place or another Langhope on Ettrick). Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. The meadow there 'langhop medo' was part of lands belonging to George Scott of Blindhough, which he assigned to his 3rd son William. Robert Scot of Langup' is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch (this probably around 1600). The Scotts of Langhope were descended from the Huncly branch, and owned the lands until about 1620. The old Scotts of Headshaw then bought the lands, which were sold (along with Headshaw) in 1629 to John of Yorkston, who passed it to his son John Scott of Langhope. 'Langupmedow' was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. William of Langhope had a 'wadset' with Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677 Walter was 'now of Langhope'. In a c.1680 list of houses in Selkirkshire it is described as 'a Gentleman's Dwelling'. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). Thomas Nivison was herd there in 1697. 'Langhope Meadow' was included in a list of properties in Ashkirk Parish held by Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall in 1753; Wilkinson also had a sasine for these and other lands in 1779, where it is (probably incorrectly) 'Langhope Meadow, in the Barony of Lilliesleaf'. ‘A Plan of the Farm of Longhope’ was drawn up in 1767, when it was owned by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. John Brydon was tenant there in 1784 and John Paterson in 1785. In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 ‘of Stock’ and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad ‘The Fray of Elibank’ – ‘Though Andrew o’ Langhope had fa’n i’ the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an’ climb over the height, An’ there he set up a lamentable cry’ [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is ‘langhop’ in 1502, ‘Lang Hoip’ in 1541 and ‘Langhop’ in 1661; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langup’ and is ‘Longhope’ by Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langhope Burn (lawng-höp-burn) n. stream that joins the Ale Water above Ashkirk. It is first noted as part of the boundary of the lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as ‘the rivulet of Langhope’ as part of the boundary of lands granted toOrm of Ashkirk – ‘And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Essenside’ [WHO] (it is ‘rivulus de Longhope’ about 1170; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettric).

Langhope Drive (lawng-höp-driv) n. Longhope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaugh Hill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

Langhope Height (lawng-höp-hú) n. hill south of Teviothead, being the western ridge of Comb Hill, with the stream called the Lang Hope nearby.

Langhope Rig (lawng-höp-rig) n. ridge above the Langhope Burn, between Shaws Under Loch and Akermoor Loch. Since 2015 it has been the location for a wind farm, consisting of 10 turbines. A related community fund has supported small projects in the neighbouring district (it marked simply ‘The Rig’ on a 1767 map of Langhope farm.

langin (lawng-in) n. longing, desire – ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graenin’ isna hidden frae thee’ [HSR], ‘... an’ satisfieist the langin’ o’ ilka leivin’ thing’ [HSR], ‘... the thouchts, the langin’s, an’ the resolves o’ an exile thrae hame’ [BW1939].

langit (lawng-ce') pp., poct. longed – ‘Behald, I hae langet efter thy preceeps ... ’ [HSR], ‘... for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR] (see lang).

Lang Jaymie (lawng-jä-mee) n. nickname for James Richardson.

lang kail (lawng-kail) n., arch. a form of borecole that is purplish and with less wrinkly leaves than the more common variety, soup made from this – ‘If it was het, the langkail gully Play’d smash amang’t to end the tulzie’ [JR] (also written ‘langkail’; see also kail).

Langlands (lawng-linds) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. The Laird of ‘Langlandis’ was listed among ‘Landit Men’ of Scotland in about 1590. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinslaw, Brieryhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Coble Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. By the time of the 1765 division of Wilton Common, the lands of the estate were valued at £434 10s 8d. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclosures in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some enclosures in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlandis’, it is ‘Langlans’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-linds) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson. Art deco style interior alterations were made in the 1920s or 30s. It is now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’ parts and is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands ‘called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is ‘Langlandis’ in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose lifierent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as ‘Langislandis’ in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitehaugh, Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a horning and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawaugh) and associates. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded in ‘Spittell’ in 1619 among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. This is probably Ancrum Spittal, but could be Spittal-on-Rule. Adam (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1721. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrea Langlandis’ in 1503 when he witnessed a sasine in Edinburgh. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the ‘horning’ and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as ‘Karolo vicario de Dryvisdal’, i.e. Vicar of Dryfesdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cupar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the ‘horning’ (possibly the one imposed on James in 1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawaugh and Ormiston. His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Easter Heap) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert ‘fier of that Ilk’ (i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brieryhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of

Langlands

Harden (and widow of Elliot of Fahnash). George (d.bef. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, the length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. He is recorded as witness to a Gledstains christening in 1672. He was recorded in a deed of 1673, and is probably also the George ‘fiar of that Ilk’ recorded in another deed that year. The land tax was paid by the ‘laird of Langlands’ in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was ‘relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk’). Her ‘plenishing’ included ‘feather beds, bolsterers and cots, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towels, spindles of worsted, and striaken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrels, tubs, koads, and bickers, one and a half dozen t Dennis, pair of clattis and (hand) cairds, hecketis, reels, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW]. He may have been succeeded by Robert, who was probably his son. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariat of Peebles in 1690, where he is ‘Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wiltoun’. It is unclear where he might have been a minister himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who was his sister). In his will, he is stated to have left ‘ane little parcel off books’, as well as £40 of ‘lying money’ and £400 in cash. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included ‘Rocher’ with Margaret Scott in 1724; the witnesses to the baptism were William ‘Steward’ and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1730–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). The witnesses in 1732 were his brothers William and Archibald ‘uncs to the said child’. George (d.1758) died in Hawick Parish. Henry (19th C.) married Janet Wilson in Wilton in 1826. James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was ‘Langlands’. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as ‘Jacobum de Langlandis’. He is probably also the James who was on an ‘inquest of retour’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been re-signed by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott ‘Lord of Muirthoustoun’ at St. Mary’s Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He is recorded as ‘Jacobus de Langlandis’ in 1437 when he was on the panel in Jedburgh to decide on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was ‘Jacobus de codem’ when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or ‘Mariote’). He also swapped the lands of Milisington with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an ‘excambion’ with Walter
Langlands

Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester John. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as ‘James Langglens of that Ilk’. Probably the same man was ‘of Wiltoun’ in 1500 when listed as one of the valuators for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairnley). He is also probably the ‘James Langlands of Wiltoun’ listed among 24 Roxburghshire deeds of Wiltoun (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kers in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Brankholme assumes the burden for ‘James Langlandis of that Ilk and his barnis’. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by then). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special ‘umpire’ for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He is probably the James who was joint ‘tacksman’ (with William Scott, perhaps of Whitaugh) of the Parsonage of Wilton in the period 1570–72. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and ‘made faith’ to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Faldonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 (‘with my hand at the pen’). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of ‘Wollie’, and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter ‘Malie’ on Robson’s non-appearance. He was recorded as being ‘de Wiltounhill’ in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Bucleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’ and John Stoddart, his ‘cobilman’. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held half the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties before the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woollie by Will Robson of ‘Rochthewchmylne’. Along with 21 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have ‘enterit the said Johnne Stodart, his cobilman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice’, but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George of Synton and Walter of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scotts and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braeildie and the Armstongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1581 he gave sasine to his son and heir Robert of his half Barony of Wilton, retaining lifrent for himself and after his death the payment of 20 bolls of grain annually to his wife Marion Scott for ‘up-hallding of hir and hir bairnes’; the precept of sasine was made in Selkirk (for unspecified reasons), the witnesses including Walter Riddell of that Ilk, George Scott of Synton, William Scott in Huntly and Walter Veitch of North Synton. The sasine was also recorded in Selkirk, with witnesses Rev. William Auchmowtie, John (his son) and 2 servants of his son Robert. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden. In 1589 he was cautioner for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in.
about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier). He may be the James Langlands denounced in 1598, along with John Turnbull in Minto, James Turnbull in Hassendean and Walter Scott 'of Ordschaw' for not paying Selkirkshire taxes to the Lord of Newbattle. He married Marion Scott and was succeeded by his son Robert. Other sons included Rev. John and probably Andrew. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their horning and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton.

James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axle of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet nee Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name ‘de Langlandis’, he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at ‘Milsallystoun’ (Milsington) and ‘Ochterhyud’ (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow ‘Mariote Cumyne’ (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II.

John (14th C.) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1386 he was given the benefice of the Parish Church of Langlands. This was even although it was acknowledged to normally be in the gift of the Abbot of Kelso in St. Andrews Diocese. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450 he was ‘Johannem de Langlandis’ on the ‘retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with Langlandshall (in Peeblesshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father. His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related ‘de Charteris’ family) held the lands for several generations before. He probably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire to Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of ‘excambion’ with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Milsington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also a witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father’s lands of Whitcheaters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as ‘Lord of Heip’. He is probably the ‘Johannes Langlandis’ listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balveny in 1463/4. And presumably the same ‘John Langlandis’ was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there is probably an extra generation between him and Roger, who was responsible for the death of George Fairneylaw around 1493. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James of Wilton was also listed, and so they may have been related. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He may be the same ‘John of Langlandis’ listed among the men chosen by William Douglas of Cavers to value the lands of Whithope in 1500; James of Wilton was also listed there. It is possible he was the ‘Joh. Langlandis’ who witnessed charters in Edinburgh in 1471 and 1474. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the accounts of the

Langlands

Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as an ‘Officier’ in the period 1515–1523. The business sometimes involved delivery of letters and proclamations in the Borders, suggesting that he was from the local family, perhaps even the Laird of Langlands. Another James was recorded as ‘messenger’ to the Queen, delivering letters relating to the complaint between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule in 1557, and also witnessing the bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls and others swore to bring in William Nixon; it seems unlikely that this is the same man, but surely is related. John (16th C.) of that Ilk, possibly son of Roger. He was witness to a sasine in 1522. In 1528 he may be the John who was listed among the supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, who were summoned to appear before the King and forfeited their lands. He was made a ‘nuncio’ under the Lyon King of Arms in 1540. However, this is confused by Roger being recorded also in 1531/2. In 1539 he witnessed a notorial instrument for Cranstones. He may also be the same Laird of Langlands mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. John (16th C.) recorded in Dunfermline in 1561. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (16th C.) recorded at Ancrum Spittal in 1586/7, among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as ‘Johnne Langlandis, reidare at Wiltoun’ (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. Both he and Auchmowtie were witnesses in 1581 to the sasine where his father resigned his half Barony of Wilton to his brother Robert. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complications) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, when Border Lairds renewed their promise to keep the peace. He therefore appears to have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputedly the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, craving a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam ‘Roe’ (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet ‘Roe’. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at ‘Hayning’ (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes entirely), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Persbytery to stop favouring him since he ‘has not preached for some Sundays’, and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased (this suggests he was having children until quite an old age). His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailing; Esther, who married Adam Scott in Galalaw; Elizabeth, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leatherhead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennet, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who was said to have lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the ‘Mrs Langlands’ who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new ‘Steeple Loft’ was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution). He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying ‘without proclamation’ William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopalians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695. He is recorded in the Gladstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gladstains in the period 1672–81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1671 and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alison (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. He may be the John who in 1718 petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk to be recognised as the heir of his uncle Walter. John (18th C.) recorded in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for Will Turnbull in Hawick. John Charles (1800–74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’) to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as ‘Bon Esperance’. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk. Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 ‘to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton’. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Patrick (d.bef. 1646) matman in Glasgow. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1606, having married the only daughter of a Burgess. His son Archibald was a merchant in Glasgow, who became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1646. Hector, who was a Skinner in Glasgow and became a Burgess in 1669 (and Guild Brother in 1675) may be from the same family. It is unclear if he was related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. It is probably the same Peter who in 1542 witnessed a procuracy where George Rutherford of Hundalee resigned his lands in favour of his son Nicholas Rutherford. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. He was made master of the hospital at St. Germain's and in 1419 asked for confirmation of this position from the Pope. His surname was written ‘de Langlandris’. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milstone, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir, James. He also witnessed the relative sasine at Milstone in 1453, where he is ‘Roberto de Langlandis’. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witnessed in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1580/1 his father resigned his hald Barony of Wilton in his favour, reserving a liferent for himself, and with a provision to provide for his mother (Marion Scott) and her children. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. He was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George’s brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George’s uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as ‘fier of yt. ilke’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his name may have been Margaret ‘Per’ and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing...

to give up Episcopacy. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part ‘pertaining to Margaret Donaldsone’, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Murray, but later released. He took refuge in Holland, returned after the Revolution and became a minister. Robert (17th C.) son of Robert of that Ilk. In 1659 he became a merchant’s apprentice to James Ker in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Son of Robert of that Ilk’ was recorded in a deed in 1673. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. However, he could be the Robert whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1709. Rev. Robert (d.1696) from the family of Langlands of that Ilk, although the precise connection is unclear. He was admitted to Barony in 1691 and translated to Elgin in 1696. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1694. In 1692 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Edinburgh surgeon George Stirling. Their children included: George, apprenticed to Robert Elliot, surgeon in Edinburgh, in 1709; and Elizabeth, who married Culross surgeon James Robertson. In 1709 his surname was written ‘Longlands’. The Latin inscription on his gravestone can be translated ‘In this small grave the famous Langlands lies, All good men mourn for his sad obsequies; A faithful preacher, opening mysteries; Not slothful, but was teaching everywhere His people with sedulity and care …’ Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Alemoor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1709 he feuded lands at ‘Spetchenhaugh’ (i.e. the Spetch) to James Wight. He is probably the Laird of Langlands, who in about 1705 was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. He also had sons William and Archibald, who witnessed a baptism for their brother George in 1732. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, which was opposed by the Duke of Buccleuch’s Chamberlan, his only supporters then being Elliott of Stobs and Scott of Synton; the road was finally built 50 years later. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the instigators (along with William Scott of Brieryhill and James Scott of Easter Heap) for the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time the value of his own property was £434 10s 8d. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining ‘liferent’ of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated ‘a chicken, preserved in spirits, having two heads conjoined laterally at the back of the skull’ to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. In February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a ‘retour’ of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny ‘blench farm’ payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – ‘Oh, Langlands ye’re a graceless man An’ a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk’s curse ye maun dree’ [FL].

Roger (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Wiltonhall’ in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbot of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as ‘de Langlandis’ and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George’s son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1689 he is described as ‘chamberlain to Sir William Scot of harden elder and younger’ in a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk regarding annual rent. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was ‘in Woodhouselie’. His will is recorded in Lauder in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is probable he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. He may be the Walter whose nephew petitioned the Bailies of Selkirk in 1718 to be recognised as his heir. Walter (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. John, probably the minister of Wilton. His father was deceased in 1692 when he became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh. It has also been said that he lived in Hawick. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at ‘Heytoun’ (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from ‘Eister Heap’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Haining recorded in 1618 among men accused of illegally carrying guns. He was ststed to be too poor to find caution and hence promised not to repeat the offence on pain of banishment and having his hand cut off if he returned. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son William was baptised in 1719, with witnesses William Cunningham and Beadle John Scott. He is probably the William whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1737. William (d.1785) died in Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Notman in Minto in 1794 (spelled ‘Langlandes’, ‘Langlandis’, ‘Langlanis’, etc. in earlier documents).

the Langlands (thu-lawng-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as 1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peeblesshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been ‘Longueville’, while the ‘de Charteris’ family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is ‘Spero’ (‘I hope’) or ‘Bon Esperance’. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – ‘They saw bold Langlands proudly ride In armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom’s fearless knight’ [JI], ‘And Langlands ne’er meets the marchmen now, To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o’ Langlands is nae mair’ [BCM1880].

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-bawngk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathouse (lawng-lindz-bó-hoos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman. Walter Rutherford was living at ‘Boathouse’ in 1730 and William Allan was at ‘boathouse’ in 1732.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Buccleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh. It was named after the Langlands family and built by Craik & Chisholm. It once had a gate that was closed at night.

Langlands Cauld (lawng-lindz-kawld) n. another name for the Coble Cauld (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kör) n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret’s Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. The name was used to describe where Robert Easton was living in 1765. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-mil) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called ‘Langlands and Ladylaw Mills’ or ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glenny’s. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose’s). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as ‘Ladylaw’, distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-powrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish Baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rochead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-räik) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – ‘...the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east’ (i.e. the ‘Common Vennel’, so that ‘Langlands Raik’ must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be ‘Reach’, i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-röd) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as ‘the Kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’, and was named around 1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for for manufacturer T.A. Laing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco’s. In 1910 a fireplace with inscription was added, designed by J.P. Alison, to commemorate a gas explosion there.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as ‘Langle’ in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of ‘Langley’ listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wualcope) in the late 19th century. The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Gordon’s c.1650 map as ‘Langlie’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langly’).

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. area between Galashiels and Melrose, on the north of where the Gala Water meets the Ettrick. It was formerly an estate with mansion house. It is now a rather depressing suburb of Galashiels.

Langley Cleuch (lawng-lee-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, that rises near Blinkbonnt and runs through Langleyleuch Wood to become part of the Tweed Burn.

lang lie (lawng-II) n. the act of staying in bed longer than usual, a sleep in – ‘tall folk aye hev a lang lie’.

lang-leggit tailor (lawng-le-ggee’-tä-lur) n., arch. the cranefly – ‘In Roxb. it is not only named Jenny Spinner, but Langleggit Taylor’ [JoJ].

the Lang Moss (thu-lawng-mos) n. area near the northern extent of the old Wilton Common, now on Drinkstone farm, just to the west of Drinkstone Hill. It is marked on the 1764 map of Wilton Common, with a ‘Spread Ground’ around it and Long Moss Road along the south side. It is marked as a marshy area running roughly north-south on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, and today is shown partly as a pond. It was near here that the temporary grave of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ was located ‘... to allow five acres for spread ground, round the foresaid two mosses, called Todshaw-moss, and the Long-moss’ [DCW1765] (there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near Cavers Knowes farm).

Langmoss Knowe (lawng-mos-now) n. Langmoss Knowe, a small hill on the northwestern side of Drinkstone Hill, containing the remains of some ancient enclosures. It reaches a height of 314 m. A ‘pit near the west end of the Long Moss-knows' was described in 1765 being on the boundary of Wilton Common.

Lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. long-nosed – ‘O ye lang-nebbit pryin’ race, Who kittle words an’ letters trace’ [JR], astute, learned – ‘Lang-nebbit words he has in store, His brains were ne’er surpassed by oyn; Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blink-bonny’ [DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new’-in) n. Longnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century; hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Longa Newton’ swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s. In 1335/6 some tenements there belonging to William of Soules and others belonging to Robert, Steward of Scotland, were valued at 20 pounds in peacetime, but described being in waste. By the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglases. In 1377 there was an indenture between John of Kinghorn and William, son of William of Newbigging for lands there. There were Rutherfords there in the 15th century. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infested in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. In addition the Kers of Newhall broke parts of Langnewton Mill in 1589. In the latter part of the 16th century lands there were held by James Douglas of Lochleven as Commendator of Melrose; in 1586 he complained that an armed band of Kers, Rutherfords and others had prevented him ‘fra teinding and leiding his teyndis tairf’. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father’s lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, fiar of Ancrum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at about £2200. Langnewton Moor was said to be a location for Covenanter meetings around 1680. Residents in 1801 included Alexander Richardson, Francis Scott, James Colville, Thomas Small, William Blyth and James Burn. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Longnewton Common – ‘The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palace-hill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Longnewton barony’ [T] (the name first appears as ‘Longa Neutun’ in 1220, and is thereafter often ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langneutoune’, ‘Langnwtone’, ‘Langnewtoune’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoune’, ‘Langnewtoun’, or similar; ‘Langneuton’ is marked on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map while ‘Lang Newtoun’ and ‘Lang-Newtoun K.’ are on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript maps, ‘Langnewtoun’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Lang new’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for ‘long new town’, which is descriptive of the village).

Langnewton Chapel (lawng-new’-in-ch@p-pul) n. former chapel in Langnewton. It was situated adjacent to the burial ground, which is still there between Longnewton and Birselees. It was first recorded in about 1170, when it was part of Lessuden Parish and a property of Dryburgh Abbey. It passed to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 12th century and became a parish church, with the charge being a vicarage in 1220, with the patronage held by Henry of Douglas. The church was annexed to Ancrum in about 1684. The building was taken down around 1790 and the stones used to build the farmhouse at Birselees. However, the graveyard was used until much later. The church was also sometimes known as just ‘Newton’.

Langnewton Common (lawng-new’-in-ko-min) n. former lands to the north-east of Longnewton (it is marked on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map as ‘Langneutoum Como’ and is ‘Langnewtoun Comon’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langower (lang-ö-waw’-ur) n. former farmstead in upper Teviotdale. In the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed between Hislop and Blackcleugh, ‘estimat to 20 lb., 3 lb. in teynd’ with ‘no corne’. It is unclear precisely where it was located.

Lang Penman

Lang Penman (lang-pen-min) n. nickname for a minor riever, captured by the Laird of Buccleuch in 1530. He was also recorded in 1535 as ‘servant of one called Dikkis Wille’ (possibly William Armstrong, son of Richard) among a list of men denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik. His surname was probably Penman and he was presumably tall.

Langraw (lang-raw) n. farm just south of Bonchester Bridge. The land there was apparently once owned by monks from Jedburgh Abbey, as part of the Barony of Abbotrul. David ‘Schewill’ (or Sheil) was tenant there in 1516 and another David recorded there in 1567. A tower there was burned by the English in 1545. In 1569 it was acquired (along with several other lands) by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Archie Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was recorded in 1579/80. Robert Elliot ‘in Langraw’ is recorded in 1610, a Shiel was tenant in 1626 and George Shiel in 1688. The lands were valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663, with Lyle Shiel in 1643 and George Shiel in 1663 owning an additional £52 there. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrul in 1680. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, William Turnbull ‘of Langraw’ was taxed for having 2 hearths, and James Shiel, ‘portioener’ there, was also taxed for 2 hearths. Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1738. Walter Barrie and Thomas Hope are recorded as tenants in 1797. Robert Barrie was there in 1801, along with his son Walter and son-in-law Robert Renwick. It was owned by the Turnbulls through the 17th and 18th centuries, until sold off by the heir of the last Laird in 1801. It was purchased by William Oliver and held by that family through most of the 19th century. William Oliver was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £104. By about 1874 it was partly owned by George Tauncrd of Weens, the other part by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. From 1882 it was tenanted jointly by William Bell junior and senior. A collection of partly burned bones was discovered here in the 19th century, in a circular area about 18 feet in diameter, reported in the Statistical Account in 1836; this could be the same as the tumulus that is reported to have existed there in 1926. A socketed bronze axe found there was donated to the National Museum of Antiquities in 1833. A stone axe-head, whorls and an arrow-head were found there and in the collection of Walter Deans (it is ‘Langrau’ in 1516; it appears to be ‘Langra’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map and is ‘Langraw’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw (lang-raw) n. Longrow, farm in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is about the southernmost part of Roxburghshire. Just north of the farm are old quarries, in one of which there are exposed parts of a cist, and in another is a grass-grown mound that was a lime kiln. There was formerly a lime kiln to the north-west, on the banks of the Muir Burn. Henry Forester was there in the period 1788–91. John Scott was farmer there in 1851 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-skaur) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonchester Bridge), presumably named for a ‘scaur’ there. It was also known as ‘Scaur Nook’. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays. Part of it was rented from Melrose Abbey by the Pringles of Galashiels according to a document of 1529 (the name is probably simply Old English for ‘the long wood’ and is first recorded in 1586; it was spelled ‘Langschaw’ and variants and was later ‘Lainshaw’).

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

lang shears (lawng-sheerz) n., arch. period of work, labour – ‘By the lang sheers o’ Gordon’ I’ll pay ye a’ off; Another day’s work ye shall ne’er hae frae me’ [JoHa], ‘She’s come throw the lang shears’ [GW].

Langside (lawng-siúd) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century. James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written ‘Langsyde’).
Langside (lawng-sid) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1678. At about that time it was said that the Covenanter Alexander Peden arrived at the farm incognito, asking for work in exchange for accommodation, only for the family from there to recognise him when he preached at Ruberslaw on the next Sunday, and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702, Walter Bowie in 1719, William Scott in 1757 and William Nichol in 1769 (it is ‘Langsyde’ in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and ‘Langside’ in 1678).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Eliotts of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansidebrae near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-sid-brā) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the ‘Langside’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Balliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just ‘Langside’ in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that ‘his fader and guidsire wes in pos-sessioun of the saidis landis thir mony yeris bi-gane’. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was ‘Langsyde’ owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in ‘Langside’ in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century. Charles Anderson was there in the early 1900s.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkhass Linn, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrails are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steading of Langsidebrae is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-sid-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langesideburne’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Lang Sike (lawng-sik) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

Longslack Sike (lawng-slak-sik) n. Longslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughhead Tower lay on its northern banks, and Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersyde’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

langsome (lawng-sum) adj., arch. slow, tedious, weary, lengthy – ‘But I forget the langsome years that o’er our head ha’e fled, I dinna see the burning tears Thae een o’ blue ha’e shed’ [JT].

the Lang Stand Oot (thu-lawng-stand-o’o) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiers employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

lang syne (lawng-sin) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘Lang syne, whan decent gude grey claiith, Did hap the laird an’ tenant baith’ [JR], ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsyne

Lang Synton

Lang Synton (lawng-sin-tin) n. possible former name for lands, perhaps near Synton. In 1679 John Shortreed in 'Longsintoune' had a discharge for payment with the Burgh of Selkirk and he was in 'Langseinstein' in 1681.

Lang Tae (lawng-tá) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfcleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Langtae Hill (lawng-tá-hil) n. hill just to the west of Caudecleuch. It reaches a height of 554 m (1,786 feet) and is the source of the Skelfhill Burn.

Lang Tam Dyce (lawng-tawm-dis) n. nickname for Rev. Thomas Dyce.

Lang-tholance (lawng-thó-lins) adj., poet. long-suffering – ‘...fui’ o’ tendir pitie, an’ gracious, lang-tholance, an’ waynesum in mercie an’ trouth’ [HSR].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. John (14th C.) priest of Glasgow Diocese. In 1394 Pope Benedict XIII wrote to the Abbot of Melrose with a mandate to give him the Parish Church of Wilton. His surname is written ‘de Langtun’.

William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stocking framesmith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871. In 1837 in Hawick he married Mehala Dow, from London. Their children included: William (b.1837), also a framesmith; Rebecca (b.1840); Mehala (or Matilda, b.1844); Mary (b.1847); John (b.1854); Catherine (b.1851); John (b.1854); Eliza (b.1856); and Ann (b.1861).

Langtonheight (lawng-tin-hi) n. farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, just to the east of Synton Parkhead. It is probably the ‘Langtoun’ where Thomas Hunter was tenant in 1697 and William Hislop was servant in 1698. Janet Robson was a widow living there in 1709 and Walter Veitch was tailor there in at least 1715–19. In 1716 Walter Dunlop was tenant there, Michael Anderson was herd and Thomas Scott was cottar. Francis Cumming was cottar in 1717 and John Dunlop was tenant in 1724. This is recorded as ‘Longtown’ where Michael Anderson and Walter Veitch were located in 1719. Walter Thomson was farmer there in 1797, with 4 work horses on the farm. John Riddell and Andrew Stewart were servants there in 1799. Walter Scott was shepherd there in 1851 and John Mason and family were there in 1861 (it is ‘Longtounheight’ in 1797 and ‘Longtoun’ in 1799; ‘Longtown’ is marked on Ainslie’s (1773 map).

Langtoon (lawng-town) n. Longtown, town on the A7 towards Carlisle, about 3 miles south of the Border. It has a handsome bridge, is near to the site of the Battle of Solway Moss (1542), and was a former station on the Waverley Line. Population about 3,000 – ‘...the winner was Dick Wricht thre Langtoon whae got euch pound iz heis reward’ [BW1974].

Langtoon see Lanton

Langview (lawng-vew) n. Longview, a Victorian villa-style house behind the ‘Auld Man’s Sate’.

lang-wundit (lawng-wun-dee) adj. long-winded – ‘Ilk ane believes the other ane A great lang-wundit blether, An’ like the man that couldna’ speak On anythong but leather’ [FL], ‘That langwundit title remains iz the offishial yin altho it’s seldom spoken at length’ [BW] (also written ‘langwundit’, etc.).

Lanso (lawn-so) n. short form for ‘John Lang & Sons Ltd.’ (similar in form to ‘Pesco’, but not nearly as commonly used).

Lant (lawn) n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheells, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells’.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-sho) n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn-in, lawn-tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wullie Landles’ poem ‘Lanton’. The village used to be home of the Crowner (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1502, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre’s men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford’s men in 1545. A ‘6 pound land of Langtoune’ was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglases sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglases of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns. The extensive Lanton Common was divided in 1769, with the portioners of the village getting a small part. Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton Mains (lawn-in-mänz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

Lanton Place (lawn-in-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1978 and named after the village of Lanton.

lantreen (lan-treen) n., arch. a lantern – ‘A’l leapt, jumped – ‘Then Dickie lap a loup fu hie, Fala, &c. And I wat a loud laugh laughed he … ’[CPM], ‘…With witches’ hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis’ gramarye; Then shoulder-hight for glee he lap, ‘Methinks I spye a coming tree!’ ’[JL], ‘The yowes they lap out owre the buchte, And skippit up with their gysent shins, And daunced on the clammy floore … ’[JTe], ‘A better never took a hill, Not lap an aul’ feal dike o’er, On ony day’ [JoHa].

lap (lawp) n., poet. a leap – ‘Then lap o’t’ [JBS].

lap (lawp) pp., arch., poet. leapt, jumped – ‘Then lap of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of ‘Langthoun’.

Lanton Cauld (lawn-in-kawld) n. weir in the Teviot near Lanton Mill.

Lanton Hill (lawn-in-hil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn-in-la-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).
As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘He lap tae gird his sword, At his leal auld chieftain’s word’ [JEDM], ‘... an laap an flaang as yaudl as a wuddic’ [ECS] (also written ‘lap’); this is the past tense, while the past participle is luppen.

lap (lawp) n., poet. a flap of a garment, lapel – ‘... Aye, and tell me the monie on my cloak lap; For there’s no ae fardin I’ll trust thee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

lapper (law-pur) n., arch. a clotted mass, partially melted snow – ‘When ilk bit syke wad cast a caper Wi’ drumlie broo, and ice, and lapper ... ’ [AD], v., arch. to clot, curdle, congeal, turn into slush (cf. loupered).

lappert (law-pur*) pp., arch. clotted – ‘... An’ cowpit the lappert milk he got His vyttles owre to synd’ [WiSp].

lappert gowan (law-pur’-gow-in) n., arch. common name for the march marigold, Caltha palustris – ‘The Marsh or March Marigold, commonly known as Lappart Gowans, opens its large full yellow wax-like flowers in meadows and marshes’ [JAHM].

larrie (law-ree) n. a lorry – ‘Fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarrie, caager’s cairt or hurlie’ [ECS], ‘Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birrlin alang . . . ’ [ECS] (also written ‘laarie’).

Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed ‘Lairis, Toftis, Kirkwood’, which is probably ‘Larristofts and Kirkwood’. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairs near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although there may be other possibilities (it is ‘Laristofts’ in 1511 and ‘Lairis Toftis’ and ‘Lairris Toftis’ in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Falls, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower was there an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the ‘Lanerowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by the Earl of Angus in 1484. The farm was occupied by several Nixons in 1544. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braaidie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as ‘Martins tower’). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he ‘within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone’. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Elliott, son of ‘Gibbie wi the Golden Garters’, and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, reinstating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,808 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Francis Stevenson was a servant at the house in 1799. Servant Thomas Waugh, shepherd Thomas Grieve, servant Robert Scott and clogger Robert Oliver were living there in 1801. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliot’. This George Scott-Elliot was Laird in 1811 of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliot sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may Larriston Knowe (law-ris-tin-now) n. hill that is part of Whitrerope Edge, north of Whitrope-foot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join the Liddel Water near Steeleroad-end. Among its tributaries are Hirst Sike, Holm Sikes, Pipe Sike, Bught Sike, Storff Sike, Little Warrington Sike, Great Warrington Sike and Westly Sike. It has several waterfalls along its length. It passes the farmstead of Upper Larriston, where the original tower-house may have been situated, as well as Larriston lime works. The farm of Larriston Burn was once separate from that of Larriston. Airchie Elliot was there in 1590, John Nixon in 1588 and 1590/1 and Geordie Nixon in 1590, all accused of rieving (it is Lareston burne) in 1588, Larestone burne in 1595, Lariestounis in 1613, Laristoun in 1627 and ‘Larestounys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redhead – ‘See how they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild wilkin rend, While the Scots shouts ascend, Elliot of Larriston! Elliot for aye!’ [ES] (also spelled ‘Lauriston’ and ‘Lariston’; the origin is probably from the Middle English personal name ‘Lauri’ or ‘Larri’, a diminuitive of ‘Lawrence’; it occurs as ‘Larrostane’ in 1484, ‘larostanys’ in 1489, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1515/6, ‘Larestanis’ in 1516 and 1556, ‘Larestanys’ in 1516, ‘Larastanis’ in 1526, ‘Larestane’ and ‘Lawrellstane’ in 1544, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1548, ‘Lauriestone’ in 1565, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1565, ‘Lareston’ in 1595, ‘Lariestounis’ in 1613, ‘Larestoun’ in 1627 and ‘Larestonys’ in 1516 and 1556, ‘Larestanys’ in 1516, ‘Larestanys’ in 1556, ‘Larestanys’ in 1627, ‘Larestystone’ in 1613, ‘Larestounis’ in 1657, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1657, ‘Lareston’ in 1657, ‘Lariestoun’ in 1670, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1670, ‘Lareston’ in 1670, ‘Larestoun’ in 1670, ‘Larestoon’ in 1718, is still ‘Lauriston’ in 1797, ‘Larestoun’ in 1801 and ‘Laristone’ in 1821; it appears on Sandison’s c.1590 map as Ladiestoun. Airchie was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rigg’ and ‘Larristonrig’; it is Larriston ridge) in 1694 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Lime Works (law-ris-tin-lim-wurks) n. former lime manufacturory on the Larriston Burn, to the south-east of the main farm. This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 after demand from local farmers. It is labelled ‘Larriston Lime Works’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Rig (law-ris-tin-rig) n. farm in Liddesdale, to the east of Larriston farm, also called Haggiehaugh. John Elliot of Thorlieshope owned the lands (or perhaps just a ‘wadsett’ on the lands) from about the 1670s. They were among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, after Elliot went bankrupt. However, they were bought back by Elliot in 1695. John Nixon and George Armstrong were there in 1694. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £207 and ‘now called Haggiehaugh’. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rigg’ and ‘Larristonrig’; it is Larriston ridge in 1694 and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

lash an lave (lash-in-liv) adv., poet. with profusion, in abundance – ‘Drinkin’, squabblin’, lash an’ lave o’ whorin’, An’ a’ sic things, he means to be right brave at’[JoHa].

the Lasses Association Denner (thu-law-seez-aw-soo-see-uh-shin-de-nur) n. dinner organised for the partners of the Common Riding Principals and their supporters.
lassie (law-, la-see) n. a girl, young woman – ‘what a bonnie wee lassie’, ‘Delivered to Bailie Martin in name of Isa Andersson for teaching poor lassies £4 0 0’ [PR1712], ‘O, lassie dear, O, lassie fair, My heart you’ve fixed in a snare’ [JoHa], ‘O the lassie’s young and bonny, O the lassie’s dear to me’ [AlB] (diminutive of lass, implying slightly younger).

The Lassie That Works in the Mill (thu-law-see-thi’-wurkz-in-thu-mil) n. song written by Walter Peden, in a dialect that is only partly Hawick. It was performed regularly by his sons George and Jock, lost for a while, but recovered from a tape recording at the Gilded Chamber. The music was later adapted by Henry Douglas, adding 8 bars to the original 16. Ian Seeley wrote a piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ collection. It is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Henry Douglas.

lassock (la-sok) n., arch., poet. a small girl – ‘...And there’s noucht to marrow the tender grace Thatlichts the smile o’ a lassock’s face’ [WL] (diminutive form of lass).

Lasson (la-sin) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised there in 1712. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Lasten’ witnessed a baptism for Hawick merchant John Johnston in 1721.

lat (law, latw) v. to let, permit – ‘...lat be, my lad, e’en lat it be; For sae rins a’ humanity’ [DH] (it is unclear how common this has been in Hawick; cf. luit and lut).

latch needle (lawch-nee-dul) n. a needle with a small hook at the end which is closed with a hinged latch to hold the yarn in place while the loop is formed in a knitting machine, thus allowing loop formation and ‘knock-over’ to happen simultaneously. This was common on a ‘V-bed’ hand-knitting machine and is similar to a ‘bearded needle’. It was patented by a Leicester hosier in 1849.

late bailie (lā’-bā-lee) n., arch. title given to former Bailies of the Town in distinction to the ‘present bailies’.

lately (lā’-lee) adv., arch. recently, newly, not long since – ‘Wr. Scott the Beddel being laitlie dead, the minister thought convenient that John Scott son to the said deceast Walter should be admitted to supply the place’ [PR1717].

latewake (lā’-wāk) n., arch. a wake or ‘sittin up’ with a corpse.

the Latin Schuil (thu-law’-in-skil) n. another name for the Grammar Schuil, used to distinguish it from the ‘English’ or Parish School (also Laitin).

Latoun (lā-tin) n. Sir Brian (d.1545) English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Brauxholme. Their ‘bloody ledger’ boasts of destroying 192 towns, towers, barkines, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – ‘The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Laiton’, ‘Layton’, etc.).

latter-will (law-tur-wil) n., arch. a will, document setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate – ‘Followis the Legacie and other testamentary disposition setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate’ [SB1574].

Lau see Hawick Lau

lauchable (lawch-fu-bul) adj., arch. laughable – ’It was siccaw laughable thing for tae see, The skurry they a’ made tae get at the tea’ [BM1900].

lauchful (lawch-ful) adj., arch. lawful, permitted by law, legally appointe – ‘...be the said vnquhile Robert as lauchfull tutoure to me for the tym[e]’ [SB1569].

lauchit (law-chi) pp., poet. laughed – ‘An’ they laucht him til scorn’ [HSR].

lauchter (lawch-tur) n., arch. laughter – ‘Than was oor mooth fillet wi’ lauchtr, an’ our tung wi’ singin’ ...’ [HSR].

laud (lawd, lowd) v. laud (note the diphthong in the former pronunciation).

Lauder (law-dur) n. town on the Leader Water, in the former county of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original mediaeval form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thirlestane Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and until 1755 was also part of the route north via Selkirk, so it must have been a familiar stopping point for centuries of travelling Tories. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and on to the Burgess Cairn. ‘Lauder and Lauderdale’ was published by Andrew Thomson in 1903. Population (1991) 1,064 (the origin of the name is probably a corruption of the Leader Water, however, it has also been suggested to be related to the Welsh ‘llawedrog’, meaning ‘heaped’).

Lauder (law-dur) n. Adam (b.c.1790) slater in Newcastleiton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of William, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1540 he and his wife Marion Hay were given sasine of his father’s lands of Todrig by John Hay, Lord of Yester. These lands included the ‘manor and mansion thereto and pertinentes’ Also in 1540 he and his wife was Marion Hay sold a tenement to Alexander Gledstains. In 1543 he was directed to pay a sum to Katherine Gray (widow of a former holder of lands at Todrig) for her ‘terse’, but protested. In 1544 there was an agreement between him and his wife Marion Hay over lands in Selkirk pertaining to Alexander Gledstains. In 1545 he and his wife sold a tenement in Selkirk to Patrick Kelso. He was recorded as Burgess of Edinburgh in 1557. Alexander (b.1794/5) born in Smailholm, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1861 he was there farming 65 acres and employing 4 people. He was still there in 1868 His wife was Margaret and their children included Alexander and Mary. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1731. He probably married Bessie Chisholme in 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1739); Walter (b.1731); James (b.1734); Adam (b.1738); and Margaret (b.1741). He may also be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1737. Cuthbert of Todrig (15th/16th C.) convicted in 1508 of several crimes. This included stealing 2 horses from Alexander Turnbull at Braidlie, resetting and abetting with the thieves and rebels Alexander Cranston, William Oliver, Simon Turnbull and Robert Turnbull. For these crimes he was drawn and hanged and all his possessions forfeited. His brother and heir Walter is recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1528. David ( – ) local mortgage advisor and runner who won the 2003 ‘New Year Sprint’ event at Musselburgh Racecourse. Edward (14th/15th C.) cleric who held some rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale. He resigned these in favour of William Crozier in 1419.
In 1420 he was litigating with Andrew de Hawick over who held the Parish Church of Liston. At that time he already held the Archdeaconry of Lothian and had requested other benefices, despite being ‘the son of an unmarried man and an unmarried woman’. George of Whitslade (15th C.) granted the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1488. His family lands were Whitslade in Berwickshire (not the place of the same name in Ashkirk Parish). Probably the same ‘George Lauder of Quhitslaid, knight’ was recorded in a land transaction in Edinburgh in 1502. George (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with Thomas, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. Probably the same George was also mentioned in 1537 along with Richard when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Hector (15th C.) attorney for George, 4th Earl of Angus in 1456, when he accepted sasine of Ewesdale on behalf of Douglas. His name was written as ‘Ector of Lawdyr’. He was specially deputised as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1464/5 for an inquest giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffsip of Roxburgh to Archibald, son of the deceased William Douglas of Cavers. His name is recorded as ‘Hector of Lawdre’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘of Lauedyr’. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot ‘and other thieves of Braxholmie’. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Buccleuch. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including: helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, ‘Traitors of Levyn’ in a raid on ‘Quhitmur’, involvement in a raid on the ‘Pot-Loche’ of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whittlawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbulls from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthern. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as ‘in Clerklands’ when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddom House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Lauder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthern and Whittlawhouse; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitslade; and stealing cows from Traquair. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for wounding Adam Thomson in Selkirk, with Robert Scott of Stirches acting as surety. Additionally in 1502, he had remission for stealing 5 horses from several men in the Forest of Lauder, with James Scott of Ashkirk as his surety. James (15th/16th C.) younger brother of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1582 his brother Walter (who was heir to Cuthbert) appointed him as his procurator to deal with matters related to his brother’s estate. James of Carolside, ‘Beau’ (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Drycleughshielis in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in 1502, along with James Elliot and Janet Ker. The three had 7 cows stolen from them, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefices until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleughshielis. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when her goods were listed as part of a transaction involving the lands of Todrig. She is probably the Katherine Gray, recorded in connection with Todrig in the same year. She may have been wife of William of Todrig. In 1543 she was ‘spouse of the deceased . . .’ when Alexander Lauder was directed to pay her 16 merks for the ‘terce’ on a husbandland (probably in Todrig). Richard (16th C.) mentioned along with George in 1537 when they were ordered to remove themselves and their servants from Todrig. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as ‘elder’ to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. He also served as Justiciar of Lothian for the justice aires south of Scotland. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th C.) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese. He was recorded as ‘Robert de Lawedre’ in 1429 when he pleaded to be given the vicarage of Inverkeilor. In 1430 he exchanged his canonry and prebend of ‘Castelecarris’ (i.e. Castlecary near Glasgow) with James Inglis, who held the same benefice at Ashkirk. He therefore appears to have become prebend at Ashkirk. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Merch-cluche’ whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastle ‘until he redeemed himself’, i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (d.c.1526) son of Oliver. He held the estate of Muircleuch near Lauder and also the superiority of Sunderland near Selkirk. He firstly married Marion, daughter of James Pringle of Smailholm, secondly married Christine, daughter of Hugh Hamilton of Innerwick and thirdly married Janet Logan. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Robert. He is recorded in 1528/9 when he was involved in a deal with John Cranston of that Ilk, for lands in Smailholm. These lands had belonged to Oliver. He was among Border lairds summoned by the King in 1530. He was also listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme. He married Alison Cranston and had 2 sons, including Richard, who succeeded. Stephen (d.bef. 1530) Burgess of Selkirk. In about 1512 he was granted a charter by John Hay, Lord Yester, for the lands of Todrig ‘with the manor and dwelling house thereto and pertinents lying in the said barony of Olivercastell in the sheriffdom of Selkirk’. Richard Lauder was one of the witnesses, and presumably related. He witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1519. In 1526/7 he received money for lands then belonging to James Murray of Falahill. In 1527/8 he was ‘not sound in his mind but labouring in his final pains’ when he retified his testament. He was deceased in 1530 when William Scott of Harden swore he owed him ‘na mair bot ane merc’, and others swore the same one behalf of William Scott in Todrig. This was all in the presence of his widow, Margaret Lauder. His son William inherited his tenement in Selkirk in 1532. Thomas of Todrig (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aires in Selkirk in 1494/5. He had remission for his part in several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; stealing sheep from Horthorn; stealing from a poor man called Robert Gordon at Peebles ford; stealing 6 cows from Innerleithen; stealing a cow and a list of items from William Mitchell at ‘war’; stealing a skin from the Laird of Gowrie; stealing 16 head of cattle from ‘cabras-toun’; stealing cattle and sheep from Purveshill; resetting Alexander, son of Robert Turnbull; a theft from William Turnbull in Shielswood; and common theft and delivery of stolen goods before the date of his previous remission. Walter Scott of Howpasley served as his surety. He is also recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for rieving crimes; since the same Hector was later recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig, then presumably that was him. He was presumably father or elder brother of Cuthbert, who was Laird of Todrig in the early 16th century. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in 1538 along with George, when Katherine Gray had their sheep legally removed from Todrig. He is probably the Thomas listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in Selkirk in 1539/40. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh in 1620. He was witness to a charter for Goldielands, given by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. The lands of ‘Braidhaughe’ were presumably the place near Branxholme. It is possible he was the Thomas, brother of the Laird of Whitslaide who in 1618 was accused among men of the Selkirk area of illegally carrying guns. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident at ‘Todridge’. His son William was baptised in 1732. Sir Thomas Dick of Fountainhall (1784–1848) son of Sir Andrew, he was 7th Baronet of Fountainhall. He was writer of ‘The Morayshire Floods’, ‘The Wolfe of Badenoch’ and other books. He also wrote ‘Scottish Rivers’ (partly serialised in Tait’s Magazine, but not published together until 1874), which focuses...
mostly on Border rivers and contains a section on the Teviot. He was a close friend of Sir Walter Scott and a very keen angler. He was also known for promoting the ‘Vestiarium Scoticum’ (a forged manuscript about tartans), in dispute with Sir Walter. Walter (15th/16th C.) brother and heir of Cuthbert of Todrig. In 1528 he is recorded in a document in Auld Roxburgh (but preserved in the Selkirk Protocol Books) in 1528 when he made his brother James his procurator. William (d.1425/6) son of Sir Robert of Edrington and the Bass, and Edinburgh, and nephew of Sir Alan of Hatton. His mother was Annabella, and his half-brother was Alexander, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was educated in France and became Archdeacon of Lothian by 1405. He appears to have dispossessed John de Hawick from his position as Precentor of Glasgow in the period 1403–6. In 1408 he was consecrated as Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Matthew Glendonwyn. He acted as an envoy to England and France and probably helped persuade Robert, Duke of Albany, to support Martin V instead of Benedict XIII. He was appointed as Chancellor by Murdoch, Duke of Albany, and continued under James I. It is unclear if he played a prominent role in Teviotdale. However, he did extend Glasgow Cathedral, and is buried at the old parish church in Lauder. His seal was very elaborate, showing the Trinity, saints, a kneeling bishop, shields and the words ‘S’ WILLELMI DEI GRACIA EPISCOPI GLASCUENSIS’. William (d.bef. 1539) Burgess of Edinburgh, who was heir to Stephen. He was recorded as one of the officials for a document in Selkirk in 1527/8. In 1530 he was among a group of men from the Selkirk area who took goods from Moffat, but later returned them. In 1530 Patrick Murray of Falahill granted him sasine of lands in Selkirk. He may be the William who in about 1530 was heir to his grandfather John in a tenement in Selkirk. In 1532 he had a charter for Stephen’s tenement in Selkirk. A further document records how he was to receive rent for the building from Nicholas Ker and Marion Byrdon. In 1533/4 he resigned a tenement in Selkirk to Marion Notman. In 1534 he was a Burgess of Selkirk when he resigned a tenement in Selkirk. In 1535 he was ‘burgess of Edinburgh and lord of the lands of Toddyk’ when he came to the house of his tenant William Scott and ‘placing outside of a stool at the front door as is the custom in such things’ announced that William Scott should be ejected from his lands of Todrig. He is probably the William of Todrig recorded in 1537 when William Mathieson agreed to pay annual rent to him for lands in Selkirk. He was deceased in 1539 when there was an inquest for the succession of his son and heir Alexander for his lands of Todrig; Katherine Gray, wife of Hubert Maxwell was also involved, and may have been his widow. In 1540 Alexander was given sasine of his lands of Todrig. William (16th C.) listed as ‘Maister’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was owed money ‘conform to the Lairdis obligatioun’. However, it is unclear who he was, or whether he was local (formerly ‘Ladder’, ‘Lader’ and variants).

