A hope they wud’ve approved.
The simple word and hamely sound
Will still be dear to me;
For I will love the mither tongue
Until the day I dee.

Boast! Hawick, boast! thy structures rear’d in blood, Shall rise triumphant over flame and flood;
Still doom’d to prosper since on Flodden’s field
Thy sons a hardy band, unwont to yield, Fell with their martial King and (glorious boast!)
Gain’d proud renown where Scotia’s fame was lost.
— John Leyden

In cause of truth, on honour’s roll,
Our instincts all have sprung
From the untutored, proud of soul,
That framed our mother tongue.

The Stert (Introduction)

To speak a strong dialect, with its roots firmly planted in the history of a particular place and its people, is a wondrous thing. The speaking of 'broad Hawick' is, I suspect, a far greater treasure than most of its speakers realise. The identity of Hawick folk has its basis in this linguistic tradition, which was spoken, not written – passed down through generations, enriched by incremental influences from outside – a living language steeped in tradition. But it is a local asset that is increasingly under threat. What James 'Dictionary' Murray said as far back as 1873 seems more true today – 'The local dialects are passing away: ... even where not utterly trampled under foot by the encroaching language of literature and education, they are corrupted and arrested by its all-pervading influence'.

The pace of this erosion of the local language is increasing, along with the pervasiveness of mass media in the modern world. But perhaps this speed can be slowed, even a little bit, by using the power of the information age itself to promote the appreciation and use of dialect. One way to do this is to compile and disseminate a reference work on Hawick's words.

The main purpose of this compilation of Hawick words is to provide a handy reference for Hawick residents (and exiles!) to help keep the richness of their language alive. The secondary purpose is to provide an accessible source for looking up information about Hawick and its past. These two functions seemed to become increasingly inseparable as this Word Book was being compiled. So this book serves as both dictionary and encyclopaedia. More on the encyclopaedic entries later. For now let us discuss the Hawick vernacular.

A large body of distinctive words, phrases, pronunciations and shades of meaning have been used in the Hawick area throughout recorded history. The guiding principle here was to include in this Word Book any words or meanings that are not in common usage throughout Britain. Certainly words that are often used in other parts of Scotland are included, although in many cases with different pronunciation; it is not possible to impose a sharp boundary between the Hawick accent and other neighbouring branches of Scots, so no attempt has been made to do so. In addition, no attempt has been made to exclude any words that might have entered the English language at some point, but are more frequently used in Hawick than elsewhere in Britain. Comprehensive English dictionaries will typically contain many of the words described here (indeed, it is sometimes claimed that because of James Murray, Hawick words are disproportionately represented in the Oxford English Dictionary!).

Place names and other proper nouns are inextricably part of the local language. Hence, it seemed important to be relatively comprehensive here also. As a result of the combination of vocabulary and proper noun entries, this work can serve as a reference for all things Hawick. In keeping with the rest of the Word Book, such entries usually appear under their Hawick pronunciations, with an approximation to the most appropriate spelling; however, some words are only ever pronounced in 'proper English', and in these cases the standard spellings were kept. Multiple spellings or pronunciations are entered separately and cross-referenced to a single definition. The main criterion was to be as comprehensive as is feasible. The second principle was to assume that no one will ever read this far into the introduction, and thus it is important to make the meanings of the entries as self-evident as possible.

A wee bit background (History)

Hawick vocabulary and pronunciation are obviously very similar to those of other Border towns, but with many peculiarities. The Hawick dialect also shares much with other variants of the 'Scots language'. The relative isolation of the Border towns has kept their dialects quite distinct and preserved many words that have long gone out of use elsewhere in Britain.

Like the rest of Scots, the language can be traced back to various Germanic dialects brought to Britain by the Angles, Jutes and Saxons, who started to settle from about the 4th century. These dialects developed into Old English, which, by around the 7th century, was used throughout most of England and in southern Scotland. The particular dialect spoken in a region centred around Northumbria spread north to form what would become the Scots language.

Originally this language was spoken only in south-eastern Scotland and referred to as 'Inglis' to distinguish it from the Gaelic-, Welsh-, Pictish- and Norse-related languages spoken elsewhere in Scotland. However, as it spread throughout Scotland it became known as 'Scots' to distinguish it from what was spoken south of the Border. It developed in parallel with modern English, and retains many words of Old English (Hawick folk find it a little easier to read Chaucer than the average Briton!). Other influences for Scots (and hence the dialect of Hawick) came from Norse, French and Gaelic. Most Gaelic words used in Hawick probably entered fairly recently from elsewhere in Scotland, since it was never spoken in the Borders. Earlier Celtic influences come from the Brythonic (or ‘p-Celtic’, similar to Welsh) branch, which was spoken in the area before the Germanic dialects took over. Place names in particular have a complicated mixture of origins, with hill and river names often retaining the oldest influences. Hawick folk refer to themselves as ‘Teries’, this deriving from the local slogan, sometimes transcribed as ‘Teribus ye Teri Odin’; its origin is unknown, but it is certainly old, with the possibility that it comes down to us from the pre-Anglian era.

There is no clear split between Scots and English – indeed there is also much in Scots that is common with northern English dialects (which were also derived from Northumbrian). This is more true of Border dialects like Hawick, which shares much with the speech of regions just across the border, i.e. Cumbria and the English north-west (‘ahint’, ‘mony’, ‘thowt’, etc.) and Northumberland and the English north-east (‘bide’, ‘cowp’, ‘nithered’, etc.). In addition, Hawick’s manufacturing connection with Yorkshire has probably had an influence since the late 18th century.

Scots was the official language of Scotland for centuries, with its pinnacle being perhaps the 16th century. It lost ground with the coming of the Reformation, when the Church of Scotland adopted an English rather than Scots version of the Bible. Official status was lost with the Union of the Crowns and then the Parliamentary Union. This combination of events led to the abandonment of Scots by the upper and middle classes. Nevertheless, Scots has survived, particularly among the working classes, and in rural areas. Hawick’s own oldest surviving Town Books (going back to 1638), kept by the legally trained Town Clerk, are written in a form of Scots. This is despite them being official records, and hence presumably much closer to English than the speech of Hawick’s ordinary folk of the time. Furthermore, the Parish Session Books still contain a mixture of purely dialect language throughout the 18th century (despite typically being written by the schoolmaster). The suppression of dialect in local schools has been unrelenting, but slow, probably only assuming its full strength as a symptom of Victorian propriety – John Leyden (1775–1811), the celebrated Teviotdale poet and linguist spoke in a strong accent and dialect his entire life and is said to have once retorted ‘Learn English! no, never; it was trying to learn that language that spoilt my Scotch’. Fifty years later such an attitude would probably have been untenable.

It has long been noted as a peculiarity of the language of Teviotdale that it has retained many of the Old English forms that have been lost elsewhere. So Hawick has preserved its own particular version of Scots better than most regions. The majority of the population has lived locally for many generations, and there is a good chance that we would be able to understand much of the speech of our ancestors who fought at Flodden. This relative isolation and cohesion of language means that Hawick folk can easily recognise the differences in dialect of someone from as nearby as, say, Selkirk or Jedburgh.

That is not to say that the language spoken in Hawick is entirely uniform. There are clearly slight differences in speech depending on which part of Hawick the speaker is from. These changes are subtle, however, and may be swamped by the equally real variation that exists among families and between generations. It is also clearly true that rural areas around Hawick have many distinct variants in language. Studying all of these variations in detail would be interesting, but is well beyond the scope of this modest Word Book.

Since there is no such thing as ‘pure Hawick’, then it is better to attempt to be comprehensive, rather than deliberately omitting words that might have only recently been introduced by ‘in-comers’, or words of local origin that would nevertheless be recognised by someone from southern England. The goal here is to include words that would be spoken by some reasonably large fraction of Teries. However, the language does not stand still (and is disappearing in fact), so any word that might be peculiar to Hawick (as opposed to standard English) has been included. There has been a fairly careful effort to include words from the published parts of the Burgh and Parish records, since these sources are quite finite and unique insights into the local language of the 17th and 18th centuries. There are also examples included from other surviving records (e.g. from the document collection of the Scotts of Buccleuch), but only when the origin of the specific text seems relatively local, so that there is a reasonable chance that it might reflect the speech of the Hawick area in earlier centuries. Of course it has to be acknowledged that documents of a legal type will not be written in the same idiom that was used on the streets at those times, but unfortunately it is the only data we have. Similarly, the best information about the late 18th and early 19th centuries comes from the ‘Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ by John Jamieson and the extensive glossary for the mediaeval book ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’ compiled by John Leyden; however, in neither case is it clear whether words were in use in the Hawick area specifically. Nevertheless, words have been included here when it seems reasonably likely that Hawick can claim some ownership.

Many words that were once common are already out of everyday use, and where this seems clear, they are marked with ‘arch.’ – these represent words not used by people born after, say, the middle of the 20th century. This should only be considered as a rough guide of course, since many older words may retain currency in individual households or specific situations. Note also that no serious attempt has been made to trace the history of specific words, so that a word found in the 17th century records of the Burgh will still be labelled arch.; however, in many cases of the older quotations, the year may be included in the reference as an indication of the provenance of the word. As an additional point, proper nouns are never designated as arch., even when long out of use.

Another subset of words is used frequently by our poets, even if they have never been common in local speech. The vocabulary of well-read Scottish bards, and Burns in particular, has become known to all lovers of Scots verse. Words that are used in this poetic sense, but are suspected not to have been common in spoken Hawick are indicated by the use of ‘poet.’ – again this should only be considered as a rough indication. Many words are both ‘arch.’ and more recently ‘poet.’, and the distinction is often impossible to make.

‘Standard Scots’ is dominated by the speech of west-central Scotland, and so many (too many!) of the conventions used in Scots dictionaries reflect the pronunciations used around Glasgow. This work quite deliberately departs from such bias, and attempts instead to be as Hawick-centric as possible!

Funny hings oo say (Local peculiarities of language)

Let us begin the description of the richness of our local dialect by simply giving a collection of examples. There are many peculiarities of language in Hawick, or more broadly in Teviotdale or Roxburghshire. The existence of ‘double modals’ is a good example, i.e. constructions using ‘might could’, ‘should can’, ‘wull can’, etc. This usage is found only in a few distinct regions of Britain, with the Hawick area often given as the exemplary case.

There are also many interesting contractions involving auxiliary verbs that are commonly heard in speech, but rarely written down (and hence the spelling is unclear). Examples include ‘heh’i’ (have to), ‘tra’i’ (try to) and ‘wa’i’ (want to), as in phrases such as ‘ee’ll heh’i dae’d’. This is also extended to situations where ‘to’ is a preposition rather than part of a verb, e.g. ‘ga’i’ (go to) and ‘we’i’ (went to), in sentences such as ‘oo’re ga’i the picturs’.

Such peculiarities of the speech have often been thrown up as examples of how slovenly and uncouth the local dialect is! However, a more enlightened view is to see these for what they are, i.e. manifestations of a genuinely different grammar. The use of double modals is a case in point. Another good example is the double negative used interrogatively, e.g. ‘Ee’re no gaun, irn’t ee no?’, to which the expected reply is ‘No, A’m no gaun’.

Another difference, which was common up until about a century ago is the distinction between the participle and the verbal noun (or gerund). Hawick people used to say ‘A’m weshin the claes’, but ‘A’m daein the wesheen’. This was a vestige of the difference between words like ‘singand’ and ‘singing’ in Old English. The local difference in this vowel sound was slight (James Murray described it as ‘a woman scheiran’ versus ‘guid at scheirin’), but now seems to be almost gone for good (although perhaps a vestige survives in the pronunciation of ‘this mornen’).

One more illustration of a remnant of older speech patterns is the continued existence in Hawick of ‘een’ (eyes) as the plural of ‘ei’. The plural ‘shuin’ (shoes) was also prevalent until fairly recently. These follow the same Old English weak noun declension seen in the modern words ‘brethren’, ‘children’ and ‘oxen’.

Another grammatical peculiarity is that some nouns expressing measurement can be used as a plural in their singular form, e.g. ‘it was eleeven mile away’, ‘she was threi year auld’ and ‘hei weighed eiteen stane’. An example of the opposite situation occurs in the local parish records, where two witnesses of the same surname would be, e.g. ‘William and John Scotts’.

It is sometimes said (by people who did not have the benefit of growing up speaking Hawick as well as English) that the local dialect is simply a lazy or sloppy version of English. A good example to throw back at such people is the lack of ‘ann’t’ in English, while there is a perfectly good (and actually more irregular) form that Teries grow up learning, namely ‘Am erni’. It is an idiosyncrasy of modern English that the contractions ‘isn’t’ and ‘aren’t’ exist, but there is no equivalent for the first person. In some parts of the world the word ‘ain’t’ has appeared to fill this gap. But in Hawick we have the peculiar construction ‘Am er’ in place of the English ‘I am’, so that it is easy to negate that to ‘Am erni’. Hence we can choose between saying ‘Am erni gaun’ or ‘A’m no gaun’ (depending on emphasis), while in English there is only ‘I’m not going’.

In general we have contracted negatives that differ from English, and these come in two forms, one being reserved for emphatic or interrogative statements. So we have ‘divni’ (which can be further contracted to ‘dinni’) versus ‘divven’, in sentences such as ‘A dinni gaun’ and ‘A gaun, divven A?’ Other examples are: ‘disni’ vs. ‘dissen’ (the most appropriate spelling is of course unclear, since this is conversational, not written language); ‘ouldni’ vs. ‘oulden’; ‘daurni’ vs. ‘dauren’; ‘dinvi’ vs. ‘dimen’; ‘erni’ (or ‘irni’) vs. ‘erren’ (or ‘irren’); ‘hedni’ (or ‘hudni’) vs. ‘heden’ (or ‘hudden’); ‘hesni’ vs. ‘hessen’; ‘isni’ (or ‘esni’) vs. ‘issen’ (or ‘essen’); ‘shouldni’ vs. ‘shoulden’; ‘wasni’ (or ‘wusni’) vs. ‘wassen’ (or ‘wussen’); ‘werni’ (or ‘wurni’) vs. ‘werren’ (or ‘wurren’); ‘wudni’ (or ‘wadni’) vs. ‘wudden’ (or ‘wadden’); and ‘wumni’ vs. ‘wun’t’. These are still quite prevalent locally, and much more so than in most of the rest of Scotland. Because of Hawick’s rich store of contractions, some attention has been given in this book to trying to include as many examples as possible. As well as those given above, this includes less common instances such as ‘ee’ll’ve’, he’ll’ve, ‘oo’ll’ve’, ‘ouldni’‘ve’, ‘wudni’‘ve’ and ‘wae’ll’‘ve’.

Exclamations and interjections occur frequently in spoken language, and several of these are quite peculiar to Hawick. The most common form for expressing the negative is the word ‘nut’ (pronounced with a strong glottal stop). ‘Hello’ and ‘goodbye’ are usually ‘hiya’ and ‘cheerio’. Euphemisms for words such as ‘Hell’ include ‘buffer’, ‘desh’, ‘Dod’, ‘go ti Hawick’, ‘help’, ‘losh’ and ‘sakes’ (not all of which are still in common use). Other examples of local interjections are ‘fancy’, ‘howts’, ‘mercy’ and ‘wheesht’, as well as older forms such as ‘aweel’, ‘ay whow’, ‘faiks’, ‘hech’ and ‘megginster’. Exclamations that are commonly used in conversation, to the point of being almost like punctuation, include ‘ee ken’, ‘go’n’, ‘hyeh’, ‘ih?’, ‘mun’, ‘nae doot’ and ‘now ni’.

The use of pronouns is also different in Hawick than in standard English. One particular example is that there are two versions of the second person pronoun, namely ‘ee’ and ‘yow’, while English has only the one pronoun, ‘you’. These are not interchangeable, and there are specific rules for when one or the other is preferred: ‘yow’ is mainly used to indicate a particular person, for emphasis and in the imperative, e.g. ‘yow dace eet’, ‘yow, rither is mei should gaun’; and ‘ee’ is always used as the subject of a verb in the past tense (except in combinations such as ‘yow an mei’), always in the conditional and subjunctive tenses and before most auxiliary verbs, as well as before parts of the verb to be. Hence we always say ‘ee er’, rather than ‘yow er’. An additional elaboration comes from the occasional use of a third form, ‘yih’ (or ‘ya’), particularly for interjections. E.C. Smith illustrates the three forms of ‘you’ in the following set of statements: ‘Yow? Yih muckle gowk! Yow haad eer tongue; ee ken nochts aboot eet!’ From the perspective of examples such as this, English seems quite impoverished compared with the Hawick dialect.

There are also many word usages that are different in Hawick than in other versions of Scots. For example, nouns describing quantities have no ‘of’ in many parts of Scotland, e.g. ‘a bit breid’, ‘a pund ingans’. In Hawick these would be more usually ‘a bit o breid’ and ‘a pund o ingans’. In many parts of Scotland, ‘whae’, ‘twa’ and ‘away’ are pronounced (and hence presumably spelled) ‘wha’, ‘twa’ and ‘awa’. This would never be the case in Hawick. No Teri would ever say ‘coo’ for a cow. However, other features are common with elsewhere in Scotland, e.g. plurals ending in ‘th’, like ‘Baths’ or ‘moths’, are pronounced th rather than the standard English th (pronunciation is discussed more fully in the next section).

In general Scots, the past tense ending for verbs (as well as the adjectival form) is typically denoted book. For example there are (or were) slight distinctions in words such as pail/pale, laid/lade, maid/made, oor bikes on Fridays’. “did ee eat eet?” An astonishing array of adjacent vowels can be found in the phrase “the threi o oo aye oil

past participles of verbs ending in ‘{eet’ that also take the ‘t’, e.g. ‘erut’, ‘pusint’ and ‘skecht’.

The b sound is often lost after an m, hence ‘tummle’, ‘brammle’, and similar in ‘climm’, ‘thoom’ etc. The d is also lost in words like ‘hannel’, ‘kimlin’, etc. Similarly the hard g sound is lost in words such as ‘finger’, ‘singel’ and ‘dangel’. Several words have had the r and vowel sounds interchanged (metathesis), e.g. ‘gerss’, ‘gürsel’, ‘hunder’ and ‘kirsten’, although, as with other linguistic idiosyncrasies, these used to be very much more prevalent than they are now. Another peculiarity of Teviotdale is the group of words beginning with ‘hy{’, the pronunciation being somewhere between hy and shy. Current examples include ‘hyinn’ and ‘hyeh’ (meaning ‘have it’), but there were once several more.

The e sound is very prevalent in Hawick where standard English would have a different vowel. Example include ‘berk’, ‘derk’, ‘sperk’, ‘furni’, ‘sherp’, ‘gress’, ‘festen’, ‘getter’, ‘plet’, and many similar words, as well as ‘menna’, ‘echt’, ‘ern’, ‘telt’, etc. Similarly, there is a tendency for words starting ‘wi{’ to become ‘wu{’, e.g. in ‘wush’ ‘wuch’ ‘whup’, etc. Many words that have I in English will have i locally, e.g. ‘writhe’, ‘dive’, ‘rise’, etc. Although these features are found in general throughout Scotland, they are much more prevalent in our local language.

There are some idiosyncrasies that do not appear to have been precisely noted (at least not in standard texts) and hence it is hard to say whether they are local or more widespread. One example is the use of the contraction ‘it’s’ at the end of a phrase, e.g. ‘Aw’ve funnd eet, here it’s! Another example is the use of the interjection pronounced o’(with a glottal stop) in place of the English ‘oh’ or ‘uh-oh’ to suggest a mixture of surprise and sympathy. One more example is the use of sudden inhalation (which is impossible to spell!) as an exclamation of agreement in conversation.

In some Scottish dialects final consonants are not pronounced. While Terries are keen on replacing ‘t with the ubiquitous glottal stop, all other terminal terminal consonants tend to be pronounced. So, for example, ‘haund’ and ‘auld’ very much have their final ‘d’s.

As previously stated, and in common with much of the rest of Scotland, the t sound replaces d in many past participle endings, e.g. ‘glakit’ and ‘nithert’, although most of these are still pronounced the usual way as well, depending on context and emphasis. Another peculiarity, however, is the conversion of t to d in some contractions. Hence we have ‘dae’d’, ‘fri’d’, ‘gie’d’, ‘inti’d’, ‘o’d’, ‘onti’d’, ‘se’i’d’, ‘ti’d’, ‘wi’d’, etc., being much more common around Hawick than elsewhere.

There are many other examples that will be apparent in the Word Book and that illustrate that in general Hawick and surrounding areas seem to have retained vocabulary and grammar from Old English longer than other parts of Scotland.

Southern Scots in general is distinguished from other forms of Scots by its vowel sounds. In particular ‘oo’ becomes ‘ow’ and ‘ee’ becomes ‘ey’ (or ei) – hence elsewhere in Scotland the speech of the south (or Teviotdale in particular) is sometimes referred to as the ‘yow’ and ‘mei’ dialect. The almost complete absence of the t-sound, except at the beginnings of words, is also quite characteristic. The combination of these last two features enables Terries to utter streams of vowel sounds with nary a consonant. An oft quoted example is the triple vowel sound in ‘the twae o oo’ (ˈθiθ-twə-n-u). Another nice example is the triple ee sound in ‘did ee eat eet?’. An astonishing array of adjacent vowels can be found in the phrase ‘the threi o oo aye oil oor bikes on Fridays’.

There are also many peculiarities in vowel sounds that are too subtle to indicate in the listings in this book. For example there are (or were) slight distinctions in words such as pail/pale, laid/lade, maid/made, main/mane, feet/feat, heel/heal, etc. The local pronunciation of words like ‘oil’ and ‘point’ uses the full rounded əi, unlike in much of the rest of Scotland. Long vowel sounds abound, and even apply to diphthongs such as in ‘buy’, ‘five’, ‘boy’ etc. The ow sound in words like ‘cow’ and ‘how’ are broader than in English, and the ew in ‘new’ is more distinctly a combination of two vowel sounds. Formerly the long ə sound in words like ‘body’, ‘sod’, ‘George’ and ‘border’ were almost lengthened to a diphthong. The profusion of local diphthongs is discussed in detail by Murray in ‘The Dialects of the Southern Counties of Scotland’ (1873, the first systematic survey of any dialect). He gives examples of diphthongs such as in ‘bore’ and ‘foal’ and in ‘name’ and ‘tale’, which have now almost completely disappeared.

Many Teviotdale vowels are hard to represent, since the differences compared with standard English can be subtle, and depend on context. One example is in the pronunciation of ‘Hawick’ itself. Although Terries always correct outsiders by insisting that it should be pronounced hoık (or ‘ho-eek’), in general conversation it is more usual to say something similar to hIk (or ‘haw-eek). The pronunciation varies depending on context and emphasis, and often lies somewhere between these two extremes. Throughout the book we will stick with hIk as the pronunciation, with the understanding that in practice it is more complicated than that.

Hawick dialect, then, represents a particular form of Lowland Scots speech, with many rich characteristics. An accounting of Hawick’s idiosyncrasies is one of the functions of the word list that follows.

How’s eet soond? (Pronunciation)

As we have seen, Hawick shares much in common with the rest of Scots, but has some important differences. Like in the rest of Scotland, where ‘all’ appears in a word it is always pronounced as a long aw sound (like in ‘braa’, ‘waa’, etc.). The English diphthong ‘ou’ is typically pronounced as ‘oo’ in Scots. Verbs ending in ‘-ing’ in English usually end in ‘-in’ in Scots. The ‘wh’ at the beginning of a word tends to be pronounced fully, even when it might be a w sound in English. The r is almost always pronounced (Scots has 26 letters rather than the mere 25 existing in much of English!); this is particularly clear in words like ‘furry’, ‘stert’, ‘ferm’, etc. It is also common to pronounce some words with an extra syllable compared with English, e.g. ‘twirl’ and ‘airm’, or to fully pronounce the letters, such as in ‘raspberry’. Although these sorts of rules apply fairly generally, there are of course always exceptions. Hence it is necessary to indicate the pronunciation of each word using some convenient system. In this book, it is given in brackets after each word entry.

In the main entries of this book, the word is immediately followed by an approximate indication of the pronunciation. A compromise was sought between formal phonetic transcription of the sounds, and simple schemes like ‘rhymes with . . . ‘. Hence, the following pronunciation scheme is followed. The consonants b, d, f, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v, w and z have close to their usual English sounds, although some differ slightly, e.g. the r sound is rolled more. For the other consonants and the vowel sounds the following convention is followed (with mainly standard English words given as examples):

- g is always the hard sound of ‘Gala’ and ‘grimy’ (never the soft sound of ‘genteeel’);
- h is always aspirated at the beginning of a word;
- ng is the usual sound in ‘ring’ and ‘doing’ (underlined to clarify it is one sound);
- ch stands for the sound in ‘cheese’ and ‘leech’;
- sh is the usual sound in ‘sheep’ and ‘sham’;
- sh is the voiced sound in ‘leisure’ and ‘vision’;
- th is the unvoiced (or breathed) sound in ‘three’ and ‘path’;
- th is the voiced sound in ‘that’ and ‘lathe’;
- wh is the usual sound in ‘what’ and ‘whip’ (i.e. aspirated, and not the same as w in American English);
- a is the short vowel sound in ‘apple’ and ‘bat’;
- aw is the longer vowel sound in ‘draw’ or ‘bawl’;
- å is the hard sound in ‘cake’ and ‘ate’;
- e is the short vowel sound in ‘pet’ and ‘led’;
- ee is the sound in ‘seen’ and ‘dear’;
- ew is the diphthong sound in ‘few’ and ‘puny’;
- i is the sound in ‘sit’ and ‘is’;
- ı is the short diphthong sound in ‘bite’ and ‘side’;
I is the longer diphthong in ‘fly’ and ‘five’;
o is the short vowel in ‘hot’ and ‘stop’;
ō is the longer sound in ‘boat’ and ‘own’;
oi is the diphthong in ‘coin’ and ‘toy’;
oo is the long vowel sound in ‘moon’ and ‘cool’;
ow is the diphthong in ‘cow’ and ‘brown’;
ū is the sound in ‘sun’ and ‘bus’;
ū is the long vowel (like the French ‘peu’) in the local ‘music’ and ‘huirn’;
’ is used here to denote the glottal stop.

Some local pronunciations have subtleties, and hence some further comments are necessary. The Scots ch sound used to be much more prevalent, e.g. ‘haugh’, ‘ocht’, ‘echt’, ‘michty’, etc., but has been disappearing over the last couple of generations.

The genuinely short a is in fact rarely used in Hawick, so ‘aunt’ and ‘ant’ are pronounced identically. Instead there are various lengths of long aw vowels (with words like ‘wad’ and ‘can’ having shorter vowels, for example). These are not distinguished here, since in practice different lengths may be used for the same word in different contexts. The short o sound is also used less commonly, and ō takes on a variety of lengths. So words such as ‘doll’ and ‘dog’ are always dōl and dōg in Hawick. Similarly with ‘fog’, ‘border’, ‘cord’, etc.

There is a broad form of the e vowel that was once locally prevalent, where ‘men’ is pronounced almost like the Southern English ‘man’, ‘penny’ can sound close to ‘panny’, etc. This broad e sound is also dying out. Similarly the I sound is in fact longer than the closest corresponding diphthong in standard English. Note also that i sound is essentially always pronounced the same, even in words such as ‘dirt’ and ‘first’, where in English the vowel tends to change (although like other distinctions, this one too is disappearing).

The vowel sound associated with the spelling ‘ui’ is complex, since it is often ū, but can vary between i, oo and ā. The precise vowel sound probably depends on the adjacent consonants – or at least did, since these variations are all becoming homogenised in today’s speech.

Diphthongs were generally more complicated in the past in Hawick. E.C. Smith notes that in some words, such as ‘drowe’ and ‘rowan’, the ow sound is lengthened into a combination like ō-oo. There was also once a longer version of the ee-oo diphthong in words like ‘eneuch’ and ‘leuch’.

The r sound is rolled more in Hawick than in standard English, but perhaps not as much as in some parts of Scotland. The glottal stop is not usually represented here in spelling, but most certainly is present in pronunciation. It effectively replaces the t sound everywhere except at the beginning of a word, or when special emphasis is called for.

Some words clearly have multiple pronunciations, depending on context, precise part of speech or stress. In addition some words have been pronounced differently over time. Such multiple pronunciations have been included in the list, generally with the more common pronunciation given first. Sometimes the pronunciation can be so different that it effectively gives rise to a new word – to avoid confusion, there are separate entries in some cases in this book, usually with a cross-reference. This can be particularly important for proper nouns, as discussed later (e.g. ‘Binster’, ‘the Lumbak’, or ‘the Nitton’). A specific problem arises in deciding how to pronounce older versions of place-names. Examples include early variants of Hawick, such as ‘Hauwyk’, or other local place-names that crop up in historic records, such as early transcriptions of Branxholme, Teviot, Minto, etc. In such cases, the suggested pronunciation should be regarded as little more than a guess.

How’s eet spelt? (Spelling)

Hawick is often spoken, but seldom written – there is no authority on spelling, and no agreement among various authors who have attempted to transcribe the Teri tongue. Literary Scots often contains an agglomeration of regional and archaic words, and so is of little use as a guide to spelling, pronunciation, usage, etc. Even relatively local writers such as Hugh MacDiarmid (who even changed his own name to sound more ‘Scots’) are essentially useless as a record of Borders dialects. Instead this book has been mainly guided by some of the spelling of ‘Standard Scots’ (where there is a written tradition, even if it does not always agree on spelling!). Here there are some learned Scots dictionaries to refer to, and these spellings can be adapted where appropriate to reflect Hawick pronunciation more closely. For these local variations we can be guided by previous attempts to transcribe the language (but not taking quite as extreme a position as James Murray or Elliot Cowan Smith). In general the adopted spelling conventions are entirely subjective, although some attempt has been made to at least maintain consistency.

E.C. Smith writes that `the representation of the Scottish vernacular is marred by the tendency to Anglicize its spelling', a sentiment that we share. Apostrophes indicating `missing' English letters are generally avoided in this book, since those letters were never obviously missing in Hawick. So present participles are written `hevin', `girnin', etc. However, apostrophes are used in genuine contractions, such as `ee'll' and `A'd've'. It is not safe to assume that because a word is spelled the same as in English it is pronounced the same. Some words are of course spelled and pronounced the same, or at least approximately the same, e.g. `come', `for', `the', but in a typical spoken sentence they are probably the exception.

Words ending in `ae', like `frae' and `sae' in the more familiar Scots spelling, are almost all pronounced `fri', `si', etc. in Hawick. Therefore this form of spelling has been adopted here (although the alternative is sometimes cross-referenced). This also applies to negatives, such as `didni', where more standard Scots texts would have `didnae'.

Since the English diphthong `ou' is almost always pronounced oo in Scots, then words with an oo sound tend to have the `ou' spelling in many Scots texts, e.g. `broun' or `flour'. On the other hand, words that are pronounced differently than in English, e.g. `about', are preferentially spelled with `oo', e.g. `aboot'. Here we do not stick to these conventions, but use the `oo' spelling more freely (although including some `ou' spellings as pointers to the `oo' entries).

Many local (and Scots) words are spelled with `ui', where English would have `oo', e.g. `ruif', `stuil' or `tuin'. This spelling is generally used (although there are exceptions) to indicate the difference in pronunciation. In fact the vowel sound can vary between i and oo, and is sometimes somewhere between, which is indicated with the once much more common ù. But the situation is more complicated than that in Hawick, since together with the evolution towards pronouncing it today as i, `this tendency is coupled with a like slight inclination towards ai (as in Scoto-English wait); so that our pronunciation of guid leans towards gaid, pronounced sharply and still retaining its ui-properties in a manner that is difficult to represent here' (as E.C. Smith described). This explains why the English word `moor', which was locally `muir', has tended to become `mair'.

Pronouns, forms of the verb `to be' and other common words are particularly tricky to deal with. Here it seems that the Hawick pronunciation should be at least approximately reflected in the spelling. For example `ye' in general Scots is more appropriately `ee' in Hawick, and `ur' is better as `er', so `ur ye right in the heid' becomes `er ee right in the heid' in Hawick. Although it should be noted that `er' can be pronounced variously as er, ir or even ur!

Whether to be consistent about the use of `ee', `ei' and `ie' in words with the ee sound is a difficult choice. Here we are somewhat guided by some conventions from standard Scots, e.g. the spelling of `heid', and some other words, seems so well established that it would be confusing to avoid them. However, the spelling `ee' is sometimes used to distinguish the local pronunciation from standard English, e.g. in `meenister' or `freend'. The complication is that `ei' seems like it should be reserved for Hawick's distinctive diphthong sound. There are no strict rules here, and although choices were made, these are all rather subjective.

Similarly, diminutive forms can end with either `iy' or `ie'. Here we usually favour the latter, which is fairly standard in Scots, for example in `beastie', `laddie', etc. Nevertheless, the alternatives are also often cross-listed. There are also ambiguities between whether to use `i' or `y' in some words (like `clype' or `dyke'), between `ei' and `ey' in others (like `gei'), and also between other sets of vowels. Again a decision has been made here, but there are no hard and fast rules.

The initial `th' in some words is sometimes pronounced h. When this is common in Hawick, e.g. in `hing' or `hink', that spelling has been included preferentially in the list. There is also a peculiar extra consonant beginning a few words, e.g. hyill, hyit; which is a strongly aspirated combination of h and y that we denote with hy, since this is close to that sound, e.g. hyill, hyit.

When the first syllable is stressed in a word, then the middle consonant is often doubled, just as in standard English. So we have `dennert', `witter', etc. Additionally, double consonants draw useful attention to words that otherwise would have the same spelling, but whose pronunciation is particular to Hawick, e.g. `finnd' with its soft i. However, double consonants are not always necessary where differences in spelling with English already exist, e.g. in `aiple'.

There are also examples of changes in pronunciation that make it awkward to decide on the correct spelling. This is the case for forming some participles, e.g. ‘dein’ and ‘seiin’, for which we have adopted the form ‘dei-in’ and ‘sei-in’. Similarly ‘most wee’ is written ‘wee-est’. Another example comes from words containing ‘-qui-’ for which the local pronunciation changes the i sound to an u sound. This gives a few words that can only be written with a double ‘u’, e.g. ‘quut’, ‘squunt’ and ‘squurt’.

Proper nouns are mostly listed under their local spelling, but with the English version given (in brackets) at the start of the entry, e.g. ‘Ellit (Elliot)’ or ‘Wulton (Wilton)’.

For some words there are many different possible spellings. When there are several variations existing in local publications, then there tend to be entries for each of them as pointers to the main listing for the word. Also note that example quotations use the original spelling, which will sometimes be different from the main one suggested in the entry.

Because of the ambiguities in spelling, a system of strict alphabetical order is followed in the word list. This applies even when the entry consists of multiple words (although spaces are ignored), so, for example, ‘blackneb’ comes before ‘the Black Palins’), i.e. the adopted system is ‘letter by letter’ rather than ‘word by word’. The only exception to this is that leading ‘the’s are ignored.

Where’s eet fri? (Etymology)

There is no intention for this book to be a study of the origins of particular words. However, there are bracketed comments at the ends of many entries, and these often contain suggestions regarding the etymology. The origin of a word is particularly mentioned where it is not obviously related to common English words or where the source of the word may be of some interest. Such information is usually only given when the origin seems fairly clear, although in a few cases it was hard to avoid the temptation to speculate, for example about possible connections with other words. However, no attempt has been made to be comprehensive in this regard; a complete etymological investigation of Hawick’s language would be a major undertaking, and is well beyond the scope of the present work.

Despite these reservations, a few general remarks can be made. Firstly, Hawick’s dialect is essentially an evolved, idiosyncratic version of Old English. Hence the words come predominantly from early versions of the English language. This means that in some cases there is a clear correspondence with words in other modern languages having Anglo-Saxon roots, e.g., German or Dutch – but this does not mean that the Hawick words were derived from those places (even if there are some occasional exceptions, because of Scottish trade with Flanders, or the influence of Scandinavia, for example). There are few words of Gaelic origin, which was never spoken in the Borders; however, the situation here is complicated by some words coming in as relatively recent introductions to the general Scots language, and additionally some placenames can probably be traced to the earlier Celtic language that was spoken in the area before Anglo-Saxon took over. For the names of places, the bracketed material at the ends of the entries contain examples of earlier forms, with years given (but not the source, since this would have taken up too much space). Sometimes this will help with the original meaning of a placename – but in general such entries should at least allow the reader to connect an obscure spelling to the correct entry.

Wee words (Abbreviations)

In the main word list of this book, which follows, an abbreviation is given (in italics) after each entry and its pronunciation. These abbreviations are used to describe the part of speech or other form of the entry as follows:

adj. adjective;
adv. adverb;
arch. archaic use;
conj. conjunction;
contr. contraction;
imp. impolite;
ins. insulting;
interj. interjection;
n. noun;
pl. plural;
poet. poetic use;
pref. prefix;
pron. pronoun;
pp. past participle (or past tense);
prep. preposition;
v. verb (or verb part more generally).

Most of these are self-explanatory. Words that are already out of general use are indicated as ‘arch.’, although this should be understood to be highly subjective. Words that have perhaps only been used by Hawick versifiers are indicated as ‘poet.’. Contractions (‘contr.’) include many that are peculiar to Hawick, such as ‘A’d’ve’, ‘heh’i’, ‘is’t’, ‘wi’d’, etc. A few terms in the Word Book are not obviously suitable for polite company, and they are marked as ‘imp.’, while a few others are likely to cause offence if directed towards the wrong (i.e. intended) person, and these are marked as ‘ins.’ (note that James Murray omitted all such words from the original Oxford English Dictionary, which must have been a response to the Victorian sense of propriety, rather than because he did not know of their existence). Plurals are flagged where they are different from the standard English, or where an apparently singular word has a plural usage.

For verbs, ‘v.’ can be either the infinitive or any verb parts sufficiently different from standard English that they require a separate entry. As already stated, the past participle form of many Hawick verbs is typically written ‘-it’ (just like in general Scots), but often pronounced -ee’ or eet; these pp. forms are of sufficient interest that in this book they are often listed separately from the main entry for the verb, particularly when there is a good quotation to show the usage.

Entries for words will often include more than one part of speech. For example the word ‘doon’ can be used as an adverb, preposition, adjective, noun and verb. These will all come under the same word heading (with an initial arch. generally applied to the whole entry), while a separate heading will be used for quite distinct word meanings (e.g. the two meanings for ‘hing’).

For many of the words included in the list, a few example phrases are given. Those given first are usually derived from common Hawick speech (i.e. they were made up for the purposes of illustration), while those at the end are quotes from town records, songs, poems or other local literary work. We should be indebted to all those Hawick folk who saw value in putting dialect into print – especially the earliest ones, when it must have been highly unfashionable. The particular source of the quote is not always given, although most of the time an author will be identified – so readers can amuse themselves trying to guess precisely where they are from! The abbreviations used to refer to individual authors are listed in Appendix A. These literary quotes normally begin with a capital letter, and hence can be distinguished from the more general examples. Dots (ellipsis) indicate that words have been omitted from a quotation.

Quotations are given in approximate chronological order. Thus examples from the Burgh Records or Parish Session books are often first. Since those records go back much earlier than for other published sources, they are used to illustrate words or usages that were already out of fashion by the time of the ‘golden age’ of Hawick songs and poetry. These early records span a wide range of time, and so in such cases the year is often also given for each quotation (and the same is sometimes done for quotes taken from newspapers etc.). Note that quotations are often selected because they refer explicitly to local places or people, and for this reason are sometimes deliberately longer than strictly necessary to illustrate the usage of the word.

In instances where only a literary quote is given it is sometimes the case that the word has never been in general use. There are certainly instances of words that are used only in a poetic sense, perhaps being obsolete for centuries, or never in local use at all. In particular, words from Burns and other popular Scots poets tend to be used by Hawick poets too. Note that the quotations are usually given exactly, even if the spelling is different from that in the listings of this book (provided it is clearly the same word). Note also that for some older poems and songs there are multiple spellings in print, and that no attempt has been made to use the earliest form.
What’s in an what’s oot? (Deciding what to include)

The general principle when compiling the Word Book was to be inclusive, to cross-reference words and to give concise information, including pronunciation, word parts, definitions and examples. It is clear that the dialect has changed considerably over the centuries. Some words will have been used much more in the past than today, while other words are clearly of quite recent origin. It would be a major undertaking to try to trace the historical and geographical variations of particular words. Hence, other than to suggest that certain words are already largely out of use (‘arch.’), no attempt has been made to make historical distinctions. Hence words that occur in the older town records or in local songs and poetry have generally been included, even when it is far from obvious that the particular word has ever been well used in Hawick, other than perhaps being in general use in Scotland. Those words that appear to have been lifted from older Scots or poetic Scots are listed as poet.

Proper nouns that occur locally cannot be separated from the language, and in an attempt to err on the side of inclusiveness, perhaps half of this Word Book ends up consisting of such entries. Placenames and the names of people will be discussed in separate sections below. Some proper nouns are generally preceded by the definite article in Hawick: ‘the Loan’, ‘the Street’, ‘the Park’, ‘the Colour Bussing’, etc. Words that are usually ‘the . . .’ are entered as such in the list. However, a leading ‘the’ is ignored in the alphabetisation, except in cases where it forms an integral part of the entry, e.g. ‘the day’.

Another point to note is that it has not been necessary to include many rude or obscene words, since Hawick folk make just as much use of the usual Anglo-Saxon words as the rest of Britain. Although it should be pointed out that there are one or two buried in here!

Other Scots words that are common in Hawick, but perhaps less common elsewhere than might be thought, are often included, e.g. ‘split new’ or ‘rasp’, and a large body of words that only occur locally in the records of the 17th or early 18th centuries or are suggested to be local in the earliest Scots dictionaries. No attempt has been made to distinguish words that have been used throughout a large part of Scotland from those that are peculiar to Hawick.

Plisses (Geographic names)

A great many names of areas, towns, streets, etc. are included in this Word Book. The intention was to put in as much as possible that might appear in everyday speech in Hawick or that might be met when reading local histories, and to give a brief description of each. Here the entries are more encyclopaedic in nature. But the lines between dictionary and encyclopaedia are blurred, since there are many informal proper nouns that would not be out of place in a dictionary. This includes the many examples of colloquial names, nicknames etc., for places as well as for people. It was felt to be particularly important to include disused place names and popular names for pubs, mills, neighbourhoods, etc. Such entries are usually cross-referenced to the formal names.

Names of farms and steadings, water features, hills, etc. are also treated. Such geographical terms are included most comprehensively when they are near to Hawick, with the level of detail falling off with distance from the known centre of the Universe (the confluence of the Teviot and Slitrig). Hence, Hawick street names are included as comprehensively as possible, as well as some houses, schools, factories, shops, pubs, clubs, etc. And an attempt has been made to cover the popular names as well as the official names. The boundaries of the Hawick area are taken to stretch as far as the villages of Denholm, Ashkirk, Roberton, Newmill, Bonchester and Cavers, and so within that general area nothing has been deliberately omitted. A slightly lesser level of detail extends to the entire upper Teviotdale valley, as well as the Borthwick, Slitrig and Rule valleys. The names of farms, hills, etc. that are used to denote an approximate geographical area are also included, along with villages, streams, and the like throughout Roxburghshire. Every significant settlement in the Scottish Borders is covered, along with major topographical features in this wider area. Further afield only large cities or countries receive entries. For many places there is an indication of the distance from Hawick, or the road normally used to get there from Hawick.

The rural area encompassed by this book includes the entire district of the southern Scottish Borders that is not within the immediate influence of other towns, particularly Selkirk, Jedburgh and Langholm (who can have their own books!). To be more explicit, the scope includes the former parishes of Ashkirk, Bedrule, Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Roberton, Southdean, Teviothead and Wilton (and the defunct parishes of Abbotrule and Hassendean). This covers an area approximately 380 square miles (or 980 km²) in extent.

Details are included in a completely subjective manner, with some areas having little information, while others have a great deal (this depending on the amount of available material on different locations). Information includes the earliest historical record of the place, former names, possible origin of the name, owners or residents of note, nearby buildings of historical interest, etc. Particular importance is placed on details that are of most relevance for Terris. Places that are nearer to Hawick, and larger settlements generally, have richer entries. Note also that some places were formerly of much greater importance than today, and hence might have a longer entry.

Local buildings will have details like year of construction and/or demolition, architect and builder added whenever possible. The changing function of a building and its relationship to individuals or organisations may also be included. For streets, the origin of the name, an idea of the construction period, and perhaps important businesses etc. might be mentioned.

In many cases it is not clear which spelling or pronunciation to use. The Ordnance Survey cartographers effectively formalised place names in the mid-19th century, typically choosing the pronunciation of the minister or schoolmaster. Hence the official names of places are often more ‘English’ and less ‘Hawick’ than the terms used by the population as a whole. To redress this, an attempt has been made to include more local spellings and pronunciations, although this is not always practical.

Older names are included as much as possible. But for placenames (and proper nouns in general), these are not marked arch., even when no longer in use. Instead the description will usually indicate whether the word is in current or only former usage.

Folk (People)

Natives of Hawick (and surrounding areas) have an entry in the Word Book if they are deemed to be significant in some way. The intention was to include all individuals whom one might reasonably imagine wanting to look up. Of course this is not actually feasible, and the criteria used were entirely discretionary and driven more by the availability of information than anything else. Being ‘weel-kent’ is a necessary condition.

Being Provost, having a street named after you, excelling in international sport, or getting a knighthood are generally sufficient. In earlier times anyone with some position in society (landowner, merchant, Burgess, Bailie, tenant farmer, church official, schoolmaster, tradesman, etc.) would be included, but for more recent times there is no obvious criterion to follow. This is probably the most subjective part of the Book.

Individuals are entered by surname, although sometimes with cross-referencing from the full name. Within a surname they are arranged alphabetically according to the first fore-name only. For people with the same first name, they are arranged chronologically according to birth, although with the birth year not always known, this can only be approximate.

Concise information is given about each individual, including birth and death years, immediate family members (critical if the information is to have genealogical use), relationship with others in the list (if known), education, occupation, major achievements, awards and publications. In addition, anything deemed to be of particular interest was also included. This information is far from exhaustive, and occasionally a biographical reference will be referred to for further details. Sometimes only approximate birth or death years will be given (e.g. d.c.1800), and where the year is entirely unknown the centuries in which the person lived will be given. Note that little effort has been made to distinguish between year of birth and year of baptism (which in many cases is the only information on record), so, particularly for early entries, the actual birth year may be earlier than given. Similarly, evidence of marriages in early records tends to come from the reading of the proclamation (or ‘banns’), with the date of the marriage ceremony itself often unrecorded. When the year of death and age of the person is known, then it will be unclear on which of the two possible years the birth occurred, in which case it will be given as e.g. ‘1815/16’. There is another complication with early years, and that comes about because before 1600 the New Year in Scotland started on March 25th. This leads to an ambiguity in assigning the year for any event that happened in the roughly 12 weeks before this. The convention here is again to give both years, so that ‘1513/4’ means within the last 3 months of what used to be called 1513, and the first 3 months of what we now call 1514.

Some non-natives of Hawick are also included when they are of some particular local importance, for example, people who have had political or military influence in the area, those who were given the ‘Freedom of the Town’, as well as those who razed it in the middle ages. Cornets and others involved in the Common Riding are obviously prominent in the minds of most Terries. To avoid giving an entry for every single one of them, instead there are a series of Appendices at the end of the Book, which give a fairly complete list of all Cornets (Appendix D), Cornet’s Lasses, Acting Fathers, Common Riding Chief Guests (Appendix E) and Club Presidents (Appendix F). These lists have been compiled as carefully as possible, and hopefully provide useful and compact information to resolve those bar-room arguments!

An important piece of local colour is added to people by the use of cognomens or nicknames. Although there is some danger that such labels might sometimes have been intended to be insulting, for the most part this does not seem to have been the case (or at least, with increasing use, an initially mocking nickname became simply part of the accepted name). In earlier centuries, it was extremely common for several contemporaries to have both the same first name and last name, and hence it was crucial that some by-name was used to distinguish people. For example, in the late 1600s and early 1700s Hawick had several James Scotts, distinguished with the nicknames ‘Colifort’, ‘Doctor’, ‘Drover’, ‘Laird’, ‘Pedee’, ‘Scottie’ and ‘Westport’. Sometimes the name related to an occupation or a location, but often was more obscure. It was common for the same nickname to be applied to several members of the same family (a practice that continues to this day). These nicknames occur in official records, such as for baptisms and court reports, and so should be considered of more than just ‘meeting use. The study of nicknames in a community like Hawick would be a fruitful anthropological study in its own right! For all these reasons, efforts have been made to include nicknames where they are known.

Ministers were formerly of much greater importance in the community, particularly back in the days when there was a single church in each parish. Hence local ministers (including the rural parishes around Hawick) are included fairly comprehensively. Hawick used to have a Senior and a Junior Bailie, these being the chief administrative and legislative positions in the town. Hence anyone who was a Bailie must have been of some high standing, and therefore every attempt has been made to include entries on Bailies.

In early times there is a great deal more information about the local land-owning families than about anyone else. Any such imbalance is not meant to suggest importance, but simply lack of available records. For other people, there are fairly complete entries for the local landed gentry, in particular the families of Scott, Douglas, Elliot (and Elliott), Turnbull, Armstrong, Chisholme, Langlands, Gladstains, Lovel, de Charteris, Wardlaw, Cranstoun, Balil, Usher and Riddell, focussing on those individuals who were locally significant. These families (in roughly that order) held great local power in various centuries, although they are now almost all entirely gone. It is also the case that the nobility from a reasonably wide area had some impact on Hawick and surrounding countryside (and moreover, it is relatively easy to find some information about them), while working class people only had any influence if they actually lived in Hawick. Hence some of the landowners from a little further afield are also included in the word listings. But to try to redress this balance an attempt has been made wherever possible to include Hawick people from former centuries who were not from the landed gentry, wherever possible.

Another related issue is the large historical disparity in the amount of of available information between males and females. With some notable exceptions, women were typically only mentioned as wives of important men. And women from the lower classes were rarely mentioned at all. The only way to try to redress this is to include as much information as possible about any woman who may have been locally significant. However, the lack of available information makes it extremely difficult to make much difference.

One further quandary is what to do about the spelling and pronunciation of personal names. Should it be ‘Douglas’ or ‘Dooglas’? ‘Wulson’ or ‘Wilson’? ‘Andra’ or ‘Andrew’? ‘Paiterson-Broon’ or ‘Paterson-Brown’? The solution was generally to have both in the list, with one simply being a pointer to the other (and with no obvious rule for which is the primary and which the secondary version!). When an entry is in dialect form (like ‘Ellit’), usually the English version of the name is given at the start of the entry in brackets.

The information included in the entries on people was gleaned from obituaries, family genealogies, local historical works and other diverse sources, as well as the old parish records. Hence the coverage of Hawick worthies is extremely heterogeneous, and omissions should not be construed as evidence of lack of significance.

Bits an bobs (Miscellanea)
A potpourri of other entries were collected here, in an attempt to include the sorts of things that, if they were omitted, one would have wished were in the book. One example is occurrences of the word ‘Hawick’ in surprising places (street names, personal names, etc.). Even rather frivolous such entries were included, perhaps to occasionally surprise the casual reader (at the expense of exhausting the careful one). Another example is that of locally popular publications, including music recordings and songs, as well as newspapers and the like.

Important events in the Common Riding are included (e.g. ‘the Greetin Denner’ or ‘the Snuffin’), as well as historical events that were locally significant at one time or another (e.g. ‘Black Daith’, ‘Reorganisation’ or ‘the Rough Wooing’). Dates mentioned in the Word Book are generally only given a year. Where the specific day might be of local significance (e.g. for celebrating anniversaries) an entry was made in a separate appendix on ‘Important Dates’ (Appendix C).

Organisations of significance in the town show up in the list, including the more prominent clubs and societies, sports teams, knitwear firms, etc. Here it has not been possible to be comprehensive, and the entries are necessarily more complete for some historic periods than others. It has also proved difficult to find out more than the most meagre historical details about some organisations. Local businesses have been included when they have achieved a certain longevity or notoriety. Inclusion is probably quite spotty, and the amount of information given is scant in most cases. These kinds of entries have improved in scope with the help of readers of earlier editions of the Word Book.

Muckle lists (Compilations of data)

One other inclusion is the collection of lists of various sorts within the entries of this book, in addition to those in the Appendices. Compiling such lists could be an endless task, with the collecting of some information requiring a research project in its own right. Although not done systematically throughout this Word Book, it seemed useful to include such information in several cases. Examples include lists of: monarchs of the Hawick area; Barons of Hawick; Baron Deputies; Hawick M.Ps.; Provosts; Town Clerks; Common Riding Committee Secretaries; Song Singers; local signatories of the Ragman Rolls; Wardens of the Marches; Sheriffs of Roxburgh; Ministers (of most of the local churches); churches; Archdeacons of Teviotdale; Bishops of Glasgow; schools; Rectors; early nicknames; local battles; fair days; bridges; tributaries of the Teviot; burns in general; haughs; drove roads; wells; corn mills; blacksmith’s locations; fires; pubs; hotels; closes; streets called after Hawick; toilet locations; . . .

As well as these longer lists, there are also many other entries that collect smaller amounts of information. These are sometimes contained within separate entries under the plural of a noun, and discuss local occurrences of that thing. For example, there are discussions (‘short-leets’, if you like) under ‘drooths’, ‘flids’ and ‘wunters’, as well as ‘birds’ and ‘fishes’.

Whae says si? (Sources)

Many sources were used to compile this list. Most of these are listed in a separate Bibliography, given as Appendix B. However, it is worth pointing out those references that were most heavily used. The Transactions of the Hawick Archological Society are, of course, an invaluable resource. For the vocabulary of the local dialect the main resources are ‘The Roxburghshire Word Book’ (1923) by George Watson and the article ‘Braid Haaick’ by Elliot Cowan Smith (not published until 1927, but written before Watson’s dictionary), as well as ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’, Smith’s unsurpassed piece of Hawick prose. Watson’s book, in particular, provided a wealth of information, as well as a paradigm for what a good reference book should aim for; note that in this book Roxburghshire is split into regions, with ‘W’ essentially representing the Hawick area. Additionally there are earlier words suggested in John Jamieson’s ‘Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ (1808, 1825). Jamieson’s dictionary gives many words that are otherwise not noted anywhere (except by later lexicographers referring to his work); where he ascribes a particular meaning to ‘Roxb.’ or ‘Teviotd.’ it has tended to be included here.

Areas within Hawick are described in ‘Hawick Place Names’ by W.S. Robson (as well as the 1985 follow-up article ‘Some Changes since the Second World War’ by Henry Nivet and the booklet ‘Street Names of Hawick’ by Lilias Britton). Family histories were helped by James Edgar’s articles on ‘Hawick and its People in the Victorian Period’ and ‘Hawick’s Prominent Men in Victorian Days’, as well as James Hainings registers of inscriptions in St. Mary’s, Wilton and Wellogate cemeteries, with his extensive annotations. And ‘The Companion to Hawick’ by R.E. Scott was a constant source of inspiration.

All of the major Hawick histories were carefully sifted for information. This includes: ‘A sketch of the history of Hawick’ (1825) by R. Wilson; ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) by J. Wilson; ‘Hawick and its old memories’ (1858) by J. Wilson; ‘Hawick Common-Riding’ (1886) by J. Edgar; ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scots of Buccleuch’ (1887) by Mrs. Oliver (the longest local book, until this one!); ‘The Hawick tradition of 1514’ (1898) by R.S. Craig and A. Laing; ‘History of Hawick’ (1901, 2 volumes) by R. Murray; ‘The Parish and Kirk of Hawick (1711–1725)’ (1900) by J.J. Vernon; ‘Rulewater and its people’ (1907) by G. Tancred; ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) by J.J. Vernon and J. McNairn; ‘Hawick in the early sixties’ (1913) by J. Edgar (incidentally one of the best reads); ‘Goodfellow’s Guide to Hawick’ (1914) by J.C. Goodfellow; ‘Hawick and the Border’ (1927) by R.S. Craig (probably the most scholarly treatise on the early centuries); ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927) by J. Turnbull; and ‘The story of Hawick’ (1937) by W.S. Robson. Many more recent books have also been scrutinised.

In addition, most sources of local dialect poetry were scanned for language and examples. Collections that were examined include those of: David Anderson; May Butler; James Caldwell; Thomas Chapman (‘Joseph’); R.S. Craig; W.F. Cuthbertson; Tim Douglas; Robert Fairley; J.G. Goodfellow; David Hill; Isabella Johnstone; Tom Ker; Ian Llandes; Willlie Landle; Dr. John Leyden; William Peffers; Henry Scott Riddell; James Ruickbie; Capt. Walter Scott; James Telfer; James Thomson; and Robert Wark (‘Auld Yid’). Additionally the ‘Auld Brig’ (1851) and ‘Verter Well’ (1888) local poetry competition volumes were perused, as well as the Borders poetry of familiar (although perhaps not entirely local) poets such as W.H. Ogilvie.

The Hawick songs, and examples of less well-published poets, were carefully scanned through ‘Hawick Songs and Song Writers’ by Robert Murray, plus ‘Hawick in Song and Poetry’ (3 editions) published by the Hawick Callants’ Club, ‘Notes and Comments on the Songs of Hawick’ by Adam L. Ingles and the ‘Hawick Song Companion’ by Ian Seeley.

Prose pieces have also been used, following the singular ‘Mang Howes an Knowes’ by Elliot Cowan Smith and including more recent speeches given in the vernacular. Several people (in particular Ian Llandes) were kind enough to provide written versions of lectures or addresses that they have given, and these were a valuable resource for finding more recent examples of the usage of specific words in context. Local literature is replete with the language of the textile mills, much of which is ‘weel kent’, but not recorded in any formal sense. I am indebted to Bill Thomson for help with mill-based terminology.

Specifically local sources include: the tape ‘Hawick Speaks’ produced by the Hawick Camera Club; ‘Honest Men and Bright-eyed Daughters’ (and its sequels) by Derek Lunn and Ian Llandes (which provided many modern quotes); most of the local church histories, together with notes on early ministers contained in the ‘Fasti Ecclesiae Scoticanae’; ‘Place-names of Roxburghshire’ by Jessie MacDonald and the earlier work ‘The Non-Celtic Place-Names of the Scottish Border Counties’ by May Williamson; ‘Hawick Characters’ (2 series) collected by Robert Murray; – and a great many other books dealing with specific local topics. It can generally be assumed that for any work listed in the Bibliography (Appendix B), much of its information content has been distilled into this Word Book. It is also worth noting that many of the books consulted were from the ‘R.E. Scott library’, an unrivalled collection of Hawick material collected by four generations of the Scott family, particularly by Dick Scott; the collection is full of margin notes, inserted newspaper clippings, etc., and every attempt has been made to include these additional pieces of information.

Quotations to illustrate the use of specific words were taken from many of the above sources. It was felt to be an unnecessary use of space to give the precise book and page-number for each quotation. So instead there are simple abbreviations to the individual authors. The keen researcher will no doubt have fun tracking down precisely where each quote came from! For some general references (e.g. the Burgh and Parish Records, local newspapers and Transactions of the Archaeological Society), years of publication are also sometimes given. The abbreviations used are listed separately in Appendix C.

As a general point, it is important to realise that little of the material contained in this Word Book is original. Most of the information is at least third-hand, and readers interested in veracity or further detail are urged to consult primary references wherever possible.