Laura Bennett’s (law-ra-be-nits) n. corner shop in the Kirkstyle, on the corner with the Howegate, during the 1940s and 50s. It had a reputation for being open for long hours — ‘... And if on the 80s we forget A often would be sen-et Ti some wee corner shop Like Laura Bennet’s’ [IWL].

the Laurels (thu-law-ruhz) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Lawrence, also sometimes spelled ‘Lawrie’.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704–83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757–83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at Langton (in Berwickshire) in 1734. There he married and had a family. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. In 1759 he acted as witness for a baptism for wright John Kay. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inveresk), who called him ‘a boundless liar’ in his diaries! He was also described thus: ‘as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories’; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight ‘with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language’ (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary’s churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggo, who died in 1792. Their children (all baptised in Langton) included: John (b.1744), who was minister at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Eves; Cumberland Alex (b.1746); Mary (b.1748); and Elizabeth (b.1751). He could be the James born to John and Elizabeth Whitehead in Cockburnspath in 1707 – ‘Lawrie, that honest man o’ God, Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frael heaven direct because o’sin, Collected folk the kirk within’ [AD].

John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, he was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie.

He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as ‘Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel’. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name. In 1772 he was recorded as ‘Preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Lookup, who probably lived in the upper Teviot valley. He is probably the ‘Mr’ John who witnessed a baptism in 1776 for George Balmer. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834, aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieut. David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (b.c.1833) baker at 39 High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included: David; Adam; Walter; and Euphemia. Walter (1858–1923) son of baker Walter. He was also a baker, based at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. Additionally, he produced and sold aerated waters. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He was living at 6 Back Raw in 1881 and at 23 North Bridge Street at the time of his death. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written ‘Lourie’ and ‘Lourie’; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (thu-law-ree-brig) n. footbridge across the Teviot at the Spetch in Wilton Lodge Park, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It was named after local businessman Walter Laurie, who left money for the building of a bridge and shelter. It is near here that the riders stop to sing ‘Teribus’ on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week, the Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of...

Laurie’s Den (law-rez-den) n. area to the north of Faw Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a medieval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie’s Denn).

the Laurie Shelter (thu-law-reez-sheul’-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls.

Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.’ on the south side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirkliston. As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswood) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chaplain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of Episcopacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhilts to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott and William Scott in Robertson Parish in 1681. Jean (19th C.) name (or possibly nickname) for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Mondie, Jock Gray and a‘; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI]. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Fenwick. Rev. John (1791–1875) coming from Linlithgow West, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed as a preacher of the Associate Presbytery of Falkirk. He became the third minister of Newcastle Burgher Kirk in 1812. He was described as ‘very young and blooming’ when he started and ‘never seemed to grow older or less comely’. He was thus an object of much attention among local farmers with marriageable daughters. He was said to be a ‘handsome and vigorous preacher’ who became known as ‘the Lion of Liddesdale’. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick.

He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret’s, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleithen in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters; in 1841 she was living with her son-in-law George Wilson and she died in 1847. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bonnar, architect in Dunfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Kames’ in 1632 when along with several others he feued Westbarns (near Belse) from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868); Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874).

William (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Linton in Robertson in 1801.

Lawrie (law-ree, low-ree) n. David (b.c.1770s) labourer in Denholm, according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. David (18th/19th C.) from Glasgow, he was fifer to Capt. Campbell of the 91st Regiment. He used to play for the recruiting party, which paraded through Hawick on market days in the early part of the 19th century. In 1809 he offered to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet, but was forbidden by his Captain. James (18th C.) owner of lands referred to as ‘Lawrie’s Denn’, located around Oliver Crescent and Oliver Place. He may have been the ‘John Lawrie’ referred to by Robert Wilson as one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. Peter (1828–1902) son of William, he was a stockmaker in Hawick. He married Jane, daughter of Ebenezer Wemyss and Janet Laidlaw. In 1853 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tarnagulla, where gold had been found. There are many descendants in the area of Victoria today, using the spelling ‘Laurie’. Thomas (18th C.) listed at ‘Danston Mill’ in Lilliesleaf Parish when he paid the cart tax in 1785. ‘Danston’ is presumably Dunstane. William (b.c.1797) stockmaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Pasley (or Paisley), who had previously been married to Frederick Diener. Their children were: Peter, a stockmaking; Margaret, who married Robert Richardson; Thomas, who was a cabinet-maker’s apprentice; and an infant son who died in 1822. He may be the same as the William Lawrie who provided entertainment on the ‘slack rope’ as part of the efforts to raise money for strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ (see also Laurie and Lowrie).

Lawrie’s Denn (law-rez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood’s 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as ‘Laurie’s Yard’ and ‘Laurie’s Den’ in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for ‘wooded hollow’ (also written ‘Laurie’s Den’).

Lawrie’s Flat (law-rez-flow) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than ‘Lawrie’s Den’.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as ‘Lawis’ on the 1594 list of those held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between ‘Langhaugh’ and ‘Tofts’, suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ermil don (probably around the modern Arnton Fell). ‘Laws superior’ is valued at 12 shillings and ‘Laws inferior’ as 7 shillings, as well as ‘Locus Ricardi de Lawis’ (8 shillings), ‘Locus Roberti de Lawis’ (8 shillings 4 pence) and ‘Locus Ennie de Lawis’ (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshill, which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and associated with Law’s Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as ‘the Hill’, which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is ‘Leys’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Sangtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchellhill; the farmouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.
Lawson, Bailie Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916), watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. He donated the Cornet’s Silver Challenge Cup. He supplied a 7-day clock (in a mahogany case) for Watson’s Watch House in about 1882. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife’s name was Catherine. His daughter Lilley unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901. He was presented with a silver spade when he planted a tree in the Park to commemorate the Coronation in 1902 – ‘... There to answer Bailie Lawson Aboot every wound and scar’ [WE]. Rev. George (1784/5–1849) from Selkirk, he was the first minister of Galshiel Burgher Kirk from 1806 and Selkirk First Secession Kirk from 1837. His ‘Sermons to the Aged’ was published in Hawick in 1810. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Huntly and their daughter Betty was baptised in 1740. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Walter was baptised in 1743. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teinside. He married Margaret Scoon, in Roberton Parish in 1739; she may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). His children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Robertson Parishes. He was probably also the workman whose son William (b.1742) was baptised in Hawick, with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scoon and witnesses John Elliot at Goldielands and Robert Scott at Crumhaugh. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He is probably the Robert who married Agnes Grieve in Roberton in 1772. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Robert (18th C.) married Esther Scott in 1780, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes. Robert (b.c.1770s) labourer at Hummelknowes according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the Robert, son of William, who was baptised in Roberton in 1775. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Curren in Hawick Parish in 1851. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded on the amended ballot list for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1799. He was a servant...
to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades starting about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is said to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797 and James Sorbie was a labourer there in 1799. William Graham was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is ‘Lawstone’ in 1821, ‘Lawstown’ in 1838 and 1851 and ‘Lawstone’ in 1799; it appears as ‘Lawston’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Lawyer (\textit{thu-law-yur}) \textit{n.} nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

Lawyhaugh (\textit{law-ee-hawd}) \textit{n.} possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Lawyhalch’, with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from ‘Langhalgh’, which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

\textit{lay} (\textit{lä}) \textit{n.}, arch. the moveable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – ‘Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle flew From end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enow’ [JCG].

\textit{layne} (\textit{lān}) \textit{v.}, poet. to conceal, keep secret – ‘Its I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye! I winna layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain’s kye, In scorn of a’ his men and he’ [T].

\textbf{The Lay of the Last Minstrel} (\textit{thu-lā-ov-thu-lawst-nius-trul}) \textit{n.} narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branxholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion William of Deloraine is dispatched to get the mystic book of Michael Scott from Melrose Abbey, but Deloraine is injured by Cranstoun on his return and the book falls into the hands of Cranston’s dwarf retainer. The dwarf finds the book and learns a spell of illusion from it, which he uses to lure the young heir of Branxholme into the woods, where he is later captured by the Englishman Lord Dacre. Dacre comes with a force to Branxholme demanding Deloraine in exchange for the boy. But the Lady of Branxholme makes a deal whereby Deloraine will fight the English champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The goblin page transforms Cranston into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branxholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lead (led) v., arch. to convey a cart, carry peats etc. – ‘May it therfor please yow to grant your petitioner freedom and libertie as to cast, win, and lead, make in and away take of your Cominne Muire of Havieck als many divots as will whatch his said stable ...’[BR1704], ‘...upon ane missive letter from the laird of Gladstains, the bailies and council gave liberty to him to cast, win, and lead some divots off the common’[BR1707], ‘...for him to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to anie who would employ him’[PR1723], ‘Paid James Heardye for liding 600 difeits to tolboothe, 1 10 0’[BR1739], ‘...and the deponent, by his father’s orders, assisted in leading said timber, which was brought to the common and laid down at the stack above the Woolaw well’[DCW1765], ‘...the Hawick beasts seldom touched it, because of the distance, unless when they were leading their peats or turfs’[C&L].

Leadbetter (led-be’-ur) n. Alan Edmonstone Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Artillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gallipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was leader

born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect’s practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renovations for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scotland. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule Kirk. Their children were James Greenshields (solicitor), John Usher and Maj. Alan Edmonstone (killed in WWI), Mary Balmer and Jean Gillespie.

Leaderfit (lee-dur-fit) n. Leaderfoot, a village just east of Melrose, with a modern bridge over the Tweed for the A68, together with the elegant 1779–80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Triportium’.

Leadhouse (led-hows) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Bailie Robert Hardie and merchant William Dickson. This surname is otherwise unknown in the area.

leadin (lee-din) n., arch. the grain or other crops carted in from the fields – ‘Fenwick had a happy knack of turning up on such occasions as clampings and hay leadings’ [BM1907], ‘I finished ma schooling at Kirkton an startit work on the farm drivin a one horse wi a cart … for feedin sheep an cartin leadin in for cattle turnips’ [TH] (see lead).

Leafauld (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leaugh, Langhaugh and Hartsghart. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le faulde’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Eliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

leafs (leefs) n., pl. leaves – ‘…The banes o’ murderers an’ thieves, An’ bandit leaders, Porcupine quills, an’ wither leafs, Frac Leb’non’s cedars’ [JoHa], ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an bevvert i the simmer breeze’ [ECS], ‘…keekin throwe atween the leafs …’ [ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leaugh (lee-hawf) n. farmhouse on the Hermitage Water, just south of the Hartsgarth Bridge. Across the road there is the remains of what was once a public right of way and probably the main road through the valley until the 18th century. The name was once also ‘Leauch’. It is ‘Layhalcht’ in 1479 when granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with ‘Carolschelis’ and ‘hartsghart’. The Elliots held it, along with Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Leafauld, through the 16th century and into the early 17th. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. It was possessed by Will Armstrong in 1632. It was valued (along with Greenholm) in 1678 at about £137. John ‘Weily’ was there in 1694. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and still valued along with Greenholm at £136 15s 8d. John Blacklock was there in at least 1799–1801. Robert Elliot and John Blacklock were both there in 1837. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in the 1840s. The farm was ravaged by the flood of 1846. Thomas and William Kyle were there in 1868. By 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm at Leaugh Holm was destroyed in the great flood of 1846 (it is ‘layhauch’ in 1489, ‘Layhauch’ in 1526, ‘Layheuch’ in 1537/8, ‘leyhauch’ in 1613, ‘Leyhauche’ in about 1624, ‘Lehuaiche’ in 1632, ‘Layheuch’ in about 1640, ‘Lehua’ in 1694 and ‘Leehaugh’ in 1797, 1811 and 1841; it is ‘Leehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).
Leaheads Dyke

Leaheads Dyke (lee-heedz-dik) n. cottage in Castleton Parish, between the main road and the river, between Leaheads and Redheugh farms. Arthur Moffat was farmer there in 1861.

Leaheid Loch (lee-heed-loch) n. Leahead Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintyknowe, also called Dykeneuk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leaheads (lee-heedz) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. It was a tenanted farm belonging to the Scotts of Whitehaugh in the 18th century. Two orphans called Miller were there in 1703. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. There was an unnamed death there in 1734. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leehead’ in 1734, ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leahead’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Lee heads’ on the 1764 map of Wilton Common and is ‘Leaheads’ on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Leaheads Dyke (lee-heedz-dik) n. ditch or turf wall at Leaheads. It is mentioned in 1765 as part of the boundary of Wilton Common.

leal (leel) adj., arch., poet. faithful, loyal, true – ‘Now see that ye do treat him well. And shew yourself both kind and leal’ [BY], ‘...the leal an’ aefauld loe thee’ [HSR], ‘When lovely, light-hearted, and leal, and young, I’ve seen the cloud o’er thy beauty flung’ [HSR], ‘He’s weel an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home ...’ [JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair ...’ [TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow. Far from Hawick, leal and kind ...’ [TCh], ‘...At his leal auld chieftain’s word’ [JEDM], ‘...A laddie kind and leal’ [??], ‘...The leal hands haud oot a wel-leal hand’ [CBP1584].

leally (leel-lee) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – ‘...and the faith in my body leely and treuly bindis and oblisis me til a noble and honorabil man, William Douglas of Drumlanrig’ [SB1470], ‘...wee shall leelie and treelie keip this our bonde for all quarrells, bloods and goods ...’ [CBP1584].

lealest (leel-ist) adj., poet. most loyal – ‘O he was the lord o’ the keenest sword, And he was the lord o’ the lealest love’ [JTe].

lealthfu’ (leelth-foo) adj., poet. loyal, staunch – ‘Her lealthfu’ heart’ [HSR].

leam (leem) v., poet. to gleam, flash – ‘But it never kent the glorie That leamed frae flags to riggin ...’ [WL], n., poet. a gleam, flash, glow, radiance – ‘And the brunstane leme came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail’ [JTe], ‘...its kools ar kools o’ fire, whilk hae ane maist vee-ment leme’ [HSR], ‘...Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair’ [DH] (also written ‘leme’).

Lean Yeddie Gibson (leen-yee-dee-gib-sin) n. song of the mid 19th century, written probably by William Tait and Andrew Cameron, with help from Adam Brown and set to music by Walter Davidson. It is about an enthusiastic Hawick angler who died while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s.

Leap Hill

Leaphill' in 1753). Leap Hill (lee-hill) n. hill along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319 m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, part of the lands owned by George Scott of Blindhaugh in 1544. In that year George’s 3rd son William was assigned ‘all and haill the leip hill langhoup medo and por- ciones of land about the burn syd callit lainghoup burn’, occupied by Walter Watson. It was owned by the Scotts of Woll in the early 17th century and the Laings in the 18th century. Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall had a sasine for the lands (and others in Ashkirk Parish) in 1753; he also had a sasine in 1779. The land passed to the Cochranes of Ashkirk in 1795. It was valued at £140 in 1643 and owned by Thomas Scott; the teinds were valued (along with Woll, Castleside and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. Part was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borrowbank in 1788 (as still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Elliot Lockhart by 1874, still valued at £143 (it is ‘Leiphill’ in 1609, 1643 and 1788 and ‘Leaphill’ in 1753).
Leap Hill

Leap Hill \((\text{leeple-hil})\) \(n\). hill between Whitrope Cottages and the Maidens, reaching a height of 472 m (1544 feet). It is often referred to as simply ‘the Leap’ and was formerly called ‘Leap Steel’. There is a linear earthwork running west from the western slopes of the hill, now hard to make out, but perhaps once running as far as the head of the Harwood Burn (it is marked ‘Lyipe’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and has its modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Leap Linn Craig \((\text{leeple-lin-krâg})\) \(n\). small stream running from Shielwood Loch to the Ale Water. It is marked on a 1767 map of Shielwood farm, but absent from modern maps.

the Leap Linns \((\text{thu-leeple-lin-z})\) \(n\). popular name for a narrow gorge through which the Ale Water flows, near Leap Hill, just south-west of Shielwood farm. A pool there was sometimes a summer swimming spot, and for a while this area was a spot for locals to have summer picnics. On an eastern spur of Leap Hill there, there are the remains of a settlement, about 100 m by 45 m, and contains evidence of a hut circle and 2 enclosures, probably later sheepfolds (the name is probably the ‘de Lepes intra Askirke et Whitesalde in Aine’, i.e. between Ashkirk and Whiteslade, mentioned in a charter of the late 12th century; the ‘linns’ probably refers to the narrow gorge there, and not to a waterfall; it is marked ‘Leap Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Leapsteal \((\text{leeple-stool})\) \(n\). former name for an area around the Leap Burn (described as part of the Catrail’s course, between the Maidens and Robert’s Linn, in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ (1821), Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ and contemporary descriptions).

lear \((\text{leeer})\) \(n., \text{arch.}, \text{poet.} \text{ learning – ‘… For want o’ braith or lear’ [DH], ‘What’s this? His lear wad flype The wisdom o’ the day!’ [WL], v. to learn, teach (also lair).}

Learmonth \((\text{leeer-munth})\) \(n\). Archibald (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1742 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children included Robert (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1746). Perhaps he is the same as Archibald ‘Lernment’ at Deanhead, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. Henry (19th/20th C.) son of Henry. He was Cornet in 1882, with his own father serving as Acting Father. He was a ‘powerloom turner’, but later farmed at Greenbraehead, and then emigrated to America. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Laurence and Thomas were listed right after him. William, son of James, who was called later, may also have been his son. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Perhaps the same ‘Jacobum Lermoutht’ was recorded in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Herpburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale; many of the other men were relatively local. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in deeds of 1624 and 1625. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Govenlock and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1683. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1710 and Whitfield in 1712. His children included: Robert (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1712). James Pringle, J.P., Manager of the British Linen Bank in Newcastleton in the mid-20th century. He lived at the Bank House and was first Treasurer of the village hall committee. John (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Mains’ in Roberton Parish in 1717, 1721, 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. He is probably the John who married Isobel Tinlin in Roberton in 1716. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded living at ‘Mosspalgreen’ in 1755. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1755). Perhaps the couple with the same names were in Canonbie in 1766 when an unnamed child of theirs was baptised. John (d.beft. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. John (b.c.1770s) servant at ‘Stobsden’ according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance.
Robert (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falsyde in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickehill in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Roberton in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Roberton in 1726, may also be his son. Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Anderson. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they ‘did accommodate married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they cursing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night’, this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was further cited for ‘allowing persons for meeting in his house for playing att cards’. After promising to no longer allow people to come to his house for gambling, the Beadle was instructed to check on him from time to time, this possibly ending the practice. He may have been the Robert born in Hawick to James and Helen Gowenlock. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Martin in Hobkirk Parish in 1731. His children included Walter (b.1732), John (b.1736) and Robert (b.1736). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wait and their unnamed child was baptised in 1763. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Hawick in 1736. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was at Hallrule in 1751. His children included: John (b.1751); and Andrew (b.1755). Simon (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as ‘Thoma Lermont’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James and Laurence were also listed, and so they were surely related. All 3 were again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Bramholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Lermont, callit Lard of that Ilk’. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘Thomas Leirmont’ in the 1562 dispute over lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. Probably a related Thomas ‘Leirmouth’ is recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was at Mains. He was surely related to John, who was at Mains at the same time. In 1726 he married Margaret Inglis, also from Roberton. His children included Isobel (b.1727) and Isobel (again, b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Riddell in 1730 and their children included William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Thomas and John Irvine. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of James, who may have been the same James called earlier at the 1493 court. He was cited again at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as gardener at Whitslade in 1698. His wife was a Brunton and their children included Isobel (b.1698). Perhaps the same William also married Isobel Scott and had further children Janet (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1703) (also spelled ‘Larment’, ‘Larmond’, ‘Larmont’, ‘Learnmont’, ‘Leirment’, ‘Lerment’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lernont’, ‘Lermouth’, ‘Lormon’ and variants).

lease (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – ‘In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the ‘lease’ at the end of each gang or course in warping … ’ [BCM1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – ‘Ti lease yairn’ [GW].

leasehold (lees-hawd) n. leasehold – ‘The trinnle o’ pule and stream … the lost lease-haud o’ youth … ’ [DH].

leases (lee-seez) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a ‘tack’.

leasur (lee-zur) n., arch. leisure – ‘Bot the season now confining us to our houses and giving us more leasur to mind and attend thes domesticke affairs . . .’ [BR1692 laishur].

leave (leev) n., arch. dismissal, permission to leave, playtime at school – ‘The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave, gaed . . . rinnin aboot’ [ECS].

leazle (lee-ul) v., poet. to exert – ‘. . . nether do I leazle mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle mat- ters, or in things ower heich for me’ [HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a misprint for ‘bazle’, a variant of ‘baissle’).

Leche (le-sh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Haweyk, near the En- lish march, which on account of wars and pesti- lences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamer- lain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechi’ who was ‘vicar-general in spir- ituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranagd the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glenconyn. In 1378 his surname is transcribed ‘Lethe’ when there was a Papal decree to provide him with a Canonry of Dunkeld, ‘notwithstanding that he holds a canonry of Glasgow and the prebend of Rufen [Ruthven] and is said to have obtained the parish church of Hawyk, Glasgow diocese’. He also held the Church of Bothwell, which was vacant after his death and erected nito a collegiate church in 1398 at the re- quest of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Patrick (14th/15th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to John, who held the living of Hawick Church. He was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and be- fore 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444–60. In 1425 he requested from the Pope the Canonry and Prebend of Guthrie, when made void by William de Hawick. He was also in 1426 involved in litigation with William Crozier, Archdeacon of Teviotdale (also spelled ‘Lechi’, ‘Lethe’, ‘Liche’ and other variants and possibly equivalent to ‘Lethi’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by rob- bers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apolo- gies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sprouston and their children included: Henry (1736– 67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slitrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scrip- ture in church – ‘. . . those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent . . . and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lec- tors, were disjoined . . . ’ [PR1713].

ledder (le-dur) n. a ladder – ‘. . . As he spiels up and doon his ledder o sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], ‘Hei’s often swung frae scaffolds and faen frae ledders’ [IWL] (see also the older lether).

leddy (le-dee) n., arch. a lady, female landowner or wife of landowner – ‘. . . Babie needna be ashamed to haud up her face wi’ e’er a leddy i’ the land’ [JT], ‘. . . her blessings on Leddie Elliot were both loud and long . . . ’ [RM], ‘. . . But now I was ledy o houses an’ land’ [JT], ‘Hooray for Verter’s famous Well, An’ Tamson’s bonnie leddy’ [VV], ‘And we’ll hing thegether like burrs, As lang as oor heads we hain, For his Leddy has tabled aa there was nane to marrow Auld Harden’s

led ferm (led-fern) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led farm along with Billiholm . . . ’ [RB].

lee (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘. . . As near’s I can tell’t, without telling a lee’ [JoHa], ‘. . . But rather wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht, To drap what they ken is a lee’ [WFC], v. to lie – ‘. . . An neckle mair, if I should mention, Ye’d swear I lee’ [JoHa], ‘Let the leein’ lipps be putten til seellence, whilk speik sadlie . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Thou loeist ill mair nor guid, an’ leein’ retchir nor til speik righteousniss’ [HSR] (cf. the locally more common lei).

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (15th C.) probably born in Hownam Parish, son of John ‘Lee’s’ and Isabel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; and George, and Jessie. The first 5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O’Connell Street on Pigot’s 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWII. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John.

John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberti de Lee’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. William is also listed, before him and so probably related. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Old Jedburgh farm. In 1541 his widow Agnes was recorded as tenant of the half farm, with Gilbert (surely a relative) in the other half. William (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Robert, who was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of ‘Auld Jedburgh’ according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

leear (lee-ur) n., poet. a liar – ‘I said in my hæste, A’ men ar leears’ [HSR] (cf. leiar).

leeberal (lee-bu-rul) adj. liberal – ‘The rantin’ sangs, the leeberal drams, An’ lashins o’ bitter yill’ [RM], relating to the Liberal Party – ‘I’ve aye voted Leeberal, the Tories I ban; I’ll vote Leebeal again, Mr. Elliot’s my man’ [JCG].

the Leeberal Club (thu-lee-bu-rul-klub) n. Hawick Liberal Club, being a political and social club connected with the Liberal Party. The premises stood at the corner of the High Street and Brougham Place, and were built in 1894 on the site of Milligan’s the cabinet-makers. The architect was J.P. Alison (with help by apprentice Alexander Inglis). It is a prominent L-shaped building with Renaissance detailing and a prominent 3-storey bay window. The club went through periods of financial difficulty, with parts of the building being let for other purposes. It closed in the late 1990s and re-opened as Hawick Sports and Social Club. However, the building has been involved in an ownership dispute, and its future remains uncertain. The building is marked with a plaque commemorating the laying of the foundation stone.

Leecroft (lee-kroft) n. former name for lands in Hawick Parish. The location is not known. John Davidson was living there in 1801.

leed (lee-ed) adj., n. lead – ‘he was holt over the heid wi a pipe made o leecd’, ‘But, oh! the herd that’s in the clay, And cauld as leed’: ‘He worships her the lee lang day teaches he’ [CPM], ‘And the lee-lang day night she had turned and slouched’, ‘He was hut ower the fireplace wi’ a duster v. to coat with lead paint – ‘Ee gaun ower the fireplace wi’ a duster’ [AY], ‘But oor mothers hed a black leeded grate’ [AY] – ‘Croochin wi scaly claws lockit byndis and oblissis me to lounge, slouch, walk slouchingly.’

lee-fi (lee-fi) adj., arch. lawful – ‘...in all honest, gude and lefful querelis agains all men ...’ [SB1527], ‘And thatfor I, the said Walter Scot of Brauxheme ... byndis and obllis me to fortifie, maneine, and defend the said Robert Scot of Aalanhauch ... in all and sindrie their gude, iust, and leffull actionis ...’ [SB1585], adj., poet. compassionate, kind-hearted – ‘Awa, then, wi’ yer leefu’ says – ‘We’ll hug oor doxies as oor wont was’ [JoHa] (there are spelling variants).

lee-lang (lee-lawng) adj., arch. live-long, the whole – ‘There is a preacher in our chapel, Fala, &c. And a’ the lee lang day teaches he ...’ [CPM], ‘...And the lee long night she had turned and sicht, But her ailments wadna name’ [JTe], ‘...the lee-lang nicht mak’ I my bed til soon’ [HSR], ‘At nicht A’inn waukrife, an’ aft the lee-lang simmer’s day ...’ [WFC], ‘...He worships her the lee lang day. le-en hoor (lee-in-oor) n., arch. literally ‘eleven hour’, a mean taken at 11 a.m., usually by workers or children – ‘A guid ‘le-en hour’ [JoHo] (see also eleeven hoors).

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scotts of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William ‘in Lees’ was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721–35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. Robert Scott in Lees died in 1738. George Graham was there in the period 1744–47, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Charles Scott was there in 1765. Alexander Somerville was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written ‘Lies’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Lees see Laws

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlston, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also be his children. John (18th/19th C.) servant in Longnewton Mill, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Leys’ (also written ‘Lies’ and ‘Leys’).

The Lees (leen-leez) n. mansion house near Coldstream, built around 1770 for the Pringles and destroyed in 1975. It was then peculiarly converted into a circular house.

Leet (lee‘, leet) n., arch. a list of candidates – ‘The said daym with the consent of the bailies and council of the said bruche of Hawick, the persones underamet were put in the leett for chusing of the bailies for ane yeer to cum . . .'[BR1638], ‘. . .two magistrates, elected annually by the burgesses from a leet of six drawn up by the Council'[BR], ‘. . .being for this yeare in the leett for careing of the colour or pencell, John Robson was, by pluralitie of votes, elected and chosen Coronett'[BR1711], ‘. . .and the minister nominated for a leet Bailie Purdom, Francis Ruecastle, and John Turnbull . . .'[PR1725], ‘That it was lawful to the other burgesses to propose and give the leets of persons to be chosen'[BR1778], ‘There was the Cornet’s leets, enumerating his own circle of acquaintances, and there was the ‘muckle leet’, prepared by the Cornet in consultation with his immediate associates’[WSR], ‘. . .electeet thre a leet o’ five candidates’[BW1979], v. to nominate to be on a short-list – ‘John Robsone, William Gardener, and John Hardie, merchands; George Rennicke, flucher; and John Trumble, couper, being leytedt for careing the colour . . .’[BR1710] (spelled ‘leit’, ‘leitt’, ‘leyt’, etc.; this word used as far back as Burgh Records go; see also short-leet).

Legerwood (le-jun-wud) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) smith at the Forkins, also known as the ‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Ligertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie in 1699 and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Roberton, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Ligertwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Liddgertwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Lichhardwood’ and even ‘Lizarzhide’).
Leggat (le-ga’) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Archibald (b.1716), William (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1720). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish whose son Gideon was baptised in 1722. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a secceder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maidservant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’. Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant in New...
York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whip-maker in Hawick. He is probably the apprentice to saddler John Tudhope recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in Hawick in 1799. He may also be the saddler at Howdenburn recorded on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810 (although this could be the daughter of the older Andrew, born in Ashkirk in 1780). He may be the son of Andrew baptised in Wilton in 1779. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1750); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722. Gideon (b.c.1770s) cooper in Denholm according to the list for the Militia ballot in Cavers Parish in 1799. John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. Also in 1797 he was recorded as servant at Woll on the list of men of Ashkirk Parish who were balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as ‘independent’ in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802. Rev. Robert (1861–1925) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry and died at his home in Springburn, Glasgow. William ‘Willie’ or ‘Wullie’ (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauld Mill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog’s ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser’s death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott’s wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he ‘cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent’.

Leggeet (le-gie’, -gi’) pp., adj. legged – ‘...on the Vertish Hill Sports Committee since Moses and Aaron won the threi-leggeet race’ [IWL].

Leggums (le-gum) n., pl., arch. leggings – ‘...the motor dreiver, trig in eis ticht leggums’ [ECS], ‘A per o’ leggums’ [GW] (also ‘leggums’).

The Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O’Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O’Connell Street, which had been the ‘Central Rooms’ or Johnstone’s tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the ‘Royal’ title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Liddles was the first enrolled member. The Club published the ‘Hawick Pictorials’ 1939–59. It also helped found a football team in 1953, started by Ronnie Telfer. The Club closed in 1997, with the clubrooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastleton, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

the Legion (thu-lee-jin) n. Hawick British Legion Football Club, an amateur football team, originally sponsored by the Legion club, being founded with the aid of a donation in 1953. The club has had many premises and is now located in Princes Street.

Leishman (lee-sh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have amazed Catherine and had children including Robert. Robert (b.c.1812/3) Hawick hosiery traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Bucceleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Margaret, and their children included James, Catherine, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’. Robert ‘Bert’ (1896/7–1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgreen. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmania.
Leith

Leithman Place (leesh-min-plis) n. part of Burnfoot, built in two phases, beginning in 1957. It is a dead-end street off Ruberslaw Road and was named after Bert Leishman.

leister (lee-stur) n. a spear with three or more prongs used for fishing – ‘Wi’ their nets and their leisters, their bowats and gegs ...’ [UB]. ‘In my youth, when ‘leisters’ were not illegal, or at least when their use was winked at by the powers that were ...’ [RB], v. to fish with a leister – ‘... when law allowed the leistering of salmon ...’ [RM] (probably from Old Norse; some old examples exist in the Museum).

the Leisure Centre (thu-leesh-bur-sen'-jur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squash courts, with an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch (leech) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He was then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smailholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigend about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith (leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leithed (leeth-heed, lut-heed) n. (Leithead) Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as workman in Goldielands in 1723, ‘in Crumhaugh’ in 1725 and weaver in Crumhaugh in 1726. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, workman in Goldielands. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. Their children included: Isobel (b.1726); an unnamed child (b.1728); Walter (b.1729); and Isobel (again, 1732). The 1723 baptism was witnessed by fleshers Robert Deans and George Renwick, the 1726 one by William Elliot and John Scott, the 1728 one by John Elliot and William Elliot (probably the tenants at Goldielands and Crumhaugh) and the 1729 by Rev. Charles Telfer and another Andrew. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. He could be the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in 1772 for Robert and for Walter in and in 1774 (along with Robert) for John. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for the other Andrew in 1729. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included: Robert (b.1742); Andrew (b.1747); and Margaret (b.1759). David (17th C.) resident of ‘Crackuool’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same David married Janet Shiel with their daughter Agnes baptised in 1690, and witness Robert Pringle and James (probably a relative). David (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Wight and their son David was baptised in 1727. Gladstones (b.1744) local labourer, son of William. He married Helen Hall and their children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Betty (b.1769); Helen (b.1774); Gilbert (b.1776); Janet (b.1777); and another Janet (b.1786/7), who married shepherd and carrier Adam Scott. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-end of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Brieryards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Outdoor Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Nichol and their children included: James (b.1704); and William (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Andrew Jardine. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism in 1725 in Hawick for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Flex. James (17th/18th C.) resident ofOrmiston who married Janet Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1708. Helen (b.1710), baptised in Cavers, was probably his child. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1705 when his son William was baptised in Cavers. James (17th/18th C.) farm worker in the Borthwick valley. He was a servant to James Grieve in Todshawhaugh in 1714 and resident in Milsington in 1717 and 1725. He married Bessie Riddell in 1714, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Robertson Parishes; his wife was described as a servant to Andrew Ogilvie of Newlands (who lived at Brauxholmie). His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included William (b.1715), Jean (b.1717) and an unnamed child (b.1725). He is probably also the James recorded at Todshawhill in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw in 1723. He married Janet (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Blakie and their son ‘Gledstines’ was baptised in 1775. He may have been a brother of Gladstains. James (19th C.) married Helen Sutherland in Wilton Parish in 1847. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.2003) Acting Father in 1960. In 1961 he carried the Flag again, since that year’s Acting Father, Tom Crosbie, had broken his leg. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 and 1716. His children probably included: Andrew (b.1696); William (b.1702); John (b.1713); and Robert (b.1716). Perhaps the same John was at Whitfield in 1698 when his son William was baptised in Wilton; the witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Katherine Thomson and their children included: Jane (b.1767); John (b.1770); Jane (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); and Andrew (b.1777). The witnesses in 1774 were Andrew and Robert (who were surely close relatives). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Mitchellill and their children included John (b.1786), Mary (b.1787), William (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794). John (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. He was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in the Denholm area. He was involved in the trip to the summit of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells met to resolve a boundary dispute over dinner. He allowed the cart to jolt, resulting in George Hunter (of the Fleece Inn) to come closest in his life to cursing! He may be the John of the Cross Wynd whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1811. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (1781–1843) born at Shankend, son of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessie Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather’s Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier Jphn of the Cross Wynd. Richard (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1771. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He was listed in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish’ and was still on the list in 1801. He married Elizabeth Aitkin and their children included: Mary (b.1802); Robert (b.1805); James (b.1807); William (b.1809); John Stott (b.1811); Isabel (b.1814); and David (b.c.1818). Robert (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is probably the Robert who (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism in 1774 for John. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Andrew (b.1770) and Isabel (b.1772). The witnesses in 1772 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Alexander Bunn. He is probably the Robert whose wife was buried in Hawick in 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witness were John and Walter, who were surely his close relatives. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Tudhope in 1767. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798. Robert (18th/19th C.) described as ‘R. Leithhead o’ the Green’. He may be the market gardener who was father to ‘Tibbie o the Green’. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the ‘rebel’ party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Haliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frame-worker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isobel (b.1790), ‘Tibbie o the Green’; Agnes (b.1792); Margaret (b.c.1796), who married George Wilson; and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother ‘at the green’ died in 1782. He is probably the stocking-maker Robert whose unnamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archaeological Society with the flag from the ‘Wasla Water’ party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier ‘R. Leithhead o’ the Green’ who had been involved on the ‘rebel’ side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitkin in 1805. Samuel (b.c.1780) journeyman mason in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He married Margaret Stirling and their children included Robert (b.1802) and James (b.1804). Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Ker of Bewlie. He is recorded in 1622, along with Ker and other servants of his when there was a complaint by George of Newhall that they tried to find him to kill him, but instead attacked his servants and later attacked him with drawn weapons. Not appearing, they were all denounced as rebels. Thomas (18th C.) married Jane Scoon in Robertson Parish in 1788. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marjory Thomson and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772. The witnesses were Andrew (surely related to him) and Andrew Thomson (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Easton and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1672. William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same William married Isobel Scott and had a son Walter baptised in Ashkirk in 1691. The baptismal witnesses were Robert and William Scott (probably related to his wife). William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th C.) farmer in Cavers Parish. He is recorded as deceased in 1708 when his daughter Margaret married Alexander Grib in Edinburgh. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a ‘supernumerary marriage’, i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. Their children included Janet (b.1715) and Jean (b.1717), both baptised in Hawick. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Meikle Whitlaw and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1741 he was recorded as resident at Whitlawhaugh. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He married Bessy Gledstaines, and their children, born in Hawick Parish, included: John (b.1737); Gledstaines (or Gladstone, b.1741), an unusual forename, presumably from his mother’s maiden name; and Janet (b.1743). The witnesses in 1741 were carrier John Ruecastle and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Ruecastle and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Probable the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in Whitlaw in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded living at Orchard in 1749. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included John (b.1743), Richard (b.1745) and Robert (b.1749). William (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was probably related to John, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf (also spelled ‘Leathhead’, ‘Leiththeide’, ‘Leithhead’, ‘Lethead’, ‘Lithead’ and ‘Lithhead’).

leman (le-man) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – ‘HE would have wooed the gentle may To be his light leman’ [JTe], ‘Ther ar thriescoor queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an’ mays wuthowten nummer’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (len-pi-law) n. village in north-eastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being ‘waste’, but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the ‘tacks’ of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘lempe du hlaw’, meaning ‘limpet-shaped hill’; it first occurs as ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1426, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1463, ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1484, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1517, and ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1528 and 1553/4).

leper squint (le-pur-skwun) n., arch. a leper’s squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written ‘leper’s’ or ‘lepers’ ’).

the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some credence to the idea that there was once a leper’s hospital there. It was also known as ‘the Kirkyaired Well’, and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-see) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Mediæval Europe, where it is was seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the 11th century. Robert the Bruce is suggested to have died of the disease in 1329, and John Turnbull of Minto may have died from it about 1425 (causing a dispute over his lands). The hospital at Spittal-on-Rule may have been founded to help lepers, perhaps related to the Laird of Bedrule. A spring near there was known as a ‘leper well’. Cavers Auld Kirk may have a ‘leper squint’.

leprous (le-ris) adj., arch. affected with pig ‘measles’ – ‘...[Fine] for publicly selling ... ane carcass of swyne which was leprous and consequently dangerous to be made use of’ [BR1692].

Letham

Letham (le-thum) n. James (1954– ) born in Airdrie, he was educated in Aberdeen at Madras College in St. Andrews and at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow. After training as a teacher he was appointed to Galashiels Academy, then became Head of Music at Jedburgh, before succeeding Ian Seeley as Head of Music at Hawick High School in 1997. He has been involved in a large number of musical enterprises in the Borders, including serving as musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society, conductor of the Eildon Singers and the Borders Youth Orchestra and work with the Hawick community choir the Melody Makers. He has been a strong promoter of the work of Hawick-born composer Sir John Blackwood. He also wrote the music for ‘The Best O’ A’. He retired in 2011 (see also Lethem).

Lethem (le-thum) n. hamlet between the A6088 and A68, just before the Carter Bar, in the eastern part of Southdean Parish. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 stedings and valued at £2 6 shillings. In 1541 Thomas Laidlaw was tenant of part paying 22s yearly and Laurence Lawrence and James Laidlaw were tenants of another part paying 22s yearly. John Oliver and Simon Robson were there in 1623. John Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Thomas Scott is recorded there on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and his son was still there in 1841. Walter Renwick was shepherd there in 1797. James Tully and Thomas Tait were servants there in 1799. Andrew Whillans and family were there in 1841. There was once a chapel here, but no signs of it remain, although the small hill to the west is known as Chapel Knowe; here there are the remains of a settlement, about 43 m by 33 m in size, overlain by a smaller, roughly triangular enclosure (note, however, that there could be confusion here with the ancient chapel which was once situated in the village of Leitholm in Eccles Parish). A fort is on the hill just to the north. ‘Katey’s Cross’ was also just to the west, once used as a gathering point for a local market, and on the site of the former settlement of ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’ (also written ‘Letham’, as well as ‘Leatham’, ‘Lethame’, etc.; there are other places of the same name in Eccles Parish near Berwick, also called ‘Leithholm’, as well as elsewhere in Scotland).