Thensks (Acknowledgements)
Many people helped beat this project into shape by reading versions of the manuscript and answering interminable questions (especially Ian Landler!). Many other people provided information on specific items, including Glen Black, Glenys Bolland, John Bonn, Eric Borrow, Lois Bradley, Colin Campbell, Hannah Combe, Enid Cruickshank, Jane Currie, Henry Douglas, Sally Douglas, Walter Elliot, Giacomo Ferrieri, Lesley Fraser, Diana Gendron, Glennys Gow, Don Grant, Peter Murray Hain, John Hoy, Ann Jensen, Gordon Johnson, Andrew Kerr, Bob Lorraine, Charlotte Lunn, Gordon MacDonald, Graham Maxwell, Bruce McCartney, Christine McLeod, Lindsey Michie, Gordon Muir, Osred, Robert Payne, Alastair Redpath, James Richmond, Murray Richardson, Derek Robertson, Tom Routledge, Larry Ruickbie, James Russell, Frankie Scott, George Scott, David Spiby, Bill Thomson, Mark Usher, Frank Whillans and Brett Wilson. I am indebted to them for checking facts, adding information, digging up example sentences, and arguing about what we do and do not say in Hawick! I would also like to thank Ole Michael Selberg for help on using T\LaTeX{} to typeset a dictionary. And particular thanks must go to Iain Scott, Janet Scott and Hilary Feldman for their inestimable contributions.

Feenish (A Last Word)
Hawick’s Mote dates back to the 12th century and the oldest existing part of Drumlanrig’s Tower to the 16th. Of even older buildings, there are only vague traces of foundations left. Our local hills are encrusted with evidence of settlements and forts going back to the iron age, but we have no direct relationship with these sites – although they were no doubt built by ancestors of modern residents of Hawick, their significance has been lost for many centuries. The records of the town are scarce before the 17th century, due to the incursions of ‘Englishmen and thieves’. All in all, Hawick would appear to have little to connect it with its distant past; because of the chaotic history of the Borderlands we are impoverished in historical relics compared with other towns of similar antiquity.

But we do have one extremely special thing, which sets us apart from the rest. And that is our language – the words we still use in everyday speech, our peculiar grammar, the names of local places, these are all a direct link with our past. Possibly the oldest thing still existing in Hawick is the ‘Teribus’ slogan, which has been kept alive probably for well over a millennium through repetition at local ceremonies. Other parts of our language may connect with similar early eras in Teri history, particularly the names of hills and burns, popular names for districts, nicknames, pronunciation – all of it. Hold your heads up high Teries, ‘keep the causa croon’, never be ashamed to speak the way your grandparents did, shout your ‘yows an meis’ fri the ruiftops, be prood o yer language, it’s what sets Hawick apairt an wull aye make eet spaishial.

Abbey Acre

Abbey Knowe (aw-bee-now) n. small hill in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357 between Abbey Sike and Cliffhope Burn. It reaches a height of 322 m. A boundary ditch extends between the two streams behind the hill, with a sheepfold at the north-east end and an enclosure at the south-west end. The top of the hill is encircled by a low earthen bank and there are rig lines on the south-east slopes.

Abbey Sike (aw-bee-sik) n. small stream near the Dawston Burn in Castleton Parish. Near here in 1850 was found a cross-head, about 4 feet long, and 30 years later a round cross-head. These were deposited in Hawick Museum, although the details are a bit murky. One of them may have been confused with the Heap Cross, and the round-headed one may have been used for the reconstruction of the Hawick Mercat Cross. Near the foot of the stream, on the north side, there are remains of a farmstead, composed of a building, about 21 m by 3.5 m in size, with a bank, dyke and quarry nearby. On the south side of the stream there are remains of another farmstead, on a terrace between the road and the stream. This consists of a round-ended building about 22.5 m by 8 m, with adjacent banks and a quarry scoop. The lands here are ‘Abbottsyseskes’ in a charter of about the 1530s in which lands in upper Liddesdale were granted to Scott of Harden. It was ‘Abbottsyeke’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. The lands of ‘Abbottsisesys’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Abbotsyke’ was listed (along with Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Wormscleuch and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653. In 1663 it is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, in the ‘lordship of Liddisdaill, abacie of Jedburgh, and shirrefdome of Roxburgh’ (it is ‘Abbotsyke’ in the early 1600s and ‘Abotisseyk’ in 1663; the name probably comes from the nearby lands once being held by Jedburgh Abbey; see Dawstonburn Abbey).

the Abbot (thu-aw-bi’) n. popular name for the Laird of Abbotsrule in the 18th century.

Abbotsrule (aw-bi’-rool) n. village 8 miles east of Hawick, containing the ruins of a church, and once lying within the large Abbotrule estate. The lands were granted to the Canons of Jedburgh by David I, prior to about 1135, and confirmed by William the Lion about 1165. The original grant was in exchange for land that Jedburgh Abbey held in 'Hardinghestorn' (probably in Northamptonshire). Some time after that the name changed from 'Rule Hervey' to Abbotrule. The 'officer' of the barony is recorded from early times. The monks of Jedburgh Abbey remained superiors of the lands until about the time of the Reformation. Michael Turnbull was tenant there in 1502. The lands were purchased by Adam French of Thornodykes from the Abbey in 1569 (along with many others), and passed to his son and probably grandson. The 'town caulid Abbotes Rowle' was burned by the English in 1542. The Turnbulis occupied most of the farms there in the early 17th century. In 1626 the abbacy consisted of Abbotrule, as well as the lands of Mackside, Fodderlee, Gatehousecote, Grange, Hartshaugh, Woollee and Over Bunchester. The barony was acquired by the Kerrs of Ferniehirst about 1642, perhaps earlier. The Abbotrule Kerrs owned the land for about the next 175 years, and it was created a barony in 1667. It was among lands whose superiiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 Charles Kerr of Abbotrule owned lands in Abbotrule Parish valued at £572 and lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £300. The Hearth Tax records in 1694 list 72 hearths in the Parish, there being about 66 separate households at that time. The farm of Abbotrule itself was tenanted in 1694 by James Porteous and Ralph Prendergast, with 2 cottars houses also being there. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. In 1788 the farm was valued at £405 4s 8d, with Kerr of Abbotrule also owning Grange and neighbouring lands. The entire area was a separate parish until suppressed in 1777, when it was divided between Hobkirk and Southdean. The parish corresponded with the original boundaries of the estate, which consisted of 2,348 acres when sold off in 1818 by Charles Kerr to Robert Henderson. A leaf-shaped iron spearhead was ploughed up here in the 19th century and is in Jedburgh Museum. The ruins of the church, main mansion and several associated buildings are all that are left to mark this former parish (it is 'Rula Herevei' about 1165, 'Ecclesia de Rule Abbatis' in 1220, 'Abotrowll' in 1275, 'Abbotrule' in 1502, 'Abbotrule' in 1565, 'Abbotsreule' and 'Abbutroull' in 1678, 'Abbotreull' in 1694, 'Abbotrule' in 1700 and 'Abbotrule' in 1704; it is marked as 'Abbotroull' on Blaeu's 1654 map, just to the north of the church).

Abbotrule Bank (aw-bi'-rool-bawng) n. area to the west of Abbotrule farm. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an unroofed building there, of which there is now no sign.

Abbotrule Hoose (aw-bi'-rool-hoos) n. main house on the former Abbotrule estate. The first structure may have been built by the Turnbulis, and it must have been substantially rebuilt by the Kerrs in the 17th and 18th centuries. Tax was paid on 33 windows there in 1748 and 21 windows in 1753. The Kers sold it to the Hendersons in 1818, and when the last of the sons died in 1887 it was inherited by James Cunningham. It was renovated in 1888–90, with some rooms being added. It eventually became a youth hostel, but suffered a fire and was demolished in 1956. A substantial part of the west gable is still standing, in the woods south of the modern farmhouse. The 1804 stable block is part of the farm and bears the initials of Charles Kerr, who built it before selling off the estate to Robert Henderson. By the stream (south of the house) are the remains of a washhouse, as well as an ornamental fountain. There are also existing plantations that probably date from 200 years ago. This includes a large beech hedge.

Abbotrule Kirk (aw-bi'-rool-kirk) n. church at Abbotrule, now a ruin, located about 2 miles north-east of Hobkirk, on the banks of the stream that runs from Ruletownhead to join the Fodderlee Burn. The Church there was annexed to Jedburgh Abbey by David I in the early 12th century. By 1220 it was one of the churches disputed between the Abbot of Jedburgh and the Bishop of Glasgow; at Nisbet Chapel in that year it was agreed that the rentals should go to the vicar of Abbotrule, and that he should pay annually to the canons of Jedburgh the sum of five shillings at the festival of St. James. The Rectory was mentioned in Bagimond’s Roll of 1275 and also in the Libellus Taxationum. In about the period 1574–85, the Minister of Ancrum also had oversight here. In 1576 the reader of the church (John Turnbull) was also officiating at Bedrule. The church and parish belonged to the Abbey until the Reformation. It then existed as a small separate parish, although the minister of Bedrule also preached here in the years about 1605–21, before it was disjoined again. This situation held until the decision to suppress it in 1776, and it was split between Southdean and Hobkirk in 1777, with the minister preaching his last sermon there in 1785. The old church bell was taken to Wauchope House. It is said that the church was too small to hold communion, which was celebrated in a tent erected in a nearby grassy hollow. The church is oblong, about 6 m by 17.5 m, with the gables being most prominent on the ruin, including a bell tower. The old stone font lay between the kirkyard and the burn well into the 20th century. Tax was paid on 13 windows in the manse in 1748 and 1753. The cemetery continued to be used until the mid-19th century, and there are some surviving headstones (although illegible) from early times, including one dated 1686, and another that used to be set into the east window of the church. A roll of ministers is: Thomas Pitt, Rector in 1472; Andrew Lutherdale, Rector in 1476; Alexander Crichton, Parson in at least 1539–1559; George Johnston (Minister of Ancrum) had oversight, c.1574–85; John Turnbull, Reader 1576; Patrick Bishop, from 1591; John Bonar, 1593–c.95; Alexander Crichton c.1595–1605; Joseph Tennant, 1605–c.1621; Thomas Sinclair 1622–23; James Ker 1624–62; Walter Martin 1666–76; Thomas Wilkie 1676–87; Robert Spottiswood 1687–c.89; Thomas Harvey c.1689–c.98; James Ker (officially) 1690–94; Mungo Gibson 1698–1713; George Hall 1714–1728; William Turnbull 1730–64; and William Scott 1764–85 (spellings vary; it is first recorded as ‘Ecclesia de Rule Abbatis’ in 1220; it is ‘Abbot roul’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Abott roul Kirck’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Abbotrule Pairish (aw-bi’-rool-pa’-reesh) n. former small parish, located about 2 miles north-east of Bonchester and 8 miles north-east of Hawick. It was situated around the Fodderlee Burn, extending about 3 miles along the eastern bank of the Rule Water. The neighbouring parishes were Bedrule, Hobkirk, Jedburgh and Southdean. It existed since early times, and corresponded closely with the estate of the same name. The original name (recorded in 1165) was ‘Rule Hervey’, with the more modern name being adopted soon after that when it was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The canons of the Abbey acquired the Barony of Abbotrule in 1153 and kept it until the Reformation. The Parish also had its own school. The total value for the lands in the Parish were £1728 6s 8d in 1643, £1528 in 1663 and £1730 6s 8d in 1678. In 1707 the estate of Kerr of Abbotrule was valued at £700 6s 8d, the estate of Grange was another £396, Hartshaugh £60 and ‘Rentallers of Abbotrule’ £139. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. In 1751 Mackside, Briadhaugh, Blackcleuchmouth, Hartshaugh and Harthaugh Mill were valued at £355 2s and Abbotrule, Grange, plus the ‘lands of the Rentallers’ were valued at £940. It was united with Bedrule for a while, but then divided between Hobkirk and Southdean in 1776/7. The lands of Blackcleuchmouth, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Nether Bonchester, Gatehousecote, Fodderlee Birks, Fodderlee Bankhead and Fodderlee went to Hobkirk, and the rest to Southdean. The suppression of the parish involved much dispute locally, and there are traditions of despicable behaviour by the Laird, Patrick Ker. The old communion tokens went to Southdean and the communion cups to Hobkirk. Baptismal and marriage registers exist for 1755–76.

Abbotrule Schuil (aw-bi’-rool-skil) n. former school in Abbotrule Parish. Walter Scott was schoolmaster there in 1776. It is unclear where exactly it was located or how long it operated.

Abbotrule Toonfit (aw-bi’-rool-toon-fi’) n. Abbotrule Townfoot, former farm on the Abbotrule estate. In 1694 Thomas Turnbull was referred to as being ‘called tounefoot’ on the Hearth Tax list for Abbotrule Parish. David Oliver was tenant there from about 1747.

Abbotrule Toonheid (aw-bi’-rool-toon-hed) n. Abbotrule Townhead, former holding near Abbotrule. Adam Turnbull ‘called of Toonheid of Abbotreull’ is recorded in 1617. Walter Chisholme is listed at ‘Tounhead of Abatetreull’ in 1694, with Andrew Haig being a ‘cottar’ there also.

abotts (aw-bits) n., pl. heads of abbeys. There were 4 abbeys in the Borders: Jedburgh; Dryburgh; Kelso; and Melrose. As the closest one, Jedburgh has been the most important for the Hawick area. Nevertheless, each abbey owned significant lands, scattered widely over Scotland, and so all of the abotts must have held some local power. Kelso Abbey was first founded in about 1113 in Selkirk, which was surely also a significant event in Hawick. The 3rd abbot convinced the King to allow them to move to Kelso around 1128. Melrose Abbey held rights over Cavers Kirk, as well as Hassendean. Former lands held by abbeys often retain names that include ‘abbot’ or ‘monk’.

Abbot’s Acre (aw-bits-a’-kur) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington, owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It was listed in the late 17th century as ‘Abbotsacre’. In a valuation of separate farms on the Eliott of Stobs estate from 1788, the ‘Remainder of Acreknow, Hunthill, and Abbotsacre’ are valued at £151 2s 11d. The value was the same in 1811, when ‘Abbotacre’ was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Eliott of Stobs, valued along with part of Acreknowe at £151. The name suggests a historical connection to one of the local abbeys, probably Jedburgh (it is ‘Abbotis-aiker’ in 1657).

Abbotsford (aw-bits-furd) n. house on the south banks of the Tweed, about a mile east of Galashiels, built by and lived in by Sir Walter Scott from 1812 until his death in 1832. The original farmhouse, Carty Hole (or ‘Clarteyhole’ as some would prefer), was demolished to make way for a much grander house in the ‘Scottish Baronial’ style, with copies of historical features from elsewhere. This now forms a museum dedicated to Scott, and including his eclectic collection of historical artefacts (the name was given by Scott, referring to the nearby ford across the Tweed).

Abbotsford Ferry (aw-bits-furd-fe-ree) n. former station on the Selkirk branch line off the Waverley Line, which ran from 1856–1964. Here passengers could take the ferry across the Tweed to visit Abbotsford.

Abbotsford Place (aw-bits-furd-plis) n. planned street in Stirches, which appeared on Burrow’s street map, but was never built.

Abbotshaws (aw-bit-shawz) n. farm in Liddesdale, south of Sorbietrees. A piece of woodland that ran from here to the river was long in possession of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It could be the ‘shaw’ of Sorbie that was granted to Jedburgh by Race Fitz Malger in the late 12th century, perhaps made for Earl Walter Scott and transported by ship to the north. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map in the ‘Abbotshaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it was ‘Abbotshawes’ in about 1626, ‘Abbotshaw’ in 1632 and ‘Abbotschawis’ in 1663).

Abbotshiel (aw-bit-shee) n. former lands in Liddesdale, owned by the church, listed as part of the ‘terrarum ecclesiasticum’ in the c.1376 rental roll. These may be the same as Abbotshaws).

Abbotside Moor (aw-bit-siidoor) n. former name for rough land to the east of Howahill farm. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map in roughly the same place as Abbotside Plantation on modern maps. The name is a remnant of the former lands of Appotside.

Abbot Sike (aw-bit-sik) n. alternative name for Abbey Sike.

Abbotsmeadow (aw-bit-siidoor) n. former lands that were part of Rawflat in the barony of Belses. They were sold in 1623 by Walter Turnbull of Rawflat to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and presumably once had a connection to one of the local monasteries. Robert Bennet inherited these lands in 1670. John, nephew of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Kerr inherited the lands in 1684. In the 19th century half the lands were listed as part of the estate of John Edmund Elliot of New Belses.

Abercorn (aw-bor-korn) n. Adam (17th C.) chaplain to Lady Cavers in about the 1670s. He was among the men arrested around 1678 for supporting conventicles, and transported by ship to Virginia.

Abernethy (aw-bit-ne-thee) n. Sir Alexander (c.1275–c.1315) probably son of Sir Hugh. His lands were in ward in 1292, and so he was presumably still a minor then. He swore fealty to Edward I in 1291 and is recorded as ‘Dominus Alisandure de Aberbeth’ when he paid further homage to Edward in 1296. As son of Hugh, he may have possessed lands in the Rule valley, although mostly his lands were much further north (particularly Perth and Angus). In 1303/4 he asked that Alexander Baliol of Cavers deliver his lands north of the Forth to him. He played a diplomatic role for the English King, being sent to France and then the Papal Court in 1313. His lands in Scotland were forfeited when Robert the Bruce became King. He married Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Menteith. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Stewart, Earl of Angus; and Mary, who married Sir Andrew Leslie and secondly Sir David Lindsay. In about the 1320s his lands (probably in Roxburghshire) were granted to Robert, son of Robert the Bruce; these had been forfeited by him, his daughter Margaret and one of his 3 heirs. One of his heirs was Mary, who married Sir Alexander Leslie and Sir David Lindsay, through which the lands of Ormiston in East Lothian eventually passed to the Cockburns. In 1324/5 his wife was granted permission by the English King to visit Scotland to recover her lands. Alexander (15th C.) witnessed to the sasine of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. He is recorded as ‘Alexandro de Abirnethe, armigeris’ along with a number of other local men, with the sasine being witnessed in Hawick. Sir George (d.c.1388) probably son and heir of George and Alicia Wishart, he was 5th of Saltoun. He had remission from paying customs in 1364. He attended the coronation of Robert II in 1371 and was witness to a charter of Longformacus in 1384. He held lands in Minto, which he resigned to Robert II, and were confirmed by his son John to Sir William Stewart in 1391. He was succeeded by William, 6th of Saltoun. He probably died at the Battle of Otterburn. George (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Sir Hugh (13th C.) probably son of Sir Patrick and grandson of Orm. His sister Margery was wife of Hugh Douglas. He acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in about 1264, after the death of Nicholas de Soulis. He also held the position of Forester of Selkirk. He was possessor of the lands of Rule; there is an earlier connection between the Abernethy and Rule families, which may explain his possession of the lands. He may be the same Hugh who In 1258/9 he was among Scottish noblemen who signed a bond with some of their Welsh counterparts. In 1259 he gifted 20 merks of lans in ‘Glencros’ or in feu of Chamberlain Newton, ‘in free marriage’, to Hugh (who married his sister), son of William Douglas. Probably the same Hugh was associated with lands in Angus, Perth, Fife and Berwickshire. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed several charters for Alexander II from 1260 until the mid-1270s, had the gift of an annual rent from the King in 1265 and the Sir Hugh recorded in 1288, asking the King for letters to the Pope. He probably married Mary, Queen of Man and was succeeded by Alexander, Lord Abernethy. James (14th/15th C.) 2nd son of William, 6th Laird of Saltoun and brother of Sir William. In 1393 he had a charter (from their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas) for the lands of Teindside and Harwood in the Barony of Hawick. These lands had been resigned by his brother, Sir William. The lands probably later passed to his nephew Oswald. James (d.1504/5) 2nd son of Lawrence. He succeeded his brother William as Lord Saltoun. It is possible he was the Lord of Abernethy who was fined for non-appearance at the 1494/5 Justice-pageIndex in Jedburgh, for his lands of Plenderleith. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. John (14th C.) probably son of Sir George, who was captured at Neville’s Cross and brother of Sir George, who was killed at Otterburn. He had a passport for passing through England (possibly on his way to the Holy Land) in 1381. He appears to have held the advowson of Minto Kirk, which he gave to Sir William Stewart in 1391. John (15th C.) son of Oswald. He was mentioned as son of Oswald in a charter of 1463/4 for Oswald’s cousin William. He is described as ‘of Tynside’ in 1494 when he gave a charter of the lands of Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills and Carlinpool to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. This probably ended the connection of this family to Teviotdale. Witnesses included Alexander of Rothemay and William, his brother. He is probably the John who witnessed a document relating to lands of Camieston (in Roxburghshire) in 1496. Perhaps the same ‘Johannis Abirnethit’ was listed among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, who were given remission for their fines in 1501. Rev. John (d.1639) son of Thomas of Glencorse and older brother of Rev. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1587, was a Reader at Jedburgh in 1588 and ordained as minister there in 1593. There is a suggestion that in 1596 Wilton Parish was united with Jedburgh, and hence he was also minister there for a time (although there is no evidence he ever preached there). He was a member of the Assembly in 1601, 1602, 1608 and 1616. Although he signed a protest against Episcopacy in 1606, he was appointed Bishop of Caithness in 1616. He appears never to have given up his charge at Jedburgh. In 1633 he presented David Fowls as the minister of Bedrule. However, he was deprived in 1638 and died shortly afterwards. He married Alison, daughter of Sir David Home of Fishwick and secondly Isabella, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Philiphaugh. His children included: John, M.D.; Andrew, Depute-Governor of Edinburgh Castle; Margaret, who married a Wauchope and then Sir William Maxwell of Gribton; William, minister of Thurso; Anna, who married James Murray of Newton; Agnes, who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Elizabeth, who married William Ker of Thankles; and Katherine, who died young. His publications include 'A Christian and Heavenly Treatise containing Physicke for the Soul very necessary for all that would enjoy true Soundness of Mind and Peace of Conscience' (1615, 1622) and 'The Duty and Dignity of a Christian' (1620). Sir Lawrence (14th C.) 2nd son of William, who is on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and the Declaration of Arbroath. His brother Sir William succeeded as 3rd Laird of Saltoun, and was at Halidon Hill in 1333. He witnessed several charters of Newbattle Abbey and had a grant of lands in Berwickshire from Robert the Bruce (where he is 'Laurence de Abirnethy'). His estates included Borthwickshiel, as well as Hawthornden, 'Halmyre', 'Dunsyre' and Lamberton. He was forced to forfeit his lands to Robert II because of his attachment to the English, and Borthwickshiel was granted to Sir William Lindsay. However, the lands were mostly recovered by his son Hugh. He granted lands at Maxpoffle to his nephew William in 1320. Lawrence (b.c.1400-60) 1st Lord of Saltoun, son of Sir William and Margaret Borthwick. He succeeded his older brother William and his younger brother was Oswald of Teindside and Harwood. He was witness to the 1427 charter for the Barony of Hawick and the charter of 1435 in which Brauxholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Thomas Inglis. He owned the lands of Borthwickshiel, which passed (probably through marriage) to Sir William Douglas of Strathbrock before about 1425. He was also Baron of Plederleith near Kelso, a connection with Roxburghshire that the family retained until 1612. He witnessed several charters for James II in the 1450s. He married Margaret, and was succeeded by his son William. Other children were James, George, Archibald, Elizabeth and another daughter. His name was also spelled 'Laurence'. Orm (d.bef. 1190) son of Hugh. He flourished during the reigns of Malcolm IV and William the Lion. He possessed lands in Fife, including Corbie, Cultra, Balindean, Balindard and Balmerino. His son Lawrence was the first to use Abernethy as a surname. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Henry 'de Reuel' (hence establishing a direct link with the Hawick area). It is possible that he is the man who gave his name to Ormiston in East Lothian. Oswald (15th C.) 3rd son of Sir William, he was brother to William and Lawrence, who became 1st Lord Saltoun. He probably inherited the lands of Teindside and Harwood from his uncle James. He witnessed instrument relating to Melrose Abbey in 1444 and 1446. He is recorded in 1446/7 when there was a notorial instrument stating that he publicly asserted at Newark, before William, Earl of Douglas, that the only superior of his lands of Teindside and Harwood was the Baron of Hawick. He was witness to a truce among the Wardens of the marches in 1449. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1451/2. He was succeeded by his son John. Rev. Thomas (c.1576-c.1640) son of Thomas, Laird of Glencorse. Graduating from Edinburgh University in 1596, he became minister at Durisdeer in 1601 and was that same year translated to Hawick, leaving with the advice of the Presbytery 'for his weill, and the weill of the Kirk'. His elder brother John also became minister at Jedburgh (and may have had a connection to Wilton). Another brother, Patrick, was Laird of 'Nethrindaill'. He was almost removed in 1605 for turning up 2 days late to the Assembly in Aberdeen, owing to a mistake in the date. In 1608 it is recorded that William Scott (called 'of the Know'), his brother Robert (Bailie of Hawick) and their brothers George and David, were all made to pay a bond, promising not to harm him; he had a reciprocal bond (with his brother Patrick appearing for him) not to harm the 4 Scott brothers. This must have involved a serious dispute of some sort! He was translated to Eckford in 1610, although the circumstances of his departure from Hawick are not known. He was summoned before the High Commission in 1622 for not complying with the ordinances of the 1618 Assembly, but was let off after his brother John (then Bishop of Caithness) intervened. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He married Beatrix Criche in 1603, but probably had no sons, since his nephew Daniel was served heir in June 1641. Another record of 1641 records Grizel Ramsay borrowing £90 from his widow. William of Saltoun (1360-1420) son of Sir George. He is probably the William who witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke... of Albany. He was taken prisoner at the Battle of Homilдон, but was released later. He married Mary Stewart, daughter of Robert, Duke of Albany. His children included: Sir William, who held lands in upper Teviotdale; Patrick, stated to be ‘grandson of the Governor’ in 1413; and Marion. Sir William (d.1411) eldest son of William, the 6th of Saltoun, whom he pre-deceased. He held the lands of Teinside and Harwood in upper Teviotdale, which he resigned into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to be regranted to his brother in 1393. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Borthwick (who may have been the first of his family to take that name from the Borthwick Water). Their children were William (who succeeded his grandfather), Laurence (who succeeded his brother) and Oswald. He was killed at the Battle of Harlaw. His wife may later have married William, eldest son of Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. William (d.1488) Lord Saltoun, son of Laurence. He was mentioned as son and heir of Laurence in a charter of 1458/9. He was confirmed in all his lands mentioned as son and heir of Laurence in a charter of 1463/4, with his male heirs also being named, including his brothers James, Geoffrey and Archibald, and cousin John, son of Oswald. He was the first man named on the inquest of 1464/5 into the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglies; all the other men were prominent Roxburghshire landowners. He may be the William who had a sasine for the lands of ‘Prendirlaith’ in Roxburghshire in 1461. He was probably also the ‘Willelmo domino Abirnethy’ who was among the witnesses in Edinburgh to the erecting of Branxholme into a Barony in 1463. In the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex he is named as one of the justiciars, along with William Borthwick (also spelled ‘Abernethie’ and ‘Abirnethy’).

Achi Baba (aw-chee-baw-ba) n. prominent hill on the Gallipoli peninsula in Turkey, whose capture was a goal of much of the activity there during 1915. In particular, progress to capture 3 trenches further up the Achi Baba ‘Nullah’ (i.e. dry river bed) was the immediate objective of a disastrous offensive on 12th July 1915. The soldiers of 1/4th K.O.S.B. were ordered to take these trenches, although the 3rd line turned out not to really be there, so that many men advanced too far forward, tried to retreat and were hit by fire from all sides. When the Battalion was relieved 2 days later it is said that only 70 out of 700 answered the call, the rest being either killed or wounded. More than 80 local men died that day, most of them still lying in the fields where they fell, south of the village of Krithia (now called Alçşitepe). Having no known graves, their names are marked on the Helles Memorial.

acht (ácht) interj. expression of impatience, contempt etc. (probably stronger than ach) – ‘acht, A gie up’, ‘acht, ee’re hopeless yowe’.

the Acklington Dyke (thu-awk-lin-tin-dik) n. name generally given by geologists to an intrusion of igneous rock stretching from the formerly active volcanoes around Mull in a south-easterly direction, via Hawick, to Acklington near the Northumbrian coast and off into the North Sea. It is also sometimes called the Hawick-Acklington Dyke. It was laid down in a rapid event in the Paleogene Period, about 61–55 million years ago, possibly connecting with the Mon-eyacres Dyke (with the direct line perhaps being broken by later faults), and hence stretches some 600 km. The basaltic rock has been quarried in various places for road material, e.g. at the Black Quarries near Hawick.

acquaint (ak-wen', -wān) v., arch. to acquaint – ‘Acquaint me, O thou whom my saul loeist, wi’ where thou feedist ...’ [HSR], pp., arch. acquainted – ‘Bailies went to the ground with one or two Burgesses best acquaint with marches’ [BR1717], ‘Thou ... art acquaint wi’ a’ my ways’ [HSR], ‘He laid on an rafted oyrdrds o Border rheime an lore, – that nae man was better acquaint wui’ [ECS], ‘... and anither – an ill-faured loon that seemed tae be acquaint wi’ them ... ’ [JEDM], ‘... an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days about the sterns an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (there are spelling variants).

acre (ā-kur) n. an area of land, formerly also used to refer to a piece of arable land in general, as well as occurring in placenames, such as Abbotsacre, the Acre, Acreknowe, Acremoor, the Acres, Blaikie’s Acre, Coit Acre, Crozier’s Acre, Hangman’s Acre, the Mill Acre, Ralph’s Acre and Swine Acre. The exact area was once open to some local variation. In Scotland it was typically 5760 square yards of 37 inches, while the English acre was 4840 square yards of 36 inches, corresponding to a ratio of about 1.26. This leads to ambiguity in deciding how much land is being discussed in older texts.

the Acre (thu-ā-kur) n. area of land in Hawick, named in the 19th century, roughly bordered by the present Buccleuch Terrace, Myreslaw Green and Buccleuch Street, and later containing the Old Parish Church hall. It may more specifically have referred to the area between what became Beaconsfield Terrace and Morrison Place. It was marked on Wood’s 1824 map. There is now an Acre Cottage in Morrison Place (from the Old English for a field).

Acreknowe (ā-kur-now) n. Acreknowe Loch or Reservoir, a man-made lake used to supply drinking water to Hawick, constructed in the 1880s and lying at the eastern boundary of Hawick Common. It is about 3 miles south of Hawick, roughly 22 acres in size, and stocked for fishing. On the Friday of the Common Riding the mounted procession passes here, riding in single file along both sides of the reservoir; the Cornet rides on the Hawick side, with the followers free to choose. Before it was dammed to make a reservoir, the area was also known as Greenside Bog. It is probably the ‘Askar Knowe’ belonging to ‘Cockes John Crosers’ listed among the farms on the Slitrig burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnigton purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It is probably the ‘Arkondknow’ listed among the lands held by Elliott of Stobs in 1657 and still part of the Barony of Winnigton in the late 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1684 the tenant of the farm there was among the men fined for attending conventicles. There were 5 householders listed there in 1694. William Henderson lived there in 1710. George Hardie was tenant in the early years of the 18th century. The farm was owned by Elliott of Stobs in the 18th century. The ground for the reservoir was partly on Hawick Common and partly feu’d from Stobs estate. In a 1788 valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the lands were in two separate farms, together valued at £173, and appear to have included parts
the Actin Fither’s Badge

Act (akt) n., arch. a formal resolution, decision, record of agreement—‘whereupon, the procurator-fiscal asked act of court: qua thereafter was put in the stocks’ [BR1641] (used in early records of the local Magistrates Court).

the Actin Fither (thu-ak-tin-fi-thur) n. Acting Father during the Common Riding, who is and is selected by the Cornet. He is presented with a badge of office at the Thursday night Chase. He is officially referred to as the Acting Senior Magistrate, taking the role of the old Senior Magistrate in some of the ceremonies (although these ceremonial duties were taken by one of the actual Bailies until sometime around 1900). Along with the Committee and the Right- and Left-Hand Men he generally helps the Cornet perform his duties. In particular he leads the married men during the Chases and carries the Flag from the Nipknowes to St. Leonard’s on the Thursday and Friday mornings. This tradition had fallen into abeyance, but was revived in 1887, when the actual Senior Magistrate (Bailie Morrison) carried the Flag: it is uncertain when the ‘Acting Senior Magistrate’ took over this duty. In late 19th century records the Acting Father is often referred to as simply ‘the Cornet’s Father’, a source of some confusion (not least because occasionally the Cornet’s actual father took the role!): again it is unclear when the current term came into use. He also carries the Flag to the Moor after the Cutting of the Sod, returning it to the Cornet at the gate. Another time the Acting Father holds the Flag is while the Cornet lays a wreath at the War Memorial. There are no specific rules for who can be Acting Father, other than a knowledge of the traditions and good horsemanship. The first Acting Father on record is John Kyle, who acted for his own son Alexander in 1872. The Father in 1876, Thomas Kennaway, was charged with culpable homicide (and acquitted) after his horse trampled someone during the Thursday night Chase. In 1872, 1878, 1881, 1882, 1887, 1895, 1898 and 1907 the Cornet’s actual father did the duty; this suggests that in earlier centuries it may have been the norm for the Cornet’s father to carry out the duties. In 1891 the Acting Father was unwell on the Friday morning and sent his apologies. Several people have been Acting Father twice, while J.E.D. Murray had the honour on 4 occasions.

called Hunthill and Abbot Acre. Walter Reid was farmer there in 1841, Walter Turnbull in the 1860s and John Turnbull around 1900. When the new water-works, using the reservoir, were opened in 1882 the procession (which can be seen in an old photograph) was said to be 1.5 miles long, and led by the Cornet (see also Acreknowe Ferm; also spelled ‘Aikerknowe’ and other variants; the first definitive recorded spelling is ‘Ackornknowe’ in 1606, this extra ‘n’ in the middle, suggesting the origin of the name as the Old English ‘acweorn cnoll’, meaning ‘acorn hill’, consistent with the remains of an old oak wood there; it is ‘Accornekno’ in 1622, ‘Aikerkno’ in 1670, ‘Akerknow’ in 1690, ‘Acreknow’ in 1694, ‘Ackerknow’ in 1710 and ‘Acrekno’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Akerknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Ackerknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Acreknowe Burn (ä-kur-now-burn) n. stream rising on Winnington Moss and running roughly to the north-east, passing through Acreknowe Reservoir and continuing to the Slitrig. It was also formerly referred to as the ‘Flex Back Burn’.

Acreknowe Ferm (ä-kur-now-fe-rum) n. farm near Acreknowe Reservoir, which was part of the Stobs estate. William Aitkin was farmer there in 1797. A building and enclosure are shown there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. In about 1902 it became the site of a siding off the Waverley Line, provided for Stobs Camp.

Acreknowe Turn see Turn

Acremoor (ä-kur-moor) n. Acremoor Loch, an isolated stretch of water of about 40 acres, south of Ettrickbridge, and stocked for fishing. This is probably connected to the ‘rivulet of Akermere’ mentioned in a document of Glasgow Diocese in the reign of William I, relating to lands in Ashkirk Parish. It could be the lands of ‘Achilmere’ in Selkirkshire confirmed to ‘Jacobo de Achilmere’ in 1458/9. On Blaeu’s 1654 map it is the central loch of a group of 3, all draining into the Blindhaugh Burn to the east. However, by Ainslie’s map of 1773 the other 2 bodies of water appear to have been drained and by 1863 it was no longer connected with Blindhaugh Burn. It is now known for being an area of special standing water habitat and as a wintering wildfowl site (also known as Acremoor; it is recorded as ‘Akermere’ in the late 12th century, occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Akermure L.’, Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘aikermuir Loch’ and ‘Oaikermuir Loch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

the Actin Fither’s Badge

Act (akt) n., arch. a formal resolution, decision, record of agreement—‘whereupon, the procurator-fiscal asked act of court: qua thereafter was put in the stocks’ [BR1641] (used in early records of the local Magistrates Court).

the Actin Fither (thu-ak-tin-fi-thur) n. Acting Father during the Common Riding, who is and is selected by the Cornet. He is presented with a badge of office at the Thursday night Chase. He is officially referred to as the Acting Senior Magistrate, taking the role of the old Senior Magistrate in some of the ceremonies (although these ceremonial duties were taken by one of the actual Bailies until sometime around 1900). Along with the Committee and the Right- and Left-Hand Men he generally helps the Cornet perform his duties. In particular he leads the married men during the Chases and carries the Flag from the Nipknowes to St. Leonard’s on the Thursday and Friday mornings. This tradition had fallen into abeyance, but was revived in 1887, when the actual Senior Magistrate (Bailie Morrison) carried the Flag: it is uncertain when the ‘Acting Senior Magistrate’ took over this duty. In late 19th century records the Acting Father is often referred to as simply ‘the Cornet’s Father’, a source of some confusion (not least because occasionally the Cornet’s actual father took the role!): again it is unclear when the current term came into use. He also carries the Flag to the Moor after the Cutting of the Sod, returning it to the Cornet at the gate. Another time the Acting Father holds the Flag is while the Cornet lays a wreath at the War Memorial. There are no specific rules for who can be Acting Father, other than a knowledge of the traditions and good horsemanship. The first Acting Father on record is John Kyle, who acted for his own son Alexander in 1872. The Father in 1876, Thomas Kennaway, was charged with culpable homicide (and acquitted) after his horse trampled someone during the Thursday night Chase. In 1872, 1878, 1881, 1882, 1887, 1895, 1898 and 1907 the Cornet’s actual father did the duty; this suggests that in earlier centuries it may have been the norm for the Cornet’s father to carry out the duties. In 1891 the Acting Father was unwell on the Friday morning and sent his apologies. Several people have been Acting Father twice, while J.E.D. Murray had the honour on 4 occasions.

the Actin Fither’s Badge (thu-ak-tin-fi-thurz-bawj) n. badge of office presented to each Acting Father in the Hut at the ‘Orderin o the Curds an Cream’ just before he makes his speech.
It is a round design, featuring the town coat-of-arms in the centre, with the words ‘CORNETS ACTING FATHER’ around the outside and the year at the bottom. It has been given since at least the early 1960s.

the Actin Fither’s Chase

(thu-ak-tin-fi-thurz-čais) n. the name given to the part of the Chase involving the married men chasing behind the Acting Father.

the Actin Mother

(thu-ak-tin-mu-thur) n. Acting Mother during the Common Riding. This became an official appointment only in 2004, and the first allowance was made a year earlier. As the Acting Father’s partner, she takes part in many of the Common Riding events.

Actin Senior Magistrate

(ak-tin-seen-yur-maw-jis-trá) n. title given to the Bailie who acted as the Town Council representative at the Common Riding. This was in the period after 1861 until sometime around 1900, and when the Provost was unable or unwilling to play this role. Later these ceremonial duties were subsumed into those of the Acting Father. Bailie Morrison performed this role in 1887, while Bailie Barrie performed the role several times from 1891, combining them with that of Acting Father in 1896 when he also Provost.

(awk-teec, -ti) pp. arch. to enter into an obligation – ‘...assoilized him of the penalty and fine, and actit himself gyf ever he do the lyk he shall pay double of the penalty’ [BR1645], ‘...and John Hardie actit him as cautioner to pay the unlaw, and he actit him for his Master’s relief’ [BR1666].

the Act o Bailies an Cooncil, 1640

(thu-akt-o-bá-lecz-an-koon-sul-siks-teen-for-’ce) n. ‘Act of the Bailies, with the consent of the Council and community of the town of Hawick to be kept within the said burgh in time coming’, dated 1st January 1640, the first known set of town bye-laws, listing 35 separate items. This included imposing (or probably re-imposing) upon the Burgesses the duty of riding the marches each year, which become inoperative after the division of the Common in 1777. The relevant text read ‘whatsomever person that beis not present yeirlie at the Common-Ryding and setting the faires sal pay forty shillings toties quotations (i.e. for each offence) and wardit (i.e. be imprisoned), without license or ane lawful excuse’. This is the first recorded reference to the Common Riding. The other bye-laws deal with violent crime, theft, use of irreverent language, defiance of the Bailies’ will, posting notices, transacting business (particularly the websters), avoiding disputes between neighbours, becoming a Burgess, receiving strangers, taking cases to any court other than the Hawick Magistrates’ Court and keeping animals within the Town. The Act was signed by the following Councillors (retaining the original spelling): Robert Scott; John Scott; James Burne; James Scott; Robert Layng; Robert Smith; Robert Gillaspie; James Clappertone; William Scot; William Roucastell; Walter Chisholme; Andro Ledderdaill; George Rucastel; John Scott, Merchant; and Robert Deanes. The Bailies were William Scot and G. Deaneis (possibly an error for ‘Robert’), with GIlb. Watt the Clerk. The Act was renewed in 1715.

A’d (awd) contr.

‘I’d, I would – ‘A’d say sie’, A’d bet ee owts it’s no’, ‘...but A’d a thousand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ noch’ [JEDM], ‘...at the airt A’d comed’ [ECS], ‘A’w’d like tae tell o’ the beauties aw’ve seen That’s aw roond dear auld Hawick’ [AY], I had – ‘A’d aye a bad chist’, ‘...So A’w’d better bide away’ [RM], ‘Ma hert was low, ma hert was low, When a’d ti go, when a’d ti go’ [IWL], ‘A’d aye a bad chist’ [CoH], ‘I was fair sorry to hear aboot yer travails. worries, troubles, tasks, difficulties – ‘She hes ir ain adaеs, wui a no-weel man’ [ECS].
Adam

Adair’s map (a-dārz-mawp) n. manuscript map of ‘The Sherifdome of Etrik Forest’, drawn up by John Adair (c.1650–1722), who was from Leith. Adair was commissioned by the Privy Council to survey and make maps of Scotland, but for largely political reasons many were never published, like this one, which is in the National Library of Scotland. It was made around 1688 and shows the Borthwick and Ale valleys, as well as Selkirkshire.

Adam (aw-dum) n. (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam la parsone de Soul dome’ (and not ‘Fouldon’, as transcribed earlier) in Roxburghshire, when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems clear that he was an early clergyman of ‘Soudon’ Kirk. His seal was a ‘vesica’ showing St. Katherine holding a sword in her right hand and wheel in her left, with another figure to the left.

Adam (aw-dun) n. James (d.1738) probably son of John, a writer in Edinburgh and mazer of the Court of Session. He is described as ‘of Whitslaid’ in 1723 when he purchased the lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish from John Scott, under the authority of the superior, James Erskine of Grange. He matriculated arms in 1731. He was succeeded by his son John. John of Whitslade (d.1780) son of James. owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshielis. He was a benefactor of the University of Edinburgh in 1747. He paid the window tax for Whitslade in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire (incorrectly as ‘of Whitelard’) in 1761. When he died the lands passed to his sister Agnes, who had married John Lauder, and later passed to his great-nephews Corby and John Venner. William (1689–1748) architect, responsible for Hopetoun House, the Royal Infirmary and parts of Floors Castle. He was appointed as the King’s Architect in Scotland. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1740 while working on Holyrood modifications (as well as on canal and tunnel works at Pinkie and Inveresk), as he passed through Hawick (mistakenly recorded as ‘Adams’). His sons Joh and Robert also became well-known architects, with Robert designing Stobs Castle.

Adams (aw-dumz) n. Alexander (18th C.) listed as ‘postillion’ at Midshiels in 1791, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He was listed as coachman at Midshiels in 1797. Alexander (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker of Hawick, who was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. His son David Russell was the first to be baptised there. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as agent of a ‘Stocking Store room’ on the Fore Row. The death of his daughter Ann (b.1800/1) is recorded in 1822. He could be the same man as the grocer. He could be the Alexander who married Helen Lunn in 1790 and had children: Margaret (b.1790); Janet (b.1791); Helen (b.1794); Jane (b.1796); Mary (b.1799); Robert (b.1800); and Adam (b.1801). His daughter Christian died in 1809. Alexander (b.c.1770) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. Born outside Roxburghshire, he is listed along with David, who was probably his son. Gerald business studies teacher at Hawick High School and later Rector of Jedburgh Grammar School. He has been a President of Hawick R.F.C. and the Callants’ Club.

Adamson (aw-dum-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) recorded as ‘postillion’ at Midshiels in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. He may be the Alexander in Wilton who married Betty Gillies in Melrose in 1794. Andrew ‘Andra’ (19th C.) character celebrated in the lines – ‘Dan Narry and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI]. George (17th C.) resident of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. Probably the same George married Marion Easton and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1690, with witnesses John Easton (presumably related to his wife) and William Scott. George (1732/3–1819) carrier of Hobkirke Parish. He is probably the George who is recorded as owner of 2 horses at Hillshag in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. About 1798 he moved to the Nursery House at Boscaster Bridge. His 2nd daughter Betty married James Turnbull (ancestor of the Hawick grocers), probably born in 1760. His wife was said to be Catherine, but it is also possible she was Christian Stevenson who married a man of the same name in Hobkirke Parish in 1756. His death at ‘Nursey house’ is recorded in Hobkirke Parish and he was buried in Hokirk kirkyard. James (17th C.) servitor to the Earls of Buccleuch in at least the period 1623–37, being the ‘receiver of all silver rents’, as well as dealing with household expenses for the family. There are ‘vouchers of account’ given by him to the Earl’s ‘tutors’ in 1632–33. In the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is listed as being owed ‘for ane yeares chamfermaill, fyftie pundes’. He was recorded being in Edinburgh in 1634 when still servant to the Earl of Bucleuch. Rev. James (d.c.1690) minister at Bedrule. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and became Schoolmaster of Colinton around the same year. He was ordained in 1663 at Carriden (Bo’ness) and translated to Bedrule in 1664. He was a member of the Jedburgh Presbytery in 1666. However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. for refusing to give up Episcopalianism). He married Helen Hamilton before 1671 and later Esther Scougal in Edinburgh in 1680. His daughter Margaret married William Hastie in Edinburgh in 1699, while Janet married Thomas Porteous in 1705. James (18th C.) resident of Blackleemouth in 1786 when his daughter Jane was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Mr. ?? (19th C.) brother of Peter from Nenthorn. He was the original partner of Peter Scott in 1878, taking over the stocking-making business of Peter Laidlaw. He was Scott’s uncle, and had previously had a stocking shop on Drumlanrig Place. The partnership ended in 1884, with Scott forming ‘Pesco’s’ himself. Peter (b.1797/8) born in Nenthorn, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 Loan, in 1851 at about No. 1 Loan and in 1861 on the Mid Raw. He married Marion Leishman and their children included Alexander, Marion (who married Peter Scott), William, Robert, Elizabeth (b.1839) and Peter (b.1840). Peter (b.1840) hosier in Hawick. He was in partnership with his nephew Peter Scott in 1878–84, before Scott formed his own company, Pesco’s. He married Margaret Doyle and their children included Marion (b.1872), Jane (b.1874) and Alexander (b.1881).

adderstane (aw-dur-, e-thur-stān) n. an adderstone, round stone with a hole through it (imagined to be made by an adder’s bite), said to have magical power – ‘No danger he fears, for a charm’d sword he wears; Of adderstone the hilt; No Tynedale knight had ever such might, But his heart-blood was spilt’ [JL], ‘Surely nowadays few people believe the silly story of vipers producing ‘adder stones’’ [RB] (cf. ether).

Adderstone (aw-dur-stān) n. former farm in Cavers Parish, its precise extent now uncertain, but later meaning the lands that were split into Adderstonlee and Adderstoneshiel. ‘Johan de Ethereston’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 may be the earliest recorded owner. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. There are deeds relating to it among the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1497, 1530 and 1553. The Laird of Gledstains is recorded owning these lands (along with Adderstoneshiel) in 1502 and John Gledstains had a sasine for these same lands in 1542. It is among the lands listed as held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1559 and 1572; even although these lands were never within the Parish of Hawick, they were nevertheless for a while in the Barony of Hawick. By 1615 the lands were certainly the property of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with Adderstoneshiel. In 1670 they were inherited along with Adderstoneshiel by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry from his father John; at that point the lands were stated to be in the Lordship, Regality and Barony of Hawick. The lands of Francis Scott of Gorrenberry in Kirkton Parish were valued at £900 in 1678. At the same time ‘Douglas of Adderstone’ (possibly the heir of Douglas of Cavers) held lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1691 John Scott of Gorrenberry, son of Francis, was served heir to his father in both these lands. In the 1813 Land Tax Rolls it is ‘Adderston, now called Adderston-Shiels, and Adderston-Lees’; it was owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone and valued at £900. The Laird of these lands appears to be mentioned in a version of the Border ballad ‘The Raid of the Redwires’ (although it has been suggested that this was a reference to the Ruthergords of Edgerston) – ‘Gude Ederstone was not to lack, Wi’ Kirktown, Newtoun, noblemen’ [CPM] (the name occurs in the late 14th century as ‘Ederston’ and ‘Edystersona’, then became ‘Ederstoun’), ‘eddeirstoun’ in 1502, ‘Edgaristoun’ in 1511, 1559 and 1572, ‘Edersetoun’ in 1542, probably ‘Ederstoun’ in 1594, ‘Edzerston’ in 1610, ‘Ederston’ in 1615 and finally ‘Adderston’ by the 1620s, but still ‘Ederston’ in 1670 and ‘Ederstoun’ in 1691; it is ‘Ederstoun’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Ederston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Edderstein’ on de Wit’s c. 1680 map, ‘Eddenstone’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, and ‘Ederston’ on Coronelli’s 1689 map; its origin is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Eadred’ plus ‘tun’, but connection with an adder is not impossible; there is also an ‘Adderstone’ in Northumberland).
Adderstonelee

Adderstonelee (aw-dur-stin-lee) n. isolated farm above the Slitrig valley, part of the former lands of Adderstone. In 1643 the lands with different held by the mother of Gledstains of Dod, ‘being Adderston-Lees’, were valued at £200. By 1678 the lands were owned (along with Adderstoneshiel) by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry. John Reid was tenant there in 1694, and it may be the ‘Goranberies Hous’ where John Scott of Gorrenberry was taxed for having 8 hearths at that time. Along with Adderstoneshiel it was purchased in 1750 from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry by Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers. The lands were inherited by Archibald Pringle Douglas when his brother George inherited Cavers in 1786. They were still valued at £200 in 1788. William Wilson was there in 1787–92. Robert Aitken was farmer there in 1797 and David Tait in 1868. An 1846 plan of the lands, along with those of Adderstoneshiel is in the National Archives. About quarter of a mile to the west are the remains of an earthwork, composed of triple ramparts and ditches, perhaps being half of the original structure, the other part being destroyed by cultivation and draining; the interior may have measured 45 m by 40 m. Aerial photography has shown evidence of rig and furrow agriculture just to the north-east and south of the fort. A pear-shaped hammerstone found near here is in Hawick Museum, as well as a spindle whorl (also ‘Adderston Lee’, ‘Edderstonelee’ and variants; it is ‘Etherstonlie’ in 1694, ‘Ederstonlee’ in 1750 and ‘Aderstonlee’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Alderstonlee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Adderstonelee Moss (aw-dur-stin-lee-mos) n. boggy area between Adderstonelee and Kirkton Hill, also known as the Pickmaw Moss, and sometimes also referring to the small body of water there. It is known for its birdlife and wild plant species. A bronze vessel (rivetted and patched, 8 inches by 4 inches) found there is in Hawick Museum.

Adderstoneshiel (aw-dur-stin-sheel) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, near Stobs, with 2 hill-forts and other evidence of former occupation nearby. The Laird of Gledstains is recorded owning these lands (along with Adderstone) in 1502 and John Gledstains had a sasine in 1542. This is probably the ‘Edyerston Scheills’ listed among lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’ in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615; hence, along with Adderstone, these lands were at one point in the Barony of Hawick. John and Adam Crozier were there in 1544 and Ade Crozier in 1571. George Elliot from there was accused of crimes across the Border in 1563/4. It was once the home of a branch of the Gledstains family. In 1574 this was among the lands that James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for. In 1643 the farm was held by Gledstains of Dod and valued at £700. In 1670 the lands were were inherited along with Adderstoneshiel by Francis Scott of Gorrenberry from his father John, and then inherited by Francis’ son John in 1691. Thomas Reid was there in 1682. In 1684 the tenant was among the local men fined for attending conventicles. James Leyden was there in 1690. In 1694 Andrew Jordan was there, with James Scott being ploughman and George Telfer shepherd. William Elliot was there around 1700 and John Scott in 1709. John Tait was tenant in at least 1719–20. John Elliot is associated with the farm in 1740. Along with Adderstonelee it was purchased in 1750 from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry by Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers. Archibald Douglas of Adderstone inherited the farm in 1786. It was valued at £700 in 1788. Walter Tait was farmer there in at least the period 1788–97. This is where Gideon Scott built the first local windmill in about 1800. William Davidson was farmer in the 1860s and John Davidson was recorded there in 1868. Davidsons farmed there until at least the mid-20th century. The farm land was used as part of Stobs Camp from WWI. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Cuthbert is only about 400 feet south of the farmhouse. The garden gate contains some ancient globular carved stones unearthed in a 19th century excavation. Other artefacts, such as querns, stone axes and burial cists have also turned up, showing the early occupation of the site. There is a hill-fort to the west on Denholm Hill, and another to the north-west on Mid Hill, with an additional linear earthwork. To the north of the farm there was also once a circular earthwork, now obliterated by cultivation. There may have been a tower near there, called ‘Cleary’, where John Crozier lived in 1544. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building that is no longer evident. 2 spindle whorls from the farm are also in the Museum (also ‘Adderstoneshiels’ and ‘Adderston Shiels’; it is ‘eddirstoun schele’ in 1502, ‘Edgaristounschelis’ in 1511, ‘Elderstounschelis’ in 1542, ‘Agerstoneheldes’ in 1544, ‘Eddertonschelis’ in 1563/4, ‘Edderstonesheills’ in 1571, ‘Edderstoun Schelis’ in 1574, ‘Edzerstoun Scheillis’ in ÆEthelfrith (ä-thul-frith) n. (d.c.616) King of the Angles, who fought at the battle of Degastan in 603, defeating the Scots King Aedan, at a site identified with Dawston, not too far from Hawick. He was son of ÆEthelric, who had earlier been the King of Bernicia, and succeeded his uncle Hussa about 593. He united Bernicia and Deira into a Northumbrian nation around 605, this possibly representing the introduction of the early Anglian language into the Borders. He and married Acha, daughter of the former King of Deira. He later defeated the Welsh and was killed at the Battle of Idle against the East Anglians.

Affleck (aw-flek) n. Charles (19th C.) son of David. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Mary Ann Cross, who was known as ‘English Mary’. Their children included Charlotte, who married printer William Ellis (and their sons were William F. and B.P. Ellis of R. Deans & Co., printers). David (b.1785/6) hand-loom weaver in Hawick, originally from the Langholm area. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Green Wynd. His wife was Margaret Christie, from Wigtownshire. Their children included: Margaret; David, of the Hawick Co-op; Jessey who married stockingmaker Adam Thomson; Mary, who married Andrew Landlees; Charles, who married ‘English Mary’; John; Euphemia; and Anne, who married baker George Dickson. He may have been related to the Margaret who married weaver George Scott. David (19th C.) probably son of David. His was the first name on the first Committee list for the Hawick Co-operative Store in 1839. He married Ann McKenzie, who was mother (from her 1st marriage) of hairdresser Frank McKenzie. Their children included: Margaret, who married Marchbanks; Jess, who married stocking-maker Thomas Elliot; and David, a wool-sorter in Alloa, whose son David became Minister at Ladybank. His wife and 3 children are recorded on the Kirkwynd in 1841, suggesting he might have been deceased. Jessie (d.1904) probably daughter of David and sister of David also. She was known as an earnest Christian. She married stocking-maker Adam Thomson in Hawick in 1849. They emigrated to New Zealand, where her husband became foreman of Otago Woollen Co., Mossgiel Mills, Dunedin.

Africa (aw-free-ku) n. old name for a series of earthworks a little way up the west side of the Camp Burn in the Borthwick valley. Local tradition says that it was an extensive settlement, and it is marked on most maps as a fort. However, it is now classified as an early mediaval homestead, although probably there are remains here from several different periods. The name ‘Africa’ was alternatively attached to the earthwork at Castle Hill near Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. However, there is no evidence that either place ever had an association with this name among locals (the origin of the name, or at what point it was associated with earthworks in the Borthwick valley, is unclear).

Africa (aw-free-ku) n. former name for the farm of Midburn. Local historian Walter Deans said that ‘it was formerly a bleak and barren farm with a poor soil and ‘peasweep’ locality, and from its sterility got the name of Africa’ (there was another piece of land with the same name in An-crum Parish).

Aikenhead (ā-kinhed) n. John (15th C.) recorded as Vicar of Hassendean in 1474. In that year he requested that the Pope allow him to hold a second benefice. His name is written 'Akynhed' of 'Hassyndan'. In 1481 he requested that he be granted the Vicarage of 'Cader et Monolond'.

Aikrin (āk-rin) n. local pronunciation of the surname Ekron - 'The Ekrns, or Aikrins iz oo say, wa refpecte feelty in the burgh an owned property in Silver Street an the Crescent' [BW1979].

Aikwud (āk-wud, -wood) n. Oakwood, lands on the south side of the Ettrick valley, over Woll Rig from Ashkirk. The lands were once owned by the Crown and were let to the Homes in the 1490s. Lawrence Rutherford and Adam Cranston are recorded there in 1494/5 (and both had remission for their rieving crimes). The lands were still Crown property in 1502. The tower here was once a home of the Scotts. In 1541 it was claimed in feu by Michael Scott in a rental roll of Ettrick. Jasper Hogg was an indweller at the mill in 1665. Sometime in the late 18th century a cache of silver coins was dug up nearby, by William, son of James, tenant of Oakwood Mill. Andrew Thomson was farmer there in the late 18th century. Walter Scott of Harden in 1785 and Hugh Scott of Harden in 1802 paid tax on £884 in the Land Tax Rolls for 'The two Oakwoods & Mill'. Ebenezer Beattie was there in 1821. There is also a nearby Roman fort, to the south-east, occupied roughly from the year 80, and a temporary marching camp just to the north - 'Ca' up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlesteed, and Hainen's valiant Will' [WSB] (formerly written 'Aikwod', 'Aikwode' and variants).

Aikwud Mill (āk-wud-mil) n. Oakwood Mill, a farm on the B7009, near the confluence of the Ettrick and Yarrow, and across the river from Carterhaugh. It was probably abandoned in the mid-18th century. It was restored for David and Judy Steel in 1991–92 (including some wood recycled from Hawick Old Parish Kirk pews). It was, by local legend, home of Michael Scott the wizard and of Border rievers. The tenant of the farm there in 1502 was William Turnbull. The first Scott of Aikwood was Robert, recorded in 1503, possibly son of Robert of Haining. Sometime before 1630 Philip Scott seems to have sold the lands to a Murray of Elibank, through whom it passed to the Scotts of Harden. Ebenezer Beattie was tenant there in the early 19th century - 'It setts thee weel, thou haughty youth, To bend such taunts on me; Oft ha'e you hunted Aikwood hills, And no man hindered thee' [ES] (also sometimes 'Oakwood'; it is 'Aikwode' in 1502 and 'Aikwood' in 1526 and 1528; it is marked as 'O. Aickwood' and 'N. Aikwood' on Blaen's 1654 map).

Aimers (ā-murz) n. Archibald 'Airchie' (1822/3–1886) founder of the joiners firm A. Aimers and Son. The family came from Tynedale and the surname had originally been 'Hymers'. He married Janet Aitken, who died in 1883, aged 63. Their children included Agnes and Nelly, who died as infants, Thomas (who died at 16), James (who died in London) and John (who died in Liverpool). Thomas 'Tom' (19th C.) prominent centre half back for the Hawick rugby team in the 1880s and 1890s. He also played for the South of Scotland team and in international trials. William (1845/6–1910) head of the joiners firm A. Aimers & Son. He was a councilor for South High Street Ward for 6 years, member of the Common Riding Committee and one of the oldest members of the Hawick Fire Brigade. He married Jessie, daughter of Francis Napier Scott (also formerly ‘Aymers’).

ain (ān) adj. own – ‘Tell your master that here sits Hab o’ Hawick at his ain fireside and a fig for King James and a’ his kin!’ [RW], ‘I wish we were hame to our ain folk Our kind and our true-hearted ain folk’ [HSR], ‘...And bring me back a message frae My ain wee lassie Mary’ [TCh], ‘...We’ll unite in a sang tae oor ain auld toon’ [TC], ‘...And times brought many changes To oor ain auld toon’ [JT], ‘To the lassies’ laughin’ welcome in their ain auld Border toon’ [JYH], ‘My ain Borderland, My ain Borderland, Oh, weed do I like My ain Borderland’ [JCG], used redundantly in compound personal pronouns – ‘To these may be added ain (= own), thus: ma-ain-sel, eer-ain-sel, eer-ain-sels, etc.’ [ECS] (cf. the older awin).

Ainslie see Ainslie Henderson

Ainslie (ān-zlee) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in ‘Cleithuch’ (presumably Cleithaugh) according to a rental roll of 1669. Perhaps the same Andrew is listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. He is probably the Andrew listed as owner of lands in Oxnam Parish in 1678. David of Fala and Templelands (16th C.) listed in 1549 as son and heir of William of Fala, among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He became a merchant in Jedburgh, married Mary Rutherford and had sons James, George and John. His wife may have been a daughter of Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee. He was probably succeeded by his son William (but these generations are confused). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Heap in 1780. He married Nelly Gray and their son John was baptised in 1780. James (16th C.) recorded at Cleithaugh in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. Rev. James (1607/8–1702) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1639, he became minister of Minto in 1652. His appointment took almost the whole year to settle, there being an objection because he was a Freemason. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopalianism, and was forced to leave the bounds of the Presbytery of Jedburgh. However, he managed to survive through the Revolution and was restored in 1690 and remained minister of Minto until his death, in his 95th year. He preached at Hassendean in 1692. He had a daughter who married John Scott of Weens, and another daughter, Barbara, who married Rev. John Ritchie, a later minister of Minto. John of Dolphinston (14th C.) witness in 1354 to a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. He was also witness in 1357/8 to a charter whereby the Kers first gained Altonburn and another charter for the Kers in 1358. James (18th C.) resident of Denholm. He married Catherine Henderson and their children included William (b.1789) and William (again, b.1791). John (15th C.) on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30, when he was ‘of Aynisle’. William was also listed. John of Dolphinston (d.1480/1) son of William and Margaret Pringle, he succeeded his grandfather. In 1450 he was part of the ‘retour’ panel for William Douglas inheriting the Barony of Hawick; Richard, probably his brother, was also on the panel. In 1454 he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1463/4 he witnessed the document rewarding a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. In 1464/5 he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh, and he was then appointed deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire so that he could give sasine of the Barony and Sheriffship to Archibald Douglas of Cavers (probably his brother-in-law). He witnessed a document for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk in 1468 and charters for Walter Ker of Caverton in 1471 and 1475. He was one of the men named in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the John who leased the Eaststead of Langhope until about 1480. In 1431 he married Janet, daughter of William Douglas of Cavers. His children included: William of Fala; John of Dolphinston; and David of Fala, ‘Bludelawis’ and Templelands. John of Dolphinston (15th C.) son of John. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. Richard and David were also on the panel, and probably brothers. He witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford in 1488. He may be the same ‘Johannem Anisle’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He is probably the John who witnessed a writ for the Kers of Cessford in 1493. Rev. John (1639–93) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1659, he was licensed by the Prebytery there in 1665 and became minister at Hobkirk that year, probably the first Episcopalian minister there. He was translated to Oxnam in 1682 and demitted in 1690. He married Anna, niece of Thomas Douglas, and Edinburgh merchant, and their children included Magdalene (who married Andrew Ker, apothecary of Yetholm) and Anne (who married William Ainslie, vintner of Jedburgh). It is possible he was related to Andrew Ainslie of Blackhill, ‘writer’ in Jedburgh. John (18th C.) miller in Hawick Mill in the late 18th century. He is probably the John, Burgess of Hawick, who is recorded in 1783 living at Allars, outside the boundaries of the Burgh; he applied for permission to pasture his cow on the Common, which was permitted provided that he paid an extra fee for the privilege. Perhaps the same John was the Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the John (recorded as gardener in 1761 and 1770), married to Janet Johnson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: James (b.1757); Margaret (b.1759); John (b.1761); Isabel (b.1767); Margaret (again, b.1770); and John (b.1770). The witnesses in 1761 were shoemaker James Chisholme and tailor Jospeh Hood. It is possible he was the John whose son William died in Hawick in 1781. John Rutherford of Samileston (1754–1799) son of Thomas Rutherford and Ann Ainslie, he changed his surname when inheriting property in Bath from his uncle, William Ainslie. He is listed in 1788 as owner of Samileston and other lands in Jedburgh Parish. He served as Excise Officer in the 1790s. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, when he was said to be a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s when he was a customs officer and other taxes in Jedburgh in the 1780s and 90s. He was implicated in a long divorce case in 1797, with Thomas Waugh of Jedburgh claiming that he had an affair with his wife, Jean Ballantyne. He is said to have had several illegitimate children. Accounts suggest that he struggled with mental health and alcoholism, and committed suicide. John (1745–1828) born in Jedburgh, he became a surveyor in Edinburgh, producing a series of maps of the English counties. His map of Selkirkshire was published in 1773, encouraged by Andrew Pringle as patron. His 1789 map of Scotland was particularly well known at the time. He also produced a map of the Southern Part of Scotland (including Roxburghshire) in 1821. He married Mary, daughter of Jedburgh Provost Andrew Lookup. They had 2 daughters: Catherine; and Mary, who married James Shortreed, son of the Sherif-Substitute of Roxburghshire. He is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. John (1794/5–1873) born in Kelso, son of Walter. He married Isabel Miller in Wilton in 1824. He worked as a shepherd and agricultural labourer, living on a cottage at Orchard farm from about the time he was married until 1856 when he emigrated to America, along with the rest of his family, to join his son William. They settled at ‘Scotch Hill’ in Burlington Flats, Otsego County, New York. Their children, all born in Hawick Parish, were: Walter (b.1824); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); William (1827–92), who married Janet Rutherford and emigrated in 1852; John (b.1830), who returned to marry Jemima Telford in Hawick, went back to America, but later worked as a clothier in Edinburgh; Thomas (b.1835); and Charles (1839–64), who was killed in the Battle of the Wilderness. John (1830–1903) born in Hawick Parish, son of John and Isabel Miller. He moved to America with his family in 1852, but to marry ‘his school and church companion’ Jemima Telford in Hawick in 1858. He went back to America, but later became proprietor of Cruickshanks, an Edinburgh clothier. John (19th C.) Police Sergeant in Hawick in the 1860s. John Elliot (1895/6–1915) only son of Rev. W.J. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots in WWI, being killed at Loos. A commemorative communion cabinet and cup service were presented to the Congregational Church in his memory by his parents. Lancelot ‘Lance’ (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street. He was said to have been with Robert Kirkton and John Peacock when they all stabbed the Laird of Buccleuch ‘threif or four tymes throw the body’. Messrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. One of them was probably the Thomas who was recorded at Horsleyhill on the 1789 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear who these gentlemen were, or how long they were associated with Horsleyhill. Ralph (15th C.) recorded as ‘Anysle’ in 1493 when he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany and other crimes, including stealing 24 oxen and cows, 6 horses and goods from ‘the Place of Spittale’. Whether this was Spittal-on- Rule or Ancrum Spittal is unclear. Perhaps the same Ralph ‘in Thickside’ was listed among Ainslies at the 1502 Justice- aire. He could also be the Ralph recorded in 1502 having remission for assisting the former Duke of Albany and being from near Dumphinston when he had remission for stealing livestock from Glenelt. Ralph (16th C.) recorded as ‘Raipe Eansley of Cleethaughe’ in 1590 when accused of taking part in a raid on the English farm of Woodburn. Thomas is also named, and so presumably a close relative. Robert (17th/18th C.) ‘writer’ in Jedburgh, who was witness for many documents relating to the Rule valley in the late 1600s. His brother Thomas also worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. Robert, W.S. (1766–1838) son of the land steward of Lord Douglas’s Berwickshire estates, Robert of Darnchester in Berwickshire. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh. In 1787, when still a law student, he accompanied Robert Burns on his ‘Border Tour’. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s Kirkyard in Edinburgh. Thomas of Swinside (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Eansley of Swinside’ in 1590 when he was named along with 2 Douglasses, accused of a raid into England 3 years earlier. He could be the Thomas listed along with Ralph of Cleithaug in another 1590 accusation of a raid. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Horsleyhill according to the 1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Minto Parish. He is probably one of the ‘Messrs Ainslies’ listed at Horsleyhill in 1797. It is possible he is the same as Thomas of Overwells. Thomas Philip of Overwells (d.1837) son of Thomas. He is listed as owner of Overwells in the 1788 county valuation. He lived at Knower south for many years, where his mother died in 1812. He was said to be a great follower of fashion. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club and was a Captain in the Roxburgh yeomanry, being given the rank of Lieut.-Col. when he retired. He never married. Thomas (19th C.) blacksmith in Minto in the 1860s. Walter of Wilton (b.1632) 2nd son of John of Harkers and grandson of David of Fala. Rev. Walter (17th/18th C.) nephew of Rev. James, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1685 and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1695. He was presented to Minto Parish in late 1697 and the next year began as assistant and successor to his aged uncle. However, he was translated to Lundie and Fowlis in 1700, and so never succeeded as minister of Minto. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid out of the Wilton poor box in 1705. Walter (17th/18th C.) servant at Whitchesters in 1720 when he married Helen Scott from Roberton Parish. The marriage was proclaimed at Hawick, but took place at Roberton. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included Margaret (b.1728) and Bessie (b.1731). William (17th C.) ‘heckler’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was recorded as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at the farm of Cleithaug according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Jean Wilson. Their children, born in Hawick, included: Ann (b.1759); and an unnamed child (b.1761). William (b.1792/3) born in Cavers Parish, he was a warehouseman in Wilton and also Wilton Kirk elder. He was listed at Pathhead among heads of households in 1835–41. He lived on Pathhead, at about the modern 3 Langlands Road. By 1851 he was a ‘Dresser of Woolen Goods’ and in 1861 was a factory time keeper. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Helen and William. William (1790–1855) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Jane Plenderleith. He lived in Hawick for a while, where he worked as a brewer and bookbinder. He was listed as a bookbinder on the 1825 subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ and is also recorded in 1825 as a bookseller with circulating library operating in the High Street. He is probably also be the founder of William Ainslie & Co. recorded at Hawick Distillery on Commercial Road in 1818. He was also said to be an amateur piper. In 1795 he married Jessie, brother of poet and abolitionist Thomas Pringle; she died in South Africa in 1880, aged 94. Their children were: William (1818–1901); Robert Pringle (1821–98); Catherine (b.1822), who married William Ashton; George Hilton (1826–71); Jane (‘Jeanie’) Plenderleith (b.1832); and Mary Isabella (1836–1918), married John William Henry Hockly. Their first 5 children were probably all born in Hawick. In 1832 he moved with his wife and 5 children to the Cape, following his brother-in-law, who had lived there in the 1820s. He later purchased a of decades of the 20th century. The name used for the Congregational Kirk during the 18th century was 'Ainsley', 'Ainsly', 'Ainyslie', 'Anisle', 'Anislie', 'Ains-leez-kirk', etc. His mother is sometimes spelled 'Ainsley'. His mother was a granddaughter of Thomas Bunyan, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He married Mary Ann Pringle (who was probably his cousin) and they had at least 8 children.

Rev. William James (1862–1932) son of John, who was one of the founding members of the Evangelical Kirk in Hawick, which grew to become the Congregational Kirk. Note that his name is sometimes spelled 'Ainsley'. His mother was a granddaughter of William, who worked as a bookbinder in Hawick. In 1832 he moved with the rest of his family to South Africa, on the advice of his uncle, Thomas Pringle. In order to defend his farm he became involved in the 8th Xhosa War. In 1859 he settled near Fort Beaufort, where he farmed and dabbled in diamond mining. In 1899 he privately published an account of his struggles in South Africa, 'Sixty-six years' residence in South Africa: an autobiographical sketch'. He married Mary Ann Pringle (who was probably his cousin) and they had at least 8 children.

He was heavily involved with organisations relating to young people, e.g. the 'Catch-my-Pal Association' (a temperance movement), Crusaders, Band of Hope and League of Worshiping Children. He also encouraged a Cycling Corps within the church (from 1903) as well as a local branch of the 'P.S.A.' movement (from about 1908) and oversaw the 'Christian Endeavour' (a movement aimed at youth). He was also on the committee that formed Hawick's first Scout troop in 1909 and received approval for the formation of a Boys' Brigade Company in 1920, although this did not come to pass until 14 years later. He spent some of 1916 working with the Y.M.C.A. (supporting the troops), and in 1921 moved to Hawick to become minister of the Congregational Church in late 1902, being inducted in early 1903. Aircchaideacon o Teviotdale (ärch-dee-kin-ō-teev-yōl-dal) n. Archdeacon of Teviotdale, person appointed as the delegate of the Bishop... of Glasgow Diocese within the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. The position existed from 1237/8 on the death of Hugh de Potton, when the Diocese was split into the separate Archdeaconries of Glasgow and Teviotdale (although some of the earlier Archdeacon of Glasgow are also sometimes referred to as Archdeacon of Teviotdale). There were appointees until the Reformation. It would once have been a position of great power within Roxburghshire. A partial roll of the Archdeaconry is: Peter de Alintoun 1238-42; Reginald de Irvine 1242-45; Nicholas de Moffat 1245-70; William Wishart 1288-97 and maybe until 1308; Roger de Welleton 1307-10; William de Hillum 1312; William de Yetholm 1320 and 1321-29; John de Berwick 1354; John de Boulton 1354; Henry de Smalham 1354-58 and 1364; John of Ancrum 1364-93; Thomas de Mathane 1394; John de Merton 1394-c.1404; Gilbert Mouswald 1404-98; William Macmorrin c.1408; James Watson (or Walter) 1408-18; John Forrester 1418; William Croyser 1418-40, 1443, 1446, 1451-60 and 1461; John de Scheves 1418-19; John Lyon 1418 and 1423; Edward de Lauder 1419; Alexander de Foulertoun 1422 and 1424; John Bowmaker 1424-28; Andrew de Hawick 1424-25; John Benyng 1426; James Croyser 1440; Walter Blair 1441-47; Patrick Hume 1443-72; Alexander Inglis 1471; John Lichton 1472; David Luthirdale 1474-75; John Whitelaw 1475; Nicholas Forman 1478/9; James Doles 1478; John Brown 1479; William Elphinestone, junior (probably) 1479-81; William Elphinestone, senior 1481 and 1482-86; John Martini 1486, 1491 and 1510; James Newton 1488/9; William Ker 1491 and 1510-11; George `Herher' 1509; George Lockhart 1509 and 1520-33; Thomas Ker 1514; John Lauder 1534-51; John Hepburn 1544-64 and 1565; Robert Richardson 1552-65; Thomas Ker 1565-69; Robert Ker (in title) 1580s.

Airchibald (ār-chee-bawld) n. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Robert who married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1799 or the Robert who married Peggy Collier in Wilton in 1812. William (16th C.) listed as a ‘broustar’ (i.e. embroiderer) in the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not be was local. His surname is written Airchibald. William (17th C.) resident in Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Aird (ārd) n. Thomas (1802–76) poet, born in Bowden and popular in his day, although he never rose to the status of his friends Carlyle and Hogg. His father James was a joiner and his mother was Isabella Paisley, said to be descended from the Eliots of Midlem Mill. He was educated in Bowden and Melrose, then at Edinburgh University, where he trained for the ministry, but abandoned this plan for a literary career. He worked as tutor for a Selkirkshire family and there became acquainted with James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’. He became editor of ‘The Edinburgh Weekly Journal’ in 1833, soon moving to the Dumfries Herald, where he was editor for 28 years. He published several books of verse, including his own ‘Poetical Works’ in 1848 (reprinted several times) as well as essays and long narrative poems. In 1871 he chaired a meeting in Dumfries to celebrate the centenary of Sir Walter Scott, whom he had met many times. He was buried at St. Michael’s in Dumfries, not far from the grave of Robert Burns.

airgement (ār-gee-min’) n. an argument (also arguement).

Airhouse (ār-hows) n. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Riddell, recorded on the 1787-89 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Abraham ‘Aby’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whittlawside in 1583. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringan. The diminutive form of his name could stand for other Chitnian names, e.g. Albert. Abraham ‘Able’ (16th C.) listed in 1582 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for entering him and Tom of Chingills and the Earl of Morton was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce them. His name is given there as ‘Abye Armstrang of the Gyngillis’. In 1583 he is recorded as ‘Thoms Abye’, son of ‘Auld Tom o Chingills’. Abraham of Woodhouselee (16th C.) listed in 1583 as a son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. He is referred to as ‘Ebye Armeastrong the goodman of Waddusles’. He was probably a brother of Kinmont Willie. It seems that his eldest son, William, lived in England, and ‘enjoyeth that land that Kinge Henry the Eight gave old Sand Armeastrong’. He also had sons Dave and Sandy. He may be the ‘Aby Armstrang’ listed as a pledge in St. Andrews Castle in 1569, with those to be exchanged for him being ‘Will of Kynmonth; Cristie Armstrang brether; Niniane Armeastrang’, who may all have been his brothers. Abraham ‘Ebbie’ of Kirktonhill (16th/17th C.) among the Armstrangs who were acquitted of a murder charge in 1609, on account of the pursuer agreeing that they were not present at the time and place of the murder. It is suggested by Pitcairn that the name may be a clerical error for ‘Ekkie’ or ‘Hobbie’, but given the slightly later Armstrong of almost the same name, it does seem this could be ‘Abraham’ or perhaps ‘Ebeenezer’. His location is given as ‘Kirktonhill’, and given the homes of the other men, this is probably the place of that name near Beupath, north-west of Langholm. Abraham ‘Ebie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Ringan of Arkleton. He was listed in 1606 among men declared as fugitives, his name appearing as ‘Ebie Armstrange, son of Ringane of Arkiltoun’. He as also among men who failed Airmstrong (ārm-strōng) n. (Armstrong) A. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at ‘Grain’ (presumably Saughtree Grain). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He may have been father of the later Arthur, who was also shepherd at Grain. Aaron (1765/6-1845) gamekeeper of Newlands in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His wife Ann died in 1837, aged 64. George, who was assistant gamekeeper at Newlands in 1841, was probably his son. Aaron (18th/19th C.) surgeon in Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Abraham ‘Aby’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whittlawside in 1583. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringan. to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) from ‘Greinis’ (probably ‘the Greens’ near Newcastleton), his name is also written Ebie. In 1623 he was convicted of the shameful murder of John Elliot, a blindman, by robbing him on Ancrum Bridge and throwing him over the side to drown in the Teviot there. He was hanged for this crime, probably in Jedburgh. He must have been related to Jock and Ninian, who possesses the farm of Greens in 1632. Abraham ‘Abie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as being ‘callit of ye Syd’ when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buceburne’. He was found guilty along with Simon Elliot ‘callit Guyd’, although 2 other Armstrongs (Archie ‘Raccas’ and Francie ‘Tueden’) were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. It is possible he was the same man recorded as ‘Allie of the Syde’ in 1590 when accused, along with other Armstrongs, of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland. Abraham ‘Abel’ (18th/19th C.) farmer at Shankend, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Abel’ who took over renting a farm (of the Duke of Buccleuch) from Walter Murray in about 1796. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. It seems likely he was related to Walter and James, who farmed at Langside at the same time. He could be the Abel who witnessed baptisms for James Scott (in Whitlaw) in Hawick Parish in 1766, 1768 and 1772. He is probably the Abel from Cavers Parish who married Jane Grieve in Hawick in 1762. Abraham ‘Abel’ (b.c.1765) clogger in Newcastleton. He was living at about 6 South Hermitage Street in 1841, along with James (probably his son) and his family. He could be the Abel born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758, son of Adam. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included James (b.1793); and George (b.1798). Adam (13th C.) recorded in 1235 when King Henry III pardoned him for the death of William Sotthred in Carlisle. He could be the same Adam ‘Armstrang’ who was on an inquest in Carlisle in 1250. Adam ‘Ade’ (16th C.) one of the Armstrongs of Harelaw. His son William was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. ‘Aidyis Abe’ and ‘Aidyis Andro’, who were also listed, were probably other sons of his. Adam of Whisgills (16th C.) listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliotis and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. Adam (17th C.) called ‘Rattas in Blackhoip’, he probably lived at Blackhope, between Saughtree and Kielder. In 1646 he was one of the last Border thieves to come before Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, with a bond presented by his neighbouring Beatties. Either he or perhaps his father was probably the Robert ‘callit Rattas’ who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Langhaugh (probably the one in Castleton Parish). The will of his wife Isobel Moffat is recorded in 1683. Adam (17th C.) resident at Netherraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Adam (17th C.) shepherd near Larriston according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) elder in Castleton Kirk recorded in 1698. Adam (17th/18th C.) shepherd at farms neighbouring on Hawick Common. He was at Whitchesters for 7 years, Alton Croft for 2 years and Goldielands for 2 years. His son Mungo was a cooper in Hawick. It seems likely he was closely related (perhaps brother) to Mungo who was Hawick Town Herd. He could be the Adam whose daughter Jean was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696. He may also be the Adam in Barnes in 1716 when his daughter Jean married John Tait (gardener in the Cross Wynd). Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Burnhead in 1728. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in 1725 (along with William) for James Blyth at Clarilaw, in 1736 for Archibald Scott in Burnhead and in 1747 for George Graham, resident of Lees. He married Janet Harkness in 1727. Their children included: William (b.1728); Euphan (b.1730); Andrew (b.1734); and William (again, b.1736). Perhaps the same Adam also married Helen Dodds in Wilton in 1740, their children including: Helen (b.1742); Isabel (b.1744); and Thomas (b.1747). The witnesses in 1728 were Thomas Dodson and Francis Allan. Adam (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: George (b.1739); and Isobell (b.1741). Adam (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1754); Abel (b.1758); and Simon (b.1762). Adam (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Beattie and their children included: John (b.1756); William (b.1759); Helen (b.1761); Adam (b.1766); James (b.1769); and James (again, b.1775). Adam (18th C.) paid the cart tax in 1791, when he was living at Tandlaw in Wilton Parish. He could be the Adam whose unnamed son was baptised in 1782. Adam (18th C.) servant at Stobs in 1794, when he was working for Sir William Elliott. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnfoot on Ale, recorded as owner of 3

farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Burnmouth in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Adam (1736/7–1806) tenant farmer at Demainholm in Castleton Parish. He is recorded at Demainholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (separately from Adam in Nether Burnmouth). He married Betty Wilson, who died at Fairloans in 1777, aged 32. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Adam (1761–1818) eldest son of Hobkirk Schoolmaster William. He was brother of postmaster Robert and dux of Hawick Grammar School in 1777, before going to Edinburgh University. In 1777 he was the last person to carry a colour, other than the official town Standard, at the Common Riding (probably the 1744 flag preserved in the Museum). He was engaged as an instructor to the Robson-Scotts of Belford and for 3 years to the family of the cousin of Dr. Charters (of Wilton), Adm. Greig (whose son would marry Mary Somerville); he was apparently specifically recommended as tutor by Dr. Charters. He accompanied Greig to Russia, where he achieved distinction in the Imperial Government of Alexander I, becoming Senior mining Director of the Olonets Ironworks at Petrozavodsk and then Chief of their St. Petersburg works, where cannons and ammunition were made, as well as ironwork for civic buildings. He had travelled to Britain to bring to Russia Charles Gascoigne, who was manager of the Carron ironworks, and took over from Gascoigne after his death in 1806. In Russia he adopted the middle name ‘Vasilevich’ (for ‘son of William’). It is said that he had a ‘sincere concern for the welfare of the peasants assigned to the Olonets works’, and in 1882 his daughter-in-law willed 3000 roubles in his memory to benefit the poor associated with the factory. He married Isabella, daughter of Dr. Lindsay of Jedburgh, who had attracted the attention of Burns when he visited there, and through her became for a while proprietor of Mary Queen of Scots House. The marriage took place a mere 24 days after she last saw Burns, apparently having suffered criticism locally for her ‘easy manners’ with the celebrated poet. Their elder son Robert Lindsay (known as Roman Adamovich) became Director-General of the Imperial Mint in St. Petersburg, while their younger son John (known as Ivan Adamovich) was in the Russian service. There were also 2 other children, probably daughters (note that there was an Ann born to Adam and Alexandra in St. Petersburg in 1805 and a John born to the same parents in 1807). He probably married a second time, and it is said that that the Emperor bestowed a pension on his widow and 2 daughters. He forbade one of his daughters from marrying Count Nesselrode because of religious scruples. He died after catching a cold when returning from St. Petersburg to Petrozavodsk. He is commemorated in Hobkirk kirkyard along with his parents. He was buried in St. Petersburg, where his gravesite is lost, but the house he lived in survives. Adam ‘Adie’ (d.c.2000) ran the family department store. He was also sponsor of the Hawick Commemorative Quilt. Alan (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alanum filium Willelmi Armstrang’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands appeared to be at ‘Milleburn’ in Westmorland. Albine (17th C.) tenant in Dykecroft in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. It is unclear if his forename was a pet form of some other name. Alexander (c.1262–bef. 1320) 1st Laird of Mangerton. He has sometimes been identified with his contemporary, Alexander, Prince of Scotland, son of King Alexander III, but this seems unlikely. His children included Richard, William and Alexander (who succeeded). Alexander of Mangerton (d.1320) son of Alexander, he was the 2nd Laird. His sons included Alexander (who succeeded), John (who died at Otterburn), Gilbert (Canon of Moray) and Adam. He was murdered at Hermitage Castle by Lord Soulis, as commemorated by the Milnholm Cross. He was buried at Ettleton Kirkyard. Alexander of Mangerton (d.1398) son of Alexander, he was the 3rd Laird (however, the long passage of time since the previous Laird seems unlikely, so there may well have been another generation here). He is recorded in the margin as the owner of Mangerton on the c.1376 rental roll for Liddesdale, his name being listed as ‘Alyxandir Armysstrand’. He was also noted as Laird of Mangerton in 1378. He was accused of stealing cows in 1394/5. In 1398 he was a bondsman for the Earl of Douglas. His sons included Archibald (who succeeded), David, Geoffrey and Rowland. Alexander of Mangerton (d.c.1510) son of Thomas, he was the 6th Laird. He was accused of stealing cows at Jedburgh in 1494/5. Either he or another Alexander was recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; he was listed right after Thomas and before Robert, Archibald, Andrew and William. He is probably the Alexander who was one of the 9 Liddesdale men who accompanied Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Edinburgh to swear to keep the peace in 1510. It is said that his 7 sons are represented in the branches of the oak tree on the family shield of the time. They are: Thomas, who succeeded; Johnnie of Gilnockie, who was killed at Caerlenrig; George of Barnglies; Robert of Whithaugh; Alexander Andro; Christopher; and William. His gravestone is in Ettleton Kirkyard. Alexander (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from another Alexander and right after Patrick, to whom he may have been closely related. Alexander ‘Ekie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1532 at ‘Glengillis’, which is probably the same place as ‘Chingills’ or ‘Gingills’ in Ewesdale. He may be an ancestor of Alexander of Gingills recorded around 50 years later. Alexander ‘Evil-will Sandy’ or ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’ (16th C.) listed as one of the men responsible for the theft of 100 cattle from the lands of Craik in 1535. His name is recorded as ‘Evil-will Sandy’. He was also involved with the burning of Howpasley later that same year, as well as the theft of 60 cows from there, assisted by Simon, Thomas alias Greenshields, and Robert Henderson, called ‘Cheese-wame’. He was referred to as ‘a sworn Englishman’ in the conviction of Simon for assisting him (although he seems more likely to have been from Liddesdale or the Debateable Land). He is probably the same man known as ‘Ill Will Sandy’ who was said to be ancestor of Kinmont Willie (and probably his father). The 1583 letter from the English wardens recording the men of Liddesdale gives a list of ‘The Armeestronges that came of offspringe of ill Wills Sandy’, including ‘Eye’ of ‘Waddusles’; Willie, who lived in England; David; Sandy; Sandy’s Christie; Kinmont Willie; Sandy’s Ringan; ‘Sandy’s Archie; Sandy’s ‘Forge’; Jock ‘Castills’; Jock ‘Walls’; Dave of Canonbie; Willie; Jamie; John ‘Skinabake’; Tom and George of Rowenborne; and several of their sons. It is hard top tell which of these were sons, and which were nephews, etc. The fact that this is ‘ill Wills Sandy’ suggests that he was son of ‘Ill Will’, i.e. William, who was of Chingills. It is claimed that he had 7 sons: Ninian of Ralton (although this is probably ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ and unconnected with Ralton); Kinmont Willie; Christopher of the Gingles; Tom of the Gingles; Hector of the Gingles; Andrew of the Gingles in Kirkton; and Archie of the Gingles (who is more likely to be ‘Sandy’s Archie’ and not connected with Gingles). He also had a daughter who married ‘Gorth’ (probably George) Graham from the English side. It is possible he was the Sandy who accompanied Thomas Dacre, as well as Scotsmen Andrew Bell, ‘Will the flagon’ and others in burning Dumfries in 1542 (perhaps in reprisal for an earlier raid). Archibald and Ninian, brothers if Kinmont Willie, are recorded in 1569, and these 3 seems likely to have been among his sons. Kinmont Willie’s brothers Archie and ‘Fergy’ are recorded in 1574, and hence he had at least one more son. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Jenkin and Archibald. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. Perhaps the same Alexander was accused along with Ivings and Bells of killing 2 English Grahams on another raid. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (16th C.) listed in an English record of 1541, where he was ‘at Monkyk…in Liddersdell’ and said to have reset Thomas Waugh, George Waugh, George Purdom and Jamie Purdom, English rebels. He is probably the Alexander of ‘Monkbehirst’ mentioned in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569 and probably lived at Mumbiehirst near Canonbie. It is possible he is the proprietor of Mumbiehirst who was said (by William Scott in ‘Beauties of the Border’) to have married a daughter of Walter Scott of Branxholme; having beaten his new bride, she ran back to her parents, wherupon (in an act that seems inexplicable by modern standards) the Laird of Branxholme whipped his own daughter himself, saying ‘Since Mumbiehirst has had the impudence to whip my daughter, I will whip his wife’. Alexander (16th C.) nephew of ‘Braid’ Christopher. He is recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Anton, Thomas and John, when Englishman Henry Storie was killed. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with ‘Antony’, when they were said to be English fugitives reset by George ‘Go Wi Him’. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Carglass, ‘Siselscheillis’ and Over Foulwood in 1541. He may have been son of ‘Evil-will Sandy’. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Alexander of

Gingills (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Aly Armstrang, sone to Andro Armstrang of the Glyn-gilliss’ among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell and stop their feud with the Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with Thomas of Gingills, recorded as ‘Eckkie Armestrangre’. He was recorded as ‘Gyn Gill’, i.e. probably ‘Chingills’ in the 1585 remission received by a long list of men in Dunfriesshire in 1585 (perhaps related to the raid on Stirling). His son Andrew is also listed, as well as many other Armstrongs to whom they were probably related. He may be the same ‘Ecki gingles’ recorded on the west side of the Ewes valley in Sandison’s c.1590 map, opposite ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’, and also the ‘Ekke of the Gyn-gills’ recorded among Border chiefs of Ewesdale in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) son of Abra-mand threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was involved in the res-guing his brother Francis) listed in 1609 for harassing ‘callit of Kynmont’ is among several men (includ-ing ‘Sandy of Rowanburne’ among fugitives of the West Marches who were wanted for the killing of the English Warden, Sir John Carmichael. He was tried in 1606 for his involvement in the murder of Carmichael. He was probably related to the ‘Will of Rowanburn’ who was executed in 1605. He was found guilty of taking part in this murder, as well as theft and resetting, and sentenced to hanging at the Market Cross in Edinburgh. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives in 1606. He was recorded as ‘Sandy Armestronge son to Hebbe’. It was said that he and Buccleuch ‘was the first that ever brake the hole and come in about Kinnmont’. Probably the same man is ‘Sandie Armestrange called Hebbies Sandie’ in 1592 when complained about by Rout-ledge of ‘Comecrocke’ for stealing his livestock; his servant Willie Waugh was also named, along with Fergus’ Willie of ‘Kirkleheade’. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 when there was a complaint against him, along with Robert Elliot of Thorlieshope, Henry Nixon of Killford and Hob Armstrong, for a raid on ‘Ellinghamerigge’ in England. He was referred to as being called Henxie amiser’, but Scott of Buccleuch argued ‘that there is not such a persoune’. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) father of Ninian, who was father of Thomas, hanged in 1601 for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches. He may have been the son of Kinnmont Willie recorded in 1585. One account of the murder of Carmichael refers to him as a brother of Kinnmont Willie and also known as ‘Sandies Ringand’ (but this was surely Alexander’s son). Alexander ‘Rob’s Sandy’ (d.1605) recorded in an English letter of 1601 listing Arm stron ands and others of the West Marches who were fuggitives for the slaughter of the Warden Sir John Carmichael. He was mentioned again in 1605 as ‘Robert Sandie’, captured by William Taylor and other Englishmen. He is probably the Alexander who was executed in Dumfries for the killing of Sir John Carmichael. Alexander ‘Geordie’s Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned by Lord Scrope in 1601 as a Scotsman who reset some of the men who killed Sir John Carmichael. He was a fugitive at that time. He was also accused of resetting ‘Sandies Rynyon and his bayrns’, who burned a mill of the Johnstone’s and raided ‘Bengall’. Alexander ‘Sandy of Rowanburn’ (d.c.1606) listed in an English letter of 1601 as ‘lang Sandy Armstrang in Rowanburne’ among fugitives of the West Marches who were wanted for the killing of the English Warden, Sir John Carmichael. He was tried in 1606 for his involvement in the murder of Carmichael. He was probably related to the ‘Will of Rowanburn’ who was executed in 1605. He was found guilty of taking part in this murder, as well as theft and reset, and sentenced to hanging at the Market Cross in Edinburgh. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives in 1606. He was recorded as ‘Sandy Armestrange, brother of Catgill’, so perhaps he was brother of George. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘son of Catgill’ among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles in 1605. Presumably he was different from the Sandy, who was brother of Catgill. Alexander of Roan (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. He was listed as ‘brother of the young Laird of Quhitauch’, and so may have been brother of Lancelot of Whithaugh and hence son of Simon. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘in Walls’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. It is unclear where this ‘Wells’ or ‘Walls’ was, but the other Armstrongs listed were from Liddesdale and Canonbie areas. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of Francis and grandson of Kinmont Willie. He was recorded in 1622 as ‘sone to Francis Armstrang, callit of Kinmonth’ when he appeared as cautioner for Grahams in Canonbie. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a fugitive in 1622, when he was ‘callit Winterhoipheid’. Andrew and Adie Beattie, his brother-in-laws, were accused of resetting him. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Harden in Liddesdale. In 1623 he and James Glendinning in Byreholm entered John Armstrong (called ‘of Powsholme’) to the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He and Lancie of Whithaugh also entered John ‘callit pousholme’. Perhaps the same Sandy was listed in 1632 along with ‘Will in the Mylne’ as possessor of the lands of Nether Harden in Liddesdale. Alexander (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the farm of ‘Willlock’ (probably Woolhope) in Liddesdale in 1632. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Ettletonside and Potterlamport. Alexander (17th C.) tenant in Dawstonburn in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert was also listed there and so presumably a close relative. He could be the Alexander, resident of Dawstontown who was rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session in 1699, along with his nephew William, for travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath. Alexander ‘Sookin Sandy’ (18th/19th C.) brother of Muckle Jock, ‘the Cout o Keilder’. He is said to have been suckled by his mother until the age of 20, hence the nickname. He was also known for being very strong. One story about him is that when his companions got him angry he picked them up one by one, and threw them out, saying ‘I’ll let you see what mother’s milk can do’. Alexander (b.1784/5) from England, he was a farm labourer. In 1841 he was living at Outerside in Robertson Parish, with his wife Margaret (from Castleton) and children Magdalene and Adam. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Knowesouth in Bedrule Parish and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Mossburnford in Oxnam Parish. Alexander (b.c.1785) farm labourer living at Craikhope in 1841. His children included: Hannah, who married Thomas Glendinning in 1840; Georgina; and Helen. Alexander ‘Elec’, ‘the Dubber’ (1929– ) painter decorator in Hawick. Andrew of Chingills (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He was referred to as ‘Andro of the Gingles’ and similar, recorded in 1494 when he was accused of stealing cows along with his father. Andrew (15th C.) son of Andrew. He was recorded among men of Liddesdale (including many Armstrongs) who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Andrew (16th C.) son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh. In 1536 he had a letter of gift for the estate of the deceased Simon of Whithaugh, along with David, called ‘Lady’ and David’s brother Martin. He could be the ‘Andro Armstrang’, listed in 1541 along with Fosters and others, accused of being on a raid to ‘Dermaynstedes’ in which an Englishman was killed. Andrew ‘Reid Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid with ‘Georgy ga with hym’, ‘Auld’ John Gray and about 20 others. They were said to have raided a farm in Gilsland and killed Wat Atkinson. He was surely related to the later ‘Reid Andro’ (if not the same man). Andrew ‘Andro’ (16th C.) son of ‘Thom of Gogillis’, perhaps the Thomas of Chingills recorded in the 1550s. In 1569 he was pledge for himself, his brother Thomas, his son Hector and nephew Willie, along with their children, tenants and servants, and for Ninian of the Bush, as well as the Littles of Meikledale. He is probably the ‘Andro of the Gygillis’ whose tenants were excepted from the pledge given for the Littles in Eskdale in 1569. Also in 1569 Tom Scott ‘callit the Stowir’ was a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale, except those ‘under Andro Armstrangis plege of Gygillis’: this suggests he was from Gygills in Ewesdale (and not Chingills in Liddesdale). He is probably the Andrew ‘of the Gygillis’ whose son Hob is recorded in 1573. In 1574 he was ‘Andro Armstrang of the Gygillis’ when obliged to remain in ward with Hugh, Lord Somerville. In 1580 he was warded by Alexander Ogilvie of Boyne.

when ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh for rieving, along with other Armstrongs, Elliots and Nixons. Tom, son of Andrew ‘of Gyngillis’ is recorded in a remission of 1585 for many men in Dumfriesshire. He was probably the ‘Andro’ whose son ‘Aly’ was mentioned in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. Probably the same ‘Andrew of the Gyngils’ is listed along with ‘Ekke of the Gyngils’ and ‘Thome of Glendoning’ among Ewesdale chiefs on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. Andrew ‘Will’s Andro’ (16th C.) listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘Andro Armstrong callit Willis Andro’. Presumably his father was Will, but which one is unclear. Andrew ‘Reid Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1576 when there was a pledge for him before the Privy Council, stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was ‘Andro Armstrong, callit Reid Andro in Ellrig’, with cautioners John Johnstone of that Ilk and Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His farm was likely to be Ellrig in the upper Borthwick valley (although there are other possibilities). In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. Probably the same ‘Reid Andro’ is recorded in 1580/1 along with ‘Litill Andro’ Graham, when a man in Selkirk complained that if the Bailies there had apprehended the 2 men and subsequently released them, then the Bailies would be responsible if he came to harm. He is probably the ‘Andro Armestrang of the Gingillis’ whose son Hekie was recorded in 1584/5. He and a near relative Robert are probably the ‘Andrew and ‘red nebb’ Hob Armstrong’ listed among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590. It seems likely he is the ‘Andro Armestrang of the Gyngillis’ whose son ‘Hekke’ was held in Blackness Castle in 1569, as pledge for him, his brother Tom and ‘Tom’s son Willie; however, there may be confusion here with Andrew of Chingills. Andrew ‘Lang Andro’ (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 as tenant in ‘the Hairlaw’, which was probably Harelaw near Canonicie. It was re-stated at the Privy Council that he was to remain in ward with Patrik Kynynmouth of Craighall, with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk, as caution. However, he ‘hes brokin and es-chapit furth of his said ward’, and hence his cautioner was liable for the amount of £2000. In 1578/9 his son Edward was to be entered by Lord Maxwell. Presumably the same man was recorded in 1583 as ‘Andrew Armestrange of the Harlawe’. He was probably brother or other close relative of Hector of Harelaw. Andrew ‘the Lady’s Andro’ (16th/17th C.) probably son of Lanceloet of Whithaugh. He is listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, with his brothers Archie and Francis also named. He could also be the Andro, son of Lancelot of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. In 1587/8 he was ‘Andro Armestronge of Whithaugh’ when accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. He is recorded as son of the Laird of Whithaugh when accused along with his brothers Francis and Simon of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England, burning 25 houses and stealing £1000 worth of goods. He could be the Andrew listed along with John of Whithaugh and ‘Hob of Whithawghge son to John Eamont of Hillhouse’ when they were complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England in 1588. In 1590 he and his brother Francis, ‘sons to the laird of Why-hawgh’, were accused of an attack on ‘Todborne Steile’, stealing livestock and gear, and maiming some Englishmen. He is probably also the Andrew ‘son to the Larde of Whithawghge’ listed first among Armstrongs (including his brothers Francis and John) and Elliots complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Along with his father, the old Laird of Whithaugh, he surrendered to the Warden and appeared before the King in Jedburgh in 1592. He is probably the same man as Andrew of Whithaugh listed in 1601 in a letter for the English Warden as one of the ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’; his brothers Francis and John are also listed, all ‘sons to the auld laird of Whithawghge’. His brother Archibald is also recorded in an English letter of 1606. He may be the Andrew who was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed in 1606/7 by the Earl of Dunbar. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as a ‘domestik servand’ of Francie Armstrong, son of the Laird of Whithaugh. They were accused of being among about a dozen people who raided the farm of Ellrig, owned at that time by the Countess of Bothwell. The fact that there was a man called ‘Reid Andro in Eilrig’ at about the same time may not be a coincidence. He may be the Andrew listed along with Francis of Whitaugh among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. Andrew of Kirkton (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside. It is unclear where this Kirkton was, but perhaps the same as ‘Kirktonhill’. He may be the ‘Reade Androwe Armstrange of Kirkhill’ who signed the 1584 bon of assurance with the English Wardens, along with ‘Sim’s Tom’. In 1607 he was cautioner for James of Canonbie. He may be the same as Andrew of Kirkton recorded in 1616. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in the comprehensive remission of 1585 as being brother of Christie in ‘Carron’, which was probably near Langholm. His brothers Quentin and Geordie are also listed, as well as his son Jock. Later in the list comes ‘Jame Armeis-trange of Karrono’, who is probably another close relative. Andrew ‘Ingram’s Andro’ (16th C.) cited in 1591 among Armstrongs accused of the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’; he is recorded as ‘Andrew Armestrong alias Ingrams Andro’. He may have been relayed to ‘Anton’s Edward’, ‘Andro’s Will’ and others who were also listed. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as ‘Andro Armstrong the bundgell’, and he is listed along with ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, as well as Hendersons and Elliots of Falsush and Burnhead. Probably the same man is ‘the Bungell’ recorded in 1590, with his given as ‘the Bungell’ and ‘Bungell’, with the first name left blank in the document; this suggests perhaps that his nickname was so ingrained that it was not clear what his first name was! Other Armstrongs listed with him in 1590 include Davie ‘Bangtail’ and John of Hollows, who may have been close relatives. It is unclear what his nickname meant, although John Jamieson notes the word ‘bunjell’ meaning a bundle. Andrew (d.1606) recorded as ‘bastard son to Will of Kynmont’ when he was listed among men executed by the Borders Commission in October 1606. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He was recorded being ‘in Hoilhous’, which was probably Hollows. Andrew (16th C.) acquitted of the murder of James Somerville in ‘Eirdhoussis’ along with other Armstrongs in 1609. He is recorded as ‘Andro Armestrong of the Langholme’. Others mentioned are ‘Ebbie’ of ‘Kirktonhill’, James of Canonbie, Thomas, called ‘the Merchand’ and John Murray, miller in ‘the Cruikis’. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘Andro Armestrang, called the Lord’ in 1611 when Archie Elliot of Clintwood acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Andro of the Kirkton’ in 1605 when his brother Jamie was declared a fugitive in 1604. In 1606 his brother Thomas was also declared a fugitive. He was ‘Andro Armestrang of Kirkton’ in 1611 when he was cautioner for his brothers ‘Thom, Jok, and Lancie’, that they would leave Scotland. He was also recorded in 1616 as ‘of the Kirkton’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. This was probably the Kirkton near Sorbie. He could be the same man as Andrew of Kirkton, recorded in 1583. William, younger of Kirkton, recorded in 1641, could be his son. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as ‘Quhythauche’ when he and Archie Colthart ‘in Quheilrig’ were accused of stealing lambs from ‘Partburne’ at the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was found guilty and ordered to be branded on the cheek. He was presumably related to the Armstrongs of Whitaugh, perhaps son of the earlier Andrew. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded at Lairhope in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Andrew, Eq. Foot Guards’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the Andrew who became Assistant Surgeon in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards in 1811, served at Waterloo, was Battalion Surgeon from 1824 and died in 1828. Ann (18th/19th C.) listed as a baker and flour dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the ‘A. Armstrong, baker, Hawick’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Anthony (16th C.) listed as ‘Anton’ or ‘Antony’, brother of Ingram of the Graynys’ in 1541. They were among English rebels who were reset on the Scottish side, in their case by Hector Armstrong in Tweeden; Christie was also mentioned, and may have been another brother or close relative. The lands mentioned were probably ‘the Greens’, or perhaps ‘Greena’. In 1541 he was described as ‘omne Anto-n Armstrong, Inglishman, rebell and fled furthe of Gillesland, when my Lorde of Cumbreronde was warden, and contynewed sence in Lidders-dell, a grete offender agaynst Inglishmen’. son of Alexander, he was the 5th Laird. How-the long span of time suggests there must have been other Lairds in the early 1400s. He is probably the Archibald who witnessed a notorial instrument for Scott of Buccleuch in 1456 (where he is listed right after David of Sorbie, who was probably a close relative). He could be the Archibald, who, along with David and also John Routlege, gave pladges in 1471 that Wal-the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. In 1493 Walter Robson of Harden came into the King’s will for communing with him, since he was already ‘at the horn’. Perhaps the same Archibald was listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. In 1502 probably the same Archibald was mentioned in a remission for David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, as being involved in a raid on the tenants of Minto; this also involved Ninian Armstrong (probably a relative), David Turnbull of Bonchester ‘and other Taitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. He is proba-ably also the Archibald mentioned in 1502 as one of ‘the Kingis Rebels’ along with Ninian and also William Scott, when Adam Scott in ‘Hawches-teris’ (probably Highchesters) had a remission for associating with them. And in 1502 Adam Turnbull ‘in Hornishole’ had remission for associating with him and Ninian. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Jenkin and Alexander. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. He is presumably not the same man as Archibald of Mangerton. Perhaps the same Archibald is also listed in 1541 along with Fosters accused of raiding ‘Thornymore’ in Gilsland and murdering a woman. And probably the same Archibald was listed along with Ringan, Simon and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid; they may all have been brothers (although the wording is ambiguous). Archibald (d.c.1570) 8th Laird of Mangerto-ton, son of Thomas. He is ‘Arche Armstronge, the yonge Larde of Mangerston’ listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this was while his fa-ter was probably still alive. In 1547 he captured Lord Johnstone for the English. He is probably the Archibald who, along with George, witnessed a bond in 1548 by Ninian and Archibald Nixon to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferneihirst. In 1548/9 he was ‘younger of Mangertooun’ when he had a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferneihirst and his cousin George Ker to enter ‘John Cragall’ as a prisoner. Also in 1548/9 he and his father Thomas had another bond to enter the same 2 Fosters as prisoners, as well as to re-enter their servants ‘Georde Armstrang and Gorde his son’ as well as ‘Thom Henderson’. He succeeded his father around 1549. In 1569 he entered as pledge for himself, his brothers, tenants and servants, as well as for ‘Reid Sym’, Simon ‘the Feid’, John of Bankhead and other Armstrongs (with the Laird’s Jock and Christie of the Side excepted), the Laird of Drumlanrig being surety; this suguggest that he died after 1569, and not around 1558, as suggested in some genealogies. Also in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lance of Whithaugh, to ‘Rowie Forester’ (who was probably the deputy English Warden), ‘that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre’. Additionally in 1569 he and Martin Elliot of Braidlie promised to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorlieshope. His sons included: Simon, who succeeded; Ninian, probably the ‘Laird’s Ringan’, recorded in the 1580s, who lived at Thorniwhats; and ‘Rowe’, probably the ‘Laird’s Rowie’, who lived at Tarras-side. He may also have been father of the ‘Laird’s John’ (but not the contemporary ‘Laird’s Jock’, who appears to be a different man), whose son Archibald was held in ward in 1587 as a pledge for all the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh;

if so then he also had a daughter who married

Lancelot of Whithaugh (since she was sister to the ‘Laird’s John’). Simon of Mangerton had a brother Francis, who was therefore presumably another son. Archibald ‘Rigane’s Archie’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whithalows in 1583. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringan. Archibald ‘Archie’ of Arkleton (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with George, to whom he was surely related. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Westburnflat (16th C.) recorded by Monipennie in his c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is listed under the heading ‘Merietown Quarter’, along with ‘Wanton Sim’ of Whithlawside and ‘Will of Powderlanpat’. Archibald ‘Sandy’s Archie’ (16th C.) son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, so brother of Kimmont Willie, and several others. He is probably the Archibald listed in 1569 along with Ninian, as brothers of ‘Will of Kynmouth’. In 1574 he and ‘Fergy’, both brothers of Kimmont Willie, were accused of raiding farms belonging to Thomas Johnstone of Craigburn, stealing horses and goods, and severely injuring one man; not appearing, they were denounced as rebels. He was listed in 1582 among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582, where he was stated to be brother of Sandy’s Ninian. He is listed in 1583 among the descendants of Sandy. He may be the ‘Alexanders Archie, servant to Syme of Whithaugh’ listed among Armstrongs and others accused of a raid on the tenants of the Laird of Bellister in 1587. Perhaps the same man was ‘Alexanders Arche’ in 1590 accused by William ‘Loren’ of a raid, along with other Armstrongs and Elliot. He is probably the ‘Alexanders Arche’ accused in 1590, along with other Armstrongs, of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. He could be the same man as ‘the Merchant’. He may also be the same as ‘Alexander’s Archie’ who was listed (along with his unnamed brother) in an English letter of 1601 among the Armstrongs who were outlaws under the Laird of Buckluch; he was there said to be ‘of the house of Whithauge’. Archibald ‘Archie’, ‘the Merchant’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as ‘Archie Armstrang, Marcheand’ in a long list of men under Lord Maxwell who were given remission for their past crimes. He is listed just before ‘Kimmont Willie’, perhaps suggesting a close connection. The same Archie ‘the Marcheand’ is listed as being in ‘the Hoilhouse’ (i.e. Hollows) when tried in 1605 along with other Armstrongs and followers for burning the House of Langholm and theft in 1581; John is also listed in the same place, and so was possibly a near relative. The charges against him were not pursued. Presumably the same Archibald was listed as being ‘callit the merchant in Thoniequhatis’ in 1607, among a list of Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the appointees of the King from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. Thomas ‘callit the Mercheand’ is recorded in 1609, and surely a relative. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dunfriesshire. He is listed as being ‘in Tarkina’, which is possibly ‘Tarcoon’ near Canonbie. Will ‘in Teikmie’ is also listed, possibly at the same location. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell and end their feud with the Elliots of Ewesdale. He was recorded with his brother as ‘Archie Armstrong and George Armstrong of Arkiltoun, brether’. He is also listed in the long remission of 1585 as ‘Lord Archie Armetrang in Arkiltoun’, along with his son John. The ‘Lord’ must have been a nickname of some sort. ‘Geordie’ (probably his brother) was also listed as being in Arkiltoun, along with his sons. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrews son’ among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. His horse was killed in the raid and so he took a ‘lyrehorse’. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Whithaugh (16th C.) recorded as having a tower in Ewesdale on Sandison’s c.1590 (but based on earlier information) map of the Debateable Land. He is listed as ‘Archie of whithauge’ roughly where Fiddleton is located, perhaps at the modern farm of Burnfoot. Although his surname is not given, it seems likely he was an Armstrong. He is probably the Archie, 2nd son of the Laird of Whithaugh, who was put in ward with Sir David Wemyss, to replace Ninian of Tweeden, as pledge for ‘the gang of Quhithauch’; the order was confirmed by the Regent in 1577 and King James in 1579. He is presumably also the Archie, son of Lancie of Whithaugh, who was released from ward in Creich in 1579, to be replaced by his brother Francie. He could also be the Archie, son of Lancie of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the ‘Arche Armstronge his brother’ listed in 1583 after the young Laird of Whithaugh (and hence son of Lancie). Probably the same man was ‘Arche’, son to the ‘owld laird of Whithaugh’ in 1590 when listed among other Armstrongs accused of stealing livestock. from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. Perhaps the same man was the Archibald brother of Andrew called ‘Whithaugh’ who was the subject of complaints by the English Commissioners in 1606 that he had stolen cattle. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son of the ‘Laird’s John’ and grandson of the Laird of Mangerton, probably Archibald. In 1587 Lancelot of Whithaugh requested that he be held in ward as a pledge for all the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. He was described by Lancelot as ‘neyr cowsein, and my wyisis brother sone’. The request was accepted in a letter from James VI, and he was thus held in Wemyss Castle. A few months later he was exchanged with John, son to Lancelot of Whithaugh. He could be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald of Flascolme (16th/17th C.) listed among those Armstrongs and followers tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House, taking Herbert Maxwell prisoner and stealing cattle in 1581. He was Laird of the lands at Flask, in the Ewes valley. He was found guilty along with Ingram ‘in Inzieholme’, with Archibald Beattie, Burgess of Dumfries acting as surety for him. In 1607 he was ‘of Flasolme and Barnegleis’ when listed among Armstrongs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands.