Lethem (le-thum) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) rector of ‘the church of Saint Marie of Farnminishop’ (i.e. St. Mary’s of the Lowes, Yarrow) from 1292. He is recorded as ‘Master Edmund de Letham’. In 1296 he swore fealty to Edward I, and later that year he received a writ from Edward to restore him to his lands and rights as ‘parson of the church of the forest’. Helen nee Turnbull (17th C.) wife of James. She kept an inn in Hawick after her husband’s death. Here in 1642 a large group was drinking with a servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused his companions of stealing his wallet, with the case heard by the Hawick Magistrates. John and William, mentioned in the same case, were her sons. Henry (15th/ 16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Isobell (b.1687) born in Hawick, daughter of James and Isobell ‘Gyrden’. She is recorded as ‘Lithen’ in the Parish records in 1713 when she returned to Hawick after working ‘in service’ in Edinburgh, and was asked to produce a ‘testificate’ since it was rumoured that she had been married and her husband Benjamin Taylor had deserted her. In 1715 she was described as ‘servitrix to ye Laird of Whitaugh’ (the one in Liddesdale) when summoned by Hawick Session from Castleton Parish ‘to come and satisfie here for her scandal of adulterie’. She stood several mornings at the church door in sackcloth, but because of the distance she had to travel was then leniently ‘to appear hereafter on the usual place of repentance in sackcloth two other days, before noon and after noon’. She appeared for the last time at the end of that year, and appears to have then fully satisfied the Session. It is possible she is the Isobel ‘Lithen’ recorded in 1716 when her son John, conceived in adultery with John Scott, was baptised in Hawick. By 1723 she appears to have settled into a relationship with William Hood, and again the Session became upset by ‘the scandal of adulterie’; she stood in sackcloth for 11 Sundays and her partner William for 6 Sundays. James (16th/17th C.) ‘messenger’ in Hawick. He was assaulted by Walter Scott of Burnfoot and his wife Margaret with a large stone in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1616. The pair were also accused of later assaulting him and his wife Helen Turnbull on the High Street, along with 7 accomplices. The same James was probably an innkeeper, whose widow Helen Turnbull is recorded in 1642 as part of a court case when a group of people were accused of stealing a wallet in her establishment. Their sons are there recorded as John and William ‘Lethane’. He may also be the ‘James Lechen’ recorded in the 1616 trial over the slaughter of the

Laird of Drumlannig’s sheep at Howpasley; afterwards when ‘Marion’s Geordie’ was confronted in Hawick as a suspect by James Douglas, he and 2 other men (‘Bonnie Johnnie’ Scott and James Wemyss) took the pistol from Geordie before he could shoot. the baptism of his daughter Bessie is recorded in Hawick in 1634. James (17th C.) probably son of John and Isobel Turnbull. He married Isobel Jardine (or ‘Gyrden’). Their children included: John (b.1683); Andrew (b.1686); Isobel (b.1687); and Andrew (again, b.1689). The witnesses in 1689 were Bailie James Deans and Andrew Porteous. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1684 (suggesting they were related). James (17th C.) recorded as an officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1672, specifically ‘the ane of the Erles officers’, at the 1672 setting of the fair. In 1673 he was recorded as Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick. James (17th/18th C.) sheriff officer in Hawick. He was ‘officer’ in 1700 when he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker Robert Paisley and for Robert Gledstains. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was found guilty by the Session of being drunk after 10 p.m., and for swearing. He is described as ‘James Leythen, shyreff-officer’, but it still seems unclear whether he was a Burgh Officer or an officer of the court. He was ‘officer’ in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Walter (who was surely related). He could be the same ‘James Leithan’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he was the same James who was Procurator-fiscal of the Regality of Hawick in the 1670s, or otherwise was surely related to him. John (13th C.) witnessed to a charter for Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243. John (17th C.) son of James and Helen Turnbull. He is described as ‘in Hawick’ in a 1642 Magistrates Court trial when he was one of several people accused of stealing the wallet of Samuel Rutherford (a servant of Douglas of Cavers) in his mother’s inn. He later accused Rutherford of violently demanding the whereabouts of his wallet. His brother William was also mentioned in the 1642 case. He could be the John ‘Lithen’, married to Isobel Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652), William (b.1654), or alternatively the John, married to Janet Gledstains, whose son Francis was baptised in Hawick in 1643. Probably the same John ‘Lethane’ was mentioned in Hawick in 1656, when Martin Elliot was ordered to pay 30 shillings ‘for absence from his service for 5 weeks’, although let off the money claimed ‘for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane’. John (17th C.) Bailie or officer of the Baron in Hawick in 1673. In that year the Earl of Queensberry complained that his representatives were attacked when trying to ‘ride the fair’ in Hawick ‘and particularly did assault and invade the said John Lea- then with drawn swords, and masterfully pulled him off his horse, tore off his clothes, and struck him’. His surname is given as ‘Leathen’, and it is possible this may have been a variant of ‘Ley- den’ rather than ‘Lethem’. However, he may have been related to the slightly later James ‘Leythen’ who was a ‘shyreff-officer’. Richard (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident recorded as ‘Leythen’ in 1707. William Sutter was rebuked for being in his house at the time of Sunday morning service. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker listed among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706; his surname is recorded in the Town Book as ‘Leythen’. The group seemed to be mostly from the West-end, suggesting he was also from there. He is probably the Walter, son of William ‘Lithen’ and Jane Morrison, born in Hawick in 1682. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1722 for Sheriff Officer William Henderson. He was Walter ‘Lithen’ when he married Isobel Newbie in 1707; they had several children baptised in Hawick, including Marion (b.1708), James (b.1711), William (b.1713), Jane (b.1715), Walter (b.1717), Gavin (b.1719), Robert (b.1721) and Patrick (b.1723). The witnesses in 1711 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and James Lethem ‘officer’, in 1717 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and saddler Francis Ruecastle, in 1721 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecas- tle, and in 1723 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and merchant John Cavers. William (17th C.) brother of John in Hawick. They were listed in 1642 among acquaintances of Samuel Ruther- ford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, who accused them of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Ha-wick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably father of shoemaker Walter, and hence likely to have been a shoemaker himself. He is likely the son of John and Isobel Turnbull, born in Ha-wick in 1654 and the husband of Jane Morrison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1682), Thomas (b.1684), Beatrix (b.1687) and Helen (b.1689). the witnesses in 1684 were Thomas Turnbull and James ‘Lithen’ (who was surely related). (spellings vary, such as ‘Leithan’, ‘Lethane’, ‘Letham’ and ‘Lithen’; the surname probably derives from the lands of Leitholm in Berwickshire, but some fraction may come from the more local area in Southdean Parish; it is possible that the name was once the same as or confused with Leyden).

leuch (lewch) n., arch. permission, leave – ‘…for outyn the leve of ony juge of law, spirituale or temporale …’ [SB1470].

the Level (thu-le-vul) n. popular name for the High Level pub.

Leven (lee-vin) n. old name for the ‘Line’ or ‘Lyne’ Water just over the Border in Cumbria. It was formerly one of the lawless valleys of the Border. It is probably the place referred to in the late 15th and early 16th centuries when many Scotsmen were charged by the Privy Council with ‘communing with the English of Levin’ and similar. For example, in 1493 Walter Scott of Headsow paid a fine for ‘reasonably Intercommuning with the Thieves and Traitors of Levin’ and Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh and John Turnbull in Hawick compounded for bringing in rebels ‘de levyn’. In 1494/5 Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for bringing in 5 Armstrong brothers, traitors ‘de levyn’. In a note to a legal case of 1502, Pitcairn gave a footnote to word ‘Levin’ as ‘A district of Lancashire, then infamous for its ‘Traitouris’ and ‘lymmaris,’ who made numerous raids and forays every year on the least protected parts of the Scottish Borders’. However, it seems likely that the term was used to apply fairly generally to rievers from over the Border, rather than only for Englishmen from this valley. Thomas Musgrave in 1583 described it thus: ‘Black Leven water is a littell brooke, and so is Whyt Leven the lyke, and are not in anie place a myle and a halfe distant one from an other, and are inhabyted with the Nyxons, untilt it come to a place called the Blackdobs, are then the Rutligis dwell on bothe the side of it, untilt it come to a place called the Lukkins of Leven, then it descends Sowpert, wheare the Taylors have it, thens it descendes the boundes of Sopert, and is inhabyted with Graymes called the Graymes of Leven, and runeth into the ryver of Eske at Gorth Storys hosew called the Lard. There is also a river of the same name in North Yorkshire, which drains Lake Windermere into Morecambe Bay, but it seems unlikely this is what is meant in the 15th and 16th century references (it is written ‘levy’ in 1493).

lew in (loo-in) v., arch. to involve, oblige to do something – ‘Ti lewe in = to involve; to ‘let in’ or ‘drag in’ [ECS], ‘A was lewd in ti pay his fine’ [GW] (also written ‘lewe in’; only used in the past participle).

Lewenlees (lew-in-leez) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 on a rental roll as part of the area then known as Ermeldon. It was recorded as ‘Lewynleyes’, and valued at 16 shillings and 2 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Lewinlowis’ and valued at 10 shillings, with Robert Elliot as tenant.

Lewenshope (lew-inz-höp) n. former farm on the north side of the Yarrow valley, south of Hangingshaw, with Lewenshope Burn and Lewenshope Rig nearby. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, leased to Sir George Douglas and to the Murrays, with the Murrays continuing as owners into the 16th century. James Murray of Falahill held the lands of the Queen in 1528 and assigned them to his wife, Margaret Home. Patrick Murray of Hangingshaw was recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. The stream name is mis-transcribed in a 1649 description as ‘Lovineshope Burn’. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Adam Slatter’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Lune. ‘Lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshop’ in 1502 and 1471, ‘Lewinishope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1541 were recorded as owner in 1541, when the rental was £50. The stream name is mis-transcribed in a 1649 description as ‘Lovineshope Burn’. ‘Lewinshope & Scadarig’ were held by Johnstone of Alva in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls (it is marked both ‘Lewinshoope’ and ‘lewinshoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is ‘Lewynnshop’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewinshope’ in 1456 and 1471, ‘Lewinshope’ in 1484, ‘Lewynshop’ in 1486, ‘lewynhop’ in 1494/5, ‘Lewinshope’ in 1502 and ‘Levynnishop’ in 1541).

lever (loo-ur) n., arch. a lever, pole for levering – ‘The mouse proposes to join her in spinning; and inquires, ‘But where will I get a spindle, fair lady mine?’ when the frog desires it to take ‘the auld mill lever’ [JL].

Lewis (loo-is) n. Alexander (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a cole merchant for the Duke of Buccleuch, based at the Hawick Station. James (b.1828/9) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter and Barbara. He was living with his parents at Howgill in Ewesdale in 1841. By 1851 he was teacher at Burnmouth School in Castleton Parish. He lived there with his younger sister. By 1861 he had been replaced by John Hardie, but it is unclear what happened to him.

lew-warm (loo-warm) adj., arch. luke-warm, tepid (also written ‘lewe-warm’).

Leyden (lā-, il-dīn) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married ‘Issobell Lune’ and their son William was baptised in 1682. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Ledan in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Andrew (b.1694), baptised in Cavers Parish, was probably his son. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Spittal in 1721. He is probably the Adam who married Helen Turnbull in Cavers in 1709 and their children included: Helen (b.1710); Betty (b.1712); Jane (b.1714); Isabel (b.1717); William (b.1719); and James (b.1721). Adam (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. He married Elizabeth Richardson in 1752 and their children included: John (b.1757); Adam (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); Peter (b.1762); Walter (b.1765); and Robert (b.1767). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1762 were weaver John Simpson and Kirk Officer Alexander Bynyan and in 1765 were Alex Nivison and James Brydon. He could be the Adam ‘Liddon’ who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1761. He is probably the Adam whose son Andrew died in 1778. Adam (b.c.1770s) carrier in Hawick according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1799. His name was drawn in 1800, in place of John Fowler, who was found to be too old to serve. However, he was ‘found unfit for Service from an ulcer in his leg’ and John Scott from Weensland Mill drawn in his place. Adam (b.c.1780) servant at Hassendeanburn according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish. Adam (b.1780/1) bookseller in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Miller’s Close with farmer John (probably his brother) and Helen (John’s wife). In 1851 he was a lodger on O’Connell Street. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (1788–1876) son of Robert and Helen Clerk. He was a farmer living up the Loan. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer of 30 acres, and resided at about 66 High Street. His fields were probably up the Wellogate. In 1816 he married Margaret Laidlaw, and she died in 1856. Their children included: Robert (1819–77), who was baptised in Robertson and married Betty McAlpine; Betty (b.1819), who died young; John (1821–57); Matthew (b.1824), who died in Melbourne; Andrew (b.1830), coal agent and Cornet; and Helen (b.1834), who married Alexander Nivison Scott. Adam (19th C.)

resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Stewart and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1833. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. He is probably the Andrew, married to Catherine Aitchison, whose children baptised in Hawick included Manie (b.1635) and Christian (b.1640). The witnesses in 1640 were William Lorraine and Simon Adamson. He himself witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Robert Scott in 1640. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (probably actually the Hassendean area). He witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull in 1683 and another for Gavin Turnbull in 1684. He married Janet Fletcher and their children included: Isobel (b.1681); and Andrew (b.1683). The witnesses in 1681 were William Turnbull and William Redford and in 1683 were Robert Thomson and James Thomson. Andrew (18th/19th C.) youngest brother of Dr. John. He stated that, although young at the time, he remembers the farewell visit of his brother, and their mother singing the ballads ‘Young Benjie’, ‘Tamlane’ and ‘Bonora’. Andrew (b.1830) son of Yeddie, farmer at the Wellogate, who lived at 66 High Street. His mother was Margaret Laidlaw, from Melrose. He was Cornet in 1857, when the first known photograph of the Principals was taken (note that there is some confusion over whether the image might be flipped, with the sash over the wrong shoulder and hence the Righ- and Left-Hand Men switched). He worked as a coal agent. In 1859 he married Margaret Elliot (b.1829) from Castleton Parish, daughter of John Elliot and Fanny Wilson. He moved to 6 Cross Wynd and later moved to Newcastle where he ran a pub. Their children included: Frances (formerly surname Elliot, b.1856); William Elliot (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861), who died young; Adam (b.1862), cabinet maker; and John (b.1864). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1771), James (b.1773), Janet (b.1775) and Isobel (b.1777). George (b.c.1775) baker who lived at about 49 High Street. He is recorded there in 1841 with his wife Janet and children Joan, George and Margaret. He married Janet Noble and their children included: Adam (b.1804); Helen (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Jane (b.1813); Peter (b.1817); George (b.c.1820); and Margaret (b.c.1825). James (1637/8-88) tenant in Earlside and ancestor of John Casper. He was probably among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands on them in 1684 (as punishment for supporting Lady Cavers and other Covenanters). His gravestone in Cavers kirkyard was written in verse, starting ‘Here lies the body of James Leydon, In this churchyard beneath this stone; And Margaret Scott, his spouse alone, Lyeth also here beneath this stone. And their posterity that’s gone, Lies also here beneath this stone: William, Adam Leydon, and John, Ly also here beneath this stone. In Earlside they lived some years agoe, Now here they ly beneath this stone’. He was said to have composed his own epitaph and to have been known locally for his verse. John Casper (in the glossary for the ‘Complaynt of Scotland’, described him as ‘John [sic] Leyden, a poetical farmer in Upper Teviotdale, who died in 1688’, writing the lines ‘The plough and harrow, Commend me thra thé; The frail it is a flinging fiend: Kit, cap and can, Commend me to thé; For thou’s been aye my stannin friend’. He adds that ‘many more of his rude strains were recollected by the peasants of Teviotdale within these twenty years; but all are now supposed to be lost, except his own epitaph’. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included William, Adam and John. His will is recorded in 1688. He could be the James (with surname blank) recorded ‘in Earlseyde’ in 1690 when listed among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenantant, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. James (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the James who was listed at Ashybank in 1694 or the James in ‘Estlodge’ (if this is East Lodge) whose will is recorded in 1698. James (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Greenshields is recorded in 1690. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1788-91. He was a carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and had 4 horses at that time. He is probably the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick.

included John (b.1781), Adam (b.1783), James (b.1790) and Margaret (b.1792). He is probably also the James ‘Leaden’ whose child died in Hawick in 1787. James (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Hay in Hawick in 1813. James Lamb (1880–1934) born in South Shields, son of John Lamb, he was said to be related to John Casper. He married Hannah Elizabeth Clark and their children included diplomat John Lamb (b.1904) and Hannah Elizabeth (b.1805). Jane (b.1813) one of the operators of the first 4 power looms to arrive in Hawick, at Dicksons & Laings in 1830. She seems likely to be the ‘Joan Leyden’, working as a ‘Woollen Yarn Warper’, aged about 25 and living with her parents at 49 High Street in 1841; she must have been still a teenager when she first learned how to use the powerloom. Her father was baker George. It is unclear where she was living at the time of the 1851 census. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Bessie Wilson, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Janet (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick when she paid the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Gledstains and their son Francis was baptised in 1643. His surname is given as ‘Lithen’. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included James (b.1648), James (again, b.1649), Helen (b.1652) and William (b.1654). The witnesses in 1654 were Andrew Liddersdale and Robert Scott. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Young and their children included Janet (b.1688). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His son William was baptised in 1693. John (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1694); Isabel (b.1696); and Margaret (again, b.1696). William (b.1693), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. John (17th/18th C.) resident at Doddburn. In 1706 he married Janet Scott in Hawick Parish; he was recorded being from Kirkton Parish. His children baptised in Cavers and Kirkton Parishes included: James (b.1706); Samuel (b.1707); and James (again, b.1709). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Tower in 1727 when he married Bessie Murray. He may be the John who was in Denholm in 1730 when his son Samuel was baptised. He may also be the John who was in Birneyknow when his unnamed child was baptised. He may be the John who married Jane English in 1713. His other children may have included: Adam (b.1714); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1722); Adam (b.1724); Hugh (b.1726); Isabel (b.1728); Walter (b.1728); John (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736); Euphan (b.1738); an unnamed child (b.1740); another unnamed child (b.1742); Margaret (b.1743); and James (b.1744). It seems likely that there are at least 2 families here. John (18th C.) tailor in Denholm, recorded in 1726. Probably the same John was also recorded in Denholm in 1730 when his daughter Bessie was baptised. His children included: Hugh (b.1726); and Bessie (b.1730). It is unclear which other children were his, and which were the other contemporary James in Cavers. John (18th C.) cooper at Dykes. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1730. He may be the John who married Bessie Murray in 1727. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Margaret Laidlaw. Their children included Robert (b.1750). John (b.1764), Margaret (b.1766), Nelly (b.1767) and Betty (b.1769) may also have been his children. John (18th C.) father of John Casper (b.1775). He was shepherd at Henlawshiel from the late 1770s and later took over the whole of Nether Tofts. He married Isabella (or Isabel) Scott. They had 3 other sons, as well as 2 daughters. His children may include Betty (b.1769), Thomas (b.1771), Jean (b.1777) and Mary (b.1780), all born in Cavers Parish, but with no mother’s name given. Robert was one son and the youngest was Andrew (but there appear to be no records of their baptisms). He may be the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1734. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1778) and Margaret (b.1792). John (18th/19th C.) heckler at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also recorded in Denholm, and so probably related. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may either be the resident of Castleton Parish who married Helen Scott or the one who married Margaret Kerr. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle. He married Helen Scott and had children John (b.1798) and Francis (b.1800). John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle. He married Margaret Kerr and had a daughter Isabel (b.1799). John (d.1808) from Cavers Parish, he was described as a lapidary (i.e. jeweller) in Edinburgh when his death was reported in the Scots Magazine. He left £50 to his native parish. Dr. John Casper (1775–1811) linguist and poet, born in Denholm, in the thatched cottage on the Green (which can be seen in an early photo of Denholm, and still exists today). His father John was manager at Nether-Tofts farm and his mother Isabella Scott was from Liddesdale. The family moved to Henlawshiel when he was four. He was taught to read by his grandmother and learned Border ballads from his mother. He went to Kirkton School at age 9, where his roughly 3 years of schooling was interrupted by one schoolmaster dying and another being removed. He was tutored by Rev. James Duncan of Denholm for another couple of years, where he developed his Latin and Greek abilities. It is said that his father wanted to purchase an ass to convey him the 3 or so miles to Denholm, and although put off by the ridicule he would get from his classmates, he accepted the offer when the owner threw in a copy of an old language dictionary (the ‘Calepini Dictionarium Octalinge’). At age 15 he went to Edinburgh University (apparently going half-way with his father on a horse, then walking the rest), where he qualified as a doctor and a minister. In Edinburgh he joined the Literary Society, where he made many friends and practised public speaking. He is said to have already known French, Spanish, Italian, German, ancient Icelandic, Arabic and Persian before he was 20! On trips back to Denholm he studied in a bower in Denholm Dean in the summers and in Cavers old kirk in the winters. He also spent one summer as an assistant teacher at Clownfords (more specifically Caddonlee), where he met Nicol the poet. He was also allowed access to the library of Cavers House when back from university. He was said to be fond of practical jokes, e.g. playing to claims he was dabbling in the black arts by scaring people (with an accomplice draped in the mortcloth) in Cavers Kirk who had come to watch him summon spirits; when he was a guest preacher in Cavers in about 1798 he mischievously took as his text ‘Get thee behind me, Satan’. In the later 1790s he served as private tutor in the summers, and so spent less and less time in his beloved Borderland. With an interest in travel and other cultures, he wrote ‘Historical and Philosophical Sketch of the Discoveries and Settlements of the Europeans in Northern and Western Africa, at the Close of the Eighteenth Century’, published in 1799. Additionally he contributed poetry to the Edinburgh Magazine. However, he continued to be a regular attender at Hawick markets, and nearly came to grief there in 1799, when a troop of Volunteers, friends of Mungo Park’s, objected to Park’s treatment in his book on African discoveries. He was licensed to preach in St. Andrews in 1798, and gave occasional sermons around Edinburgh. At one point there was an arrangement for him to become assistant and successor to the minister of Cavers, but this fell through. He collaborated with Walter Scott in collecting ballads, wrote poetry and edited ‘the Scots Magazine’ for about 6 months. In 1800 he spent several months touring the Highlands (his manuscript travelogue being published much later). His poem ‘The Elfin-king’ was published in Lewis’ ‘Tales of Wonder’ in 1801. On having the prospect of an appointment with the East India Company as assistant surgeon, he quickly completed his medical training, receiving an M.D. from St. Andrews. He paid his last visit to his parents and Teviotdale in late 1802. He missed embarking on the intended ship through illness, that ship wrecking on Margate Sands. While waiting for the next ship he prepared the epic ‘Scenes of Infancy’ for publication. He then sailed for Madras, where he served as surgeon, then went as surgeon and naturalist on an expedition through Mysore, although he became ill and convalesced in the house of Sir John Malcolm (of Eskdale). His anthology ‘The Scottish Descriptive Poems with some illustrations of Scottish literary antiquities’ was published in 1803. It was said that he was ill with fever in India in 1804 when news reached him of the False Alarm and how the volunteers mustered; when hearing particularly about the Liddesdale men marching into Hawick to the tune ‘Wha daur meddle wi’ me?’, he jumped from his sick bed and gesticulated wildly while singing the old song. In 1805 he went on a sea voyage to Pulo Penang (Prince of Wales Island) Malaysia, where he was the only European on-board, and they narrowly avoided being captured by the French. He spent months there, where he met Stamford Raffles among other people, addressing his verses ‘The Dirge of the departed Year’ to Raffles’ wife Olivia. He returned to Calcutta and after writing a dissertation on asiatic languages was appointed Professor of the Hindostani language in Bengal College, which he later gave up to be a Judge in Calcutta (being appointed by Lord Minto). After 2 years he switched position again to be a Commissioner of the Court of Requests in Calcutta, which required knowledge of the local languages. In 1810 he became Assay Master at the Calcutta mint, with relatively high salary and light duties. But this new easy life was short-lived, for in 1811 he accompanied Lord Minto on an expedition to Java, where he helped translate and write letters.

between the British and local chiefs. He accompanied the conquering British troops to Batavia but there contracted a fever (it is said from the ‘pestilential air’ of a store room containing ancient objects in a Dutch government building, but probably either malaria or dengue). Three days later he was dead, at the age of 36. He was buried at Tanabang Cemetery, Batavia (now Jakarta); his middle name is inscribed there as ‘Casper’, even although that additional name appears to have been unknown to his local friends and family. He was said to be of medium stature, but strong and athletic in his youth. He also strictly abstained from vices. He talked loudly and a lot (Lord Minto wrote ‘I do not believe so great a reader was ever so great a talker’) in a ‘shrill, piercing, and at the same time grating voice’. He was proudly independent, was said to be lacking in refined manners, and retained his Teviotdale accent throughout his life (which put off many Englishmen). Encouraged to lose his accent he replied ‘Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch, and as to being silent, I will promise to hold my tongue, if you will make fools hold theirs’. It is said that the main defect of his personality was ‘his passion for display’ and hence ‘he was naturally enough judged by many, who measured him by an ordinary standard, to be more superficial than profound’. Nevertheless his drive to study, even through illness, was remarkable, and he said ‘I cannot be idle; and whether I die or live, the wheel must go round to the last’. He is supposed to have spoken 34 separate languages or dialects (the estimated numbers vary), and translated several texts in obscure dialects. He also translated some of the gospels of the New Testament into Pushtu, Maldivian, Beluchi, Macassar and Bugi. At the time of his death he was contemplating a comparative arrangement of languages. There are only 2 surviving likenesses of him, one being a sketch made by Capt. George Elliot on the voyage to Java. A monument to him was erected in 1861 in the middle of Denholm Green, designed by Hector H. Orrock. The cottage in which he was born still stands on the north side of the Green. A granite obelisk was erected at Henlawshiel where he spent his childhood. His first published poem was in the Edinburgh Literary Magazine in 1795, followed by many more, including ‘Ruberslaw’ that same year; these first contributions were signed ‘J.L., Banks of the Teviot’. As part of his long poem ‘Scenes of Infancy’ (1803), he wrote the oft-quoted lines: ‘Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood; Still doom’d to prosper, since on Flodden’s field Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial king, and (glorious boast!) Gain’d proud renown where Scotia’s fame was lost’. His 2 other poems with local flavour are ‘Lord Soulis’ and ‘Cout of Kielder’. He contributed several pieces to Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1801), including most of the essay on fairy superstitions. The glossary of his annotated ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ (1801) is a useful early source of local words. He also edited ‘Scottish Descriptive Poems’ (1803). Much of his output was published in ‘The Poetical Remains of the Late Dr. John Leyden, with Memoirs of His Life’, edited by Rev. James Morton (1819). Although his poetry has largely gone out of fashion, the fantastic poems ‘The Mermaid’ and ‘The Elfin King’ have had a lasting popularity. Several of his translations and other largely completed projects, left with his friends Richard Heber and William Erskine, were published posthumously, but others were lost forever. His journals from touring Gilsland and the Cumberland Lakes in 1800 were published in 1906. 2 books, ‘Life of Dr. John Leyden, Poet and Linguist’ (1908) by John Reith, and ‘Leydeniana: or, Gleanings from some unpublished documents regarding Dr. Leyden’ (1912) by James Sinton, collected much of what had been learned about Leyden in subsequent years. A centenary celebration was held in Denholm in 1875 and there were also events in 2011 to mark the 200th anniversary of his death. A booklet ‘Dr. Leyden’s Punjabi Translations’ was published in 2011 – ‘The tongue that was spoken by Leyden and Scott …’ [WS], ‘His bright and brief career is o’er, And mute his tuneful strains; Quenched is his lamp of varied lore, That lov’d the light of song to pour; A distant and a deadly shore Has Leyden’s cold remains’ [SWS], ‘…Since Leyden left his dearly loved strand To find a grave in scorched Java’s sand’ [JoHa], ‘Poor Leyden suffered death’s eclipse Upon a foreign strand, The words upon his dying lips Were o’ the Borderland’ [JBS], ‘Regretted by the worthy and the wise, A higher monument is his, by far, Than any costly pile of stones can show, Or sculptured column towering to the skies’ [JCG], ‘A fremm land claimed his banes, and though He feared we’d a’ forget In loyal herts oor lad o’ pairts Will lang be honoured yet’ [WL].

John (b.c.1780) employee of Walter Richardson according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. John (b.c.1785) farmer on the High Street. He was living on Miller’s Close in 1841. His wife was Helen and they also lived with Adam (probably his brother), a bookseller. Janet, who was probably related, was a widow on Miller’s Close in 1851, with daughter Jane and grand-daughter Margaret Hutton. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Denholm. He married Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Burn. Their children included: John (c.1805–50); Percy Georgina (b.c.1809), who married James Miller; and William (b.1811), proprietor of the Fox & Hounds; Isabella (1815–64); and Douglas (1817–18). John (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Minto in Hobkirk Parish in 1818. John (b.1858) born in Berwick, he lived in South Shields and was grandfather of the later John Lamb. In 1861 he was living with his grandmother Eleanor Lamb (and her son John) in Berwick. He married Grace Marchbank, who was born in Hawick in 1858. Their children included James Lamb (b.1880), Mary Henderson, Ellen Lamb, David Marchbank, Adam Marchbank and Grace Alma. At least 2 of their children were born in Hawick. John Lamb, O.B.E., C.B.E. (1904–88) said to have been a descendant of John Casper, he was born in South Shields, son of James Lamb. He was a linguist and diplomat in the Burma Frontier Service. A plaque to his memory was added to the Leyden memorial. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (18th C.) servant at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Matthews (b.1794/5) stocking maker in Wilton and Hawick. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households at Wilton, but in 1840 and 1841 was at Melgund Place. By 1851 he was a foreman in a woollen factory, living at 3 Weensland (which probably meant Weensland Mill Houses). In the 1841 census he was at about 7 Melgund Place. His wife was Helen (or Ellen) and their children included Robert, Helen, Margaret, John, Edward N. and George. Peter (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Gray and their children included: Robert, Helen, Margaret Hutton. Robert (c.1805–50); Janet (b.1843); William (b.1846); George (b.1848); and Peter (b.1850). Robert (c.1770–1840) carrier in Hawick. In 1816 he purchased 66 High Street, and the buildings behind 66 and 68, from stockingmaker Walter Murray. His family owned these properties for almost 50 years. He may have been the Robert who was son of Adam and Eliza Richardson, born in Hawick in 1766. He is recorded as a carrier in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He married Helen Clerk in 1791 and she is probably the wife of his whose death is recorded in 1808. Their son Adam (‘Yeddie’) farmed up the Wellogate. He probably died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. Robert (18th/19th C.) son of John and brother of Dr. John. He studied medicine. He lived for a while in the old family house in Denholm and was an early member of the Subscription Library there. It is said that he took an unfinished portrait of his brother John (perhaps the only accurate portrait) and had it altered to become a portrait of himself. Sir Walter Scott wrote to him on hearing the news of his brother’s death. Robert (1819–77) son of Adam and Margaret Laidlaw, he was baptised in Robertson Parish. He married Betty McAlpine. Their children Adam (b.1848) and Jane (b.1851) were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Robert (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrix Balmer in 1844 and their children included: Isabella (b.1845); Beattie and Helen (b.1848); Margaret (b.1850); James (b.1851); Beattie (again, b.1853); George Lunn (b.1855); Robert (b.1857); and Helen (b.1862). The first 6 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Samuel (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was at Dodburn in 1730 when he married Helen Elliot. His children, baptised in Cavers, included John (b.1731), an unnamed child (b.1737), Hanna (b.1743), Jean (b.1745), Elizabeth (b.1748). William (17th C.) married Bessie Elliot in Robertson Parish in 1688. His wife was from Cavers Parish. He is probably the William who witnessed baptism for Isobel (perhaps his sister) and William Lamb in Robertson in 1687 and 1688. William (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was probably related to Adam, who was also listed in Denholm. He is probably the William who was living at Ashybank in 1702. He could be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Andrew (b.1694); James (b.1696); John (b.1702); and Janet (b.1704). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Leadin’. He could be the ‘W. Leyden’ fined along with ‘J. Swan’ in 1702 for drunkeness. William (17th/18th C.) wright in Denholm in 1722 when his son Adam was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers Parish, who were probably his include William (b.1716), Helen (b.1717), William (again, b.1720), Bessie (b.1727) and William (again, b.1732). William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included an unnamed child (b.1724), William (b.1726), John (b.1728), Euphan (b.1731) and James (b.1734). William (18th C.) married
Leyden Bank

Helen Blyth in Cavers Parish in 1726. William (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably related to the William mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the east of his. He had a son who died in Hawick in 1815. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Archibald was baptised in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1751. William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm, recorded in 1769 and 1771. His children included James (b.1769) and Janet (b.1771). Probably the same William was the resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773). William (18th C.) married Isabel Hardie in Hawick Parish in 1778. William (b.1811) born in Denholm, son of John and Isabella Burn. In his youth he was a superb athlete, excelling at multiple sports at the St. Ronan’s Games in the period 1832–35. In 1833 he won both the running and standing versions of the ‘hop, step and leap’, as well as 2 races. In 1834 and 1835 he won just about every event he entered, including the long jump, high jump, wrestling and throwing. He was also said to have once ran from Denholm to Innerleithen, won the race there, and then ran home, all in one day! He was a stockmaker in Denholm and also proprietor of the Fox and Hounds. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as vintner at the ‘Hare & Hounds’. He married Cecilia White and their children included John and Archibald. William (1773) cooper in Denholm, recorded in 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was probably related to James, who is also listed under Denholm. There appear to have been 2 contemporary Williams in Cavers, with other children of one or other family being Jane (b.1763), Betty (b.1765), John (b.1765), Isabel (b.1767), James (b.1767), Betty (b.1770), Jeany (b.1773) and Bellow (b.1773). Leyden Monument (lā-, II-din-mo-new-min’) n. memorial to John Leyden erected on Denholm Green in 1861. It was designed by Hector H. Orrock and sculpted by Handsyde Ritchie. It consists of a Swinton stone Gothic spire on top of two tiers of Aberdeen granite columns. It used to get an annual wash by the Denholm fire brigade. It was restored in 1982 with funds raised by a sponsored walk following the route Leyden took when he left to attend Edinburgh University.

Leyden’s Road (lā-, II-dinz-rōd) n. street in Denholm, lying between Sunnyside and the Canongate (also called ‘Leyden Road’).

Leyden’s Trei (lā-dinz-trī) n. popular name for a former tree in Denholm Dean, where it is said that John Leyden composed some of his poetry, such as ‘Scenes of Infancy’. The location of the tree’s stump is marked in a photograph in the Border Magazine for 1896.

Leyden’s View (lā-dinz-vew) n. house on Main Street in Denholm.

Leyes (leez) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, roughly between Stichell Hill and Riccarton. It is now marked by ‘Leys Burn’ and the farm of Leysburnfoot. Adam Elliot of the Leys was recorded in 1541 and ‘Hob of the Leys’ in 1595. The lands there were rented by the Duke of Buccleuch to his Chamberlain John Laing in 1736. The farmhouse must have been quite close to what became Riccarton Junction (it is ‘Leyes’ in 1541; it is probably the place marked ‘Lires’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Leysburnfit (leez-burn-fi’) n. farm where the Leys Burn meets the Roughley Burn, to the east of Whitropefoot and just west of Riccarton Junction. It is probably the second farmhouse shown on the combined farm of Stitchilhill, Laidlawhope and Whitrope in the 1718 Buccleuch survey. It is the same as ‘Fawhopeknowe’ steadying shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Leythen (II-thin) n. James (17th/18th C.) Sheriff-Officer in Hawick, recorded in 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1707 William ‘Sator’ was rebuked for coming to his house during the time of church service in the morning (this is probably a variant of Leyden).

liart (II-ur’) adj., arch. streaked with grey or white – ‘... and a nag of lyart colour, two oxen, three cows, one cowdow, ten auldscheip, six lambs.
now in the possession of the said Andrew [of Fri-

libel (II-bul) v., arch. to state as grounds for prosecution – ‘...either to their respective confessions or refusing to depone in the matter lybelled for the reasons and causes and many other reasons above written ...’ [BR1700] (also written ‘lybel’).

libelt (II-bult) n., arch. a tedious discourse, harangue.

liberty (II-ber-ee) n., arch. authorization, sanction to do something – ‘...and that nane within the burgh take money for any merchant for libertie to stand before their doors ...’ [BR1662], ‘...Walter Scott of Goldilands, quhair in he desyred libertie to bigg upon the topp of that pairt of the Common dyke quhich marcheth with his ground ...’ [BR1675], ‘...the Laird of Gladstaines ...obtained allwayes when neid requyred the lyke libertie without interruptione’ [BR1704], privileges enjoyed by a free burgh, right of trading within a burgh – ‘Item, that the hale websters ...convene and meet together ...on any occasion concerning the craft, or for any other particular concerning the town and liberties thereof ...’ [BR1640].

the Library (thu-Il-bru-ree) n. Hawick Public Library, founded in 1878 under the provision of the Public Libraries Act (which allowed the use of rate money). It started in rooms in the Exchange, with a temporary move to Bridge Street in 1883, before moving to an upstairs part of the new Town Hall in 1886. The earlier history is unclear, with some accounts suggesting that the first ‘public’ library was founded in 1760 or the first ‘subscription library’ in 1762, with other ‘circuiting libraries’ started later; the ‘Public Library of Hawick’ published a catalogue in 1792. Dr. Charters of Wilton set up a free circulating library for members of his congregation in the early 1800s. The Trades’ Library was started in 1802. The current library building on North Bridge Street, built with a gift of £10,000 from Andrew Carnegie, was opened in 1904 by Carnegie himself, with Mrs. Carnegie ceremonially unlocking the doors with a golden key. The opening day was a half holiday in the town, and the streets were decorated with flags etc. It was designed by John Nicholl Scott and Alexander Lorne Campbell of Edinburgh (who also designed the Boer War Memorial), following a design competition. The building has some stonework by William Birnie Rhind, with the exterior dominated by the corner entrance tower and the round-headed gables. There are 4 large windows with heraldic designs, with the arms of Dunfermline (Carnegie’s home town), Hawick, Galashiels, Selkirk, Jedburgh, Kelso, Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and emblems of Scotland, England and Ireland, together with the arms and mottoes of the Ker, Scott, Douglas, Gladstains, Elliot, Armstrong and Turnbull families. A catalogue of the library’s books was published in 1904. Users were able to choose books directly (without use of a catalogue and staff request) from 1926. The building had a major extension in 1939, funded by Sir Thomas and Lady Henderson. In 1956 it became the first library in Scotland to offer a homebound service. The Library was taken over by Borders Regional Council in 1975 and is now integrated into the Scottish Borders Council Library Service. It still holds a valuable reference section of materials relating to Hawick. There were extensive internal refurbishments in 1987 and computerisation came in 1999. It is a grade B listed building, which celebrated its centenary in 2004, with several events, including a re-enactment of the opening ceremony. The first person appointed as Librarian in Hawick was Mrs. Margaret Elliot (nee Laidlaw) of Ancrum Mains in 1879, followed by George McNairn from 1894, Richard Halley from 1906 and William F. Cuthbertson from 1929. Rhoda McIvor was the last Burgh Librarian, serving from 1947 and retiring in 1977. Liz Robinson was Area Librarian from 1978, succeeded by John Beedle in 1981, then Gillian McNay in 1997 and John Beedle again in 2001. In the 1970s High Mackay became Deputy Librarian and Paul Taylor became Children’s Librarian.

lichts \( (\text{lichts}) \) n., pl., arch. lights. Hawick’s first street lights were a set of 60 oil lamps, ceremoniously lighted on New Year’s Day 1813, mainly along the High Street. They were lit nightly by the lamplighter from 15th November until 7th April, and several more were added in 1815. Gas lighting was introduced to the streets in 1831. Electric lighting started in 1901 with the Urban Electric Supply Company. Lighting was first used for rugby games as early as 1879.

lichtsome \( (\text{light-sum}) \) adj., poet. light, carefree, cheerful – ‘. . . failed to damp the buoyancy of his spirits, which was so remarkable that as lichtsome as Yedie Broon’ became a local proverb’ [WNK], ‘O ye that bear the lichtsome soul, that love things waggish, daft and droll’ [RM], ‘I’m hummung sudden snatches of a lichtsome melody . . . ’ [JYH], ‘. . . ma lang Dander throwe the Bonnie Borderland, . . . cam ti an end i’ the hert o a lichtsome strooshie’ [ECS], ‘Arround the toum in lichtsome lilt There’s music sweet and clear’ [WL].

lick (lik) n., arch. a stroke, blow, the merest drink or taste – ‘Gie’s a lick o sayrup, mother, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘Faix bit A’m dry; A hehna hed a lick an a promise’ [DA] (it is ‘Liddel Bank’ in 1797 and ‘Liddel Bank’ in the 1860s).

lickorish (li-kö-reesh) n. liquorice – ‘When L was for lickorish and P was for peels’ [?].

the Liddel (thu-li-dul) n. popular name for Liddel Witter – ‘Right ower the knowe where Liddel lyes, – Nae wonder that it catch’d his ee! A thing of huge and monstrous size Was steering that way hastily’ [ES], ‘Come fill me a bumper, we’ll pledge thee in glory, The links o’ green Liddel in echo shall ring’ [JTe], ‘Sweet sand the Liddle at our feet, I never heard it flow so cheery; With bliss life’s moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi’ my dearie’ [TCh] (sometimes written ‘Liddell’ or ‘Liddle’ and formerly ‘Liddal’).

Liddelbank (li-dul-bawngk) n. mansion on the Liddel Water, near the very southernmost point of Roxburghshire. It was built on what had been part of the farm of Greema in 1793 for William Oliver, the local Sheriff and enthusiastic promoter of road improvements. Oliver was recorded there as owner of no less than 10 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas Foster, William Hodge and John Hotson were servants there in 1799. Walter Douglas, John Murray and James Sorbie were servants there in 1801, and William Hodge was a gardener. James Alexander Attwood was there in the early 19th century and Walter Armstrong around 1821. Robert Jardine, M.P., lived there in the mid-19th century, William Brackenridge around 1870 and Thomas Bell in the latter part of the 19th century. Coal was once mined (in limited quantities) on the estate. It is also sometimes called ‘Bellsbank’. The house has a walled garden, now derelict – ‘Liddelbank, unrecorded in tale yet, or story, Neglected – forgotten in Border bards’ song: Fair gem of the Liddel, its pride and its glory, I will chant thee a stave as I journey along’ [DA] (it is ‘Liddel Bank’ in 1797 and ‘Liddel Bank’ in the 1860s).

Liddel Castle (li-dul-kaw-sul) n. former Castle in Liddesdale, between Newcastleton and Saughtree, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk. Nothing remains now of this Norman fortification, except some impressive earthworks between the road and the river, on a promontory, surrounded on 3 sides by the river and the Kirk Cleuch Burn. It was once surrounded by the Castle Town, which gave its name to the area, although little evidence of former habitation remains today. The castle was probably built by Ranulph de Souls when he was granted the surrounding barony by David I in the 12th century. It was constructed on the usually motte and bailey pattern, covering about 200 m² in the north section and 160 m² in the southern, sloping section. The location of a well can also be identified as a square depression. The castle appears to have been abandoned around the early 14th century. Around the 18th century it was sometimes referred to as ‘the Roman Camp’, because the origin of the mounds were not understood.

Liddell (li-dul) n. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Widow Layng’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Hardie, who was also from Hawick. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1788. George (15th C.) Rector of Ettrick when he witnessed an instrument for John of Swinton in 1461/2. He there described as ‘rectore de Foresta’. He was Rector of Ettrick Forest according to a charter of 1477. He was also recorded as Rector there in 1482 when he witnessed a charter for James Hunter, Rector of Cranston; the other minister who acted as witness was Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick. He was probably a relative of Robert, who was Ranger of Yarrow Ward. George (18th/19th C.) born at ‘Stenton knows’, i.e. Stintieknowe. In 1800 he was substitute in the Militia for weaver Walter Dalgleish. He was sworn in and sent to report to Edinburgh Castle within 8 days. Sir James of Halkerston...
(d.c.1484) Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow in at least the period 1476–82. He witnessed an indenture relating to lands relevant to the Swintons in 1476/7. He was Steward to the Duke of Albany and as a result was tried for treason in 1484 and executed soon after. He was patron of Blind Harry, and it is said he was a major source of information for the poem ‘Wallace’. James (17th C.) Town Clerk 1658–59. Probably the same James was on the Council in 1668 and was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in 1673. In 1673 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was charged by the Bailies with stealing from his house ‘five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’. Presumably he had charge of some of the firearms used by the Burgh Officers, and the theft could be part of the events around disputes between the Hawick authorities and the Baron’s Bailie. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Stewart in 1651 and another for Thomas Scott in 1654. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot, farmer at Southfield, in 1672. He may be the merchant of that name on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1676 he checked the measures used by several Hawick traders, in presence of divers and sundry witnesses, upon complaint given in not only by the tacksman of the Duke’s measures for making use of other measures besides his, but also by ane great number of poor people; he thus effectively served as the surveyor of weights and measures for the Burgh, and is also referred to as a merchant. He may be the James, married to Isabel Watt, whose children included: Isobell (b.1650); and William (b.1653). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Waugh and their son William was baptised in 1683, with witnesses Thomas Waugh (probably related to his wife) and Walter Scott of Whitehaugh. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who He was at Burnfoot in 1736 and 1739 and Clarilaw in 1742. He married Isabel Hoy and their children included: Isobel (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); Mark (b.1739); Christian (b.1742); and James (b.1743). The witnesses in 1736 were James Scott and William Sanderson, in 1739 were George and Robert Scott and in 1742 were John and William Anderson. Given that Thomas was married to Margaret Hoy at about the same time, it seems likely that the families were multiply connected. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Waugh and their children included: Margaret (b.1772) and ‘Bel’ (b.1774). Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from Glasgow University in 1674, he was licensed by that Presbytery in 1681. He was presented to Hobkirk Parish in late 1682 and ordained there in early 1683. He was unable to attend a trial of Covenanters in 1684 on account of having broken his leg, but sent a list of charges against his parishioners. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not praying for William and Mary (i.e. not giving up Episcopalianism), specifically saying that ‘he would never pray for them as long as his blood was warm’! He may have reformed, however, since he (or another man of the same name) was recorded as assistant at Montrose in 1696 and Brechin in 1698. John (19th C.) married Alison Davidson in Wilton Parish in 1831. Mark (18th C.) married Margaret Irwin in Wilton Parish in 1772. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1774. Mark (18th C.) married Alison Cairns in Wilton Parish in 1772. He is presumably a different man than the Mark who got married 4 months earlier. Robert of Balmure (15th C.) Steward of King James II. He was one of the Commissioners for negotiating with the English in 1453. Sir John of Swinton complained about him in relation to his land of Cranshaws in 1460, and he was on an inquest for the same lands in 1464. He served as Ranger of Yarrow Ward from at least 1456 and through the 1460s. He had the farms of Blackgrain, Montbenger and then Tinnis in Yarrow for his fee. Probably the same Robert was also Keeper of Dunbar Castle, as well as being involved with the leasing of Crown land in Galloway and March, and thus mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s. He may be the Robert whose murder by James Davidson ‘in Qultmerhall’ is recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1502. It seems likely he was related to George, who was Rector of the Forest in the 1470s and 1480s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Caufalds in 1727. He married Bessie Scott (perhaps in 1714, although no wife’s name is given). Their children included: Robert (b.1717); Robert (again, b.1720); Janet (b.1723); and Isobel (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Thomas Turnbull and William Douglas. He is probably the Robert who in 1729 witnessed a baptism for Andrew Harkness, resident of Clarilaw. Robert (18th C.) resident of Burnfoot Mill. He married Agnes Douglas in 1748 in Wilton Parish and their children included: Robert (b.1751); James (b.1752); Agnes (b.1754); Thomas (b.1757); Archibald (b.1765); and Euphan (b.1770). The 1770 baptism was carried out by Rev. Young of the Associate Congregation in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) married Elizabeth Cunningham in Wilton Parish in 1768. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Isabel (b.1781) and Margaret (b.1785). Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was deceased by 1793 when his widow, Elizabeth Hardie married Alexander Shaw in Edinburg. Thomas (17th C.) married Isobel Wright in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish (probably the part corresponding to Hassendean). Their son Robert was baptised in 1687, with witnesses George Scott and James Wright (who was probably related to his wife). In 1686 he witnessed a baptism for George Cockburn in Roberton Parish. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Christian (b.1703); and James (b.1707). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Briery Yards in 1722 and Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729 and Clarilaw in 1736. He married Isobel Cavers in 1729 and their children included: Thomas (b.1722); Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Helen (b.1727); Helen (b.1729); James (again, b.1731); Robert (b.1734); and William (b.1736). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Robert Easton, in 1724 were James Cavers (probably related to his wife) and John Dryden, in 1727 and 1729 were James and John Dryden and in 1736 were James and Walter Scott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Parkhouses in 1742 and 1751. He married Margaret Hoy in 1740 and their children included: Robert (b.1742); William (b.1745); Mark (b.1748); Thomas (b.1751); John (b.1753); and Elizabeth (b.1759). The witnesses in 1742 were John Noble and Walter Scott and in 1751 were James Dryden and Walter Scott. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825); Isabella (b.1827); James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). Walter (17th C.) see Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) referred to as ‘merchant, younger’ in Hawick in 1644 when he held the surplus of the money collected for the Covenanting army. He or his father may be the same as the procurator fiscal of the Burgh in the 1630s. He may also be the William who was elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the William, married to Jean Lidderdale, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1637), Isobel (b.1639), Janet (b.1640), Marion (b.1644), Jean (b.1646) and James (b.1648). He witnessed baptisms in 1641 for William Wright and Thomas Oliver, both along with Andrew Liddersdale (who was presumably closely related to his wife). William (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoott’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. He could be the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1683. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Scott in 1760 and their children included: Thomas (b.1762); William (b.1764); and Agnes (b.1766). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Bryson in Hawick in 1789 and their children included: Nelly (b.1790); and William (b.1795). William (19th C.) married Jean Dodds in Wilton Parish in 1824 (sometimes spelled ‘Liddel’ and formerly ‘Ledale’, ‘Liddale’, etc.; see also Liddle). Liddel Strength (li-dul-strenth) n. ruined fortress on the south bank of the Liddel Water, near the confluence with the Esk and the village of Moat in Cumbria. It has an impressive high motte and two baileys built on a cliff and dating to the 12th century with a later tower. Sir John Wake held the castle in the late 13th century, and then it passed to Sir Simon Lindsay, who also held Hermitage at the same time. This is probably the Liddel Tower that was taken in 1346 by a force under David II, with the governor, Sir Walter de Selby being beheaded. Liddel Viaduct (li-dul-vi-a-dukt) n. railway viaduct across the Liddel Water on the Waverley Line, just south of Newcastleton. It has been demolished, but the approaches are still visible. Liddel Witter (li-dul-wi’-ur) n. the Liddel Water, formed by the meeting of 3 burns near Saughtree in the Deadwater heights, it is about 27 miles long and joins the Esk near Canonbie. It was a central feature in the area of cross-border raids that went on for centuries. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: ‘The ryver is all Scottishe, until it come to Kyrsopp foote, planted with Ellotes until it come neare Wheatouge towre, then the Armestronges inhabit it on both sydes, until it come to Kyrsopp foote, where it takes the dyvysion of the realms from Kyrsopp – then the Armestronges have the one syde, and the Englishes Fosters the other syde, soe it descends by the Harlowe on the one syde and the Haythawyt on the other, and runeth into the ryver called Eske. Its valley, Liddesdale, is now quite under-populated, with liddy (li-dur) adj., arch. lazy, tardy – ‘Now Liddersdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle. There is nae riding there at a’: Their horses are grown sae liddy fat. They downa stur out o’ the sta’. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘I've been very liddy in writin’ [GW].