Archibald ‘Whitehead’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in an English letter of 1601, listing ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’. He is listed as ‘Archie Armstrong called whitehead’, along with his brothers ‘John and Sym’ and several additional Armstrongs who are referred to as ‘of the house of Whithaugh’. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Archies and ‘Whitehead’ may even be an error for ‘Whithaugh’. Archibald ‘Sim’s Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) part of a bond of caution along with other Elliots in 1581, entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the ‘haill gang of Park’. Probably the same Sim’s Archie is recorded in 1596 among men complained about by the English Warden for raids into England. This was along with several other Armstrongs. He is also listed in 1601 in a letter of the English Warden among several Armstrongs and others of Liddesdale. It is unclear which Simon might have been his father. Archibald (d.c.1601) Scotsman executed in England, being described as ‘Ebbies Arche’ in 1601. It is unclear which ‘Ebbie’ may have been his father. He was said by Lord Scrope to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie and to have committed many murders of Englishmen. Archibald ‘Nan’s Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) tried in 1605 along with several other Armstrongs and supporters for burning Langholm House and other crimes. ‘Nanse Christie’ is also listed, so probably his brother. His name appears as ‘Nanse Archie’ and ‘Aneis Archie’, so his mother may have been Agnes. The charges against him were not pursued. Archibald ‘Sim’s Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was called Sym’s Archie of Cowfeild’, and hence may have been related to the Armstrongs of Calfield. His son Christie was also listed as a fugitive. It is unclear if he was the same as the Sim’s Airchie recorded in 1581, 1596 and 1601. Archibald ‘Ker Hand’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. Archibald ‘Fair Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) accused in 1606 of the murder of Andrew Smith and cutting the nose off Thomas Tweedie. The other men charged were Ninian Armstrong of Tweeden and Andrew Henderson, servant of the Laird of Mangerton. Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk was surety for him. Archibald (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse. He was listed along with his father among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Archibald of Winterhopehead (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives. His son Willie was also listed. Archibald of the Side (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 as ‘Archie of the Syd’ when his son Jamie was listed among men declared as fugitives. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs of the Side. Archibald (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 among many Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the appointees of the King from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. He was recorded as ‘Archibald Armestrange, bruther to the umquhile Laird of Mangertoun in Brunschilboge and Mengertoun’. He was thus brother of a former Laird of Mangerton, although it is possible he is the same as Archibald, 10th Laird of Mangerton. Archibald (d.1606/7) 10th and last Laird of Mangerton. He probably succeeded his father Simon in 1583. He is probably the Laird of Mangerton who, along with the Laird of Whithaugh and their accomplices, was accused by the inhabitants of ‘Temmon’ in England of murdering 3 men, carrying off 10 others as prisoners and stealing 100 cattle and goods. He complained in turn about English attacks on his lands, including taking himself prisoner in the 1580s. He is probably the Laird listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 and on Moniipennie’s list of clan chiefs of about 1594. He is probably the Laird of Mangerton stated by an English informant to have been involved with the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1597 he was among Liddesdale chiefs demanded from the English Commissioners as hostages; however, he was never produced, despite the efforts of the Warden (Scott of Buccleuch) to capture him. In 1603 he rode with a group of about 200 Armstrongs and others on a raid into England. This was one of the last such cross-Border raids, and led to James VI coming down harshly on the Armstrongs. In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar. He was probably hanged in Edinburgh. His sons included Archibald ‘the Young Laird’ and William. ‘Rosie’, recorded in 1623 when someone was accused of stealing sheep from her tenants of Mangerton, may have been his widow. Archibald ‘the Young Laird’ (16th/17th C.) son of the last Laird of Mangerton. He was involved in the raid of 1603. He probably fled to England or Ireland after 1610. Archibald ‘Rowie’s Archie’ (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Justiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was ‘callit Rollies Archie, in Broomholime’ when accused of stealing horses. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded at the Justice Court of 1623 in Jedburgh. He was ‘callit Rakkes’ and caution for him, along with Francis ‘of Twiedane’ was given by Robert ‘Rakkes in Syde’, his uncle. He was also listed as being ‘callit Raccas’ when he and Francis ‘Tueden’ were acquitted of stealing livestock, while Abie ‘of ye Syd’ and Simon Elliot ‘Guyd’ were found guilty. He was presumably also related to John ‘Rakass’ who was recorded in 1585, as well as William ‘Rakkees’ also recorded in 1623. Archibald ‘Archie’ (17th C.) listed as ‘Archy Armstrong, called Hollas, who duelltt in the Mearburnheid ane hird to Hobby Rackes’ in 1633. He was apprehended when found in possession of a cow stolen from Englishman Arthur Foster. He was sent to Jedburgh, but released by that burgh and subsequently recaptured and taken to Carlisle Jail. It seems likely that ‘Hollas’ was ‘Hollows’, and hence that the was a descendent of the Armstrongs there. He may have lived near the head of the Muir Burn. Archibald ‘Archie’ (d.1672) court jester to James VI. It is said that he came from either Scotland or Cumberland. His first name suggests some connection with the Lairds of Mangerton. He may have first distinguished himself as a sheep-stealer, but by 1611 had a pension of 2 shillings a day as court jester. Outspoken in court, he was favoured by the King, but disliked by others. He was dismissed about 1637, but by then had built up a fortune. He became a money-lender in London, but later settled at Arthuret in Cumberland, possibly his birthplace. He was buried on April Fool’s Day. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Patie and their unnamed child was baptised in 1673. The witnesses were Michael Anderson in Hislop and Thomas Black. Archibald (17th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His surname appears to be ‘Archibald’, although perhaps corrected to ‘Armstrong’. Archibald (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gullenflatt & Greelholm’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name appears to be written ‘Arck’, but probably ‘Archibald’ is meant. He may have been related to the John and 2 Jameses who are also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) along with James he was tenant in Haughhead in Castleton Parish in 1697. They were rebuked, together with John Crozier, for not observing the Sabbath. He was surely related to the later Archibald, farmer at Heughhead. Archibald (1691/2–1757) tenant in Heughhead. He married Margaret Elliot, who died in 1773, aged 69. They are buried in Ettleton, next to Armstrongs from Burnmouth and Sorbietrees. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1745); Adam (b.1747); and Margaret (b.1749). Archibald (18th C.) tenant in Bowhill. In 1745 he was paid by the Burgh of Selkirk for timber. Archibald (1738/9–1821) tenant farmer in Sorbietrees. He is recorded at Sorbietrees in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dogs in 1797. He married Margaret Elliot, who died at Saughtrees in 1827, aged 89; she was daughter of William Elliot in Park. Their children included: James (1767/8–84); Helen (1770/1–1857); Janet (1775/6–80); and Margaret (1782/3–1817), who married butcher William Geddes. He died at Saughtrees and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery.
Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Kershopefoot Mill. His son Archibald (1704/5–24) is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably related to the earlier James, tenant in Kershopefoot. Archibald (b.c.1790) farmer at Leahaugh in Castleton Parish. He was listed as a ‘Dissenter’ in 1840 among heads of households and also recorded at Leahaugh in 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Jane, Elizabeth, Archibald (1826/7–44), Isabella, Andrew and William. Archibald (b.c.1807) draper, grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle. He was recorded as post-master, as well as grocer, spirit dealer and draper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 3 Douglas Square with Walter and Nicholas (probably father and uncle) and Helen (perhaps mother or aunt). Arthur (18th C.) bookseller in Hawick. In 1728 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. Robert Cunningham, who was minister of both Wilton and Hawick. Their son Robert was born in Kelso in 1729: this suggests that he had moved to Kelso by then. Arthur (b.1816/7) shepherd at ‘Grain’ in Castleton Parish in 1861. This is presumably the remote farmstead of Saughtree Grain. His wife was Elizabeth and he also lived with his mother Elizabeth Cowan, a young relative William Cowan, a servant and a lodger. He is probably related to the earlier shepherd at Grain, William. Arthur (20th C.) owner of the department store that bore his name It opened in 1962 and closed in 1993. Bartholomew (16th C.) joint tenant, along with Ninian, of the lands of Whisgills, Purvan and ‘Vtnomound’ (perhaps Burnmouth) on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. His son could be the ‘Bartillis Jonne’ listed in 1580. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton Mill who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. She could have been a daughter of James, who was farmer at Riccarton Mill. It is possible she was the Christian who was listed as ‘Ind.’ at Saughtree on the 1841 census and was an unmarried housekeeper at Teindside in 1851. Christian ‘Kitty’ (b.1797/8) toll-keeper at Riccarton Toll in 1841, 1851 and 1861. She was a widow and had daughters Ann, Margaret, Isabella (who married a Scott) and Christian. Her mother Mary Scott (nee Telfer) was still living at the age of 92. She is probably the Christian who died in Hawick in 1868, aged 72, and is buried at Ettleton Cemetery among the Armstrongs from Riccarton Mill. Christopher (16th C.) named first in a list of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on the farm at Craik in 1535. This suggests he was a prominent man among the clan at that time (since Thomas of Mangerton and others are also listed). His residence is not given, but his sons Archibald and Ninian are also listed. He may be the same ‘Cristallo Armstrong’ who was tenant of Pollach and ‘Toddellis’ in 1541, and the Christopher after whom the lands of Christie’s Hill (also recorded in 1541) was named. It is possible that he was the Christopher who was son of Alexander of Mangerton and brother of Thomas of Mangerton and Johnnie of Gilnockie – ‘God be wi’ thee, Kirsty, my brother, Lang live thou Laird o’ Mangetoun: Lang mayst thou dwell on the Border side, Or thou see thy brother ride up and down’ [CPM]. Christopher ‘Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when his ‘broder, sonnys’ Anton, Thomas, John and Alexander were accused of having been on a raid with other Scotsmen on ‘Wilyaven’ where Englishman Henry Storie was killed. He may also be the ‘Cryste Armstronge, brother to the said Anton’ who was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Christophers. Christopher (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as ‘Cristallo Armstrang’ when he was joint tenant with Simon in the lands of ‘Dalferno’. He could be the same as another Christopher of the time. Christopher (16th C.) recorded as ‘Cristello Armstrang’ in 1541 when he was tenant of Storiestead. He may have been related to John, Ninian or Hector, who were tenants of neighbouring farms. Perhaps the same ‘Cristello’ was also tenant of ‘Powis’ in 1541. Christopher ‘Christie’ of Barglles (16th C.) son of Johnnie of Gilnockie, he was also called ‘John’s Christie’. In 1552 he was appointed Bailie of the lands of ‘Barnglesche’ in the debateable lands. He may be the same as ‘Christy the Bwll’ who was subject of a bond of 1562 with Lancelot Whithaugh, to be presented to the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1562 he was appointed Keeper of Langholm Castle. He had a cautioner before the Privy Council in 1575 and was probably the ‘Cristie’ who made an action not to be molested in 1576. His son ‘Johnne Armstrang sone to Johnnes Cristie’ is recorded in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for his sons, tenants and servant, as well as several other Armstrongs; he is there ‘Cristell Armstrang of Barngles’. In 1575/6 he complained that Arthur Graham and others attacked the men farming for him at Barngles. In 1579 he requested that his pledge William ‘of Tarsumhill’ be released by the Laird of Fyntrie; his sons Christie and Rob were also mentioned. In 1579 there was a dispute between him and Lord Maxwell over lands; he was recorded there as ‘Cristie Armstreng of Barngleis, callit Johnnis Cristie’, showing that his father was John. In 1579 he appeared before the Privy Council in relation to a feud between his family and the Turnbulls of Bedrule; his son John ‘of Hoilhous’ was also mentioned, as were John ‘in Thorneyquhat’ and ‘Cristie Cavert’. In 1580/1 he had a bond that certain Littles should present themselves to answer for their crimes on both sides of the Border. His sons John’s Christie and ‘young Christie’, and servant Willie Irving, were part of a band that raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He is listed among the Armstrongs of Langholm in 1583 as ‘Creste Armestronge of Borganles’. In 1583 he and Johnstone of that Ikk were ordered ‘to deliver the place and fortalice of Langholm to Johnne, Earl of Mortoun’. He was probably the same ‘Cristie in Barngleis’, who was listed among the men under the superior Lord Maxwell who had a respite for their crimes in 1585. His ‘man, Christie Murray’ (presumably a servant) is also listed. He may be the ‘Christie Armstrong of Barnleyce’ complained about in 1600/1 for a raid on Scotby in England. He married Catherine, daughter of ‘Gorthe’ (probably George) Graham, called ‘Thomas Gorthe of Esk’ and his children included: John, ‘Jock o the Glen’; Christopher, ‘Young Christie o Barngles’; Robert, ‘Rowe’; William; Graham; and Gregory. He may be the Christopher ‘alias Barngleese’ killed by John Musgrave in 1606, but if so, must have been very old. He is mentioned in the ballad ‘Johnnie Armstrong’ – ‘And God be wi’ thee, Kirsty, my son, Whar thou sits on thy nurse’s knee; But and thou live this hunder year, Thy father’s better thou’l never be’ [CPM]. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Brumeholme’ in 1569 when he was held in Dupplin Castle. He was a pledge for the ‘Laird’s Rowie’, John, son of John’s Christie and Ninian of Wauchopedale. He was probably related to these men, as well as to other Armstrongs of Broomholm. Christopher (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Cristell Armistrang callit Cristellis Symon’; however, this seems likely to be confusion and he should be ‘Simon’s Christie’. Thomas, ‘brother to Mangerton’ was held in Castle Semple as pledge for him, as well as Simon and a son of ‘Reid Sym’. He could be the same as one of the other Christophers. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for him and his ‘brother’s son’ Robert. He is listed as ‘Cristie Armstrang of Auchingavill’. In 1582 James Douglas, Earl of Morton, was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce him and Robert. Christopher ‘Sandy’s Christie’ (16th C.) listed among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was apparently released by special warrant, later in 1580. He was also listed among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’ in an English warden’s letter of 1583. At that time he had a son called Christie, as well as 2 other sons. He is also listed as ‘Krystie’ on Monipennie’s compilation of Border chiefs, published about 1594; he is alongside Kinmont Willie under the heading ‘Sandis Barnes Armstrangs’ (i.e. the ‘bairns’ of Sandy). He had a daughter who married Rowie Foster (from England). He may be the ‘Cristie Armstrang brother’ listed along with ‘Will of Kynmonth’ and ‘Niniane Armstrang’ as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Armstrang’, who was a pledger held in St. Andrews Castle in 1569; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. Christopher of Langholm (16th C.) recorded in a list of Armstrongs of 1583 as ‘Creste Armestronge goodman of the Langholme castell’. He is also recorded as being in Langholm in 1585 when his sons Archie and Robert were among the huge number of men from Lord Maxwell’s territory who were given respite for their crimes. He may be the ‘Cristie’ who was warded to Lord Maxwell in 1580, along with ‘Rowe’ son of ‘Sandies Rinyeane’. It is possible he was the ‘Cristie of Langholme’ (surname not given) who along with ‘Andro of the Langholme and 3 other men were denounced as rebels in 1587 for killing 2 servants of Sir James Hamilton of Liberton, and stealing the horses and armour from about 20 others. He married a sister of Robert Graham, called ‘Robbie o the Field’. He must have been related to the younger Christopher of Langholme recorded in 1605. The Scottish Commissioners requested that the English ones hand him over in 1606. Christopher of the Side (16th C.) probably a son or nephew of the Laird of Mangerton. He is listed along with the Laird and the ‘Laird’s Jock’ in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs at the end of the 1500s. In 1569 he is ‘Cristie Armstrang of the Syde’ who, along with the Laird’s Jock, was excepted from the pledge made by Archibald of Mangerton for the whole of the Armstrongs. He is listed as ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ about the 1580s. It has been suggested that ‘Jock o the Side’ was his brother. Christopher ‘Paton’s Christie’ (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond with the English Wardens, on behalf of ‘hym selfe and his thre brother’. His name appear as ‘Pawtons Cristie Armestrange’. It is unclear which ‘Paton’ his father might have been. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Christies. Christopher (16th C.) listed in the comprehensive remission of 1585 as in ‘Carron’. ‘Quhintting Andro and Georgie Armstrangeis, brether’ are then listed, so probably he had brothers Quentin, Andrew and George. Christopher (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Armestranges Christie’, young Bowholme in 1596, among men the English Warden complained about for raiding over the Border. He was presumably connected with Bowholme. Christopher (d.1628) probably 2nd son of ‘John’s Christie’. He was referred to as ‘younger of Barniglies’. In 1582 he was accused of being in a band that raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope; he was listed as ‘callit young Cristie’, and stated to be brother of John’s Christie. In 1590 he was ‘young Christie of Barnigleshe’ when named among men accused of rieving from Willie Graham in Leven. In 1592 he was ‘younge Christie of Barneleishie’ when listed along with Will of Kinmont and others, accused of attacking Roger Bulman of ‘Skailby’ and stealing his livestock. He (or perhaps his father) was also ‘Christie Armestrang of Barneleish’ in 1592 when accused of being part of a raid on ‘th’Holme Coltram’, along with Will of Kinmont and Kimont’s Jock. He is probably the ‘Christine Armestrang of Barnegles’ who was at Dryfe Sands in 1593, as recorded on the ‘respite’ of 1594. He was referred to as ‘Kirstie of Barnegles’ and ‘Christie of Barneglish’ along with brother ‘Rob’ of Langholm when said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1605 there was a complaint against him by John, Lord Maxwell, with his cautioner being Sir James Johnstone. He was killed by John Musgrave, Captain of the English guard at Carlisle, ‘within his awin house of Barnegleise within Scotland, being a Scottishman, in his awin countrie, and not haveing fleed from England to Scotland’. He married the eldest sister of Thomas Carlston’s wife. Christopher ‘Nan’s Christie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as being in Hollows, along with Archie ‘the Merchant’ in the same place, when a group of Armstrongs and others were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House and other crimes. Another Archie in the group was called ‘Nanse Archie’ and so probably his brother. His name appears as ‘Nanse Christie’ and ‘Agnes Cristie’, so presumably his mother was Agnes. Charges against him were dropped. Christopher ‘Christie’ (b.1576/7) recorded as ‘sone to the Guidman of Langholme (Johnne Airmestrang)’ when a group of Armstrongs and supporters were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House etc. These crimes took place in 1581 when he was 4 years old, and hence he was let off for being a minor (and hence he was too young to be the same Christie in Langholm recorded in 1585). His brother appears to have been John, ‘in the Hoilhous’. The pair are probably the ‘frea the Langholm with him younge John and Kirste his brother’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. Christopher ‘Christie’ in Bankhead (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 among many Armstrongs and others who were had a court action against them for trying to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. Christopher ‘Christie’ (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘callit of Longholme in Bigholme and Turresfute’ in 1607 when he was among Armstrongs and others accused of trying to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. It is possible he is the ‘Bighames’ listed in 1596 as one of the 3 ‘Calfhills’ (probably Calfield) said to be involved with the rescue of Kinmont Willie, the others being ‘Jocke’ and ‘Ally, a bastard’; if so he was related to Jock of Calfield. Christopher ‘Christie’ of Howgillside (16th/17th C.) probably name of a man on the list of those not appearing at court in Jedburgh in 1611. His name is listed as ‘Kirstie of Howgilsyd’, with the surname not given. These were probably the lands of Howgill in Ewesdale where there were Armstrongs at about that time. Christopher of Sorbie (17th C.) recorded on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was presumably related to earlier Armstrongs of Sorbie. Christopher (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whitehaugh Mill in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Christopher (d.1820) Schoolmaster of Hawick Parish (or ‘English’) School, succeeding John Inglis in 1806. He also served as Session Clerk for the Parish. His brother was schoolmaster at Teviothead and he himselef helped prepare Tom Jenkins for Edinburgh University. He also published ‘A selection of rules and examples, &c. for the use of schools, etc.’ (1811). He died while still Schoolmaster. He may be the same as the ‘C. Armstrong’ who was a member of the Hawick

Curling Club in 1812. He probably married Tibbie, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Colin fictional character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘A foundling, brought up by Jean Kaishie – Cow Jean o’ the Mid Raw’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as tenant of Over Gubbislie, along with Thomas ‘de Merjantoun’, i.e. the Laird of Mangerton. He may thus have been Thomas’ brother, and possibly the same man as ‘Robert’ who was a joint tenant of Ralton and of Nether Gubbislie. Cuthbert ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Cuddie Armstrong of the Benkis’; his forename was probably a short form of ‘Cuthbert’ and his lands were likely to be Bankhouse near Langholm. His son Archibald was also listed among the fugitives. Also in 1605 ‘New-maid Ringan’ and Will of Rowanburn were convicted for resetting him and other rebels. David of Sorbie (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, carried out at Brauxholme for the Scotts. He is recorded as ‘David Armstrong de Sourby’. It is unclear how he was related to other Armstrongs of Ewesdale. Archibald was also listed right after him, and so possibly a near relative. He is one of the earliest known Armstrongs of Ewesdale. He could be the David, who, along with Archibald and also John Routlege, gave pladges in 1471 that Walter Routlege would appear at court in Selkirk. David (16th C.) recorded in ‘Elreg’ in 1533. This could be Eilrig in the Borthwick valley. He was a witness in Selkirk to a document relating to a murder at Sundhope. He may have been related to the later John and Andrew, who were also related to Eilrig. David (16th C.) son of Herbert ‘Habie’, he had a charter for the lands of Park in Ewesdale in 1535, after they were resigned by Robert, Lord Maxwell. Probably the same David, along with Ninian, had a ‘letter of reversion’ and ‘bond of manrent’ in 1528 with George, Lord Home, involving lands in Ewesdale. His son and heir Ninian had the original charter copied in 1566 in the presence of Alexander Lord Home (by which time he was deceased). David ‘the Lady’ (16th C.) listed in an English letter of 1525 as one of the chiefs of the Armstrongs, along with Sim the Laird and others, who were captured by the Earl of Angus. Along with his brother Martin, as well as Andrew, son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh, the King granted him the lands and goods of Simon in 1536. It seems likely he is the David who was a younger son of Johnnie of Gilhockie, and so his other brothers included Simon and Christopher. David (16th C.) probably resident of Kirkpatrick Parish in Dumfriesshire. His sons Thomas, Roland and William were killed in 1541 by a band of English Grazers and others. Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches, complained about this to his English counterparts. It is unclear how they were related to other branches of the family. David (16th C.) son of Thomas of Canonbie. In 1580 he was in ward with Adam Gordon of Auchenlindoun when ordered to appear before the Privy Council. He is also recorded in 1578 when he was held by Robert Keith, Commendator of Deer, with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. It is possible he was the same ‘Dave of Kannonby’ listed among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’ in 1583 (if so this would suggest that his father Thomas was a son of Sandy); he married ‘Pate’s George’ Graham’s daughter, and he had brothers William and Jamie. David of Alemoor (16th C.) recorded in 1573 and included in 1587 on a list of Border Lairds to be held responsible for surrendering tenants accused of disorder. It is unclear what his relationship was with the former owners, e.g. the Alemoors of that Ilk. It may be that he only held Easter Alemoor, since the Earl of Bothwell seems to have owned Wester Alemoor at this time. In 1573 he was to enter John Taylor, tenant in Alemoor, at the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. David ‘Dave’ of Whitlawside (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the near kin of Simon of Whitlawside. He was probably an uncle or brother of the Laird at that time. David ‘Bangtail’ (16th C.) referred to as ‘a notorius outlaw’ who was captured by William Fenwick of Wallington. He was accused of 8 separate crimes, but complained of being tried in England and that ‘the said Armstrong would kis the bar when he went from yt, and vow that never any Scot should be so brought in and dealt with again’. It is unclear exactly where he came from. In 1590 he was accused by the English Warden and Matthew Armstrong of stealing from ‘the Heatherie burne’; he is there ‘Bangtaile’, and others listed include John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’, a servant of the Laird of Mangerton. The same group (plus 2 servants of the Laird’s Jock) were also accused in 1590 of having stolen sheep from the same farm on a separate occasion. David ‘Braid Sword’ (16th C.) resident of Liddesdale. There was a complaint in 1597 against him, along with Lancelot and Francis of Whithaugh (to whom he hence may have been related) for a raid into England. His nickname is given as ‘bredsworde’. David (d.1604) son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’. He was convicted of involvement in the murder of John Johnston of ‘Tunnergarth’, and of Robert Currie and 3 masons at the ‘Oiseris-hous in the Lwn’ and burning the hostelry there. He was hanged in Edinburgh. David (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded being ‘called Capilgill’s Davie’, and hence was presumably related to other Armstrongs later associated with the same place. Probably the same man was ‘Davie Armstrang, Capitgill’s Davie’ declared as a fugitive in Peebles in 1605. David in Woodhouselee (16th/17th C.) son of Abraham. He was listed as being ‘in Wodisleis’ in 1607 when listed among Armstrongs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. Dorie (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Bowholme in 1623, when Thomas Carruthers was accused of stealing sheep from there. The name may be a short form of ‘Dorothy’, but that is unclear. Dorothy (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1724 the Minister had to talk to her about drunkenness, describing her as ‘a weak, silly woman, who seemed to be a person utterly incapable of Church discipline’ and stating that there was no point rebuking her in front of the congregation. Edmund (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Ewmuend Armstrang’. Along with his brothers Hector and George, they were accused of being responsible for burning and pilaging Borthwickshielis. Hector and George themselves acted as surety, suggesting that they were part of a prominent family branch. Edward (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 as son of ‘Langandro of the Hairlaw’. There was an obligation by Lord Maxwell to enter him before the Privy Council. In 1579 there was a warrent for his re-entry, since he was then in the ‘plege chauner of Drumfreis’ and would be released when the surety was found. Edward ‘Anton’s Edward’ (16th C.) son of Anthony, he lived on the English side. In 1591 he was among Armstrongs cited for the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’; he is recorded as ‘Eward Armstrong of Willyeavide in Gilisland alias Anthons Edward’. In 1595/6 Sir Ralph Evers wrote that ‘Antone Armestrange alias Antons Edward, has lately since my coming fled out of the West March into Liddesdale, and is offered living by Buccleuch’. It seems likely that this was an error and he was ‘Anton’s Edward’, not ‘Anthony’ himself. Elizabeth ‘Bet the Guard’ (19th C.) kept a cookshop at 57 or 59 High Street in the mid-19th century. She may be the Mrs. Armstrong whose property at about 59 High Street is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. She was listed as an ‘eating house keeper’ on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her nickname came from her previously being a domestic servant with the guard of the Jedburgh-Edinburgh mail coach. She told a story of how a scheming woman borrowed a whole roast of beef, arranging to pay for only what was consumed, this being very little – ‘Deacon Dandy, man but ee’r handy – Yer wit never seems tae desert ye, For ee soon got relief wi’ ‘Bet the Guard’s’ beef, Deacon Dandy’ [T]. Elizabeth nee Waldie (1798–1869) daughter of John and Helen Scott. She married postmaster Robert in 1836. She is recorded in the 1860s as ‘Mrs. Armstrong’, post-mistress. In 1861 she was a widow and ‘Proprietress of Property & Librarian’ at 5 Silver Street. In 1861 she donated to the Archaeological Society a jar of preserved reptiles that had been caught on Hawick Moor 60 years earlier. Elizabeth (19th C.) milliner in Newcastleton in 1852. Fergus ‘Fergy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1574 along with Airchie, both brothers of Kinmont Willie, who were accused of raiding farms belonging to Thomas Johnstone of Craigburn, stealing horses and goods, and severely injuring one man; not appearing, they were denounced as rebels. He is recorded as ‘Fergy Armstrong, brother to Williame Armstrong callit Will of Kinmounth’. Fergus (18th/19th C.) resident of Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He later moved to Cornerhouse near Canonbie, where he was an innkeeper. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th C.) son of Lancelot of Whithaugh. In 1579 he replaced his brother Archie as prisoner held in ward by Betoum of Creich. In 1580 he was warded in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council; however, later that year he was stated to be warded in Edinburgh Castle. He was produced before the Council by James Betoum of Creich. In 1580/1 he was convicted of a number of crimes of theft, along with several other Armstrongs, Eliots and Nixons, and sentenced to imprisonment in Edinburgh. In 1581 he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth, where he had been held in ward as pledge for his father. In 1581/2 he was accused of leading a band that raided the farm of Eilrig in the Borthwick valley, and later declared a rebel. In 1583 he is listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, described as ‘Francis Armestronge his brother’ (ambiguous, but probably meaning brother of the Laird’s son, previously mentioned). He is also likely the ‘Francie in Quhythauch’ recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. He is recorded as son of the Laird of Whithaugh when accused along with his brothers Andrew and Simon of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England, burning 25 houses and stealing £1000 worth of goods. He is recorded along with Andrews of Whithaugh among Armstrongs complained about in 1590 for stealing livestock from Englishmen across the Border in 1588. In 1590 he and his brother Andrew, ‘sons to the laird of Whithaugh’, were accused of an attack on ‘Todborne Steile’, stealing livestock and goods, and maiming some Englishmen. He is probably also the Francis listed in 1590 among Armstrongs (including his brothers Andrew and John) and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is probably the ‘Francie Armestrang in Quhidhauch’ who was recorded in the 1594 respite for the killing of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands the year before. There was a complaint in 1597 against him, Lancloet of Whithaugh and David ‘bredsworde’ for a raid into England. He is probably also the Francis, (brother of Andrew and John), son of the ‘auld laird of Whithauge’ listed in an English letter in 1601. He may be the same Francis, referred to as the ‘standard Bearer’, who took part in the raid by about 200 Armstrongs and others into England in 1603, one of the last major cross-Border raids. He may be the ‘Francie Armestron, sone to ald Armestrange of Quhidhauch’ listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He may also be the ‘Francie of Quhidhauch’ whose sons ‘Lancie’ and ‘Symone’ also failed to appear in Jedburgh in 1611; if this is the case then he may also have been known as ‘of Westburnflat’ and had a brother John, since the pair were fined (along with Lancie of Flatt, younger of Whithaugh) for the non-appearance of Lancie and Simon ‘sons to the said Francis’. Francis (16th C.) son of the ‘Sym of Tinnisburne’. He was sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for theft, along with Francis, son to the Laird of Mangerton, as well as other Elliots, Nixons, etc. Francis (16th C.) recorded as ‘Francie Armestrang, Flatt’ in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. His farm was near Kershopefoot. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Mangerton, and hence presumably son of Archibald. In 1590 he was one of the leading Armstrongs and Elliots to write to Lord Scrope in an attempt to get their family hostages freed from England. He may be the same as one of the other Francies. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded as ‘Francy Armstrong, callit Kynmonthis Francy’ when he was accused of leading a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in Yarrow Water. He is probably the ‘Francie of Kynmont’ recorded in the redemption for most of the tenants of Dumfriesshire in 1585. He may be the ‘ffrancie of Canobie’ whose tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He is probably the ‘Kimmonthes Francie’ named by an English informer as ‘Francy’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Mangerton, Franceis Sandie, George of Kynmont and James of Kynmont in Monbieherst’ when listed among Armstrongs of Whithaugh, de-scribed as ‘Francis Armestronge his brother’ (ambiguous, but probably meaning brother of the Laird’s son, previously mentioned). He is also likely the ‘Francie in Quhythauch’ recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. His farm was near Kershopefoot. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Simon of Mangerton, and hence presumably son of Archibald. In 1590 he was one of the leading Armstrongs and Elliots to write to Lord Scrope in an attempt to get their family hostages freed from England. He may be the same as one of the other Francies. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded as ‘Francy Armstrong, callit Kynmonthis Francy’ when he was accused of leading a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in Yarrow Water. He is probably the ‘Francie of Kynmont’ recorded in the redemption for most of the tenants of Dumfriesshire in 1585. He may be the ‘ffrancie of Canobie’ whose tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He is probably the ‘Kimmonthes Francie’ named by an English informer as part of the party who rescued ‘Kinmont Willie’, along with his brothers Jock, Geordie and Sandy. He had a ‘bond of maurent’ with Sir James Johnstone in 1603. In 1607 he was ‘called of Kinmont in Monbieherst’ when listed among Armstrongs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 he was ‘France Armestrang callit of Kynmont’ when he was among several men (including his son William) fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1611 Walter Scott of Tushielaw complained that he was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst, and hence he was summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was ‘callit of Kynmonthe’ in 1616 when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing; his son William ‘in Grystail’ was also on the jury. In 1622 he was ‘callit of Kynmont in Newbeck’ when he served as a cautioner at the Judiciary Court; he also acted as a cau-tioner for John of Woodhouselees in 1623. His son Alexander is recorded in 1622 when he was cautioner at the Judiciary Court. His sons Francis, George and Alexander were all recorded as fugitives in 1642. Also listed were ‘Johne Kynmont called Perkow, Alexander Kynmont called Francis Sandie, George of Kynmont and James of Kynmont, Johne of Kynmont called John of Sark, William of Kynmont his brother’, all of whom might be related in some way (even although their surnames are not explicitly given). Francis (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Mumbiehirst’ in 1623, when Thomas Carruthers was accused of stealing sheep from him. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit Tueden’ in 1623, when accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, ‘callit Dod’ from the lands of ‘Buchburne’. He was acquitted along with Archie Armstrong, although Abie Armstrong and Simon Elliot ‘callit Guyd’ were found guilty. He was probably related to other Armstrongs of Tweedean. Francis (17th C.) recorded as ‘Francy Kinmont’ in 1633 when it was said (by Robert Pringle, Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch) that he had fled to Ireland. He had been tried along with ‘Geordy of Dykraw and Whyttlysye’ for being ‘resetters of my Lady Marques hir ky and mares’. He is also recorded as ‘sone to Francis Armstrang called of Kynmont’ in 1642 when he was on a long list of Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. He was presumably grandson of Kinmont Willie. Francis (17th C.) listed as ‘brother to Quhithauch’ in a large list of fugitives in 1642. He was presumably brother of the Laird of Whithaugh, perhaps Lancelot. He could be the same as the Francis of ‘Will and Francis Armstrangs, called of Woodhead’ who in about 1645 were as accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Geordie of Kinmont and Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchens’. He could be the ‘Frances Armestrang of Quhithauch’, listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, etc.; his brother John was also listed, as well as Lancelot. Francis (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called Gavingis Francie’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was from somewhere near the Border and was presumably son of Gavin. Francis (17th C.) resident at Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Francis of Whithaugh (17th C.) recorded paying the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was a major heritor of Castleton Parish, recorded in 1698. His wife was Christian Elliot, whose testament is recorded in 1681. Francis of Whithaugh (17th/18th C.) married Julian, daughter of Henry Ker of Linton. In 1701 she and her husband are recorded in sasines. He is also recorded in a sasine for his son Francis in 1706, and Francis elder and younger are both recorded in 1714. Francis (b.1773/4) agricultural labourer and shepherd at Westburnflat. He was listed there among heads of households 1835–41 and was still recorded there on the 1861 census. His wife was Mary and they had a son, Robert (b.1808/9). Francis (b.1803) born at Hackknow in England. He was a farm worker living at Henwoodie in 1841 and was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (later Evangelical Union) Kirk in Hawick, from about 1848. He married Mary Murray (b.1802) from Eskdalemuir. Their children were: Thomas (b.1825); Janet (b.1827); Jane (b.1829); James (b.1832); Barbara Little (b.1835), who married Robert Linton and emigrated to Australia and then New Zealand; Esther (b.1837); Margaret (b.1839); Eleanor (b.1841); John (b.c.1845); and Elizabeth (b.c.1847). George of Alemoor (15th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton. Since Armstrongs were accused of killing the Laird of Alemoor in about 1490, it is unclear how he could have been Laird there. It is said that he had 5 sons. George (15th/16th C.) brother of Hector. He was first of a large number of Armstrongs recorded in a document listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. This suggests he was important in the Clan at that time, so probably associated with one of the main Armstrong seats. ‘Wilzam Elwald, his mach’ (i.e. William Elliot, his son-in-law) is also listed. He is probably also the George, who along with his brothers Edmund and Hector were responsible for burning and stealing from Bothwickshiel. And also in that year he was accused (along with a man called Douglas) of several thefts, including stealing a stallion from the Earl of Lennox in Edinburgh, with his brother Hector acting as surety. Perhaps the same George was one of 2 men of that name listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. George (16th C.) first witness recorded on a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537. Other witnesses were Ninian, Mungo (Kentigern) and Hector Armstrong, as well as Stephen Scott, George Scott, Andrew Little and Edward Little. George (16th C.) tenant of Kirndean according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George ‘Geordie Go Wi Him’ (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England with ‘Reid Andro’, ‘Auld’ John Gray and others, in which Wat Atkinson was killed. His nickname is there recorded as ‘Georgy ga with hym’. He is also recorded as ‘Georgy gay with hym’ in an English letter of 1541 in which are listed English rebels who had been reset in Scotland; he Airmstrong was particularly said to have reset Sandy and Anthony Armstrong, Edward Noble and a Routledge 'called tyn synde'. He was presumably from Liddesdale. He was 'callet Gayvt' in 1548/9 when along with 'Gorde his son', Thomas Henderson and 2 Fosters, there was a bond by the Armstrongs of Mangerton to enter him as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst; the men were referred to as the servants of the Laird of Mangerton. George (16th C.) son of Ninian and brother of Simon. He was involved in a 1557 bond with his brother Simon, as well as Hector of Harelaw and Thomas (son of Will of the Chingills) to present Clement's Will (Nixon) to the gates of Ferniehirst. He may be the same as 'Ninian's Geordie' who was recorded in Arkleton in 1569. He may be the George who, along with Archibald, witnessed a bond in 1548 by Ninian and Archibald Nixon to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. George (16th C.) one of the Armstrongs of Harelaw. His son Andrew was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. It is possible that 'Georgis Jame', 'Georgis Will', 'Georgis Geordie', 'Georgis Alexander' and 'Georgis Pattoun', who were also listed as fugitives, were other sons of his. George 'Geordie' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. George 'Ninian's Geordie' (16th C.) listed in 1569 among Armstrongs who Archibald of Mangerton served as pledge for. He was 'of Arkiltoun callit Ninian Geordie'. He is recorded in 1579 as a representative of the Armstrongs who agreed to stop their feud with the Elliots of Ewesdale. He was also 'of Arkiltoun' in 1579 among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tynedale; he is there named as 'Renyens Geordie, and his sons, of Arleton in Ewesdale'. It is unclear who his father Ringan was. He is recorded in a huge list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell, who got respite for their crimes in 1585. He is listed as being in Arkleton, and his sons 'Niniane, Geordie, Martine, Dandy and Mingo' are also listed, as is 'Lord Archie Armestrong in Arkiltoun' and his son John. He may be the same man as 'Ninian's Geordie'. His sons were probably the 'yonge Gorthe of Arkylton' recorded in 1583 among Armstrongs of Whitlawside, along with brothers (and hence also his sons) Ringan (i.e. Ninian) and Martin. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with Archie of Arkleton. Either he or his son is 'Georhge Armstronge of Arleton' in 1587/8 when accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. George (16th C.) listed among the 1583 near relatives of Simon of Mangerton. He was stated to be 'Gorthe Armestronge of the Bygams', where he lived, and to have married Will of Carlisle's daughter. He was probably a cousin of the Armstrong chief. It seems likely that 'Gorthe' was 'George' and 'Bygams' may have been Bygate. George (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside in 1583 as 'Gorthe', son of 'Rynyon'. He was probably brother of Simon, and son of Ringan (i.e. Ninian). George 'Young George' of Akleton (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside in 1583. He could be son of a previous George of Arkleton, and was probably a nephew (or other near relative) of Simon of Whitlawside. He married a daughter of Will of 'Radhall' (probably in England). His brothers Ringan and Martin are also listed in 1583. George (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the offspring of 'Ill Will's Sandy'. His brother Thomas of Rowanburn is also listed, and he is said to be 'Gorthe Armestronge of the same'. He married a daughter of Jamie Taylor of Harper Hill (probably in England). George (16th C.) listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He is 'callit of Casfeild', which is probably the same as Calfield. He is probably the 'Geordie of Calfhill's' whose son Willie was subject of a complaint by an Englishman in 1590. George 'Geordie' (16th C.) son of Kinmont Willie. There was surety for him before the Privy Council in 1573. In 1584/5 John, Lord Maxwell was denounced as a rebel for not delivering up him and others. He is probably the 'Kinmontes Geordy' named by an English informer as part of the party who rescued 'Kinmont Willie', along with his brothers Jock, Francie and Sandy. He may be the 'Geordie Armestrang of Kynmont' who was acquitted of crimes in the court at Dumfries in 1611. George 'Geordie' (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being in Thorniewhats, which is just to the east of Hollows. Another Armstrong (first name not given) is also listed there, as well as John Turner. 'Cristie Armeestrang, callit Armeastrangis Cristie' is listed after him, so this may be his son. George 'Geordie' (16th C.) listed as ‘in Catgill’ on a comprehensive remission for the men of Dumfriesshire in 1585. This location is near Barnglies, very close to the Border. He was also accused in 1592 of attacking the inhabitants of Etterby, along with Irvine ‘called the Kanges’. Probably the same George was described being in Catgill in 1606 when he was among men listed as fugitives. ‘Sandie Arms trange, brother of Catgill’ is also recorded among fugitives in 1606. He was probably related to the later John in Catgill. George (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 Dumfriesshire remission as being in ‘Betholme’, along with ‘Patone Armes trang thair’. George (16th C.) listed in the comprehensive 1585 remission as being tenant at Howgill. John is recorded at the same location, so they were probably near relatives. George ‘Geordie’ of Bigholm (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son William was among men accused of rieving from ‘Darnmountstead’ in Gilsland. He was probably related to the Christopher of Bigholm who was supposed to be involved with the rescue of Kinmont Willie. George ‘the Laird’s Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in an English letter of 1601 among Armstrongs of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He was almost certainly an Armstrong, and may be the same as one of the other contemporary Geordies. George (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Geordie Armes trang, called Alie’s Geordie’. He may be the same man as the son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. George (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1606/7 when he was captured by John Musgrave’s men, operating under the English Border Commissioners. He is recorded as ‘Geordie of the Gingler, alias Hen harrow, a man of some repute upon the borders’. It seems likely he was an Armstrong, with ‘Ginger’ perhaps being Chingills and his nickname perhaps being related to Harelaw. George (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Grundumsyde’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case when a man died while imprisoned in the steeple of Hawick Kirk. It is unclear where his residence lay. George ‘Aircie’s Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 among a group of men from who were declared as fugitives. He was a tenant in Woodhouselee. He was also accused in 1623 of stealing for stealing sheep from several farms, and was acquitted of those crimes, but already a fugitive by then. He was ordered to be banished from the Kingdom. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘sone to Francis of Kymmont’ in a list of Borders fugitives in 1642. He was probably a grandson of Kinmont Willie. He is probably the ‘Geordy of Dyskraw and Wyttlysye’ who was tried in 1633 along with ‘Francy of Kynmontt’ for resetting cattle. He is probably the ‘Geordie Armstrong, called of Kym mont’, who in about 1645 was accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’ and Will and Francis of Woodhead. George (17th C.) resident at Larriston Rig in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (17th C.) listed at Weensland among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1720–89) brother of Dr. John, and son of the minister of Castleton. He started studying medicine in Edinburgh at the age of 11 and went on to establish the world’s first dispensary for sick children in London in 1769. Although the first recorded member of the Edinburgh Medical Society he did not receive an M.D. degree there (probably because of non-payment). He moved to London about 1745, lodging with his brother. He acted as a G.P. in London, although not formally qualified. It is said that a struggle to supplement his first child’s diet with cow’s milk (after his wife’s breast-feeding attempts were insufficient) led to his interest in pediatrics. In 1767 he published ‘An essay on the diseases most fatal to infants to which is added rules to be observed in the nursing of children, with a particular view to those who are brought up by hand’, with new editions in 1771, 1777 and 1783. The book was extremely well-known and influential in its day, and was translated into several languages. In 1769 he opened his dispensary for the infant poor near Holborn and that year obtained an M.D. from Aberdeen University. In 1772 he moved to Soho Square. By 1780 it is estimated his dispensary had treated 35,000 children, struggling to support his own family with fees from private patients. In 1779 his brother John died, leaving him and his daughters a large sum of money. However, this led to him borrowing money and later being charged with fraud. He spent some time in prison, but it is not known for how long. Attempts to restart his dispensary were stopped by him suffering a stroke in 1781. A new medical book, published in 1784, heavily criticised his work, although borrowing heavily from his ideas, damaging his reputation (which would only be rehabilitated in the 20th century). In 1755 he married Ann, daughter of Henry Rawlins. They had 3 daughters: Ann (b.1758); Christian (b.1759);
and Elizabeth (b.1764). He died in obscurity, the editor of the London Medical Journal being unable to locate him in 1787 and suspecting he was already dead. After his death his name was added to his brother’s memorial obelisk at Castle ton. His wife received a royal pension in 1806 and died about a decade later. A biography of the 2 brothers ‘George and John Armstrong of Castle ton’ was published by W.J. Maloney in 1954. George F. (b.1799/1800) from England, he was gamekeeper at Newlands in Castle ton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 among heads of households and on the 1851 census. His wife was Elizabeth Elliot and their children included William, George, Jane Easton and John Scott. George (b.1821/2) baker at 1 Sandbed. He is listed there in the 1861 census. He married Jane, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Their children included John, Walter, Ann H., George, Mary Jane, William, James and Margaret. George (19th/20th C.) fishmonger on the Howegate. His shop at No. 17 can be seen in a photograph of 1895. The business survived until at least the 1940s, when it was at No. 21. Gilbert (d.c.1375) probably son of Alexander and born at Mangerton. In 1363 he was Commissioner to England to arrange the ransom for King David II of Scotland and was with David in England in 1364. There were payments to him recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1364 and 1366, when he was master of the King’s horse and was an envoy to England. He was Canon of Moray by 1365 when he witnessed a charter. He was witness to a charter granting lands of Denholm to Thomas of Cranston. His death is recorded in 1376 in relation to the vacant position at the Parish Church of ‘Seres’ (which he must have held). Guy Hepburn (1901–76) born at Ardenlea, son of lawyer Thomas. He was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. He returned to Hawick in 1926 as a solicitor, joining George & James Oliver, and later becoming a senior partner. He was Acting Father in 1932 and became Common Riding Committee Secretary for approximately 33 years, raising the profile of that position. He was also President of the Callants’ and Mosstroopers’ Clubs, Vice-Chairman of the Con Club, joint Manager of the former Commercial Bank and Clerk to Hawick District Council. He was appointed Chief Observer for Teviotdale in the Royal Observer Corps throughout WWII, carrying out shifts at the hill-top post near Teviothead. He also became an Honorary Sheriff at Jedburgh. In addition he was Secretary of the Cheviot Sheep Society, Secretary of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society and Session Clerk at Wilton. In 1928 he married Mary Olive Francis ‘Bay’ Anderson, who was from Morningside. They lived at 8 Wilton Hill and then at Ardenlea. There were children: Leslie, an accountant at Pringles; Michael, a solicitor; and Shirley (b.1930), who married Patrick Andreson Laing. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Hector (15th C.) recorded in Newbattle in 1496, when he was paid by the King’s Treasurer. It is not clear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs. Hector (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale, brother of Edmund and George. In 1502 they were found guilty of being involved in the burning and pillage of Borthwicksheils. And also that year he was surety for his brother George, who was accused of stealing a stallion from the Earl of Lennox in Edinburgh. It is unclear to which branch of the Armstrongs they belonged. Hector (16th C.) listed as tenant of Dykeraw in 1541. William is listed before him, and so they were presumably related. Either he or a different Hector was tenant of the nearby Byreholm in 1541. Hector (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as ‘young Hector Armstrong’ in Tweeden. He was listed as someone who had reset some English rebels, specifically 3 Armstrongs and one Wigholm. He was surely related to the later Hector of Tweeden. Hector ‘Auld Hector’ of Harelaw (16th C.) recorded as ‘Ektour Armstrong’ in 1557 when he had a bond along with Thomas of the Chingills and Simon, son of Ringand ‘which Arche Nyksone owes for Will Wauch’s bill’. Later that year he had a bond to enter ‘Clement’s Will’ to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as ‘Hectors of Harlaw’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. In 1569 it is said that the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland were sheltered by him after their unsuccessful rebellion in the north of England. However, he is said to have delivered the Earl of Northumberland to the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was pledge for entering his son Thomas for his sons Hector and William, as well as Rowe and Ninian (servants to young Hector) and other Armstrongs. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme served as surety that he or his son Thomas would present themselves at Dumfries. Later in 1569 his son Hector was held in Glasgow Castle as pledge for him and his other sons Hector and Willie, as well as his brothers Rowe and Ninian, and other Armstrongs. His son Ninian was recorded being warded with John Colquhoun of Luss in 1574 and was ‘Ringyane land; this was along with Andrew ‘the bundgell’, about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. He was recorded in 1595 among men complained ranged to be imprisoned in Carlisle in his stead. and English Wardens; Will of Tweeden was arrested 1579 among 400 Armstrongs and followers said to have killed Oswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8); Ringan of Tweeden was also listed. He was recorded among those involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580; he is ‘Heckie Armstrong, callit Twedden’, and his brother Ninian is also listed. He was recorded in an English complaint of 1583 along with several other Armstrongs, including Jock and Ringan of Tweeden (who were probably his brothers). He was closely related to Lancie of Whithaugh, since when the bond of assurance with the English Wardens was signed in 1584, he was described as ‘Eckkie Armestrange of Twedden’, and ‘dwellinge benethe Twedden upon the Larde of Mangertos grounde, beinge one of my house and beinge upon grounde where skaithe was done. He is recorded as ‘Ekkie Armestrange of Twedden’ when accused along with the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was ‘Eckie Armstrange’ in an indenture of 1595 between agents of the Scottish and English Wardens; Will of Tweeden was arranged to be imprisoned in Carlisle in his stead. He was recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England; this was along with Andrew ‘the bundgell’, ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, Hendersons and Elliots. He may have been the head man at Tweeden in 1596 when ‘three brethren of Tweda, Armstrongs’ were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was killed by Thomas Hetherington of Holesheils; the Scottish Border Commissioners complained that they wanted his killer apprehended, while the English commended Hetherington for his actions ‘for he [Hector] was a principal murderer, a great and common thief, a spoiler, and a leader of the rest’. He was probably a descendant of ‘young Hector’, who is recorded in Tweeden in 1541. Hector (16th C.) son of ‘Auld Hector’ of Harelaw. He was listed in 1569, along with his father Hector and brother Willie, as those for whom his brother Tom was being held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. He was recorded as ‘young Hector Armistrang his sone in Twedlane’; this means it is possible that he was the same man as Hector of Tweedan. In 1583 it was stated that he was married to a daughter of Fergus Graham. His brothers may have been William and Thomas. He is probably the Hector ‘in Harla’ listed in 1607 among people trying to prevent possession of lands in the former Debatable Lands. He acted as cautioner for ‘Geordie Scot, his man’ at court in Dumfries in 1611. Hector of Chingills (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of ‘Melyonton’ quarter, along with those of Whittlawside, etc. His brothers Thomas, ‘Elle’, ‘Eme’ and Archie are also listed. It is unclear how they are related to ‘Auld Tom of Chingills’ and his sons, who are also mentioned. Also in 1583 he was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale; he is there ‘Eckie Armstrange of the Gyngles’. He is probably also the ‘Heckie Armistrang, son of Andro Armestrang of the Gingillis’ in 1584/5, when John, Lord Maxwell was denounced for not presenting him and others. It thus seems likely he was the ‘Ekkie Armstrang sone to Andro of the Gyngillis’ who was ordered in 1569 to release an Englishman he had captured. He is also probably the ‘Hekie Armistrang, son of Andro Armestrang of the Gingillis’ in 1584/5, when John, Lord Maxwell was denounced for not presenting him and others. It thus seems likely he was the ‘Ekkie Armstrang sone to Andro of the Gyngillis’ who was ordered in 1569 to release an Englishman he had captured. He is also probably the ‘Hekie Armistrang, son of Andro Armestrang of the Gyngillis’ who was held in Blackness Castle in 1569, as pledge for his father Andrew, his uncle Tom and his cousin Willie. He could be the ‘Ecktor Armstrange’ who signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, being listed after the Armstrongs of Ewesdale. He is probably the ‘Eckie’ listed along with ‘Alic’ and their brother ‘yonge Thom’, who were all accused in 1587/8 with their father ‘old Thom Armstronge of the Gyngles’ of being on a raid on the farms of

Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. Hector (16th C.) listed as being of ‘the Stobbam’ among the Armstrongs of Langholm in 1583. He was also recorded being in Stutholme in the 1585 remission for the men of Dumfriesshire. His location was near Langholm. He was also listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582, where he was ‘Hector Armstrong in Stutholme, warden officiar’. Hector of Hillhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among Armstrongs and about 500 others accused of raiding the farms of the Lairds of Prendick and Ryle in Northumberland. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Sim’s Tom and Kinmont Willie, as well as Eliots, Croziers and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. His name is transcribed there as ‘Ecktor Armestrong of the Hillhouse’. He is probably related to ‘Hob of Whithawghe son to John Eamont of Hilhouse’, who is recorded in 1590. Henry (1749/50–99) baker in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1797. He married Helen Elliot, who died in 1814, aged 63. Their children included: Janet (b.1776); Christian (b.1778), who married stockmaker Robert Rae; Isabel (1780–87); Thomas (1782–87); William (b.1790); and Thomas (again, b.1793). It is possible that he was the Henry from Riccarton Mill who married Helen, daughter of Hawick baker William Elliot. Henry Leslie (1892–1918) son of Hawick lawyer Thomas and brother of Guy H. He was educated at George Watson’s and Edinburgh University. In 1915 he was commission in the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He served in Gallipoli and Egypt and was invalided home, later transferred to the 6th Battalion and was killed at Kemmel Belgium. His name is listed on the Tynecot Memorial and is commemorated in 2 window panels at Wilton Church. Herbert ‘Habie’ (16th C.) father of David, who had a charter for the lands of Park in Ewesdale in 1535. He is named as ‘Herbert, alias Habye’. Hugh (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Cavers. Hugh (1809/10–91) born in England. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street, and recorded as farmer of 4 acres. He had brothers Thomas and John and sister Sibella. He is buried in Ettrick Cemetery. Hutchen (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hutchen Armstrong, called Old Sandie’s Hutchene’. It is unclear whether his name was short for something. In about 1645 he was accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinboure Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whithawghe, Geordie of Kinmont and Will and Francis of Woodhead. Along with another Armstrong he was said to have broken into the home of Rev. Thomas Allan of Wauchope Kirk, beating the minister and his wife and stealing 2 horses. However, through some deal, an English outlaw, ‘Perse Howme’, was arranged to claim credit and take the ransom for the return of the horses. Ay about the same time he and Rob Donaldson (in Reedbank on Esk) were chased from ‘Catheugh and Cringefold’ in Liddesdale and caught at ‘Bruntshiel’ (probably Brunsheils between Kersehopefoot and Langholm), although subsequently released ‘upon what conditions those who took them can best declare’. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Ingram Armestrang, Railtoun’ along with ‘Robert and Archibald Armestrang there’. This was among a list of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for their raid on the farm at Craik. ‘Railtoun’ was probably lands near the modern Raltonside, adjacent to Roan in Liddesdale. He could possibly be associated with ‘Ingramsways’, a lost place name near Steele Road. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as being ‘of the Graynys’ in 1541, when, along with his brother ‘Anton’, he was among English rebels who were reset on the Scottish side, in their case by Hector Armstrong in Tweeden. Christie was also mentioned, and may have been another brother or close relative. ‘The Graynys’ was probably ‘the Greens’ near Newcastle, or perhaps ‘Greena’ further to the south. Ingram ‘Ingrie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as ‘Iyngrie Armes-trang of Raltoun’ among a long list of people under their superior Lord Maxwell who were given respite for their crimes. He is surely related to the earlier Ingram of Ralton. Ingram of Castleton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused, along with Ringan of Tweeden and ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier, of stealing sheep from John Heron of Chipchase. He is there recorded as ‘Ingram Armestronge of the Castleton’. Along with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier, ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier and Thomas of the Mains, he was also accused of stealing cattle from Chipchase as well as stealing a horse on a separate occasion. Ingram ‘In-grie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Inzieholme’, tried in 1605, along with several other Armstrongs for burning Langholm House, stealing, etc. His location is unclear, but may even be related to his Christian name. His name is the first given in the record, suggesting he was of some importance. Among the crimes was taking prisoner

Herbert Maxwell of ‘Cavense’, this taking place in 1581. He was found guilty along with Archie of Flaskholme, with Matthew Finlayson of ‘Killeyth’ as surety for him. Ivan Adamovich see John. James (16th C.) tenant at Whithaugh according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Given the connection between these lands and the Armstrong chiefs, he was probably closely related to the Laird of Mangerton at that time. James (16th C.) recorded being in ‘the Hairlaw’ in 1576/7 when he was delivered to the March Warden. The Regent, James Douglas, Earl of Morton, gave orders for the Laird of Dundas to deliver him to ‘Ewmond Ripeth and James Hume’, men of Dumfriesshire in 1585. He was then tenant at ‘Carrono’, which was probably the same as ‘Carron’. Christie was listed as tenant in the same place, along with brothers and nephews, so they might all be closely related. He was probably the ‘Pawtonis Jame’ listed among the fugitives of Harelaw in 1569: his brother Thomas was also listed. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell in Dumfriesshire. He is listed as being ‘in Canobie’. He is probably the Jamie of Canonbie whose son Jamie was executed by the Borders Commission in 1606. In 1607 he was ‘of Cannabie’ when Andrew of Kirkton was cautions for him not to harm James Johnston of ‘Westraw’. He is probably the ‘James Airmestrang of Cannabie’ who was acquitted of a murder charge in 1609, along with several other Armstrons. It is possible he is the ‘Jeme’, son of Dave of Canonbie, who is recorded in 1583. He may be the James of ‘Cannabie’ recorded in 1622, when a Little was accused of stealing sheep from him and he also served on the assize. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Andrew of Kirkton. He was declared a fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mangerton Mill. In 1611 he was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. James (17th C.) referred to as being ‘called of Keminmont’ when he was first on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He was presumably descended from the earlier Armstrongs of Kinmont. James (17th C.) tenant at ‘Catheugh’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. 2 men with the same name are listed, as well as John and ‘Arck’. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Haughhead in Castleton Parish, along with Archibald. They were summoned to appear before the Kirk Session to answer charges of non-observance of the Sabbath. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1709 he married Christian Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included James (b.1710). James (1684/5–1774) tenant farmer in Kershopefoot. He married Janet Scott, who died at Kershopefoot Mill in 1800, aged 85. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1732 he was in Philliopeshiel and 1735. His children included: Margaret (b.1732); and James (b.1735). James (18th C.) recorded as ‘Herd’ in 1740 when he witnessed a baptism for James Riddell, herdsman at Park. He is also recorded as ‘Town Herd’ in 1740 when his son Mungo was baptised. His wife was Margaret Cathrae. No other children seem to be recorded for the couple. Since Mungo was Town Herd at that time, his designation is confusing; however, it seems likely he was Mungo’s son or other close relative. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Armstrong and their children included: Adam (b.1761); John (b.1762); and Simon (b.1764); James (d.1812) farmer at Riccarton Mill. He married Isabella, who died in 1814, aged 58. Their children included James, who also farmed at Riccarton Mill. They are buried at Ettleton. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, with Walter also there. James (18th/19th C.) son of the shepherd at Penchrise under the Potts. He himself became head shepherd at Penchrise before becoming tenant farmer at Greenriver in the Rule valley. His daughter Janet married John Armstrong, shepherd in the Rule valley. James (1766/7–1841) tenant in ‘Gaulhill’ (possibly Gallhills in Dumfriesshire). He married Joan Nichol, who died at Whisgills in 1865, aged 85. They had a son, George, who died in infancy at Catside in 1810. The family are buried at Ettleton. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Betty Elliot, from Cavers Parish. James (b.1770/1) son of Mungo, farmer at Yethouse, and brother of Francis. His name is on the Militia List in 1797 and again in 1801. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and listed at Yethouse among local heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farmer of 156 acres at Yethouse. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children were: James; Ann; Thomas; Janet; and Agnes. Margaret was recorded as widow and head of the family at Yethouse in 1861. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Greenholm. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.1791/2–1855) son of James and Isabella. He was miller at Riccarton Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was also listed as miller there among heads of households in 1835–41. He subscribed (for 4 copies) to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821; the ‘Miss C. Rickarton Mill’ who also subscribed must have been related. He was listed as miller at Riccarton Mill in 1841 and 1851 and was listed as miller at ‘Bickerton Mill’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1859, aged 60. Their children included: James, who took over as miller; Mary; Robert; Thomas; and Stavert (1827/8–50). They are buried in Etleton Cemetery. James (b.1793) second son of the Armstrong chief at Gilnockie. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 6 South Hermitage Street. He was listed in 1852 among boot and shoemakers, as well as clog-makers in Newcastle. His wife was Isabelle (or ‘Sebella’) and their children included Margaret, Betty, Abel, Adam, Jeannie, Robert, John Black, Esther, James and George. His father Abel, also a clogger, was living with him in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.1819/20) from England, he was shepherd at Kidd’s Linn. His wife was Margaret and their children included Adam, James, John and Helen. James (b.1819/20) farmer at Yethouse in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was living with his mother, Margaret Elliot, and siblings Ann, Thomas, Janet and Agnes. James (1820–1911) son of James, he was miller and farmer at Riccarton Mill, like his father. He was assistant miller in 1851 and in 1861 was farmer of 25 acres. He married Janet Turnbull, who died in 1919, aged 81. Their children included: Margaret (1860–1915); Thomas (b.1869), who died in infancy; Andrew Telfer (1877–83); Elliot, and Elizabeth. Jenkin (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Archibald and Alexander. They were accused of coming with 20 other Scotsmen to raid Butterburn in England, killing Christopher Marshal and 4 servants of Nicholas Ridley. Probably the same Jenkin was listed as ‘broder’ along with Archibald, Ringan and Simon in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid. His forename is otherwise unknown among the Armstrongs.

Jessy (18th/19th C.) resident of Kershopefoot. She subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (d.bef. 1279) one of the earliest family members on record. In 1274/5 he had a letter of protection from Edward I. In 1278/9 he was deceased when he and Alan de Lascelles had a pardon from King Henry for the murder of Richard Bullok ‘in the field of Cambok’. In 1281 James de Multon had a pardon from Edward I for his death. John (14th C.) probably a younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He may be the subject of the ballad in which he wins a contest with Englishman Sir Michael Musgrave over on the love of Isabel Dacre and marries her, only to be killed by Musgrave. It is also said he was the original inhabitant of the castle at Gilnockie. He may have died at Otterburn. John (15th C.) resident of Linton who was listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was fined for the non-appearance of George Tennant in Linton, as well as for his own non-appearance. The pair were again recorded at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Armstrongs. John of Whithaugh (15th C.) younger son of Thomas of Mangerton, brother of Alexander of Mangerton, as well as George of Alemoor and William of Chingills. He was one of the earliest Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He is said to have had 3 sons. He may have been executed at Alnwick in 1528. John ‘Johnnie’ of Gilnockie (d.1530) second son of the Armstrong chief at Mangerton, he was brother of Thomas of Mangerton, but became the effective clan leader. He lived at the Hollows (rather than Gilnockie across the river) near Langholm, and was also referred to as being ‘of Staplegordon’. He ran what was basically a protection racket in Liddesdale in the early 16th century, and was very unpopular with some of the Barons in the Scottish Borders. In 1527 the English Wardens tried to drive the Armstrongs out of the Debatable Land and all their towers around Canonbie were burned by Lord Dacre’s men in 1528. The Earl of Angus led an unsuccessful expedition against them in that year (probably failing due to lack of local support) and they were excommunicated by the Archbishop of Glasgow (although he himself was said to be a good Christian before this). In 1530 he was invited to meet the young King James V at Caerlerrig Chapel (in what is now called Teviothead), with a promise that his life would be spared if he submitted to the King. But instead he was hanged along with many (either 24 or 48) of his followers. A few other men were held as hostages, but executed after a few months, while his brother George was said to have been allowed to go free to spread word of the event. Since the King was still quite young at the time, it seems likely that enemies of Armstrong (e.g., the Maxwells, who received Armstrong lands immediately afterwards) were involved in the events. Nevertheless, the execution of Johnnie was regarded by most Borderers as an act of treachery, and is the subject of a well-known ballad (although full of historical inaccuracies), popularised by appearing ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. The story also became a play, ‘Armstrong’s Last Goodnight’, by John Arden, performed in 1965 (with Albert Finney in the title role). The events of 1530 are marked by a plaque within Teviothead Cemetery, as well as a stone in a neighbouring field (found there about 1980 and re-erected on the probable burial site). He married Elizabeth Graham and was said to have had 5 sons, including: Simon, ‘Lord Sym’; David, ‘The Lady’; Martin; and Christopher, ‘John’s Christy’. The Museum has several items reputed to have been his: a sporran; a tie pin; a drinking flask; and a sword — ‘John murder’d was at Carlenrig. And all his gallant company; But Scotland’s heart was ne’er sae wae To see sae mony brave men die’ [CPM], ‘But he was tricked to Carlenrig. By his own King was slain. The trees on which his men were hung Ne’er bore a leaf again’ [IWL].