Liddersdale see Liddersdale

Liddersdale (li-durz-dal) n. Adam (16th C.) ‘flescheour’ (i.e. butcher) of Hawick listed in the testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed money for supplying ‘flesche to the place’ and his name is recorded as ‘Adame Liddersdale’. Andrew (16th C.) holder of 5 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was probably related to others of the same surname who also owned lands at that time. He could be the same man as Andrew ‘Lutherdale’. Andrew (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He is probably the currier from Hawick who witnessed a deed in 1630 for Thomas of St. Mary’s Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire), who was granted a fourth part of Easter Mains by Viscount Drumlanrig; John, currier in Hawick, and Andrew, currier in Selkirk, were also listed and so presumably related. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Wright and Thomas Oliver in 1641, for George Scott in 1651 and for John Leyden in 1654. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when his daughter Janet, with Isobel Young, was baptised in Ashkirk. The record is labelled ‘for’, and witnesses were George Ormiston and George (who was surely related to him). George (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. He was son of Thomas, who was also a witness. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded as being ‘of Liddersdale’ in 1278/9 when he was on a panel at Newcastle. His family presumably had lands in Liddersdale, and may have given risen to this surname. Hawisse (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. The forename could have been ‘Hally’ or some other close variant. James (15th/6th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in hawik’. He and Philip Fawlaw were sureties for each other and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being fined at the next court. James (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘alias Blakstanehouse in Hawik’. He was probably a Bailie in Hawick, since he gave sasine of the half Barony of Wilton from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert Langlands. It is unclear what his nickname refers to. Janet (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Presumably the same Janet was also joint owner (along with Stephen Scott and John Short) of another particate on the south, as well as a particate on the north side. She was probably related to Andrew, Hawise, Thomas and Nichol, and may have been a widow or heiress. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Johannis Liddersdale’ in Hawick in 1493 when George Waugh in Hawick was surety for him at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In the next entry the same John in Hawick was himself surety for Thomas, who was fined for non-appearance. In 1494/5 the pair of men were allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of consorting with the Elliots of Branxholme. John ‘Jock the Deacon’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, with the events themselves happening 2 years earlier. He may have been a Burgh Officer of some sort, given his implication in the treatment of the prisoner in Hawick steeple. His nickname suggests he may have been Deacon in one of the Trades. It seems likely he was related to the earlier John in Hawick. John (17th C.) leather merchant in Hawick. In 1630 he acted for Thomas of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire) when he had a ‘clare constat’ for quarter of the lands of East Mains, from the Viscount Drumlanrig. He was presumably related to Thomas in some way, and probably closely related to Andrew (currier in Hawick) and William (currier and Burgess of Selkirk) who were witnesses. John (17th C.) schoolmaster in Hawick, who was one of the witnesses to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He is the first schoolmaster on record in Hawick, and although it is not known what sort of school he was in charge of, it was presumably the Parish School. In 1639 he was ‘Mr John Liddersdale’ when he witnessed a baptism for James Burn in Hawick. Margaret (16th C.) holder of 1½ particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Nichol (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the south side of the main street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Philip (16th C.) recorded in 1552 when his wife (‘vxori Phelippi Liddersdaill’) was listed as being owed money by William, younger of Branxholme. He may be the same Philip listed as owning 2 particates of land on the north side of the main street in Hawick’s...
Liddesdale

1537 Charter. Robert ‘the Corbie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. However, when produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Thomas (15th C.) fined in 1493 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John was his surety and he also acted for himself. Both men were ‘in hawic’. He was probably related to the later Thomas. In 1494/5 both he and John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh for the crime of consorting with John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh for the crime of consorting with John were allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-in 1491 the Lordship was swapped by Archibald Douglas, 5th Earl of Angus, for Kilmarnock and was then granted by the King to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. When the area was laid waste by the English in 1514 it was described as ‘12 miles of Lienth, within the Middill Marche of Scotland, whereupon was 100 pleughes’. Another rental roll of 1541 (transcribed in the Exchequer Rolls as well as the Buccleuch Muniments) lists more than 140 farms and their values and tenants at that time, mostly Elliots in the north and Armstrongs in the south, with a few Nixons, Croziers and others. An English record of 1592 describes that ‘the chief surnames in Liddesdale standes upon Armstronges and Elwoodes’ and ‘is the most offensive countrie against both West and Middle Marches’. The area was long a Lordship, possessed by the Soulises and Douglases, and later the Earls of Bothwell, forfeited by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and passing to the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh in 1632; the document describing this lists the owners of all the farms at that time. The Lordship is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1663. The area was surveyed in 1718, when most of the farms were possessed by Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. These maps fora valuable record of the farm boundaries at that time, as well as the location of farmhouses and woods 300 years ago. It is said that Sir Walter Scott’s carriage was the first wheeled vehicle seen in the area in 1798 – ‘The Armestranges, that aye hae been A hardy house, but not a hail, The Scotts’ honours to maintaine, Brought down the lave o’ Liddesdale’ [T], ‘Of Liddesdale the common thieves Sae pertly steals now and reaves, That nane may keep Horse, nolt, or sheep, For their mischieves’ [SRM], ‘The outlaws come frae Liddesdale, They herry Redesdale far and near; The rich man’s gelding it maun gang, They canna pass the puir man’s mear’ [LHTB], ‘The Teviot lads are frank and free, The Ettrick chaps are fu’ o glee, But far aboon them a’ to me Are the merry lads o’ Liddesdale’ [DA], ‘Oh, Liddesdale, thou land of mist, I lo’e thy benty

Liddesdale (li-diz-dāl) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) son of Thomas of Liddesdale. He was recorded along with his son Adam in 1307/8 when they are reported to have sworn to ‘Monsire John de Wygeton and Monsire Simon de Lyndeseye’ that they would keep the King’s peace in Liddesdale. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English record of 1307/8. Despite swearing to some Englishmen to keep the peace, he captured Chaplain John ‘of Layingby’ at ‘Quele’ (presumably near the Wheel Kirk) in Liddesdale, beat and wounded him, took him to ‘Caversmore’ in Scotland and ransomed him for 54 marks. The ransomed man complained to the English King and Council. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas of Lydlsdale’ in an English case involving his grandson Adam. It is unclear where he lived, but likely on the Scottish side.

Liddesdale Turnpike Trust (li-diz-dāl-tun-pik-trust) n. former organisation responsible for the road development between Limekilenedge and the Note-o-the-Gate to Forge Bridge in Canonbie Parish. There were 26 miles of road in Roxburghshire, and a little over 5 miles in Dumfriesshire. The Trust was set up under an Act of Parliament in 1803. George & James Oliver of Hawick acted as Clerks in the mid-to-late 19th century. The initial subscriptions were paid off with the income from the 7 toll-bars.

Liddin (li-din) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. His name could be an error for some similar surname.

Liddle see Liddel

Liddle (li-del) n. Ebenezer (b.1791/2) gardener and farmer living on Wilton Damside in 1841. In 1851 he was at Upper Damside, farmer of 17 acres. He is listed as a gardener in Wilton in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Lillas in Wilton in 1812. John (17th C.) misister of Hobkirk Parish. He refused to pray for William Mary and was removed, leading to the Parish being vacant for 1689–94. John (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Carlisle. In December 1808 he was held up at Branxholme by 2 men with pistols. They tied him to a tree and robbed him of over £100. This was the most famous local case of highway robbery. The thieves were never caught, despite a large reward being offered by the carriers of Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) overseer at Boghall. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1775 and she died in 1794. He is probably the Thomas, who married ‘Mary’ Turnbull and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Mary (b.1776); Thomas (b.1777); and Margaret (b.1779). Thomas (d.1835) grocer and corn dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Maragert Davidson in 1822. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1825), who married baker George Paterson; Isabella (b.1827), who later also married George Paterson; James (b.1829); Margaret (b.1831); Agnes (b.1832); and Jemima (b.1833). His wife and children are recorded at about 8 High Street on the 1841 census (see also Liddell).

Lightpipe (lî’-pîp) n. name sometimes given for Blackgrain Moss, a part of Winnington Moss. There were once cottages here. The boggy area just to the east of the Auld Caa Knowe was Lightpipe Moss, so marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (a cottage is marked ‘Lightpipe’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; there are Lightpipes elsewhere, e.g. near Kielder and formerly a Lightpipe Haa just south of Jedburgh, their origin possibly being a place where drovers would stop for a smoke).

like (lik) interj. as it were, so to speak, used conversationally, peculiarly as a punctuation at the ends of sentences (this is widespread in colloquial English in various periods and regions).

like (lik) adv., arch. likely – ‘…raile leike as ther seam was ti girm the bits o moppies …’ [ECS], ‘…or take a demuirrd dwam, fair leike ti faa off the spake …’ [ECS], adj., arch. similar, of the same sort as just mentioned – ‘ITEM, that ilk merchand that buys cuntrie geir with tronie wecht, sall sell it again in small with the lyik wecht’ [BR1640], ‘The Minister complained upon occasion of ye Common Riding of distributing strong Liquor …and …what might be done toward the suppressing of ye like practice …’ [PR1724], ‘The herds of Wester Burnfoot, at that time, made the like use of the common for their black cattle and sheep’ [DCW1765], ‘…and the possessors of Flex had the like use and privilege’ [C&L1767], ‘And queerer like creature naebody might see, Than this queer-lookin’ hurklin’ bodie’ [JoHa] (this last sense was formerly common; also spelled ‘lyik’; cf. Ick).

like (-iik) suffix used to emphasize or qualify, ‘having the appearance’, ‘so to speak’, e.g. ‘auld-like’, ‘daft-like’, ‘wise-like’ – ‘O mercy! come doon, and ye’ll see it yersel’ – O but its an awesome-like bodie’ [JoHa], ‘Fu’ cozie is our wee bit house, though humble-like it be’ [JJ], ‘…twa-threie bleith-leike faililus i glarry moleskins smoked their claey peipe’ [ECS], ‘It’s a leikely-leike thing that bacca ull turn dearer or slowly turn frae a smerlt-like young man into yon dried-up fidget o a thing’ [DH], ‘…mebbe a kenning relieved, for it was a gey dirty-like gangrel’ [DH] (cf. sic-like, likely-like and wice-like).

the like (thu-lik) n. something equivalent or similar, the same as was already implied, a match, equal – ‘hev ee ever seen the like o yon?’, ‘ITEM, the lyik to be done to the resseteris of the theft of corne brought into the town by any personnes' [BR1645], '...gif ever he do the lyk he sall pay the doubl of the penaltie ...' [BR1645], 'The like o' that! the pen's again thrown by ...' lill (lil) n., arch. a hole in a wind instrument, particularly the bagpipes, chanter or flute – 'A blyther lad ne'er buir a drone, Nor touched a lill; Nor pipe inspir'd wi' sweeter tone Or better skill' [CPM].

Lilliard (li-lee-ard) n. the Maiden Lilliard of Maxton who supposedly saw her lover killed at Ancrum Moor and waded in to avenge him, being killed in the process – '...And when her legs were cuttit off She fought upon her stumps'. A small monument commemorates her supposed grave, about 400 yards east of the A68, near the line of Dere Street. Unfortunately it seems very unlikely that she ever existed, since the place name predates the battle; the monument is essentially a replacement for the earlier 'Lilliard's Cross' and the lines appear to be cribbed from 'Chevy Chase', but it's a good story nevertheless.

Lilliard's Cross (li-lee-ardz-kros) n. former wayside marker at Lilliard's Edge. The name dates back to at least the 12th century, and was still in use in the 16th. There are records in the 14th century of the location being used for March days. It was also used to refer to the Battle of Ancrum Moor – 'The Battells stricken in this Shire are Lilliarts Corse, where the English were defeat ...' [MGC1649] (it is 'Lillyat Cros' in 1378 and 'Lylzeartis Croce' in 1547/8).

Lilliard's Edge (li-lee-ardz-ej) n. farm by the A68, between Jedburgh and St. Boswells, with a nearby caravan park. Dere Street passes near here, and it is next to the site of the Battle of Ancrum Moor, as well as of the monument to 'Lilliard'. The name is generally applied to the high point on the A68 here, which reaches 172 m (565 ft). Just off the road to the west is the Monteath Mausoleum, and a little further south lies the Lilliardsedge Park caravan park (the origin of the name is probably from the Old English personal name 'Lil' plus 'geat', meaning 'the gate belonging to Lil'; it appears as 'Lylzeartis Croce' in 1548 and 'Lilliartis Crosse' in 1632; it is also written as one word, 'Lilliardsedge').

in 1788 was ‘late Herd in Templehallshiell now in Harrot Park’ and in 1790 was in Langburn. By 1801 he was shepherd at ‘Winebrough’ (i.e. Windburgh) in Hobkirk Parish, when his sons James and William was listed on the Militia ballot. He is recorded as shepherd on the Wauchope estate according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His children included: James (b.1776), listed as his son in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799, as well as 1801; Isobel (b.1778); Andrew (b.1780); William (b.1782), a shepherd, listed as his son in 1801; Alexander (b.1784); Mary (b.1786); Helen (b.1788); Hugh (b.1790); and Douglas (b.1794), also a shepherd. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish, probably son of Alexander. His children included: Betty (b.1808); Alexander (b.1810); John (b.1813); Andrew (b.1815); James (b.1817); and Walter (b.1819), who was a butcher in Lilliesleaf. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His wife was Isabella Scott. Their children included Alexander (b.1838). Alexander (19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Grieve. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); John (b.1844); William (b.1845); Margaret (b.1848); and Alexander (b.1849). In 1851 and 1861 his widow was living at Dykecrofts. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as tenant farmer of lands near Bedrule, along with Thomas Turnbull, ‘indweller in Newtoun’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Kirkton in 1721. It seems likely that the same Andrew married Isobel Briggs in Kirkton in 1735. His children, baptised in Kirkton, probably included Isobel (b.1722), Thomas (b.1729), Janet (b.1745) and Andrew (b.1748). Perhaps the same Andrew was living at Stobs in 1736 and 1741 and had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including John (b.1736), Marion (b.1739) and Gilbert (b.1741). Douglas (b.1794) son of Alexander, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He became a shepherd at Wauchope and lived at Hawklaw. In 1820 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of John Taylor, farmer at Unthank in Rulewater. Their children were: Alexander (b.1821); John (b.1822); James (b.1824); Douglas (b.1825); Isabel (b.1828); Robert (b.1831); Elizabeth (b.1834); and Mary (b.1837). George (1704/5–39) shoemaker at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. His children Thomas and 2 others died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Hugh (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Helen Telfer in 1817, the married being recorded in both Southdean and Hobkirk Parishes. His children included Alexander (b.1818). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Isabella was baptised in 1693. James (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Marion Collier in 1733 and his children included William (b.1734) and Christian (b.1736). James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son Andrew was baptised in 1747. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Grieve in 1765. James (b.1776) son of Alexander, shepherd at Wauchope. He was servant at Wauchope in Hobkirk Parish, as recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and son of Alexander in the 1799 Lieutenancy Book. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was listed as son of Alexander at Windburgh in Hobkirk Parish, with his brother William also listed. James (1815–99) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother Robert, he emigrated to Canada, settling in Gloucester Township, Ontario. He returned to Scotland, married Jane Bell in Crailing Parish in 1844 and emigrated permanently in 1845, bringing his mother and sister Janet. He purchased land along with his brother, this being called Century Farm (now part of the Industrial Park on Stevenage Drive in Ottawa. His children were Margaret, William, Andrew, Elizabeth, James, Robert, Isabella Duncan and Sarah Jane. He was for a long time Superintendent of the East Gloucester Presbyterian Church. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1619. He was listed among many Turnbulls and others, under Walter of Bedrule, who were accused of taking hay from Huntliehill. Since he appeared personally, he was not denounced as a rebel. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the John who married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. James (b.1697) and John (b.1697), baptised in Bedrule, were probably his children. John (17th/18th C.) married Mary Young in 1705, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. Probably the same John had several children baptised in Bedrule: Isabella (b.1706); Margaret (b.1708); Andrew (b.1711); Mary (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Isabella (again, b.1722). John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Mather in Bedrule in 1729. John (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), Marion William (17th C.) married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. His children, baptised in Bedrule, included Robert (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1700). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1777. John (d.1808) Hawick resident. He married Helen Reid, who died one day after him. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. John (19th C.) Hawick resident, member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Margaret Symington in Wilton in 1807 and their children included: Thomas (1807–62), who died in Kelso; and Andrew (1809–c.73), who died in Nenthorn. John (19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Young and their son Robert was baptised in 1853. Robert (17th C.) married Agnes ‘Willieton’ in Hawick in 1791. Robert (1818/9–76) son of William and Margaret Nichol who lived in at least Cavers and Castleton Parishes. There appears to be no record of his baptism. He worked as a farm labourer at Riddletonhill near Maxton. In 1841, along with his brother James, he emigrated to Canada, other family members following later. He settled in Gloucester Township, Ontario, where he and his brother purchased a farm; he also worked as a stone mason. He married Christina Kinmond and his children were Jane, Margaret, Isabella, Elisabeth, William, John, Jessie, Robert and Christina. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Probably the same Thomas married Janet Wright in Bedrule in 1691. His children, baptised in Bedrule, included Robert (b.1695) and Margaret (b.1700). Thomas (17th/18th C.) member of Hawick Kirk. In 1722 he was living in Cavers Parish. He married Isobel Thomson and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1722, with witnesses John Cunningham (perhaps the minister’s son) and Walter Scott (perhaps the minister’s servant). Perhaps the same Thomas had children William (b.1715) and Isabel (b.1719) baptised in Cavers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Betty Shortreed and their children included Peggy (b.1788) and George (b.1790). Thomas (b.1831/2) from Berwick-on-Tweed, he was a railway engine driver. In 1861 he was living on Wilton Terrace. His wife was Agnes and their children included William and Thomas. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He may be closely related to John and Thomas, who are also listed. Walter (18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Bedrule in 1730. Walter (b.1819) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Eliza Davidson (from Mertoun) and their children included: Agnes; Alexander (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); and William (b.1853). William (1652/3–1720) tenant in West Lees. His wife, Janet Turbull, died in 1719, aged 55. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the William listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax records under the Laird of Newton’s farms in Bedrule Parish. He may be the William who married Isabel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691, and whose children included Walter (b.1691), Thomas (b.1693), Walter (again, b.1696), James (b.1698), William (b.1702), John (b.1705) and Bessie (b.1708). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He could be the son of William Lillico born in Abbotrule in 1665. He was herd at the Flex in 1700 and in 1709. He married Isobel Rutherford in Bedrule in 1691. Their children included: Andrew (b.1691); Margaret (b.1700); William (b.1702); James (b.1703); Agnes (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were William and Francis Henderson, smiths at the Flex and in 1709 were James Gray in Whitlaw and William Henderson, younger in Flex. William (18th C.) married Jean Ferguson in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Elspeth Beattie in Castleton in 1763. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Marion (b.1766), Janet (b.1770), Sarah (b.1772), an unnamed child (b.1774) and William (b.1776). He is probably the William who married Jean Aitchison in Hobkirk Parish in 1770 (but then must have had an earlier wife also). William (b.c.1770s) shepherd at Hartsgarth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same William was a labourer at Harden in Castleton Parish on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same man as the William who died in about 1832. William (d.c.1832) resident of Castleton, Cavers and Bedrule Parishes. He was living at Bedrule Mill in about 1829. His wife was Margaret Nichol, the couple being rebuked for their first child being born in fornication. Their children included: Janet (1800–80), baptised in Castleton Parish, who emigrated to Canada with her brothers and became matron of a home for orphans; William (b.1802) also baptised in Castleton; Adam (b.1812), baptised in Cavers; James (1815/6–99), who emigrated to Canada in 1841; and Robert (1818/9–76), who emigrated with his brother. He was already dead in 1841 when his wife, 3 children and 2 grandchildren emigrated to Canada. An entry in the Bedrule Parish records shows his widow being giving some of the poor money. William (1782–1861) son of Alexander and brother of James and Douglas. On the 1801 Militia ballot he was listed as son of Alexander at Windburn in Hobkirk Parish, along with his brother James. He became shepherd at Gatehousecote and later Templehall. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer living with his family at South Berryfell and in 1851 was shepherd at Dobdurn. By 1861 he and his wife were living at Burnflat in Hawick. In 1814 in Hobkirk Parish he married Christian (or perhaps Katherine) Telfer, who was from Newcastleton; she died in 1873, aged 81. Their children included: Helen (b.1815); Alexander (b.1816), who was at Ladjfield in Oxnam Parish in 1851; James (b.1818); Isabella (b.1820); Elizabeth (b.1823); Christian (b.1825); Helen; William (1827–95); Elspeth (1830–1903); and Andrew. The family are buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. William (1827–95) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of William. He was a shepherd at Wormscleuch in 1861 (also spelled ‘Lilico’, ‘Lillico’, ‘Lillicow’ and ‘Lillyco’).

Lillico’s (li-lee-köz) n. tobacconist’s shop at 3 High Street in the 20th century. The property was previously a bicycle shop. Note that there have been members of this family in the Hawick area for centuries. Helen Lillico was wife of Walter Turnbull of Bedrule around 1600, and there were Llilcoes farming in Bedrule Parish from at least the late 17th century.

Lillie (li-lee) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as Blakehope in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Richard (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Smeaton and their children included Peter (b.1836). Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Chesters in Ancrum Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia.

Lillielaw Park (li-lee-law-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was ‘Lillilaw park’ in 1779, when valued at £72 19s 8d and liferented by Robert Trotter of Bush. It lay to the north-west of the Minto-to-Jedburgh road, bounded by Craigend farm, Cleuchhead farm, Spout Burn Park, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road and Minto Glen garden. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. A cottage called ‘Lillylaw’ is still marked there on modern maps.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-leef, lii-z-le) n. village about 8 miles north of Hawick, and also the name of the associated parish, part of Roxburghshire. The village was once known as ‘Easter Lilliesleaf’, to distinguish it from the Wester part, which was associated with the Barony of Riddell. The Riddells of that Ilk long held lands there, with an early document naming specific places in the early 13th century. The Barony of Lilliesleaf was owned by the Diocese of Glasgow from at least the early 12 century until the Reformation. The village once held several fortified houses, the largest being a 2-storey tower at the eastern end of the village, part of the walls of which still existed until about 1810. The moors around the village held many ‘conventicles’ in the late 17th century, and was the scene of several skirmishes with the dragoons. John ‘sleich’ and Alexander Alemoor are recorded there in 1502. A charter of 1595/6 lists men granted land within the village being Walter Riddell of that Ilk, William Riddell of Bewlie, Archibald Douglas in Friarshaw, William Riddell in Greatlaws, Alexander Hogg, Thomas Young, William Smail, John Hogg, Thomas Bairnsfather, James Hill, James Henderson, Alexander Smail, Adam Smail, William Robson, William Middlemas, William Douglas and John Redford. The feuars lands were valued at £1283 15s (exclusive of Walter Scott of Chapel’s share) in the 1643 county valuation. Additionally in 1643 Walter Scott held lands valued at £200, Walter Riddell was portioner of ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26, and Alexander Hood held £10. The feuars lands were valued at £800 in 1678. In 1694 the residents recorded there were Andrew Davidson, William Leithead, Andrew Riddell, Andrew Gray, Thomas Smail, David Gray, Alexander Smail, James Leithead, Thomas Marshal, William Mason, Robert Leithead, Walter Davidson, James Riddell, James Redford, James Hill, John Scott and William Henderson, along with merchant John Smail, smith John Wright, cooper John Glendinning and wrights Walter Leithead, John Smail and James Leithead. The 1797 Horse Tax Rolls records the horse owners there as John Cochrane, John Anderson, Andrew Redford, John Muir, Robert Stirling, Andrew Riddell, James Lunn, William Grieve, John Hislop, John Kid, James Stirling, Thomas Chisholm, John Scott, James Hogg and James Easton. In 1801 there were 12 men listed there (between the ages of 19 and 30) on the Militia ballot. In the 19th century century there were weavers there working for Hawick manufacturers. The village consists largely of a single street, and has many 18th and 19th century buildings. The present church was built in 1771, with later additions, and the graveyard contains the remains of the Riddells of that Ilk.

A war memorial, made of Doddington stone and designed by J.P. Alison, was erected after WWI. A schoolhouse was built in 1822 as well as the ‘Currie School’ for girls in 1860, and the village still has its own primary school. The Common of Lilliesleaf was divided among the feuars and heritors in 1701/2, and only a few acres remained by the early 19th century. There is a multi-purpose building, Currie Memorial Hall. The Plough Inn and the Cross Keys are the local pubs, although there were 4 public houses in 1834. The village was the very first destination for a Ride-out in 1891. It became a regular location for many years, ending in 1984, but revived again in 2004 and 2005.

Lilliesleaf (li-leez-lee) n. Adam (13th C.) witness to a grant of lands at Cresswell in Hase sendean. This was probably in the late 1220s. His name is given as ‘Ada de Lillesclive’. It is un clear how he might have been related to Stephen or other nearly contemporary men with the same designation. Alexander (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof. He witnessed a grant in the period 1185–1215 by Geoffrey the cook of Whiton to the hospital of Jerusalem at Torphichen. He also wit nessed the confirmation of this grant by Patrick Rid dell and another grant of lands in Whiton by Patrick (who was thus surely related). He fur ther witnessed the grant of lands in Haddington by William of Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey, also in 1185–1215. Probably the same Alexander was the father of this same William, who was men tioned in other charters for Walter of Riddell and Adam of Durham in the early 1200s. Alexan der (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. In 1408 he was Rector of the Church of ‘Calder Comitis’ when he was confirmed in the Archdeaconry of Dunkeld, also holding the Prebend of ‘Ryny’. He was described as being ‘of knightly birth’, suggesting he may have been a son of Riddell of that Ilk. He was also granted safe passage from France to Scotland and back in 1408. This was along with the Archdeacon of Lothian and Clerk George of Borthwick and he was referred to as ‘Master Alexander of Lillescliffe’. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) son of Walthof and brother of Alexander. His name is also written ‘Ga unfried’. In about 1200 he granted 3 oxgangs of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey. This was confirmed by Patrick of Ryedale and then Eustace of Vescy in the early 13th century. There was also separate confirmations of grants to Melrose Abbey of 4 oxgangs of land in Whitton and then 13 acres and half a parcel of land in Whitton in the pe riod 1195–1207. In the period 1185–1215 he wit nessed a grant for William of Lilliesleaf. It seems likely that the designation ‘of Lilliesleaf’ (and the connection to Whitton) meant that he was di rectly related to the Riddells of that Ilk. John (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf in the late part of the 12th century and until at least 1204. He was recorded as ‘Master’ in the period 1201–05 when he witnessed a grant of lands in Clifton in Roxburghshire to Melrose Abbey. Sometime in the period 1182–96 he settled a dispute over the teinds of the lands in Roxburghshire previously belonging to Ulkill Wallace. He was also probably the ‘Master J., Rector of Lilliesleaf’, referred to in a papal letter of 1204. He could be the John, brother of Simon, Parson of Lilliesleaf, who witnessed the renewal of the gift of the Church of Loquhariot in Midlothian in the period 1204–07. He may have effectively taken the surname of Lilliesleaf from his church. Stephen, who held the churches of Borthwick and Nenthorn, may have been his son. He may be the same as John of Huntington, who was Clerk of Bishop Jocelin of Glasgow. It is also possible he was son or other close relative of Walter of Lilliesleaf, recorded about 25 years earlier. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclif’ in the county of Roxburgh when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the earlier John, Rector of Lilliesleaf. His seal showed an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S'IOTHIS D'LELISCLT’. He is probably the ‘Johanne, de Lillesclife’ recorded in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johan de Lillesclyne’ in the county of Peebles when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It is possible that this was the same man as the John in Roxburghshire, if his name is entered twice. Richard (15th C.) recorded as ‘de Lyllisclue’ in 1436/7, when he resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to his superior ‘Mungo de Redale’ (Riddell probably). Simon (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. Sometime in the period 1204–07 he witnessed a charter establishing the Church of Hassendean. His brother John was also a witness, and it is possible he was the man who was formerly the Rector of Lilliesleaf. They may have been part of the Riddell family, who were the superiors of the lands of Lilliesleaf at that time. Stephen (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘master, clerk, persons’ in 1204 when he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham; he was there ‘Stephano de Lillesclif’. He was also witness to a document relating to Soutra Hospital in about the 1220s. He is there recorded as ‘Stephano de Lillisclve’. This may be the same man who held the churches of Borthwick (in Mid-Lothian) and Nenthorn, and who was possibly son of John of Lilliesleaf. He does not appear to have held the church of Lilliesleaf himself. His name occurs no fewer than 42 times in the early 13th century, but disappears by 1227. Stephen (13th/14th C.) mason, listed in an account of wages paid at Linlithgow Castle in 1302. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Stephen. Thomas (d.1222) Parson of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1222. He succeeded as Archdeacon of Glasgow, but died the same year. Walter (12th C.) Chaplain and Clerk who witnessed the confirmation of the church of Loquhariot in Midlothian in the period 1147–51. In about 1162 he witnessed a grant of the Church of Linton, where he is ‘Galteve’. In a document of 1177/8 regarding a dispute involving Kelso Abbey it seems clear he was a clerk of Jocelin, Bishop of Glasgow. He was not Chaplain of Lilliesleaf, but surely took his designation from there. Waltheof (12th C.) father of Alexander and Geoffrey, also written ‘Waldeve’. He is mentioned in a charter of around 1200. ‘Waltheof’ could be the same as ‘Walter’, and it seems likely (given the connection with Lilliesleaf and Whiton) that he was part of the family of Riddell of that Ilk. William (12th/13th C.) recorded in the period 1185–1215 when he granted lands in Haddington to Melrose Abbey. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmus de Lillesclif’. Witnesses included Alexander and Geoffrey, sons of Waltheof of Lilliesleaf, who were presumably related to him. His seal bore a monk-like figure holding a crosier and the words ‘SIGILLUM WILLELMII’. William (13th C.) son of Alexander, recorded as witness to a charter for Walter of Riddell in the early 1200s. He is also mentioned in a document in the period 1214–49 when Matilda Corbet resigned her lands in Lilliesleaf. He was also mentioned in an account of wages paid at Linlithgow Castle in 1302. It seems likely he was related to the earlier William. John (d.1222) Parson of Lilliesleaf, recorded in 1222. He succeeded as Archdeacon of Glasgow, but died the same year. Walter (12th C.) Chaplain and Clerk who witnessed the confirmation of the church of Linton, where he is ‘Galteve’. In a document of 1177/8 regarding a dispute involving Kelso Abbey it seems clear he was a clerk of Jocelin, Bishop of Glasgow. He was not Chaplain of Lilliesleaf, but surely took his designation from there. Waltheof (12th C.) father of Alexander and Geoffrey, also written ‘Waldeve’. Lilliesleaf Kirk Lilliesleaf Kirk was paid on 17 windows at the former manse in 1821, with glebe lands of about 11 acres. Tax was paid on 17 windows at the former manse in 1821, with glebe lands of about 11 acres. Tax was then moved back up until 1883, when it was built into a wall, and 30 years later moved into the new apse. There was also a Relief (or Burgher) church set up in the village in the early years of the 19th century. There were formerly additional chapels in the Parish at Chapel (the site later called Chapel Farm), Hermiston and Riddell (near Riddell Mill). The parish was linked with Ashkirk 1901–83, with Bowden in the period 1977–94 and with Ancrum from 1994. Since 1999 it has been linked with Ancrum, Eckford and Crailing. The oldest existing communion token is of lead and round, bearing the inscription 'Lil. K.' and the date 1796. A roll of the ministers of the Parish is: Uchtred c.1160; Walter, Chaplain 1174; J[ohn], Rector c.1190; I[del], Chaplain c.1201; J[ohn], Rector 1204; Si-mon, Rector c.1206; Stephen c.1220s; Thomas, Parson 1222; William of Rutherford, Parson 1296; John Bridgewater, Prebend 1319; John Kirkmichael, Rector at least 1410–18; Michael Ochiltree, Rector 1428–29; Nicholas Tunnock, Rector 1429–30; William Spalding, Rector from 1430; Robert Turnbull, Rector c.1460–80; John Brown, from 1480; Thomas Riddell, Clerk until 1514; George Riddell, Clerk 1514–22; John Riddell, Clerk from 1522; Thomas Duncanson 1568–75; Archibald Simson 1575–82; Thomas Wilkie 1588–c.1638; William Wilkie 1640–71; John Chisholme 1674–89; Matthew Cooper 1691–95; William Hunter 1695–1736; Robert Riddell 1737–60; William Campbell 1760–1804; James Stalker 1805–16; David Baxter 1816–42; Adam Gourlay 1842–81; Robert Blackstock 1881–88; Arthur Pollock Sym 1888–1928; James McKenzie 1929–61; Ewan S. Trail 1961–69; Henry M. Jamieson 1969–76; Thomas W. Donald 1977–87; James Watson 1988–94; W. Frank Campbell 1999– (the lands of ‘Lilslie-chapel’ are recorded in 1601; it is ‘K: of Lilsly’ on Pont’s c.1590 manuscript map, while ‘Lilsly K.’, ‘Lillisly Kirk’ and ‘Lilslie K.’ are on Gordon’s c.1650 maps and ‘K. of Lilsly’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lilliesleaf Library

Lilliesleaf Library (li-leez-leaf-II-bru-ree) n. library established in about 1818 in Lilliesleaf. It was stocked with books that had been donated or purchased by the fees of subscribers.

Lilliesleaf Limited (li-leez-leaf-li-mi’-eed) n. company set up recently by Sir Walter John Buchanan Riddell, Baronet of Riddell.

Lilliesleaf Loanside (li-leez-leaf-lön-siid) n. name for part of Lilliesleaf. Journeyman mason James Hislop was there in 1799.

Lilliesleaf Mill (li-leez-leaf-mil) n. former corn mill in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably an alternative name for one of the mills near there, most likely Riddell Mill. In about 1530 William Scott in Ashkirk sold the rights to half of the mill for £40 Scots to his brother Walter. John Riddell was there in 1580. It was confirmed to the Riddells of that Ilk in 1595/6. Simon Riddell was there in 1580. It was confirmed to the Riddells of that Ilk in 1595/6. Simon Riddell was there in 1580. It was confirmed to the Riddells of that Ilk in 1595/6. Simon Riddell was there in 1580.

Lilliesleaf Moor (li-leez-leaf-moor) n. area to the south-west of Lilliesleaf village. A spot about 3½ miles from the centre of the village was regularly used for conventicles in the 17th century. It is said that the dragoons came upon the field meeting one Sunday in about 1676, but meeting resistance from the attendees, they fled. It may be that this was the local common, which was divided up among neighbouring farms. Parts of the lands there, once belonging to Chapel and Easter Lilliesleaf farms, were owned by Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill and acquired by the Riddells of that Ilk (also written ‘Muir’).

Lilliesleaf Pairish (li-leez-leaf-pä-reesh) n. parish in northern Roxburghshire. The parish was historically bounded by Selkirk, Bowden, An crum, Minto, Wilton and Ashkirk. The Parish had a church from at least 1116 and this belonged to the See of Glasgow until just before the Reformation; it was formally removed from Glasgow’s control in an act of 1641. Part of the lands were granted by David I to the monks of Kelso Abbey about 1160. The ‘manors’ of Lilliesleaf, Ancrum and Ashkirk were temporarily transferred by the English King to the Abbots of Melrose and Newbattle, as recorded in 1335/6. A charter of Pope Eugenius in 1440 revokes the union of the church there (union with what is unclear), then another charter of union by Pope Sixtus IV in 1479. Presumably the lands originally formed an estate. Robert ‘de Lylliscleue’ is recorded resigning the lands to ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7. In 1643 the total value of the Parish was recorded as £8325 18s 4d; the ‘Parsonage Teinds of the parish’ were listed as £1397, with ‘Stipend’ of £33 6s 8d. However, the teinds of the Parish were separately listed at £94 (perhaps sterling) in 1643, when they were held by the Duke of Roxburgh. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £7700. In 1678 the total rents were valued at £8265 18s 4d, including the Kirk lands and teinds valued at £1257 13s 4d (and owned by the Earl of Roxburgh). The moors were frequently used for ‘field conventicles’ in the 17th century. The patronage of the Parish Kirk went to the Kers of Roxburgh after the Reformation. It is stated in 1834 that older residents could remember when there were 14 towers in the Parish. At the end of the 18th century there were 17 heritors, 630 inhabitants, 14 weavers, 13 joiners, 2 coopers, 11 tailors, and 4 licensed houses. There are Parish registers dating from 1737 (those from back to 1648 apparently became damp and decayed). The population in 1755 was 521. A book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ was written by Rev. Arthur Pollock Sym in 1913, while Rev. James McKenzie wrote articles for the Transactions in the 1940s and an oral history project was published in 2015.

Lilliesleaf Schuil (li-leez-leaf-skil) n. school in Lilliesleaf, existing since at least the early 17th century. Patrick Nichol was recorded as schoolmaster there in 1634. John Henderson was master in the period 1702–1716. There were more than 40 pupils in the 1830s. The master there over the period 1805–50 was George Scott, and in the 1860s was James W. Mackay. There was a school-house built in about the 1820s. The present building was constructed in 1962 and extended in the 1990s. The pupils from the modern primary school attend Selkirk High School.

lilt (lilt, lil’) v., poet. to sing cheerfully, to trill a tune without singing the words, figuratively applied to birds, running water etc. – ‘As arm in arm we walk’d alang, The mavis liltit up his sang’ [JoHa], ‘...thaye crye owt for joy, thaye lilt alsua an’ sing’ [HSR], ‘The mavis, lin-tie and laverock lilt Their love lays in cadence sweet’ [TK], ‘May you ever, happy river, lilt your joyous song’ [WL], to trip, jog, skip, n. cheerful singing, lively song – ‘O blythe is the lilt o’ his ain mither tongue’ [WS], ‘Oh kindly is the Teviot tongue, Her lilt is aye sae bonny’ [RH].

liltit (lil-tee’, -ti’) pp., arch. celebrated in song – ‘Poor Sally Gray, and Geordie Gill, Are liltit here on ilka hill’ [JR], ‘Wi’ sic abandon o’ delight He liltit up his sang, lassie’ [FL], ‘The form -eet is employed for the ending of the preterite and past participle of weak verbs, e.g. lilteet (= lilted), sterteet (= started), etc., etc.’ [ECS].

lily o the valley (li-lee-o-thu-vaw-lee) n. Convallaria majalis, native flowering plant with large green leaves and small, white, bell-shaped flowers. It is traditionally worn at the ‘Kirkin’ of the Cornet. The origin of this custom is unclear, but since the Kirkin itself dates only to the 1880s, there is no reason to believe that the wearing of this flower is an ancient custom. It is also known as ‘Our Lady’s Tears’, with a connection to Mary and hence St. Mary’s Kirk. In religious paintings it symbolised humility.

Lilyot’s Cross (lll-yits-kros) n. place near Muirhouselaw in Maxton Parish, where March Days were held in the 14th century to sort out Border feuds. Its name is the origin of the ‘Maiden Lilliard’ legend.

lime (lim) n. a substance made by heating and then crushing limestone, used to improve soils for agricultural use. This practice became widespread in the 18th century, leading to the development of rural locations where limestone was quarried and burned on site, such as Limekilnedge and at Larriston. Lime was later used in the building trade.

Limekilnedge (lim-kiln-ej) n. area near the highest section of the road to Newcastle, which was formerly part of the drove road to Liddesdale, important for the coal from Plashetts that was brought over by pony. The summit, with a triangulation pillar, reaches 430 m (1182 ft). The name derives from the former lime-workings there, sometimes called ‘Stobs Limery’, with quarries and some ruined kilns still visible. George Hymers and George Minto were there in 1801. James Ashcroft was a lime burner there in 1841, Andrew Elliot was based there in the 1850s and William McDonald in 1861. In the early 1860s there were a large number of labourers (plus support people and family members) living in huts there, while working on the nearby tunnel; 71 people are listed on the 1861 census. It was described as a village in an 1868 directory – ‘Frae Limekilnedge to Teviot The rowin hills sae green . . . ’ [WL], ‘...And lang or the birds leave the hedge, I’ll stride owre the Limekilnedge’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘the Limekilnedge’, it is ‘Limekill’ in 1801; it is marked as ‘Lymkill hedge fells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Limekilnwud (lim-kiln-wud) n. former lands in Jedforest, probably near Limekilnsyke. It is listed as ‘Lymekylwod’ along with Ferniehirst in the Exchequer Rolls of 1539. ‘Edwarde Ollyver of Lymkylwod’ is listed among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544.

Limes (thu-linz) n. Victorian house formerly overlooking Wellfield, now on Raeson Park, also once known as ‘Viewfield’. It was the home of the Blenkhorns in the 1880s, and later of William Boyd Sime and Robert G. Maxwell. There is some confusion over whether this was also a former name for Sillerbuthall House.

lime-stane (lim-stän) n. lime-stone – ‘But when a fermer pits doon a load o lime-stane in a field, then I gie up a’ thegither . . . ’ [DH].

Limey Sike (li-mee-sik) n. small stream that rises near the Nine Stane Rig and flows to the south-east to join Roughley Burn.

Limiecleuch see Lymiecleuch

lim (lim) n., arch. a lame person, cripple – ‘... A’d naether bumble, brizz, bate, nor blushi-bit bi play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’ [ECS], ‘Ti play the limm = to mar; destroy; spoil’ [ECS] (also written ‘limm’).

limber (lim-bur) adj. lithe – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, but limmer an lither’ [ECS], supple, plaint – ‘Often used when referring to boots, when it signifies pliable in the sense of yielding, giving comfort’ [ECS], (the b is sounded; noted by E.C. Smith, suggesting it was more prevalent locally than in standard English).

limmer (li-mur) n., arch. a lowly fellow, rascal, scoundrel, rogue – ‘But what gard thou steal the laird’s Jock’s horse, Fala, &c. And limmer, what gard thou steal him, quo’ he’ [CPM], ‘... Till oot again the loupin’ limmer’ [JBS], ‘Tam said, for aughts that he cou’d hear, She was a wanton limmer’ [JoHa], ‘... Now, fye for shame, Alice’, cried the matron, betwixt jest and earnest, – ‘idle limmer that ye are’’ [JTe], ‘Did ye ever see sic a limmer?’ [WNK], ‘... looking gruffly at his mother, he exclaimed, ‘Ye auld limmer e’see what e’ae hae brocht me to’’ [BM1899], ‘His een grew bricht, looking gruffly at his mother, he exclaimed, ‘Ye auld limmer e’see what e’ae hae brocht me to’’ [BM1899], ‘His een grew bricht, And noucht wad please till the saucy limmer ...’ [WL] (from French).

Lindean (lin-deen) n. village to the north of Selkirk, being about the largest village between Selkirk and Melrose. It was a former station on the Selkirk branch line of the Waverley Line, which ran from 1856–64. The original church was set up there about 1119 by 7 monks from Tiron, who were later moved to found Kelso Abbey in 1128. This could be the ‘Lyndene’ in the Barony of ‘Bolden’ (i.e. Bowden) recorded in 1541 when the tenants included George, William, John and Thomas ‘Elwand’. Nearby is the site of a TV mast, acting as the main television-signal transmitting station for the Borders, built in 1961.

Lindean Cleuch (lin-deenklooch) n. small stream joining the Ale Water on the north side, opposite Riddell Mill – ‘And sair he dreaded Lindean Cleuch – That fairy-haunted glen; – He said the little fiddling imps Were neither deils nor men’ [JLu] (also written ‘Linden’).

the Linden (thu-lin-deen) n. Hawick Linden, a ‘junior’ rugby team, formed in 1921, and playing in the Borders District League. The club also had a basketball team in about the 1940s. In 1963 they joined with the Trades in renting facilities at the Volunteer Park. Their strip consists of a royal blue shirt and socks. A history ‘Roots and Branches’ was written by B. Russell in 1997 (note the pronunciation).

Lindisfarne (lin-deen-kre-sin’, -din-) n. street built in 1893 and named after Linden Park. It is a road with a tight bend joining St. Ninian’s Road with the ‘Killin Hoose Brae’.

Linden Park (lin-din-pawrk, -deen-) n. house built as the residence of Walter Laing of Dicksons & Laings, off the Denholm road past Trow Mill. The site previously held an ancient burial cairn, dug out to prepare the foundations. It was built in 1885, designed by John Guthrie and named after the linden or lime trees that grew there. There were additions to the house, designed by J.P. Alison in 1896. There were landscaped grounds, including a small artificial lake, with islands in it. The house was one of the first locally to be lighted by electricity. It also had an ornamental garden in a Chinese style, with pagodas and bridges crossing the pond. A folly built to resemble a ruined keep was also built on the grounds. The house was later home of Walter Laing’s son, manufacturer John Turnbull Laing. It is rumoured to have been the scene of a nighttime visit by a King in a horse-drawn carriage from Hassendean Station to visit his paramour. It burned down in 1921, with the then owner Harry Smith convicted of arson. It was demolished in the 1950s and replaced by a development of bungalows including Linden House, Greenskareas and the Archery). A stone bearing a verse from ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, carved for the house in 1885, was moved to behind the War Memorial near the Museum in 1978 – ‘...bye auld Hornshole, – a picter o gray an green – wui a glisk o the Moniment; bye Lindean an Weensland’ [ECS] (note the common local pronunciation -deen-).

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawrn) n. also known as Holy Island, the cradle of early Christianity in north-eastern England, established by St. Aidan, St. Cuthbert and St. Wilfred in the 7th century. It can be reached by foot at low tide, and contains building work dating from every century since at least the 11th. Wilton (‘Wiltuna’) is probably first mentioned about 843 in a deed of Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne. The whole of Teviotdale appears to have been attached to the Priory’s see until transferred to Durham, perhaps in the middle of the 11th century.

Lindisfarne (lin-diz-fawrn) n. large house on the left of Stiches Road, formerly a residence of the Innes family, now split into 2 flats. It was built in the latter part of the 19th century, with architect John Guthrie.

Lindsa  (lindz-a) n.  Gwladys stage name of Gladys Lindsay Watson.

Lindsay  (lin-zee) n.  Alexander of Dunrod (15th C.) held lands of Tofts in 1478, from the superior Archibald, Earl of Angus. This may have been the same as the lands in Kirkton Parish, although this is unclear. Andrew (14th/15th C.) son of William of the Byres and an unknown mother (he was probably illegitimate). He is probably the Andrew who was granted the lands of Stouslie and Groundestone by his father William in an undated charter, probably around 1390.

Sir David  (d.bef.1357) 1st Earl of Crawford, son of Sir Alexander. He was a prisoner of the English 1307–14, signed the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320, was Custodian of Berwick in 1329, Constable of Edinburgh Castle in 1346 and was an Ambassador to England in 1349 and 1351. Probably the same ‘David de Lyndeseye’ was recorded in 1335/6 when he paid 20 shillings on his tenements of land in Chamberlain Newton, which had been forfeited into the hands of the English King. In 1324 married Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Alexander of Abernethy, who had earlier married Andrew of Leslie. It was presumably through her that he inherited the Roxburghshire lands. His children included: David, who was killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir Alexander, who inherited his mother’s property; Sir William, ancestor of the Lindsays of the Byres; and a daughter who was mother of Sir Alexander Ramsay. David  (d.1490) son of John, he was 2nd Lord of the Byres. In 1484 he was Baron of Chamberlain Newton when he granted Over and Nether Newhall (later called Burnhead and Burnfoot) to James Scott of Kirkurd. In 1488 he witnessed the charter for the Baron of Branxholme. He married Janet Ramsey, but died without issue. He was succeeded as Lord Lindsay by his brother John. His seal bore a horizontal stripe with 3 stars. David  (b.c.1780) servant at Minto Kaims according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. David ‘Davie’ (20th C.) baker in Denholm. His baker’s shop at Townhead was owned by Alex Carruthers at the beginning of the 20th century, then Peter Scott and then Robert Martin, before he took over in 1934. The premises were later used as the village shop and post office. James  (14th C.) granted the lands of Chamberlain Newton to William de Lindsay in about 1380. He was presumably Baron of these lands at that time, although it is unclear which James he might have been, and how he was related to William. Probably the same James witnessed the confirming charter of lands in Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in 1381 (when he was described as grandson of King Robert II, who granted the charter). It is possible he was the Lord of Crawford (son of James and grandson of David, recorded in connection with Chamberlain Newton in 1335/6), who witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. James  (d.bef.1488) Rector of Hawick, perhaps from 1447, when it was made a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell (St. Mary’s was described as the ‘Church of Hauwc’). He was appointed by William, Earl of Douglas and Avendale, and described as his kinsman (3 separate Lindsays of Crawford had married into the Douglas family in the previous century). In 1470 he held the Rectory of Benholm (in St. Andrews Diocese) and swapped it with Gilbert Kennedy for the Canonry of Bothwell and Rectory of Hawick. There was also a dispute in 1470 over whether he really held an M.A. In 1476 it is stated that he was preparing to resign the benefices of Bothwell and Hawick and John Scott requested that he be given them by the Pope (although that does not appear to have happened). In 1480 he was Canon of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell and Prebendary of Hawick when he supplicated to the Pope to be allowed to hold 2 incompatible dignities. He was later Dean of Glasgow, taking over from Thomas Vaus in the mid-1460s. He may be the James of ‘Colban-ton’, Rector of Douglas, secretary to the Earl of Douglas, who witnessed a charter granted by the Earl to William Cranston in 1443. He is probably the ‘James Lindissay, canon of Glasgow’ who witnessed a notorial instrument in 1446/7 made at Newark in which Oswald Abernethy proclaimed that his only superior was the Baron of Hawick. He is still recorded in 1487, and died shortly afterwards. James  (18th C.) carpet-weaver in Hawick. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1774. Perhaps the same James, married to Elizabeth Lindsay, had children: John (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1769), John (again, b.1770) and James (again, b.1772). baptised in Ednam. John  (d.c.1335) from the family of the Earldom of Crawford, son of Sir Philip of Stapplegordon. He was a Canon of the Diocese of Glasgow who was elected as successor to Stephen de Dunnideer in 1317. This was done without the knowledge that Pope John XXII had already appointed Englishman John de Egglescliffe. However, Egglescliffe never took up the appointment, on account of Scotland being at war with England, and was translated to Ireland. He was then confirmed as Bishop in 1323. As Bishop of Glasgow, he had authority in the area around Haddington. He played an active role in national politics, supporting Robert the Bruce and Edward Balliol. He died when the Flemish ship he was on was attacked by English pirates. His seal showed a bishop beneath a canopy, with 2 shields, a fish and a bird, with the words ‘S JOHIS DEI GRA.’

John (14th C.) son of Sir James of CRAIGIE. He owned the Barony of Langnewton. In 1360 he granted the lands of Langnewton to William Cochrane of that ilk. John (d.1482) Lord Lindsay of the Byres, son of Sir William of Abercorn and the Byres. In about 1415 (after the death of his father) he had a charter for the Barony of Byres and other lands, which included Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1444 in a charter for Borthwickshiels and in 1468 he is recorded granting the lands of ‘Stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) to John Turnbull. In 1471 the Lords decreed that Thomas Turnbull ‘of Faulish’ should pay for 3 years of the ‘male of the lands of Chaumerlane Newtoun’. Also in 1471 he had a precept of sasine for lands in Borthwickshiels. He was High Justiciar of Scotland North of the Forth. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Stewart, 1st Lord Lorn. He was succeeded in turn by his sons David, John and Patrick. His children included: David, 2nd Lord; John, 3rd Lord; Patrick, 4th Lord; Margaret, who married Walter Stewart, 1st Lord Innermeath and secondly married Henry Wardlaw (Baron of Wilton); Christian, who firstly married John, Master of Seton and secondly married Robert Cunningham, 2nd Earl of Glencairn (who was Baron of Hassendean); and Mariot, who married John Hay, 1st Lord Hay of Yester. He must have lived to be quite old. John of Wauchope (d.1505) from the ancient Dunfriesshire family, probably the 12th Laird. He was witness to a sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus in 1499. He held the lands of Fiddleton and others prior to them being sold about 1506. He was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Dumfries in 1504, to give suit for his lands of Hoddam, Langrigs and Wauchope. In 1505 he was hanged at Dumfries for the murder of Bartholomew Glendinning and his brother Simon. Bartholomew was the local Sheriff on official business to ‘poind’ a third of the lands at the insistence of Margaret, widow of his father, John Lindsay. Thereafter his goods and lands were forfeited, although Wauchope was recovered by the family shortly afterwards. The lands in Ewesdale appear to have included Meikledale, Arkelton, Terrona, Flask, Howgill, Glen-divan, Sorbie, Burngrains, Bush, Bliss and Wrae. John (15th/16th C.) listed in a letter of remission of 1510 for assisting rebels. He is named along with David Scott of Galalaw, plus John and Walter Scott. John (17th C.) among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was a tenant in ‘Spittal-lands’. Patrick (1566–1644) son of John, related to the Lindsays of Edzell in Angus. He was minister of Guthrie near Arbroath, and then St. Vigeans. He attended several General Assemblies, and was a strong supporter of the episcopalian views of James VI. He became Bishop of Ross in 1613 and then Archbishop of Glasgow in 1633. He must have temporarily held the superiority of lands in Minto, since in 1634 he gave a charter of confirmation for Barnhills to William Bennet. However, in 1638 he was disposed for urging his presbyters to use the ‘New Service Book’, and although ill he escaped to England and died in poverty in York. He was the last Bishop until the Restoration. Sir Simon of Arthuret (13th/14th C.) son of Sir John, Lord Chamberlain, who was the first of the Lindsays to be granted lands in Wauchope. He is recorded in English documents of 1278/9 and 1281/2. He was appointed Captain of Eskdale by Edward I in 1298. His brother Sir Philip had fought with Edward against the Scots, but went over to Bruce’s side at Bannockburn. He himself was powerful on the English side, being effectively Warden of the Western Marches. In 1300 he was appointed as Keeper of the late John Wake’s lands of Liddel and Hermitage, separately referred to as ‘the fortresses of Lydel and Eremitage-Soules’ and ‘the castle of Hermitage, the mote of Lydel, and the fortresses of Lydel and Eremitage, separately referred to as ‘the fortresses of Lydel and Eremitage-Soules’ and ‘the castle of Hermitage, the mote of Lydel, and the lands of the valley of Lydel both in England and Scotland belonging to the late John Wake; this probably refers to the early castles of Liddel Strength and Hermitage. But he must only have held this position for a few years. He became a prisoner after Bannockburn and forfeited all his lands etc. However, his son Sir John received a charter of Wauchope from the King in 1321. His descendants held the lands until the end of the 17th century, and claimed to be the oldest representatives of the Lindsay Clan.
(14th C.) granted lands including those of Borthwickshiel in the 4th year of the reign of Robert II (i.e. c.1375), the lands having been resigned by Laurence Abernethy. It is unclear which William he was, possibly William of Abercorn and the Byres, or William of Rosie and Logie. It is also unclear if the family ever had a direct connection with the Borthwick valley. In the 10th year of Robert II there was a confirming charter from James of Lindsay (presumably a relative) to him for the lands of Chamberlain Newton. Sir William of the Byres (d.1414) son of Sir William and Christiana Mure. He was granted lands in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, including Stouslie and Groundistone, by King David II ‘through forfeiture of certain lieges’. In an undated charter (probably around 1390, based on the witnesses) he granted Stouslie and part of Groundistone to his son Andrew, while part had previously been infefted to William Gourlay. He was also recorded as superior of the lands of Borthwickshiel. He married Christiana, daughter of Sir William Keith. He was succeeded by his son John, who was 1st Lord Lindsay of the Byres. William of Garmilton (d.bef. 1468) re-signed the lands of ‘Stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton to John Turnbull. His relative John Lord of the Byres was Baron of Chamberlain Newton at the time. William (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1724 he married Agnes Armstrong, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Adam (b.1728) and William (b.1732). William (18th/19th C.) published ‘View of America, to which is prefixed a Narrative of a Voyage from Dumfries to Saint John, New Brunswick, in the Year 1819’ in Hawick in 1824. Rev. William (b.1876) born in Coatbridge, he graduated in 1901 and became assistant minister at Shettleston and South Leith. He then became minister of St. John’s in Hawick 1906 and was elected minister of Hawick 1906 and was named minister of Newbattle 1913. He was speaker at the 1908 Colour Bussing (formerly also spelled ‘Lindsayey’, ‘Lyndesaye’, etc.).

Lindsay’s Corner (lin-zeez-kör-nur) n. blind corner in Denholm, on the way into the village from Hawick. A shop there was run by the Lindsay family for most of the 20th century, first as a bakers and then a grocers. The business also used to have a van, which drove around the rural areas, this being particularly during WWII. Although the shop was sold in the 1990s, the popular name is still used.

line (lin) n. a note, authorization – ‘A got a line fраe the doctor’, ‘here’s ma bookie’s line’.

Lineart Moss (li-nur’-mos) n. boggy area on Hawick Common near Pilmuir farm, also called ‘St. Leonard’s Moss’. It was mentioned in descriptions of the Common in the dispositions given in 1676, where it is also referred to as ‘the Lin-cart’ (one name is presumably a corruption of the other).

linen (li-nin) n. a cloth made from thread obtained from the fibres of the flax plant. In the 18th century and before, it was common for everyone to have their own small plot of flax or ‘lint’, which they would ‘swingle’ and ‘heckle’ to produce linen thread to weave into clothing. Linen weaving was formerly known at Hassendean, Northhouse, Newbigging, Hawick Shiel and Denholm, among other places. There was also some linen industry in Hawick itself, with a weaving shop manufacturing linen checks from about the middle of the 18th century. A little later there was a factory making ‘inkle’ (or linen tapes), before hosiery took over. The cloth came in either the rawer green form, or was bleached and sold particularly at St. Boswells Fair. The last weavers of linen in the Borders were still active up until about the 1830s in the St. Boswells area (see also lining).

Linfit (lin-ř) n. former school in Yarrow Water, situated near the church in the settlement of Yarrow. The school had a good reputation and had many boarders in the early 1800s, with as many as 100 pupils (as describe by Rev. James Russell). This included Christian Scott from Tods-hawthaug and Clement, Tom Brown from the Tower Inn in Hawick and the ‘Dandin Dinmont’ (i.e. Davidson) family from Liddesdale. The teacher who made the school so well-known was James Scott, who served there 1784–1818. He took over from Alexander (‘Sandy’) Wilson.

ling (ling) n., poet. heather – ‘Ho! For the blades of Harden. Ho! for the pikes that cross. Ho! For the king of lance and ling – A Scott on the Et-trick moss!’ [WHO], ‘...He heard the whirr of the grouse’s wing And the drone of a bee as it lit on the ling’ [WHO], ‘Whaur the mists on the black hills hing, And the broon burns that, oot o’ the ling, The scent o’ the peat moss bring’ [WL], another species of sedge, e.g. hare-tail cotton-grass

lingle-backit (ling-gul-baw-kee’, -ki’) adj., arch. having a long, weak back.

lingelt (ling-ul’) pp., adj., arch. hanging in a clinging way – ‘The lingelt tails o’ er skirt’ [GW] (also written ‘liglet’).

Linglie (ling-kee) n. former farm over the Ettrick to the north of Selkirk and the name of the road there, as well as a nearby hill containing a linear earthwork. It was long owned by the Burgh of Selkirk. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1708 (note that it may sometimes be confused with Singlie).

Linhope (li-nup, lin-hop) n. farm between Teviothead and Mossspaul, once owned by William Aitchison, who was long involved in local farmers groups. It was listed along with Frostylee and Phaup in the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and in the marriage contract of Anne Scott of Buccleuch in 1663; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into ‘the tenement of Blackgraine’. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when that superiority was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. James Grieve was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718 when it covered 2669 acres and was bounded by Phaup, Skelfhill, Gorenberry, Billhope, Carewoodrig, Burnfoot in Eves, Eweslees, Lynmicleuch and Biiks. William Little was there in 1724. John Elliot was there in 1733. It was leased from the Buccleuch Estates to John Elliot (of Borthwickbrae) and Walter Grieve (of Brampholne Park) in 1744. James Dickson was there in 1786. William Aitchison was recorded as farmer there in at least 1792–97, with William Grieve as a herd at the same time. William Little was shepherd there in 1861. The ‘Horn Brig’ lies just to the north, and on the hillsides near here can be seen the hollowed-out tracks of the old ‘Read Roads’. It is also here that the route of the Mossspaul ride-out comes down the hill to meet the main road – ‘…braw, braw braes o’ Linhope and lofty Mossspaul’ [T], ‘Little know you of our moss troopers’ might; Linhope and Sorbie true, Tundhope and Milburn too, Gentle in manner, but lions in fight’ [ES], ‘The lasses o’ Lin’op are braw, An’ them o’ Mosspaule they are bonnie; There’s Haz’lop an’ Fa’nah an’ a’, Aul’ Commonsde yields na to mony’ [JoHa], ‘The lark ascends from Linhope’s verdant sward …’ [IWS] (the name derives from Old English ‘hlynn hop’, meaning ‘the valley with the waterfall’; the name appears in 1604 as ‘Lennop’, ‘Lindhope’ in 1653, ‘Lenhope’ in 1661 and 1663, ‘Linhopie’ in 1687, then ‘Linhop’, achieving its modern form by the end of the 17th century, but being ‘Linehope’ in 1718).

Linhope Braeheid (li-nup-brä-heed) n. former farmstead just south of Linhope, to the east of the A7. George Scott was shepherd there in 1851 and John Cairns in 1861.

lining (li-ning) n., arch. linen, formerly used to make shirts and undergarments – ‘…28s. Scots for 3½ ells of sarking linening’ [BR1638] (many spelling variants exist; see also linen).

link (lingk) v., arch. to move with speed, skip, trip along, walk briskly – ‘A the day fu’ blithe and cheerie, I gaed linkin’ but and ben!’ [JT], ‘…And they a’ gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’ [JT], ‘In the bitter back end He will link doun the glen …’ [WL].

link (lingk) n., arch. a loop in a chain used for hanging a pot over a fire – ‘…hang the supper in the tailor’s link – That’s full twa feet aboon ilk burning spark. To keep the supper back, an’ keep the lown at work’ [JR], a loop in a river or land enclosed by such loops – ‘All the links of the bonny Teviot and Slitterick’ [ES], ‘The lambs loup as light by the aul’ foggit thorn. The rose blooms as bright i’ links o’ the burn’ [JoHa], ‘The wild green links o’ Liddisdale’ [HSR], a loop in a figureative sense – ‘…and the lave o the followers are weel strung oot doun the links o the road’ [DH], v. to walk arm in arm – ‘…told her to stand there till he thrashed Jock for daring to ‘link his lass’’ [HAST1890].

links (lingks) n., pl., poet. fields, especially grassy lands near the sea – ‘…we fand it in the links o’
the wud’ [HSR], ‘Then leave the links and lanes beside the sea, And rove the pathless solitudes with me’ [HSR].

Linlithgow (lin-lith-gō) n. town in West Lothian, between Edinburgh and Grangemouth, one of the 4 Scottish Burghs created by David I. They have been riding their marches since at least 1541. The festival is now held on the first Tuesday after the second Thursday in June, involves riding to Blackness, having a procession three times round the Cross, and has reciprocal ties with Lanark’s festival. Population (1991) 11,866.

Linlithgow (16th C.) listed as a ‘grief’ (i.e. grieve) in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is given as ‘Liinthqw’.

Linlithgow measure (lin-lith-gō-me-shur) n., arch. standard for measuring the capacity of dry goods, based on a standard of the boll kept in Linlithgow. This was used in Scotland from 1661, with the standard being about 145 litres for wheat, beans and meal, but about 212 litres for barley, oats and malt.

linn (lin) n. a waterfall, pool at the foot of one – ‘And now young Keeldar reach’d the stream, Above the foamy lin; The Border lances round him gleam, And force the warrior in’ [JL], ‘The only tongue that they might hear Was the lynne’s deep murmuring fa’’ [JTe], ‘The rill is now a raging flood, And roars adown the craggie linn’ [JTe], ‘…But aye, as yet, escap’d that linn Owre whilk sae mony fa’s’ [JoHa], ‘The burnie loups, wi’ fitfu’ din, Adown the linn sae craggie’ [JoHa], ‘…’Bout bogles, broumies, ghaists an’ fays, an’ kelpies o’ the linn’ [JJ], ‘The wee waterfa’ or the fifty-feet linn’ [HSR], ‘The brown trout lay at the leap o’ the linn Oaring the stream with a lazy fin’ [WHO], ‘…Doon their ain romantic lins Is the fairst spot o’ a’’ [TK], a steep ravine, narrow gorge – ‘Lyn, two opposite contiguous cliffs or heughs covered with brushwood’ [JAŠ], ‘…That forms the linn where hazels twine Whith woodbine and with thorn’ [JJW] (from Old English; also spelled ‘lin’, ‘lynn’ and ‘lyne’; the former meaning occurs in place names such as ‘Robert’s Linn’, ‘Hawkhass Linn’ and ‘Penton Linns’, while the latter occurs in e.g. the ‘Leap Linns’, ‘Lynnwood’).

lint (lin’, lint) n., arch. flax, a small plant with blue flowers, Linum usitatissimum, formerly grown for its fibrous stems, which were prepared to make linen. Used either as animal fodder or for flax prepared for spinning. Formerly it was much grown around Hawick, with even each hind having his own plot. In the early 19th century a ploughman in Hobkirk Parish received a cupful of lint seed as part of his payment in kind. The cultivation of the plants and preparation of the lint was once a very labour intensive operation, with the stalks lying ‘nine nights’ in a pond or pit of water, then using a ‘break’ (or ‘breek’) to split the fibres, followed by the ‘swingling’ – ‘…Two stones of lint £7’ [BR1639], ‘Item whatsoever person that steillis any of their neighbours petitis, turfis, green kail, corne, lint, hemp, …’ [BR1640], ‘A party is fined for steeping lint in Teviot at the yard foots’ [JW1702], ‘Ane bruisset reed he salna brik, an’ reekin’ liny he salna slocken …’ [HSR] (from Mediaeval English, the word survives in Linthill near Lilliesleaf, Linthaughlee near Jedburgh, Linthaugh near Ashkirk, Lint Haughs near Denholm, and Lintdub Knowes near Harden).

Lintalee (lin-tu-lee) n. house about a mile south of Jedburgh on the banks of the Jed Water and formerly in the Jed Forest. It was residence of Sir James Douglas from around 1316 when he was Warden of the Marches. It is also the site of a battle where Douglas’ men defeated those of the Earl of Arundel in the Spring of 1317. Some were ambushed using intertwined birch branches in a narrow pass, perhaps at the Willowford Burn, where Sir Thomas of Richmont was killed. Another English group under a priest named Ellis was discovered feasting near Lintalee itself and also defeated. The Englishmen who escaped with tales of defeat convinced Arundel to turn his huge army South again. The manor house there continued to be used by the Lords of Jedforest into the 15th century. In 1457 it was given for the use of Andrew Ker of Cessford, Bailie of the Lordship. William Ker was recorded there in 1494/5. It was valued at 25 shillings in 1538 and also 1541, when the tenant was Ralph Ker. John Douglas was tenant of the Earl of Angus there in 1617, after the removal of James Ker. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £160. In 1694 it ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ was taxed for having 10 hearths at the house there; this seems likely to have been the man who was minister at Roberton Kirk. John Turner paid tax for 21 windows there in 1748. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788 (also known as ‘Linthaughlee’, it is ‘Linthalchlie’ in 1439, ‘Lintole’ in 1457, ‘Lintonlee’ in 1493, ‘Lintole’ in 1517, ‘Lintonlee’ in 1539, ‘Lintole’ in 1541, ‘Lintillie’ in 1617, and ‘Linthlauglie’ and ‘Linthhauglie’ in 1694; it is ‘Lyn-taly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is probably just ‘the clearing where flax grows’).

Linth-brake (lin’-brä-k) n., arch. a flax-breaking instrument – ‘Linth-brake’. An instrument used for breaking or softening flax, in place of the fluted rollers of the flax-mill, previous to the operation of rubbing and swingling, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (cf. lint-breek).

Lintdykes (lin’-diks) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Lintedikes’ in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

Lint-fever (lin’-fee-vur) n., arch. former name for a condition that people sometimes got when they were first involved in ‘swingling’ lint – ‘The first attempt at swingling was often accompanied by an illness called the Lint-fever, supposed to be owing to the dust entering the nostrils and eyes’ [JAHM].

Linthaugh (lin’-hawft) n. former name for an area near the river in Denholm, where flax was steeped in the 18th century. It probably refers to the flat piece of land lying on the north side of the Teviot near the Grinding Burn. It is mentioned on the plan to reset the boundary between Minto and Hassendeanbank in 1796 (also ‘Lint Haughis’).

Linthaugh (lin’-hawft) n. former farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly opposite Synton Mill (it is marked on Pont’s c.1590 map, Gordon’s c.1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Linthhauch’).

Linthaughlee see Lintalee

Linthill (lin’-hil) n. Victorian mansion between Lilliesleaf and Midlem, once home of the Homes. There is a walled garden nursery there. It may be that this was the same place once called Midlem Mill, with the main house rebuilt after having been sold by the Elliots in about 1756. The land was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf in the early 18th century, when the part on the south side of the Ale, referred to as ‘Union Hall’, was united with Midlem Mill on the north side, the new estate being called Linthill, or ‘Linthills’. Dr. Hunter paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. The estate may also at some point owned by the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. The estate was inherited through marriage by the Riddells of Camieston (a cadet line of the Riddells of that Ilk). The lands were valued at £171 10s in 1788, split between Union Hall (valued at £121 10s) and Ryechester and Quartersides (valued at £50). William Riddell sold it to William Currie in 1822, and Curries lived there through much of the 19th century. A plan of the estate from 1820 is in the National Archives. Sir Frederick Graham held the hunting rights there in the mid-1900s – ‘And sweeter walks ane canna get Than walks by fair Linthill, Where murmuring soft the river sings To rose and daffodil’ [FL] (also written ‘Lint Hill’; it is ‘Lintheath’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Lintie (lin’-ee, lin-tee) n. linnet, often used figuratively to suggest cheerfulness – ‘...And linties sang their tunefu’ lays Amang the wuds o’ Teviotdale’ [JoHa], ‘Ye burnies poplin through the grove, Where cushions coo and linties sing’ [JoHa], ‘...he’s off to see if he can cage the lintie and bring her here’ [JEDM], ‘The hawk that built upon the rock, And the lintie in theshaw’ [HSR], ‘...That calls to mind the lintie’s sang And tender lambkin’s bleat’ [AO], ‘And the lintie in her mother’s throat, it’s cheerfu’ music still, Has socht a nest in the yellow gorse beside the murmurin’ Till’ [JYH], ‘The mavis, lintie and laverock lilt ...’’ [TK], ‘I hear the linties in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS].

Lintinhaa (lin-tin-haw) n. Lintinhall, former farmstead in roughly the same location as Stintyknowe (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, and given the similarity of names, possibly an error).

Lintobank (lin’-u-bawngk) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, near Riddell. Robert Wilson was recorded there in 1581/2. The name appears as ‘Lintobank tun Riddell nuncupate’ in Linton

1602 and appears to have replaced the earlier ‘Eshcheto’. In 1636 it was a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and was still a 4-pound land when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669 (it was ‘Lyntophbank’ in 1581/2).

Linton (lin’in, lin-tin) n. village and parish in east Roxburghshire on the Kale Water, north of Morebattle, famous for its Norman Church and legendary ‘worm’ (which, sadly only dates to the 17th century). The lands there were owned by the Somervilles in the early 15th century and by the Kers of Linton in the 16th and 17th centuries. A nearby loch was listed among lochs in Roxburghshire in 1649, but has been long drained. An account of the parish was written by A.O. Mackie and M.J.H. Robson in 1960 – ‘The wode Laird of Laristone Slew the worm of Worners Glen, And wan all Linton parochine’ (T) (the origin is probably Old English ‘Ilyn tun’, meaning the farm by the lake, since much of the Parish was formerly under water; formerly spelled ‘Lyntoune’ and variants).

Linton (lin’in) n. Adam (18th C.) tenant in West Buccleuch in 1728. He married Ann Martin and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1728. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Betty Scott and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included John (b.1813), Helen (b.1814), William (b.1816), Margaret (b.1818), Jean (b.1821) and Nancy (b.1830).

Adam (b.c.1810) cattle-dealer of Newton-muir. He was an agricultural labourer at Broadleehope in Castleton Parish in 1841. He was one of the earliest Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. His family was living at Newton Mains in Wilton Parish in 1851 (but he appears to have been absent during the census). In 1837 he married Margaret Aitken, who was from Wilton. Their children, mostly baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish, included: John (b.1838/9); Esther (b.1840); Sarah (b.1841); Cecilia (b.1843); John (b.1845); George (b.1847); Andrew (b.1848); William (b.1850); and Janet (b.1854).

Adam (b.1820/1) framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on ‘Mill Bank St’, probably the Mill Port and in 1861 was at 11 Back Row. He married Margaret Wood (from Jedburgh) in Hawick in 1850 and his second wife was Henrietta from Selkirk. His children included Mary (b.1860/1), Alexander (b.1818/9) born in Cavers Parish. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Allygrain. His wife was Jane and their children included Beatrice, John, Walter, Sarah and Jane.

Agnes (b.c.1780) resident of Hawick. In 1841 she was a widow living at about 17 Loan with her children William, Kirsty and Janet. Andrew (b.c.1785) shop-keeper on the High Street. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and a meal-dealer in 1841. In 1841 he was living at about No. 29, with his wife Margaret and children Jessie and Walter. He married Margaret Michie in 1814 and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, were: Jessie or Janet (b.1815); Mary (b.1818); Adam (1820–79), stocking-maker in Hawick; Walter (b.1824); and Walter (again, b.1827). He probably also had a daughter Christian (b.1819/20) who married Robert Johnston; his daughter Janet and son Walter were living with the Johnstons in 1851. Andrew (19th C.) married Mary Stevenson in Robertson in 1825. James (18th C.) from Ettrick Parish. In Cavers in 1728 he married Margaret, sister of John Elliot in Penchrise. James (19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His marriage to an unnamed woman is recorded in 1745. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His unnamed child with a Paterson was baptised in 1776. James (b.c.1770s) weaver at Northhouse recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. Perhaps the same weaver James was at Burnfoot Mill on the Militia ballot in Wilton Parish in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Henry and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1819. James (19th C.) married Margaret Hogg in Hawick in 1836. James (19th C.) married Barbara Wilson in Wilton in 1837. James (b.1814/5) born in Wilton Parish, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at the West Port and in 1851 on Upper Damside. He married Helen McConnel in 1838, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Margaret (b.1840), Agnes (b.1842), James (b.1843), Betsy (b.1845/6) and James (again, b.1850), Agnes (b.1852) and Alexander (b.1854). The last 4 children were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Braedlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was listed as a shepherd at Braedlie on the 1801 ballot. He could be the same man as the farm worker around Teviothead. John (b.c.1780) born at Kirkpatrick-Juxta in Dumfriesshire, he married Sarah, daughter of John Armstrong from Teviothead. He was a farm worker, probably shepherd, at Skelfhill, Whitriggs, Ramsaycleuch and Craikshiel, as well as probably Whitehillbrae and Pyat Knowe near Dodburn. He married Sarah, who was born in Teviothead, daughter of John Armstrong and Isabella Knox. Their children were: John (b.1805); Elizabeth (b.1807); Adam (b.1808); Helen (b.1810), baptised in East Bank Kirk; George (b.1812); Andrew (b.1814); Jean (b.1816); Alexander (b.1818), baptised in East Bank Kirk; Janet (b.1821), baptised in East Bank Kirk; William (b.1822); and Robert (b.1825), who married Helen Stoddart and secondly Barbara Little Armstrong and emigrated. He and his wife were still alive in 1861, residing with their son Robert at West Cote. John (b.c.1815) recorded as a publican at about 7 Sandbed in 1841. He was an agricultural labourer at the same address in 1851. Joseph (18th C.) recorded in ‘Bouand…’ (probably Bowanhill) in Cavers Parish. His son Adam was baptised there in 1727. Richard (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isabel Oliver and they had an unnamed child baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1818. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His marriage to an unnamed woman is recorded in 1712. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1798 and their daughter Jean was baptised in East Bank Kirk in 1806. Perhaps the same Robert was a drover at Harden Burnfoot on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He could be the son of John baptised in Roberton in 1774. Robert (19th C.) married Jean Park in Lllesleaf in 1839. Robert (b.1825) born at Craikshield, son of farm worker John and Sarah Armstrong. He was shepherd at West Cote in 1861. He married Helen Stoddart, with whom he had 2 children, John and Adam. He secondly married Barbara Little Armstrong, daughter of Francis, who was shepherd at Henwoodie. They emigrated to Australia, where he managed sheep stations for James Glenny Wilson (from Hawick). They then moved to New Zealand, where they still have descendants. Walter (b.1824/5) woolen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close. His wife was Jane (from Lochmaben) and their children included James and Jane. Walter (b.1826/7) joiner in Hawick. He married Joan Robson in 1851, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1861 he was living at 74 High Street with his wife Joan (from Wilton). Walter (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Bell in 1854. William (18th C.) married Mary Paterson in Hobkirk Parish in 1773. William (19th C.) shepherd at Millburn. He is listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. William (b.1805/6) framesmith on the High Street according to Slater’s 1852 directory (where he is ‘Linton’). In 1851 he was a ‘Woollen Power Loom Waver’ at 3 Bridge Street (perhaps the modern No. 20). In 1844 he married Janet Thomson, who was from Chesters. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included Margaret (b.1846), Agnes (b.1848) and Janet (b.1850) (also written ‘Linton’; note that this name is sometimes confused with Sinton in written records).
Linton’s Close

Linton’s Close (lin’-inz-klös) n. passageway in the mid-19th century, next to the current Bank of Scotland, 7 High Street, named after a one-time owner of the property (there could be confusion with Sinton’s Close, since 29 High Street is marked ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

the Linton Worm (thu-lin’-in-wu-rum) n. mythical creature said to have lived in a cave at Linton Hill, near the village of Linton in the 12th century and slain by Somerville of Larriston. A carving over the door of Linton Church commemorates the event. It is also known as the worm of ‘Wormiston’ – ‘Pure blows the summer breeze o’er moor and dell, Since first in Wormiswood the serpent fell’ [JL].

linsey-woolsey (lin-zez-wool-see) n., arch. a fine cloth made of a combination of flax and wool. It was manufactured locally by hand-loomens in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Lithgow (lih-gow) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘Mr’ in 1741 when he witnessed a baptism for workman William Graham in Hawick in 1741. He may have been son of Rev. Robert. Andrew (17th/18th C.) excise officer in Hawick. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being involved in late night drunkeness at Thomas Huggan’s house. He apparently went to break up the fight between Huggan and William Oliver. He was witness to the ‘irregular marriage’ of fellow excise officer Thomas Hume of Hawick in 1718. Helen (17th/18th C.) sister of Rev. Robert of Ashkirk and daughter of Alexander of Drygrange. She is said to have married James Anderson (although this could be confusion with a later James Henderson) and had 3 children: Thomas; John; and Jean, who married George Thorburn, smith in Ashkirk, whose grand-daughter married John Eckford, hosier in Hawick. Her nephew Hector Lithgow left a small fortune, which Eckford spent his life trying to prove a claim to.

Rev. John (b.c.1620) son of Thomas, portioner at Redpath, Earlston and Isobel Haliburton. He moved from a charge in Ireland some time before 1646 to become minister at Ewes Kirk. In 1664 he refused to conform to Episcopacy and was deprived of his living. This happened ostentatiously, with the messenger delivering the Act of Suspension right after the Sunday sermon with the congregation still present. He moved to his property at Redpath near Leaderfoot (near where another oued minister, Henry Erskine, lived). He continued to preach at conventicles and in 1682 was fined 5000 merks and sentenced to imprisonment on the Bass Rock. However, he escaped this harsh punishment, on the promise of leaving the country, probably residing in England. He returned to Ewes in 1689 after the Revolution, was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was also a member of the Assembly. He retired to Redpath in 1694 and died shortly afterwards. He married firstly Isobel Weir and secondly Isobel Scott, widow of James Johnstone of Westerral. His children included: Thomas, with whom he owned land at Bodisbeck; and Janet, who married Nichol Elliot of Unthank. Miss M. (19th C.) assistant teacher in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Rev. Robert (c.1680–1729) youngest son of Alexander of Drygrange and Margaret, daughter of Gavin Elliot of Grange. He had a sister called Helen. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1701 and became Chaplain to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto (his uncle). He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1707, called to Ashkirk in 1710 and ordained there in 1711. He was described as a moving preacher, who was pious, judicious and possessing a great deal of ingenuity. In 1711 he performed the baptism for a son of Walter Scott of Woll, recorded in 1623 as ‘Andro Lytle’ when Rowie Foster was found guilty of stealing a horse from the lands of Chapelhill. It is unclear if this was the local Chapelhill or another one. Andrew (b.c.1780) brother of John, tenant at Colterscleugh. He was listed being also at Colterscleugh on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Andrew (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Moorfield. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Andrew (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm and Selkirk once a week. area. He was still recorded at Teviothead Schoolhouse in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Betsy, William and Isabella. He is buried in Teviothead cemetery, along with an infant child who died in 1832 (as well as Betty Little, 2nd wife of David Scott from Thornhall). He was probably related to the Kirkton Schoolmaster. He was still alive in 1871. Simon (b.1842) born at Kirkton, son of Thomas, schoolmaster at Kirkton, with his mother being Margaret Turnbull. He was ordained minister of Ballantrae and died unmarried at Lanark Manse. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Langhope in 1579 when he was listed among the debtors to James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. Thomas of Meikledale (16th/17th C.) broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625, along with Robert Scott of Thirlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and George Davidson of Kames. Thomas (d.1673) son of the Laird of Meikledale. His gravestone was once readable in Ewes Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) tenant in Rashiegrain. He married Isabel Beattie. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Helen (b.1740); and Betty (b.1743). He may be the Thomas who hired the Hawick mortcloth twice in 1758. Thomas (d.1799) weaver in Hawick whose death is recorded. Thomas (b.1802/3) probably son of Thomas, he was master of Kirkton School from 1834. He was educated at Kirkton and in Edinburgh. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and remained schoolmaster until the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1861 he presented the stone slab, which had been the stool of repentance from Kirkton Kirk, to the Museum. He may be the Thomas who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Thomas; William T.; Simon, who was minister of Ballantrae; and Isabella. Thomas (b.1812/3) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd at Hisolp in 1861. His wife was Mary. Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsleigh in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘servitor to Walter Laing clerk to ye Duchess of Buccleugh, (and servitor to ye sd Walter tenant of Park)’ in 1716 when he married Jenet Scoon (daughter to a deceased Scoon) in Hawick. He was recorded in (Branxholme) Park in 1719. His wife’s name was also recorded as ‘Mary’ and ‘Margaret’ (although this seems likely to all be the same couple), with children: Margaret (b.1717); Margaret (again, b.1719); Jean (b.1721); and an unnamed child (b.1725). The witnesses in 1719 were James Henry and Robert Scoon in Brauxholme Town (who was probably related to his wife). Walter (18th C.) tenant in Denholm, recorded in 1745 and 1749. He married Janet Spinnie (or Spindie) and their children included: Ann (b.1743); Betty (b.1745); Agnes (b.1747); an unnamed child (b.1749); John (b.1752); and Isabel (b.1756). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, and hence probably had a local connection. Walter (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Jane Brown and their daughter Mary was baptised in 1841. Walter (19th C.) carrier in Newcastle. In 1852 he was recorded running a weekly service to NetherOakshaw, presumably transporting coals from the mine there. William (15th C.) recorded in Thornycleuch in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined for non-appearance at the Justiciary in Selkirk. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘of Tounhead’ when he leased half of ‘Tounhead’ to James Runcement, ‘now in Hassendean’. He is recorded in a bond of 1699 as ‘of Hassintounhead’ along with his wife Margaret Gray when he borrowed one thousand pounds from Henry Leck. In 1703 he sold the lands of Hassendean ‘Townhead to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and also borrowed money from James Gray of Nether Ancrum (which he seems to have had difficulty repaying). Henry Leck (tenant in ‘Stodrige’) tried to recover his debt in 1701/2 and this may have been done by 1710, since he recovered his tenancy rights to Hassendean Townhead. In 1705 a bill was sent to him by Gideon Scott of Highchester, via Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick, then passed on to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. Thomas of Knowe paid his teinds for Townhead in 1705, according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash (the Duchess’ Chamberlain). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. He was listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1707 he was called before the Castleton Kirk Session for making a ‘penny wedding’. He ‘promised that he should not be troublesome about any such thing in future’ and was dismissed to pay a fine to the civil magistrate! William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Gray and their children included: Janet (b.1709); Jean (b.1713); and John (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident at Linhope in 1725 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th William (b.c.1790) born in Westerkirk, Dumfriesshire who was a travelling merchant from Dumfriesshire who was called John Linnichen or Henry Macgraw) along this former high road from Hawick to Newcastle. He had attacked and robbed John Macdonald, a labourer at ‘High Tofts Hill’, the murderer was apprehended, walked back to Kirkton, then taken by cart to Hawick and on to Jedburgh for trial. William was apparently presented with a baton and excused from paying taxes for the rest of his life.

He inherited Whithaugh from his uncle and sold Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Bunyan and their children included Margaret (b.1749) and probably William (b.1746). William (18th C.) tenant in Denholm in 1761. He is probably the William who married Isabel Scott and whose children, baptised in Cavers, included James (b.1756), William (b.1761) and Archibald (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded as a ‘farrier’ (or perhaps ‘farmer’) in 1789 when he witnessed a baptism for Mark Sutherland. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (18th/19th C.) married Mary Lamb in Hawick Parish in 1795. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Clerk to Mr. Nixon Merchant’ in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed as a replacement for John Henderson, labourer, who was considered a deserter. In 1799 he was listed among those on the 1797 ballot who were now absent, being ‘Mercht. now in London’; he thus seems to have avoided serving. William (18th/19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those ‘In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish’. He was also listed as a mason in Denholm on the 1801 Militia ballot; he may have been related to John, also listed as a Denholm mason in 1801. William (b.c.1780) labourer in Denholm on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection, and may have been related to Charles, also of London. William (b.c.1790) born in Westerkirk, Dumfriesshire, when young he worked as a ploughman at a farm near Birneyknowe. In 1813 he assisted Capt. Walter Scott of Wauchope in catching a murderer (as recounted in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’). Scott enlisted the ploughman’s help when he caught up with the 6-foot Irishman (called John Linnichen or Henry Macgraw) along this former high road from Hawick to Newcastle. He had attacked and robbed John Macdonald, a travelling merchant from Dumfriesshire who was apparently 101 years old. The chase ended on ‘High Tofts Hill’, the murderer was apprehended, walked back to Kirkton, then taken by cart to Hawick and on to Jedburgh for trial. William was apparently presented with a baton and excused from paying taxes for the rest of his life.

He was later farmer for a while at Salensirot. In 1841 he was living at Clerklands and in 1851 was a labourer at ‘Newtonmoor’ in Wilton Parish. He married Janet (b.c.1800), daughter of George Thoburn, farmer at Stonedige (and she apparently died aged 99). Their children included: Archibald; Jane; George; Janet; William; James; Andrew; Ann; and Catherine Ann, who Robert Scott, vet at Cauldmill. William (b.1776/7) mason in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was living around the north end of Westside with his wife and adult children. His wife was Agnes (or ‘Nanny’) and their children included James, William, George, Robert, Charles and Bell. Rev. William (1745/6–1820) minister at Westerkirk from 1779. A sermon he preached, relating to the Battle of Trafalgar, was published in Hawick in 1806. William (b.1783/4) born in Newbigging, he was a flesher in Newcastleton in 1851 and on an 1852 directory. However, the same William, at about 15 South Hermitage Street, was listed in 1841 as a teacher. His wife was Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) and they had a daughter, Elizabeth. William (18th/19th C.) mason at Holinfoot, probably near Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (b.1800/1) from Westerkirk Parish, he was shepherd at Braildliehope in the Hermitage valley in 1851. He may be the labourer William listed as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1838. William (b.1818/9) builder in Denholm, son of William. In 1861 he was living around Leyden Road. His wife was Jessie and their children included William and James. William (b.1817/8) shepherd at Stanishope. He married Margaret Greig and their children included William, Elizabeth, Margaret, John, Jane and Robert. He may be the W. Little recorded at Hawkhass in 1868. William (b.1817/8) stockmaker in Denholm, son of Archibald. In 1851 he was living at about Westgate and arund Sunnyside in 1861. He married Margaret Johnstone (from Falnash Mill) and their children included Archibald, John, James, Violet I. and Daniel C. He could be the William from Denholm who won 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common Riding Games. William (b.1833/4) from Ashkirk, he was a shepherd at Linhope in 1861. William (19th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton roughly from the 1840s to the 1860s. His wife was called Mary. William (19th/20th C.) son of James of Carlsgill and Janet Keir. His mother was sister of William Keir of Whithaugh. He inherited Whithaugh from his uncle and sold

Little Cavers (li'-ul-kä-vurz) n. small house on the side road between Honeyburn and Ashybank. It has long been coloured pink, and may have once had a small hamlet around it. The name may come from the former name for Kirkton Parish, or have simply developed as an epithet for a hamlet near the main village of Cavers. In 1684 Adam Leyden, William Laidlaw and Andrew Riddell, 3 tenants of the farm there, were listed as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was the site for the parish school in the 18th century as Denholm grew, so that a location was required between Denholm and Cavers. However, the school moved to Denholm Green in about 1802 and the building became a residence (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the little cloth (thu-li'-ul-kloth) n. the second-best funerary cloth, in distinction to the main ‘mortcloth’ – ‘Pay’d for the Mortcloath and Little Cloath helping’ [PR].