John ‘Black Jock’ (d.1531) hanged along with his brother Thomas for theft and related crimes. This was in the year after Johnnie of Gilnockie and other Armstrongs were hung at Caerlenrig, and so this was probably related. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1535/6 as ‘John Armestrang, alias Jony in Gutterholis’ when, along with Christopher Henderson, he was sentenced to be hanged for crimes of theft, murder and fire-raising. He was probably from somewhere in Liddesdale. He was surely related to the ‘Johnme Armstrong, alias Gutterhoillis’ recorded in 1580. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as possessor of the lands of Hardenbank. He was probably related to other Armstrongs who held nearby lands. John (16th C.) nephew of ‘Braid’ Christopher. He is recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Anton, Thomas and Alexander, when Englishman Henry Storie was killed. John (16th C.) recorded in 1561 in a bond between Armstrongs and Bruntons, signed in Selkirk. He was presumably son of Robert and was likely to be related to the other men listed in the bond, including ‘Helen’s Hob’. John of Bankhead (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Archibald of Mangerton was pledge for. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Armistrang sone to Johnnes Cristie’ in 1569 when listed along with the Laird’s Rowie and Ninian of Wauchopedale. They were the for whom men for whom Christie of Broomholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. His father was presumably ‘John’s Christie’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) listed as ‘callit Bartillis Johnne’ in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whitaugh. He could have been son of Bartholomew. John ‘Laird’s John’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 on a list of chiefs of Liddesdale. He is listed among the close relatives of the Laird of Mangerton and after the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (who was therefore a different man). It seems likely he was an uncle of Simon of Mangerton, and hence son of Archibald. He married the sister of Ritchie Graham, called ‘Meadope’, and had 2 sons who were ‘ryders in England’. The eldest, ‘Jock’, married a daughter of Hobbie Foster of Kershope. It is unclear if he or his nephew was the ‘Lairdis Jok’ listed in the Register of the Privy Council in 1581. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the ‘principallis of the branchis of Liddisdaill’. He is probably the ‘Lardis Johnne’ whose son Archibald was held in ward in 1587 as a pledge for the whole of the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whitaugh. John ‘Jock’ of Calfield (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Jok Armstrong of Caffeild’ when Lord Maxwell made a promise to bring him before the Privy Council. He was probably ‘Jok Armstrong, callit of Casfeild’, listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He is also listed among the near relatives of Simon of Mangerton in 1583, his name appearing as ‘Joke Armestronge of the Caffeild’. He was stated not to have married an English woman. He is also recorded being in Calfield in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. He is probably the ‘Jock of Calfihills’ accused among Armstrongs and others in 1590 of rieving from Bewcastle. He is surely one of the ‘Armestranges of Calfhill’ accused in 1592 of stealing livestock and goods from England and killing Quentin Routledge. He is probably the ‘Jocke’ listed among ‘three of the Calfhills’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; the other 2 were ‘Bighames, and ‘one Ally, a bastard’. He and his brother Simon were among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about because of a raid to Whitehill in England in 1596 and another on ‘Hawehills’. John of Hollows (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as ‘Johanne Armstrong of Hollhouse’, son of John’s Christie of Barnglies, when his father appeared before the Privy Council because of a feud with the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He is recorded as ‘Johanne Armstrang in the Hollhouse, eldest sone to Johnes Cristie’ when he was accused of being part of a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitelope in Yarrow Water. He is also listed in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Langholm, where he appears as ‘of the Hollus’. He is recorded as being ‘in Hollhouse’ in a 1585 list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell, who had respite for their crimes. He was accused in 1590 of raiding ‘the Heatherie burne’ in England, along with Davie ‘Bangtail’ and ‘the Bungle’, a servant of the Laird of Mangerton; his designation is written ‘of the Holles’. Essentially the same group (plus 2 servants of the Laird’s Jock) were also accused in 1590 of having stolen sheep from the same farm on a separate occasion. Since his house appears to have been at ‘the Hollows’, he may have been a descendant of Johnnie of Gilhockie. He is listed as ‘John Armstrong of Hollhouse’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is probably the ‘Johanne Armstrang of the Hollhouse’ whose livestock were taken by the Captain of Biewcastle in a retaliatory raid following the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1597 there is a record of a complaint against him by Englishmen for stealing 400 cattle, 20 horses, 200 sheep, £20 and goods worth £200 and the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. In 1599 he wrote to Richard Lowther regarding his disputes with the Musgraves. He married a sister of Walter Graham of Netherby. He may be the same as the John in Hollows who was tried in 1605 and who was listed in 1607 as being ‘of Hollhouse’ among a list of Armstrongs and others charged with preventing the King’s appointees from taking possession of the Debatable Lands. John (16th C.) listed in 1580 as ‘Johanne Armstrang, alias Gutterholill’ when he was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whitaugh in 1580. He was surely related to ‘John Armstrang, alias Jony in Gutterholill’ recorded in 1535/6. John (16th C.) listed in 1582 as ‘Johnne Armstrang, callit Castellis, sone to Will of Kynmouth’. He was part of a band of Armstrongs who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope. His brother ‘callit Wallis’ (first name unrecorded) was also listed. He is probably the ‘Jokkie Armстрonge of Kynmonte’ accused about for a raid on England in 1587, along with the Lairds of Mangerton and Whitaugh and about 600 others. In 1587/8 he was ‘Jock Armстрonge of Kynmouth’ when accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. He may be the ‘Kynmontes Jocke’ who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods on 2 separate occasions; his relative ‘younge Will of Kynmonte’ was also listed, as well as the Irvings called ‘Kang’. He was also accused in 1592 of being part of a raid on ‘th’Holne Coltram’, along with Kinmont’s Will and Christie of ‘Barneleish’. He is probably the ‘Kynmontes Jock’ named by an English informer as part of the party who rescued ‘Kynmont Willie’, along with his brothers Francie, Geordie and Sandy. He is ‘Kinmonth Jock’ in 1597 when the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. In 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. He is probably also the John ‘of Kinmout’ who was among Armstrongs who broke out of Carlisle Castle in 1605 and was subsequently recaptured. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. He is referred to as being ‘called Castills’, but it is unclear where that is. He may be the same as the son of Kinmout Willie. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) another of the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’ listed in the 1583 letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor. He was said to be ‘called Walls’, which probably connects him to Alexander ‘in Wallis’, recorded in 1616. John (16th C.) listed among ‘Ill Will’s’ Sandy’s offspring in 1583, where his nickname is given as ‘Skinabake’ (although it is unclear what this means). He also appears on Monipennie’s list of Borderers from the 1580s; he is listed there under ‘Sandy Airmstrong’s Bairns’ as ‘John Skynbanke’. He was thus either brother or other close relative of Kinmont Willie. John of Thorniewhat’s (16th C.) recorded in 1579 among the supporters of Christie of Barnglies, when that man appeared before the Privy Council in relation to a feud with the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He is recorded as being of ‘Thornequhat’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is listed along with John of Hollows (who may therefore have been a close relative), as well as Will of ‘Ternsihil’. He is probably the ‘Armestrange of Thornewhatte’ (first name not given) who signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, along with ‘his brothers sonses William and George’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Armestrange of Tornwynholme’ when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens in 1584, on behalf of himself his brother and tenants. It is unclear where he lived, but the Laird of Thorniewhats is listed right after him, and so presumably a different man. John (16th C.) listed as ‘in Glinyer’ (probably ‘Glinger’ between Longtown and Canonbie) in a long 1585 list of men of Dumfriesshire given respite for their crimes. His son Andrew and brothers Christie, ‘Rowe’ and William are also listed, as well as Thomas also ‘in Glinyer’. Given the names of his brothers, it is possible he was son of ‘John’s Christie’, i.e. ‘Jock o the Glen’, a grandson of Johnnie of Gilnockie. John (16th C.) listed as being in Wauchopedale in an 1585 remission. John (16th C.) named as ‘alias Reltoun’ in the 1585 respite for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. He was probably related to the other Armstrongs who farmed at Ralton, e.g. Ingram. Perhaps the same John ‘called Raltoun’ was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. John ‘Rakass’ (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 respite, along with a large number of Armstrongs and others. His nickname probably refers to a place in lower Liddesdale. He was probably related to Airchie ‘callit Rakkes’, Robert ‘callit Rakkes in Syde’ and William ‘callit Rakkeis’, all recorded in 1623. John (16th C.) listed as being in Howgill (probably in the Eses valley) in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. George is also listed in the same place, so presumably a near relative. John of Mungbyhurst (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond with the English Wardens, on behalf of ‘hym selfe, brether and tennants’. His name appear as ‘Jocke Armestrange of Monckbehirst’. He is also recorded in 1585, along with most other men of Dumfriesshire in a respite for those under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. He is listed as ‘in Munkbehirst’ (i.e. Mungbyhurst). ‘Johne, Niniane and Christie Armestrangis, brether’ are listed after him, so possibly his brothers. He was said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. Later that year he was ‘Jocke of Monkbehirst’ when complained about for raiding into England (along with several other Armstrongs) and was ‘Jok Armstronge of Munckhurst’ when killed in a counter-raid by the English Warden’s men. John (d.bef. 1591) murdered by a group of other Armstrongs, with a complaint being made in 1591 by the English Wardens against those claimed to be responsible. His was recorded as ‘alias Cokespoole’, and was probably from the English side of the Border. John ‘Stoweluges’ (16th C.) cited in 1591 among Armstrongs accused of the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’ (probably an Englishman). It is unclear what his nickname may have meant or whether he was related to ‘Anton’s Edward’, ‘Andro’s Will’ and other Armstrongs who were also listed. John ‘Laird’s Jock’ (16th/17th C.) probably son of the Laird of Mangerton (although there may be confusion here with the son of the Laird of Whithaugh). It is also possible that there were 2 men of the same name, one (sometimes called ‘the Laird’s John’) who was son of the previous Laird, and hence uncle to this one. ‘The Lairdis Jok All with him takis’ is mentioned in Maitland’s ‘Complaynt Aganis the Thievis of Liddesdail’, which dates from the 1560s. He was one of the band of about 300 Armstrongs and Elliots who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568, murdering George Pringle, the Laird there. In 1569 he is ‘Johnne Armistrang callit the Lairdis Jok’ who, along with Christie of the Side, was excepted from the pledge made by Archibald of Mangerton for the whole of the Armstrongs. ‘Lard’s Jock’ was also one of the Armstrongs (along with the Laird of Mangerton and ‘Sim’s Thom’ and others) accused by Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave of having his barns and grains burned in 1582 and of further raids in 1586 and 1587. In 1587/8 he was accused by the Lairds of Pendrick and Ryle of being part of a group of about 500 men who took hundreds of animals and 35 prisoners. In 1583 he is listed right after Simon of Mangerton; he is there described as dwelling ‘under Denyshall besydes Kyrsope in Denisinborne’ (presumably ‘Tannis Hill’ and ‘Tannis Burn’) and married to a daughter of Anthony Armstrong of ‘Wylyave’ in Gilslack. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of himself and his tenants and servants. 2 of his servants were accused in 1590 of having been with ‘Bangtail’, ‘the Bungle’ and John of the Hollows when sheep were stolen from ‘Heatherie burne’ in England. His tower is recorded as ‘Larde

Airmstrong

Jockes', to the south of Mangerton, on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. He was listed (along with the Laird of Mangerton and Christie of the Side) in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs in about 1594 (although compiled earlier). His servants, Archie, John and Gib Stoddart were accused of stealing cattle from England in 1595. He is ‘Johnne Armestrang of Tyneisburne alias lairdis Jok’ among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) of the West March in 1599. He is suggested by some to have been a son of Simon of Mangerton, but may have been son of the previous Laird. He is mentioned in the Border ballad ‘Dick o the Cow’ (where his son is stated to be Johnie). John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) servant of the Laird’s Jock. Along with another servant, Mungo, he was accused of being with ‘Bangtail’, John of the Hollows and ‘the Bungle’ when they were said in 1590 to have stolen sheep from ‘Heatherie burne’ in England. He may be the same as one of the others Johns. John ‘John o the Score’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Eliots, Crozier and other who were accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Whithaugh in Liddesdale (most likely Lancelot). He is probably the ‘Jony Armstrang of Quhithauch’ listed in 1574 among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He is probably also the ‘John Armestrong, called John of Whetaugh’ listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh in 1583. In 1587/8 he was ordered to be exchanged with Archibald (son of the Laird’s John) as a pledge for the Armstrongs, and thus was held in Wemys Castle; a letter from the King of about a year later orders the Laird of Wemys to keep him in ward. In 1590 he and Andrew, both ‘of Whithawghe’, as well as ‘Hob of Whithawghe son to John Eamont of Hillhouse’ were complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1588. He is probably also the John listed in 1590 among Armstrongs (including his brothers John and Andrew, explicitly said to be son of the Laird of Whithaugh) and Eliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is recorded in 1592 when he was received as a pledge for his father. He may also have been known as the ‘Laird’s Jock’. He is probably the ‘Johnnie of Quhithauch' listed after the Laird of Whithaugh in Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs published about 1594. He is probably also the John, (brother of Andrew and Francis), son of the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’ listed in an English letter in 1601.

The John ‘callit of Quhithauch’ listed among men failing to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. His son Hobbie married a daughter of Jamie Foster of Stanegarthside and his daughter married a son of John Foster (also from the English side). Jock may have been another son. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) from the Whithaugh branch. He is listed in the 1583 letter from Captain Thomas Musgrave, and appears there to have been a son of John who was called ‘of Whithaugh, and hence a grandson of the Laird of Whithaugh. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) from the Tweedens family. He is named in a letter of 1583 from Thomas Musgrave back to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor, along with several other Armstrongs, including his brothers Ringan of Tweed and Hector of Tweeden. He is listed separately from Jock, son of John ‘called of Whithaugh’, although was probably closely related. He may be the same John of Tweeden who is recorded in the early 17th century. John of Langholm (16th/17th C.) one of the men who ambushed Thomas Musgrave in 1596, after he had attempted a retaliatory raid on Hollows. He is referred to as ‘the Guidman of Langholme’ in a trial of 1605 for several crimes, including the burning of Langholm House in 1581. This trial included his sons John and Christie and his cautions was Sir James Johnstone. He was tried separately for burning Murtholm, burning barns and crops at Langholm Castle, stealing 30 cows and horses from Herbert Maxwell of Cavens in 1581, taking Herbert prisoner and transporting him to England, burning Gallowside, stealing 20 cows, as well as sheep and goats, steling 60 cows, 200 sheep etc. from Dikinholme’, which was burned along with Holmhead. His cautions was Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. However, he was denounced as a rebel and ‘put to the horne’. He could be the John ‘callit of Longholmie in Tounischilburne’ listed in 1607 among Armstrongs and others who tried to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the Debatable Lands. John of Whisgills (16th/17th C.) recorded in an English letter of 1601 among Armstrong of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the jurisdiction of the Laird of Buccleuch. He may be the same John as the son of Will of Whisgills who was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. John ‘Jock Airmstrong Armstrong

Airmstrong Armstrong who was made famous in the eponymous ballad. It is unclear if he really existed, or was an amalgamation of other people. ‘John of the Syde’ is recorded in an English letter of 1601 among Armstongs of Whithaugh and elsewhere who were considered to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch; he could be partly the inspiration for the ballad character, or else a descendant. ‘Johnn Armstrong, called of the Syde’ was also listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his brother Sim was also listed. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at courts in Hawick and Peebles in 1605. He was ‘of the Hill’, although it is unclear where this was. Paton of the Hill was also listed. John ‘Powdie’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John in Rowanburn (16th/17th C.) listed in 1607 as being ‘in Rowingburne’ when he was among Armstongs and others who acted to prevent the King’s appointees from taking possession of the former Debatable Lands. John ‘Jock’, ‘Stowlugs’ (16th/17th C.) captured by the English Commissioners in 1606/7. His nickname presumably meant that he had an ear injury. John (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘callit of the Holme’ in 1618 when Gilbert Elliot ‘Gib the Galvart’ was convicted of stealing his purse when they were both in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. John (b.1572/3) recorded as being ‘in the Hoilhous’ among the Armstongs and others tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House and other crimes. These crimes took place in 1581, when he was only 8 years old, so he was found ‘doli capaces’ and hence could not be tried. He was therefore too young to be the John, tenant in Hollows, who was recorded in 1585. It seems he may have been son of John of Langholm and brother of Christie. The pair are probably those ‘frea the Langholm with him young John and Kirstie his brother’ who were said to be involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may be the John ‘in Hoilhous’ who entered a bond at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Archibald and Simon. In 1601 his brother Archibald ‘Whitehead’ was recorded in an English list of ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’, with him and his other brother Simon also named. In 1611 Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, served as cautioner in Jedburgh for him and his brother Simon, both ‘callit Quhyteheidh’. John ‘Bauld Jock’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whitlawside. He appeared before the Judicial Court in 1622, his name being ‘callit Bould Jok, in Quhitlesyde’. John (16th/17th C.) listed being in Catheuch among men failing to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was presumably related to other Armstongs in Catheuch. John ‘Bauld Jock’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Bauld Jok in Hairlaw’ in 1622 when he was accused of stealing sheep from the lands of Rutherford. He seems to have been different from the Bauld Jock in Whitlawside, and was probably the ‘Bauld Jok’ who was condemned to ‘be drownet in the wattr of Nith, ay quhill he be deid’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether ‘Bagray’, recorded in 1622 at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. Along with Thomas in Barnglies he acted as cautions for William of Binks in Sark. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘of Tueden’ in 1611 when William of Tweeden acted as cautions for him in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1623 as ‘callit of Tueden’ when William ‘callit Bauld’ appeared as his cautions. He was probably related to other Armstongs of Tweeden, e.g. Simon, who was also recorded in 1622. John (16th/17th C.) recorded being called ‘Capelgill’ in 1623 when he was cautions for William ‘callit Benks’, who was accused of stealing sheep. He was probably related to ‘Jamie Armestrang of Capilgill’ who was acquitted of crimes in Dumfries in 1611. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Hag’ in 1622, when he was entered at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh. John (16th/17th C.) resident at Powisholm, recorded in the 1623 Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was entered there by James Glendinning in Byreholm and Simon Armstrong in Harden, and secondly entered by Lancie of Whithaugh and again Simon in Harden. John of Woodhouselees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was entered in the Justice Court in Jedburgh. His cautions were David ‘Qhippo in Boig’ and Francis ‘callit of Kimmouth’. John ‘Jock’ (17th C.) along with Ninian, he is recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Greenesse’ in Liddesdale. This is probably the modern Greens near Newcastle. Abie, who was convicted of murder in 1623 was probably related to him. John (17th C.) called ‘in Syde in Barnglies’ when he gave a bond at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was also ‘of Syd in Barngleiss’ in 1642 on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. He was probably a descendant of the Armstongs of Side, perhaps a son of Simon. In 1646 there was a bond of caution for him with William in Bigholme and David Irving in Auchenbedrig. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Wintropheith’ in 1642 among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. His lands may have been at Whitope. John (17th C.) recorded as being ‘called ‘Unschank’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. He could have been associated with Unthank in Evesdale. John (17th C.) included in a list of Borders fugitives in 1642. He is there ‘Johne of Kynmont called Johne of Sark’, and his name appears with several others associated with Kimmont, including his brother ‘William of Kynmont’.

He was thus clearly connected with Kinmont Willie, but his exact relationship is unclear. He is also referred to in 1649 as ‘called Kinmonth of Sark’ when he had a bond of presentation for ‘Lang Will’ Armstrong. He married Katherine, daughter of William Graham of Plomp. John (d.c.1645) referred to as being ‘of Parkknowledge’, which was presumably somewhere in Liddesdale. In about 1645 the Armstrongs of Kimmont and their companions (including him and his brother Geordie) stole cattle from Pundershaw in Northumberland and were pursued back into the Debateable land; he was shot and killed by Edward Charlton of Antoun Hill, after which Charlton was pursued and killed, along with at least 2 other Englishmen. John (17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he appeared before the Justice Court, confessing to the charge of stealing sheep from Kirkconnell. He was ordered to be ‘brunt on ye cheik with ye comone birning irne of ye burghie of Jебburgh’. He was also listed along with Alexander as being ‘called of Catgille’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. They were probably descended from George ‘in Catgill’, recorded in 1585. John of Sorbie (d.1685) buried in the Kirkyard at Ewes.

His gravestone includes the arms of the Lairds of Sorbie (d.c.1685) referred to as being ‘of Parkknowledge’, which was presumably somewhere in Liddesdale. In about 1645 the Armstrongs of Kimmont and their companions (including him and his brother Geordie) stole cattle from Pundershaw in Northumberland and were pursued back into the Debateable land; he was shot and killed by Edward Charlton of Antoun Hill, after which Charlton was pursued and killed, along with at least 2 other Englishmen. He was also listed along with Alexander as being ‘called of Catgille’ on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. They were probably descended from George ‘in Catgill’, recorded in 1585. John of Sorbie (d.1685) buried in the Kirkyard at Ewes.

His gravestone includes the arms of the Lairds of Mangerton. He is probably the John who is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm of Sorbie (from the Scotts of Buccleuch) in 1672 and 1673. In 1673 he also leased the farms of Over and Nether Whitlawside and Bankhead. John (17th C.) recorded in 1663 when he paid the land tax in Wilton Parish for William Scott of Hartwoodmyres. It is unclear what the connection was between the 2 men, but he may have been a factor or other agent of some kind. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Westburnflat. His will is recorded in 1683. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish (but probably the part that had been Hassendean). In 1681 he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Oliver, in 1682 another for James Johnstone in Clarilaw and Bessie Turnbull, in 1683 one for Andrew Rodger, in 1686 one for James Henderson and in 1688 ones for William Scott in Clarilaw and for Thomas Henderson. He may be the John who (along with Andrew Rodger) witnessed a baptism for Walter Turnbull in Clarilaw in 1696. All of these suggest that he may have been an elder in Hassendean Kirk. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Mangerton according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been related to the 2 Jameses and ‘Arck’ who are also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He rented quarter of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96, and ‘a quarter and a half’ in 1698. He was also resident at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed baptisms for Robert Gledstains in Raesknowe in 1700 and for workman John Renwick in 1706. He may also be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Scott (deceased tenant in Falnash) in 1711. He could be the John, married to Margaret Gray, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Janet (b.1673); Margaret (b.1676); Agnes (b.1684); and Marie (b.1686). The witnesses in 1676 were James Davidson and Robert Riddell. John (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christian Scott and their children included James (b.1710). Dr. John (1709–79) born in Castleton parish, eldest son and 3rd child of Robert, the minister there. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1721 and qualified as a doctor in 1732. He was a college friend of Rev. James Laurie, who became minister at Hawick; the pair apparently joined a band of gypsies during the vacation. He moved to London to practise, probably following the literary success there of his countrymen Thomson and Mallet, whom he befriended (Thomson wrote some lines that are probably about him in ‘The Castle of Indolence’). He also got to know Rev. Alexander Carlyle, who mentioned him in his autobiography. He published several articles, including a parody on quack doctors in 1735 and an annotated translation from the Italian of a treatise on venereal diseases in 1737. However, his fame was established by the (anonymous) appearance of a sex manual for newly weds entitled ‘The Oconomy of Love’.
in 1736, whose authorship later became known. The somewhat licentious tone (for the times) of this piece may have compromised his medical career. He is also known for the publication in 1744 of the highly popular didactic blank verse work ‘The Art of Preserving Health: A Poem, in Four Books’; this was often reprinted throughout the next century, including in Hawick in 1811. He became physician to the London Soldiers Hospital in 1746 and was appointed physician to the forces in Germany in 1760, but returning on half-pay following the end of the Seven Years’ War. He was acquainted with Tobias Smollett and was a close friend of the Border poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), whose deathbed he attended in 1748. He is said to have sent the chair that once belonged Thomson to his fellow surgeon, Gilbert Elliott of Wells. He also wrote ‘Mucher’s or Guzel’s Diary’ (1749), ‘Of Benevolence’ (1751), ‘Taste’ (1753), ‘Sketches, or, Essays on Various Subjects’ (1758, as Lanecelot Temple) and ‘Miscellanies’ (1770). In 1765 the College of Physicians summoned him for practising without a license, ending his medical career. He survived well on his army pension, however, and was able to travel extensively, publishing ‘Short Ramble through some Parts of France and Italy’ in 1771 (also by Lanecelot Temple). About 1773 he is said to have quarrelled with his friend the radical John Wilkes, and got to know the Swiss painter Fuseli. James Boswell described him as ‘a violent Scotsman’, and he was known for drinking, swearing, sarcasm and melancholy. However, he is said to have mellowed in his last decade. He died at his Russell Street home, following an injury getting out of his carriage. His brother John (also a doctor) joined him in London in 1748 and (along with his daughters) inherited his estate when he died. An annuity also went to his older sister Margaret, who had cared for him in London. He is buried in the Castleton parish graveyard at Sandholm, the large obelisk monument being inscribed with 12 lines of verse, ending with ‘To learning, worth, and genius such as thine, How vain the tribute monuments can pay, Thy name immortal with they works shall shine And live when frailer marble shall decay’. His portrait was painted by Joshua Reynolds in 1767. His will was proved in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th C.) resident of Falside in Southdean Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. John (1760/1–1816) mason in Castleton. He married Isabella Marshall, who died in 1836, aged 73. Their children were: Janet (1798–1829), who died in America; Walter (1800–34), also a mason; and John (1802–65), also a mason; and Elizabeth (1804–53). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably the John, son of Walter and Janet Veitch, born in Castleton Parish in 1763 (who is buried in the next lair). John (d.1828) baker of the High Street who was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His son John was also a baker, with shop at about 3 High Street. His other children included Andrew, George, Isabella and
Airmstrong

Elizabeth. John (d.1829) farm steward of ‘Park-houses’ (or Packhooses, near Burnhead). He was

and first Chairman of the Session. He is probably the ‘John, Parkhouse’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John

‘Cout o Keilder’ or ‘Muckle Jock’ (18th/19th C.) son of a shepherd. Known for his considerable strength, he was a great wrestler. Tancred of Weens describes how a young Cout was digging

a ditch at Keilder when he came across the Duke of Northumberland out shooting; seeing he was scared by the gun, the Duke passed it to him, and tossed his hat in the air to shoot at, which the Cout shot to tatters with both eyes tightly closed.

He was shepherd at Ruletownhead, Wauchope

Common, Hyndlee, Dykeraw and Lethem. But he was also said to have an argumentative temperament and be difficult to deal with. Another story is when he helped the drunk Southdean minister into his horse, the minister saying ‘Now John, ma man, dinna tell ony body that we were fou’, although he himself was sober at the time. He had a large family. His children included: a daughter who married a shepherd called Young; a daughter who was servant at the Tower Hotel, and said to have once thrown a difficult guest down the stairs;

and a third daughter who kept the lodge gate at Steeleroad-end. His wife was Betty and their children included William, Jane, Grace, Christian,

Isabella, John, Mary, Hellen and Adam. John

(1802–65) mason in Newcastleton, son of John and Isabella Marshall. In 1851 he was at about 6 Douglas Square. He married Jane Elliot, who died in 1860, aged 77. Note that there were 2 masons in Newcastleton with the same name at this time. John (b.1805/6) shepherd at Plea-knowe in Hobkirk Parish. He was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was at Pleknowe with Elizabeth, probably his mother, and several other people. In 1861 he was still unmarried and living with his sister Helen, 2 servants and 8 lodgers who were working on the railway. John (b.1807/8)

shepherd at Riccarton, recorded as head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1838 and then in 1840 and 1841. He was at ‘Riccarton roadend’ in 1851, which is probably the same as Steeleroad-end. His wife was Betty and their children included William, Jane, Grace, Christian, Isabella, John, Mary, Hellen and Adam. John
(b.1807/8) blacksmith at Dinwoodie in the southern part of Castleton Parish. He is listed there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Henry, Joseph, Ann, Eliza and Margaret. who moved from Rulewater to become head shepherd in the north of Scotland for the Earl of Seafeld. In 1833 he married Janet, daughter of James Armstrong, farmer at Greenriver. He was given the lease of West Lees on the Wells estate (it is said this was on the basis of his father-in-law voting for Sir William Elliott of Stobs). He was recorded as farmer at West Lees in the 1860s.
He wrote some verse, including some which was

AGnes (b.1819); Isabel (b.1821); John (b.1824); Betty (b.1826); John (again, b.1828) also a mason; and Margaret (b.1831). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of the Cross Keys Inn, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.1795/6) mason in Newcastleton, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably the mason John who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He could be the mason of that name at Whitaugh Mill in 1835 and 1836, and Newcastleton 1837–41. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 2 Mid Lid-del Street. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Stone Mason (Waller & Hewer)’. He married Janet, daughter of William Glendinning. Their children included: Mary (b.1836), who married John Kyle; Agnes (b.1838), who married Walter Elliot; Betty (1841–48); and Janet (1843–48). Note that he is distinct from the other mason John, who was married to Jane Elliot. John (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Woodfoot Slitrig’. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. John (d.1828) baker of the High Street

inclusion: Andrew, George, Isabella and

Elizabeth. John (d.1829) farm steward of ‘Park-houses’ (or Packhooses, near Burnhead). He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick,

ter until the age of 13. His brother was ‘Sookin Sandy’, said to have been suckled by his mother until he was 20! One of his grandsons was coachman at Wolfelee 1866–7. He became a pauper in Southdean Parish and was buried in the Kirkyard, just on the right inside the gate. His coffin was 7 feet long, and his grave, although marked by no stone, was distinguished with a long mound of earth. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Larrston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 (separately from the mason). John (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He is listed amongs heads of households in 1835–41. However, he does not seem to be on the 1841 census. He is probably the John who in 1818 married Agnes Scott, sister of ‘Wat o the Knowe’.
Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) were:

read at the Burns centenary celebrations in Rulewater in 1859. One of his children was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. He died at West Lees and was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. John (c.1809–56) 4th child of William and Betty Elliot, he was born at Binks. He worked as a shepherd, possibly at Buccleuch. In 1829 he married Vair (or Veronica) Scott, who was from Ettrick and said to have some family connection with Sir Walter Scott. They emigrated to Australia in 1839 with their children William, Robert Grieve, Thomas, John and Jemima, with Peter Brown, Palmyra being born on the voyage (and named after the Captain and ship). They settled at Bush Station, later part of Geelong. He developed a reputation for being the best-informed sheep-farmer in the district, and was the first in Victoria to introduce dipping to prevent insect pests. He was one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church in Geelong and a trustee of the Scotch College in Melbourne. His wife died in 1877, aged 68. John (b.c.1810) farmer at West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was listed there in the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. In 1851 he was farmer of 40 acres. His wife was Janet and their children included William, Helen, Margaret, Jemima, Agnes, James and Janet. He could be the farmer in the Rule valley who was son of William, John (b.1815/6–89) from England, he lived in Castleton Parish. He was shepherd at ‘Guilfoot Upper’ in Castleton Parish in 1851; he was then living with his niece Elizabeth. In 1861 he was shepherd living on South Hermitage Street with his brothers Hugh and Thomas, sister Sibella (1823/4–96) and niece Jane. He is buried at Ettleton. Bailie John (b.1818) son of John and Ann Henderson. He carried on as a baker on the High Street. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at about No. 3, and he was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried and his sister Elizabeth worked with him as a shopkeeper. He was probably the Bailie John who was heavily involved in the removal of the auld Mid Raw and in the purchase of Wilton Lodge later in the 19th century. John (d.1905) from Hawick, he was a baker who settled in the Guelph area of Ontario. It has been suggested that he is the same as the Bailie recorded in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1854 he married Margaret Thomson and their children were Isabella, John, Annie, Margaret and Elizabeth. His first wife died in 1864, aged 57. In 1870 he secondly married Agnes Aitken and their children were Agnes, Robert, Andrew, James, Annie, Jannie, Elizabeth, Mary and George. In Guelph he co-founded the McCrae & Armstrong Woollen Mills, with David McCrae, and they employed many men from the Hawick area as weavers. Later his family started the Guelph Carpet Company. John (b.1824/5) son of clogger Lancelot. He was listed as ironmonger and also tin-plate worker at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was an iron-monger, living with his parents on Silver Stret. He was ironmonger it 6 Silver Street in 1861. He was already a widower by then. His children included Alexander and Mary. His sister Mary married John Riddle and their daughter Ellen Riddle was famous for her pies. John (19th C.) 2nd son of Adam and grandson of the schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He lived in Russia, where he took the name Ivan Adamovich. He may have been director of the Alexandrovski cannon works between about 1833 and the late 1840s (although there may be some confusion with his brother Robert Lindsay). The name ‘Armstrong’ appears on some cannons that were used during the Crimean War. He may have married Adelaide Rosen in St. Petersburg in 1843. His wife died in Dresden in 1882, and willed 3000 roubles in her father-in-law’s memory, for the poorest craftsmen of the Olonets iron works. John (b.1828) mason in Hawick, son of John and Agnes Scott. His mother was sister of Walter Scott (‘Wat o the Knowe’) and it is said that on his father’s side he was connected with the Duke of Roxburghe’s family. In 1861 he was living at Wilton Dean. His wife was Jane and their children included John, Margaret and Agnes Scott. John Scott (1868–1944) born in Selkirk, son of Charles and Isabella Scott. He was a tweed designer with Pringle’s and then worked at a mill in Peebles and then Langholm. In 1892 he married Agnes Elliot in Hawick. He was distantly related to the astronaut Neil Armstrong. Joseph (b.c.1785) from Northumberland, he was a farmer at Demainholm in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Hugh (a sheep dealer), Thomas, Eliza, Sibella and Christopher. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Whithaugh’ (16th C.) possibly son of Andrew and grandson of Simon. He is recorded as ‘Lancy armstrong’ at ‘whythaugh’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. In 1562 he had a bond with the Warden to produce ‘CHRISTY ARMSTARING, called CHRISTY the BWLL’. In 1569 he was ordered to enter as pledge for his branch of the Armstrongs, with his sureties being Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm and Andrew Ker of Faldonside. Also in

Mangerton). The request was accepted in a letter from James VI himself, and in another letter a few months later the King orders that his son John replace Archibald in ward in Wemyss Castle. It was suggested in an English letter that in 1592 Sir John Carmichael and the Laird of Cessford would meet to get him to surrender as a pledge for ‘Wythawgh and his howse’. Later in that year the Duke of Lennox and Laird of Cessford arranged to meet with him at Redheugh, but there was some confusion, leading to Cessford attacking him and his followers; however, eventually he surrendered along with his son Andrew, to appear before the King at Jedburgh. There was a complaint in 1597 against him, Francis of Whithaugh and David ‘bredsworde’ for a raid into England. In 1598 there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. In 1599 he was ‘Lancie Armestrang, elder of Quihithauch’ when he was among the Armstrongs who signed the bond (at Branxholme) with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch promising to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale in any complaints from south of the Border; ‘yong Lancie Armestrang, sonne to Sym of Quihithauch’ is also listed, and was presumably his grandson. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. Although it is unclear when exactly he died, he was probably succeeded by his son Simon (who perhaps effectively took over when he was still alive, but an old man). Andrew, Archibald, Francis and John are likely to have been other sons; Andrew, Francis and John were listed as outlaws in an English letter of 1601 and said to be sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaughe’. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th C.) listed as ‘alias Bonybutis’ in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. It is un clear where his lands might have been. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ of Whisgills (16th C.) recorded in 1587 when Englishman Andrew Routledge complained of a raid on his lands. Others named were the Laird’s Jock and Dick of Dryhope, so he may have been related to one of them. Lancelot ‘Lancie’ (16th C.) son of Simon of Mangerton. In 1599 he was one of the leading Armstrongs and Elliots to write to Lord Scrope in an attempt to get their family hostages freed from England. He may be the same as one of the other Lancelots. Lancelot ‘Lancie of the Side’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Lancie of the Syde’ in the trial of several Armstrongs and others for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches. He was listed after ‘Sym of the Syde’, who was probably his father or brother, or otherwise he was one of the sons of ‘Sandy’s Ringan’, the main instigator of the incident. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Whithaugh’ (b.1579/80) eldest son of Simon of Whithaugh. He was a landowner around Hawick in the mid-1600s. He is probably the ‘yong Lancie Armestrang, sonne to Sym of Quihithauch’ who was among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) of the West March in 1599. In 1600 he was said to be 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. He may have succeeded to Whithaugh after Simon or an earlier Lancelot. In 1611 he was ‘younger of Quihithauch’ when he was fined (along with Francis of Westburnflat and his brother John) for the non-appearance of Lancie and Simon, sons of Francis. He is probably the Lancelot of Whithaugh listed in 1612 among Ellios and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; Alexander of Roan ‘brother of the young Laird of Quihithauch’ was also listed, and hence probably his brother. He is probably the ‘Lancie in Quihithauch’ who was on the jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler, in 1616. In 1623 he served as a cautioner (along with Sandy in Harden) for John ‘callit Pousholme’. In 1632 he was recorded as possessor of the lands of Westburnflat, Belses and Whithaugh. He is described as ‘Lancelot Armestrang of Quhithaugh’ and as a tenant of ‘Belsches’ in Liddesdale when removed as Buccleuch’s tenant in 1638. He is probably the ‘L. Armstrong, Quhithaugh’ whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643. He is probably the man recorded as ‘Lancellot Armstrong in Whythaut’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Lancelot ‘Lancie of Catheugh’ (17th C.) recorded as a thief in the mid-1600s. It is possible he is the same as Lancie of Whithaugh. In about 1645 he, along with ‘Geordie Rackesse’ and others, stole about 80 cattle from England, and on the way back there is a humourous incident involving an English curate. The minister pleaded with the men to return his few animals, since he was so poor; they said they would do this if he would preach to them, which he refused, then they said all he needed to do was pray with them, which he also refused, and finally they gave him back his beasts when he agreed to take snuff with them! It is stated that the owner of the 80 cattle, Roger Harbottle, tried to bargain with him, but he replied that his family were due the ‘blackmail’ for many years, which his father and grandfather had formerly been paid for ‘protection’. He is recorded as ‘Lancelot of Cattheugh’ when ordered to appear at Selkirk in 1645. Lancelot (1785–1860) from the Langholm area, son of John and Mary Telfer. He was a clogger in Hawick who was ‘Preses’ of the Relief Kirk Session. He is listed at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is on Silver Street. His wife was Helen and children included: Margaret; John, who was an ironmonger; Ann; and Adam. An unnamed son of his died in 1840. Margaret (17th C.) recorded as resident at ‘mylholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Martin (16th C.) brother of David ‘the Lady’. Along with his brother and also Andrew, son and heir of Simon of Whithaugh, he was granted the lands and goods of the deceased Simon of Whithaugh by the King in 1536. It seems likely he was a younger son of Johnnie of Gilnockie, and so other brothers of his included Simon and Christopher. Either he or a different Martin was tenant of Blackburn in 1541. Mary Olive Francis ‘Bay’ nee Anderson, from Morningside in Edinburgh. Her nickname came from a nurse who would push her pram, declaring her to be ‘Bay A’nson’ [Baby Anderson]. She was a prominent member of the Teri-optimists that organised concerts in the 1930s. During WWII she helped coordinate evacuees in Hawick, and drove the Red Cross canteen van and ambulance. After the war she organised blood donations in Hawick. Later in life she took up painting, exhibiting all over the Borders. In 1928 she married Guy H., solicitor in Hawick. She was abruptly introduced to the Common Riding in 1932, when her husband was Acting Father. Matthew (16th C.) accused in 1590 along with ‘Robin the Tailor’, Ringan of Tweedem, ‘Alexander’s Aircie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner. He may have been related to some of the Armstrongs he rode with. Matthew (16th,17th C.) brother of William ‘the Bauld’. In 1611 in Jedburgh his brother acted as cautioner for him, his name being given as ‘Matho Armestrang’. Perhaps the same Matthew was among Armstrongs and Elliots accused of a raid in 1590 by William ‘Loren’.

but after Walter Gledstains died in 1739, he complained that there was noone to assist him in defending the Common. He appears to have been reappointed for the last time as Herd in 1744 and died in the later 1740s. Note that he should not be confused with the later cooper of the same name (who was probably related, perhaps his nephew). He married Isobel ‘Murther’ and their son Mungo was baptised in Hawick in 1720, with witnesses William Henderson and Robert Wilson. He is also recorded as ‘toun herd’ in 1724 when he married Margaret ‘Wetch’ (i.e. Veitch) in Hawick. Mungo (b.c.1705) son of shepherd Adam, he grew up on the farms of Whitchesters, Alton Croft and Goldielands, assisting his father. He served 5 years in the army and became a cooper in Hawick. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. Given the similarity in the names, it seems likely that he was related (nephew for example) to Mungo the former Town Herd. He may be the Mungo whose children Francis (b.1743) and Betty (b.1744) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. It may have been his daughter Jean who is recorded marrying James Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1770. He may be the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Rae in 1778. He may also be the ‘Old Mungo’ whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in about 1810. Mungo (18th/19th C.) farmer at Yethouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Hannah Turnbull. His son James is on the Militia List for 1797, and again in 1801, along with another son, Francis. Ninian (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when David, son of James in Hassendeane, had remission for a series of crimes. This included accompanying him in the theft of 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell. It is possible he is the same Ninian recorded in 1502.

Ninian (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 in a remission for the crimes committed by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirches. Along with Scott, Archibald Armstrong and David Turnbull of Bunchester ‘and other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’, he was said to have stolen several horses from the tenants at Minto, along with burning and stealing goods. Also in 1502 Adam Scott in ‘Hawcheisters’ (probably Highchesters) had a remission for associating with him and Archibald, as well as William Scott and their accomplices. And in that same year Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including the ‘treasonable in-bringing’ of him and Archibald. Ninian (16th C.) son of Christopher and brother of Archibald. He is listed along with several Armstrongs and others when they were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. Along with David, he had a ‘letter of reversion’ and ‘bond of manrent’ in 1528 with George, Lord Home, involving lands in Over Ewesdale. Possibly the same Ninian witnessed a sasine for Meikledale in 1537 (along with George, and Mungo Armstrong). He may be the ‘Ryngand’ whose sons George and Simon are mentioned in a bond of 1557. He may also be ‘Rynzane’ who had a bond with the Kerrs of Feniehirst in 1548 to ‘enter’ 2 Fosters. Another bond at about the same time, along with Hector was for entering Andrew, so these may have been relatives. He may be the ‘Ringen’ listed along with Archibald, Simon and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid; they may all have been brothers (the wording is ambiguous). It is possible that he was the Ninian of Arkleton whose great-grandson Ninian inherited his lands of Arkleton in 1622. Ninian (16th C.) son and heir of David, who (along with another Ninian) had a charter for the lands of Over Parish of Ewesdale in 1524. He produced the original in the presence of the superior Alexander, Lord Home and had it copied. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Ninians. He may be the Ninian who, in 1529/30 with Simon of Whithaugh, along with Archibald and Gavin Elliot, pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvod’ to Fairnilee to answer for crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. Ninian (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as possessor of ‘Arnothill’. He may be the same Ninian who had the neighbouring lands of ‘Welstremis’. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded as tenant of Ralton, along with Robert and Thomas. And one more Ninian was tenant, along with Bartholomew, of the lands of Whisgills, Purvinen and ‘Vtnomound’ in 1541. Ninian (16th C.) recorded being ‘of the Buss’ in 1569. Andrew ‘of the Gyngillis’ was pledge for him, as well as several other Armstrongs. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (d.bef. 1583) probable father of Simon of Whitlawside. In the 1583 letter from the English wardens the Armstrongs of Whitlawside are listed, starting with ‘Ringan’s Archie’ and ‘Gorthe Arnemstronge sonne to Rynyon’, then Simon of Whitlawside and another son of Ringan, ‘Aby’. It seems likely he was father of all 4 men. It is possible he was the same man as ‘the Laird’s Ringan’. He may be the ‘Renzen Armsstrang’ who, along with Archie Nixon, had a bond in 1548 to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners at Ferniehirst. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. He was probably the ‘Niniane Armistragh brethir, servandis to the said young Hector’, along with Rowie, for whom the older Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He is recorded as son of Hector of Harelaw in 1574, when ordered to remain in ward with John Colquhoun of Luss. He was warded with David Barclay of Cullerny in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council; however, it seems he was transferred to John, Lord Maxwell. He was ‘Ecktors Rynion’ among a large group of Elliots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He was also ‘Renyon Armstrong son to Ector’ listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’. He was presumably related to other Armstrongs of Harelaw. Ninian ‘Edmond’s Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘Edmondis Rinyeane in Clayhleyth’ (which could be ‘Claygate’). Ninian (16th C.) recorded in 1585 as ‘of the Neis’ among a large number of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell, all of whom had respite for their crimes in 1585. It is unclear where the location was, but probably around Eskdale, like many of the others he is named alongside (possibly near ‘Naze Hill’). His son Christie is also listed. The similarity of names suggests a close connection with other nearly contemporary Ninians. Christopher in ‘Neis’, along with his brothers Thomas and John were among those complained about by Alexander, Earl of Home in 1610. Ninian ‘the Laird’s Ringan’ (16th C.) son of the Laird of Mangerton. He is probably the Ninian, listed along with his brothers ‘Rowy’ and Ninian, when Christopher of Barnglies was surety for them and other Armstrongs. He is listed in the 1583 letter from the English wardens about the chiefs in Liddesdale. He is there called ‘the lorde Runyon’ and living at Thorniewhats. Probably the same ‘Rinyeane Armstrang’ was listed in 1581, when the man he had been warded with, ‘David Berclay of Cullerny’, stated that he had been delivered to John, Lord Maxwell. He was probably a son of Archibald, since in 1581 he (and ‘Rowe’) were described as ‘father brethir to the Laird of Mangerton’ who was Simon at that time. In 1584 he was ‘the Larde Rynie dwelling in Debitable land’ who signed the bond with the English Wardens, along with his brother ‘the Laird’s Rowie’. He is also recorded in the long 1585 remission as ‘the lairdis Niniane’, along with ‘Joke’ his son. ‘The Laird’s Rowe’ (also mentioned in 1583 and 1585) was his brother. He is surely also the ‘Lairdis Rinziane’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs published about 1594; ‘Lairdis Robbie’ and ‘Rinzian of Wauchope’ are also listed as part of his gang. In 1595 his son Edward was one of those who accused Elliots and others of raiding their farms. Ninian ‘Ringan’, ‘Gaudee’ (16th C.) listed among the Armstrongs of Whithaugh in 1583. He was probably a brother or nephew of Lancelot of Whithaugh. He is probably the ‘Nini-ane Armestrang, called Gawdie’ who was among a group who the Bailie of Hexham complained had stolen horses from near there in 1579. Mungo, ‘called Flie the Gaist’ was also listed and so possibly related. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Auchinbadrig’ in 1580/1 when there was a caution for his son Tom. He was listed (apparently twice) as being in ‘Auchinbedrig’ in the comprehensive 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire. ‘Sim, Thomas and Robert Armestrangis’ are listed right after him, and so possibly related. In 1597 he was ‘of Aughenbedrig’ in a complaint by Captain Musgrave and other Englishmen against him for stealing 600 head of cattle, 20 horses, 600 sheep and goats, and the goods from 20 houses. He was listed in an English letter of 1601 among men accused of the slaughter of the Warden, Sir John Carmichael. He is listed as being ‘in Auchenbedrig’ in the West March, along with his sons ‘Thome, Hew, Lantie, Waltir, Archie, and Dand’. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission of men from Dumfriesshire as being tenant at Broomholm, along with ‘Johne, Ekie and Antonie Armestrangis thair’. ‘Rowe’ is listed as tenant in the same place, so probably another close relative. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) brother of ‘Dickie of Dryhope’. In 1590 he (along with his brother) was part of a group of Armstrongs and Croziers accused by Ralph Anderson of ‘Davishieile’ of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Gingills (16th C.) listed in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of ‘Allenton’ and ‘Linbriggs’, taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He is recorded as ‘Renyon Armestrong of the Gyngills’, along with Will Elliot of Fiddleton, making it likely his lands were in Ewesdale. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Wauchope (16th C.) recorded in Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He is listed as part of ‘Lardis

Airmstrong

Rinzians Gang’, along with the ‘Laird’s Robbie’. He is probably the ‘Niniane Armistrang of Wau-chopdaill’ recorded in 1569 along with ‘the Lairdis Rowy’ and John (son of John’s Christie), as the men for whom Christie of Broomholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. Ninian ‘Sandy’s Ringan’ (d.c.1605) son of Alexander, probably ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, making him brother of Kinmont Willie. He was listed in 1569 along with Archibald, as brothers of ‘Will of Kynmonth’. In 1569 he may be the ‘Niniane Armistrang’ listed along with ‘Will of Kynmonth’ and ‘Cristie Armstrang brethren’, as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Armistrang’, who was a pledge held in St.
Andrews Castle; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. In 1580 his son Tom was warded with Lord Hay of Yester. In 1581 his son ‘Rowe’ was warded with Lord Maxwell, along with ‘Cristie Armstrong’. He is probably ‘Sandes Niniane’ in 1582 when listed among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope; his brother Archibald was also listed. He is recorded in 1583 as ‘Sandes Rynyon’, along with his son Thomas. In 1600 he accompanied his son Thomas, as well as ‘Lancie, Hew, Archie and Watt’, probably also his sons, and other Armstrongs and supporters in an attack upon Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches, in which Carmichael was killed. He was also ‘Sandies Rynyon and his bayrns’, who burned a mill of the Johnstone’s and raided ‘Bengall’, before being reset by Geordie’s Sandy. He is probably the ‘Sandy’s Ninian’ whose son David was executed for murder and fire-raising in 1604. One account of the incident with the Warden Carmichael states that ‘a brother of auld William Airmistrayngis of Kenmwt, quha was callit Alexander Airmstrayng, alias Sandes Ringand’ was the person responsible for the start of the affair (although this is surely confused between father and son, it nevertheless seems clear he was related to Kinmont Willie). The story goes that he met with the new Warden to sound him out, but the Warden’s companions put egg yolks in his scabbard and mocked him. So on the following day he rode out with his sons and killed Carmichael with a shot from a ‘hagbut’. He is probably the ‘Sander Rynion, a rebellious male-factor’ recorded in an English letter of 1605 after he was apprehended. Whether he was executed is unclear, but likely. Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed among the Armstrongs and their followers who were tried in 1605 for burning Langholm House, stealing cattle etc. He is named as ‘in Tortwne’, which could feasibly be ‘Tarcoon’, west of the Hollows. John Michaelson and Christie Armstrong, ‘Nan’s Christie’ are also listed in the same place. Ninian ‘Rowe’s Ninian’ (16th/17th C.)
recorded among the Armstrongs and others who were tried in 1605 for the burning of Langholm House and other crimes in 1581. He was tenant in ‘Murthome’, which is just to the south of Langholm. Charges against him were dropped. However, he was among men complained about by Archibald, Earl of Home in 1610. Ninian ‘New-naid Ringan’ (d.c.1605) tried in 1605 along with Will of Rowanburn for assisting and resetting the King’s rebels. These specific outlaws were John Murray of Staplegordon, ‘Cuddie’ of Bankhouse, Christie of Langholm, Andrew of Langholm (possibly Armstrongs) and John Beattie of the Shiel. He was convicted and sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Tweed (16th C.) from the Tweed family, he was brother of Hector and Jock. In 1576 there was an order to allow him to be released from ward with Sir David Wemyss, as pledge for ‘the gang of Quhithauch’. In 1579 he is recorded as ‘Rynione’ among 400 Armstrongs and followers are said to have killed Uswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8); Eckie of Tweed was also listed. He was recorded among the Armstrongs involved in the ambush of Scotts, Gled-stains and others at Whithaugh in 1580. He was ‘alias Tweden’ in 1581/2 when accused (along with his servant, who was another Armstrong, and others) of leading a group that raided the farm of Bellendean, stealing 60 sheep; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He is ‘Rynyon Armstron’ called Rynyon of Twedon’ when listed among the near relatives of Lancelot of Whithaugh in 1583; Hector and Jock of Tweed are also mentioned, presumably his brothers. In 1590 he was accused along with ‘Robin the Tailor’, Matthew, ‘Alexander’s Archie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner.
Also in 1590 he was accused, along with Ingram of Castleton and ‘Quentin’s Archie’ Crozier, of stealing sheep from the Herons of Chipchase, and 6 months later of stealing horses from the same place. He is probably ‘the Tayllor’ listed in 1590 along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Turnbulls, Shiel-and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He was also listed among Ells, Armstrongs, Turn-bulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Shells’. He was ‘Niniane Armeastrang of Tueden’ among the 180 followers of Sir James Johnstone who had respite in 1594 for the killing of Lord Maxwell and others. He may be one of the 3 Armstrongs from Tweeden who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. He was ‘Ninian Armeastrang of Tueden or of the Maynis’ among the Armstrongs who signed the bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch) of the West March in 1599. Probably the same man was accused in 1606 of murdering Andrew Smith and dismembering the nose of Thomas Tweedie. He was referred to as being ‘callit Ninianes of Tueidan’. Archibald, ‘Fair Airchie’ and Andrew Henderson, servant of the Laird of Mangerton, were also accused. Robert Scott of Haining acted as surety. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was ‘in Tynneis Burne’ and presumably related to other Armstrongs of Tinnsburn. Ninian ‘Ringan’ of Arkleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when his son ‘Ebie’ was declared a fugitive and in 1611 when ‘Ebie’ failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. Also in 1611 his son Francis was acquitted of charges in Dumfries court. He may have been father of the Ninian who inherited Arkleton in 1622. He may also have been father of Esther, who was heir-portioner of Arkleton and married John, 2nd son of William Elliot of Falnash. Jean was probably another heir-portioner (and hence his daughter or other near relative) when she gave her permission in 1623 for Robert Elliot of Falnash selling the farm to Adam Cunningham. Ninian (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1612 of aiding John, Lord Maxwell, who was on the run for murder. Along with ‘Johnne Amullieyn, in Cruikis’ (probably John Milligan) he hid Maxwell and bought him a gun and shoes in Dumfries. He is stated (by Pitcairn) to be ‘Ninianes Thome’, but this is surely an error for ‘Tom’s Ninian’. He may have been son of the Tom who was involved in the death of Sir John Carmichael in 1601. The pair were said to have kept Lord Maxwell at ‘the Langwoid and Schillingtonehill’, which were probably near Langholm. He was sentenced to be hanged in Edinburgh. Ninian of Whitlawside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 as a member of the commission under Sir William of Cranston for keeping peace on the Border. His name is listed as ‘Niniane Armeastrang of Whitleysyd’. He was surely related to the earlier Ninian of Whitlawside. Ninian of Arkleton (16th/17th C.) served heir to his great-grandfather Ninian of Arkleton in 1622. He may have been son of the Ninian recorded a decade earlier. Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Nershill’ in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. Ninian (17th C.) along with Jock, he is recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Greenesse’ in Liddesdale. This is probably the modern Greens near Newcastle. Abie, who was convicted of murder in 1623 was probably related to him. Ninian of Auchinbedrig (d.bef. 1641) along with his sons was possessor of the lands that had probably belonged to his family for generations. In 1641 they were granted to Sir Richard Graham. Ninian (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Shiel and their children included: Adam (b.1745); John (b.1747); Grissel (b.1749); James (b.1751); Isabel (b.1755); and Ninian (b.1762). Paton (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Patton Armestronge of the Harlawe’. He was probably brother or other close relative of Hector of Harelaw. It is possible he was the same man recorded in 1585. In 1590 he was ‘Pawtie of Harlawe’ when among men accused of rieving from Bewcastle. He was ‘Pawtie of Harelaw’ in 1596, among Armstrongs and Elliots accused of being part of several raids into England. He could also be the ‘Petti Armstrang’ who was burned in a tower in 1602 by the English, claiming that he had been one of the murderers of the Warden Sir John Carmichael. The name could be a diminutive of Patrick or Peter. Paton (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as ‘Patone Armestrang’. He was tenant at Betholme, along with George. It is unclear whether his first name was a nickname or corruption of some other name. Later in the list comes ‘Niniane Armestrang, sone to Patonis Niniane’, who may therefore be a relative. Paton (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was ‘of the Hill’, although it is unclear where this was. John of the Hill was also listed. Peter (1727/8-91) herald at Wells. He married Elspeth Armstrong, who died in 1791, aged 63. Their son John died at Doveshaughbraehead in 1807, aged 45. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Peter (18th/19th C.) born in Hawick, he was a herd boy at Brauxholme. He emigrated to Canada about 1812, settling near Perth, up the St. Lawrence River. A few years later he coincidentally met Tibbie Paterson, who had been ‘byre-woman’ at Brauxholme. The pair married, had 3 children and for many years lived in a clearing deep in the woods of Lanark County. Quentyn (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when said to have been involved in a raid on Bewcastle, along with Fosters, Watsons and 20 other Scotsmen, in which Michael Purdom was killed. His name is recorded as ‘Whynytyn Airm- strang’. Quentyn (16th C.) recorded in Gattonside in 1581 when he received sasine for 2 acres of land in Gattonside and granted a reversion on the lands for the sum of £68. Quentyn (16th C.) head of a group of Armstrongs and Littles who raided the farm of ‘Hairhoip’ in Tweeddale in 1582. He is recorded as ‘Quintene Armstrong, callit Pawtonis Quintene’, and hence was presumably son of Paton. The family were probably from Ewesdale. He could be the same as the Quentyn recorded in 1585. Quentyn (16th C.) recorded in the comprehensive 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as ‘Quinitting’. He was brother to Christie in ‘Carron’, as well as brother to Andrew and Geordie. His son Christie is also listed. Richard ‘Skaw’ (15th/16th C.) probably from the Liddesdale area. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’ had a remission for ‘re-setting’ him in his thefts, particularly for stealing 200 sheep from David Hopppringle at ‘Fechane’, also with the help of Alexander Scott. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as ‘Richardi Armstrang’ when Andrew Tait had remission for associating with him. Richard ‘Dickie of Dryhope’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Dik Armstrong of Dryup’ in a list of 1583, among the near relatives of Simon of Mangerton. It was stated that he lived at ‘Hygh Morgarton’ (i.e. ‘High Mangerton’) and married a Scottish woman. He is recorded in 1586 along with ‘Lard’s Jock’ of raiding into Bewcastle and recorded in 1587 as ‘Dick of Dryeup’ when (along with the ‘Laird’s Jock’ and ‘Lancie of Whisgills’) he was accused by Englishman Andrew Routledge of stealing cattle and goods. In 1590 he was part of a group of Armstrongs and Croziers accused by Ralph Anderson of ‘Davisleile’ of stealing oxen and ransoming an Anderson prisoner; his brother Ringan is also listed. Also in 1590 there is a complaint by the Stories of ‘Peilehill’ that 2 years earlier ‘Dick of Driup, the Whisgills, and 100 men’ killed ‘a mylner, John Tailior, and William of the Park’, as well as burning the mill and 12 houses and stealing 100 cows. Additionally ‘Hecky Noble’ complained in 1590 that he had led a group of about 100 Scotsmen ‘burnyng to dede his soune John, and his wief great with child’, as well as burning 9 houses and stealing 200 cows’. Furthermore he is ‘Dick of Dryupp’ listed in 1590 when accused among Armstrongs and others of riev- ing from Bewcastle. He is ‘Dick of Dryupp’ men- tioned in an indenture of 1594/5, but said to not be in Liddesdale. He is said to have been leader of the Armstrongs during the rescue of Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been a younger son of Thomas of Mangerton. It is unclear where this Dryhope might have been – ‘Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, And the nevir a word o lrear had he’ [T]. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Riche Armstronge called Carhauk’. He was probably related to the Armstrongs of Chingills and of Whitlawside. It is unclear what ‘Carhauk’ refers to. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as ‘Ekkes Riche’ among the Armstrongs of Langholme. He was thus presumably son of an Alexander or Hector. Richard (18th/19th C.) hosier in Hawick. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Richard (19th C.) resident of Kershopefoot, recorded in 1879. Richmond (1810-40) son of Southdean schoolmaster Thomas. He took over from his father for a few years, from about 1837. He is recorded as schoolmaster at Southdean in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Cuthberto’ (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. In 1494 he was accused of stealing cattle along with other Armstrongs. He may be the Robert listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He may have been hanged along with other family members in 1530.