Little Corbie Sike (li'-ul-kor-bee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Aldery Sike and then Thorsloshope Burn. It runs parallel to Muckle Corbie Sike.

Little Cote (li'-ul-kö') n. name for former farm near Littlecote Hill in Cavers Parish. Adam Huntly was tenant in 1694 and William Blyth in 1776. John Johnstone was there in 1791, Thomas Scott was tenant in 1837 and Robert Scott was farmer in 1851. The Armstrong brothers farmed it in the mid-20th century. The name was essentially replaced with the late Eastcote, although the earlier farm may have been to the southwest of the moden Eastcote. The earlier farm of ‘Muckle Cote’ may have been closer to the modern West Cote. There is a possible old enclosure on Littlecote Hill, which could be associated with the former farmstead – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T] (it was ‘Littlecatt’ in 1694 and ‘Lyttle cote’ in 1776).

Little Dan (li'-ul-dawn) n. nickname of the 19th century – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laidlaw and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI].

Little Dean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farm near Little Cavers. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters’ sermons. It was situated near the plantation still known as Little Dean, which flanks the Honey Burn, just west of Denholm Dean.

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, located on the left-hand side of the road between Midshiels and Hassendeanburn. The Mather, Brydon and Milne families lived there in 1841. There was no sign of the former cottage by the early 20th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it is ‘Littledeen’ in 1841).

Littledean (li'-ul-deen) n. ruined 15th century tower in Maxton Parish overlooking the banks of the Tweed, once the home of the Kers. Duns Scotus may have been born here about 1265. The lands were possessed by Rutherfords in the 17th century. There is much local folklore about unpleasant occupiers and ghosts. Gen. Ker of Littledean was ruined fighting a legal battle in the early years of the 19th century to establish his claim as heir to the Kers of Cessford and hence to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. The male line of Kers of Littledean ended with the death of Walter Ker in 1841. This family have a burial vault at Maxton and used the motto ‘Pro Patria Periclitor’. The lands were later part of the estates of Lord Polwarth (the origin of the name is probably just Old English for ‘the little valley’; it is first recorded as ‘litildene’ in 1502; it is ‘Litle-dene’ in 1547, ‘Litildane’ in 1547/8, ‘Littilden’ in 1560, ‘Littill Dane’ in 1574, ‘Littilden’ in 1578/9, ‘Lytildane’ in 1582; it is ‘Little Denn’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and occurs as ‘Littiklermn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Little Dod (li'-ul-död) n. small hill between Langhope Burn and Todrig Burn, just west of Todrig. It reaches a height of 324 m and has Muckle Dod to the west (it is marked on a 1767 map of Langhope farm).

Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of ‘Nethirma-nis of Hassenden’ was infested by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in the ‘2½ merklands of Litill Dryngstoun’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. There followed a letter of reversion by John Scott of Drinkstone in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendenburn of the same lands on payment of £70 Scots in 1566. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served heir to his father Adam’s lands of ‘Littill Dombston’ in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, which is presumably a transcription error for Little Drinkstone. In 1743 William Scott, younger of Coldhouse, was granted the ‘three merk land of Little Drinkston, commonly called Tanlaw’, by his father, Robert Scott of Coldhouse; it was still stated to be in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton.

Little France (li-ul-frans) n. name for an area between the Slitrig and the old railway line just north of Shankend farm. Aerial photography has identified the outlines of rig lines, a small enclosure and the foundations of former buildings (the origin is obscure; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Little Gledstane (li-ul-gled-stan) n. nickname for one of the local Gledstains family of Cocklaw Castle, who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire. This was probably James of Cocklaw, 12th of that Ilk, the nickname presumably suggesting that he was short. There was also a field in Rulewater with the same name, but whether it was connected is uncertain – ‘The laird Watt did weil indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himself; With little Gladstone, gude in need, For Greitin kendna gude be ill’ [T].

Little Gledstains (li-ul-gled-stanz) n. former name for some lands which were part of the Barony of Feu-Rule in the Rule valley. There is presumably some connection with the Gledstains family and perhaps with the local hero of the Raid of the Redeswire in particular, but no details are known. The lands lay between those of Hobbsburn and Langraw (precisely where is uncertain, since these farms were once of considerable extent) and were said to have formerly been a Lairdship. It is possible that Adam Scott of ‘Gledstainis’ recorded in 1581 was Laird there. Robert Elliot ‘in Gledstaines’ was removed from the lands by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1610. The lands were part of the Stobs estate in the late 17th century, and were included in the contract where rental income went to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott and her surviving children. This is probably the ‘Glestains’ where Thomas Oliver was farmer in 1758. The old house was still in existence in 1775, having thick walls and iron bars on the small windows; part of the building materials were incorporated into the garden house at Hobbsburn (it is ‘Littildaidstaines’ in 1562, ‘Little Gledstaines’ in 1677 and ‘Little Gladstanes’ in 1693).

the Little Gover (thu-li-ul-gu-vur) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century, and possibly related to Johnnie the Gover – ‘Sally Macusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Little Harden Burn (li-ul-haw-din-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Harden Hill and joins Harden Burn to the east of old Castleton.

Little Hassendeane (li-ul-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for Westerhouses in the Parish of Hassendeane, so-called in 1582.

Little Haugh (li-ul-hawf) n. another name for the Wee Haugh.

Little Hawick (li-ul-hawik) n. name sometimes used by the residents of Hawick, Minnesota for their township.

the Little Maister (thu-li-ul-mas-tur) n. nickname for a schoolmaster called Turnbull in the late 18th century.

the Little Muir (thu-li-ul-muir) n. former name for a farmstead or area near Closses, at the edge of Hawick Moor. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants.

Little Newton (li-ul-new-in) n. part of the lands of Newton, usually those associated with Newton Don, although some references may be to the lands in Bedrule Parish. An English document of c.1380 lists ‘the lands of Little Neu-ton next Roxburgh which were in the hands of Thomas Riddelle’. Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of ‘litill neu convin’ is recorded in 1502. The farm was burned by Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier and their men, for which they were pardoned in 1531/2. John Grahamslaw ‘of Little Park

Littill Newtonn’ is recorded in 1572/3. William and George ‘Grimslay’, sons of the deceased Harry of ‘Little Newtonn’, were held for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule in 1606.

Little Park (li’-ul-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, probably the farm of Castleton Park, with the ‘Little’ used to distinguish it from the larger holding of Park (or ‘Copshaw Park’) to the south. William Scott was tenant there in 1694, according to the Horse Tax rolls, with Archibald Nixon also listed as a resident (it is ‘Littill park’ in 1694 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Little Rulewud (li’-ul-rool-wud) n. former name for some lands near Denholm, possibly adjacent to those of Rulewud itself. It has also been suggested that it was an old name for Denholm Dean. In the reign of David I (1329–71) there is a Crown confirmation of these lands in the barony of Cavers to Thomas of Cranstoun. The lands probably once belonged to the family of Rule. This was confirmed again in about 1380, with the lands then being referred to as being ‘near Denum’. In 1458/9 the lands are among those for which Thomas Cranston of that Ilk had a discharge with Douglas of Cavers for rentals. The lands of ‘Lititroulwood, with tower thereof’ are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers in 1511 and regranted to Sir William Cranston of that Ilk in the following year and still held by John Cranston according to a discharge of 1574. The ‘40 shilling land of Rowlwoode parva alias tower’ was passed from John, Lord Cranstoun to his nephew William in 1636. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698: it is described as having a wood and tower, called the lands of ‘Toure’, near the town of Denholm. In modern times the name has been given to a cottage to the east of Denholm Dean (it is ‘Little Rulwod’ in c.1380, ‘lytill Roulwode’ in 1458/9, ‘Littill Roulwod’ in 1511, ‘roulwood parva’ in 1512, ‘Little Rowlwood’ in 1574, ‘Little Rowlwood’ in 1687 and ‘Little Roallwood’ in 1698).

Little Saut Haa (li’-ul-saw’-haw, -sawl’-hal) n. Little Salt Hall, house built above Langlands Road in 1937, near the former Salt Hall. It was designed by Kathleen Veitch and probably built for teacher William Redpath. It is a grade C listed building. The word ‘Little’ was later removed from the house’s name.

the Little Shop see the Wee Shop

Little Steil (li’-ul-steel) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Litlesteel’. They were valued at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (possibly related to Stells or the Steel).

Little Stintins (li’-ul-stin-tin) n. former name for lands on the boundary of Wilton Common near Stintyknowe. They are is mentioned in the 1765 description of Wilton Common.

Little Stirches (li’ul-stir-cheez) n. former name for a steading near Stirches, which was part of the estate of the Chisholmes of that Ilk and Stirches. It is mentioned in the Wilton Session records for 1703 and in the evidence for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. William Lamb was tenant in the early 18th century.

Little Tudhope Hill (li’-ul-tu-dup-hil) n. hill just to the north-west of Tudhope Hill, on the boundary between Rosburghshire and Dunfrieshire. It reaches a height of 483 m.

Little Warrington Sike (li’ul-waw-rin’-in-sik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then Great Warrington Sike before running into Larriston Burn.

little wheel (li’ul-wheel) n., arch. smaller type of spinning wheel, used in Hawick through the 18th and early 19th centuries for flax or hemp spinning – ‘There was presented by Mrs. Hogg, Crumhaugh-hill, a spinning wheel, i.e. the ‘Little Wheel’, formerly used for spinning lint’ [HAST1863] (cf. muckle wheel).

Little Whithaugh (li’ul-whi-tuf) n. small farm near Whithaugh, to the north-east of Newcastleton. Thomas Mather was tenant there in 1694.

Little Whitlaw (li’ul-whi-law) n. name of part of the farm at Whitlaw, lying south of the Flex road, bordering on the old Common. It was next to ‘Meikle Whitlaw’, from which it was separated by the Flex (or Whithlaw) Burn. It was long a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Buccleuch properties, covering 60 acres and being bounded by the Slitrig, Flex and Hawick Common, with no farmhouse at that time. It was leased (along with Meikle Whithlaw) to Francis Gledstaines of Whithlaw in 1692. The tenant at the beginning of the 19th century was James Elliot. The farmer there in 1841 and 1851 was James Knox, when the farm covered 97 acres, and in the 1860s the farmer was James Shiel. The area of Little Wrae Cleuch

Little Wrae Cleuch (li'-ul-rā-kluoch) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Windy Knowe and lying to the east of Muckle Wrae Cleuch.

Livingstone (li-vin-stin) n. Rev. John (1603–72) born in Monyabroch, Stirlingshire, son of Rev. William of Kilsyth and Agnes. He attended Glasgow University from the age of 14 and after graduating had several temporary positions, but turned down presentations to various parishes on account of his religious principles. He preached in Ireland, but was excommunicated and joined a ship bound for America that was forced back in a storm. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and was one of those charged with presenting it to the Court in London. He was minister at Stranraer for a decade, before being appointed minister of Ancrum in 1648. He was one of the Commissioners to Charles I in 1650, perhaps in the party that travelled to Breda to offer him the Crown. He was appointed by Cromwell in 1654 to recommend ministers to vacant parishes. He attested to the character of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch in 1654. After the Restoration he refused to accept Episcopacy, was banished in 1663 and died in Holland. He wrote an autobiography (not published until 1754), as well as notes on some of his contemporaries, and worked on a translation of the bible into several languages. He was friends with other local ministers, including Rev. James Kerr at Abbotrule, Rev. John Scott at Oxnam, Rev. John Scott at Hawick and Rev. William Elliot at Yarrow. He also associated with Sir William Scott of Harden, Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk and several Pringle landowners, as well as Lady Stobs, Lady Newton and Mrs. Elliot of Craigend. He was said to have been the most popular preacher in the Borders. He married Janet Fleming and had at least 15 children, although most died in infancy. His daughter Marion was born in Stranraer in 1642 and married Rev. John Scott of Hawick. His youngest son James went to New York and had descendants who were involved with American Independence. His time at Ancrum is recorded on a stone built into the wall of the Manse garden there. Mary Ann (19th C.) owner of the lands of Coldlaw and Tandlaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Her name is recorded as ‘Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay’. She was presumably the widow of someone called either Livingstone or Finlay, perhaps a descendant of Rev. Robert Scott of Coldhouse. William of Drumry (15th C.) son of Sir Robert, from the Clydebank family. He held the half (probably the eastern half) Barony of Hassendean, according to a sasine of 1467. This was also stated in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1470, in which Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington gave redemption money for Midshiels and Appletreehall; it is unclear when he first gained the barony. He was the Lord of Drumry fined in 1493 for non-presence (relating to his lands in Hassendean) at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh. He resigned the barony to the King in 1493/4 and it then passed to Alexander, Lord Home. Also in 1493/4 he assigned (with the consent of his son Robert) 3 ‘letters of reversion’ to Alexander, Lord Home, these being for Midshiels and Appletreehall, East Mains and Clarilaw. He probably married Euphemia, daughter of David Wemyss of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert.

lizzie-rin-the-hedge (li-zee-rin-thu-hej) n., arch. goosegrass, cleavers, Galium aparine (also robin-rin-the-hedge: see sticky wullie).

'll (l, ul) contr. will – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rook-bools, or the bairns ‘ll kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘...oor folk ‘ll bei touched an’ influenced in a mainner which ‘ll bei unmistakable’ [BW1939] (often attached as a contraction to the previous word).

loags (lōg) n., pl., arch. footless stockings, worn by labourers in the summer, as guitsers in wet weather or as protective sleeves by female mill-workers – ‘Worn to the leather were his clogs – And on his legs a pair o’ loags’ [RDW].

loan (lōn) n., arch. a lane, especially one leading to a meadow, in former times a strip of land between fields, left uncultivated for driving cattle homeward – ‘At Allanhaugh, a small village (the vestiges of which only now remain) in the upper parts of Tiviotdale, the devil was seen regularly every Saturday evening, walking along the loan’ [EM1820], ‘When kye come croonin’ to the

the Loan (θu-lon) n. once the lane out to the pastures on the Common, being part of the Burgh lands, sandwiched between West Mains and East Mains and connecting the Town with the Common. It was known as the ‘Common Lone’ or ‘Lone’ up until about 1860. It became the main road through the town towards Carlisle, this not changing until the New Road was built in 1815. Both sides were first feued in 1792, this being the first extension of the Town beyond its ports (hence before this time the Loan was technically outside the Burgh limits). It was slowly built up with houses from then on, with further development of the upper West End through the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed Nos. 2 and 7 in 1901. Some houses were removed in 1939. In the mid-20th century there was licensed grocer James Henderson at No. 5 and Alison’s greengrocery at the corner with Beaconsfield Terrace. There was much demolition and building work between 1957 and 1977, allowing a clear view of the Moat and new access to Drumlanrig School – ‘Up the Loan we’ll drive like fire …’ [AB], ‘Down the Loan we come fu’ doucely …’ [AB], ‘… And doon the Loan like fire’ [JT], ‘As Aw was gaun up Hawick Loan …’ [JSB], ‘For now o’ the Loan I used to ken There’s hardly a stannin’ stane’ [DH].

the Loanheid (θu-lon-heed) n. Loanhead, the former name for the area at the top of the Loan. Up until the early 20th century the area had many fields rented by farmers who had their barns and stables in the town. Farmers of the 19th century included the Hendersons of the Back Row, the Blakes of the Back Row, the Elliot of the Loan, the Waldies of the Green Wynd, the Andersons of the Green Wynd, the Patersons of the Loan, the Laidlaws of the Loan, the Thorburns of the Loan, the Richardsons of the Loan, the Nicholsons of the Loan and the Hunters of Drumlanrig Place. The last farmers in the area were probably Dick Scott, (who kept pigs at the top on the right-hand side) and the Cavers family (who were there well into the 20th century). The area also had the covered reservoir that supplied most of the town up until the 1960s; for many decades in the 19th century children would sit on its roof to watch the Chase – ‘… The Loanheid cockerel, noisy bird That early in the morn was heard’ [IWL].

the Loan Toll (θu-lon-heed) n. top of Wilton Loan. According to the 1765 description of the boundaries of Wilton Common, an area between Leeheads and Stousie was the ‘said Loanhead’. This suggests that one of the ‘loans’ leading to Wilton Common took the route to the east of Kippilaw and Heip Hill.

Loanhill (lon-hil) n. lost place name near Brauxholm, listed in the description of the half lands of Brauxholm in 1420 when they were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. The lands described include ‘half of the meadow of Lonnehyll’, with precise location uncertain, but perhaps somewhere to the west of Brauxholm.

loanin (lon-n) n., arch. a loan, lane between fields – ‘The shepherd child, the healthy wild, The park and loaning green’ [JoHa], ‘Ah! wee might there be heard a moaning, Throughout the land on ‘ilka loaning’’ [AD], ‘The loanin’ up the hill – ay, ay! For as the laigh march-line; It was the road we took the kye, When we were boys lang-syne’ [ECB], ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burgesses loyal and true’ [RSC], ‘The lang road that rins doon throwe Newtoon an bye the Dryburgh loanee’ [ECS] (also written ‘loaneen’).

the Loanin (θu-lo-n) n. the Loaning, a street in Denholm, being the road out of town towards the fields to the south of the Hawick to Jedburgh road.

Loanside (lon-sid) n. former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, location uncertain. In 1801 shepherds Francis Armstrong and William Helm were living there.

the Loanside (θu-lo-sid) n. former name for lands lying adjacent to the Loan (also written ‘Loneside’).

Loan Toll (lon-tol) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, the building still existing with a commemorative plaque, opposite 25 Loan (near the gates of Mote Park). The building sticks out further into the road than those nearby, indicating its former purpose; the Loan was formerly the main road out of Hawick to the south. This is the first place the drums and fifes march to on the Thursday of Common Riding week, and is also on the route of the Cornet’s Walk after the Colour Bussing. It was also referred to as the ‘Turnpike Bar’.

Local Government Bill (lô-kal-gu-ver-min’-bil) n. important bill of 1929 which took away powers from smaller burgh councils (with a population under 20,000), yielding control to County Councils. Parish Councils and Education Authorities were dissolved, with education and welfare being controlled by the County. In Hawick there was much resistance to these changes, with the town losing control of its police force, public health and road maintenance. Roxburghshire County Council grew in power as a result.

loch (loch) n. lake, the nearest big example near Hawick is St. Mary’s Loch. But plenty of smaller bodies of water just outside the town are also called lochs, e.g. Leahead Loch, Mossills Loch and Branxholme Loch.

Loch (loch) n. David of Overcarnbie (d.1780), General Inspector of Fisheries in Scotland and Inspector of the Woollen Manufacturers of Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777, presumably when passing through Hawick on the tour he made for the Board of Manufactures. He wrote ‘A Tour through most of the Trading Towns and Villages of Scotland’ in 1778. The book has 2 pages describing trade and industry in Hawick, with a summary of the state of the fledgling knitwear manufacturing. This included a statement that there were 65 looms in the Town (18 of them making carpets) and 6 stocking frames. He once said that children as young as 5 could be usefully employed in the woollen trade. Oliver (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Agnes Oliver and their children included: Walter (b.1848); William (b.1850); Ellen (b.1852); and Betsy (b.1854).

Loch Bog (loch-bög) n. area to the north of Newmill Burn and south of Branxholme Easter Loch.

Loch Burn (loch-burn) n. stream running from Blackcleuch Loch north-east to the Allan Water, also known as the Low Burn.

Lochburnfit (löw-, loch-burn-fi’) n. Lochburnfoot, a former farmstead where the Loch Burn meets the Allan Water, west of Southfield. The Mosspaule ride-out route often goes past here. There may once have been a weaving village here. Walter Miller was a weaver there in 1694. James and John Reid were living there in 1745 and John ‘Slacer’ in 1748. It is probably the ‘Lawburnfoot’ where Adam Anderson and William Grieve were in 1797. Agricultural worker Richard Byers and ‘game watcher’ James Miller lived here with their families in 1841 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Loochburnfoot’ in 1694 and ‘Loughburnfoot’ in 1745 and 1841).

Lochburn Plantin (loch-burn-plawn’-in) n. Lochburn Plantation, wooded area along the south side of the Allan Water, just to the southwest of Southfield farm.

Lochcarron (loch-kaw-rin) n. tartan and knitwear manufacturers, with factory at 76 Princes Street, as well as bases in other Border towns. It was founded by Morris Buchan in 1947 in Gala, with his son Alistair Buchan joining in 1959 and becoming C.E.O. in 1986. The Hawick mill was the main knitwear centre, but closed in 2009.

Loch Cottage (loch-ko’-eej) n. cottage to the south of the road which passes Branxholme Easter Loch.

Lochcraig Heid (loch-krâg-heed) n. hill in the south-western part of the Borders, behind Loch Skeen. It reaches a height of 801 m, and can be seen in the distance from many local vantage points.

Lochdail (loch-dâl) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, but their location is still unknown.

Lochgreen (loch-green) n. lands, formerly part of Essenside, bordering on Essenside Loch. This small area was annexed to Castleside in 1760 in exchange for lands nearer to Easter Essenside. This led to a dispute between the Cochranes of Ashkirk and the Elliots of Minto over rights to the marie in the Loch in the early 1800s.

Lochend (loch-end) n. former name of farm near Kaimend, about a mile south-east of Hawick. It was just to the north of the small body of water opposite the road to the east of Kaimend, i.e. on the east side of the back road from Hummelknoes to Ormiston, and was also known as Orniston Lochend. The farmer there in 1797 was John Clerk and William Clerk was also there in the same year. In 1861 it was ‘Loughend’ with James Cavers and Alexander Lang and their families as residents. In the 1860s the farmere there was James Davidson (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, between ‘Roxmount’ and ‘Ormiston-mains’, and labelled ‘Ormiston Lochend’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Loch Hill (loch-hîl) n. hill on the east side of the Ewes valley, between the farms of Glendivan and Hoghill. It reaches a height of 258 m and has a hill-fort at its summit, as well as a smaller enclosure to the west. The name presumably comes from the small body of water, which lies on high ground between the 2 archaeological features.

Loch Knowe (loch-nów) n. hilly region immediately south of Acremoor Loch, being essentially part of Belmanshaws. It is marked ‘Lough know’ on a 1767 map of Langhope farm.

Lochmaben (loch-mi-bin) n. town west of Lockerbie in Amandale. It was a major Bruce seat in the 12th and 13th centuries and became a royal burgh in 1440. Lochmaben Castle was once the strongest fortress in the Borders, and covered 16 acres. The lands passed to the Murrays and then the Johnstones. Population 2,024 (1991).

Loch o the Lowes (loch-o-thú-lówz) n. body of water south of St. Mary’s Loch, originally part of it, but separated by deposits from the burns that flow into there. It is about 1 1/2 miles in circumference. The names seems to have been originally applied to both lochs, (nether and over) with the larger (and lower) portion later taking the name of the chapel there.

Loch Park (loch-pawrk) n. area to the east of the High Street, once a small pond, but largely drained in 1835 because of the smell, to rid the area of its ‘pestilential vapours’. A curling rink was opened there in 1854 and used until 1866, when another pond was opened near St. Leonard’s. It was also used as a place for public demonstrations, e.g. in 1884 around 10,000 people rallied there in support of the Franchise Act. The area was used as an auction ring by Andrew Oliver & Son until 1883, when it was purchased by James Scott and David Rutherford, who continued sales there until the early 1900s. The land was then used for other purposes, becoming a railway maintenance yard in 1921, before being converted to an industrial park for small businesses in 1968. Now the name tends to refer specifically to the industrial estate.

Loch Park Road (loch-pawrk-ród) n. road running along the northern side of the Loch Park Industrial Estate, built in 1884, with the name deriving from the former pond. At the bottom of the street the road passed under a railway bridge, which was demolished in the early 1970s.

Loch Sike (loch-sık) n. small stream that rises in Branxholme Easter Loch, running roughly south-east, through Loch Sike Plantation, to join the Newmill Burn and thence into the Teviot.

Loch Sike (loch-sık) n. small stream that flows out of Acremoor Loch to join the Blindhaugh Burn. There are also quarries nearby, which were used in the 18th and 19th centuries for dry-stane dykes.

Loch Sike (loch-sık) n. small stream that flows out of Acremoor Loch to join the Blindhaugh Burn. It is labelled ‘Lough Sike’ on a 1767 map of Langhope Burn.

Loch Skeen (loch-skēn) n. loch high above the Grey Mare’s Tail, reached via a track along the Tail Burn – ‘Where the crystal waters that wanton stray From their home in far Loch Skene, Dance down the cliff in their sportive way, A myriad cascades of pearly spray, To rest in the deep ravine’ [TK] (also sometimes ‘Skene’; ‘Lochskeine’ is recorded as the name of a hill in 1649).

lock (lok) n. one of two positions in rugby, nos. 4 and 5, also known as the second row, who lock together the front row in the scrum. Such players are usually tall and have squashed ears.

Lock (lok) n. John (13th/14th C.) from somewhere in Roxburghshire. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, with his name being recorded as ‘Johan Lock’. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the words ‘SJOH’IS LOG’. He was also ‘Lock’ on the jury for the inquest into the inheritance of the half-barony of Wilton in 1303/4.

Locke (lok) n. James (19th/20th C.) Selkirk manufacturer who lived for a while at Kilmenny. He was an early tennis enthusiast in Hawick. His son William Lindsay was a doctor. In 1870 he married Wilhelmina (1849–1924), daughter of manufacturer William Watson. They had at least 2 daughters, who lived in Cambridge and Edinburgh.

Lockerbie (lo-kur-bee) n. town near the Border in Dumfries & Galloway region, where the Dryfe Water meets the Annan. It had a nearby Roman camp at Birrenswark Hill. The town was founded in the early 18th century by the Johnstones, became a burgh in 1863, and was known for its lamb sales. It gave its name to the ‘Lockerbie Lick’, meaning a slashed face, during the times of feuding between the Johnstones and the Maxwells. Tragedy struck in 1988 when a terrorist bomb brought down a Pan-Am jet, killing all on-board.

Lockhart (lok-har') n. Allan Eliott (1803–78) 5th Laird of Borthwickbrae. Second (and oldest surviving) son of William Eliott, he was a lawyer and became Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and then Roxburghshire (in 1848). He was listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Borthwickbrae. He was called to the Bar in 1824. He was listed at Borthwickbrae among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and mentioned as a major landowner in Hawick Parish in 1838. He was Selkirkshire M.P. 1846–61, was also involved in local education and agriculture and served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. In 1841 he was absent from Borthwickbrae, but his sister and 4 children were there, along with a governess and 6 other servants. In 1861 he presented a jar of reptiles to the Archaeological Society. In 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Flex, as well as Wester Essenside and Leap Hill. In 1830 he married Charlotte (1809–88), 5th daughter of Sir David Dundas of Beechwood, and succeeded to the estates on the death of his father-in-law 2 years later. He had 12 children, including 5 sons who survived to adulthood: William (b.1833), who succeeded and married an Eliott of Wolfelee; David (1834–1903), who married Fanny Wood of Hutton and had 3 sons; Capt. Allan (b.1837), who married twice and had a daughter; Col. Robert Dundas (b.1841), who had 2 daughters; and Charles Walter (1850–94), who married a daughter of Mark Neville and died without issue. His daughters included: Matilda (1832–98); Marianne (b.c.1836); and Robina (1840–1924). He retired in 1861 and after the Death of Lord Polwarth was appointed Lord Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. George (d.1547) cleric who was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from about 1509 until 1533. The George ‘Herher’ referred to in 1509 is probably a transcription error for his name. He was elevated to Dean of Glasgow in 1533, and remained in that office until he died. Sir George (c.1630–89), Lord Carnwath, son of Sir James of Lee. He was a prominent Scottish advocate, who served as Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, Lord President of the Court of Session, Privy Counsellor and Commissioner to the Scottish Parliament for Lanarkshire. He married Philadelphia, daughter of Lord Wharton and was succeeded by his son George. He was murdered on Edinburgh High Street by the husband of a woman he had represented against him. In 1690 his son George served heir to his lands around Jedhead in Southdean Parish. It is unclear how he acquired these in the first place. Sir George of Carnwath (1673–1731) son of Sir George. In 1690 he inherited his father's annual rents of part of the Marquise of Douglas in Jedforest, specifically 3 half steadings in Jedhead and half of 2 steads in 'Campsheill-haugh'. He was a member of Parliament for the county of Edinburgh and one of the commissioners for arranging the union with England. He was a spy who brought to light the extent of bribery before the vote for the 1707 Union, leading to Burns line ‘bought and sold for English gold’. He was a Jacobite supporter and later a spy for Charles Stewart, having to flee the country for a year and dying in a duel 3 years later. Gilbert Eliott (1808–24) younger son of William of Borthwickbrae. He joined the Royal Navy and died onboard H.M.S. Diamond, which was captained by Lord Napier. John (18th C.) married Isabel Lillico in bedrule in 1724. John Eliott of Borthwickbrae (1796–1815). Eldest son of William, he was a Cornet in the Dragoons and was killed at Waterloo. Margaret 'Peggy' (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1791, when she worked for George Douglas. Mary Charlotte (1875–1965) daughter of Capt. William, 6th of Borthwickbrae and Dorothea Helen, daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Her father sold Borthwickbrae in 1884. Her 3 brothers died before their father and in 1907 she became head of the lines of both Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee. In 1899 she married Maj. R.H. Adams, but took the surname Eliott-Lockhart in 1907. She had a son, called Sir Allan Robert (b.1905) and a daughter Dorothy Cecil Bertram. Capt. Robert Elliott (19th C.) of Borthwickbrae, he served in the Royal Artillery. Stephen (15th C.) leased the Crown lands of Gilmanscleuch in 1486. Walter Elliott (b.1804) younger son of William. He worked for the East India Company. He married Mary, daughter of William Proctor and died in Madras without any children. Lt.-Col. William Elliott (1764–1832) 4th Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest surviving son of John of Borthwickbrae and Margaret Laing. He appearing to have lived at Orchard before succeeding to Borthwickbrae; he was described as 'William Elliot Esq. in Orchard’ in the years 1790/1 and 1791/2 when he paid tax for having a female servant and 2 male servants, and also in 1790/1 and 1790/1 when he paid for owning a carriage. From 1792 he was ‘William Elliot of Borthwickbrae’ when he continued to pay the duty for 2 male servants and a carriage in Roberton Parish, with 3 servants in 1793 and 1794 and 1 in 1797. He was at Orchard on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–94, when he had up to 4 carriage horses, as well as being owner of 2 work horses in 1797. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. From 1795 he served as Colonel for the local troop of Yeomanry (volunteer cavalry, also known as the Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons), leading his men in repelling the French (who were supplying arms to Ireland) at Killala Bay in 1798. He was later appointed major commandant of the Roxburgh Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, and turned out with his regiment at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1821 he was appointed Lieut.-Col. of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry. In 1802 he paid the Land Tax on Borthwickbrae, the west side of Howcleuch and Wester Alemoor. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was left the lands of Meikledale and Flex by his uncle, William Laing. He also inherited lands of Old Melrose, where his family would sometimes reside. He became M.P. for Selkirkshire, serving 1806–30, and was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1823. There is a letter of 1824 where the Burgh of Selkirk asked him for funds for the races at the Common Riding there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1827 he complained about poachers, with Andrew Oliver as his lawyer. In 1792 he married Marianna (or Marianne), daughter and heiress of Allan Lockhart of Cleghorn, and changed his surname to ‘Elliott-Lockhart’. His children were: Jane (b.1795), baptised at Edinburgh, but recorded in Roberton; John (1796–1815), who was killed at Waterloo; Margaret, who was at Borthwickbrae in 1841; Allan (b.1803), who succeeded; Walter, who died in Madras; William (b.1808), who became a Major; and Gilbert (1808–24), who died on H.M.S. Diamond. He died at Cleghorn. Capt. William Elliott (1833–1907) 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae, and 14th of Cleghorn in Lanark, eldest son of Allan. He served in the Camerounians and 74th Highlanders, retiring from service in 1868. He was then assistant Chief Constable of Lancashire before becoming Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch at Branxholme, with responsibility for Selkirkshire and Teviotdale. He held this position from 1876 until 1892. During this time he was an enthusiastic supporter of the idea of building a Cottage Hospital in Hawick. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Selkirkshire and Lanarkshire. He was Chairman of the Managers of Hawick Cottage Hospital and President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, as well as being on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He became an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1881. In 1882 he was present (as Chamberlain) at the opening of the Dod Burn water works in Hawick. He was also proprietor of the lands at the Flex in the 1880s. He sold Borthwickbrae to Robert Noble in 1884 and for a time lived at Branxholme, but then moved to Cleghorn in Lanarkshire. He matriculated arms in 1893. In 1866 he married Dorothea Helen, eldest daughter of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Their children were: Capt. Allan Ashton (1867–98), who died in Malta; Walter Blair (1870–95), who died unmarried; Mary Charlotte (b.1875), who succeeded as heir of the line; and Norman (b.1871), who died in infancy. He wrote about the history of Branxholme, including the associated Scotts of Buccleuch, for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1886 (sometimes ‘Lockhardt’, and often called ‘Elliott-Lockhart’, note also that it became ‘Elliott’ rather than ‘Elliot’).

Lockhart Place (lok-har’-plis) n. street in the Wellogate area, built in 1879 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named after the second William Elliott Lockhart. No. 9 is a grade C listed building.

Lockie (lo-kee) n. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Thomson in Wilton in 1768 and their children included Thomas (b.1769), Agnes (b.1772) and William (b.1777). The witnesses in 1772 were merchant John Oliver and wright James Atkin. Alexander (18th/19th C.) servant to William Brown, Minister of Bedrule, according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Alexander (b.c.1801) servant at Denholm Mill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Probably the same Andrew married Isobel Harvie and had children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, including John (b.1691) and Bessie (b.1693). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1720. He married Bessie Storie in 1719. Their children included: John (b.1720); Marion (b.1731) James (17th/18th C.) resident of Dovemount or Easter Howlands. He is mentioned in 1764 as one of the men for whom Robert Easton cut peats on Wilton Common, perhaps in the 1730s. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Scott. Their children included John (b.1768). James (18th C.) resident at Threephead in Roberton Parish. His name was written ‘Locie’ in 1771 when his twins James and William were baptised. Perhaps the same James was witness to a baptism in Wilton for Walter Scott at Whitfield in 1770. James (18th/19th C.) tailor in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Janet (b.1798) daughter of mason William. She was still living at Borthwickbraehead in 1851, but described as a ‘Carrier’. Her son Walter Thomson was also there, as well as her nephew William Turnbull. Janet (b.c.1800) grocer recorded on the 1841 census for Wilton. She lived on Damside, which was perhaps the lower part of Wilton Path. Her children included Mary Hall, Jessie, Betsy, John and William. By 1861 she appears to be on Dickson Street and with no occupation. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John Lok’ when he was on the inquisition of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that his named was Lockie and that he was a local man, like the others. John (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was also listed there and so probably related. John (18th C.) recorded at Denholm in 1725 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (b.1722) and Christian (b.1727), baptised in Cavers, were probably also his children. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for John Smith (blacksmith at Stirches), in 1737 others for George Wallace, resident at Roughheugh and for Robert Graham, resident of Brieryyards, and in 1739 another for Robert Easton in Overhall. He married Elspeth Porteous in 1731 and their children included: James (b.1734); Anne (b.1736); and James (again, b.1740). It is possible he is the John who died in 1742, after whom the area of ‘Lockieshedge’ was named. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Nichol and their children included William (b.1749). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Violet Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1752); Janet (b.1754); Isobel (b.1757); and Violet (b.1759). His wife was probably the daughter of Adam Laidlaw and Helen Bell born in 1729. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jane Stoddart in Roberton Parish in 1791 and their children included Walter (b.1795), Margaret (b.1797) and Janet (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Honeytown in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia; the annotation ‘Serving’ suggests he served. His name appears again in 1798, recorded as substitute for Michael Anderson from Applethrieth. Later in 1798 he was sworn into the Militia and was listed as ‘Serving’ on the amended list of 1799. John (b.c.1773) resident of Sorbie in Ewesdale. In 1800 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Dryden, blacksmith at St. Boswells. Their children were: Jean (b.1801); Catherine (b.1803), who married Robert Anderson from Langholm; Elizabeth (b.1805); Janet Church (b.1807); and James (b.1809). John (b.c.1800) gamekeeper living at Byreleeinhaugh in Roberton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was working in a factory in Galashiels and in 1861 was a carter at Ladhope. His wife was Janet and their children included Alison, Margaret, Jessie, Marion, Isabella, Anne, Jane and Meriam. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He is probably the ‘Pat’ who in 1691 witnessed a baptism for Andrew. He married Bessie Easton and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1689. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1687 he married Margaret Waugh, as recorded in Roberton Parish. However, the marriage took place at Hassendean Kirk (perhaps one of the last there). He witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for George Collin in 1687 and for James Waugh in 1768. Probably the same Thomas was resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1715 he was a wright at Synton Parkhead. He married Helen Veitch and their children included Elizabeth (b.1715) and John (b.1717). Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Roberton Parish, he was a ‘game guard’ at Leahead on the 1851 census. In 1841 he had been visiting Hoscoseshiel, while his family were staying at Coldhouse. He could be the ‘Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes’ mentioned in the poem ‘Hawick Immortals’. He married Margaret Hay and their children included William, Georgina, Catherine and James. William (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably closely related to John, who was also listed there. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at ‘Whithaw’ (presumably Whitehaugh) in 1764. He married Janet Laidlaw and their children included John (b.1764), Walter (b.1767) and Rachel (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Ormiston and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Paterson. Their children included: Agnes (b.1781) and William (b.1788). William (b.1772/3) mason at Borthwickbrae. He was living at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1798. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1841 he was living at Borthwickbraehaugh. He married Margaret Cavers in 1795 and their children included: James (1796–1825), buried in Borthwick Waas, with the first part of the headstone unreadable; Janet (b.1798); John (b.1800); Jane (b.1802); Ann (b.1805); Isabella (b.1807); Thomas (b.1811); Euphemia (b.1813); William (1814/5–33), also buried in Borthwick Waas and Robert (b.1819). William (1788–1853) born at Stinty-Knowes, son of William and Jean Paterson. He was educated at Wilton and became schoolmaster at Stouslie in 1806, serving there for 37 years. He is listed as teacher at Stouslie among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also known as a poet. A friend of ‘Clinty’, he wrote one of the Auld Brig poems. He also wrote ‘Farewell to Edinburgh’, a poem in celebration of the lighting of Hawick’s first gas lamps, and others, including annual odes on the Duke of Buccleuch’s birthday. He is also mentioned in a song from ‘Daft Jock Gray’, recorded in the book ‘Memoir of Robert Chambers’ (1872) – ‘There’s Lockie o’ the Stinty Knowes, There’s Nicol o’ Dick-neuk, And Bryson o’ the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap’ [DJG]. He married Isabel Anderson (from Robertson) in Wilton Parish in 1808. In the 1841 census he is at Stouslie School with wife Isabella and children Jean (b.1808) and William (b.1814). He is still teaching there in 1851, but now living at Easter Longbaulk, with 3 grandchildren also in the house. He died at Longbaulk. William (19th C.) of William Lockie’s knitwear, founded in 1874, based on the Fore Raw and later at Riversdale Mills. He was a contributor to buying the Auld Mid Raw for demolition. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Whitriggs. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk (sometimes written ‘ Lockey’, ‘ Locky’, ‘ Lokie’, ‘ Loky’, etc.). Lockie’s see Lockie’s Mill

Lockie’s Mill (lo-kee-mill) n. William Lockie & Co., knitwear manufacturers of Riversdale Mills, founded in 1874. The company also had a small factory off Drumlanrig Square (on the Fore Raw) in the latter part of the 19th century, being a 3-storey building reached from No. 28. This now houses ‘Westfield Works’ at Nos. 27 and 28. The building’s frontage has a combination of paired windows and oriel windows. The modern company focuses on luxury garments.

lockit (lo-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. locked – ‘Caged up, within a glass-case lockit, He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit’ [JoHa], ‘I’ll hae him lockit up for a scoundrel obtaining money by false pretences’ [JEDM], ‘... And the lilacs are lockit ticht I’ their maidenhead’ [DH].

Lock the Door Lariston (lok-thu-dor-law-ri-stun) n. song written by James Hogg, the Etrick Shephred, in 1797. It was popular at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. Scocha recorded a version in 2001 – ‘Lock the door, Lariston, Lion of Liddesdale; Lock the door, Lariston, Lowther comes on; The Armstrongs are flying, The widows are crying, The Castleton’s burning, and Oliver’s gone’ [ES] (usually spelled with one ‘r’). locusts (lo-kists) n., pl., arch. carob beans, used as a cattle feed and before WWI purchased by children as a confection, chewing the beans until only the fibre was left – ‘A licorice stick, a neivefu’ monkey nits, A bag o’ locust– tidbits rare’ [WL] (also called ‘locust beans’).

Lod (lad, lod) n., arch. Lord – ‘...Till ten had struck, When Bob cries ‘Lod, My chiel, we’re on the batter’’ [VW], interj., arch. used to express disapproval or disagreement, especially in phrases like ‘Lod sakes’ or ‘Lod man!’ – ‘...An’ champin’ smash amang the dirty puddle; Lo’d! how they sprawl about, an’ ginnin’ guddle!’ [JoHa] (also written ‘Lo’d’).

Lodge 111 (loj-yin-u-lee-vin) n. Hawick Masonic Lodge, being Lodge St. John, No. 111, affectionately known as ‘the three ones’. Its premises are at 33 Commercial Road, and were converted from the building of Innes, Chambers & Co., tweed merchants in 1923 (with designs by J.P. Alison and foundation stone with time capsule laid in 1922). Prior to that their meetings were in the Commercial Inn, in a warehouse of a Mr. Oliver and then in a Church hall at Myreslaw-green, which was consecrated in 1874. The Lodge started at least as early as 1768, although there are suggestions that there were already Masons in Hawick before then; a charter gives its number as 141, this being altered later. 15 Napoleonic prisoners of war became members in the 1810s, apparently boosting attendance in what had been a time of reduced membership. Activity lapsed in the mid-19th century, but it was resuscitated in 1860 and has been active since then. The maximum number on the roll was 582 in 1922. This lodge helped to erect the Henry Scott Riddell monument and an annual visit there is made in June. They were also present at the laying of the foundation stones for the Subscription Rooms, Corn Exchange, Cottage Hospital and Library. The lodge has a collection of masonic jewels and other artefacts, including the military sword of William F. Beattie. The Lodge has long been involved with local charitable and community causes. The building was renovated in 1973/4, with the main entrance moved to the side. There was a march through the Town for the 100th anniversary and there was a re-dedication ceremony to celebrate the 250th anniversary in 2018. Histories were written by Tom Ker in 1892 and Alex Burgon in 1994.

Lodge 424 (loj-fow-ar-too’e-ee-fow-ar) n. Lodge St. James, Border Union Royal Arch (B.U.R.A.), No. 424, being a branch of the Freemasons. It formed in September 1863 and was perhaps reformed in August 1882. It started essentially out of disputes over the Volunteers, with mass resignations from the other Hawick Lodge in 1863, led by prominent townsmen such as George Hardie Fraser. A bazaar was held in 1892, opened by the Grand Master Mason. The new premises were built at 8 Union Street in 1893, to the designs of J.P. Alison, with the foundation stone laid with full ceremony. Before that the lodge met every second Tuesday in Orrock Church Hall. The Lodge celebrates a Mid-Summer Festival of St. John. Latterly the club members have been meeting twice per month, from September to April. The lodge contains a frieze depicting scenes from the Bible. A history, written by James Edgar, was published in 1932.

Lodgegill (loj-gil) n. former farm on the Tarrawas Water, east of the Ewes valley. It was a seat of the Ellies in the 17th and 18th centuries. Thomas Elliot was there in 1682. Descendants of Anderson of Tushielaw were shepherds there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Robert Scott and family were living there in 1841 – ‘Callants, ride! what ails your rotten naigs? He’s making straight for Lodgegill and the craigs!’ ‘[HNo] (it is marked ‘Lugil’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and is ‘Ludgill’ in about 1748).

Lodgeknowe (loj-now) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, precise location uncertain. William Scott (servant at Colterscleuch) was household there in 1796. It is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when John Lunn was farmer there. Patrick Hume was a labourer there in 1799 (it is ‘Lodgeknow’ in 1796 and 1797).

Lod-sake (lod-säk) interj, arch. a mild oath, ‘for the Lord’s sake’ – ‘...when, Lo’dsake, callants! wad ye believe it – the cratur a’ at ance just sprang frae the grund like a wull-cat ...’[BCM1881], ‘Now, Lodsake, Tammas, be quick, for aw’ве the pot on the day ... ’[JTu] (see also Lod).