Airmstrong

Robert (16th C.) listed in 1541 as tenant of Ralton, along with Ninian and Thomas. He may be the same man as Cuthbert, brother of Thomas, Laird of Mangerton; both Thomas of Mangerton and Cuthbert were tenants of Over Gubbislie. Robert ‘Helen’s Hob’ (16th C.) recorded in 1561 in a bond between Armstrongs and Bruntons, signed in Selkirk. He was listed as ‘alias Helynys Hob’, presumably son of Helen, and was likely related to the other men listed in the bond, including John of Ralton, John in Eilrig and Hob’s John (possibly his son). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. He was listed as ‘in Millangilsyde’, but it is un- clear where this was. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) son of Andrew of Ginglys. There was a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573. Robert (16th C.) probably distinct from Hob, son of Andrew of Ginglys. In the same year, 1573, he was recorded being re-entered in Blackness. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when Lord Maxwell gave caution for him and his uncle ‘Cristie Armstrong of
Airmstrong

Auchingavill’. In 1582 James, Earl of Morton, was given a decree of forfeiture for failing to produce him and Christie. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) probably son of John, called ‘of Whithaugh’, and hence likely to have been grandson of the Laird of Whithaugh. He is noted in a 1583 list of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and said to have married a daughter of Jamie Foster of Stane-garthside. He is probably the Hob of Whithaugh recorded along with Simon of Whithaugh, among Armstrongs accused in 1587/8 of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. Perhaps the same ‘Hob of Whithaugh’ is recorded in 1590 among several Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He may also be the ‘Hob of Whithawghie son to John Eamont of Hilhouse’ accused with other Whithaugh Armstrongs of stealing from the ‘Crages’ of ‘Walton wodde’; however, it is unclear whether ‘Eamont’ is somehow Armstrong, or Elliot, or something else). He may be the ‘Robine Armstrong of Whithaugh’ listed in 1590 among other Armstrongs accused of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington; the others named were Hob ‘the Tailor’, Airchie (son to the old Laird of Whithaugh) and Alexander’s Airchie. Robert ‘Hob the Tailor’ (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding the English farm of Middleton Hall in 1589. Some others listed lived in Hobkirk Parish, but it is seems likely he was from Liddesdale. He was also accused (along with Rutherfords, Laidlaws, Croziers and Elliots) of riving from Woodburn in 1589. In 1590 he was accused along with Ringan of Tweedene, Matthew, ‘Alexander’s Airchie’ and Adam Elliot of stealing from ‘Trewhit’ and taking Robert Storie prisoner; his name was recorded there as ‘Robine the tailor’. Also in 1590 he is recorded along with ‘Edward Elliot son to Davye’ when accused of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase, and separly listed with ‘Quentin’s Airchie’, ‘Adey Farlamdes’ and Hob Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ of stealing horses from the same place a couple of years earlier. Additionally he is probably ‘Hob the tayleer’ listed in 1590 along with other Armstrongs and Elliots, accused of riving from Englishman John Armstrong. He was further accused in 1590, along with Airchie (son to the old Laird of Whithaugh), Robin of Whithaugh and Alexander’s Airchie, of stealing livestock from Edward Shaftoe of Bavington. Note that there appears to have been a contemporary Elliot with the same forename and nickname, so it is possible there was only one man and confusion about whether he was an Armstrong or an Elliot. Robert ‘Hob’, ‘Reid Neb’ (16th C.) probably a brother or other near relative of ‘Reid’ Andrew. The pair are probably the ‘Andrew and ‘red nebb’ Hob Armstrong’ listed among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590. Robert ‘Robbie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘the Laird’s Robbie’ along with ‘Lairdis Ringeane’ and ‘Ringan of Wauchope’ on Monipennie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs. He may have been brother of Ringan (i.e. Ninian), but it is unclear which Laird would have been their father. He could be the same as ‘the Laird’s Rowie’. Robert ‘Robbie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Langholm’ when listed among those said by an English informer to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was perhaps brother of Christie of Barnglies, who was listed along with him. His name is given as ‘Roby of the Langholm’. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Quhithauch’ when he was listed among men convicted and executed in Jedburgh in 1611. It is possible that he was the Robert associated with Whithaugh who was recorded in 1583. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of ‘John’s Christie’, and hence grandson of Johnnie of Gilnockie. He may have been known as ‘Rowe’, in which case he may be the same as one of the contemporary Rolands. Robert ‘the Cumin Craftsman’ (16th/17th C.) smith in Hawick, who was one of 3 men acquitted in 1621 of a charge of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public and of shooting their neighbours’ domestic birds. Robert (16th/17th C.) referred to as being ‘callit Rakkes in Syde’ in 1623, when he gave a bond for Francie ‘of Tweidane’ and Archie ‘Rakkes’ at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh. He was also ‘callit Raccas in Side’ when he entered James ‘Dittone in Greanay’. The modern name of his lands is unclear, but it was perhaps somewhere around the Canonbie area. Archie was his ‘broyer sone’ (i.e. nephew), and he was surely also related to William ‘callit Rakkes’, who is also recorded in 1623, and perhaps John ‘Rakkass’, recorded in 1585. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Greena in 1623. He and his brother John were entered at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh by Robert Elliot of Dinlabyre. Robert ‘in Chapelhill’ (17th C.) recorded in the 1641 Town Book as an appraiser for a horse. He was presumably tenant at Chapelhill. He could be the Robert, married to Elizabeth Hay, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1650. Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘called Syd’ on a list of ‘mostroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. He may be related to John of Side. Robert (17th C.) resident at Dawstonburn in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Alexander was also listed there and so presumably a close relative. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Fairloans in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Castleton. He appears to have been a tenant, but with the name of the farm not recorded. Rev. Robert (1661–1732) 2nd son of John, physician of Kelso, he was licensed by Chirnside Presbytery in 1691 and admitted as minister of Castleton Parish in 1693. He married Hannah Tennant (who died in 1702) and later Christian Mowat (who died in 1753, aged 78). His children included: Margaret, who later cared for her brother John in London; John (b.c.1709), who was a doctor, poet and essayist, famous in his day for ‘The Art of Preserving Health’; George, who was also a doctor and medical writer; William (b.1710), who succeeded him as minister of Castleton; Helen; and Elizabeth. Robert (1716/7–1821) resident of Liddesdale. He was described as being ‘of a cheerful, kind, and serious deportment, and pursued hard labour with continued perseverance till the autumn before his death’. He died at Dinkabyre, at the age of 104. Robert (18th/19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel, taking over after Michael Stevenson died in 1789. He was there for 10 years, when his wife died and he found that he had amassed £10,000. He then purchased a farm near Langholm, married a younger woman and settled there. He was recorded as a vintner in Hawick in 1790 when he paid the tax for having a female servant as well as a male ‘drawer’, and for having a waiter in 1791–97. He was also recorded as a vintner in Hawick on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely the ‘Robert Armstrong Post Master in Hawick’ who was taxed as owner of 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1790/1, 1791/2 and 1792/3 (that could be the same carriages owned by the pervious proprietor of the Tower Inn). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Pinglehole in Castle ton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Stobs in 1797, when he was working for Sir William Elliott. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Glendivian in Ewesdale in 1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Bailie Robert (1770–1853) younger son of William, schoolmaster in Hob Kirk, and brother of Adam, who was in the Russian service. He was a grandson of Rev. Robert Riccalton of Hob Kirk, and it is said he was a direct descendant of Johnnie of Gilnockie. He was a printer, publisher, bookseller and druggist in Hawick, as well as serving as Magistrate from 1814. He was recorded as a printer in 1801 when he witnessed a baptism for William Brown (and another in 1802 for John Wilson, whose wife was Ann Armstrong). He was Hawick Postmaster in the period 1809–52. He seems easy to confuse with another Robert, who was landlord at the Tower Inn in the 1790s, being recorded as Post Master in some of those years when taxed for owning carriages. His business was on Silver Street (about No. 6) and later at 29 High Street. He started as an apprentice with Dr. James Wilson (of Otterburn) in Hawick, but at the end of the 19th century was working as a clerk for the British Chronicle in Kelso. In 1796 he wrote a spoof letter, based on a story he heard from Wat Inglis, which was duly published, leading the authorities to think that revolution had broken out in Hawick! The Chronicle went defunct and he purchased their printing press, moving with it to Hawick, and essentially taking over as local printer from George Caw. He was said to be extremely diligent at editing and overseeing the presses. At least 44 publications came from his presses, including many fine book, such as the ‘Banquet of Euphrosyne’ (1811), and the works of local ministers Dr. Somerville and Dr. Charters. It was said that he refused to publish James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ because of the verse that attacked the Hawick Bailies. When Gilbert Burns (brother of the poet) wrote to Hawick, declining an invitation, it was to him the letter was addressed. He also sold books and succeeded Mr. Inglis as Hawick postmaster. He was Bailie in 1816 when he witnessed a declaration regarding the birth of William Ker. He was listed as a printer and bookseller on Silver Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory, as well as librarian of the Subscription Library there. He was still listed as the librarian in Slater’s 1852 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a bookseller and printer. He was said to be ‘very doubtful, haughty and not well liked’, but possessing a great amount of energy and common sense. When he was first informed that he was a Bailie, Caleb Rutherford, waiting for his customary dram, instead was sent flying into the street and onto a heap of dung. He may have firstly married Ann Fraser, and had children including Jean (b.1805) and Adam (b.1809). In 1836 he married Elizabeth Waldie, who was recorded living with him in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. They had a large family, all of whom pre-deceased him (his 2nd daughter Margaret and youngest daughter Jane, both died of typhus in 1817 aged 17). Agnes (b.c.1800 in England) was also living with him in 1841, and was surely a relative. His wife was listed as a widow (as well as Proprietress of Property & Librarian) at 5 Silver Street in 1861. After he was buried at Hobbirk, the inhabitants of Hawick erected a monument there. A silhouette portrait of him exists. Robert Lindsay (1788/9–1863) son of Adam, who was born in Hobbirk Parish (and not son of William, as incorrectly marked on his grandfather’s gravestone at Hobbirk), with his mother being Isabella Lindsay from Jedburgh, who had attracted Burns’ attentions in 1787. Like his father he entered the service of the Russian emperor, where he was known as ‘Roman Adamovich Armstrong’. He must have attended school in Jedburgh, where his great friend was Thomas Shortreed, later Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He was sent back to Scotland to attend Edinburgh University, where he befriended Sir Walter Scott. He became metallurgical chief in his father’s Olonets ironworks and from 1843–58 was Director-General of the Imperial Mint in St. Petersburg, with the rank of Lieut.-Gen. in the Russian service, and was named a member of the Expert Committee of the Corps of Mining Engineers. He died in St. Petersburg. Note there is some uncertainty over the years of his life, which are also given as 1791–1864. His son, Col. Armstrong, was said to have been the owner of Mary Queen of Scots’ House in Jedburgh. Robert (19th C.) postman in Newcastleton in the 1860s, living on Langholm Street. He could be the 70-year old labourer living at 2 Langholm Street in 1861, with his wife Mary and daughter Agnes. Robert (b.1829/30) shoemaker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street with his brother Alexander. Later in the 1860s he was on Douglas Square. Robert Bruce (19th C.) author of ‘History of Liddesdale’. He was a friend of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Robert ‘Bert’, M.B.E. (1924–2019) official Common Riding Song Singer 1973–84. Son of George, he was youngest of 10 siblings and born in Dickson Street. He was a member of the choir at Wilton School and first sang at the Common Riding in 1935. He worked at Pesco’s and did National Service in the Navy, returning to Hawick, where he lived for the rest of his life. He also worked at Deanbrae, Pringle’s and William Lockie. He sang at his first Colour Bussing in 1950 and for a long time was the first singer at the Callants’ Club annual dinner. He was also a keen supporter of the Greens, with 3 of his brothers playing for the team. Outside the Common Riding, his signature song was ‘Oh Lord it’s hard to be humble’, which led to him briefly playing No. 8 for Hawick in his 80s. He became a favourite singer in care homes around the Hawick area. He received the M.B.E. for services to entertainment in 2002 and in 2017 received the Provost Council’s Achievement Award. He sang ‘The Hawick Callant’ and recites ‘Robby Dye’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’. He was also recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project in 2004. Described as a gentleman by all who knew him, he kept his sense of humour to the last. Roland the Laird’s Rowie (16th C.) probably son of Archibald of Mangerton. In 1569 he is ‘Rowy Armstrong callit the Lairdis Rowy’ when listed along with John (son of John’s Christie) and Ninian of Wauchopedale, as the men for whom Christie of Broomholm was held as pledge in Dupplin Castle. He was probably also the ‘Rowy’ listed in 1569 along with Sim and Ninian, sons to the Laird of Mangerton, when Christopher of Barnclies was surety for them and other Armstrongs. He may be the ‘Rowy Armstrong in Brintscheilhill, callit the Landis [probably ‘Lord’s] Rowy’ who was warded with Alexander Stewart of Garlees in 1574; however it is unclear where ‘Brintscheillhill’ was. He is probably the man transcribed as ‘Robe Armstrongis’ in 1581 among Armstrongs and others who complained to the Privy Council about several actions by Scotts and their allies. He is stated there to be brother of Ringan and ‘father brethir to the Laird of Mangertoun’, who was Simon. He is listed in 1583 among the chiefs of Liddesdale, among the men said to be closely related to Simon of Mangerton. He dwelled in Tarras-side and married a daughter of Auld Archie Graham. In 1584 he was ‘the Larde Rowye’ who signed the bond with the English Wardens, along with his brother ‘the Laird’s Ringan’. He is also recorded in the long 1585 remission as ‘the lairdis Rowe’, along with ‘Johne and Ringane’ and ‘Thome’ his sons. ‘The Laird’s Ninian’ (or ‘Ringan’) was his brother. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with other Armstrongs who Hector of Harelaw served as pledge for. He is listed along with his brother Ninian, the pair probably being sons of the elder Hector of Harelaw and ‘servandis to the said young Hector’.

‘Rowe’ (16th C.) listed in 1580 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle and ordered presented to the Privy Council. This was along with Sandy’s Christie, a nephew of Sim’s Tom and Gavin Elliot, son of Scot’s Hob. He is also recorded in 1581 as ‘Rowe Armstrong, son to Sandies Rinyeane’ when he and Christie were warded with Lord Maxwell. Roland ‘Rowe’ of Broomholm (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His farm was near Langholm. Ninian was listed as tenant in the same place, along with John, Ekie and Anthony, so were probably close relatives. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Howdail’ in 1623. Law Foster and James ‘Dattoune’ were accused of stealing sheep from him and ‘Jokkas’ Watson, from their lands of Greena. Roman Adamovich see Robert Lindsay. Rosie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when ‘Scabbit Hob’ Nixon was accused of stealing sheep from her tenants of Mangerton. It seems likely that she was widow of an earlier Laird of Mangerton. Serge (16th C.) recorded in the long remission of 1585 for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. He was the brother of Kinmont Willie, although it is unclear if his name was a nickname or short for something. He is listed in 1585 among the offspring of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, his name transcribed there as ‘Forge Armestrong called Sandes Forge’. It is possible the first name is an error for something else. Simon ‘Sim’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510 among a list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes from the Privy Council. Thomas, George and Alexander are also listed, so were possibly related. He might be the same as Simon of Whithaugh.

Simon ‘Meikle Sym’ (d.1527) said to have been killed by John Johnstone of that Ilk. This act intensified the feud between the Armstrongs and the Johnstones. It is unclear which branch of the family he came from. Simon of Whithaugh (d.bef. 1536), possibly the eldest son of Johnnie of Gilnockie. In 1525 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to George, Lord Home (presumably acting as superior) for his lands in Ewesdale, which included Mosspeebie, Unthank, Fiddleton, Mosspaul and others. In 1529/30 with Ninian, along with Archibald and Gavin Elliot, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot ‘Flaskvdo’ to Fairnilee to answer for attacks and other crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. By 1536 he was deceased, having been executed for his crimes. His lands and goods were forfeited to the King and then given to his son and heir Andrew, together with David, called ‘the Lady’ and David’s brother Martin (who may have been his brothers also). In 1537 his ‘takkis, steddings and wodsettis’ in Ewesdale were granted to Robert, Lord Maxwell. Simon ‘Sim the Laird’ (16th C.) listed in an English letter of 1525 as one of the chiefs of the Armstrongs, along with Davie the Lady and others, who were captured by the Earl of Angus. He is also recorded in 1531/2 as ‘Sym Armstrong, callit the Lard’ when he and Clement Crozier had remission for burning Little Newton, as well as the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knycht, in cumpany with Inglismen’. He is also listed in 1535 among the Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. His name is given as ‘Symon Armestrang, called Sym the Larde’. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Whithaugh. In 1535/6 he was further convicted of stealing 2 oxen from Craik and a horse from Howpasley, as well as having the theft of 100 cattle from Craik repeated. Other crimes stated include burning and stealing 60 cows from Howpasley, stealing sheep from the King’s shepherds, furth of the lands of Braiddie in the Forest and assisting Alexander (‘Evil-willit Sandy’) and others while supposedly being in the King’s ward. The sentence was hanging and forfeit of all his lands and possessions. Simon (16th C.) tenant of the lands of ‘Wowlyk’ (probably the modern Woolhope) according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was listed as ‘serjendo’ (i.e. sergeant), suggesting he held an official role, perhaps as assistant to the Keeper of Hermitage. He may have been related to other Armstrongs who were tenants of farms near Copshaw. He could also be the same as Simon of Tinnisburn. Either he or another Simon was tenant of Nether Foulwood, Wedoshiels, Staneygill, Redmoss and Flatt in 1541. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant, with Christopher, of the lands of ‘Dalferno’ in Liddesdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. Simon (16th C.) listed along with Archibald, Ringan and Jenkin in 1541, accused of having killed Englishman Arthur Graham on a raid. Some of them were brothers, perhaps all of them. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon ‘Reid’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘rede Sym’ in 1541 when he was listed among Scotsmen who had reset English rebels. In his case he reset ‘Jenkyn Nykson’. His nickname (presumably meaning ‘red’) may distinguish him from other contemporary Simons. In 1569 he was ‘Sym Armistrang of the Wodheid calit Reid Sym’, listed among men that Archibald of Mangerton was pledge for. One of his sons was listed in 1569 among men for whom Thomas (brother of the Laird of Mangerton) was held as pledge; he is listed as ‘sone to Reid Sym’, with no forename given. Simon (16th C.) possibly a descendant of Simon of Whithaugh. He is recorded as ‘Sym’ in a bond of 1556 to present Richard Nixon. He may also be the ‘Syme Armstrang, son to Rynqand’ who is recorded in a bond of 1557 involving his brother George, as well as Hector of Harelaw and Thomas of Chingills, who may have been close relatives. Simon ‘Wanton Sim’ (16th C.) one of the men accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. He was summoned to appear at the market cross of Jedburgh, suggesting he was from Roxburghshire or Liddesdale. Not appearing, he was convicted of treason and sentenced to the ‘hieast punishmet destinait of the lawis of this realme’. He was listed in 1569 as ‘Sym Armistrang callit Wantoun Sym’, among fugitives from Harelaw. If he survived he may be the ‘Wanton Sym in Quhitley Syde’ listed in about the 1580s. He married 2 English women, the 1st being a daughter of Robert Foster and the 2nd being Thomas Graham’s daughter. Simon ‘Sym’ of Tinnisburn (16th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton. In 1537/8 he was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He was presumably the Simon who was tenant of ‘Tynneswoodgrene’ in 1541 and may also be the Simon who was tenant of Woolhope at the same time (however, it is possible these were different generations). His son was ‘Symmis Thome in Tynneisburne’, who was recorded in 1580 when his nephew was warded in Blackness Castle. His son Francis was convicted of theft (along with other Armstrongs, Elliots and Nixons) in 1580/1. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Sym Armistran alsua his brother’ among men for whom Thomas ‘brother to Mangertoum’ was held as a pledge in Castle Semple. This suggests he was not the same man as Simon of Mangerton, but there may be confusion over names and relationships. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men who Archibald of Mangerton served as pledge for. His name is given as ‘Symon Armistrang callit the Feid’. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Simon (d.c.1600) 9th Laird of Mangerton, son of Archibald. He was also called ‘Sym of Tweeden’. He was probably the ‘Sym’ listed in 1569 along with Ninian and ‘Rowy’, all sons to the Laird of Mangerton, when Christopher of Barngles was surety for them and other Armstrongs. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had pledged, along with Lancie of Whithaugh, that they would present any of their friends and servants who ‘offendit againis the subjectis of England or Scotland’ with 6 days warning, under pain of 2000 merks; however, it was ruled that their supporters had ‘not keipit gude reule, bot hes offendit againis the subjectis of Scotland and England’. Also in 1578/9 John Carmichael had caution to enter him and Lancie of Whithaugh before the King and Privy Council. In 1581 he was allied with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Also in 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was probably the Laird of Mangerton who was accused in 1582 by Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave of burning his barns full of grains; the ‘Laird’s Jock’ and ‘Sim’s Thom’ (possibly his son) were also mentioned. Along with Lancie of Whithaugh and 2 Elliots, he was also denounced by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He is listed as the Laird of Mangerton in the letter of 1583 from Thomas Musgrave listing the chief men of Liddesdale. In 1583 he was ‘The laerde of Mountgerton’ among the men considered by the English as principal offenders in the West Marches. He was taken prisoner in 1583/4 and held at Carlisle, the comment being that ‘his tak- ing is greatly wondered at for it was never heard that a laird of Mangerton was taken in his own house either in peace or war without the hurt or loss of man’. He was accused of being on a raid into England in 1587, along with the Laird of and Whithaugh, John of Kinmont and about 600 others, in which 15 houses were burned, 24 men taken prisoner and £900 worth of livestock and goods taken. In 1587 it was said by Lord Hunsdon that he and James Chisholme helped save Captain ‘Bellowsis’ from being killed in a fray, and instead had him taken prisoner. In 1590 there was a complaint against him by the tenants of ‘Langupp’ in England for the theft of livestock and goods. There is also a letter to him from Bothwell in 1589 encouraging him to hunt venison with the Laird of Whithaugh and Martin Elliot (for the King’s wedding), but to refrain from attacking the tenants of Francis Dacre while he was the King's guest in Edinburgh. However, in 1590 Bothwell and others promised to the English Wardens to deliver him to the King. Still, in 1590/1 there was a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and other leaders to deliver him and about 50 other Armstrongs, Elliots, Crozier, Nixons, Beatties and Scotts. He is recorded as 'Sym of Maygertoun' at the head of the list of Armstrongs who signed a bond with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to be responsible for any complaints by the English against the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He was accused in 1593 of being part of a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots who raided Tyndale, but the King's Council were 'credeblelie enformede that Manger-тон was not att this attempte'. In 1597 he was still listed among demands for pledges by the English Wardens, and was recorded being delivered to Lord Scrope as a prisoner in Carlisle. He is 'Sym of Mangerton' when listed in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands about a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who had been stealing from his lands. In 1599 he is among a group of Armstrongs and Elliots who wrote to the English Warden requesting that they place 4 of their men into custody as pledges. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Foster of Kershopefoot. His sons included: Archibald, who succeeded; 'Hingle' (or 'Ungle'); Simon 'of Runch-bach'; and Lancelot, who was also recorded in 1599. He is probably also the Laird of Mangerton whose daughter married Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. His initials and those of his wife ('SA-EE') are recorded on an armorial stone built into the ruins of Mangerton Tower. Some genealogies have his death in 1583, but it must have been later. Simon 'Sim' of Puddingburn (16th C.) recorded in an English letter (written by Henry Leigh) of 1600 as a notorious riever of the Borders, who was 'abroad with his gward of theeves, to rob the passengers to the fayre'. It seems likely this was an Armstrong, but since there is no other mention of this man, he may simply be the same as Simon of Mangerton (or a fabrication). Simon 'Geordie's Sim' (16th C.) probably from Ewesdale, and possibly son of George in Arkleton. He was part of a group of Armstrongs and Littles who raided the farm of 'Hairhoip' in Tweeddale in 1582. He is recorded as 'Sym Arm- strang, callit Geordeis Sim', and listed along with Quentin, son of Paton. Simon 'Young Sim' (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the near relatives of Si- mon of Mangerton. He was probably a cousin of the Laird. He lived at the Flatt and married a daughter of 'Robin's Rowie' Foster. Simon of Whithaugh (d.1606/7) eldest son of Lancelot of Whithaugh. In 1569 his father was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for him, 'Simne of the Manis' and John of Quhithaugh'. In 1576 he was listed as the son and heir apparent of Lanie when several Border Lairds were surety for him 'that he during all the days of his life sould continew ane obedient subject ... and on na wayis commit thift'; this pledge was deemed to have been broken by 1578/9, when his sureties were Lanie of Whithaugh, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Walter Scott of Goldielands, Simon Scott tutor of Thirlestane and Robert Elliot of Reidhengh. In 1579 he was 'Simne Armstronge younge Lard of Whitaughes' who along with 400 Armstrong followers are said to have killed Uswoild Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8). In 1580 he was probably the son of Lanie of Whithaugh, who was involved in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is probably the 'Young Lard of Whitaugh' accused in 1582 by the English (along with the Old Laird and others) of stealing livestock and goods and killing 4 men. And additionally there was a complaint against him and 24 others for a raid on 'Caphteton Whithouse' in 1583. Also in 1583 he was the yonge lord his sonne', appearing right after his father Lance on an English list of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He is probably the young Laird accused of being on a raid on the tenants of 'Haddingbriggs and Rattenrawe' in England in 1587, along with the Laird of Mangerton, Jock of Kinmont and about 600 others. He was listed among those accused of another raid in 1587, on the tenants of the Laird of Bellister, along with his brothers Andrew and Francis, as well as other Armstrongs and Elliots; his servant 'Alexanders Arche' was also listed. He is among Armstrongs accused in 1587/8 of being on a raid on the farms of Tris-tram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. He is probably also the 'Sim Armstrong of Whitaugh' who complained in the 1580s of a raid from the English side, stealing 800 sheep from him. He is probably the 'young Laird of Whitaugh' accused of being on a raid on Bewcastle and Gilsland in 1588, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Laird of Chisholme, when they are said to have run into English watchmen and killed 4 of them. In 1590 he was 'Syme Armstrong of Whithawghie' when accused, along with Will Elliot of Gorrenberry of rieving from the Lord War- den's tenants. He is listed among the accomplices of Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell, who tried to capture the King in 1592. He is probably the same ‘younger of Whithaugh’ who was declared a traitor in 1593 for assisting the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably ‘Sym Armstrang, younger, Larde of Cohithaugh’ transcribed in 1595, among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. He is probably the ‘young Laird of Whitthauh’ reported by an English informer to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, along with his son (who is not named, but perhaps Lancelot). He was also referred to in the same way when there were complaints in 1596 about raids into England by him and others. In 1597 he was among Liddesdale chiefs demanded from the English Commissioners as hostages; there he was ‘Symy Armstrong young luid of Whittasse’. It seems that he and the other prisoners were held in York, and when they were not released after a reasonable period (according to custom), they tried to escape, when he broke his leg and they were recaptured. In 1600 there is an offer to place him as a hostage with his son Lancelot, which was rejected; however, he and William Elliot of Larriston escaped soon afterwards. In an English letter of 1601, listing ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’ can be found the names ‘Sym Armstrang of the Rone, Archie and Sandy Armstrangs his brothers, all three sons to Sym of Whithaugh’. In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar (Commissioner for the Borders). It is unclear who, succeeded to Whitthauh after his death, but perhaps Lancelot (with Alexander of Roan as another son). Simon of Mains (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Armstrangs for whom Lancie of Whitthauh acted as surety. He is also listed in 1569 along with Simon (son of Lancie of Whithaugh) and John ‘of Quhithauh’, when Lancie of Whitthauh was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. This makes it clear that he was a different man (although probably closely related) to Simon of Whitthauh. His name appears as ‘Sym of the Manis’ in 1569. He is listed as ‘Sym of the Maynes’ by Monipennie in his c.1594 list of Border chiefs, after the Laird of Whitthauh and John of Whitthauh (presumably near relatives). He could be the origin of the ‘Sym of the Mains’ character in the ballad ‘Hobbie Noble’. Simon of Whitlawside (16th C.) leader of a branch of the Armstrangs in lower Liddesdale. His nearest family members are listed in an English letter of 1583 under the heading ‘The Armstronges of Melyvonton’. This included: ‘Ringan’s Archie’; ‘Gorthe’, son of Ringan; Abie, son to Ringan; Will of Potterlamport; young ‘Gorthe’ of Arkleton; Ringan, his brother; Martin, his brother; Dave of Whitlawside; Andrew of Kirkton; Hector of Chingills; Tom, his brother; ‘Elle’, his brother; ‘Eme’, his brother; Ritchie ‘Carhaud’; ‘Auld Tom o Chingills’; Tom’s Abie; Archie, his brother; and Ringan, his brother. The exact relationship of all of these men is somewhat ambiguous, but they were probably all his sons, brothers, nephews or cousins. His tower is marked as ‘Sime of Whitesid’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land, and although his surname is not given, it seems likely he was an Armstrong. ‘Wanton Sym in Quhitley Syde’ is listed by Monipennie among Border chiefs (published around 1594, but possibly from much earlier). He comes under ‘Merietown Quarter’ along with Archie of Westburnflat and ‘Will of Powderlanpat’. He may be the same man as (or directly related to) the earlier ‘Wanton Sim’. In 1607 he was ‘in Quhitleysyd’ when listed among Armstrangs and other charged with trying to prevent James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands; his son Ninian is also listed. He married twice: firstly a daughter of Robin Foster; and secondly ‘Little Tom’ Graham’s daughter. Simon of Calfield (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Syme of Cafhill’ along with Willie in 1590, when they were listed among men accused of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland. He was one of the followers of Sir James Johnstone who was at Dryfe Sands in 1593. He was among the 180 or so men who had a respite in 1594 for their part in the murder of Lord Maxwell. He is probably the ‘Syme of Cafhill’ mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5, but said to not be in Liddesdale. He and his brother Jock were among Ellsots and Armstrangs complained about because of a raid to Whitehill in England in 1596, another on ‘Hawehills’ and also on 2 farms belonging to Christopher Dacre. He was listed as ‘Sym Armstrang of Caffeld’ as an outlaw under the Laird of Buccleuch in an English letter of 1601, with ‘Thom Rannik his man’ also listed. ‘Symmie’ was probably his son. He was surely related to Jock of Caffeld who is recorded a decade or two earlier. Simon ‘Sim of the Roan’ (16th/17th C.) son of Simon of Whithaugh and brother of Archie and Sandy. He is recorded in an English letter of 1601, listing ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’. He is listed as ‘Sym Armstrong of the Rone’, along with his brothers and several other Armstrongs and others. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sym of the Syde’ in the trial of 1601 for the murder of Sir John Carmichael, Warden of the West Marches, by a group of Armstrongs and others. ‘Lancie of the Syde’ was also mentioned, so probably his brother or son. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his brother John of the Side was also listed. He was probably also related to Christie of the Side. Simon ‘Simmie’ (16th/17th C.) brother of Archibald and John. In 1601 his brother Archibald ‘Whitehead’ was recorded in an English list of ‘outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch’s charge’, with him and his other brother John also named. In 1611 Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, served as cautioner in Jedburgh for him and his brother John, both ‘called Quhyteheid’. Simon (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘callit Quhythauch, in Meidhoip’ in 1622 when he appeared before the Justiciary Court. He may have been related to the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He may be the ‘Syme Armstrang, Quhithauch’ who was accused in 1622 of stealing animals and goods on several occasions in 1619 (but was acquitted). Simon (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘callot of Tuedden’ in 1622 when he was cautioner for Robert Pringle, Bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch at the Judiciary Court. Simon (17th C.) listed as ‘Symmie Armstrong alias Caffeild’ in 1642 among many ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’ who were to be captured and tried. He is probably son of Simon of Calfied. Simon ‘Archie’s Sim’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among many Borderers who were wanted for theft and other crimes. He may have been a son of Archibald of Mangerton. Simon (17th C.) recorded as ‘of Quhittsleside’, ‘sometime in Qhitisyde’ and ‘in Whittleside’, this probably being Whithlawside in the lower Liddel valley. He was listed in 1642 among many Borderers who were wanted for theft and other crimes. In about 1645 he, Geordie of Kinmont, Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’ and Will and Francis of Woodhead were accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland. He was also recorded as ‘Syme Armstrang of Whitislyde’ at about the same time, when accused of leading a group that stole 80 sheep from ‘the Ruken, in Ridsdale’; they left the sheep near Kershopehead to go and find food, but when the owners managed to take them back. His house was said to be a rendezvous point for outlaws, and the location for a regular market for stolen goods. He was in prison in Selkirk in 1646 when William Scott wrote to the Earl of Buccleuch ‘God knows I lowe none off theses roges bott I am ernestlie inteitit to speike for his leberttie be ane Ingliche gentellman quhom I have recewed severall kyn-desse off’. He is probably the ‘Simeon Armstrang’ who in 1646 was ordered by the King to be released, but banished from the Borders. He was probably related to the former Simon of Whitlawside. Simon (17th C.) resident at ‘Greins’ (probably Greens) in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably closely related to William, who was tenant in the same place. Simon (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as tenant of lands near Castleton, but with the name of the farm not listed. Simon (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included: Ann (b.1758); Bella (b.1762); Nelly (b.1765); and Thomas Andrew (b.1768), who was probably schoolmaster in Southdean. Simon (18th C.) recorded in Doveshaugh in 1779 and Colterscleuch in 1786. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1779); and Thomas (b.1786). Thomas of Mangerton (15th C.) son of Archibald, he was the 5th Laird. In 1482 he resigned the lands of Mangerton to the superior Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, in order for them to be infested in David Scott of Branxholme (although the lands appear to have still been held by the Armstrongs afterwards, so what happened here is unclear). His sons included: Alexander, who succeeded; George of ‘Ailmure’; William, ‘Ill Will’ of Chingills; and John of Whithaugh. He may have been known as ‘Bell the Cat’. Perhaps the same Thomas is recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5; Alexander, Robert, Archibald, Andrew (son of Andrew) and William (‘Slitrig’) were listed after him, and may have been closely related. Thomas of Mangerton (d.c.1550) brother of Johnnie of Gilnockie, who was hanged along with several other Armstrongs in 1530. He was probably the eldest son of Alexander, the former Laird. He was apparently known as ‘the Guid Laird’. In 1535 he was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for their raid on the farm at Craik, stealing cattle and goods and taking 3 farm servants prisoner. He was on the Tax Roll for Liddesdale in 1541, being tenant of Billhope and possibly also Millhouse and Mains (unless these were different Thomases). He was recorded as being ‘de Merjantoun’ in 1541 when he was tenant of the farm of Over Gubbislie along with Cuthbert (possibly his brother); he may also be the Thomas who was one of the tenants of Ralton, along with Robert and Ninian. He may also be the Thomas, ‘Sandy’s son’, who was listed among English rebels reset in Scotland in 1541; he was listed along with other Armstrongs, and reset by Hector in Tweed. In addition he held some Liddesdale lands heritably, including Millholm, Langlands, Hawthornside, Ragarth, Sorbie and Sorbietrees. He was accused of helping the English on a Scottish raid in 1548. In 1548/9 he was surety for George and others with the Lord of Ferniehirst. He also had a bond in 1548/9, along with his elder son Archibald, to enter 2 Fosters as prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst and a futher bond to re-enter his servants George ‘callet Gayvt’, George’s son George, Thomas Henderson, Alan Foster and Thomas Foster. In 1552/3 he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries.

Gayvt’, George’s son George, Thomas Henderson, Alan Foster and Thomas Foster. In 1552/3 he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale; it is unclear if he was already deceased by this point. His sons included: Archibald, who succeeded: John of Puddington; Richard of Dryhope; Thomas; Simon of Tinnisburn; and Walter, ‘the Laird’s Wat’. Thomas (16th C.) listed as being in Greenshields in 1535 when a large number of Armstronngs and others were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. The same crime was recorded again in 1535/6 when Simon Armstrong was again convicted of several thefts, and he was ‘alias Greneschelis’. Possibly the same man was tenant of ‘Grenys’ and ‘callit the Bull’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale; ‘Greens’ is further down the Liddel, but the coincidence of the tenant around 1540 suggests the farms may have been connected. Thomas (16th C.) son of Sandy. In 1541 he was listed among English fugitives who were reset in Scotland, in his case by Hector Armstrong in Tweed. His name is given as ‘Thomas Armstrang Sandy son’. It is unclear how he was related to other Armstronngs, e.g. Ingram and Anton who were also reset along with him. Thomas (16th C.) nephew of ‘Braid’ Christopher. He is recorded in 1541, when accused of having been on a raid with his brothers and cousins Anton, John and Alexander, when Englishman Henry Storie was killed. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Chingills (16th C.) recorded about 1548 when there was bond between him and John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter George Armstrong and others. His son Archibald is also mentioned. There is another bond of about the same time relating to Fosters. He could be the Thomas, son of ‘Will of the Cheingyllis’ recorded in a bond of 1557 along with several other Armstronngs for presenting ‘Clement’s Will’ at Ferniehirst. This Thomas was also recorded as ‘of the Chyngillis’ in another bond of 1556 and ‘of the Cheynegillis’ in yet another of 1557. He was probably the Thomas ‘in Eskdail’, brother of Andrew in ‘Gygillis’, included among men that Andrew was surety for in 1569. He was also listed as brother of ‘andro Armstrang of the Gygillis’ in 1569 along with his son Willie and Andrew (his brother), when Andrew’s son Heckie was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He could be the Thomas ‘of the Gygillis’ mentioned in 1579 among Armstronngs who were in dispute with Lord Maxwell. His son Andrew was convicted of theft in 1580/1. In 1582 Lord Maxwell served as cautioner for the appearance of him and ‘Abye Armstrang of the Gygillis’ before the Privy Council. In 1583 he was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale; he is there ‘Thome Armstronng of the Gygilles’. In 1583 he is ‘old Thome of Chengles’ when listed among the Armstronngs of the Whitlawside area; his sons ‘Abye’, Archie and Ringan are also mentioned, and separately Hector of Chingills, who must have also been related. Lord Maxwell gave caution for entering him and ‘Abye Armstrang of the Gygillis’. He is probably the ‘Thome Armstrang of Gryngillis’ recorded (twice) in the 1585 long remission for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; this Thomas, son of Andrew, had his sons ‘Abe, Ringane, Cristie, Archie, Thome, Joke and Ade’ also listed. He is recorded as ‘old Thom Armstronng of the Gygilles’ in 1587/8 when accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584, stealing cows and horses, ‘spoiling 30 sheiles’ and ransoming 10 prisoners ‘at the Slyme’; his son ‘younge Thom’ was also listed, as well as other sons ‘Eckie’ (presumably Hector) and ‘Alie’ (presumably Alexander). His tower in Ewesdale may be the one marked ‘Tho. of ye Jingles’ marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debateable Land; however, there is confusion between places of similar name in Liddesdale and Ewesdale. Thomas of Ralton (16th C.) recorded in 1561 in a bond between Armstronngs and Bruntons, signed in Selkirk. He was ‘of Raltoun alias Thomas the flour’, but it is unclear what that meant. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Armstronngs of Ralton, but was probably connected with the others named in 1561, namely Hob, John, Hob’s John and John in ‘Elryg’. Thomas (16th C.) brother... of ‘Paton’s Jamie’. He was listed among Armstrongs for whom Hector of Harelaw was pledge in 1569. Thomas of Canonbie (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when his son David was held on a pledge of good behaviour by Robert Keith, Commendator of Deer. It is possible that he was a son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. If so then he would have been father of ‘Dave of Canonbie’, who is listed among Sandy’s offsping in 1583. David’s brothers (and thus his sons) were Willie and Jamie. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) son of Ninian of ‘Auchinbadrig’. In 1580/1 James Weir, younger of Blackwood, gave £2000 caution for him to remain in Edinburgh after being released from ward in the Tolbooth there. Thomas ‘Laird’s Tom’ (16th C.) probably son of Archibald of Mangerton. He is listed along with Simon of Mangerton in a letter from the English wardens in 1583. He was said to dwell in a place called ‘Huyge Morgarton’ (presumably ‘High Mangerton’) and to be not married to an English woman (unlike several of his near relatives). It is likely he is the same man as ‘Thomas Armstrang brother to Mangertown’ who was held in Castle Semple in 1569, as pledge for his brother Simon, ‘Cristell’ and a son of ‘Reid Sym’. He may be the Thomas ‘callit Mangertown’ who gave a bond at the Judicial Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He could be the Thomas whose son John (‘sone to Thom of Mangerton’) is listed among many fugitives in 1642. Thomas ‘Hector’s Tom’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. In 1569 he was held as a pledge in Glasgow Castle, for his brothers Hector and Willie and their father Hector of Harelaw. He was also listed as son of Hector in 1583. In 1601 he is ‘Ectors Thome the elder’ when stated in an English document to be ‘manifestly a chief councillor of his names men, &c., of Hairelawe’, responsible for robberies and murders over the previous 14 years, especially a raid in the previous Lent. Those reset by him included ‘young Ector, Willes Thome’ (probably his brother and nephew) and 4 Hendersons, who were all outlaws. Furthermore, he is said to have killed the eldest Henderson and extracted money out of the other 3. He was also accused, along with the Armstrongs of Gingles of stealing from and threatening Thomas Sandforth of Howgill for taking back his own stolen horse. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Hector of Chingills, listed among Armstrongs in an English warden’s letter of 1583. He married a daughter of George Routledge of ‘Shetbelt’. It is unclear how he was related to ‘Auld Tom of Chingills’, who was alive at the same time. He may be the ‘Thome of Glendoning’ listed in instigator and suffered the most severe punishment. He was hanged in Edinburgh after having his hand cut off, and afterwards his body was hung in chains at the Boroughmuir gallows (this is the first known example of a criminal being hung in chains in Scotland). The nature of the dispute that led to the murder and hanging is unclear. It is said that while awaiting execution he composed the verses about Johnnie Armstrong of Gilnockie usually called ‘Armstrong’s Last Goodnight’. Thomas ‘Sim’s Tom’ (16th C.) presumably son of Simon. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scots and Gledstains at Whitthaugh; his name was given as ‘Symmons Thom’. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scots and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them; he is there ‘callit Symmis Thom’ and listed shortly after ‘Sym’ of Mangerton. In 1582 he was one of the Armstrongs (along with the Laird of Mangerton and the ‘Laird’s Jock’ accused of burning Englishman Sir Simon Musgrave’s barns full of grains. In 1583 he was ‘Symons Tome Armestronge’ among the men considered by the English as principal offenders in the West Marches. Also in 1583 he was listed among the close kin of the Laird of Mangerton; so it seems likely he was either son of Simon of Mangerton, or a cousin. He resided at Deinaholm and married a daughter of ‘Wat of the Hove End’ Storey from Eskdale. He was ‘Sym Thome Armstreange’ in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens; this was along with ‘Reade Androwe Armestrange of Kirkhill’, who was likely to be a close relative. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with `Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier, ‘Adie’s John’ Crozier and Ingram of stealing cattle from the Herons of Chipchase. He was also accused, with Ingram and ‘Quentin’s Airchie’ Crozier of stealing a horse from the same man on a separate occasion. His designation is given as ‘of Maynes’, which was probably Mains near Castleton. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.1606) servant of Lord Maxwell. He was convicted of being involved in the theft of a horse. Although the Border Commissioners queried his conviction (on the basis that the owner of the horse doubted his guilt), the Privy Council sentenced him to hang. Thomas ‘Boltsfoot’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1597 among Scotsmen complained about by the English Wardens. He was said to have stolen ‘4 stirikes and a oxe’ from the Laird of ‘Belyster’. Presumably the same ‘Thom Armstrong boutfute’ was listed among Englishmen accused of killing Scotsmen in 1596. Along with his brother Jamie ‘how neif’ and Tom Storie, they were accused of killing George Chisholme, ‘hird’ to Sir Robert Ker. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Ectors Willes Thome Scottesman’ in 1601, when his crimes were complained about by the English. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Hector, and may have been nephew of ‘Hector’s Tom’. He was accused of taking part in several raids into Gilsland and other areas. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of Andrew of Kirkton, this probably being the lands near Sorbie. In 1606 he was listed among men declared as fugitives. In 1611 his brother Andrew acted as cautioner for him and his brothers, Jock and Lancie’, that they would leave Scotland. Thomas ‘Merchant’ (16th/17th C.) acquitted of the crime of murder in 1609, along with Andrew of Langholm, ‘Ebbie’ of ‘Kirkstonehill’, James of Canonbie and John Murray ‘in the Cruikis’. His own name is recorded as ‘Thomas Airmestrange callit the Merchande’. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Archibald who had the same nickname. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘Antons Edward Tom’ in 1606/7, when he was captured by English Commissioners. A letter said ‘I was in hopes to have taken Antons Edward himself, but for want of a better, was glad to take his son Thomas’. He was also ‘callit Ewmontis Thome’ in 1611 when he was among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. His father was Edmund, who appears to have been son of Anthony. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Gingillis’ when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Sucker’ in 1616. He may be the ‘younge Thom’ listed after ‘old Thom Armestronge of the Gungles’ recorded in 1587/8 when accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandie Hall in 1584. His brother ‘Eckie’ and ‘Alie’ are also listed. It is unclear how he was related to some of the other near contemporary Armstrongs of Gingills (or Chingills). Thomas ‘Warden’ (16th/17th C.) son of Margaret, who was also called ‘Warden’. Along with his his mother he was called to the Justice Court at Dumfries in 1622. He was accused of stealing an ox from Dorothy in Bowholm and stealing sheep from Rowanburn and sentenced to be hanged. He was separate from Thomas in Whithope Mill, who was also charged in 1622. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in Whithope Mill in 1622. At the Judiciary Court he was accused of stealing sheep from the lands of ‘Quhilltope’ belonging to John Scott (this may have been Whitehope in Yarrow). He was sentenced to death. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Barnglies. Along with John in Nether ‘Bagray’ he acted as cautioner for William of Binks in Sark in 1622. He was probably related to the other Armstrongs of Barnglies. He is probably the ‘Jokis Thome’ recorded in 1623 when David Beatie was found guilty of stealing 5 cows from his lands of Barnglies; his father was therefore John.

Thomas (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of ‘Reidheuch’ (i.e. Redheuch) in 1632, on a document listing the lands within the Lordship of Liddesdale. It is unclear if he was owner or tenant of the farm. Thomas ‘Tom’ of Shielis (17th C.) recorded as ‘Tom of Scheillos’ when his sons William and Eduard were on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border) in about 1648. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Whithaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (1688/9–1769) resident of Nether Stanegarthside. His children included James (1732/3–70) and William. The family are buried at Ettleton. Thomas (17th/18th C.) probably a descendant of John of Sorbie. He is recorded being in arrears for rental at Sorbie in 1695 and was still tenant there in 1735. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Riccarton Mill. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry Elliot in Riccarton. Thomas (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, probably the son of Simon born in 1768. He was educated at Southdean, in Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. He probably started in 1825 (with the recorded start date of 1835 on the school returns being an error) and is recorded as master there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of John Wilkinson and Alison Clarke, from county Durham. Their children were: Simon (b.1804), who may have served with the army in India; John (b.1806), shepherd, who emigrated to New Zealand; William (1808–32); Richmond (1810–40), who was schoolmaster in 1837; Alice (b.1812), married Thomas Hope and emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1814), married Archibald Smith; Jane (b.1817), married Adam Smith and emigrated to Australia; Ann Rutherford (b.1819), married James Maben and farmed at Town-o-Rule; and Sarah (b.1821), married James Douglas and lived in Melrose. Thomas (1789/90–1853) farm labourer at Appletreehall. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1876, aged 84. Their children included: Ann (b.c.1826); Walter (b.c.1827); Margaret (b.c.1829); Helen (b.c.1831); John (b.c.1833); Janet (b.c.1835); and Betsy (1836/7–74). They are buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Thomas Henry (1862–1946) solicitor in Hawick, originally from Fife. He was son of Robert, English Master at Madras College, St. Andrews. He attended St. Andrews University 1876–82 and then studied law in Edinburgh. He moved to Hawick in 1893 to join Geo. & Jas. Oliver. He served on the council of the Scottish Law Agents’ Society for more than 20 years. He was agent of the Commercial Bank, secretary to the Hawick Gas Company, clerk to the Hawick School Management Committee and on the boards for Lyle & Scott and James Renwick & Co. He was also Chairman and secretary of the Hawick Constitutional Club and as Session Clerk of Wilton Kirk for 44 years. He had the house Ardenlea built for him on West Stewart Place. He married Ellen Lurana Jane Gulland, who was from Monktonhall and their children included: Henry Leslie (b.1892), who died in WWI; Margaret Aileen Purdom (b.1894), who died young; Vera Constance (b.1898); Norna Isabella (b.1900), who married Robert Lindsay Watson; and Guy H., local solicitor (b.1901). He died in Hawick. W. (18th/19th C.) resident of Newlands, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to Aaron and George, who were gamekeepers at Newlands. Walter ‘the Laird’s Wat’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ballad ‘Jock o the Side’. It is unclear if such a person ever existed or if he was purely fictional, since Walter was not a name preferred by the Armstrongs. However, there may have been a son of Thomas of Mangerton with this to-name. Walter (d.bef. 1726) from the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish, he lived at Weensland. He married Isobel Smith in 1868, who was from the same area. Their children included (the first 2 baptised in Roberton Parish and the other 2 in Hawick Parish): Margaret (b.1687), who married weaver David Miller in 1723; Isobel (b.1689); Archibald (b.1703); and Jean (b.1705). The witnesses in 1687 were John (surely a relative) and Robert Scott. In 1705 he was recorded ‘in Weensland’, with witnesses to the baptism being Walter and (another) Walter Paisley, millers in Weensland Mill. He could be the Walter who witnessed baptisms (in Roberton Parish) in 1682 for James Martin at Appletreehall and for George Hood. He could be the Walter recorded at Westerhouses (in Hassendean Parish) on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th/18th C.) ‘servitor’ to Walter Scott, tenant in Wester Groundstone. His son Walter was baptised in 1709. Perhaps the same Walter was married to Isobel Smith and had children baptised in Hawick Parish: Archibald (b.1703); and Jean (b.1705). Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at ‘...Bar’ in 1738. He married Helen Clerk (or ‘Klerk’) in Cavers in 1736 and their children included Mary (b.1738). The witnesses in 1738 were John Pringle and James Dryden. Walter (1731/2–1804) tenant farmer in Millholm. He married Christian Brydon, who died in 1779, aged 37. She was probably related to the Brydons who were weavers in Newcastleton. Walter (1732/3–1814) tenant farmer in Kershopefoot. He was surely related to the earlier Armstrongs who farmed there. He married Elizabeth Murray, who died in 1842, aged 89. Their children included: Elizabeth (1775/6–1850); David (1785/6–1850); Janet (1787/8–1860); and Margaret (1790/1–1873). Walter (1735/6–93) resident of Grainfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Veitch, who died in 1807, aged 67. They were buried along with 3 of their children in Etleton Cemetery. Their children included: John (b.1763), who is probably the mason who married Isabella Marshall; Mary (b.1765); William (b.1768); and Helen (b.1772). Walter (1744/5–94) shepherd at Sorbietrees. He married Helen Glendinning, who died in 1835, aged 88. They are buried at Etleton, next to Armstrongs from Heughhead and Leaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton and Robertson Parishes. He was living at Todshaw in 1789. He married Agnes Reid and their children (the first 5 baptised in Wilton) included Robert (b.1771), Barbara (b.1773), Elizabeth (b.1776), Isabel (b.1778), Thomas (b.1781) and Agnes (b.1789). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh in 1800. He married Janet Scott in 1798 and their children included: James (b.1800), baptised in Robertson; William (b.1802), baptised in Wilton; and Elizabeth (b.1805), baptised in Robertson. Walter (1776/7–1863) merchant in Newcastleton for 62 years. He may be the Walter of Burnmouth who was appointed as trustee for the bankrupt Newcastleton merchant Peter Oliver in 1817. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a linen and woollen draper and wholesale spirit dealer. He is likely to be the ‘W. Esq. Castleton’ who subscribed for 60 copies to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was at about 3 Douglas Square in 1841, with his son Archibald listed as the main shopkeeper; Helen, who lived with him in 1841, was probably his sister. In 1851 he was a draper, spirit dealer and grocer at the same address. He was listed among grocer and spirit dealers in Newcastleton in 1852. He firstly married Agnes Murray, who died in 1815, aged 29. He secondly married Nicholas Elliot, who died in 1850, aged 75. He thirdly (in 1850) married Mary Turnbull (1817/8–84); her siblings William and Margaret helped in the shop. His children included: James (b.1816), who died in infancy; Thomas (1810/1–39), also a merchant; Archibald (1806/7–44); and Walter (1839/40–99), tenant in Twislope. The family are buried at Etleton. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797, with James also there. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of Liddelbank around 1821. He sold the property in 1827. He may be the same as the merchant in Newcastle or Walter (1800–34) mason in Castleton, son of mason John and Isabella Marshall. He is probably the mason Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, with mason John subscribing right after him. He married Margaret Cowan, who died in 1862, aged 60. She was a ‘Widow & Teacher’ on North Heritage Street in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as a mason’s widow, receiving parish relief. Walter (b.c.1805) miller at Whithaugh Mill, recorded in

Pigot’s 1837 directory and among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He must have been related to William, who was there in 1825/6, possibly his son. He was listed as Miller there in 1841, with wife Anne and son William. In 1832 he was accused of fathering a child by Joanna Matthews, but denied it. Walter (d.1861) farmer at Stanegarthsidehall, near Newcastle-on-Tyne. He died at Tweedwen Bridge in an accident while riding home. Walter (19th C.) draper who took over Williamson’s business in 1839, in partnership with William Kedie. Their business was at the Tower Knowe. By 1853 he had separated from Kedie, forming Wilson & Armstrong’s with George Wilson. Their business included Weensland Mill, which made tweeds and blankets. His family were living on Slitrig Crescent in 1851. He moved to London to run the business there, which lasted till the great Collie failure of 1875, which ruined him. He married Mary Graham (from Canonbie, daughter of the farmer at Holows Mill) in Hawick in 1848. They had 2 sons and 3 daughters: Sir Walter, museum director and art critic; John G.; Elizabeth, who became Mrs Tennant-Dunlop; Diana, who became Mrs. Secker; and Mary Beatrice, who married Rowland Ponsonby Blemmerhassett. His 3 daughters sat for Sir John Everett Millais in the painting ‘Hearts are Trumps’ (said to be a metaphor for sisterly competition in finding husbands). He also took on his wife’s brothers as apprentices, and they were later S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. Walter (1839/40–99) son of Walter and Nicholas Elliot. He was tenant in Twislope and died at Phaup. He is buried at Ettleton. Sir Walter (1849–1918) born in Hawick, elder son of Walter and Mary Graham. His father was a drapery merchant with William Kedie, who moved to London, but was ruined in the ‘Collie failure’. He was educated at Harrow and Oxford University and became an art critic, writing for newspapers, publishing studies of British artists. He also translated and edited the ‘Histoire de l’art dans l’antiquité’ (1885) and edited the 2nd volume of Bryan’s ‘Dictionary of Painters and Engravers’ (1889). He became Director of the National Gallery of Ireland in 1892, holding the post until 1914. In 1899 he was knighted and became an honorary member of the Royal Hibernian Academy. He published extensive monographs on Gainsborough (1894), Reynolds (1900), Raeburn (1901, with co-authors), Turner (1902) and Lawrence (1913). In 1873 he married Jane Emily Rose, daughter of Charles Cotton Ferrard, from Berkshire. He died at his home in Westminster. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘Armestrangh’ in 1274 when he was on an inquest at Carlisle to decide on the inheritance of Ross of Wark and another for the widow of Eustace de Balsiol. Probably the same William was also listed as ‘Armestrang’ among Cumberland men in an inquisition of 1268. He may be the same as the William ‘Armestrang de Lucre’ listed on the 1279 assize roll for Northumberland or the William listed under ‘Villata de Warnemee’ (probably the same man). He could be the deceased William ‘Armestrange’ whose son and heir Adam paid homage to Edward I and Edward ordered letters to be issued in 1295. William (15th C.) listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His place of residence was not given, but he was the first Armstrong listed. William ‘Slitrig’ (15th C.) listed among men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He was listed as ‘vocatis slittric’, along with 10 other Armstrongs. His nickname suggests that he was associated with the Slitrig valley in some way, perhaps a former resident. William of Chingills (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas of Mangerton and brother of Alexander. He may be the same man as ‘Ill Will of Ralton’, and hence might be the ancestor of the Ralton branch of the family. He may have been hanged in 1530 along with Johnnie of Gilnockie and other Armstrongs. It is possible that ‘Ill Will Sandy’ is really ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’, i.e. his son. Another son of ‘Ill Will’ was Alexander, recorded as tenant of ‘Carglais’ in 1541. William ‘Slitric’ (15th/16th C.) listed among many men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Armstrang callit Slitrik’, suggesting that he lived somewhere in the Slitrig valley. He is listed right after Robert, Archibald and Andrew (Andrew’s son) Armstrong, so it is possible they were relatives. He may be the same as William, son of Alexander of Mangerton. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Alexander of Mangerton. He may be the same as ‘Slitrick’. William ‘Dick’s Willie’ (16th C.) listed among many Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. He is named as ‘one called Dikkis Wille’, who had a servant called ‘Lang Pennan’. It seems likely he was an Armstrong (although this is not stated explicitly), and his father was probably Richard, possibly the one recorded 30 years earlier. William (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Crooked

Bank according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (16th C.) recorded along with Hector as tenant of Dykeraw on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (16th C.) listed in 1541 as joint tenant of Nether Gubbisle, along with Robert. They were probably closely related to Thomas of Mangerton and Cuthbert (probably the Laird’s brother) who were tenants at adjacent farms. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Tarsumhill’ and ‘of Torsomehill’ in 1579, when Christie of Barnglibes asked for him to be released from ward. He had been pledge for Armstrongs and their supporters. William ‘Hector’s Willie’ (16th C.) son of Hector of Harelaw. He was listed in 1569, along with his father Hector and brother Hector, as those for whom his brother Tom was being held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. In 1583 he was listed as ‘Hectors Wille’. It is possible that he was the same man as Will of Chingills. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) son of Tom, who was brother of ‘Andro Armstrong of the Gnygilliss’. In 1569 his uncle Andrew ‘of the Gyngillis’ was surety for him, as well as his father Thomas and several other Armstrongs. In 1569 he, his father and uncle Andrew were named as the men for whom ‘Hekke’ (his cousin, son of Andrew) was held as pledge in Blackness Castle. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Ade of the Harlaw’. He was listed among fugitives of Harelaw in 1569. William ‘Will’ of Potterlamport (16th C.) recorded in 1583 among the Armstrongs of Whitlawside. He is recorded as ‘Will of Potteralampert’. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Will of Powderlanpat’ on Monipennie’s list of Border chiefs, published around 1594, but possibly compiled earlier. He is there listed beside Archie of Westburnflat and ‘Wanton Sym’ in Whitlawside, on a list of Armstrongs in ‘Mertonne Quarter’. William (16th C.) son of Hector of Liddesdale. In the latter part of the 16th century he was recorded at ‘Glengillis’, possibly in Ewesdale, or the same place as Chingills. He may be the same man recorded in Edinburgh Castle in 1607. William (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Teikmie’ in the 1585 remission for the crimes of men of Dunfriesshire. His farm may have been at Tarcoon, west of Canonbie. Archie ‘in Tarkima’ was also listed, this probably being the same place. William ‘Will’ of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583. He had a daughter who married Hob Foster of Kershope Lees. He may be the ‘Will o Greena’ who was killed by Foster of Stangartheside; according to tradition he borrowed the famous sword of his brother (or perhaps son) Jock o the Side, but was killed by treachery. William ‘Andrew’s Will’ (16th C.) recorded in 1591 among Armstrongs cited for the murder of John Armstrong ‘alias Cokespoole’. His name is recorded as ‘William Armstrongs alias ‘Andro his Will’”. It is unclear who his father Andrew was, but his brothers Ringan and Ritchie were also listed. William ‘Kintmont Willie’ (d.c.1605), from Kintmont Tower (near Canonby), he was a renowned rieving leader of his day. He was said to be descended from ‘Ill Will’ and was probably son of ‘Ill Will’s Sandy’. In 1569 he was ‘of Mortoun Tour, callit Will of Kynmonth’ when he pledged to obey the Wardens, with Lord Maxwell and other Maxwells as surety. Also in 1569 he ‘Will of Kynmonth’s whose tenants were excepted from the pledge given for the Littles in Eskdale. His brothers Archibald and Ninian are recorded in 1569. Also in 1569 he may be the ‘Will of Kynmonth’ listed along with ‘Cristie Armstrong brother’ and ‘Ninian Armstrong’, as those to be exchanged for ‘Aby Armstrong’, who was a pledge held in St. Andrews Castle; these men were surely closely related and may all have been brothers. His brothers Airchie and ‘Fergy’ were accused of raiding farms of Johnstone of Craigburn in 1574. In 1579 he appeared before the Privy Council related to a feud with Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Also in 1579 he and 400 Armstrong followers are said to have killed Uswold Dod, and stolen 800 cattle and 1,000 sheep (the complaint being repeated in 1587/8). In 1583 he was among Scotsman complained about for a raid on Tynedale, when he led about 300 men, stealing 400 hed of cattle, 400 sheep and goats, 30 horses and gear worth £200, slaying 6 people, injuring 11 and taking 30 prisoners (at least according to the English War- den’s account). In 1583 Lord Scrope demanded unsuccessfully that the Laird of Johnstone (Scot- tish Warden) hand him over; he was said to be responsible for 600 murders and the stealing of 400 cattle, 400 sheep and 30 horses. In 1584 Lord Scrope reported that he had led a raid on ‘the Trombles within Pharnyhirstes wardenrye’, stealing 80 head of cattle and 10 horses and killing 5 or 6 Scotsmen. In 1584/5 it is reported that one of his sons and a friend were being held by Lord Johnstone as assurances for him, but when handed over to the Earl of Morton they were released. He is listed in 1585 among a huge number of men in the lands that had Lord Maxwell as su-he is recorded there as ‘William Armestrang callit Kynmont’. His sons ‘Johne, Geordie, Francie, Thome, Sandie, Jhonn and Ringane’ are also listed, as well as his brother ‘Serge’ and Martin MacVitie, his ‘writer’ (i.e. legal clerk, suggesting he held a position of some importance). This is probably related to having been on the expedition to Stirling against the Earl of Arran, when he and his sons ransacked the town. In 1587 a report from the English said that he met with the Scottish King ‘in his cabenett above an hour’ and was given 100 crowns for leading an attack on Haydon Bridge (although publicly the King expressed displeasure at this raid). Also in 1587 he was imprisoned, but escaped. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Sim’s Tom and Hector of Hillhouse, as well as Ellists, Croziers and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men. In 1590 he appears on the Privy Council’s list of men allowed to rent land in the ‘debatable land’. Lord Maxwell again acted as surety for his good behaviour in 1591. In 1592 Roger Bulman of ‘Skailby’ complained that he had led several Armstrongs on a raid, stealing his livestock and maiming him. In 1593 he was accused, along with William Elliot of Larriston and Martin Elliot of Braidlie, of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. He appears on the list of Border chiefs, published by Monipennie sometime before 1594; the heading is ‘Sandies Barnes Armestrangs’, which probably means ‘Alexander’s bairns’. In 1594 he had an agreement with Thomas, Lord Scrope, where he assumed responsibility for 300 men. However, in 1596 he was captured by an English party (led by Thomas Salkeld) who crossed the Liddel to draw of Langholm and John Beattie of the Shiel. He was found guilty and sentenced to hanging in Edinburgh. He was probably related to the nearly contemporary ‘Sandy of Rowanburn’. The 1585 remission for most of the tenants of Lord Maxwell. He may have been William of Whisgills (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son John was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of Horden’, which was probably Harden in Liddesdale. He was listed among men declared fugitives in 1605 for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He was probably related to other Armstrongs of Harden.
William (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc. who were declared as fugitives for non-appearance at a court in Peebles in 1605. He was recorded being called 'Castel's Willie'. William (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Twedane' (i.e. Tweeden) in related to Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweeden, who are recorded in 1583. In 1594/5 there was an arrangement for him to be imprisoned in Carlisle Castle as pledge for Hector of Tweeden. He could be one of the 'three brethren of Tweada, Armstrongs', who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He could be the William of Tweeden who was cautioner for John of Tweeden in Jedburgh in 1611. William of Chingills (b.c.1577). He could be one of the 'Chingles' who were said to be at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1607 he was in Edinburgh Castle (either as a fellow prisoner or a Keeper, it is unclear) when Lord Maxwell took his sword and that of 2 other men, so that Maxwell, his relative Robert Maxwell and Sir James Macdonald could attempt an escape. He could be the William 'callit of Chinglis' who was cautioner for 'Pattenis Willie' in 1622. William (16th C.) recorded as 'Will of Ternsnihil' on Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published around 1594. He is listed under John of Hollows, who may therefore have been his father or other close relative. It is unclear where his lands were, but possibly Tinnis Hill is meant. William 'sone to Will of Tersumhill' is recorded in 1574, when he was to remain in ward with John Gordon of Lochinvar. William (16th C.) son of 'Will of Tersumhill'. He is recorded in 1574, when obliged to remain in ward with John Gordon of Lochinvar. His father was recorded as 'Will of Ternsnihil' on Monipennie's list of Border chiefs. William 'Willie' (16th/17th C.) son of Francis and probably grandson of Kinmont Willie. He may be the 'younge Will of Kynmonte' who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods on 2 separate occasions; his relative 'Kynmontes Jocke' was also listed. He was also probably the 'Kynmontes Willie' accused in 1592 of being part of a raid on 'th'Holme Coltram', along with 'Kynmontes Jock' and Christie of 'Barnelesh'. In 1609 he was 'Willie' son of 'France Armestrang, callit of Kynnout' when he was among several men (including his father and uncle Alexander) fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1611 he served as cautioner for Geordie Scott, servant to John in Woodhead. He was recorded as being 'in Grystaill' in 1616 when he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott 'the Suckler' of sheep stealing. This is probably 'Grycetail', just south of Canonbie, near the modern Prior's Lynn, and where there were later Armstrongs. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as being 'in Nether Wrae' when he was on the trial of Jock Scott 'the Suckler'. He is probably related to the earlier Thomas of the Wrae. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1615 when he had a sasine for a 4-merk land of Kirkton (probably near Sorbie). He may have been father of the later William of Kirkton. William 'the Bauld' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he acted as cautioner for his brother Matthew. He was also on the 1616 jury for 'the Suckler'. His nickname probably meant 'bold' (rather than 'bald'). He may be the 'Willie Armstrang, callit Bauld, in Quhisgillis' who appeared before the Justice Court in 1622 and 1623 as cautioner for John 'calllet of Tueden', his brother. He is probably the same William 'called Bauld' who was cautioner for William Wigholm in 1623. William 'Pate's Willie' (16th/17th C.) listed in the records of the Commissioners Court in 1623 when William 'callit of Chinglis' was cautioner for him. He was also on the pannel of the Judicaiary Court in 1622. His name appears as 'Willie Armestrong, callit Pattenis Willie', suggesting that he was son of Patrick (or perhaps Paton). William 'Willie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'callit of Capilgill' in 1622 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Bells in 'Auchinheidrigg' and sentenced to death. His cautioner was John, 'Capelgill'. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'callit of Benks in Sark' in the 1622 Judiciary Court. Thomas in Barglies and John in Nether 'Bagray' acted as cautioners for him. Probably the same 'Willie Armstrong, callit Benks' was entered in 1623, with John 'in Capelgill' as his cautioner; he was accused of stealing 2 oxen from the lands of 'Weane' pertaining to William 'of Calfeild'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded at the Justice Court of 1623 in Jedburgh. He was 'callit Rakkeis' and 'callit Rakkes in Liddesdail', suggesting he was related to John 'Rakass' who was recorded in 1585, as well as Archie 'Rakkes' and Robert 'Rakkes in Syde' in 1623. William of Calfield (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when William 'callit Benkes' was accused of stealing 2 oxen from him. Perhaps the same 'Wille Armstrong son to George of Calfhills' was accused in 1590 of rieving from Gilsland. He may also be the Willie, listed in 1590 along with 'Syme of Calfhill', among men accused of rieving from ‘Darmontstead’ in Gilsland. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘younger of Kirkton’ in 1641. This was the Kirkton near Sorbie. This was in a complaint between the Earl of Nithsdale and Johnstone of Westerhall, where he is stated to possess the lands of ‘Arkin’, ‘Quhitscheills’ and ‘Tiffetscheills’. William of Westburnflat (17th C.) said to have been one of the last of the Border rievers, he was captured on the banks of the Hermitage for stealing cattle and taken to Selkirk for trial. On being found guilty he broke the wooden chair in which he had been sitting and invited his fellow accused to fight their way out with him. However, they said they preferred to die like good Christians, and so all were executed. This tale comes from notes by Sir Walter Scott, although there appears to be no historical basis for it. The ‘Red Reiver of Westburnflat’ also features in his novel ‘The Black Dwarf’. William ‘Christy’s Will’ (d.c.1639) son of Christopher and grandson of Johnnie of Gilnockie. He was the ‘younger of Barngles’, also later referred to as ‘younger of Langholm’. It is said he undertook a dangerous mission to carry a message from the Earl of Traquair to Charles I in London, narrowly avoiding capture on the return journey. He eventually joined the King’s army, and settled in Fermanagh in Ireland. In 1600 he married Margaret Elliot. They had at least one son, Thomas, who continued the family line in Ireland. He is well-known through the ballad ‘Christie’s Will’ and Sir Walter Scott’s comments in ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. Although he was probably genuinely involved with the Earl of Traquair, the story of him holding a judge captive in order to help the Earl in a law-suit seems to be based on earlier unrelated events (the capture of Alexander Gibson by George Meldrum of Dumbrek). He has also been associated with William of Sark, who was probably born somewhat later. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘Will in the Mylne’ when he was listed along with Sandy as possessors of the lands of Nether Harden in Liddesdale in 1632. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) listed among possessors of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632. His lands then were Leaugha, ‘Poco-hoparke’ and Whitehaugh. William (17th C.) recorded as being ‘of Wodheid’ among a list of Armstrongs and others who were declared fugitives in 1642. His brother Francis was also listed. It is unclear where this Woodhead was or how they were related to other local Armstrongs. In about 1645 they were as accused of stealing 50 cattle from Swinburne Park in Northumberland, along with Simon of Whitlawside, Geordie of Kinmont and Old Sandy’s ‘Hutchen’. William (17th C.) listed as being ‘called of Cannabie’ in 1642, among many Armstrongs and others who were accused of being thieves and who were to be apprehended and tried. William ‘Lang Will’ (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when John, ‘called of Kinmonth of Sark’ had a bond of presentation for him. William of Sark (1601/2–58) probably related to John ‘called of Kinmonth of Sark’. He has been connected with ‘Christie’s Will’, but was probably born later. In 1636 he complained of being wrongfully detained by the English Border Commissioners. He may be the ‘William of Kinmont’, brother to ‘John Kynmont called John of Sarke’, who are listed among fugitives in 1642. His widow erected a tombstone to his memory in Morton churchyard. This was presented to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, with a suspicion that it might be the tombstone of Kinmont Willie (who died half a century earlier). His son William is on a list of ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William (17th C.) tenant at Acreknowe in 1684 (along with Thomas Storie) on a long list of men declared rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. William (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Horse-lie’ in 1684 when he was listed among those declared as fugitives for being Covenenaters. This was presumably Horselee in the Slitrig valley. William (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant at ‘Greins’ (probably Greens) in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Simon, who was also listed there, was probably a close relative. William (17th C.) resident in Hermitage in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Sandholm in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) name of 2 men who were householders at ‘Bosholme’ in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. This was possibly the same as the place known as ‘Bowholm’. William (17th C.) listed at Whitlaw among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Nether Whisgills. Along with Robert Blakelaw, he was accused in 1698 of travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1705. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1725 (along with Adam) for James Blyth at Clarilaw William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson....

Airmstrong Parish. He is recorded at Outerside in 1711. He married Margaret Beattie in 1707 and their children included: John (b.1709) and Janet (b.1711). William (18th C.) one of the group of 3 men and 1 woman who were jailed in Edinburgh for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. Rev. William (1711–49) 3rd son of Robert, minister of Castleton, with his 2 older brothers both being doctors. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by Langholm Presbytery in 1732 and presented to Castleton Parish by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch later that year. In 1733 he became minister there, succeeding his father. He was recorded at ‘the mance’ in Castleton Parish when he paid the window tax in 1748. He was described as ‘a New light or legal preacher, and one of a Club that did not favour Confessions of Faith’. He was said to be extremely popular in the Parish, so that there was trouble when the congregation were given no choice in the appointment of his successor. He died unmarried. William (1727/8–1808) schoolmaster of Hobkirk Parish, and a much respected resident of the parish in the 18th century. It is unclear where he came from, but the family names are similar for him to be William, son of Adam and Janet Harkness, born in Wilton Parish in 1728 (although there was a second William born to the same parents in 1736, which is too late). It is said that he was ‘a man of most extraordinary piety, beloved and esteemed by all who knew him’. He became schoolmaster in 1751, succeeding Samuel Oliver, and filled the position for 57 years. In 1776 he witnessed a baptism for John Hume and Isabel Armstrong (probably a relative). He was probably the collector of poor rates recorded in a Harwood document of 1784. In about 1760 he married Margaret, daughter of Rev. Robert Riccarton, minister of Hobkirk, and she died in 1786, aged 55. Their sons were: Adam (b.1761), who was in the service of the Emperor of Russia; and Robert (b.1770), postmaster in Hawick. They also had daughters: Ann (b.1762); Janet (b.1765), who may be the Janet who married Hawick Burgh Officer John Wilson; Helen (b.1767), who may have died young; and Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1776). His diary of 1781 records that his daughter Ann was followed by a greyhound on the way to Hawick, which she could not get rid of, but then it chased off a bull that charged at her, and stayed by her side till she reached Hawick. He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wrae in Ewesdale in at least the period 1785–1797 according to the Horse Tax, Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for John Anderson in Flask in 1783. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Binks. He is probably the ‘W. Armstrong’ there who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’in 1821. He married Betty Elliot and their children included: William (b.1803); Betty (b.1805); Janet (b.1807); John (b.c.1809), who married Vair Scott and emigrated to Australia; James (b.1810), who also emigrated to Victoria; Adam (b.1812); Barbara (b.1814); Nicholas Elliot (b.1816); Isabel (b.1819); and Walter (b.1821). William (1771/2–1838) farmer at Sorbietrees. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’in 1821. In 1832 he was accused of being father of Joana Matthew’s child. William (1790/1–1869) stonemdyker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Telfer, who died in 1884, aged 82. Their children included James (1837/8–1913), who married Janet Johnston. William (1796/7–1891) from Middlebie, he was shepherd in various locations. In 1851 he was at Nether Steniswater in Westerkirk and in 1861 was at Wolfcleuchhead. He may also have been at Braidliehope. He married Mary Porteous, who died in 1888, aged 81. Their children included: Elizabeth (1828/9–54); and Archibald (1839/40–94). He died at Goldielands Cottage and the family are buried in Ettonet Cemetery. William (b.1806/7) shepherd at Saughtree Grain. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Betty and their children included Janet, Mary, Margaret and Robert. His brother Adam was also a shepherd. William (b.1811/2) born at Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Helen and Thomas. William (1813/4–51) of Sorbietrees in Liddesdale, probably son of the previous William. He married Elizabeth Hall (1828–1900) in 1840. They are listed on the 1841 census at Sorbietrees, and in 1851 there were also children William (b.1846) and Agnes (b.1848). His widow was living there in 1861. He farmed 4416 acres, employed 23 labourers, and unusually listed in his census entry are ‘Tramps seeking charity, an old Soldier & his wife and three children’. The story of his demise is peculiar. He is said to have been calling upon the minister of Walton in Cumberland, Rev. Joseph Smith on an April evening, where his former servant worked, to discuss hiring Smith’s servant girl, when the minister mistook him for an assailant and shot him dead. These events are recorded on his gravestone in Ettleton cemetery. The trial in Carlisle bizarrely resulted in acquittal for Rev. Smith, on the grounds that ‘Mr. Armstrong had no business there’, and that by making noises outside the parsonage at a late hour ‘it is precisely the same as if a burglary was committed’. The circumstances of his death were memorialised in a poem, ‘Lines Suggested by a Late Tragical Event on the Borders’, published anonymously in 1868. William (b.1834/5) from Halfmorton, he was shepherd at Kirkton in Ewesdale in 1841. His wife was Helen and they has a son William. William (19th C.) flesher in Newcastle in 1868. William (19th C.) son of John, he was descended on both sides from a family of shepherds. He became tenant farmer at Bedrule Mill. William (1867–1931) Director of the Criminal Investigation Department of the Shanghai Municipal Police between 1918 and 1927. He has become famous for a series of photographs of ordinary people that he took around Shanghai, and are prized because almost all of China’s photographic history was destroyed in the Cultural Revolution. In 1924 he purchased the ancestral family home of Whithaugh in Liddesdale, where he settled after retiring as a detective in 1927. It was sold off by his descendants in 1970 (formerly spelled ‘Airmestrang’, ‘Airmistrayngis’, ‘Airmstrang’, ‘Armestrang’, ‘Armestrange’, ‘Armestrong’, ‘Armestrong’, ‘Armsstrang’, ‘Armsstrang’, ‘Armstrang’, ‘Armstrange’, ‘Armstrangis’, ‘Armstronge’, etc.).

The Airmstrongs (ˈθə-ərn-strɔŋz, ˈær-mstrɔŋz) n. an important family in Northumberland and Liddesdale. The first of the family is said to have been Siward Digry (‘sword strong arm’), the last Anglo-Danish Earl of Northumberland in the 11th century. They became a powerful and warlike Border clan, particularly in Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Ballads were written about Johnnie of Gilnockie and Kinmont Willie. 11 Armstrongs were listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. 70 members of the family were ordered to appear in Selkirk in 1501 to answer for murder and other crimes and were pronounced rebels when they did not appear. The hanging of Johnnie at Caerlenrig, along with perhaps as many as 48 of his followers in 1530, was probably partly the result of a power struggle. There followed many trials involving the family in the 16th century, as the Debateable land became less lawless and the family the control it had once held. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with about 300 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. A letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth’s Chancellor in 1583 lists most of the Armstrong leaders, and particularly stresses which of them were married to English women. A document of 1585, listing men of Dumfriesshire and neighbouring areas whose superior was Lord Maxwell, contains the names and locations for probably for Armstrongs at that time. Between the 2 lists we probably have a fairly complete account of most of the world’s Armstrongs of the late 16th century. The surname was prominent among those declared as fugitives for theft and other crimes into the middle of the 17th century (e.g. among 47 men who were outlawed for non-appearance at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1645, 16 were Armstrongs). Depending on one’s point of view this was either: a rieving family continuing the old Border ways well after the Union of the Crowns; or a family whose power and lands had been diminished through victimisation to such an extent that they were struggling to survive. In any case, the clan was essentially dispersed through the 17th century, and there have been no chiefs since. There are no existing family charters, and so there is a great deal of guesswork in early genealogies. The family motto is ‘Invictus mane’ (I remain unvanquished) and the emblem is a raised, bent right arm with clenched fist. The Clan Armstrong Trust Centre in Langholm is open to visitors.

Airmstrong’s (ˈær-mstrɔŋz) n. ironmonger’s shop occupying the corner part of 4 Tower Knowe until demolished in 1935, to widen the street and extend the Commercial Bank.

Airmy (ˈær-ˈmi) n. army – ‘...the Airmy beckoned an’ hei hed twae year in the Scots Aislar-Bank (äs-lar-bawng) n., arch. A reddish-coloured bank, resembling ashlar-work — Aislar-Bank, a reddish-coloured bank, with projecting rocks in a perpendicular form, as resembling ashlar-work [JoJ] (see also ezlar).

Aisle (II, I-ul) n. An enclosed and covered burial place, sometimes once attached to a church, e.g. Soutra Aisle, Whitaugh Aisle (also formerly ile).

Aislie Moor (äs-lee-moor) n. Former name for an area to the south-east of Castleton Kirnde in the upper Liddel valley. It may be the same place as Castleton Muir. It is said that Cleverhouse pitched his camp here when he passed through Liddesdale in 1688.

Aitchison (ä-chee-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as a porter in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not he was local. Alexander (b.1827/8) from Yarrow, he farmed at Winningtonrig with his older brother George. He married Mina Turnbull. Andrew (18th/19th C.) saddler from Hawick. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794. He was based in Newcastleton in 1808, when named in the will of William Oliver ('Auld Cash') as his nephew. He was probably the Andrew born to John and Agnes Oliver in Hawick in 1764.

Charles (d.bef. 1809) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale in 1792 and 1794. He was surely related to the other nearby Aitchisons. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham in Ewesdale in 1783. He married Margaret, daughter of Gideon Scott, farmer at Priesthaugh. Christopher (18th C.) currier in Hawick. His name is also written 'Atkinson'. He married Katherine Scott and their children included: Rickerby (b.1776); Thomas (b.1777); Susan (b.1779); and John Scott (b.1786). The witnesses in 1777 were 'Mt George ...' and William Robertson and in 1786 were stockingmaker William Beck and currier John 'Rome'. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1787. Edmund (18th C.) tenant in Mouspeebie. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry of Lodgegill. Edward (17th/18th C.) tenant at Eweslee. His daughter Janet married John Scott, tenant in Falnash. In 1711 he 'made faith for the education' of his grandson John, since his son-in-law John Scott died before the baptism. He may have married Catherine, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He is probably the Edward whose daughter Bessy was baptised in Ewes in 1685. Edward (17th/18th C.) of Lodgegill. Edward (17th/18th C.) of Lodgegill. Edward (17th/18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Christian Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1740); Henry (b.1740); Christian (b.1742); Edward (b.1743); Jean (b.1744); John (b.1750); Jean (b.1754); and Charles (b.1755).

Edward (b.1786/7) farmer at Unthank in Ewesdale, he was born in Edinburgh. He was listed at Unthank in 1841, along with his wife Anne, teacher John Little and labourer Davina Lunn.
Aitchison

‘Miss R.’ listed at Unthank in 1821 was probably his daughter. He was still there in 1851, farming 2000 acres and employing 5 labourers. Edward (d.1858) referred to jokingly as ‘the ministrel of the Teviot and Yarrow’, he was a stocking-weaver and became an itinerant story-teller and poet. He wandered about the Borders, riding slowly on an old pony, and would tell stories of olden times as well as reciting doggerel verse of his own. Some of his compositions appear in ‘The Modern Scottish Minstrel’ (1870). John Wilson of Billholm (son of the Professor) wrote an epitaph: ‘Here in a lonely spot the bones repose Of him who murdered rhyme and slaughtered prose. Sense he defied and grammar set at nought. Yet some have read his books and even bought’. He was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Elliot (1797–1858) Hawick stocking-maker, known as a very quiet man who also wrote poetry. He was the son of the tenants of the Cross Keys Inn on the Sandbed (William and Mary Shortreed), being the 11th of 12 children. He had very little formal education and became an apprentice stocking-maker at an early age. He had to support his mother and youngest sister after his father died. He worked his entire life as a stocking-maker, except when employed for a while as a clerk, which he gave up, apparently because he felt he was not giving his employer value for money! Physically he was described as being only a little over 5 feet tall. He was talented as an artist as well as a poet. He was a quiet and unassuming character with few close friends, and shied away from any recognition for his poetic gifts, never reciting any of them in public. He was upset when some of his poems were publicised by Dr. Rogers in 1856, leading him to destroy several manuscript copies. Hence only a few survived to be published after his death, including ‘Bailie Macnab’, ‘The Approach of Winter’ and ‘A Matin’. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery, the plain headstone simply reading ‘In Memory of Elliot Aitchison, Who died 7th October, 1858, Aged 61 years’. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas (whose mother was an Aitchison). Euphemia (18th C.) cook at Borthwickbrae in 1785, when she was working for John Elliot. George of Linhope (19th C.) founder member of the Wisp Club, probably a son of William. He was accused of being father of Helen Elliot’s child in 1832. He is probably the Aitchison of Linhope who acted as croupier during the 1839 banquet held at Branxholme to honour the Duke of Buccleuch. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed along with his brother William as joint tenant of lands of the Duke of Buccleuch’s previously tenanted by their father. George (b.1820/1) from Yarrow, he was farmer at Winningtonrig in the 1860s. He farmed there with his younger brother Alexander. In 1861 he was listed at ‘Winnington rigg’, farming 600 acres and employing 5 people. James (16th C.) recorded in 1562 as a tenant in Clerklands. Robert Hastie acting as factor in Lilliesleaf acknowledged receipt of the teinds from him and other tenants of Greatlaws and ‘Clerklandes’. His surname is listed as ‘Achesone’. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Hall and their children included Janet (b.1650), Jean (b.1651) and Janet (again, b.1653). Thomas (b.1648), with no mother’s name listed, is probably also his child. The witnesses in 1651 were Walter Nichol and James Cuthbertson. James (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Kirton’ (presumably Kirkton) when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1687. His wife was a Douglas. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Ginnwood on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was also there in 1703 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (1737/8–1811) resident of Castleton Parish, buried at Ettleton. His children included: Christian (1780/1–1808); and James (1794–95). He is probably the resident of Newcastleton recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. His children included Marion (b.1714) and Adam (b.1716). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included Thomas (b.1732), Anna (b.1734), Christian (b.1738) and Walter (b.1740). John (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Wilson in 1742. He married Agnes Oliver, who was possibly sister of ‘Auld Cash’. Their children included: Christian (b.1757); Edward (b.1759); John (b.1761); Walter (b.1763); Andrew (b.1764), possibly the saddler in Newcastleton; Gilbert (b.1766); Henry (b.1768); Christian (again, b.1770); and Agnes (b.1773). He may also have been father of Margaret (who married Dr. Robert Douglas) and Robert (of the Royal Navy), who are mentioned in the 1808 will of William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) as Oliver’s niece and nephew; if so, then his wife Agnes would have been Oliver’s sister. He is probably the John whose child was buried in Hawick in 1772. It is possible he was the John who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in Wilton in Aitchison

1781. He may be the John, son of Robert, baptised in Ewes in 1723. John (b.c.1800) tailor at Hassendeanbank Cottages according to the 1841 census. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter, Robert, William, Mary, John and Alexander. John (19th C.) carrier operating between Minto, Selkirk and Lilliesleaf in the 1860s. Lancelot (17th C.) resident of Newmill-on-Slitrig on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for having 2 hearths. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale in 1797 on the Horse Tax Rolls. She was taxed for 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. She also paid the dog and clock taxes in the same year. R. (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Aitchinson, Miss, R. Unthank’ in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. She was probably daughter of Edward. Robert ‘Rob’ (18th C.) landlord of the Moss paul Inn in 1767 according to the autobiography of Dr. Carlyle of Inveresk (spelled ‘Achison’). He is described as having fallen from being an oppulent farmer to a struggling innkeeper because he ‘had been a Border rake or buck of the first head in his younger days, and to wit and humour, of which he had abundance, he added a sufficient portion of address and impudence’. He could be the Robert who was recorded as farmer at Mosspeeble in the period 1785–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls and was also on the 1797 Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert ‘Achison’ whose daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton in 1771, the sponsor (presumably meaning that he himself was not a parishioner) was Walter ‘Corrie’ in Craik. Robert (18th C.) recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1785. Robert (1750/1–1830) of the Royal Navy. Mentioned in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’, as his nephew. He was thus presumably brother of sadler Andrew and of Margaret, who married Dr. Robert Douglas. He is probably the ‘Lieutenant Aitchison, R.N. Greenwich’ listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is thus likely to be the Lieut. Robert who died at Greenwich Hospital in 1830 in his 80th year. He seems likely to be the Lieut. Robert Aitchison, married to Mrs. Mary Scott, whose children born in Melrose included: Robert Scott (b.1789); William Oliver (b.1791); Mary Anne (b.1793); and Edward (b.1794). In 1798 the couple had a court case against David Kyle, involving sale of a tenement of houses in Melrose. His wife Mary Scott died at Greenwich in 1846 aged 84. Simon (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1649 he was one of 2 men chosen ‘collectors of the stent of the east wattir’. Perhaps the same Simon was witness to a baptism for wright James Scott in 1678. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Braidhaugh in 1620. He was witness to a charter for Goldielands, given by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. The lands of ‘Braidhaughe’ were presumably the place near Brancholine. Thomas (17th/18th C.) cottar in North Synton. He married Mary Renwick and their son James was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1698. Thomas (18th C.) postillion (i.e. coachman) at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Smail in Minto in 1724. His wife’s parents were Andrew Smail and Margaret White. Walter (18th C.) from Hawick, he was a subscriber to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded in 1711 as ‘servitor’ to Archibald Scott, tenant in Hlisop. He witnessed baptisms for Archibald Scott in Hislop in 1709 and 1711. William (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Beatrice Elliot (probably in 1756) and their children included: Robert (b.1757); William (b.1758); Jean (b.1760); and Christian (b.1764). The witnesses in 1758 were Francis Scott and John Telfer. William (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ewesdale on the 1787 and 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. He was ‘junior’ and hence presumably son of another William. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. William (d.1805) originally a farming employee, he moved to Hawick in 1784 when that was unsuccessful. He started the public house known as the Cross Keys Inn, at 11 Sandbed. He married Mary Shortreed (who died about 1827), sister of Robert, the Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. They had 12 children, including: Robert (b.1784); Adam Ogilvie (b.1787); James (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); John (b.1793); and Elliot (b.1797), the local poet. William (c.1777–1836) farmer of Lihope, father of William. He is recorded as tenant at Linhope on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he had a saddle horse and 2 farm horses. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826 and the first Secretary. He married Mary Pott in 1794 and their children included: Isabella (b.1794); William (b.1797) of Linhope and Brieryhill; Beatrix (b.1798); Mary (b.1800); Jean
Aitken Aitken

(b.1802), who probably married Dr. John Douglas; George Pott (b.1805); Robert (b.1807); and Christian (b.1812). His widow and several children were living at Brieryhill in 1841. He may be the William, son of William, born in Southdean in 1780. William (1797–1873) of Linhope and Brieryhill, son of William and Mary Pott. He was born in Cavers Parish. In 1841 he was living at Linthill, while his mother and siblings resided at Brieryhill. In 1851 he was farmer of 2800 acres at Linhope, employing 7 labourers. He became involved with the Hawick Farmers Club and West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, and was first President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club from its formation in 1859 until his death. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was still at Linhope in 1868. Some letters exist (as part of the 'Darwin Correspondence Database') in which he describes his observations on the proportions of the sexes in lambs. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed along with his brother George as joint tenants of lands of the Duke of Buccleuch's North'. They had 4 sons. He was an invalid for his last few years (formerly spelled 'Achesone', 'Achison', 'Aitcheson', 'Aitchison', 'Aitchisone', 'Atchison', 'Atchison', 'Aitcheson', 'Aitchesone', 'Aitchison', etc., and until fairly recently interchangeable with Atkinson).

Aithoose Burn (ā′-hoos-burn) n. stream that runs roughly east to join the headwaters of the Borthwick at Craik (this is probably the 'Ettussburne' which is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map; the identity of 'Ettusshill' marked above it is less clear).

Aitken (ā′-kin, āt-kin) n. Adam Moffat (20th C.) son of George. He was a mechanical engineer, living in Hawick. He was a long-time member of Allars Kirk and wrote (not really edited) 'Allars of Hawick, 1810–1949: Annals of Allars Church' in 1949. He was Treasurer and Clerk of Allars from 1929 until it closed. He married Isabella Michie Murray and Joseph Murray was their son. Andrew (19th/20th C.) shoemaker and elder of St. George's Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer 1901–05. Baillie ?? (19th C.) mason of Hawick. Rev. Dr. David (1796–1875) minister of Minto, son of Allan. He studied at Edinburgh University and was librarian at Divinity Hall there. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1821, and after travelling in Europe he was presented to Minto Parish by Sir Gilbert Elliot, becoming minister there in 1827. He obtained a doctorate from Edinburgh University in 1843, and that same year he declined the Chair of Divinity and Ecclesiastical History. He demitted (i.e. retired) in 1864. While minister at Minto he had the Manse built for him in an italianate style. In 1836 he married Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of David Stoddart of Easton, and she died without surviving children; she was an heiress and quite wealthy. He was an acquaintance of the writer Thomas Carlyle, who visited him at the Manse in 1838. Some of his diaries are in the National Archives. He also wrote a description of Minto Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1838, with a particularly detailed report on the local geology. George (1819/20–1913) partner in the building firm of Aitken & Elliot. He lived in Douglas Road. He married Jane, daughter of James Wintrup, and she died in 1876, aged 36. They had a son John, who was a banker. He later remarried. He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. George ‘Podge’ (d.2006) Cornet in 1951, he later emigrated to Australia. He returned for his Jubilee year, despite the cancelation of festivities because of foot and mouth. He also returned to Hawick in 2006, but died on the Monday of Common Riding week. Gilbert ‘Gib o Drythropple’ (18th/19th C.) tenant of Drythropple farm in the Rule valley, as well as Todrig. He was said to be quite dangerous when drunk and to abuse his sister Meg. James (d.c.1683) tenant in Mervinslaw. His will is recorded in 1683. James ‘the Auld Duke (17th/18th C.)’ carrier in Hawick. In 1707 he is listed as ‘distinctionis causa called Duke Atkin’ when he witnessed a baptism for tailor John Hardie. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lamb in 1708 (along with carrier John Hardie, who was probably related to his wife). Probably the same James ‘carrier in Hawick’ witnessed (along with merchant Thomas Hardie) a baptism for workman Adam Sanderson in 1711 and another (along with carrier James Richardson) for cooper Alexander Weens. He married Margaret Hardie and their children included: William (b.1705); Margaret (b.1707); James (b.1712); and Margaret (again, b.1718). In 1712 his nickname is given as ‘Duke Elder’. The witnesses in 1705 were carrier John Aitken (surely a relative) and weaver David Miller. In 1715 ‘Duke Younger’ (presumably his son) is also recorded having a child baptised. James ‘Duke Younger’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, probably son of ‘the Auld Duke’. In 1712 he is ‘duke younger’ when he witnessed a baptism for carrier John Hardie and Isobel Aitken (who may well have been his sister or his father’s sister). He was ‘younger merch’ in 1718 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier William (who was probably related). In 1715 his daughter Helen was baptised in Hawick. He is easy to confuse with the older James. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘James Aitkine, son to William Aitkine’ on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1711. His name was also on the list in 1712, when recorded as a merchant. He is probably the merchant James who (along with cooper John) witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam Scott in 1721. He is probably the merchant James who in 1723 witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child to Margaret (perhaps his sister) and mason Andrew Turnbull. He could be the son of William born in Hawick in 1687. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Galalaw. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in the same year. James (19th/20th C.) draper in Hawick. He was Session Clerk of the Free Kirk 1895–99. John (d.c.1686) ‘indweller in Bournawre’ (i.e. Boonraw). His will is recorded in 1686. John (17th C.) carrier listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He must have been related to William, who was listed right after him and also a carrier. He witnessed the baptism of Robert (Lord) Oliver’s son in 1704; he was probably father or brother of Agnes Aitken (or ‘Aitkin’), the wife of Robert Oliver. He may be the John ‘Aitkin’ who witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains in 1676. He may be the John ‘Aitkin’ who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Nichol in 1680 and (along with James) another for Walter Wilson in 1698. In 1702 he (along with carrier William) witnessed a baptism for carrier Robert. In 1704 he was a carrier who witnessed a baptism for Robert Tinlin. In 1705 he is probably the John ‘Aitkin’ who witnessed a baptisms for Town Officer Alexander Scott, the carrier John who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver, the carrier who witnessed a baptism for James Aitken and the carrier who witnessed a baptism for fleisher Thomas Wilson. John (b.c.1695) cooper in Hawick. He was one of the 6 representative Burgesses appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767, during court proceedings on the division of the Common. He witnessed baptisms in 1719 for William Sanderson, tenant in Hawick, and in 1721 for fellow cooper Alexander Weens and (along with merchant James) for weaver Adam Scott. He is probably the John who was paid in 1732 for ‘2 girds he laid on the town’s foue’. He was probably the Wright who was paid in 1736 ‘for ye hooping of ye litter’, probably putting metal bands around the wheels of the Town’s funerary barrel. In 1743 he witnessed baptisms for shoemaker John Smail and Helen Aitken (who could be a relative) and for workman William Noble. He is probably the John who paid tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. He married Mary Ker in 1721; she was daughter of the deceased Robert Ker, gardener in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); James (b.1726); Janet (b.1731); and Robert (b.1738). In 1725 he witnessed births for tailor Robert Chisholme and miller John Henderson. It is possible that he is the John, son of John, born in Cavers Parish in 1796. John (18th C.) married Elizabeth Oliver in Minto Parish in 1731. His daughter Agnes (b.1732) was baptised in Hawick. John (1760/1-1847) originally from Minto Parish, he was a thatcher living on the Cross Wynd in 1841. He married Janet Anderson in Roberton in 1790 and she died in 1841, aged 81. They were buried at St. Mary’s. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.c.1807) farmer of 20 acres. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at 16 Kirkwynd with his brother Robert (listed as ‘Farmer’s Assistant’), sister Agnes Murray and nephew Robert Murray. His brother may have been ‘Hi-I-Obby’. John (19th C.) photographer in Hawick in the mid-to-late 1800s. He attended Glasgow Art School, apprenticed in Edinburgh, and settled in Hawick in 1867, becoming one of the first professional photographers in the town. His studio (or ‘Photographic Saloon’) was on the Arcade. He later moved to Glasgow and retired to Greenock. He was one of the founder members of the Hawick Billiard Club in 1877. Jospeh Murray (1921-75) son of Adam Moffat, a mechanical engineer, and Isabella Michie Murray. He studied architecture at the Edinburgh College of Art and was articled with George Hobkirk from 1936. He became a partner in 1951. In 1959 he formed a partnership with Charles F.J. Turnbull, and they also opened an office in Gala. He married Evelyn Wilson Michie. Margaret ‘Meg o Todrig’ (18th/19th C.) sister of Gilbert, who, it is said, treated her badly, particularly when drunk. They farmed at Drythropple in the Rule valley and also at Todrig. She was well know in Rulewater when she was trying to get away from her brother. She is probably the ‘Meg o Todrick’ whose parasol and ‘ruskie’ are in the Museum. Margaret (1764/5-1842) from the Kirk Wynd family who were ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, with their house and onestead where the aerated water works were built, next to the Tabernacle. She married William Laidlaw, and their descendants were well known in Hawick for several generations afterwards. She was widowed in 1823. It is said that poultry were kept in their Mid Raw house and there was a pig under the bed. When the pig put its snout in the family cooking pot, she is reported to have said ‘Get out, that’s our dinner for the mor’.

Michael (1961- ) official Common Riding singer from 2000. He sings ‘The Queen O’ The Auld Scottish Border’ and ‘Hawick Volunteers’ on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006). Mr. ?? (1836/7-1907) coachman on the Abbotrule estate in the mid-to-late 1800s. Robert (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1706 he witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter Gledstains and in 1723 another for workman Adam Tudhope. He may be the Robert who in 1726 witnessed a baptism for tailor Robert Chisholme. In 1701 he married Margaret Scott and their children included Isobel (b.1702), John (b.1704) and Elizabeth (b.1706). The witnesses in 1702 were carriers William and John (who were surely relatives). In 1719 probably the same carrier Robert secondly married Isobel Hardie, widow of carrier William Scott; their son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1719. Probably the same carrier Robert thirdly married Marion Oliver and had a daughter Margaret (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were Wilton schoolmaster Robert Wilson and workman James Dickson. His name is usually written ‘Atkin’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Tinlin and their children included Margaret (b.1727), Rachel (b.1731) and William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1731 were George Martin and John Scott. Robert Dickson ‘Hi-I-Obby’ (1801–1878) Hawick character of the 19th century. Born in Hawick, he was apprentice with ‘John the Turk’, then left town in 1822. He was known for his ability at breaking horses, and nicknamed for the words he whispered while doing this. In Edinburgh, he lived for a while in the same house as Burke and Hare and had a hand in selling their first body. He worked as a coach-man, fought in Crimea, conned people out of money by concocting stories, and acted in a play about his own life. His best-known confidence trick was enacted in Duns in the late 1850s, where he convinced people that he had inherited a fortune from a rich uncle; he was somehow able to extract £1000 from a bank, buying jewelery, dining with the local gentry and even purchasing the estate of Reston Mains. After being found out he served time in Greenlaw Jail, and this episode formed part of the play, which was published in Jedburgh and entitled ‘Hi-I-Obby; or, Hi-wo-Bobby’. This was performed at theatres throughout the Borders. He could be the 46 year old Robert, living with his brother farmer John on the Kirkwynd in 1851. A portrait of him exists. He died in the Hawick Poorhouse and was buried in a pauper’s grave in the Wellogate Cemetery, where a cairn was erected in the 1980s – ‘Renowned for loo o’ steed, iz work turned avid hobby, Syne that time nane ca’d um owt bit nickname Hi-I-Obby’ [MB]. Robert (19th C.) Treasurer of Hawick Free Kirk 1876–81. He may have been connected with the Common Riding Races and died in 1881. William (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) carrier, who ran a ‘change house’ in Hawick. In 1706 his daughter Isobel married John Hardie in an ‘irregular’ marriage. He was fined along with Hardie for holding a ‘supernumerary marriage’, although the guests included both Bailies and the Town Clerk! He married Bessie Aitchison and their children included: John (b.1680); William (b.1682); Isobel (b.1685), who married John Hardie; James; (b.1687); Agnes (b.1687); and Bessie (b.1689), who married James Richardson in 1715. Margaret, who married Andrew Turnbull in 1724, was probably his youngest daughter; in the marriage record he is ‘tenant in Hawick’. The witnesses to the 1684 baptism were Walter Purdon and ‘Mr’ John Purdom. He seems likely to be the William listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the carrier William listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; if so he must have been related to John, who was also a carrier and listed just before him. He may be the William, son of George and Marion Turnbull born in Hawick in 1641. He may be the William who Robert Cowan struck at after throwing a cup full of wine at the fair in Hawick in 1700. He may be the carrier William who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1701; these were for Robert Oliver and Agnes Aitkin, who was perhaps his sister, and for Robert Henderson. In 1702 he (along with carrier John) witnessed a baptism for carrier Robert. He may also be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1687. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Cauldmill in 1704 when he married Helen Veitch. William (b.c.1685) carrier, father-in-law of Bailie Robert Scott. He was referred to as ‘younger’ and hence seems likely to have been the son of carrier William, born in Hawick in 1682. He was the oldest of the 6 representative Burgess appointed to perambulate and define the boundaries of the Burgh’s land in 1767. He described how he had ‘lived in Hawick all his life, and from the time of his infancy he was at the riding of the marches of the Common yearly’. He also described how the Flag was passed over house at Meikle Whitlaw, which was half built on the Common. He was objected to as a witness to give evidence in the court case, on account of being a Bailie and possessing a house in Hawick. He was probably the William, younger, recorded in 1707, when John Scott, ‘Soldier’ and his son John, younger, were fined for letting the horses out of his barn; presumably there was some kind of dispute between the 2 families. He was also ‘younger’ carrier in 1708. In 1711 he was the ‘younger’ carrier who witnessed a baptism for carrier Henry Paterson. He is probably the carrier who in 1741 witnessed a baptism for James Nimmo and Janet Aitken (perhaps his daughter). He had a daughter called Betty. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Bessie (b.1707) or Betty; Janet (b.1708); Agnes (b.1710); William (b.1713); John (b.1715); Margaret (b.1718); and James (b.1720). The witnesses in 1708 were candlemaker James Turnbull and mason John Napier, in 1710 were masons Peter Mitchell and John Napier, and in 1718 were carrier John Hardie and merchant James Aitkin, younger. He was probably related to the later carriers of the same name. William (18th/19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, around No. 3, on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) wheelwright on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6.
Aitken an Turnbull's

Aitken an Learmonth's

William (b.1814) son of George and Esther Turnbull, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a farm steward, who lived at Wester Essenside. He married Mary Hogg. Their children included: Walter Hogg (b.1844); George Ramsay (b.1846); Robert (b.1849); Mary (b.1851); Esther; Isabella H.; Thomas H.; and William. In 1851 he was at Wester Essenside with his mother-in-law Mary Glendinning and his sister-in-law Margaret Hogg.

William (19th C.) of Falsnash, elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. William (b.1894) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was twin of Tommy. He drove lorries for the Army Service Corps during WWI. He married Isabella Renwick and their children were Betty, John and Nan (see also Aitkin; formerly spelled ‘Aitkin’, ‘Aitkine’, ‘Atkin’, ‘Atkon’, etc.).

Aitken an Learmonth's (ə’-kin-an-leer-months) n. aerated water works built at No. 16 Kirk Wynd. This was next door to the Tabernacle, the land being owned by the family of Margaret Aitken, who married William Laidlaw. The factory was later taken over by James Cairncross and known as the Cairncross Lemonade Works.

Aitken an Turnbull's (ə’-kin-an-turn-bulz) n. architects office at 22 Buccleuch Street, being effectively the continuation of the Alison & Hobkirk business. J. Murray Aitken joined the practice in 1936, 4 years after Alison’s death and he would eventually form the partnership with Charles F.J. Turnbull in 1959. The firm took over the Galashiels practice of Elder & Cairns in 1962. In the 1960s the firm’s business was dominated by work for the local council in Galashiels, Melrose and Selkirk.

Aitkin (ə’-kin, āt-kin) n. Archibald (17th/18th C.) miller in the Hawick area. He was the miller of Trow Mill who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls; he was taxed for 7 hearths, ‘for himself undermillers & kilns’. He was probably son of William, tenant in Trow Mill, whose will is recorded in 1684. Probably the same Archibald was undermiller in Hawick in 1711 and 1714 when children of his were baptised. He married Isobel Douglas (perhaps from the Trows family of Douglasses) in Hawick in 1703; he was stated to be from Cavers Parish at that time. Their children included: Archibald (b.1711); Walter (b.1713); John (b.1714); and Archibald (again, b.1716). William (b.1704) and Christian (b.1707), baptised in Cavers Parish, were probably also his children (suggesting he worked at a mill in that parish for a while). Witnesses in 1711 were Walter Elliot (tacksman of Hawick Mill) and Walter Riddell, also undermiller and in 1714 were Walter Elliot again and John Watson, Clerk of the Regality. Archibald (b.1821) son of James and Christian Scott. He was a spirit merchant of Wilton Path. He is recorded at 46 Wilton Path in 1861, at No. 41 in 1871 and at No. 13 in 1881. He presented the cornet with a bottle of brandy after the Thursday Chase during the 1880s. He married Margaret Beattie in 1849 and their children were: Elizabeth (b.1853); James (b.1857); John (b.1860), cabinet-maker; Christian (b.1862); and Agnes (b.1868). Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1886) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was born in Wilton. He apparently ran away from home in about 1908, joining the Gordon Highlanders. He served in India before WWI and was a Sergeant Major when the battalion went to France. After the war he was with the ‘Black and Tans’ in Ireland, but left the army and emigrated to Canada. However, he returned to Hawick, where he worked at Pringle’s. During WWII he was second-in-command for the Home Guard in Hawick. He married Margaret Elliot and their children were Alice, Margaret, Jack, Archie and Christine. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Anne Oliver and their children included: Janet (b.1760); William (b.1761); Gilbert (b.1766); Marion (b.1769); and Helen (b.1772). The witnesses in 1766 were carriers Gilbert Oliver and William Aitkin (perhaps his father-in-law and father) and in 1772 were James and William (perhaps his brother and father). Based on names, he could be a son of William and Marion Rae. He is probably the Francis who witnessed a baptism for Walter Stevenson in Hawick in 1768. He may be the Francis, living at Ormiston Parkhead in 1779 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Horselee in Kirkton Parish in 1789–90. He was later farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He may have been related to Gilbert, who farmed at Adderstonlee at the same time. He may be the Francis whose son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1779.

George (1779–1852) son of Robert and Janet Deans. He was a hind at Stouslie and then shepherd at Alton in Wilton Parish. He was recorded among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41, with his address being changed from Stouslie to Alton in 1840. In 1851 he was recorded as ‘Annuitant Formerly Shepherd’ at Alton. He married Esther Turnbull, who died in 1856.
Their children included: Robert (b.1805); John (b.1807); Janet (b.1809); Margaret (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mary (b.1816); James (b.1819); Esther (b.1821); and George (b.1826), who moved to Galt. George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He had a strong Presbyterian upbringing, and had a Bible given to him when he attended Priestrig (or Stouslie) School. He trained as a stonemason and moved to Lilliesleaf, where he was an Elder and Session Clerk. In 1883 he emigrated to Canada and became heavily involved in the Central Presbyterian Church in Galt, perhaps helping to build the church. However, he was only there for about 3 years before he died. He married Betsy Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (or Maggie) Potter (b.1856); Esther Turnbull (b.1858); George (b.1860); Elizabeth (b.1865); Thomas Turnbull (b.1869); and Robert Turnbull (b.1862).

Gilbert (1768/9–1832) farmer at Adderstonehill. He was recorded at Addertonlee on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1794. In the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 he is listed as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Addertonlee. He was tenant at Addertonshiel about the same time when Gideon Scott erected the first windmill in the area there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Jane Amos (1775/6{1857) and their children included: Francis (b.1801), Francis (b.1805), Gilbert (b.1812) and Elizabeth (b.1812) who all died young. He is buried at St. Mary’s.

James (15th/16th C.) gardener in Hawick. He may have been son of William and Mary Oliver. He married Mary Oliver in 1754. Their children included: John (b.1757); James (b.1759); John (again, b.1762); Betty (b.1765); William (b.1770); Robert (b.1772); and Agnes (b.1777). The witnesses in 1765 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were James Oliver and John Aitkin. He might be the wright who witnessed a baptism for Alexander Lockie in 1772. He is possibly the wheelwright, son of the deceased John, who died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th/19th C.) married Mary Stewart in Wilton in 1797. He was living at Easter Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1800. His children included: Robert (b.1800), baptised in Robertson Parish; Mary and Jenny (b.1804), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1806), baptised in Wilton. James (b.1798), baptised in Bowden Parish could also be his son.

James (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier, recorded along with Walter in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; his name is listed as ‘Aitkins’. James ‘Doctor Jaickets’ (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of 1823 and 1824. It is unclear how he was connected with other local Aitkins. It is possible he is the James ‘Aitken’ (born out of the county) recorded as ‘Ind’ at the Flex in 1841. James (b.1786) son of Robert and Janet Henderson. He married Christian Scott in 1810 in Wilton Parish. Their children were: Betty (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); John (b.1816); Agnes (b.1818); and Archibald (b.1821), who was a grocer. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pensyng pertaing to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. His surety was William Langlands, suggesting that he might have been from Wilton.

John (17th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in the 1641 Town Book, when he is recorded acting as an appraiser for a horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary John ‘Aitkins’. He could be the John who was married to Margaret Elliot, and whose children baptised in Hawick included Jean (b.1648) and Marion (b.1652). He could be the John whose testament is recorded in 1682. John (d.be 1721) described as ‘tenent in Hawick’ and already deceased in 1721 when his eldest daughter Margaret married George Oliver, shoemaker. He could be the ‘John Aitken, in Hawick’ whose will was recorded in 1682 or alternatively the carrier John Aitken. He could be the John whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick in 1699, with witnesses Henry Orrock and Alex Hislop. John (18th C.) Hawick resident. His wife was Mary Ker, and their children included William (b.1722), Robert (b.1724), James (b.1726), Janet (b.1731) and Robert (again, b.1738). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1763 he married Magdalen Nichol, who was also from Hawick. Their children included Mary (b.1767). He could be the cooper John who in 1767 witnessed a baptism for carrier Walter. He may also be the John who witnessed baptisms for manufacturer William Richardson and for wheelwright James (perhaps a relative) in 1772. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Saughtree. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1860) son of Archibald and Margaret Beattie, he was born in Wilton. He worked as a cabinet-maker, and was recorded as such at 15 Wilton Path in 1891. In 1882 he married Isabella Gracie and they had a large family: Margaret (or ‘Meg’, b.1881), who married twice and moved to Leeds; Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzie’, b.1882), who worked as a tweed-mender and also made quilts; Agnes (b.1883), who worked as a power-loom weaver, married Jimmy Lyon, moved to Earlston, and had a daughter Isabella Jane Lyon, who married Hendry Smith Russell; Bryce (b.1884), a wool sorter and spinner, whose daughter Isabella was a swimming champion; Archibald (or Archie, b.1886), who joined the Gordon Highlanders; John (b.1887), who worked at Wilson & Glenny’s; James (or ‘Jimmy’, b.1892), who worked in mills in Ireland and England; William (1894–1963), who drove lorries for the Army Service Corps in WWI, father of John; Thomas (or ‘Tommy’, 1894–1982), twin of William; Isabella May (b.1899), who married Hammy Aitken; and Christina Scott (‘Teenie’, b.1901), who married Johnny Duncan and lived in Galashiels. John, M.B.E. (1933– ) local businessman, born in Denholm. He qualified as a Chartered Accountant in 1956 and then did National Service before joining Welch’s in 1958. He has been secretary of several local nursing home associations, Chairman of the Appletreehall Village Hall Committee, and has been President of the Callants’ Club. He has served on many bodies associated with the British Legion, the K.O.S.B. and ex-servicemen’s organisations. He received the M.B.E. in 2001 for services to the community. He lived for many years at Appletreehall. He married Elizabeth Charlotte Fraser. Robert (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. An ox, belonging to William Rennie, was stolen from his house in Minto, by Cock, son of John Turnbull in Tofts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when another ox was stolen from his house in Minto, this time belonging to William Rae. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written as ‘Aitking’. Robert (1745–bef. 1810) son of William and Marion Rae, he was a flesher in Hawick. In 1763 (at the age of 18) he married Janet Scott (aged 23). Their children were: Margaret (b.1765); Thomas (b.1767); and Betty (b.1770). In 1773 he secondly married Janet Deans, and she died in a smallpox epidemic. Their children were: William (b.1774); Isabel (b.1776); and George (b.1779), hind at Stouslie, whose descendants moved to Canada. He was recorded as a gardener in 1786 (casting some doubt on whether all these marriages were the same man). The witnesses in 1786 were smith Richard Young and gardener William Black. He may be the Robert whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1776. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for George Deans in 1777. He is probably the deceased Robert whose daughter Betty died in Hawick in 1809. Robert Turnbull (b.1862) son of George and Betsy Turnbull, he was born in Lilliesleaf. He moved with the rest of his family to Galt in Ontario. He married Helen, daughter of John Spalding and their son Robert Bruce married Marion Grace Barrie, whose family farmed in Rulewater. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1894–82) son of John and Isabella Gracie, he was born in Wilton Parish, twin of William. He worked in the knitwear industry all his life except for military service. He enlisted with the 1st/4th K.O.S.B. and served in Palestine during WWI. He became known in Hawick as a versatile self-taught piano player, in demand as an accompanist. He later lived at Abbefield Homes on Broughton Place. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was convicted of associating with William Turnbull and Mark Turnbull, during the time they were declared fugitives. Later in 1502 William Turnbull of Minto was fined for failing to enter him in court; he was recorded being ‘de mynto’. Walter (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier, listed along with James in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name was listed first (as ‘Aitkins’), suggesting he was the father or elder brother. He may be the Walter who lived on the Cross Wynd, married Betty Waugh (who died in 1811) and had children James (b.1767), Betty (b.1769), Helen (b.1772) and Margaret (b.1775). The witnesses in 1767 were cooper John (who was probably related) and Robert Beattie and in 1772 were John Small and Robert Beattie (again). He is probably the Walter who in 1786 witnessed a baptism for Adam Small. William (17th C.) witness to contracts of borrowing money against lands in the Rule valley between Rev. William Weir, Edward Lorraine and Gilbert Eliott in 1632. He is in one transcription as ‘William Aitkin in Trowis’, the surname presumably being an error. He must have been the tenant farmer at the Trows. Either the same or a later William ‘Aitken’ is ‘in Trow-miln’ when his will was recorded in Peebles Commissariat in 1684. He was probably father of Archibald, associated with Trow Mill shortly afterwards. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William (perhaps his son) in 1764. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for Francis, who may also have been his son. It is possible he is the William Aitken, son of carrier William, baptised in Hawick in 1713. William (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Marion Rae. Their children included: James (b.1737); William (b.1739); Walter (b.1739); Walter (again, b.1744); and Robert (b.1745), flesher. He could be the gardener William who witnessed a baptism for William Turner in 1760. He may also be the William who in 1757 and 1762 witnessed baptisms for gardener James (who was surely a relative, perhaps his son). He is probably the William who witnessed baptisms for Francis (perhaps also his son) in 1766 and 1772. William (18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1763 he married Isobel (1744–1822), daughter of Alexander Donald; she later married Robert Hotson from Langholm, and had 10 more children. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1764, with witnesses William Aitkin (perhaps his father) and Alexander Donald (his father-in-law). Either he or another William was listed as a carrier when witnessing a baptism for carrier George Wilson. He could be the son of William and Marion Rae born in 1739. William (b.1774) son of Robert and Janet Deans. He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Castleton, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same William was a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably the William of Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He lived at the Kirkwynd, around No. 16 according to the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes and their children included Robert, John, William, Elizabeth and Janet. William (b.c.1770) farmer at Muselee. He was recorded there in 1841. He married Peggy Easton and their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish, except for the last child, in Cavers Parish) included: Thomas (b.1799); Isobel (b.1801); Margaret (b.1803); Ann (b.c.1805); Gilbert (b.1807), who in 1851 was living with his cousin Agnes Murray at Williamlaw; Adam (b.1813). Perhaps the same William is recorded as farmer at Acreknowe, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 (see also Aitken; formerly written ‘Aitkine’, ‘Arkin’, ‘Atkyn’, ‘Atkyne’, etc.).

1694. John Nichol was there in 1712, James Govenlock in 1711–20, Walter Scott in 1711–20, William Beattie in 1717, William Elliot in 1721 and George Turnbull in 1723. Gideon Scott was there in at least the period 1726–36, William Scott in 1736 and James Anderson in 1762. The area contained the separate farms of Wester and Easter Alemoor from at least the late 16th century; Wester Alemoor formerly stood to the north of the Loch, but was rebuilt near to the main road (so it is no longer really west of Easter Alemoor). The area was part of Selkirkshire until added to Roberton Parish in 1690. The damming of the Ale Water made the modern reservoir, which extends to the south of the B711. A flint blade was discovered there in 2003 when the water was low. Local superstition assigned a bloodthirsty supernatural being to the loch, which Leyden described as a ‘water-cow, an imaginary amphibious monster, not unlike the Siberian mammoth’!

Another tradition says that a child was seized by an erne and dropped into the loch – ‘Sad is the wail that floats o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake, And nightly bids her gulls unbottom’d quake, While moonbeams, saildrops o’er Alemoor’s lake.’