Lod-sakes-mei (lod-säks-mi) interj, arch. Lord save me, deary me, for Heaven’s sake, used as a very mild oath – ‘A was in a habble! Bit lod sakes mei! It wasna leike A was muitteet oot ...’[ECS], ‘Mind ... Aa wadna dae’d nowadays. Lod-sakes-mei, no. Everything’s shundert!’ [DH].

loe (loo, lô) v., poet. to love – ‘Fair fa ye, lass; I loo your project weel. O war my heart as light as it is leel!’ [CPM], ‘...Yet ne’er could lo’e them as we lo’e our auld aik tree’ [JoHa], ‘An’ weel I ken, an’ weel I loe, the magic, mystic hour’ [JoHa], ‘For ane that lo’ed ye dear, Ye’ll whiles drap a loesome (lo-sum) adj., poet. lovable, lovely, beloved – ‘Come lo’esome Spring wi’ a’ your braws …’ [JT], ‘There’s no a ane in a’ the land – At least there is na mony – Sae clever bairth wi’ heid an’ hand As oor ain lo’esome Conie’ [FL].

loft (loft) n. a gallery in a church, formerly being erected for private families, with additional seating being rented out to assist the poor fund – ‘…for building and erecting of the timber work of ane loft in the kirk of Hawick, designed by the Presbytery for the Baylyes and toun Counsell of the said toun’ [BR1684], ‘Charges of the settes [seats] in the loft above the bilifes’ loft … 11 0 0’ [BR1733].

lofts (lofts) n., arch. gallery levels in a church, usually associated with a particular family or group of people. The pre-1763 church had the following balcony sections: ‘the Bailies’ Loft’; ‘the Parkhill Loft’; ‘the Middle Loft’; and ‘the Western Loft’. The post-1763 St. Mary’s Kirk had the following separate balcony sections: the ‘Middle Loft’ or ‘Steple Loft’; the ‘High Loft’ or ‘Common Loft’ or ‘Rowly-Powly Loft’; the ‘Weaver’s Loft’ or ‘Bailie’s Loft’ or ‘Wester Loft’; and the ‘Buccleuch Loft’ or ‘Duke’s Loft’. Wilton Kirk had ‘Highchesters Loft’, and Cavers Kirk had ‘the Laird’s Loft’.

Logan (lo-gin) n. Andrew ‘Andy’, champion archer from Hawick, who runs the Redgauntlet Archery Club. In 2005 he helped British Telecom by firing a downed telephone cable across the Teviot near Hassendean Burn. Later that year he won the Recurve Bow section of the European Championships and was given the Honorary Provost’s Council’s Achievement Award. He lit the brazier at the Opening Ceremony for the Hawick ‘Olympics’ in 2012 – ‘Oov got triei champion airchers Europe’s Logan, and world champions McCombe and Cook’ [AIB]. Rev. James (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1602, he was presented to the Parish of Southdean in 1609. However, the Presbytery decided about a week later ‘to provide another kirk for him’, so he appears not to have been the official minister. James (17th C.) merchant from Kirkpatrick Parish in Galloway. In 1696 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, with Walter Graham acting as cautioner for him, that he would pay all liabilities. Rev. James (19th C.) born at Muthill, Perth, he was minister of Robertson Free Kirk. He was recorded at Robertson when the Ordnance Survey Name Book was made in the period 1858–60. In 1861 he was a lodger at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Note that a man of the same was minister at Swinton 1833–68, and made the second statistical account there.

Mr. ?? (b.1880) born in Kelso, son of Peter and nephew of Dr. Robertson Nicholl, Editor of the ‘British Weekly’. He was educated in Kelso and at Apatria Agricultural College. He became tenant farmer of Mackside in the early years of the 20th century. He was a member of the Hobkirk School Board. He married a daughter of Rev. William Smith. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1560 as owner of a tenement in Hawick, on the north side of the High Street, east of the tenement of Thomas Short. He is recorded in 1579 when the same tenement in Hawick, belonging to Simon Sanderson, ‘sumtyme pertenit’ to him (also written ‘Logane’).

loggerhead (lo-gur-heed) n., arch. a loggerhead, idiot – ‘Robert Wright, late bailie, is fined for abusing the present bailie, by hanging of him, calling him drunken sott and loggerhead …’ [BR1685].

loll (lol) v., arch. to mew, mew, howl like a cat – ‘…they were agreeably surprised with the loalling of cats’ [EM1820], ‘Loalling. Loud mewing, Teviotdale’ [JoJ], ‘The vera cats are waefu’ lollin’ – Guid weather’s dead’ [JoHa].

London (lun-din) n. Edmund (13th/14th C.) given the Prebend of Ashkirk by Edward II in 1319. His name was given as ‘Edmund de Londres’. Perhaps the same ‘Master Edmund de Londres’ was recorded in 1305 in a list of merchants who used the River Thames between London and Oxford. He was Clerk of the Chapel of the Countess of Hereford in about 1315 when he petitioned the King on behalf of his uncle ‘William Cachefreyns’. A record from the House of God in Berwick mentions that he was the appointee there, but was ousted by Robert the Bruce after
The London Cup

Bannockburn and replaced with William of Roxburgh. Thomas (12th/13th C.) probably son of William ‘de Londres’, he was known as ‘Thome de Londonis’ and variants. He was a descendant of William de Londres, 1st Lord of Kidwelly, a Norman knight who settled in Scotland. The family name developed into Lundy. He witnessed the Charter of Earl Henry to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1150. He married Escheyne, daughter of Uchtred de Molle. Their children were: Malcolm de Lundin, granted the Barony of Lundie in Forfar, who became ‘Doorward’ of all the King’s palaces; Philip de Lundin, granted the Barony of Lundin in Fife; and Escheyne de Molle, who married Robert de Croc and Walter Fitz Alan, High Steward of Scotland. He also married Margaret Lovel, who had previously been married to Ralph, Lord of Castle Cary and Hawick, and who was mother of Henry, Lord of Hawick; she gifted lands at Outerside to Jedburgh Abbey in the 1160s (also sometimes written ‘Loudon’).

The London Cup (thu-lun-din-kup) n. Common Riding race prize, subscribed for by callants living in London in 1845. How long the trophy was competed for and what happened to it are unknown.

The London Scottish Border Counties Association (thu-lun-din-skø-eesh-bör-dur-koonˈ-eez-aw-so-see-a-shín) n. Former organisation of Borders gentlemen and ladies based in London. It was formed in 1897, with Andrew Lang as President, and held its first annual dinner in 1898, with the Chair occupied by the Duke of Buccleuch. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle talked on ‘the literature of the Scottish border’ at the 1904 dinner.

Longueville (long-vil) n. Thomas (d.c.1340) possibly the earliest member of the Langlands family. One story is that he was a French Pirate, ‘the Red Rover’, who was captured attacking one of William Wallace’s ships, with the two becoming friends. A more likely story is that the family came across with William the Conqueror and settled in Scotland. It seems he was also known as ‘Thomas de Charteris’ after marrying the Charteris heiress and taking her name. It may have been that a branch of the family established themselves at Langlands and took that as their name. This early history is unclear, and further confused through the influence of historical romances such as ‘The Scottish Chiefs’ (1809) by Jane Porter, popularising earlier tales by the medieval balladeer Blind Harry. The family gained lands at Langlandshill in Peeblesshire, built the original Kinfauns Castle in Perthshire and also acquired local lands that would become the Langlands (i.e. Wilton) estate. Wallace is traditionally supposed to have visited the Langlands estate in 1297 and ‘tethered his charger to a thorn tree near the Castle Wall’.

The Longuevilles (thu-long-vilz, -long-gwu-vée) n. Originally Norman family, taking their name from a small town in Normandy. The Longuevilles, Earls of Buckingham, were the ancient lords, and there are several places still bearing the name in England. The family held lands in the Barony of Wilton from the early 13th century. There has also been the suggestion that this was the same family as ‘Langlands’, who are recorded as Barons of Wilton in the 15th century; this connection would establish the same family as Barons for about 500 years.

Look-up (loo-kup) n. Andrew (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) and Provost of Jedburgh, who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. Probably the same Andrew paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. This peculiar surname was once fairly common in Jedburgh and Melrose. Robert (b.c.1780) writer in Hawick, according to the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. He could be the son of Thomas baptised in 1783. Thomas (1729/30–1811) forester of the Buccleuch estates in ‘Teviotdalehead’ in at least the period 1798–1807. He is probably the Thomas ‘Lukup’ recorded as ‘Groom and House Servant’ at Branxholme in 1778 and 1779 (working for William Ogilvie) and ‘House Servant’ in 1785 and 1786 (working for Adam Ogilvie). He may be the Thomas who married Alison Gill (or McGill) in 1771 and whose children included: Helen (b.1772); Christian (b.1775); and Robert (b.1783). The witnesses in 1772 were John Laurie (preacher at Caerlenrig) and John Kyle. He died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary’s.

William (17th C.) listed as wright and servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. His surname is transcribed ‘Linkvpe’, but it seems likely this was ‘Look-up’. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for work done at Branxholme and Hawick (also written ‘Lukup’ and other variants).

Looselaw (loos-law) n. former farmstead on the Tweeden Burn in Castleton Parish. On Stobie’s 1770 map it was marked on the north side of the burn, close to the location of Hillhouse, which is not marked.

loot (loot) v., arch. to stoop, bend the body – ‘...aw had just looted doon to talk a birn oot o’ ma shoe for a minute ...’ [BCM1880], ‘... men war layin on an chaappin, lootin doon an howkin thre a skerr, the teime a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS], n., arch. a stoop, act of bending – ‘He limpit and stachert sae when he did gang, Wi’ a loot and a stop, syne a bob and a bang’ [JoHa] (also lout).

Lopdell-Bradshaw (lop-del-brad-shaw) n. Rev. Humphrey Maitland (1931/2–2004) from Angus, he was son of an officer in the Gordon Highlanders, and served as adjutant for that Regiment while they were stationed at Stobs in the 1930s. He was mentioned in dispatches for action in Cyprus in 1957. He became an Episcopalian minister in the early 1960s, serving at Holy Cross in Edinburgh, then in Gilmerton, Birmingham and Oxsangs, before moving to St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick in 1977. He left in 1988 for the Isla-Deveron group of parishes, apparently amid a storm over a section of the vestry forming a sort of social work agency. He was Canon of St. Andrew’s Cathedral, Inverness from 1991. He retired in 1997 and moved to Kirriemuir. He married Margaret and they had a daughter, Diane.

lopper gowan (lo-pur-gow-in) n., arch. the oxeye daisy, marguerite, Chrysanthemum leucanthemum (also ‘loppert gowan’; cf. horse-gowan).

loppert (lo-pur’) pp., adj., arch. coagulated, clotted, said of milk, etc. – ‘At dinner-time he treats his stomach, With lopper’d milk, or barley drammock’ [JR], ‘The mune she shines sae bright, Till a’ the yirth aneth her een Is fu’ o’ loppert licht’ [DH] (also loupered).

Lord Alemoor (lord-il-moor) n. alternative title of the Earl of Tarras (Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden) in the latter part of the 17th century. It was also the title of Andrew Pringle, an 18th century judge.

Lord Balmerino see Elphinstone

Lord Goldielands (lord-gold-ee-lindz) n. subsidiary title used by the Scotts of Buccleuch, along with Earl of Deloraine and Viscount Hermitage. It was created in 1706 for Henry, 3rd son of James, 1st Duke of Buccleuch, and became extinct in 1807 when Henry Scott, 4th Earl of Deloraine, died.

Lord Heathfield see Gen. George Augustus Eliott

Lord Herries (lord-hee-reez) n. hereditary title of the Herries and then Maxwell families, who owned the Barony of Feu-Rule until the mid-17th century (see Herries and Maxwell: written ‘Herris’ and variants).

Lord Harry’s Rant (lord-ha-reez-rawn’) n. song appearing in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. It is said there to be about one of the Earls of Deloraine, and this may have been Henry Scott (1676–1730), 1st Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch. With the first lines being ‘Give ear to my frolicsome ditty, Of one that a wager did lay ...’, it has been printed in several forms under different names, such as ‘The Rant’. It tells the story of a gentleman who made a bet that he could cross the city without saying anything to the night watchmen. But he is arrested by one, and only freed by the intercession of the Lord Mayor’s daughter.

Lord Lieutenant (lord-loo-te-nin’) n. official position in a county, originally set up in the late 18th century to be responsible for maintaining local law and order and calling out the militias in times of disturbance. It is a non-political position, the appointee being the Crown’s representative in the county, presenting medals on behalf of the Queen, organising royal visits, etc. They also have responsibility for the Territorial Army and Justices of the Peace. The position is typically held by a retired senior military officer, peer or business person. Lieutenants are among the few people allowed to fly the Lion Rampant. Due to local government reorganisation the regions covered are no longer counties, but referred to as ‘lieutenancy areas’, the local one being ‘Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale’. The Duke of Buccleuch is the current Lord Lieutenant.

Lord Montagu (lord-mon-tu-gew) n. title of Henry James Montagu Scott uncle and guardian to the young 5th Duke of Buccleuch, who was made an Honorary Burgess along with the Duke when they travelled through Hawick in 1821.

Lord o Buccleuch (lord-ô-bu-kloo) n. title used by the head of the Scotts, also known as Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. The 1st Lord of Buccleuch was Walter, ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, who was raised to the peerage in 1606 and died in 1611. His son Walter was 2nd Lord until elevated to an Earldom in 1619. However, several of the earlier chiefs were called ‘Lord’, this being formerly synonymous with ‘Laird’. There were at least 10 Lairds before ‘the Bold Buccleuch’, with the first to sit in the Scottish Parliament as Lord of Buccleuch being Sir David Scott, 7th Laird, in 1481.

Lord o Hawick (lord-ô-hlk) n. title of the Barons of Hawick, particular used of the Douglases, responsible for law enforcement around Hawick in the early 16th century.

Lord Olifer (lord-ô-lee-vur) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 17th century, and his son, also Robert in the early 18th century, as well as for an earlier Oliver in Falside in Southdean Parish – ‘Lord Olipher embalmed in song, A stranger to fear, a foe to wrong; Like sturdy Hab, branched from your race, Your lineage royalty would grace’ [WNK].

Lord Napier see Napier, Francis

Lord Neaves see Neaves, Charles

Lord Pei Huill (lör’d-pi-hül) n., arch. a snobbish person – ‘. . . the man with the airs and graces was inevitably ‘Lord Pei Huill’’ [WL].

Lord Polwarth (lör’d-pol-wurth) n. the present head of the Scotts of Harden is Henry Alexander Hepburne-Scott, 10th Lord Polwarth. The first local Lord Polwarth was Hugh Scott, 11th Baron of Harden.

the Lord’s Trei (thu-lör’dz-tri) n. former tree near the western side of the road shortly before coming to the Caa Knowe. Its position is indicated by a raised area in the field. This is probably an ancient burial cairn (about 33 ft in diameter) with an enclosure around it. It may be related to the Caa Knowe cairn, which is nearby. The date that the tree grew in the centre is not known, but it was already an old tradition by the mid-19th century.

Lord Warden (lör’d-warden) n. official government position from the early 14th century until the Union of the Crowns in 1603, with responsibility for security of the lands around the Border. There were Lord Wardens of both Scotland and England, with the land split into West, Middle and East portions (sometimes just West and East), with Hawick lying in the Scottish Middle Marches. Sir James Douglas (‘The Black Douglas’) was the first recorded appointee on the Scottish side, in 1314. The Wardenship was hereditary with the Douglas family until forfeited in 1455. Afterwards there were usually 3 separate Scottish Wardens. The relevant Wardens for Hawick are approximately: Sir James Douglas, from 1314; Sir William Douglas, from 1343; Sir Archibald Douglas, 1364 and 1368–1400; Archibald 4th Earl of Douglas, from 1400; James 7th Earl of Douglas, sometime; William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, from 1433; William, 8th Earl of Douglas, from 1450; William Douglas of Cluny, from 1464; James, Earl of Buchan, from 1479; Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, from 1497; Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1502; Ralph and Andrew Ker, from 1503; Alexander, 3rd Lord Hume, from 1510; Sir Robert Ker, from 1514; Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford, from 1515; Anthony Darcy, from 1516; Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus, from 1525; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1536; Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1538; Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, from 1550; James, Earl of Bothwell, from 1558; Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, from 1560; Earl of Angus (Archibald Douglas), from 1574; William Ker of Cessford, from 1583; Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, from 1584; Earl of Arran (James Stewart), from 1584; William Ker.
of Cessford, from 1585; Duke of Lennox (Ludovic Stewart), from 1592; Sir Robert Ker c.1594–1603 (see also Warden).

Lorenz (lo-renz) n. Helen Ruth nee Palmer-Douglas, eldest daughter of James Malcolm Palmer-Douglas. She inherited the vestiges of the Cavers estate, including the small piece of land on which the Hornshole Monument was erected, which she gifted to the people of Hawick in 2019. She married Walter and had children Jason and Robert.

lorimer (lo-ri-mur, -ree-) n., arch. someone who makes metal parts for bridles and saddles, a saddler – ‘Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eitten by his guids and geir . . .’ [BR1642].

Lorimer (lo-ri-mur) n. Sir Robert Stodart, R.S.A. (1864–1929) born in Edinburgh, he became a noted architect and promoter of the Arts and Crafts movement in Scotland. He designed the National War Memorial at Edinburgh Castle. Locally he was responsible for the design of the 1908 wooden chancel screen in St. Cuthbert’s, the 1897/8 renovation of Fatlips Castle, the clock tower in Gala Burgh Chambers and the War Memorial in Kelso.

Lorraine (lō-rān) n. Agnes (16th/17th C.) suggested to have been a daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no evidence for this). She married Martin Elliot. In 1618 she held the liferent of half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf and gifted the lands to her son and heir William Elliot. In 1625 she and William Elliot had a sasine of lands in Lilliesleaf. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1745 she was charged by the Kirk Session of fornication with Thomas Barry, on the birth of her unnamed child. She had to appear before the congregation in sackcloth no less than 11 times. Probably the same Agnes appears to have married Thomas Barrie in Kirkton Parish in 1748. Alexander (14th C.) said to have been taken prisoner at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. It has been suggested that he was a son of Eustace, but there is no definite evidence of their relationship. In 1359 he was granted custody of the lands of Richard of Kirkbride by Edward III, presumably for supporting the English King. It may be that he was the progenitor of the Berwickshire Lorraines (several named Alexander), who were Sheriff-Clerks in Duns in the 17th and 18th centuries there. Alexander (16th/17th C.) resident of Kelso Parish. In 1602 he and his wife Marion Rutherford had a son James baptised. Among the witnesses was George Lorraine, who was surely a relative. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Alexander. An Alexander recorded in Edinburgh in 1621 may have been his son, as well as John, who was a writer in Duns and married a daughter of Sir Alexander Don. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish and then gardener at Oakwood and Middleford. He was probably related to William and Robert, who were also in Ashkirk at the same time; they may all have been brothers and sons of George and Janet Fleming. His brother Robert (a gardener) witnessed the baptism in 1697 and probably the one in 1691 (which is hard to read) along with James . . . He married Jean Ker and their children (several baptised in Selkirk) included: Jean (b.1691); Mary (b.1693); Margaret (b.1697); Lilias (b.1698); Elspeth (b.1700); and Margaret (again, b.1705). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His son James was baptised in Bedrule in 1698. His name is recorded as ‘Archibald Lorring’. He may have been a son of Walter and Janet Shortreed. Beatrix (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in Ruletownhead in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. Her lands were valued at £10. Edward (15th C.) Englishman who was the progenitor of the Barons of Kirkharle in Northumberland. It is unclear what connection there was to the Roxburghshire Lorraines; however, the forename Edward was also known in that branch. He was said to have lands in the Durham area. In 1425 he married Johanna, daughter and heiress of William de Strother. He thus became owner of Kirkharle, and neighbouring lands, including the Northumbrian farm of Hawick. He was probably succeeded by his son Edward. Edward (15th/16th C.) possibly son of James. He may have been the uncle of Hector of Harwood, for whom he witnessed a sasine in 1531. The witnesses after him were William and Patrick. Edward (16th C.) son of John who held lands in Blainslie near Melrose. His name appears to be written ‘Lorne’. In 1579 he had sasine for lands in Blainslie as well as the reversion for the lands. Edward (d.c.1598) Laird of Harwood in the late 1500s, son of Hector, who he succeeded in 1573. In 1573 he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council, along with Sir Thomas Turnbull and others for their raid on the house of Robert Kerr of Woodhead; however, they were acquitted because Kerr had been assisting the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He owned Hawthornside as well as Harwood, and also held the lands of Appotside (perhaps through marriage). In 1578/9 he was ‘guidsone’ (i.e. son-in-law) to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, when he was among men required to be presented to the Privy Council, with John Johnstone of that Ilk as cautioner, for the murder of Thomas Shiel. In 1580 he was ‘younger of Harwoold’ when he was in a bond with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Barnhills to keep peace with the Turnbuls of Minto and others; at that point the Lorraines of Harwood were united with the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Barhills, and feuding with the Turnbuls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn. In 1583 William Douglas of Cavers was cautioner for him. He is probably the ‘Larde of Harret’ who signed a bond of assurance with the English Warden in 1584 (along with Gledstains, Elliot, Armstrongs and others). He was recorded in 1585 along with William Douglas of Cavers as cautioners for John Douglas of Whitriggs. He and John Turnbull of Minto were cautioners for ‘Hobbie Elliot, called Vicar’s Hobb’ in 1588/9. Also in 1589 James Langlands of that Ilk was cautioner for him. About 1590 he was listed among landed men in the Borders. He is probably the Edward who (along with Gilbert) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1580 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He is said to have been an unassuming man, although his wife was the opposite. She apparently roused the ire of the Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood in the years 1598–1605. Hector and William, probably his sons or other close relatives, were slain, along with his wife’s servant. Flocks and herds were also carried off, as well as timber. The feud only ended when an appeal was made to the Earl of Angus. His son Hector succeeded him by 1599, while Edward and James were other surviving sons, and he may also have had sons William, Walter and Fergus. In 1606 his son James was declared a fugitive. Edward (16th/17th C.) younger son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He is mentioned several times as ‘Edward the younger of Harwood’. Edward of Harwood (b.c.1600) son of Hector, with his mother possibly being a daughter of Robert Eliot of Redheugh. His father was killed when he was quite young and his uncle James served as his tutor. He is recorded in an instrument of 1619 being required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to Francis Hamilton, who was heir of James Hamilton, formerly owner of lands in the Rule valley; this was under the instructions of his superior, Lord Herries. In fact Margaret married Rev. William Weir, who became minister at Hobkirk; it may be that not fulfilling the marriage contract meant that Edward had to pay a fine to Lord Herries. In 1630 he is recorded in a ‘contract of wadsett’ assigning the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside to William Weir, minister of Hobkirk; this followed the contract of 1598 when his father Hector had borrowed money from James Hamilton. In 1631 he granted sasine of Hartshaugh to Gilbert Elliott. Also in 1631 he had a precept of clare constat and sasine for Harwood and Hawthornside, granted by Andrew, Lord Jedburgh; this renewal confirms that he was great-grandson of Hector. In 1632 he and Rev. Weir were involved in another wadset of Harwood to Gilbert Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtins’). In 1632 he had a sasine for Appotside, granted by Rev. William Weir, with the consent of Francis, son of James Hamilton, as well as for Tythehouse. In 1633 he had a wadset with Gilbert Elliott for the lands of Tythehouse. In 1637 he and Gilbert Elliot granted the lands of Harwood and Tythehouse to William, eldest son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. He had thus ended his family’s ownership of Harwood, but held onto the small farm of Appotside. In 1643 he is listed as owner of Appotside, valued at £200. He is probably the ‘Laird Lorran’ who led a group of 20 or so men who captured Royalist leader William Murray after the Battle of Philiphaugh. He is recorded as ‘of Appotsyd’ as witness to a contract of 1648 and again in 1649. He witnessed a marriage contract in 1652 for Robert Elliot and Margaret Riddell. In 1654 he is described as the ‘heritable proprietor’ when he and his eldest son Walter had a contract of ‘wadset’ with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks for the lands of Appotside. In 1656 he resigned his lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in favour of William Elliot of Harwood; this was with the agreement of his wife, Maisie Elliot, and also mentions his eldest son, Walter. An additional contract reserves for him the ‘mill, mulfutes, sequels, suckin, kiln, houses, mill-lands lying beyond the water dam on the south side’ of Appotside, along with pasture for a few animals. He signed his surname as ‘Lorrain’. In 1659 he appears to be the tenant of Appotside Mill, along with Walter Riddell (tenant at Appotside), when the ‘liferent’ of the lands was given to Christine Grahamslaw (new wife of William Elliot of Harwood). In 1662 he was listed among the debtors to the deceased William Elliot of Harwood; Walter ‘in Whyttschaugh’ was also listed, and probably his son. In about 1663 the Land Tax Rolls record that he paid tax on £300 at Appotside. He married Maisie Elliot, who may have been from the Eliotts of Stobs (his neighbours) or the Elliots of Reidheugh (his mother’s family). His eldest son Walter was perhaps the Walter who married Janet Shortreed and lived in Hawick Parish. He may also have had a daughter Alison, married to Robert Scott, whose daughter Elspeth was born in Kelso in 1635. He may also have had a younger son George, who had a daughter baptised in Hawick the same day as a daughter of Walter. He probably remained at Appotside until his death, ending his family’s association of about 250 years with the lands around Harwood. Eustace (d.bef. 1374) probably ancestor of the Lorraines of Harwood, his surname is given as ‘de Lorreyne’ and similar variants, while his forename is also ‘Eustachius’ and ‘Tassyn’. He was involved in events on both sides of the Border and is recorded between 1323 and 1374 (which is long enough that it is possible there were 2 generations here). It is not known when he was born or who his parents were. Although sometimes referred to as a knight, it is unclear which side of the Border this came from. He held land in Roxburghshire, including ‘Heroude’ (which is surely Harwood in Rulewater), as well as in Dumfriesshire (including ‘Coschogill’) and in Ayrshire. In 1323 he was given safe passage to meet the Earl of Atholl in England, with the stipulation that he was not to go more than 10 leagues across the Border. In 1331 he was among men accused of illegally hunting on the Earl of Angus’ lands in Northumberland. In 1333 he was a Scotsman appointed by Edward III as one of the Commissioners to inquire into the valuation of Berwick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Perth in 1335, having his Scottish lands restored at that time. About the same year he was among a few Scottish noblemen who swore fealty to Edward III in 1336 and in 1336 was granted a pardon by the English King for crimes committed in Scotland. In 1340 he had remission (now from the Scottish King) for the killing of Robert Lauder, although no details of the incident are given. In 1343 he was given compensation by Edward III for lands lost in Scotland. He was also Warden of Roxburgh Castle (with Sir William Douglas as Governor at the same time) in 1346, when the Castle was surrendered to the English (specifically Henry Percy and Ralph Neville). He had a son (perhaps on the English side) captured at the Battle of Neville’s Cross (by Robert Bertram), for whom ransom was paid in 1347. He was ‘Eustacio Loreyn’ when he witnessed to a charter for Adam of Rule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Around that time (and certainly by 1357) he forfeited his lands to Hugh Blair of that Ilk, presumably for acting against the Scottish King; the lands were confirmed to Hugh’s son James Blair in 1374. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter of confirmation by John Copeland to John Ker for lands in Altonburn; at that point he was ‘of Chatto’. He was still ‘of Chatto’ in 1358 when he witnessed a charter for William of Blakedene, confirming lands of Molle and Altonburn to John Ker. He was probably related to James, recorded in the 1350s and 60s, including witnessing the 2 charters of 1357/8 and 1358 with him. It has been suggested that James (perhaps ancestor of the Harwood line), Alexander (perhaps ancestor of the Berwickshire line), Robert (perhaps ancestor of the Hummelknowes line) and William may all have been his sons, but there is no definitive evidence for any of these connections. Eustace (15th C.) recorded as a witness to a ratification of a gift of land in Edinburgh in 1457. He was surely a descendant of the earlier Eustace. Fergus (d.1616) murdered at ‘Gaithouslok’ (i.e. Gatehousecote) by Andrew and Cuthbert McDougal, tenants in Stonedge. They were apparently caught ‘with the bloody hand’ and committed to Jedburgh Tolbooth in 1618. He was surely related to Walter, tenant in Gatehousecote, and it has been suggested that he might have been a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It is unclear where his forename came from, but there is a Fergus Turnbull recorded a century earlier. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk. His daughter Elspeth was baptised there in 1641, with his surname being recorded as ‘Lorne’. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with William, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford, servant of the Laird of Cavers, accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna (or perhaps Janet) Fleming and their children included John (b.1655). The baptism was witnessed by John Lister and Simon Adamson and was the same day as Walter’s daughter Isobel was baptised; this hints that he may have been Walter’s brother, and hence a younger son of Edward of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may also have had children Robert, William, Isobell and Alexander. George (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1691 when he and another man were paid for mowing in the account book of Dame Magdalene Nicholson, widow.

of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. George (d.1720) servant of George Scott in Easter Groundiston. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: John (b.1703); George (b.1706); Agnes (b.1709); and Janet (b.1714). The baptism in 1703 was done along with a son of John Lamb, with witnesses Adam Scott and Walter Scott. The 1706 baptism was done at Wilton Common, with witnesses James Irvine and Will Scott. The use of the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ for his funeral is recorded, and he was transcribed ‘in Coghall’ (probably ‘Boghall’). The death of ‘Agnes Lorran in Heap’ in 1734 was probably his daughter. It has been suggested that he may have been son of John and grandson of George and Janet Fleming. George (b.c.1705) resident of Wilton Parish, probably the son of George born in 1706. He lived at Heap with his father, in about 1724 was at Heap with Thomas Scott and in about 1725–34 he was farm servant to John Blyth, tenant in Stitches. In 1764 he gave evidence regarding the use of Wilton Common; at that time he was tenant in Overhall. He married Helen Nichol in 1727 and their children included Helen (b.1731). The later George may have also been his son. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Hart in 1752. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism for John in 1755. He may be the George whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1770. He may have been son of the earlier George from Wilton. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1763 and 1765 (and hence surely related to John, who was also there at about the same time) and at Hummelknowes in 1772. His children included: Margaret (b.1763); Helen (b.1765); an unnamed son (b.1767); and John (b.1772). Gilbert (‘Gib’) (16th C.) probably son of Hector. He was listed in 1579 among Scotsmen accused by ‘the Laird of Pansoun, Englishman’ of raiding into England; he was stated there to be son of the Laird of Harwood. He was also on a list in 1579/80 of men charged to make recompense to Englishmen they had acted against; his cautioner then was the Laird of Bedrule. He is also recorded in 1583/4 when he was denounced along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others for not appearing before the Privy Council. He is probably the Gilbert who (along with Edward) signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the Gilbert, who along with Hector ‘Lorance’ (probably his brother) is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596.

He could be the ‘Gib Lorreyne’ listed along with ‘Archy Trumble’ in a complaint of a raid into England in 1597. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Hector, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. Also in 1609 he was ‘father-brother’ to Hector of Harwood when John Turnbull of Minto was cautioned in a bond to enter them. He could be the ‘Gilbert Lorreyne of Hawdon’ recorded in 1601 when Richard Fenwick of Stanton accused him of stealing livestock from him. He may also be the Gib ‘of Apputtsyde’ recorded in 1601 along with Hector and John, as well as several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He is probably the ‘Gib Lorayne, called Auld Gib’ who was listed as a fugitive in 1605, along with ‘Jock’s John’ and many Armstrongs, Elliots, Turnbulls, etc. He was listed again as a fugitive for failing to attend another Border Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1606, along with his brother Hector; he was then ‘Gib Lorayne, called Old Gib’. This suggests that he may have had a son who was ‘Young Gib’. It has been suggested that he married a sister of William Scott of Tushielaw, but there is no evidence for this. Grizel (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among people who failed to appear in Jedburgh when cited. The others included Margaret (who may have been her sister) and Andrew Shiel. They were probably Covenanting objectors. She was also listed in 1684 along with Margaret and Beatrix, possibly her sisters. It has been suggested she might have been daughter of Walter (but there is no proof for this). Hector (16th C.) owner of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside according to a charter granted by William Lord Herries in 1531 (incorrectly noted as in one source as 1561). He was the grandson (and heir) of James and son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded his grandfather (his father presumably predeceasing his grandfather). He seems to have been the first Hector in his family, so perhaps his mother was a Turnbull (where this forename was known at the time, and with 2 Turnbulls witnessing the 1531 charter). It was stated that the earlier charters for the lands had been accidentally burned, and hence a new charter was given in 1531. The sasine for his lands was witnessed by Edward, William and Patrick, who may have been his uncles, or other near relatives. He is probably the ‘Ecto’ Lord of Harwode’ who had a bond of 1557 along with Turnbulls, Elliot and others, to present ‘Will Nykesone, called Gymmerhom’. He is probably the ‘Lard of Harwode’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his son Edward and probably also had sons Hector and Gilbert, and perhaps daughters Agnes and Marion. He probably died before 1573. In 1583/4 he was probably the Hector of Harwood on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use (making it somewhat unclear when he died). He is probably the Hector recorded on Monipennie’s list of Border Lairds in the 1590s (even although he was deceased by then). His son Edward is recorded in 1578/9 as ‘guisnone’ to Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, and hence his wife was probably sister of Turnbull of Bedrule. Hector (16th/17th C.) son of Hector of Harwood and brother of Edward and Gib. He is probably the Hector, who along with Gilbert Lorance is recorded being fined for crimes against William Hall of Otterburn in 1596. In 1599 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope complained that he and Gilbert, ‘father-brothers of Hector Lorane of that Ilk’ were involved in the slaughter of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope; they were captured and presented to James Douglas of Cavers, as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, but Douglas refused to enter them in court. John Turnbull of Minto was cautioner for a bond to enter him and Gilbert, this being subscribed at Barnhills. He is probably the Hector ‘of Apputtsyde’ listed in 1601 along with Gib and John, along with several Turnbulls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman. He was listed in 1606, along with his brother ‘Auld Gib’, among men declared as fugitives for not attending a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. Hector (c.1582–1604) son of Edward and grandson of Hector. He was Laird of Harwood and was succeeded by his grandson Hector, probably son of his own son Edward. A contract of 1598 with James Hamilton describes a loan (of £1000) from Hamilton, and how he will inherit the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside, but with Hamilton receiving the lands if he defaulted on the loan. This was confirmed in a contract of 1600, where he was to be infefted in the lands, with the loan from Hamilton now being almost £1200. In 1602 the wardship of his lands was granted to James Hamilton, as well as ‘the marriage of Hector Lorane, now of Harwode’ and the marriage of any other male heirs who might succeed later; he was still a minor at this point, since he was described as ‘apparent of Harwood’. Hamilton also had a charter for the lands of Tythehouse and Apotside. It seems likely that in about 1602 he married a daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Marion Hamilton, who was the sister of James Hamilton (who held the rights of his marriage). However, his wife’s first name is not recorded and it is not known if she remarried after his early death. He was killed ‘with schotis of hagbutis and pintoletis’ as part of the feud between Lady Appotside (his mother, daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) and other local Turnbulls. After his death the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside reverted to the superior, William, Lord Herries, until taken temporarly by James Hamilton. He probably had a single child, Edward, who succeeded. Hector of Harwood (16th/17th C.) heir to his grandfather Hector. He is recorded in a deed of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside; William and Patrick were witnesses to the associated sasine. He was the last Lorraine Laird of Harwood, selling the lands, along with Tythehouse and Appotside to Simon Elliot of the Binks in 1637. He married a daughter of Robert Elliot, 16th of Redheugh, whose brother was William Elliot of Hartshaugh. Dr. Herbert James Bell (1852–1909) son of Rev. Joseph, minister of Tinwald and Caerlavrock. He was great-great-grandson of William, servitor to John Scott of Gorrenberry, and hence was descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. He graduated from Edinburgh University, then spending 3 years in the U.S.A. before commencing in medical practice in England. He moved to Hawick in about 1889, taking over from Dr. Penman. He lived at 31 Bridge Street. He served as surgeon to the Mechanics’ Friendly Society and was medical officer to the Hawick Post Office. He was also a member of Hawick School Board, was an elder in Hawick Parish Church and served as President of Hawick R.F.C. He was a Unionist in politics and was President of the Hawick Constitutional Club. He once stood as a local councilor. He spent 1902 as a government medical officer on the Gold Coast in Africa. From 1903 he was medical officer for Stobs Camp. His wife was Janet Hewat (1861–1935), who communicated with George Tancred regarding the Lorraines of Harwood. Their children were: Joseph Currie (b.1886), who was also a doctor; Edith Dickson Bell (b.1887), who married David Bell and secondly H.S. Davidson; Janet Hewat (b.1889), born in Hawick, who married Charles MacLeod; Alice Mary Neilson (b.1891), also born in Hawick, who married Nicholas Vass; and Richard Hewat Bell (b.1894), also born in Hawick, who married Mary Gould. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in about the period 1210–22 when he and his wife Ada, daughter and heiress of Simon Fraser, renewed a charter to Kelso Abbey. This was for the church of Keith-Humbie in East Lothian. His name is given as ‘Hugo Lorenz’, which is presumably ‘Lorraine’. However, it is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. James (d.1346) said to have been a ‘Banneret’ who was killed at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His name is given as ‘James Loreyn’. It is unclear if he was on the Scottish or English side, and how he might have been related to Eustace, who was Warden of Roxburgh Castle at that time. James (14th C.) witnessed in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness to the charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8 and another granting them further lands in Sprouston in 1358. In 1357/8 he was granted an annuity of £20 by Edward III, for having lost most of his Scottish lands on account of supporting England; this was repeated the following year with an extra 20 marks and in 1359 he received a further gift from the English King. In 1357/8 he witnessed a charter for John Copeland and another in 1358 for William of Blakedene, both relating to the lands of Altonburn (and both also witnessed by Eustace). Also in 1358 he was granted the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire, and in 1361 received custody of the lands of Old Roxburgh, formerly belonging to the deceased Nicholas de Seymour. In 1365 he witnessed a quitclaim by Joan, wife of John of Copeland. In about 1370 he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. He is recorded as being ‘de Lorreyne’, ‘Loreyne’, ‘Loreyn’ and ‘Lorreyn’. He was probably directly related to Eustace (perhaps his son or brother), who was recorded in the 1330s to 50s. One possibility is that he was son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the later Lorraines of Harwood. James (15th C.) recorded in 1454/5 when he attempted to recover the lands of Coscogill in the Regality of Drumlanrig from John Blair of Adamton. These had been in the hands of the Blairs since forfeited by Eustace about a century earlier. Given the court case to recover some of the family lands in Dumfriesshire, it seems clear that he was a direct descendant of Eustace, and either was already Laird of Harwood, or succeeded in recovering these lands at about the same time. Probably the same James was on an inquest held in Dumfries in 1451/2 regarding the lands of Sir James Douglas, and he was likely also the Lorraine who witnessed a land transfer to a Bailie of Dumfries in 1453. Perhaps the same James was a member of an inquest at Jedburgh Forest in 1439, relating to succession of the lands of John Douglass of Bonjedward. He was surely related to the nearly contemporary John of Harwood, perhaps his brother. James (15th/16th C.) mentioned in a charter of 1531 to his grandson Hector, by which time he was deceased. His son (and father of Hector of Harwood) may have been John. It has been suggested that he was son of John of Harwood, recorded in 1464/5, and descended from Eustace. He is recorded as ‘Jacobi lorane’ in 1494/5 when William Douglass of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. Probably the same James ‘Lor-ein of Herwod’ was part of an assize in 1507. He may have had sons John, Edward, William and Patrick (the latter 3 being witnesses to the assize in 1531 for Hector, listed in this order); however, there are no documents to confirm any of this. Nevertheless, there is evidence that John was father of Hector, and hence presumably John was his son. James (16th C.) listed in 1547 among residents of ‘Overtoone of Blanyslie’ near Melrose. His surname is given as ‘Lorne’, but it seems likely this was Lorraine. It is unclear how he would have been related to other Lorraines, but it has been suggested that he could have been a son of John of Harwood. He married Agnes Lamb and his son Edward had a ‘precept of clare constat’ for his father’s lands in Blainslie in about 1579. James of Appotside (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. In 1598 he was implicated in the slaughter of David Turnbull of Wauchope near his house. This was no doubt part of the ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and Lorraines. Note that his younger brother William was killed by Turnbulls in 1600 and his older brother Hector in 1604. In 1605 he is recorded as ‘Jacob Lorane fratric Hectoris Lorane de Harwode’ when he had remission for being involved in the murder of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1606 he was denounced for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend the fugitive William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. In 1606/7 he was recorded as brother of the deceased Hector of Harwood and ‘propinquior agnatus’ (i.e. closer relative) to Hector, on his father Edward’s side; he was thus appointed as tutor to his young nephew Edward. In 1607 Thomas Home, Burgess of Musselburgh was cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council to answer the charges brought against him by Thomas Turnbull of Wauchope and Hector Turnbull of Barnhills, namely ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Also in 1607 he was son of Edward of Harwood when he petitioned the Privy Council, claiming that he never received the charge and hence did not appear to be warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He paid a fine, but it is unclear if he was imprisoned afterwards. In 1618/9 he was witness to a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and Adam Turnbull of the Townhead of Abbotrule. In 1619 there was a complaint that he had threatened William Ker (younger of Yair) with a hagbut when he was riding near the headwaters of Rule. He was denounced a rebel for failing to appear, but it is unclear whether or not he escaped punishment. There is no information about whether he married or had children. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He had a marriage contract with Isobel Bairnfather in 1687, in which she has sasine of ‘ane nether hous and two riggs of arrable land in nether ancrum’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Stirches who was given 10 shillings by Wilton Parish in 1704. He may be the person transcribed as ‘Jannet Lorane’ (possibly at Easter Heap) who was given money the previous year. He was probably related to Patrick and William, who were recorded at Heap in 1650. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘some time in Cleithaugh’ in Southdean Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708, with the child’s father engaging for the child in his absence. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at ‘Coldfolds’ (probably Cawfauls) in 1750, Brodale in 1753 and Clarilaw in 1758. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Samuel (b.1750); James (b.1753); and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1750 were Thomas Riddell and James Simpson, in 1753 were James Dryden and James Martin and in 1758 were James Dryden and Andrew Blyth. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for John Rutherford in 1779. He could be the James who died in Wilton in 1811, with Betty dying in 1812. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Agnes Paterson. Their son Charles was baptised in 1758. James (18th/19th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1809. Jean (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. She is buried in Hobkirk Cemetery, with the funeral of William being recorded the same day. Dr. Joseph Currie (1886–1945) son of Hawick doctor Herbert. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was admitted to the Royal College of Surgeons. It is said that in 1907 he moved to become medical officer for the Burmah Oil Company in Rangoon. During WWI he served in the R.A.M.C. as a Lieutenant and then Captain. Afterwards he was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He married 3 times, to Margaret Kennedy, Alice Wilson and Margaret Young. He had a son Herbert Derrick Bell (1913–82), who played rugby for Scotland. John of Harwood (15th C.) member of the panel in 1464/5 that ruled on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas. He is listed as ‘John Lorane of Harwood’. He was probably a descendant of Eustace. He was surely closely related to the James who was recorded in 1454/5, perhaps his brother. He may have been father of James of Harwood and hence direct ancestor of later Lorraines of Harwood. John of Lorraine (15th/16th C.) probably son of James and father of Hector. He is probably the John whose seal is recorded among Rutherford charters, showing a lion rampant and the words ‘S iohanes LORAN’. He is recorded in 1493 when the Sheriff, William Douglas of Cavers, was fined for failure to produce him at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh (unless this was a different generation); he was again recorded in 1494/5 for failing to appear. Given that Hector was served heir to his grandfather James in 1531, he must have already been deceased by then. He was explicitly stated to have been father of Hector in the ‘Acta Dominorum’ for 1535/6, relating to a claim made against his son by James Wallace of ‘Cornell’, son and heir of Adam Wallace of Craigie. As well as a son Hector, he may have had children James (connected with Blainslie), John (perhaps father of ‘Jock’s John’) and Bessie (also in Blainslie, married to Michael Dickson). John (16th C.) recorded in 1574 as owner of property in Jedburgh. It has been suggested that he might have been a son of John and hence brother of Hector of Harwood. He may have been father of ‘Jok’s Johnne’. John of Appotside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 with Gib and Hector, along with several Turnbuls, when they were accused of crimes by an Englishman from Morpeth. Probably the same man was ‘Johne Lorayne, called ‘Jok’s Johnne’ in 1605, when listed as a fugitive, along with ‘Auld Gib’; he was recorded there as ‘Johne Lorayne, called Jok’s Johnne’. He was thus son of John, and surely descended from the Lorraines of Harwood.

Lorraine

John (17th C.) (perhaps great-great-grandson of James of Harwood). John (17th C.) witness in Hawick in 1657 to the baptism of Beatrix, daughter of Walter and Janet Shortreed. He was presumably related to Walter. John (b.1655) son of George and Janet Fleming and probably descended from the Lorraines of Harwood. It has been suggested that he may have been father of many of the family members associated with Wilton, e.g. George, James and William. However, there is no documentary proof for this. John (17th C.) resident of Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (17th/18th C.) servitor to John Scott of Ancrum. In 1712 he was attending the New North Kirk of Edinburgh when accused by the Ancrum Session of fornication with Agnes Cant; he was publicly rebuked in Ancrum in 1716. In 1714 he married Isabel Leithhead in Lilliesleaf Parish and their son Thomas (b.1716) was baptised in Ancrum. It is unclear how he was related to other Lorraines. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton and Cavers Parishes. He was in Upper Tofts in 1722, Berryfell in 1725 and Earlside in 1732. He married Margaret Glendinning in Kirkton Parish in 1722. Their children included: Jane (b.1725); and John (b.1732). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter in Wilton Parish in 1729. He may also have been father of Agnes, who had a child with Thomas Barrie in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Netherhall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Easton in 1751; his wife was also from Wilton. Their children included: William (b.1752); Helen (b.1754); and John (b.1755). The witnesses in 1752 were Thomas Hay and Thomas Scott and in 1754 were William Lamb (suggesting that he may have been a son of Walter, who reciprocated in witnessing a baptism for William Lamb) and William Noble. The witness in 1755 was George, who was surely a close relative. In 1752 he and Janet Scott in Wiltonburn were accused of fornication by the Wilton Session, and made to pay fines. Perhaps the same John married Bessie Scott (from Kirkton Parish) in 1758 in Wilton Parish. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in 1775. However, he may also be the John for whom the Wilton ‘mortcloth’ fee was paid in 1774. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1748 he married Ann Mitchellhill from Cavers. Further children baptised in Cavers Parish were probably also his: Christian (b.1758); Anne (b.1760); and Margaret (b.1769). In at least 1758–69 he was living in Orchard (and hence was surely related to George, who was in Orchard in 1763). He could be the John, son of John, born in 1732. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. John (18th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Kirkton Parish in 1760. His surname is written ‘Lorn’ and ‘Loran’. He was at Acreknowe in 1761 and 1764, and Newmill in 1764 and 1768. His children included: Janet (b.1761), who may have had a child Walter with Robert Ballantyne in 1796 Jean (b.1764); John (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1768), who may have married Robert Anderson. He could be the ‘John Loran’ recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common); along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. He is probably the John who received poor relief in Kirkton in 1796. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and the couple paid a fine to the Session for fornication. Their children included Benjamin (b.1769). The witnesses were Walter Irvine and John Murray. It seems likely he was related to Walter, who witnessed a baptism for Walter Irvine and Isobel Learmonth (probably related to his wife) in Wilton in 1765. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, possibly son of John and Helen Easton. He married Margaret Graham in 1778. He may be the John who died in Wilton Parish in 1806. Lady Margaret nee Turnbull (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and wife of Edward Lorraine, who was Laird of Harwood and Appotside. She may have been called ‘Lady Appotside’, and it is possible her husband gained these lands from her father through their marriage. She was said to be quite quarrelsome, particularly towards her own family, and suffered the wrath of Turnbull Clan, who laid waste to Harwood and Appotside, with matters coming to a head in 1598 and the years following. 200 cows were stolen, along with 600 sheep, 30 horses and ‘the haill in sight and plenissing’ of Harwood in 1598. The following year 30 cows and goods were taken from Appotside, which was also burned. And in the years 1599–1605 the woods at Appotside were cut down, including about 2200 trees. Her servant Lyall Brown was killed in 1598 along with William Lorraine in 1600 and Hector Lorraine of Harwood in 1604 (both probably her sons). Apparently she appealed to the Earl of Angus, who offered to repay her out of his own pocket. And although this never transpired, the feud came to an eventual end. She is probably the same Margaret who (along with her son James) brought a court action in 1609 against Andrew Hamilton for intruding on the lands of Tythehouse. Margaret (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for being ‘most active and guilty of ane insolent ryot latly committed upon the person of Mr. George Baptie, minister, in the churchyard of Abbotrule’. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. The others listed included her daughter Anna Shiel, as well as Agnes and Bessie Shiel (probably related to her) and Elspeth Jackson. In 1684 she was listed at Gatehousecote among persons who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; others included Andrew Shiel (surely related, and perhaps even her husband) and Grizel (perhaps her sister) there. She is further listed in 1684 along with Grizel and Beatrice (perhaps both her sisters). She may be the Margaret ‘in Graden Barronnie’ who refused to take ‘the oath of abjuratione’ in 1685. Her daughter Euphan was recorded in 1691 (as well as Jean, wife of William ‘Zeaman’, who could be another sister), when she was again referred to as a ‘midwyfe in Gettascot’. Probably the same Margaret was resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (16th/7th C.) see Marion Turnbull Patrick (14th/15th C.) son and heir of Robert, who was Laird of ‘Homylknolle’ (i.e. Hummelknowes). In 1428/9 he resigned his lands into the hands of his overlord in favour of Janet Rutherford, ‘wyfe quhylen’ (probably ‘former wife’) of George Rutherford of Chatto, excepting his own liferent. He was described as her ‘eme’, meaning uncle (usually maternal); however, it has been suggested that she was a Rutherford of Edgerston. The reason was because she had helped him ‘wyn’ his lands of ‘Homylnknole’ and the indenture was signed at ‘Lynthaulche’ (probably Lintalee). This document is the earliest record of Hummelknowe, and the earliest connection of the Lorraines with the Hawick area. He has a seal that was ‘a lion passant, guardant crowned’. It has been suggested that his children included sons James (juror in 1439), Robert (juror in 1440) and John (Master of Coldstream Priory); however, there is no evidence for this and it seems more likely that James was from the Harwood branch and John from the Berwickshire line. Patrick (16th C.) mentioned in the records of St. Andrews University. He matriculated in 1525, graduated in 1527 and became a licentiate in 1529. It is possible he is the same Patrick who witnessed the charter for Hector of Harwood in 1531, making him perhaps son of James and Hector’s uncle. He could be the same man as the clerk of Glasgow Diocese. Patrick (16th C.) clerk of the Diocese of Glasgow who drew up the sasine for Wolfelee and other lands for David Home of Wedderburn in 1550. Probably the same notary of the Glasgow Diocese wrote a sasine of 1559 relating to lands in Wilton. He may also be the Patrick who witnessed a sasine in 1531 relating to Hector Lorraine; this suggests he was related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle and hence son of James. Probably the same Patrick also witnessed a bond signed in 1546, for entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Patrick (17th C.) listed along with William on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines of Wilton. Robert (14th C.) recorded in 1361 as a juror on an inquest held at Roxburgh regarding the possessions of Sir William Dacre. He was on a further panel in 1361. It seems likely he was closely related to Eustace, perhaps a brother or son. One possibility is that he was a son of Eustace and direct ancestor of the Lorraines of Hummelknowes. Robert of Hummelknowes (15th C.) listed on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 (for deciding on the succession of lands in Hownam). He was also ‘Robyn Lorane, Lord of Homylknou’, whose son Patrick is recorded in an indenture of 1428/9. It seems likely that he was a descendant of Eustace, perhaps through his son Robert. It is possible that the same Robert was listed on a retour of inquest for the lands of Samuelson, held at Lauder in 1440. Bailie Robert (15th C.) along with Simon of Routledge, he was Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1453, and hence one of the first 2 known Bailies of Hawick. It is possible he was the same man as the Robert recorded in the 1420s. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Margaret Burn and their children included Beatrix (b.1688). The witnesses to the baptism were John Stuart and Robert Howden. It has been suggested that he was a son of George and Janet Fleming, but it seems more likely that he was closely related to the other Ashkirk Lorraines. He may be the gardener Robert, who witnessed a baptism for his brother Alexander in Ashkirk in 1695. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Story in Cavers Parish in 1707. He may have been ‘in Tour’. It is possible that he was a son of Robert and Margaret Burn. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Weens.

His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1728. Roger (13th C.) witness to a confirmation of a gift of Ralph Maule to Newbattle Abbey sometime before 1231. In 1234 he was witness for the settlement of a dispute between the Chapter of Moray and Alan Durward. He is also recorded as a juror for Earl Patrick of Dunbar and Earl Walter Comyn of Menteith in about 1245. His surname is written ‘Lohereng’, ‘Lorang’ and ‘Loren’. It is possible he was an ancestor of the Scottish Lorraines, but there is no direct evidence of any connections. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend’ Adam Turnbull, tenant of Bonchester Townhead. Given the timing, it is possible that he was a younger son of Edward of Harwood and Margaret Turnbull. It is suggested that he may have been father of Margaret (wife of a Shiel), who is recorded in Gatehousecote in the 1670s to 90s, and perhaps also father of Grizel and Beatrix (who are recorded along with Margaret in 1691). Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Edward. In 1654 he and his father signed a contract with William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks, guaranteeing Elliot rentals from Appotside and its mill in return for a loan of 6,000 merks Scots. He signed his surname as ‘Lorrane’. Probably the same Walter was recorded as ‘in Whyttehaugh’ (likely in Castleton Parish) as a debtor in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and the Binks in 1662. He may also be the Walter ‘of Greins in the parochine of Castletoune’ who had a bond with his brother-in-law Robert Scott of ‘Cartertoune’ in 1667. In 1670 he was tenant in Riccartonfoot when there was a discharge recording that he was unable to pay £220. In 1671 he rented the farm of Powisholm for a year, rented Byreholm in 1673 and Byegate in 1677. There is a tradition that he was killed at the Battle of Bothwell Brig in 1679, but there is no evidence to support this. It is possible he was the Walter ‘Lorane’ recorded in Hawick in the 1650s and 60s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He may be the same man as the son of Edward, last Laird of Harwood. He is recorded in 1665 when he accused Marion Gillespie of ‘pulling the hair out of his head’. Probably the same Walter married Janet Shortreed and his children baptised in Hawick included: Isobel (b.1655), who could be the Isobel who married Thomas Laidlaw and lived in Rober-

Parish. He may be the Walter (b.1733), son of William and Helen Ovens. He married Margaret Smith in 1760 (apparently after the birth of their 1st daughter) and she died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Margaret (b.1759); and Mary (b.1764). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Ballantyne and James Wilson. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Irvine in Wilton Parish in 1765. He was probably the Walter who had a child die of smallpox in Hawick in 1775. He could be the deceased Walter whose daughter Margaret died in 1777.

Walter (1742–1817) eldest son of William and Janet Clerk. His father came from Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He was born at Barngies in Dumfriesshire. He was a farmer at Oakwoodhill and married Mary, daughter of farmer Francis Currie. Their children included: William (1772–1842); Francis (1773–1815); John (1775–1849); Andrew (1778–87); James (1781–1804); Walter (1783–1872); Joseph (1785–1809); Margaret (1787–92); and Andrew (again, 1790–92). The family are buried at Kirkconnel. William (14th C.) gave a wadset to Alan Lauder in 1386 for his lands of ‘Lorymeslands’. This could be simply ‘Lorraineslands’ and were on the north side of the Lauder Water. He is recorded as ‘Willm. of Lorem of Swynstoun’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other contemporary Lorraines. He may have been a son or other close relative of Eustace, but given that the name ‘William’ was not common in the family immediately afterwards, it seems unlikely he was an ancestor of later local Lorraines. William (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of Hanginside (i.e. what became Hawthornside) before being granted to Richard Hangingside (before 1488), apparently because he had transferred his allegiance to the English King. William (16th C.) witness to a sasine for Hector’s lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He was thus probably related to Hector, perhaps being his uncle, which would make him a son of James. Edward was listed before him and Patrick after him (and were surely related). William (1586/7–1600) son of Edward and Margaret Turnbull. He was killed at the age of 13 in the woods of Lorraine. This was part of a feud between local Turnbulls and his mother ‘Lady Appotside’. His elder brother Hector of Harwood was also killed 4 years later. William (17th C.) described as ‘in Cavers’, along with George, in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when Samuel Rutherford accused a large group of his drinking friends of stealing his wallet. His name came before that of George. William (17th C.) listed along with Patrick on a list of Communicants at Easter Heap in 1650. They were probably related to the later Lorraines in Wilton. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Leiden in Hawick in 1640; the other witness was Simon Adamson, who also witnessed a baptism for George in 1655, suggesting he was related to George and Walter and hence potentially a son of Edward and Maisie Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He may have been a son of George and Janet Fleming. He married Dorothy Duncan and their children included Mary (b.1697), who was ‘begotten in fornication’. His wife may be the ‘Dorothea Lorrain’ who was given poor relief by Ashkirk Parish in 1713, 1714, 1715 and 1716 and was ‘in Sinton’ when buried in 1716. William (b.1682) son of Walter and Bessie Riddell, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was ‘servitor’ to John Scott of Gorrenberry, who held lands at Nether Tofts. In 1707 in Edinburgh he married Bessie Buchanan, widow of writer Robert ‘Cristall’; she was daughter of wright Duncan Buchanan and married her 1st husband in 1698. This suggests that he was spending some of his time in Edinburgh, where presumably his master also had a house. His son William was baptised in Kirkton in 1709, when he was recorded being in Nether Tofts. Margaret, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1721, was probably also his child. There were also other children baptised in Edinburgh: Elizabeth (b.1708); ‘Sibbillett’ (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Bessie (b.1712); and Anne (b.1714). Most probably died in childhood and are buried in Edinburgh. He was later a stabler in the South West Parish of Edinburgh and: in 1718 married Katherine Paterson; in 1722 had bans proclaimed to marry Katherine Ogilvie; and in 1723 married Christian Kyle. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1712 he was gardener in Whitfield and in 1716 he may have been at Brieryyards. In 1712 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Brown from Robertson Parish, daughter of Robert Brown, from Kirkton Parish. Their children included John (b.1716). His wife could be the Elspeth Brown who was buried in Wilton in 1747. He may have been a son of John and brother of George and Walter. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Borthaugh in most of the baptismal entries 1723–36. However, he may have been at Newton in 1733. He married Helen Ovens and their children included: Walter (b.1723); Margaret (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727), who may have married Robert Wilson and died in 1778; Elizabeth (b.1729); Francis (b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); and Helen (b.1736). The witnesses in 1725 and 1729 were George Bell and Walter Riddell, in 1727 were Robert Cowan and James ‘Beasly’, in 1731 were George Bell and John Scott, in 1733 were Patrick Scott and John Hume and in 1736 were Walter Riddell and Thomas Kerr. He may be the William whose death is recorded in Wilton in 1777. William (c.1707–90) son of William, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. In 1740 he married Janet Clerk in Hawick; at that time he was still living at Nether Tofts. Soon afterwards he moved to Cadgillside farm at Chapelknowe near Canonbie, where his first son Walter (father of Dr. William) was born in 1742. Other children included: Janet (b.1744); Andrew (1746–1819); William (b.1749); John (1751–1829); James (1753–1822); and Margaret (1755–1833). His wife is recorded at Barnes when she had poor relief in 1889 and also several more times until her death in 1800. William (d.1769) resident of Doorpool. He is buried in Hobbirk Cemetery, with the funeral of Jean being recorded the same day. Dr. William (1772–1841) born at Chapelknow near Canonbie, he was son of Walter and grandson of William, who was from Kirkton Parish. He was classics master at Selkirk Grammar School, then Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School and is described in the book ‘A Borders Schoolmaster’ (2000) by Audrey Mitchell. He was later Master at Glasgow High School. In 1803 he married Dorothea (or ‘Dora’), daughter of Thomas Scott of Banchester. 3 of his sons were Doctors at Glasgow University.

The Lorraines (l̨u-̌l̨o-rān-za) n. family that was once important in the Borders, particularly in Rulewater. The origin of the name is surely the region of Lorraine in north-eastern France, perhaps coming over to Britain at the time of William the Conqueror. The same French family from the Duchy of Lorraine provided a later connection with Scotland through Mary of Guise, who was daughter of Claude of Lorraine, becoming Queen Consort of James V and mother of Mary, Queen of Scots. It has also been claimed that the family is connected with the lands of Deloraine in the Ettrick valley. The early history is very unclear, as is the connection with the Barons of this name who inhabited part of Northumberland (including, confusingly, the farm of Hawick), specifically Kirkharle. Eustace, recorded in the 1330s to 50s, may have been an early ancestor of the Roxburghshire family. There were Lorraines at Hummelknores near Hawick in the 15th century and Robert Lorraine was one of the earliest recorded Bailies of Hawick, in 1453. The Roxburghshire Lorraines held the lands of Harwood from at least the late 15th century until 1637. The name occurs several times among lists of men accused of mounting raids into England in the 16th century. The arms of Lorraine of Harwood are shown as 3 green laurel leaves on a silver background in 1542.

Lorraine Wud (lō-rān-wud) n. former name for a wood near Harwood or Appotside in the Rule valley, named after the family that once owned the land. It is recorded in 1606 that young William Lorraine was killed ‘within the wood of Lorane’ by a gang of Turnbulls, this being part of an ongoing feud with his mother Margaret, ‘Lady Appotside’, herself a Turnbull by birth.

Lothian (lo-thee-in) n. general geographic name for the area around Edinburgh. Latterly it has included the counties of Linlithgow, Midlothian and Haddington, but it formerly applied to all the eastern part of the Lowlands, even including Roxburghshire.

Lothian (lo-thee-in) n. Joseph (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Joanna (b.1736); Peter (b.1738); Charles (b.1741); and George (b.1742). The witnesses in 1738 were Walter Scott of Newton and Patrick Scott, younger of Alton, suggesting that his wife was related to these branches of the Scotts. The 1742 witnesses were merchant Charles Tudhope and mason James Harkness in Hawick. He married Janet Scott and had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from their children included: Joanna (b.1736); Peter (b.1738); Charles (b.1741); and George (b.1742). Lothian an Border Horse (lo-thee-in-är-bör-dur-hors) n. local Territorial Yeomanry Regiment. It was generally for the wealthier volunteers who had their own horse. It grew out of the Royal Edinburgh Volunteer Light Dragoons, set up in 1797 (with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster) and the East Lothian Yeomanry Cavalry, set up at the same time by the Duke of Buccleuch. The 2 merged in 1800 to form the Royal Midlothian Yeomanry Cavalry. It disbanded in 1838, but the 2 units reformed in the 1840s, and amalgamated again in 1879, and were renamed the Lothian and Border Horse in 1908. C Squadron was based in Hawick, with detachments in the main towns of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Many men volunteered for sevice in this regiment during WWI. In 1921 armoured cars replaced horses and from 1924 it was associated with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. It became the 1st and 2nd Lothians and Border Horse in 1939, and saw action in North Africa, France and Italy during WWII. In 1956 it was amalgamated with other regiments to form the Queen’s Own Lowland Yeomanry and was again disbanded in 1967, although resurrected as the Scottish Yeomanry from 1992–99. ‘War Record of the 4th Battalion King’s Own Scottish Borderers and Lothian and Border Horse’ (1920) was written by W.S. Brown. Papers from the regiment are in the National Library of Scotland and some photo albums in the Museum.

Lothian’s Regiment (lö-thee-in-ree-min’) n. another name for the Teviotdale Regiment.

Lothian Street (lö-thee-in-stree’) n. street on the high ground by Loch Park. The main buildings were erected in 1875, with several additional dwellings in the following few years. There was also part of the Lyle & Scott factory there. However, part of the east side was demolished in 1977 and made into a car park. It was named after Schomberg Henry Kerr, 9th Marquess of Lothian.

louch (lowch) n., arch. a loch – ‘When he came to the Clear burn-louch, He swam an ever onward route . . . ’ [HSR].

Lough (lowch) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535 when, along with several others, he was accused of taking grain from ‘le Shaw’ belonging to John Hall. In 1538 he had George Robson, John Robson, Walter Veitch, David Do[wne?] and Walter Scott removed from his 20 merklands in Synton. Oliver (1826–1916) son of Walter, who was a carrier around Southdean. In 1848 he married Agnes, daughter of William Oliver (hind at Langraw). In 1851 they were living with his in-laws at Langraw Scaur. Around the late 1850s they emigrated to Nevada, U.S.A. His children included Walter (b.1848), William (b.1850), Betsey (b.1854) and Henry (b.1856). He died in Nebraska. Walter ‘Wattie’ (b.c.1785–1864) son of James and Christian Oliver, he was born in Jedburgh Parish. He was a carrier at Letham in Southdean Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was carrier and grocer at Gatehousecote. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Formerly Carrier’ at Old Gatehousecote. He ran a cart to Liddesdale in the days before the railway. He married Elizabeth (Betty) Storie in 1819. Their children were: James (b.1820), who married Euphemia Telfer; George (b.1821); Isabella (b.1823), who married George Telfer; Oliver (b.1826), who married Isabella Rutherford; Thomas (b.1832), who was a labourer at Highend in 1851; and Mary (b.1834), who married Andrew Smith. Most of his children were born in Oxnam Parish and some were christened at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh. He died in Hobkirk (formerly written ‘Louche’).

loupered (low-purd, -pur’) adj., pp. clotted, curdled – ‘…Sones on the girdle, made wi’ loupered milk, A jug o’ cream still warm frae the byre’ [WL] (also ‘lappert’ etc.; cf. lapper and loppert).

the Loupin Stane (th-low-pin-stân) n. small-standing stone in an isolated area in Craik Forest, a little over a kilometer to the west-northwest from Wolfcleuchhead. The dimensions are 0.8 m long by 35 cm wide at the top, narrowing to a point, and just 5 cm thick. On one side are carved 2 heads and lettering, while on the other is inscribed ‘Wolfcleuchhead’. It is possible this is a mounting step from the steading of Wolfcleuchhead, moved to its present position at some point (see also lowpin-on stane).

the Loupin Stanes (th-low-pin-stânz) n. small stone circle near Eskdalemuir, not far from ‘the Girdle Stanes’. There are 12 stones in an oval about 18 m across, including 2 larger ones that provide the ‘entrance’. The popular name comes from the story that locals used to try to leap between these two stones until someone’s leg was broken (although they are probably too far apart for this to be feasible).

lourd (loord) adv., poet. rather, liked – ‘I wad lourd have had a winding-sheet, And helped to put it ower his head, Ere he had been disgraced by the border Scot, Whan he ower Liddel his men did lead!’ [T].

Lovat see Simon Fraser

Lovat Mill (lu-vi-nil) n. factory of Teviotex at 15 Commercial Road.

Love (luv) n. John (20th C.) Headmaster of St. Margaret’s School around the a940s and 50s. His wife Winnie was a teacher in the same school and they had daughters Anne and Mary. The family emigrated to the U.S.A. in the 1960s.

Lovel (lu-vul) n. Agnes (13th/14th C.) listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Agnays Louel qe fu la femme Henry del counte de Rokesbug’, so she was presumably the wife of an already deceased Henry. Maurice, Parson of ‘Little Cavers’, who also appears on the Roll, may be her son or other relative. It is possible she is the same as the Eva, widow of Henry, who is recorded in 1294. Asceline (d.1119) probably the ancestor of the Lovels. His father was likely to have been Robert de Breherval, who held the castle of Ivery (or Yvery) in Normandy and came to England with William the Conqueror. He was a vassal of William de Breteuil and his surname was ‘Goello’ or ‘Goel’ (which is probably a variant of ‘Guelph’ or ‘Whelp’, i.e. the wolf-cub’, which became ‘Luppellus’ in the Latinised version of French-Norman). He may also have been known as ‘Gouel de Percheval’ and ‘Gouel de Yvery’, with his nickname ‘Lupus’ coming from his violent demeanour. Although he spent much of his life in Normandy, he held several estates in Somerset, as well as Titmarsh in Northamptonshire. He commanded Norman forces at the siege of Mante in 1087. He also had a lengthy series of sieges involving his liege, the Earl of Breteuil, from whom he eventually gained Ivery. It is said that he tortured the Earl of Breteuil, until he yielded and gave his daughter Isobel, along with a large dowry. He is said to have had 7 sons, including: Richard, who died before him; Robert, who succeeded, but only for a couple of years; William, who succeeded after Robert; John of Harptree, ancestor of the Barons of Harptree Gournay; and Roger, called ‘Balbus’ or ‘the Stutterer’ who was Lord of ‘Grandisilva’ in Normandy. He also had a daughter, who married Radulfus Rufus.

Baldwin (11th/12th C.) of Tintenhull, one of the earliest recorded Lovels. However, these early generations are confused, and it is unclear how he was related to the Lovels of Yvery. He probably succeeded his father Ralph in 1121 and was father of Ralph and possibly also Margaret (although she may have been Ralph’s wife). Henry (12th C.) possibly the Henry Lovel who was said to have been first given the Barony of Hawick, perhaps in the 1130s, and who is among those who encouraged King David to invade England in 1138. However, these generations are quite confused, and it is unclear whether he even existed.

Henry (d.c.1194) Lord Cary, son of Ralph and Margaret, or possibly 3rd son of William Gouel de Perceval, and hence brother of Ralph. He succeeded in about 1159. He may also have had a brother, Thomas. He was probably born at Castle Cary, but also held the Barony of Hawick, and is likely to have split his time between England and Scotland. He paid feudal fees in Somerset in 1162. During the time of Robert, Dean of Bath (i.e. before 1166) he had his gift to the Priory of Brunton confirmed. He also witnessed several other grants in Somerset in the latter part of the 12th century. He was ‘Henry Luvel’ in 1166 when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. He is recorded as Baron of Hawick when he was a witness in 1166 and 1190. He was probably also the ‘henrici lupelli’ (i.e. Henry, Little Wolf) who is recorded in a charter (confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, Pope Gregory VIII in 1187 and Pope Clement III in 1188) giving 2 oxgates of land at ‘Brancheulla’ (i.e. Branxholme) to the canons of St. Andrews. This was witnessed by the first 3 clergymen known to be connected with Hawick. This same grant of 2 oxgangs of land in Branxholme to St. Andrews Priory in about 1175 was mentioned in a list of gifts in 1206, 1216, 1246 and 1248. In 1190 he was recorded in the Pipe Rolls for Dorset and Somerset. He married Alice de Cary, and his sons were Ralph (who died without issue) and Henry (who succeeded to the Barony of Hawick). Other children may have included Maurice and Richard, who exchanged these 2 oxgates for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. This Richard may have also succeeded the next Henry, and was therefore either his son or grandson. Henry (d.c.1216) Lord Cary, probably younger son of Henry, he succeeded his brother Ralph, who died in 1207. In 1197 he was assessed for fees for the Norman army. In the period 1198-1202 he was appointed as attorney in a case by Ralph de Trubleville. In 1207 he settled a case brought by Matilda, his brother Ralph’s widow, over lands she claimed she had been given in dower; this included 1/3 of the family’s barony in Scotland (presumably Hawick), but she settled for the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary), together with money and livestock. In 1208 he paid 300 marks for the livery of his lands, and still held some Somerset lands jointly with his mother Alice and sister-in-law Maud (the same as Matilda). In 1210 he paid King John to avoid going on the expedition to Ireland. He married Christiania and was succeeded by his brother (although some accounts say son) Richard. However this genealogy may be confused, and there may be another extra generation of Henrys and/or Richards. He may be the Henry who was among witnesses to a charter for Gilmerston in the Glasgow chartulary in the reign of William. His widow ‘Cristina’ secondly married Richard Cotel; in about 1222 she complained that Richard ‘Luvel’ (probably her brother-in-law, or possibly her son) had dispossessed her of some of her dower lands. In 1248 she complained again about being removed from her dower lands, and there was a complicated agreement over several lands, including ‘Honewyk’ (i.e. Honeywick near Castle Cary). Henry (d.1262/3) of Castle Cary and Hawick, 2nd son of Richard, his elder brother William dying before their father. He married Eve (or Eva), who died in 1294. They had sons Richard and Hugh, who both succeeded. They also had daughters Alicia (the elder) and Cristiana (d.bef. 1264), who were both unmarried. Little else is known about him and it is unclear whether he played any direct role in the Hawick area. He may be the ‘Sir H.’ who witnessed an agreement in Somerset in 1256. In 1263 his son and heir Richard did homage to the English King and received his father’s lands. However in 1264 there was an inquest into the age of Richard’s brother Hugh, and whether he should be heir of ‘Kari Lovel’; his widow ‘Lady Eva Lovel’ is also mentioned. Also in 1264 his daughter Alicia brought a case against Hugh, complaining that he had tried to dispossess her from the lands that she and her deceased sister Cristiana had been granted. His widow Eva is further referred to in 1294 when her lands and her son Hugh’s lands were given to the custody of John de Soulis. Hugh (d.c.1290) of Castle Cary and Hawick, brother of Richard and 2nd son of Henry. In 1264 there was an inquiry into his age, since his brother Richard had died, and so he succeeded to the barony of ‘Kari Lovel’ (i.e. Cary). Also in 1264 his sister Alicia accused him of dispossessing her of a manor in Sussex, given to her and her deceased sister Cristiana; he was charged to allow his sister to keep her farm. He was recorded as Baron of Hawick in 1268. A 1268 plea against him for restoring a watercourse at Castle Cary mentions that his grandfather was Richard. A further case in 1268 involves his sister-in-law Cecilia... and the land of ‘Wynkanton’. He was recorded as lord of ‘karycastel’ in the 1270s, in 1274 was ‘Sir Hugh’ of Cary when he made an agreement with the Prior of Bruton, and was ‘Hugone Lovel’ when he witnessed a grant for Bruton Priory. He married Eleanor (or ‘Alianors’) and their children were: Sir Richard, who succeeded in 1303 when still a minor, becoming Lord of Castle Cary and Baron of Hawick; and Olivia, who married John de Gournay. He was recorded in 1291 when his widow was directed not to re-marry without the King’s permission and John de Soulis was given custody of 2/3 of his lands until his heir reached majority. Additional lands and privileges of his (including the church of ‘Stoketone’) were granted to John de Soulis in 1292/3, and also in his lands were confirmed to John de Soulis, along with the lands which Eva Lovel (his mother) had held until his majority. Sir Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1306 as a supporter of Robert the Bruce who had been sent to a prison. He was prisoner in Gloucester Castle 1307–10. He was also at Dundee in 1311/2, when a horse of his was appraised; both ‘Dominus Hugo Lovel’ and a separate ‘Hugo Lovel’ were on the list of horse owners. It is unclear how he was related to the other Lovels of the time. Sir James (c.1316–42) only son of Richard the first Lord of Castle Cary. He married Elizabeth or Isabel around 1328, but died before his father. Their children were Richard (who died young) and Muriel (who inherited the titles and married Nicholas Seymour). Sir William of Douglas had a crown charter of 1341 for all his forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1342 his widow is recorded having livery of 2 manors in Somerset, which had been given to him by his father in 1328/9. Sir John (13th C.) recorded ‘as magistro Johanne Lovel’ on an assize in Cumberland in 1292, then in a court case in Newcastle in 1293, relating to affairs in Scotland. He was also recorded in the same way in 1296, in a document relating to equipping Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He was certainly English, but it is unclear where he came from. He was also recorded as ‘the marshal’ who had come to pacify the dispute between the Welsh and English in Edinburgh. Probably the same John was paid in 1297/8 for a mission to France. John (15th C.) from somewhere in Scotland. He is recorded in 1438/9 when he had a warrant for safe conduct to trade in England, along with a servant. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded (probably early) in the period 1259–86 in a document relating to King Alexander at Lanark. He served as some kind of soldier. It is unclear how he was related to other Scottish Lovels. Margaret (d.bef. 1164) wife of Ralph. It is unknown what her maiden name was, but not impossible she was also a Lovel. She may have held the lands of Hawick after her husband’s death. Her son and heir was Henry. She secondly married Thomas of London (who also married Escina of Mow); with the consent of her sons Henry and Thomas she granted ‘Ughtredshaghe’ (probably Outsiders) to Jedburgh Abbey at its foundation, as confirmed in about 1170. Maurice (13th C.) probably son of Henry. Along with Richard he exchanged these 2 oxgangs for other nearby lands in about the 1190s. He may be the Maurice who witnessed an undated grant by Richard, Lord of Cary, to the Priory of Bruton, with another witness being Henry, son of Richard. Maurice (13th C.) recorded as ‘Morice Louel, persone del Eglise de Petyt Caeres, del counte de Rokesburgh’ (i.e. ‘parson of Little Cavers’) in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. In a list drawn up in 1777 he is transcribed as ‘Mauricius Lunel, Parsena ecclesiae de Parva Caures’. The ‘Agneys Louel’, widow of Henry, who also appears on the Ragman Rolls may have been his mother. Note that there was another Maurice a generation or 2 earlier, probably brother of the Richard who died in 1253. Muriel (b.1331/2) daughter of James, who died in 1342, she succeeded her grandfather Sir Richard in 1351, probably becoming Baroness Lovel. It is unclear if she inherited the Barony of Hawick, although control of the lands was certainly no longer in Lovel hands by her time. She married Nicholas, Lord St. Maur. Ralph (d.c.1121) one of the earliest known Lovels. He held Castle Cary in 1107. He was probably the son of Walter de Douai, Baron Bampton, who held the Castle at the time of the Domesday Book. However, these early generations are very uncertain, and it is unclear how he may have been related to the other contemporary Lovels. He may have been succeeded by Baldwin. Ralph (d.c.1159) of Tintenhull and Castle Cary, son of William (although possibly related to the near contemporary Baldwin, since accounts of these generations are very uncertain). He may have been the first family member to adopt the surname ‘Lovel’, based on the family nickname ‘Lupellus’, meaning ‘Little Wolf’ (which was also applied to his brothers Henry and William). He appears to have also had the nickname ‘Simelt’. Along with his father he was part of the rebellion against King Stephen of England, and defended Castle Cary in a siege in 1152. He is said to have married a daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received Dunkerton in Somerset. This wife could have been Margaret, who appears to have been the heiress of Hawick (and so possible the barony was part of her dower lands), and died before 1164; it is not impossible that she was the Margaret who secondly married Thomas de London. He was succeeded by Henry, who was probably his brother (or possibly his son). He may be the Ralph who restored the grant of lands to the Priory of Bruton that his father had taken away; this was witnessed by ‘Thoma Lupell’, who was surely a close relative. Ralph (d.c.1207) eldest son of Henry, from whom he succeeded, before in turn being succeeded in the Baronies of Castle Cary and Hawick by his brother Henry. His name is also recorded as ‘Rodolph’. He married Maud (or Matilda), daughter of Henry de Newmarche. In 1207, after he had died without issue, ‘Matildilis’ claimed her dower lands and made a settlement with her brother-in-law Henry over rights to the manor of ‘Hunewic’ (probably ‘Honeywick’). In about 1222 his widow was now married to Ralph Lebutiler, when she and Christina (widow of Henry) complained that Richard had dispossessed them of their inheritance, including some lands in Scotland. Richard (12th C.) of Castle Cary and Hawick, possibly son of Henry. He married Alice and their sons were William (who died young) and Henry. He is probably also the ‘Ricardi Lupelli domini de Hawic’ recorded in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. There he exchanged 2 ‘bovates’ (i.e. ox-gates) of land between Whames and Whithope to the canons of St. Andrews, in exchange for lands in ‘Brancheshelm’ (i.e. Branxholm) which had been conferred by his father Henry. The boundaries of these lands are given, and are interesting in preserving several lost place names, namely ‘anesotd terre’, ‘chestris’, ‘farmop’, ‘langesideburne’ and ‘quikenne’. He may also be the ‘Richard Luvell, lord of Cary’ who confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton, and whose confirmation was witnessed by his son Henry, as well as Maurice (who could have been his brother). Note that there are several Richards, Henrys and Ralphs at about this time, and so the details of the family tree are hard to disentangle. Richard (d.1253) probably son of Henry, and brother of Ralph and Henry. However, given the length of time that elapsed, it is also possible he was son of an additional Richard, and hence grandson of Henry. He was probably the Richard ‘Luvell’ who was involved in a land transaction relating to Biddesham near Cary in 1203/4. He succeeded Henry in 1218, paying £100 for the livery of Cary and the other Somerset estates. In about 1222 he was described as tenant when there was a claim against him by Christina, widow of Henry. She had remarried to Richard Cotel, and claimed that he had dispossessed her of her dower lands of ‘Kary, Wreketon and Pidecumbe’, as well as other lands and rights. Also mentioned was Matilda, formerly wife of Ralph ‘Luvel’, and now wife of Ralph Lebutiler, who also held lands in inheritance. These disagreements included ‘the land which Richard Luvel held in Scotland’. In 1231 he had a charter for demesne lands of Cary and also witnessed another charter. He is further recorded in the 1230s and 40s regarding knights service. In about 1237 he gave agreement that the Priory of Bath should hold the rights to the church of Castle Cary, as granted by his father Henry. In 1248 Christina ‘Luvel’ (stated to have been the wife of his brother) complained again that he owes her money and dower lands, ‘as well in England as in Scotland’. A court case against him in 1255 was adjourned because he was deceased by then. He married Alice, whose surname is unknown. After she was widowed, her marriage was granted to William Berkeley, but he married someone else and so she then married Nicholas de Haversham. Their children included: William, who died before him; and Henry, who succeeded. Richard (d.1263/4) of Castle Cary and Hawick, eldest son of Henry. He succeeded his father, but died only a year or two later, and was in turn succeeded by his brother Hugh. He married Cecily (or Cecilia), whose surname is unknown; she was involved in a plea regarding her dower lands of ‘Wynkanton’ in 1268. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Lupell’ in the Scottish Exchequer Rolls in the period 1264–66 as late owner of the Barony of Hawick; there was an account for the foggage in the Barony of Hawick, with him dying before the feast of St. Michael in the previous year. Richard (13th C.). His lands are referred to in 1278 by the Sheriff of Somerset and Dorset, and again in 1283. It is unclear who he was. Sir Richard (c.1283–1351) Lord Lovel, son of Hugh. He was born at Castle Cary and was custodian of the castles of Corfe and Purbeck. He succeeded his father in about 1291, while still a minor, his guardian being John de Soulis. In 1297 he swore to Edward I that he would serve him against France. He is listed in rolls of knights in 1298 and 1301 and found 2 men to serve Edward I in 1302. In about 1303 he achieved majority and took up his estates. In 1306 he received 10 marks for helping Edward against Robert the Bruce. He probably left Scotland soon afterwards, since Branxholme (in the Barony of Hawick) was granted to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, with a confirming charter in about 1321. Furthermore the Barony of Hawick was granted to the Earl of Strathern (perhaps before 1329). In 1306/7 he was paid for losing horses in the wars in Scotland. In 1307 he was listed among ‘magnates staying in the parts of Scotland to whom the [English] king should write’. In 1308 and 1309 he was part of a bond, along with James, Steward of Scotland, with the Earl of Lincoln. In 1310/1 he had an agreement with the English King to receive the Manor of ‘Wynfirthegle’ in exchange for his wife’s manor of Old Roxburgh; this was still unresolved in 1313/4, with ‘Bradenache’ in Devon being offered instead. In 1313/4 he was paid for service to the English King. In 1315 his wife was confirmed in the grant of the ward of Carl Castle and Purbeck. In 1316 he was given a charter of Sir John Soulis’ lands in Dumfries, as well as Old Roxburgh, but then Old Roxburgh was kept for the safety of Roxburgh Castle, and he was granted the Manor of Bradenach in Devon in exchange. In 1317 he and his wife exchanged Bradenach with ‘Brehulle and Selveston’. In 1318/9 he was ‘lord of Caricastel’ when he gave up his rights to some lands in favour of Montacute Priory, with his wife Muriel also being mentioned. He was also holder of the Barony of Hawick in one of the oldest existing records, when it was regranted by Edward III in 1347 (although at a similar time it was also granted to Maurice Murray by David II of Scotland). In 1335 he had the castles of Corfe and Purbeck committed to him and his wife (Muriel Soulis). In 1347 there was an inquest into whether he and his wife had rights to the Barony of Hawick as well as half the Barony of Eskdale; ‘a jury of good men of the visnes of Hawik and Eskedale’ found that ‘his ancestors have possessed the barony of Hawik from time beyond memory’ until it was taken by the Sheriff of Roxburgh in the same of the English King, but they did not rule on the lands in Eskdale. He was summoned to English Parliament in 1348 and 1350 as Lord Lovel. Sometime before 1310/1 he married Muriel (or Muriella), daughter and heir of John Soulis (his guardian) of Old Roxburgh. His children were: Joan, who married Sir John de Moels; James, who died before him and whose daughter Muriel succeeded, followed by her son Richard Seymour; and Eleanor, who married Roger Rouhaut of Aston Rowant. He is probably the Richard whose seal bore a lion rampant on a background of crosses. The failure of the male line here ended the direct succession of more than 2 centuries. Robert (d.1121) son of Ascelin Gouel de Percival and brother of William (at least in some accounts of the early Lovels). He probably inherited Castle Cary from his father in about 1119, but died soon afterwards. In 1119 he took up arms against Henry I, but negotiations, involving Radulfus Rufus (his brother-in-law) led him to switch allegiance to the King. He may be the ‘Robertus Luvellus’ who witnessed a gift to the canons of Bruton. He left no issue and was succeeded by his brother William. Roger (13th C.) son of Roger. In 1242 he and Richard de Dreycote confirmed a grant of lands to the Canons of Bruton; ‘Domino Ricardo Lupello’ was the first witness and hence probably a close relative. He is recorded as ‘Roger Lupello’ when he witnessed an agreement with the Priory of Bruton in 1253. Probably the same Roger was also recorded in some other Somerset documents at about the same time. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1491 when there was a payment from the English authorities for ‘diver posts placed between Scotland and Berwick’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men for whose murder William Clerk ‘apud ecclesiam foreste’ (i.e. at the Kirk of the Forest) had remission at the Justice- aire in Selkirk. He may have been one of the last men of this surname in the region. William (d.c.1155) of Castle Cary, also described as Earl of Yvery and ‘Lupellus’, his surname may have been ‘Gouel de Perceval’, with ‘Lovel’ being first adopted by his son from the ‘Lupellus’ nickname. It is said that his nickname was the diminutive form of ‘Lupus’, which had been attached to his father. In some accounts of the early Lovels he is the son of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval and younger brother of Robert, from whom he succeeded; however, these early generation are very uncertain, and there is dispute among authorities. He held estates of Yvery in Normandy and Cary, Weston, Stawell, etc. in England. Spending more time in England than his father and grandfather, he may have built the first stone castle at Castle Cary. He fought for Waleran in a rebellion against Henry I about 1123, escaping imprisonment in 1124 and returning home in disguise, barefoot, having given the Seine ferryman his shoes. He supported Matilda against Stephen in the English civil war, resulting in Stephen besieging Castle Cary, taking it in 1138, but returning it on the promise not to support Matilda. The castle was again besieged in 1153, when William and his son Ralph reneged on this promise, but was saved by the arrival of the Earl of Gloucester’s force. He is probably the ‘Willelmus, qui cognominatur Lupellus’ who had a charter with the Abbey of St. Peter of Chartres in the early 12th century. He also confirmed a gift to the Priory of Bruton. It is unclear if he was also Baron of Hawick, or if the barony was first held by his son, or even if it was held by another family member during his lifetime. He married Auberie, sister of Walheran de Bellemonte, Earl of Mellent (and related to the Kings of France). Their children may have included: Walheran, Baron de Yvery, whose descendants retained that Barony until the 15th century; Ralph, who succeeded to Castle Cary; Henry, who later succeeded; William of Titchmarsh and Minster Lovel, although this is disputed by some accounts; and Richard Perceval, ancestor of the Earls of Egmont. William (14th C.) said to have forfeited lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale in the reign of David II. These lands were granted to William, Lord Douglas, younger. He may be the William who was on a list of men whose horses were appraised in Dundee in 1311/2. He is probably the Sir William who was at ‘Haydenebrugge’ in 1327. However, it is unclear how he was related to James, who forfeited the same lands in 1341; it may be that the names were in error (also written ‘Lovell’, ‘Lowel’, ‘Lupellus’, ‘Luvel’, ‘Luvell’, ‘Luvelus’, etc.).

Lovel Court (lu-vul-kör) _n._ street name for the courtyard developed behind Drumlanrig’s Tower when the area was renovated in the early 1990s. It had once been the stabling area for the Tower Inn and a large building housing the Tower Garage (originally misspelled ‘Lovell’ on the street sign).

the Lovels (thu-lu-vulz) _n._ family name of Norman nobility who were given lands around Hawick by David I in the 1120s or 30s. The family held the lands of Yvery in Normandy. They may have settled in Teviotdale in the previous reign of Alexander I. Their lands included Branxholme, which they held until 1307. They built their castle, the Moat (or Motte), a wooden palisaded tower on a mound of earth, as a symbol of their lordship of the lands around Hawick. They later built a more substantial tower where Drumlanrig’s Tower now stands, as well as re-building St. Mary’s in stone. The Lovels held the patronage of the church in Hawick until 1355. The family also held lands elsewhere, particularly Castle Cary in Somersetteshire (south of Bristol). Castle Cary was a Norman fortification, built at the foot of Lodge Hill, and held by the Lovels from perhaps 1107 until it was destroyed about 1155. The fortifications can still be seen above the town, including a mound where the castle stood (reminiscent of Hawick’s Moat). During the Wars of Independence their loyalties lay with the English and the family returned to Somerset. Their Hawick lands were forfeited by David II and given to Maurice Murray, later being passed to Archibald Douglas in the 15th century. The Lovels continued to hold lands in Somerset long after the castle there had been destroyed, and the town there is still called Castle Cary. The family name probably derives from an early member nicknamed ‘Lupellus’ (Little Wolf) which became ‘Lupel’ and then ‘Lovel’. There are certainly occurrences of ‘Lupell’ in early records. Their arms were a gold background strewn with crosses, and with a blue lion rampant. The identification of Lovel of Hawick and Branxholme with Lovel of Castle Cary was only made in about the 1870s by historian Joseph Bain. Note that there were other prominent branches of the family, e.g. the Lovels of Titchmarsh (or ‘Tichmersh, in Northamptonshire), the Lovels of Minster Lovel (in Oxfordshire) and the Lovels of Ballumbie (in Angus), but they may not all have been directly connected. There is a Lovel mentioned in the Scottish ballad ‘The Battle of Otterburn’ and a ballad called ‘Lord Lovel’ (about a knight who dies of sorrow after returning to hear of the death of his love) – ‘What shameful deed besmirched with guilt Attached to the Lovels’ name? What untold sin? – no mortal knows Except the monk who shrived the same’ [JCG].

He acted as Baron Bailie for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and is recorded as witness to documents at least from 1427–57. In 1446 he witnessed the charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1447 he was one of the witnesses to the feu charter between Simon of Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for lands of Birkwood just outside Hawick. In 1449 he was Patricio Lowis de Mener when he witnessed the renunciation of the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1451 he witnessed a document for Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd in Edinburgh. He was succeeded by Thomas, probably his son. William (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Lunardi (loo-nar-dee) n. Vincent (1759–1806) balloonist, who made the first substantial flight in Britain, and was a household name in the late 18th century. He made several flights in Britain in the 1780s, including from Edinburgh and from Kelso (to Northumberland, perhaps the world’s first international flight!). After launching from St. Andrews Churchyard, Glasgow on the 23rd November 1785 at 1.45 p.m. (with a crowd estimated at 100,000), he had an adventurous voyage, with the wind blowing him to the south-east. He tried to land on a hill near Dryhope (apparently thinking that St. Mary’s Loch might be an arm of the sea), where he lost his anchor, flag and some ropes, and was spotted by many local people. He eventually came down about 2 miles east of Alemoor at about 3.55, being fortuitously met by Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm of Stirches, who had shouted ‘Lunardi, come down’ at him.

Mrs. Chisholme rode for about 3 miles in the balloon, with 2 shepherds holding the ropes. Then they brought him to Hawick and he spent the night at Stirches. The following day he was received by the Magistrates, entertained at a special dinner and afterwards given the freedom of the Town. Lunardi attempted an ascent from Newcastle in 1786, but an accident led to the death of a young man there. His fame led to his name being associated with a type of hat that looked like a balloon and was mentioned in Burns’ ‘To a Louse’.