Yarrow), as well as Altrieve (in Ettrick) from 1488. In 1490 he assigned the farm of Altrieve on his own and was ‘Johanni Achilmere de eodem’ in 1491, when leasing Garlawcleuch and Blackhouse. He may be the Laird of Alemoor (‘domino elmer’) who served as surety for Patrick in Garlawcleuch in 1494/5. He is recorded as ‘Johannem Alemir de eodem’ in 1499, relating to payments for Walter Scott in the Ward of Ettrick, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1499 he was reassigned the lands of ‘Garlawcleuch et Blakhous’ in the Ward of Yarrow. In 1501 he was assigned the same lands along with his brother Patrick. He was also referred to as ‘John Elmer of Elmer’ in 1505 when the Earl of Bothwell obtained a precept for the lands of Alemoor, confirmed in a charter of 1511, which had previously hereditarily belonged to him. And in 1509 Pringle of Tinnis took over the rental of the farms of ‘Blackhouse and Garlawcleuch’ which he had previously held. It is unclear what relation he had to the James recorded earlier, and whether he or James was the Laird of Alemoor killed in about 1493. John (15th C.) son of John, who was tenant of Altrieve. In 1484 he took over the half lease held by Alexander Dalma-hoy and this continued until at least 1486. John (15th/16th C.) son of Alexander, he was recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1502. His father was surety for him, and fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Mungo (15th/16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1527 when he witnessed a document relating to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander was listed right after him and so may have been related. Patrick (15th/16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He is probably the Patrick in Garlawcleuch who was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes in 1494/5. He was specifically said to have stolen 8 ‘silver nobles’ from a man called John ‘aslowane’, living in Tweeddale, with the Laird of Alemoor (probably his brother) as surety. Later at the same court he ‘came in the King’s will’ for resetting Cockburns who had raided Traquair. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. In 1501 he and his brother were assigned the lands of ‘Garlawcleuch et Blakhous’ in Yarrow. Roger (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Rogier de Almere del comte de Selghykryk’ in the 1296 Ragman Rolls, along with ‘Emme’. His seal bears a hunting horn, along with the words ‘S’ROGERI D’ALNMER’. In 1304/5 there is a record of payment by him for the ward of Traquair; he is there ‘de Aylemer’. In 1311 Edward II listed him among the rebels whose Scottish lands had been given to Robert Hastings, but were returned to them now that they had ‘come to his peace’; he is there ‘Roger de Aylmor’. He witnessed a charter of lands at Bemersyde in 1326 and another for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. The history of the family for the next 150 years is uncertain. Roger (15th C.) son of James of that Ilk. In 1484 he and his father James leased Gilmscleuch. He is recorded in 1488 as ‘Roger de Achilmere’ when he resigned his lands on the south side of the High Street near the Castlehill in Edinburgh, these passing to Charles Murray. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1527 as a witness in Selkirk for 2 transactions involving land in Lilliesleaf. He was probably deceased in about 1530 when his former wife Beatrix Sinclair and her new husband William Scott (as well as her children with her first husband) were granted half of the income from Lilliesleaf Mill (also written ‘Achilmir’, ‘Achilmer’, ‘Achilmere’, ‘Aichilmeir’, ‘Ailmeir’, ‘Alemir’, ‘Elmer’, etc.).

Alemoor Court (āl-moor-kōr’) n. part of Stiches, off Roxburghie Drive, built in 1975, named after the local Loch.

Alemoor Craig (āl-moor-krag) n. hill north of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 378 m, with a rocky outcropping on the south side.

Alemoor Hill (āl-moor-hiл) n. hill to the north of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 346 m. Wester Alemoor is a little further to the west and higher.

Alemoor Loch (āl-moor-loch) n. reservoir at Alemoor, extended in 1958 from the formerly much smaller Loch there, submerging Shirescleuch farmstead and the former Bellendean and Wester Alemoor also being demolished to make way. It is now the principle water supply for Hawick, with the Allan and Dod supplies being used as back-up supplies (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ealmoore loch’).

Alemoor Toor (āl-moor-toor, -tow-ur) n. tower near Alemoor Loch, standing on the north bank of the Ale Water, near where the dam is at the end of the modern reservoir. The lands ‘cum turre’ were granted to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1511, and the tower was burned by Dacre’s men in 1514 (when it is listed as ‘Elmar-tour’ in a letter from Dacre). The site is marked on older Ordnance Survey maps, between Wester Alemoor and Easter Alemoor. There were still earthworks visible there in the early 20th century; however, they were destroyed when a new road was built for the reservoir. It is said that much stone was removed and re-used at that time.

Alerig (āl-rig) n. house north of Belses designed by Leslie Graham MacDougall in 1936, originally called Newhall. There is a fort and triangulation pillar on the nearby 152 m hill.

Ale Viaduct (āl-vi-a-dukt) n. railway bridge on the Waverley Line north of the Belses station.

Ale Witter (āl-wi'-ur) n. Ale Water, a tributary of the Teviot, with source on Henwoodie Hill near Roberton, it flows for 24 miles (38 km), passing through Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf to join the Teviot near Ancrum. The upper section of the river experiences several falls, then passes through the Alemoor Loch, and then runs between high hills (along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’) and through the ‘Leap Linns’, before entering a broader valley near Lilliesleaf. A series of about 15 caves on its banks near Ancrum are said to have been places of refuge during rievings days. Streams which flow into the Ale include the Wilson Burn, Langhope Burn, Woll Burn and Woo Burn. The name is common for rivers elsewhere, e.g. a tributary of the Eye, running through the area once known as Coldinghamshire. Part of the valley is described in a royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170; this includes several lost place names, as well as mention of a highway through the region. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, specifically ‘the Watter of Al fro Askrie to Elmartour [probably Ashkirk to Alemoor Tower] in the said Middimarchies, wherupon was 50 70 pleughes’. Several lands in the valley belonging to Scott of Buccleuch and his friends were burned in October 1548 by the Kers and the English, as part of an ongoing feud — ‘... Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from the lakes did raving come Each wave was crested with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed’ [SWS], ‘The hill road to Roberton, Ale Water at our feet, And grey hills and blue hills that melt away and meet’ [WHO], ‘This isna me, bit jist my ghost Ti tell ye how I won an’ lost The sweetest lass that ever cross’t The wimpin’ Aill, And how I hope, at ony cost, Ti find her still’ [WP] (formerly spelled ‘Aill’ etc.; the origin of the root is uncertain, but is probably pre-English and may be the same as the root for Allan Water, coming from the Celtic; it occurs from at least the late 12th century as ‘Alne’, ‘Alnam’, etc.; it is ‘Watter of Aill’ in 1547/8, ‘Ayell wayer’ in 1548/9 and ‘Water of Eall’ in 1604; it is ‘Ail fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘ail w.’ on Adair’s map c. 1688).

Alexander (aw-leek-zawn-dur) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Alexander I (c.1078–1124) King from 1107. He was the 4th son of Malcolm Canmore and Margaret, grand-niece of Edward the Confessor. He succeeded to the crown on the death of his brother Edgar, but inherited only the parts north of the Forth and Clyde, and hence was never Hawick’s monarch. However, the Lovels probably first gained the lands of Hawick in his reign. He was succeeded by his brother David I, who had previously held only the southern lands. Alexander II (1198–1249) son of William I, the Lion, he became King in 1214. He led an army into England to support English noblemen against John, but generally relations between the 2 countries were friendly during his reign. He married Henry III’s sister Joanna in 1221 (when she was 11), and in 1237 married Mary de Coucy at Roxburgh Castle. Part of the dowry of his first wife was the lands of Jedburgh, Hassendean and Lessuden. He spent some time in Jedburgh. Nicholas de Soulis was the son of one of his illegitimate daughters. Richard Scott, one of the earliest ancestors of the Scotts of Buccleuch, first received lands in Roxburghshire in his reign. He died while sailing to compel the Lord of Argyll to side with him against the Norwegian King. He was buried at Melrose Abbey. Alexander III (1241–86) son of Alexander II, he was born at Roxburgh, and became King in 1249. His minority involved struggle between Walter Comyn, Earl of Monteith and Alan Durward, the Justiciar. He married Margaret, daughter of Henry III of England, and there was an important meeting between the 2 Kings at Kelso in 1255. He managed to wrest the Western Isles from Norway in 1266. His 3 children having died, he arranged for his great-grand-daughter Margaret (‘the Maid of Norway’) to be next in line. He also remarried (to Yolanda of Dreux) in 1285, with the wedding feast held in Jedburgh Castle. He appointed Sir Thomas de Charteris (ancestor of the Langlands family) his Lord High Chancellor in 1280. He died following a fall from his horse, this being a disaster for Scotland. Thomas the Rhymer is supposed to have predicted his death, the story of the spectacle appearing at Jedburgh Castle partly inspiring Edgar Allan Poe’s ‘Masque of the Red Death’. A coin of his reign was dug up at Hislop in the 19th century.

Alexander (aw-leek-zawn-dur) n. Charles Jamieson (19th C.) of Heronhill, owner of Alexanders & Co., manufacturers of Weensland from about 1875–85. During this period
Alexander Lowe Hall

Weensland Terrace was renamed Alexander Terrace. George (1730/1–1805) resident of Bedrule Parish, who died at Doveshaugh. His wife Isobel died in 1819, aged 88. George (d.1820) from Hobkirk Parish, perhaps son of the earlier George. In 1788 he married Helen Brown, who was from Jedburgh. Their children included: George (b.1789); Betty (b.1790), who married Alexander Turnbull; James (b.1792); Isobel (b.1795); and Ebenezer (1800–64). George (1789–1871) farmer at Bonthecster, born in Bedrule Parish, son of George and Helen Brown. He was at Bonthecster in 1841. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 140 acres, employing 2 labourers. He firstly married Elizabeth Small (b.1788) and in 1858 secondly married Barbara Duff (b.1819) in Hawick. His children were: William (1819–1902); Janet (1824–74), who married Richard Waugh; Helen (1825–1908), who married Alfred John Scott and moved to Melbourne; Anne (1827–61); and George (b.1829), who probably died young. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Helen and Ann. George (1824–1903) son of James and Grisel Turnbull. In 1851 he was farmer of 170 acres and employing 7 people at Easter Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was still at Easter Lilliesleaf, farming 339 acres and employing 8. He married Ann Campbell Gourlay (1837–85) and their children were: Margaret Baxter (1859–60); Margaret Baxter (again, 1861–89); Grisel Turnbull (1863–1941); James (b.1865); Adam Gourlay (b.1866); Anne Campbell (1868–91), who married James McLeish; Jessie (1870–1938); and George (1878–1900), who died in Buffalo, Wyoming. James (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Davidson in Bedrule in 1706. James (b.1792) son of George and Helen Brown, he was born in Bedrule Parish. He was farmer at Craggs in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1841 and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Easter Lilliesleaf. In 1817 he married Grisel Turnbull (1795–1867) and they had a son George (1824–1903), who farmed in Lilliesleaf. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. The gravestone of his wife, ‘Ketren Sinkler’ (presumably Catherine Sinclair), dated 1693, is in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (b.1822/3) from Tranent in East Lothian, he was Station Master at Hawick. In 1851 he was lodging on Wilton kirk Style, and listed as the Station Master. He was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Shaters (18th C.) house servant at Orchard in 1791, when he was working for William Elliot. It is unclear if his first name was an error.

Alexander Lowe Hall (aw-leek-zawn-dur-lo-hawl) n. formal name for the village hall in Newcastleton. It was named after the last minister of the church that was there.

Alexander Terrace (aw-leek-zawn-dur-te-ris) n. name given to Weensland Terrace for a time in the late 1800s after manufacturer Charles Alexander.

Algar (al-gar) n. one of 2 Chaplains (the other being William) and a Parson (Henry), probably of Hawick Kirk, who witnessed a charter in about 1183, in which Henry Lovel granted land at Branxholme to the canons of St. Andrews. This was probably the first suggestion of a church in Hawick, although it is not certain that they were attached to it. His name is listed as ‘Algaro capelhel’.

alhale (al-hâl) adv., arch. completely, wholly – ‘...of nyenetene yerris fullily to be compleit, pessoabilli joyssande alhale and togeddir ...’ [DoR1445].

Alice Hindley see Penstemon Alice Hindley

Alinton (a-lin-ton) n. Peter (d.1242) cleric associated with Glasgow Diocese, referred to as ‘de Alinton’. He may have originally come from England or France, and appears to have been a Clerk by 1224 and a Master by 1235, when he was sent by Alexander II to York to appeal against the election of the Bishop of Galloway. He was appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1238, the first person to hold that separate position. He is also mentioned in 1240. He may be the same man as the vicar and chaplain of Glasgow recorded in the late 1220s.

Alisaunder (aw-li-san-dur) n. Alexander – ‘Did the deed-raap soond throwe its gampy ends, A wunder, i the nicht efter guid King Alisaunder’s waddeen-foy’ [ECS].

Alison (aw-li-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) from Kelso, he seems to have been given money from the poor box in Wilton Parish in 1706. Alexander, W.S. (18th C.) lawyer in Edinburgh. He served as Deputy Receiver General of the Excise in Scotland. In 1779 he is recorded as holder of the liferent of the lands of ‘Lamlairs and Plantations’ in Minto Parish. He is still recorded as holder of the liferent in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, although incorrectly listed as Abraham. He had ‘liferent’ of the lands of Barnhills from Robert Bennet in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire among the ‘Votes of Mr. Bennet’ (suggesting that he just had the lands in order to be able to vote). However, as Cashier of Excise, he was listed as disqualified from voting in Selkirkshire in 1788. His name was sometimes spelled ‘Allison’. James Pearson (1862–1932) local architect, with Alison & Hobkirk, at 17 Buccleuch Street. He was responsible for designing many of the finest buildings in Hawick in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, and can safely be described as Hawick’s most prominent architect. He was born in Eskbank, son of Thomas and Margaret Pearson and brother of landscape painter Thomas. He was trained at the Edinburgh Institution, was articled to Robert Thornton Shiel in Edinburgh until 1885, moving for a couple of years to Paisley, before setting up his own architect’s practice in Hawick in 1888. He became partner with George Hobkirk from the early 1920s. His major work includes: Balcary (1889); the Drill Hall (1889); Buccleuch Bowling Club (1891); the Co-op Stables (1891); parts of Drumlanrig Square (1891); the Post Office (1892); Dunira (1892); Hawick Bowling Club (1892); the Masonic Hall (Lodge 424, 1893); Wilton South Church (1893); the Congregational Church (1893); Victoria Hotel (1893); the Central Hotel (‘Prudential’, 1894); Golf Club House (1894); the Liberal Club (1894); Station Buildings tenement, ‘Allan Watt’s’ (1894); Strathmore (1896); Ardenlea (1896); the Con. Club (1897); Salisbury Avenue villas (1897) 23 and 25 High Street (1898); Laidlaw Memorial Hall, Bonchester (1899); Teviotdale Dairy (c.1899); J.E.D. Murray’s studio (43 North Bridge Street, 1899); Stirches House (St. Andrew’s Convent, 1900); 16 and 18 High Street (1902); Ingliside (1903); Norwood (1904); the Crown Hotel (c.1905); the Coille (c.1907); Wilton Church alterations (c.1907); Langlee (1907); Penshriev Peel (1908); the Brown Fountain (1910); Lilliesleaf Church alterations (1910); Wilton Lodge alterations for Museum (1910); St. George’s Church (1913); the Hawick Savings Bank (T.S.B., 1914); Forman Hall (Roberton, 1922); Peter Scott’s factory block additions (1923); and Allars Church Hall renovations (1926). He was particularly known for sympathetic and creative corner sites. He also designed other private residences, including imaginative ‘infill’ sites like the red sandstone 9 High Street, and also many alterations to existing homes, churches or factories. He contributed buildings in other Border towns, particularly the Masonic Lodge, Town Hall and several church halls and other public buildings in Jedburgh, as well as the War Memorial Cross in Denholm, the War Memorials in Lilliesleaf and Teviothead, and alterations to Bemersyde House (along with a survey, published in 1924) and Kirkton Church. Stirches House was his biggest job, and in 1904 the final £20,000 bill led to a legal battle with Blenkorn, which he ultimately won. He was keenly interested in history and archaeology, leading an excavation of the old Chapel at Hermitage, which he wrote up for the Transactions. He also wrote a history of Wilton Parish and Church in 1910, which was reprinted for the centenary in the early 1960s. He provided a detailed plan of the boundaries of the Common in 1777 for Craig & Laing’s book on the ‘1514 Tradition’. In addition he was a member of the Callants’ Club and a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He was one of the first residents of Hawick to own a motor car. He built 45 North Bridge Street as his own house and studio, and his monogram can still be seen in a mosaic outside it. He also bought Ladylaw House, where he made some alterations, including installing a fireplace with an inscription describing how he had survived a gas explosion there in 1910. His wife and son pre-deceased him, but he also had 2 daughters. The practice continued for several years as Alison & Hobkirk, with J. Murray Aitken joining in 1936 and eventually becoming Aitken & Turnbull. Peter (19th/20th C.) minister at Lilliesleaf United Free Kirk from 1909 until 1925, when it joined with Ashkirk Free Kirk. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same William witnessed an instrument in 1538 regarding Ashybank, in dispute between James Douglas of Cavers and Thomas Ker of Sunderlandhali.

Alison an Hobkirk (aw-li-sin-an-hob-kirk) n. local firm of architects, responsible for many fine buildings through the work of J.P. Alison, as well as and many of the houses built by Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. The firm later became Aitken & Turnbull.

Alison Sike (aw-li-sin-ik) n. stream in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357, between Singlean and Saughtree. It joins Cliffhope Burn, which then runs into the Dawston Burn. There are many old sheepfolds in the area. Near where it is joined by Dorothy Sike there is a knocking stone on a narrow ledge, with the foundations of a small building nearby (it is marked ‘Allisons Grain’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is unclear who Alison and Dorothy were).

A’ll (awl) contr. I’ll, I will – ‘A’ll gie what’s for’, ‘A’ll cherish aye its name wi pride’ [IWL], ‘...Aw’ll lay a bet, yon was the worst!’ [IJ], ‘...Ah’ll gie ye a wee bit advice’ [WAP], also sometimes used for ‘I’ll be’ – ‘A’ll away ti the shops then’.

Allan (aw-lin) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. Her surname is written ‘Alin’. Rev. Charles (1863–1940) from Partick, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1890. He was minister of East Bank Church from 1892 until 1899, when he moved to Finnart Church, Greenock. He was later minister at Airdclach, Nairn. He published several religious books in the early 20th century, including ‘The Beautiful Thing that has Happened to Our Boys: Messages in War Time’ (1915). He married Margaret Adam, who died in 1829, aged 65. They had a son, George Waldo, who died at Richebourg L’Avoué in 1915, aged 20. Francis (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1733 he married Janet Scott (daughter of Margaret Turnbull), the marriage being proclaimed in both Minto and Hobkirks Parishes. Their children included John (b.1734) and Antony (b.1735). Francis (18th C.) thatcher in either Hawick or Wilton. In 1744 he witnessed a baptism for wright Patrick Weir. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk, who in 1642 confessed to the Session there that he and James Cuthbertson had shared part of a quart of ale after sunset, purchased from Isobel Cranston. George (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1704 and 1708 he witnessed baptisms for fellow shoemaker William Haliwell. In 1708 this was along with Robert, who was surely related to him. In 1700 he married Isobel Watson and their children included: Isobel (b.1701); John (b.1702); and James (b.1706). The witnesses in 1702 were William Elliot in Sandbed and weave John Swan and in 1706 were mason John Napier and gardener James Falsyde. James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Waugh, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing cloathes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. Probably the same James married Bessie Knox and their son Thomas was baptised in 1659. James (17th C.) farmer at Braxholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants listed. He also leased part of Braxholme Mains and Braxholme Park in 1671. He could be the James, son to Simon and Helen Elliot, who was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1644. It is possible he was the James, married to Mary Richardson (a family who were also tenants at Braxholme Town), whose son Walter was born in 1675. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son William was baptised in 1691, with no mother’s name given. The witnesses were probably Thomas ...and ...Allan. He seems likely to be related to the earlier man of the same name. James (d.c.1688) tenant in Over Southfield. His will is recorded in 1688 and that of his wife Helen Glendinning in 1683. It is possible he was the same as the tenant in Braxholme Town. James (18th C.) weaver at Parkhead in Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunlop. Their children included Margaret (b.1723), Jean (b.1727) and Elizabeth (b.1732). John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Alane’. The other men were Scots, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed in 1528 by Sir Walter Scott to arrange the infesting of his son David in his lands. Rev. John (16th C.) recorded as minister of Bedrule in 1567. He may be the same ‘Sir John’ who was notary to a sasine of the Scots of Braxholme in 1555. He is recorded as ‘Sir John Allan’ in 1563, along with William Kerr (described as ‘parson’) and Sir Thomas Kerr, when Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule brought an action against them to prove they had the right to the benefice of Bedrule. The ‘Sir’ suggests he was a cleric without a masters degree, and hence presumably actually the minister, while William Kerr (probably a son of Ferniehirst) held most of the titular and financial benefice. John (16th C.) recorded in Bawlie in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. He is probably the John ‘younger in bawlie’ who in 1581 paid £120 Scots for a quarter husbandland in Lessuden and then received sasine for this land. John (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Gregg in 1678. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret...
Scott and their son Francis was baptised in 1698. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Clarilaw in 1705. His children included Robert (b.1705). Other children, baptised in Wilton, who may have been his (although there are probably 2 families here) included: Elizabeth (b.1698); an unnamed son (b.1702); Francis (b.1703); Agnes and Marion (b.1709); Robert (again, b.1710); William (b.1712); and Andrew (b.1713). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Parkhill in 1711 when his son John was baptised. He is probably the John who married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1707. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Gibson and their children included: John (b.1727); David (b.1729); and William (b.1732). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Lunn and their children included Helen (b.1751). John (1810–93) born at Borthwick, Midlothian, son of Thomas and Agnes Tait. He was a millwright in Hawick. He married Isabella Walker, who died in 1896, aged 81. They lived at Mather’s Close and are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. However, on the 1841 census they were on Bourtree Place. Their children included Margaret, Agnes, Isabella, Thomas and Allison. Robert (17th C.) ‘cordiner’ recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon. Presumably the same cordiner is listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Robert married to Bessie Murray, whose children born in Hawick included John (b.1670) and Isobel (b.1673). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Robert who, along with shoemaker George (perhaps his brother) witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker William Halliwell in 1708. He witnessed a baptism for dyker Alexander Stewart in 1714. In 1721 he was a witness to the baptism of a child of workman William Ekron. He married Elizabeth Steven and their children (baptised in Hawick) probably included Christian (b.1701), Margaret (b.1704), Elizabeth (b.1706), Janet (b.1709), Isobel (b.1711) and John (b.1714). The witnesses in 1704 were George Aitkin and glover John Hart, in 1709 were William Elliot in the Sandbed and merchant James Simpson and in 1714 were merchant William Oliver and glover John Scott. Robert (1847–8–1908) poet from Jedburgh, not to be confused with the earlier Kilbrachan poet of the same name. Son of Jedburgh wool-merchant Richard, he attended Edinburgh University, then became tenant farmer at Mackside and Howden, before moving to Edinburgh and also perhaps living in Dumfries. He was involved with the evangelical movement in Jedburgh. Many of his poems are about Teviotdale, with several describing places in Rulewater or Alewarter, e.g. ‘The Emigrants Return to the Rule’, ‘The Flower of Rule’, ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfelee Still Remembered’. His publications include ‘Poems’ (1871), ‘Border lays, and other poems’ (1891) and ‘Poems lyrical and descriptive’ (1899). Robert (19th C.) farmer at Mackside in 1868. Thomas (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with Andrew and George Gray. He was described as ‘some time in Raperlaw’ in 1579/80 when he witnessed a transaction relating to Lessuden. In 1580 he was ‘late in Raperlaw’ when he witnessed a tack by Patrick King in Langnewton to Stephen Bulman. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Langnewton, recorded in a document in Selkirk in 1727. Thomas (b.1805/6) from Stichill, he was a blacksmith in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 11 O’Connell Street (probably opposite the modern 15 O’Connell Street). He was listed in an 1852 directory as a blacksmith and cutler. His wife was Hanna and their children included Elizabeth, Thomas, Janet, Jane and Helen. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Raperlaw’ as witness to a charter of 1618 for Scott of Tushielaw. Walter ‘Wattie’ (1955/6–2010) from St. Boswells, he attended Hawick High School and took a degree in economics from Heriot-Watt University, where he captained the football team. He had several jobs, including in banking, sales, publishing, and lecturing at business schools, as well as working at the Institute of Economic Affairs. He was also a keen Hibernian supporter, St. Boswells cricket supporter, and wrote a history of Melrose Sevens. He was married 3 times and had 3 sons. William (16th C.) listed in Woll in 1579, among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. Perhaps the same William was recorded in 1580/1 when he and Janet Turnbull, widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh assigned their lands in Blindhaugh to Thomas Shortreed. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In the 1628

witness to the witchcraft trial for Isobel Howison, he gave evidence that he heard Sandy ‘Hines’ wife say that Howison had given medicine to Wat Riddell’s wife and received nothing for it. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Hogg in Edinburgh in 1652. William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His surname was written ‘Aline’. Perhaps he was the William who married Jean Dalgleish and had a son Walter baptised in 1689, with witnesses William Donald and William Renwick. Alternatively he could be the William who married Margaret Walker in 1689 with children Margaret (b.1687), William (b.1689) and Bessie (b.1690); the witnesses in 1690 were Thomas Wallace and William Dunlop. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at ‘Park’ (probably Branxholme Park) in 1712. He married Janet Reid and their children included Bessie (b.1712), Margaret (b.1717), Robert (b.1720) and Marion (b.1723). The witnesses in 1712 were Robert Thomson (probably in Newmill) and John Dryden. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded in Mains (i.e. Borthwick Mains) in 1726. In 1721 he married Janet Leithhead, who was also from Roberton. Their children included: John (b.1724); Agnes (b.1726); and Robert (b.1728), baptised in Wilton. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, he was at ‘Coldfolds’ (i.e. Cawfaulds in 1736. He married Helen Gibson and their children included: Agnes (b.1732); William (b.1734); David (b.1736); Janet (b.1739); and Margaret (b.1742). William (18th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1749 he married Janet Scott, from Roberton Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded in Ormiston in 1788 and Orchard in 1790. In 1787 he married Margaret Blyth. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Adam (b.1788); John (b.1789); Francis (b.1790); and Agnes (b.1793). William Charles ‘Bill’ (1922-2006) Halberdier 1958-84. Leaving school to Work for Turnbulls the Dry Cleaners, in 1939 he lied about his age in order to enlist with the K.O.S.B. He saw action in Belgium and Holland, was injured in Germany, and last served in Egypt. Some of his wartime experiences are described in the book ‘With the Jocks’. After WWII, he worked as a joiner at Stobs Camp. In 1957 he was hired by the ‘Town Council and was officially the ‘Burgh Officer’, although that was changed to ‘District Officer’ after Council Reorganisation. He was Senior Halberdier during his time, with duties including organising rooms etc., as well as reading the Proclamation and delivering the letter to the Cornet Elect. He was also Chairman of the 4th Battalion Old Comrades Association and secretary of the Hawick branch of the K.O.S.B. Association. He married Nellie Duncan and had sons Andrew and Derek (formerly spelled ‘Aillon’, ‘Alane’, ‘Alin’, ‘Allain’, ‘Allane’, etc.).

the Allan (thu-ā-lin) n. Allan Water, formed where the Skelfhill and Priesthaugh Burns meet (which rise on Langtai Hill and Caulecleuch Head), and joining the Teviot at Newmill, after a course of about 5 miles (8 km). The Dod Burn also joins it on its way. The section between the where the Dod Burn and the Doe Cleuch join may have formed part of the boundary line of the Catrail. About ‘ninety roods’ of new dykes in the area was washed away in the flood of 1846. The stream has been used as a water supply for the town since 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The Duke of Buccleuch gave consent for the original scheme and opened the sluice at a special ceremony in 1865, at which several thousand people were present. The ruins of a peel tower, called Allanhaugh or Allamouth stand near where it joins the Teviot. The whole area is covered with ancient earthworks, forts and burial mounds, showing that it was once more heavily populated. A bronze axe was unearthed there and donated to the Museum in 1858. Note there is another Allan Water that flows into the Tweed near Gattoinside, which was an important valley linking Melrose Abbey with its daughter house to the north at Soutra – ‘By the side of Allan water there stands a Hawthorn tree, It has seen a thousand summers, and has feasted off the bee’ [TCh] (but the local one is usually pronounced ē-lin; the origin of the root is uncertain, but may be the same as in ‘Ale Witter’ is probably pre-Anglian, and could well be from the form common in Celtic hydronyms; it is ‘Alewent’ and ‘Alwent’ referred to in connection with Rulewoodfield in about the 1160s; it is ‘Ellann R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

all and hail (awl-awnd-hail) adv., arch. entirely – ‘...of all and hail the landsis and lordschip of Quhitchester...’ [SB1569], ‘...past to all and hail ane temenent of land bak and fore with the yaird thairof liand in Hawik’ [SPB1579], ‘...to the said Paroch of Hawick all and hail the Soume of Nine thousand Merks’ [PR] (formerly frequent in legal documents).

Newmill via a footbridge. It is also sometimes referred to as ‘Allanmooth’. It was once home of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and is probably 16th century. Only the lower vaulted storey remains (with many initials scratched into the stones from 19th century visitors). The earliest Scott of Allanhaugh was Robert, probably 2nd son of David of Buccleuch; he was granted the lands of Whitchesters in 1484/5. Robert was probably succeeded by his son Robert. A son of his, James, was was Provost of the Collegiate Church at Corstorphine and was a Lord of Session. The family is said to have given rise to the Scotstarvit and Thistlestane branches, but this is uncertain. The history of the Scotts of Allanhaugh is very hard to trace through the 16th and 17th centuries, and it may be that there were 2 distinct branches using the designation ‘of Allanhaugh’ at the same time. Sir Walter Scott’s story was that the estate eventually fell to 2 brothers, the younger one killing the elder one, who was then executed by Scott of Buccleuch, who took the lands back (but it is unclear there is any evidence for this). A rental roll of about 1557 lists ‘Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch’ and sons ‘Syme’ and ‘Johne’ of ‘the guidman of Alanehauch’, as well as Adam of ‘Alanehauch”; presumably the Laird at that time was either an older Robert, or William (recorded elsewhere at about the same time) or even Adam. John Scott of Allanhaugh’s lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110 in 1643. The name was also used to describe the flat land near the confluence of the Teviot and Allan Waters. The ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’, in which William Henderson slew Robert Rule in 1627 is supposed to have taken place near here. John Scott was tenant there in the early 18th century and in 1725 a different John Scott was millwright there. The former village there was essentially an earlier version of what became Newmill. An article in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820 recalls a story told by an elderly inhabitant about witches entertaining the Devil there (also spelled ‘Allanhauch’ etc., it is ‘Alanehauch’ in 1494, ‘alanhauch’ in 1494/5, ‘Alanhalch’ in 1500, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1517, ‘Alanehauch’ and ‘Allanehalche’ in 1524/5, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1526, ‘Alanehauch’ in 1527, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1528, ‘Alanehalhis’ in 1530, ‘Alanhauch’ in 1534, ‘Allanehauch’ and ‘Alanehauch’ in 1535, ‘Alanehauch’ in 1539, ‘Alanhaucht’ in 1540, ‘Allanehaucht’ in 1553/4, ‘Allanehauche’ in 1557, ‘Alanehauch’ in 1561, ‘Alanehauch’ in 1564, ‘Allanehauch’ in 1569 and 1574, ‘Alanhaucht’ in 1581, 1582 and 1585 and ‘Allenhaugh’ in 1643; it is sometimes called ‘Allanmouth’ or ‘Allanmouth Tower’; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Ellenm...’.

Allanhaugh Bank (á-, aw-lin-haw-f-bawngk) n. hillside to the soth of the mouth of the Allan Water, lying on the south-east side of Ringwood Hill.

Allanhaugh Mill (á-, aw-lin-haw-ch-miln) n. farm along the north side of the Allan Water, just upstream from Allanmouth Tower, where there was once a mill and drying kiln. The flat piece of land there (between the road and the river) was known as the Allan Haugh. The mill was mentioned in 16th century records, and the land became part of Whitchesters farm. In a valuation of 1627 it is described as paying ‘2 bolls in stok, half boll in teynd’. Walter Riddell was probably miller there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, and is probably the Walter Riddell, ‘Dusty-fit’, who was was miller until at least about 1710. Robert Riddell was recorded there in 1704. John Wilson was listed as a tailor there in 1694. It was still referred to as ‘Allan Haugh milne’ in the 1717 Parish records. However, in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is referred to as Raeskowk Mill. John Scott and John Graham were tenants in 1725. John Nichol was tenant in 1737 and John Scott in 1758. William ‘Lammert’ was farmer there in 1797. In 1841 the house was still ‘Allanhaughmiln’, and occupied by the Hume family. The mill was marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map close to where Rampy Sike joins the Allan Water. Presumably Newmill was the ‘new’ version of this old mill (also called ‘Allanhaughmillm’, it is ‘Alanehauchmyll’ in 1627 and ‘Allanhaughmilne’ in 1694 and 1737 and ‘Allanhaugh mln’ in 1700).

Allanhaugh Toor (aw-, a-lin-haw-f-, -hawch-toor) n. former tower in Allanhaugh, also called ‘Allanmooth Tower’. It was once home of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and the existing structure is probably from about 1590. Only the lower vaulted storey remains (with many initials scratched into the stones from 19th century visitors), standing on the high left bank of the Allan, surrounded by a semi-circular bank and ditch. The dimensions of the structure are 7.5 m by 7.5 m, with very thick walls.

Allanmooth (a-lin-mooth) n. Allanmooth, another name for the tower and lands at Allanhaugh (it is ‘Ellenmooth’ in 1594; it is marked ‘Ellenmooth’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Ellenm...’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Allan Watt’s (aw-lin-wawts) n. Allan Watt & Son, former newsagents at the corner of Station Buildings and Commercial Road. The business was established by Allan Watt in 1880 and lasted for more than a century, being run by 3 generations of the same family.

the Allan Witter (θu-ā-lin-wi‘-ur) n. full name of the Allan.

Allan Witter Reservoir (ā-lin-wi‘-ur-re-sur-\vwar) n. small reservoir on the Allan Water, which was used as Hawick’s first municipal water supply in 1865. The reservoir can still be seen today, a little to the north of Lochburnfoot, by the side of the road that runs along the Allan.

allar (aw-lur, aw-lur) n., arch. the alder tree, Alnus glutinosa (also written ‘aller’; note that the elder tree is eiler).

Allars (aw-lurz) n. previously the area of town roughly where the present Allars Crescent and Allars Bank are situated, named after the alder trees that presumably once grew there. It is stated that in 1947 there were still 3 alder bushes growing near the outflow of the mill lade into the Slitrig. More or less the same area was earlier known as ‘Croft Angry’ and also referred to as ‘the Allars’ or ‘Allers’ (it is ‘Allars’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Allars Bank (aw-lurz-bawngk) n. upper part of the Cross Wynd, officially named in 1879, but with the name being in use earlier. The houses were built in 1841–64. The site of 5 and 6 Allars Bank was formerly the Hawick jail (shown on the 1857 Ordnance Survey map).

Allars Crescent (aw-lurz-kre-sin‘) n. a street of houses in the Allars area, probably named after the alder trees that used to grow there, and being part of the area previously known as ‘Croft Angry’. The original houses dated from about 1841, and were demolished in 1963, along with a joiner’s shop and a knitwear factory, being replaced with a block of new houses intended for older residents, which was completed in 1973. An old thatched house abutting the Mill Path was demolished about 1880. The street is used for mustering the mounted supports before each ride-out at the Common Riding. A 3-legged bronze ewer found here is in the Museum, and may date from the 14th or 15th century.

Allars Gairden (aw-lurz-gār-din) n. former name for lands in the Allars area, perhaps around the modern Allars Crescent. In 1811 it was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls that ‘Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr’ were then owned by John Scott and valued at £10 19s.

These same lands were recorded being owned by John Scott in the 1788 assessment of the valuation of Roxburghshire. By about 1874 the lands were owned by Adam Wilson, farmer at Midshields.

Allars Hoose (aw-lurz-hoos) n. large house that stood on the old Wellogate Road, at the western side of Wellogate Bridge, being demolished to make way for the railway line. It was the residence of the Turnbulls.

Allars Kirk (aw-lurz-kirk) n. Allars Church, originally a branch of the Relief Church, with similar, yet not as dogmatic principles as the earlier secessionists, and later being part of the United Presbyterian Church. It began in 1810, with the purpose-built church erected in 1811 on the Cross Wynd, the land formerly being a croft with some ruinous buildings. The building was relatively plain, with galleries on 3 sides, and originally a central stove. It was significantly improved in 1873/4 and the adjacent hall built in 1889 (designed by J.P. Alison). The original Manse for the church was on Allars Crescet, with a new one being built in the Wellogate 1881/2 on land given by the Duke of Buccleuch. The church was damaged in a fire of 1896, but repaired soon afterwards. It was the first church in Hawick to install both gas and electric lighting. The church changed its name to the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Church in 1847 and officially to ‘Allars’ in the time of the Rev. Gunion. The church had interior renovations and a pipe organ fitted in 1926 (to designs by J.P. Alison). It became part of the Church of Scotland in 1929, after the union with the United Free Church. After about 3 years of controversy (including plans to merge with Orrock) and lack of a permanent minister, the church finally closed in 1949. The organ and some other furnishings went to Bridge Street Church, Musselburgh, and a major beneficiary of the assets was Hawick Eventide Homes Fund. The church itself was demolished soon afterwards, and the site became a car park used by Town Hall employees. The Hall survives and is used for storage purposes, both it and the car park being owned by the Common Good. A book ‘An old Border kirk’ (1909) was written by Rev. J. Wotherspoon for the centenary and another, ‘Allars of Hawick, 1810–1949’ was edited by Adam Moffat Aitken when it closed. Church records for 1879–1950 are in the National Archives. It was also known as the ‘Relief Kirk’ and the ‘Cross Wynd Kirk’. A roll of ministers is: David Russell 1812–19; George Corson 1820–24; Peter Brown 1911–18; J. G. Szeri 1919–25; R.A. Wellwood 1925–30; R.G. Green 1931–37; E. S. S. Ferguson 1937–50.

Allerlee Bog (aw-lur-lee-bög) n. small loch near Cavers House, perhaps once connected by channels to a moat, partly surrounding the old tower.

Allers see Allars

allia (aw-lee-u) n., arch. an ally, associate, also used as a plural – ‘...Walter Scott of Branxhelme, for my self, and takand the burdin on me for my kin, freyndis, allia, partie and partakers, men, tennentis, dependaris, and seruanidis quhatsumeir ...’ [SB1585] (there are spelling variants).

Alliegrain (aw-lee-grän) n. shepherd’s cottage for Linhope farm, situated about half a mile up the Linhope Burn and still standing James Lun, a shepherd from there is recorded as volunteering in 1803. There were Nicholes there in 1841 (‘Elygrain’ on modern maps; also spelled ‘Alliegreen’; ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for the branch of a stream).

Allocate (aw-lō-ka’) v., arch. to allocate, assign, appoint – ‘...in 1683, the brethren of ye presbyterie mett and did allocate to the heritors their seats in ye body of ye church’ [PR1714], allocated – ‘...having no salary allocate to him for his reading the Scriptures upon the Lord’s Day ...’ [PR1713], ‘The said incorporatione of weivers ...hess allocate and appoynted Robert Jollie to keip the key of the said loft doore’ [PR1716].

Allotment (u-, a-lo'-mints) n. a portion of land rented by an individual for cultivation. They have a definition under law, and in Hawick some are run by the council and others managed by private consortia. Their popularity grew out of Victorian self-improvement ideals. In Hawick the first allotments were in the Wellogate in 1845, located where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were later built; the land belonged to the Brieryyards estate. Another field between Dovecote Street and Croft Road was then divided, followed by a field at Wilton Glebe, another at the Malt Steep (near Mayfield now), and another north of Ladylaw Place (Langlands Road). In 1851 allotments were also laid out in the West End (in the Old Glebe, feued by Rev. MacRae) and in Loch Park, followed by allotments at Wilton Dean, then more in the West End at Dykecroft and Langbaulk, and more on the Hawick Glebe between the Wellogate and the Twirleeas area. In 1860 ground was granted by the Duke of Bucleuch north of the Longbaulk road for further allotments. By 1892 there were 592 plots in Hawick, but this reduced to 360 by 1949. The modern ones at the Dean were started in 1923, but replaced by the Park View development in the 1990s. A smaller set lies to the north of the Museum. There are extensive allotments at the top of the Wellogate, off Wester Braid Road (sometimes referred to as Tanlaw). There have been subsequent plots elsewhere, e.g. off Bridge Street and Northcote Street, and in Weensland (by Weensland Mill), Stirches, Whitehaugh View and the Village (near St. Cuthbert’s). Those at Twirless, the Lumball and Wilton were largely built on in the 1960s (more common in the plural form).
allowance  (a-low-ins) n., arch. permission, approval, sanction – ‘...to enquire at Robert Elliot of Midlemilne, how he came to take down the baillies’ seat in the kirk, and by whose allowance’ [BR1734].

allowit  (a-low-ce’ , -i’) pp., arch. allowed – ‘...the two hundred merks allowit by the Earl of Queensberry and debursed be the town of Hawick ...’ [BR1644].

All Was Others  (awl-wawz-uth-urz) n., the slogan ‘1753. All was others, All will be others’ is at 23 High Street, a comment on the transience of material possessions. The date refers to an earlier plaque, which was broken during the 1898 demolition, but preserved in the back wall, with a replica being built into the front. A passageway here was once known as ‘All Was Others Close’.

Prior to 1737 the owner was Robert Scott, candlemaker, being sold in 1753 to William Nichol, a merchant, and remaining in his family until 1800. It was then bought by James Oliver (tanner, later farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot), and sold to Ebinezar Robison (whip and thong maker) in 1833, whose family gravestone remains in Wilton Old Churchyard. The house at No. 25 also has an old text. There is a similar slogan on the Text House in Denholm.

All Was Others Close  (awl-wawz-uth-urz-klös) n. former name for a passageway at 23 High Street.

Allwood  (awl-wood) n. William (18th/19th C.) stocking framesmith in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1794 as ‘late of Hawick’ when he was involved in a dispute with George Walde, carrier in Hawick, over an unpaid bill (this name may be a variant of something more familiar).

the Almichty  (thu-al-mich-tee) n., arch. the Almighty – ‘...an’ whae kens but, in the mercifull providence o’ the Almichty, it was sent for that purpose?’ [BCM1880].

Almondslands  (aw-mindz-lawndz) n. former name for the area later known as ‘Slaidhills’. It was included in a list of lands belonging to the Baron of Hawick, Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, in 1572 and 1594. When listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615 it is explicitly stated to be an alternative name for Slaidhills (the origin of the name may be the Old English personal name ‘Ealhmund’, or it may be ‘Alsous’, an old form of ‘Amous’; it is transcribed ‘Almonslandis’ in 1572 and 1615, ‘Almouslandis’ in 1594 and ‘Almoslands’ in about 1660).

Alnwick  (aw-neck, a-nik) n. town in Northumberland on the River Aln. It is an ancient walled town and formerly an important centre of the English East March. It is the site of Alnwick Castle, home of the Percy’s, Earls of Northumberland and often Wardens of the East March. The Hotspur Tower, a gate in the former town walls, was built in 1450. The surrounding area is sometimes called the ‘Heart of Northumberland’. It was besieged in 1093 by Malcolm III of Scotland, but the Scottish force was surprised by an English army under Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northumbria, leading to the death of the Scottish King and his son Edward. It seems likely that Borderers were part of the Scottish army. A memorial to mark the site of the battle was erected near Broomhouse Hill in 1774. William the Lion was captured in the town in 1174. The town was burned by the Scots in 1424. Like some towns on the other side of the Border, Alnwick has an annual ball game on Shrove Tuesday. Population 7,100 (2001).

aloood  (a-lood) adv. aloud, lowdly – ‘...let thame sing aluud apon thair beds’ [HSR], ‘...I wull crye aluud, an’ he sall hear my voyce’ [HSR].

alow  (a-lö) adv., arch. on fire, ablaze, alight – ‘Or that, in whilk to balk their foes When they could reach them not wi’ blows, They set their ain gude town a-low As patriots lately did Moscow’ [AD], ‘...There was lums to set alow and battles to be fought’ [JT], ‘...Alang the haughs where gowans grow, Wi’ elastic step an’ heart alow ...’ [WP] (also written ‘a-low’ and ‘alowe’).

alsweel (als-weel) adv., arch. as well, to the same extent – ‘...to be away led and sauld, quhillis til him or thaim, alswele of costis ...’ [SB1470].

alter (al-tur) v., arch. to reverse a legal decision – ‘...But now the case is altered, And this ye plainly sei, Aw’in Pawkie Paeterson’s auld grey yaud, Sei how they’re guidin’ me’ [JB] (a Scots law term).

Alton (awl-tin) n. former house and estate just north of Newhouses and less than a mile northeast of East Boonraw. In the 16th and 17th centuries it was home of a branch of the Scott family, descended from the Scotts of Clarilaw and (ultimately) Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Alton was a Bailie several times in the early 1600s and Walter Scott of Alton was appointed Bailie of the Regality of Hawick by James VII in 1686. The lands of ‘Altout prope villam de Hawick’ were inherited in third parts by Maria Ker, Isabella Ker and James Drummond, as heirs to William Master of Roxburghe in 1634 and were still included among Ker lands when inherited by Robert, Earl of Roxburghe in 1675 (however, it may be that this was only the superiority of the lands, with the Scotts of Alton being the Lairds) and his son Robert, 4th Earl, in 1684. The shell of ‘Auld Alton’ house can still be seen, with the initials ‘W.S.’ (for Walter Scott) and ‘A.M.’ (presumably his wife, possibly meant for Emma Middlemas) on the lintel. It was a long 2 storey structure, about 15.5 m by 6 m. In 1643 Robert Scott of Alton was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £474. The land tax on £220 was paid by Walter Scott of Alton in 1678, and Thomas Gray also paid tax on £214 there. It is said that Westgate Hall in Denholm is a similar construction. Tax was paid on 5 hearths for ‘Altone his hous’ in 1694; other residents at that time were Robert Scott and George Cockburn. Robert Shiel was a gardener living there in 1711, George Scott was there in 1722, John Kersel in 1724 and James Easton in 1729 and Walter Riddell in 1738. It was sold about 1742 by Francis, last Scott Laird of Alton, and bought by John Horsburgh of that Ilk. The trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe are recorded as owners on the 1788 county valuation (still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £220 and listed as ‘Alton, or Auld Town’. James Dickson (local banker and seedsman) purchased it soon afterwards, and it was later inherited by William Richardson Dickson. The families of labourer George Aitken, cattle-dealer John Campbell and carrier Thomas Scott all lived there in 1841, along with Margaret Graham (also spelled ‘Altoun’ and ‘Altone’; it first occurs in the early 13th century as ‘Haulton’, it is ‘Aultoune’ in 1581, ‘Auldton’ in 1594, ‘Alton’ in 1606, ‘Alltoune’ in 1638, ‘Auldoune’ in 1675, ‘Auldtoune’ in 1684, ‘Alton’ in 1678, ‘Altone’ in 1686 and ‘Oldtoune’ in 1690; it is ‘Auldtoun’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there appears to be no direct link with ‘Alton Croft’ south of Hawick; the origin is probably Old English ‘wiell tun’, meaning ‘the farm near the source of a stream’, although there is also a possible contrast with ‘Newton’ nearby).

Alton (awl-tin) n. Elias (12th/13th C.) recorded as being ‘of Haulton’ when his son Gilbert witnessed a charter for the Hassendean family in about the 1220s. This seems likely to have been the Alton relatively near to Hassendean. Gilbert (12th/13th C.) son of Elias. He witnessed a charter given by Christina of Hassendean to Hugh, brewer of Hassendean. Roger (14th C.) witness to a charter of Altonburn for the Kers in 1357/8 and another charter for the Kers for lands in Sprouston in 1358. It is unclear where his lands were, but his name is given as ‘of Aldtoun’.

Altonburn (awl-tin-burn) n. former seat of a branch of the Kers, coinciding with the modern farm of Attonburn, between Yetholm and How-nam. In about 1354 Adam of Rule granted the lands to John of Copeland, who sold them in 1357/8 to John Ker. The Kers held the lands from this time, before their main stronghold was built at Cessford. In 1438 the lands were valued at £20 yearly, but at that time had been laid waste by war (it is ‘Haletonburne’ in 1354, ‘Aldtonburne’ in 1357/8, ‘Awtonburne’ in 1432, ‘Aldtownburne’ in 1438, ‘Awtomburne’ in 1445 and ‘Altonburn’ in 1450).

Alton Croft (awl-tin-kroft) n. former farm, between Fenwick and Withchesters, having a boundary with Hawick Common. The farm buildings were located to the right of the Fenwick Loan, shortly before reaching Withchesters. In 1627 it was described as not having been previously rented to a tenant. However, it became a tenanted farm, belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. Walter Scott of Alton Croft is recorded in 1688. Walter Martin was there in 1700. In 1707 the valuation of the lands within Hawick Parish owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch included this farm, as well as ‘Allintoume’ (probably Alton Town). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time consisting of 102 acres in 4 separate parts: the largest part surrounded the farmhouse, bounded by the Common, Whitchesters and Fenwick; part to the east, bounded by Goldielands, the Common and Fenwick; part to the south, between the Common and Whitchesters; and the smallest separate part to the west, between Whitchesters and Fenwick. James Scott 'of Alton-Crofts' was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. The will of Walter of Alton Croft is recorded in 1696 and the lands were inherited by his cousin William Wright; at that time it was described as a 5-merk land in the Barony of Whitchesters. William Bowie is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1710. John Dalgleish was a wright there in 1720, Walter Dalgleish a wright in 1725 and Walter Dalgleish a wright in 1726. There is a record of the marches between it and Fenwick being perambulated in 1761 in order to regularise the boundary. In 1788 'Altoncrofts and Allintoun, otherways called Allinhaugh' were valued together at £110 and listed among the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls they were 'Alton Crofts and Alton Town. This suggests that there may also have been a neighbouring small-holding called Alton Town (other than the name presumably having the same origin, there is no connection with 'Alton' north of Hawick; also written 'Alton Crofts' and sometimes spelled 'Altencrofts', 'Altencrofts', 'Aldtoun Crofts', etc., it is 'Altonne Croftes' in 1627, 'Auldton Crofts' in 1651, 'Altoncrofts' in 1696 and 'Altoncrofts' in 1707 and 1718; it is 'Aldtuncrofts' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is still marked on Stobie's 1770 map, as well as on J.P. Alison's map of the Common in 1777).

Alton Loch (awl-tin-loch) n. small body of water near Newhouses about 2 miles north of Hawick, used for fishing and also known as Alton Pond. The lands of 'Altoun' near there were owned by the Scotts in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Alton Toon (awl-tin-toon) n. former name for a piece of land belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, probably adjacent to Alton Croft. In 1707 the valuation of the lands within Hawick Parish owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch included 'Altononcrofts and Allintoun', whose value can be deduced to be £110. In some transcriptions this became 'Mintoun' and hence was confused with Minto in 1707. In 1788 'Altoncrofts and Allintoun, otherways called Allinhaugh' was listed among the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch, and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls they were listed as 'Alton Crofts and Alton Town'. It is therefore unclear if this was just another name for Allinhaugh, and if so why it would be combined with Alton Croft.

Altrieve (awl-treev) n. farm on the Altrieve Burn, on the road between Tushielaw Inn and the Gordon Arms, which was the last home of the Ettrick Shepherd. It was Crown property from about 1456, with John Alemoor of that Ilk having the lease in 1490 and Robert Ker in 1498. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Lord Alexander Home in 1510. John Scott in Thirlstane was tenant there in 1541, paying £50 yearly. The Scotts of Thirlstane were 'kindly tenants' of these lands, buying them outright from Alexander Lord Home in 1590. The tenants in 1609 were James 'Wynlaw', John Scott and Robert Brydon. The farm was valued at about £1100 in 1802, when part of the Buccleuch estates (also written 'Altrive', it was formerly 'Eltrieve' and variants; it is 'Eltreif' in 1456, 'Eльтreyf' in 1457, 'Eltreys' in 1459, 'Eltreif' in 1469, 1471 and 1487, 'Eltreffe' in 1490, 'Eltreif' in 1498, 'Ellreif' in 1499, 'Eltreiff' in 1501, 'Eltreif' in 1512 and 1541, 'Eltrieve' and 'Eltrieve' in 1609 and 'Eltreve' in 1663; it is 'Eltrive' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Alwul (al-wul) n. tradename of the textile mill at 32 Commercial Road, meaning 'All Wool', built ?? The corner carries the legend 'ALWUL Coy.' which??.

A.M. (ā-em) n. pseudonym for a writer from Hawick in the early 19th century. He published 3 short articles on 'Historical Notices of the Popular Superstitions, Traditions and Customs of Tiviotdale' in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. These provide several colourful examples of old folk stories from near Hawick and include many valuable examples of dialect speech from that time. The articles are attributed to 'A.M., Hawick' and it seems likely this is an alias rather than just the author's initials.

Amairica (aw-mär-ee-ka, -ki) n. large distant continent containing many exiles. Emigration probably peaked around the 1830s. An organisation of exiles in the Boston area held their own Common Riding for several decades, plettering about before WWII. They annually sent money to support the Hawick Common Riding in the mid-to-late 19th century. One of a pair of silver race trophies sent from Hawick in 1887, in recognition of these annual subscriptions, found its way back to the town in 2002 – ‘There’s a rale braith o’ the sea aboot aer sang. Was ee ever in Amairica?’ [JEDM], ‘Whan thay war owre threch Amaireeka, thay cam aa-the-gait oot here ti sei luz’ [ECS], ‘…at wise-like places like Langholm or Jethart – no’ in Amairica or Switzerland and orra places like that’ [DH], ‘Sei yon felli’s aa’ the wey frae Amairiici …an’ ee caumii’ git here on time frae the Wast-end!’ [JCo] (there are various spellings).

the Amairican Cup (thu-aw-mär-ee-kin-kup) n. silver race trophy sent from Hawick in 1887 to exiles in the Boston area as part of their Common Riding, as thanks for the donations to Hawick’s Common Riding that they had regularly sent. The trophy belonged to Colin Rae of Waltham, Massachusetts from the 1930s, passed to Mary Craig Rae in Philadelphia and she donated it back to Hawick in 2002. It has been competed for by Primary School relay teams at the Vertish Hill Sports from 2005.

the Amairican Stakes (thu-aw-mär-ee-kin-stäks) n. race run on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the latter 19th century. The length was 1 mile and the prize money was raised by subscriptions of ‘callants’ in America.

amaist (aw-mäist) adv., arch. almost – ‘Thaye had amaist consuuumet me apon yirnths …’ [HSR], ‘…an amaist the whole road-end cam oot-ther-oot ti waal an gloss at the unordnar mun-sie’ [ECS] ‘…is tae bei seen in the a’maist universal delight which the toonessfolk evince in the festivities’ [BW1939] (also written ‘amaiste’ and ‘a’maist’; J.A.H. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish. ‘Widow Amos’, who died in 1815 may have been his wife. James (1828–1903) son of William and Isabella Jeffrey, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1854 in Kirkton Parish. He was Post master in Ashkirk from about 1859, serving un til his death. He married Helen Scott (1835/6–1900). Members of their family emigrated to New Zealand. James William Paterson (1831–68) son of Peter, farmer at Earlside. In 1861 he was farmer at Minto Deanfoot, where he was farming 230 acres and employing 8 people. He was still there in 1868. He married Barbara Douglas. Their children (born in Minto Parish) were: Isabella Douglas (b.1864), who married James Elliot; Margaret (b.1865), who died unmarried; and Peter (b.1867), who married in New Zealand. James (20th C.) Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band in the period 1949–62, during which it won the Scottish Championship and several other honours. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Riddell on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls and at Standhill in 1794 and 1797. He is recorded as owner of 2 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (b.1806/7) born in Hawick Parish, he farmed at Whiteburn in Southdean Parish. In 1851 he is listed there as farmer of 60 acres, employing 3 people. His wife was Agnes, and their children included Walter, Elizabeth, James, John, Agnes, Jessie and Thomas. Peter (b.1781) son of Gilbert, who was farmer at Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He farmed at Earlside, and at Adderstonelee before that. He was listed as joint proprietor of Earlside along with his son Thomas on the 1835 electoral roll. His name may have been Patrick rather than Peter. He married Margaret Paterson, who died in 1864. Their children were: Jean (b.1811); Thomas (b.1812); Margaret (1814–81), who married John Scott; Helen (b.1817); George (b.1820); Agnes (b.1821); Peter (b.1824); Walter (b.1826); Gilbert (b.1828); James William Paterson (b.1831); and Alison (1835–75), who mar ried Jane, daughter of George Stevenson of Bon chester Bridge. Their children included: Walter, joiner at Dovesford; and Nellie Elliot, who lived at Dovesford. Robert (b.1812) son of Walter and Bella Chisholme, he was born in Southdean Parish. He became estate joiner to Capt. Walker near Whitehaven. He returned to be joiner at Blacklee in about 1853, just before his father died. He may also have been joiner at Den holm. His wife was Margaret (from Jedburgh) and their children were: Janet Kerr, who mar ried her cousin Walter Amos Turnbull in 1881; Isabella, who married Robert Wilson; Mary, who married John Jipps and went to London; Helen E., who married William Laidlaw, tinsmith in Haw wick; Matilda M., who married William Turner from Galashiels; Margaret, who married school board officer James Dobson; and Bessie, who lived at ‘The Hollies’ in Denholm and supplied George Tancred with genealogical information about her family. Robert (19th C.) butcher who was Corn et in 1880. For some reason he was not Right Hand Man the following year. Thomas (1812–77) son of Peter, farmer at Earlside. He was born and died at Earlside, which he farmed after his father. He was a member and frequent speaker at the Farmers’ Club. In 1851 he was farmer of 140 acres, employing 7 labourers (and with his mother and 3 siblings living with him). In 1861 he was farmer of 110 acres and employed 9 people. He died unmarried and the tenancy was taken on by his brother Gilbert. Thomas H. (b.1816/7) born in Lilliesleaf, he was a teacher. In 1841 he was living in Deanburnhaugh, with Margaret (‘Peggy’) Scott and her family. In 1851 and 1861 he was Schoolmaster at Ladyside in Kirkhope Parish. His wife was Susan and their children included Margaret M. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill in 1685, with his name spelled ‘Ammous’. He is the first known miller there. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for 3 hearths ‘for himself and cottar’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Amoses, perhaps son of Gilbert (d.1672) and father of Gilbert and Walter. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant at Coliforthill, along with his brother Gilbert. They may have been sons of Walter (recorded) in 1685. He married Esther Gledstains in 1706. Their children included: Walter (b.1707); William (b.1710); and Gilbert (b.1712). Walter (b.1705) son of Gilbert, farmer at Coliforthill. He became tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He mar ried Agnes Tait, and their children were: Gilbert (b.1731); James (b.1733); Bessie; Isobel; William (b.1741); Agnes; George (b.1745); and Walter (b.1746). Walter (b.1707) eldest son of Walter, farmer at Coliforthill. He became tenant at Town o’ Rule. His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Adam (b.1730); William (1732–71), who lived at Grange; Walter (b.1734), wright at Forkins; John (b.1736); Isobel (b.1739); Betty (b.1741); Richard (b.1743); and James (b.1746), who farmed at Bonchester; plus possibly others who died in infancy. Walter (1734–1801) son of Walter and grandson of Walter, farmer at Coliforthill. He was a wright (or joiner) at Forkins, then at Kirknowe and lastly at Blackcleughmouth (or Blacklee). He married Helen Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1770); Isabel (b.1771); William (b.1773), and died young; Gilbert (b.1774); William (again, b.1776); Nelly (b.1780); Robert (b.1782); James (b.1784); and Betty (b.1786). Walter (18th C.) shoemaker, probably in Ashkirk Parish. He married Jane Elliot and their children included William (b.1791/2), who was postmaster in Ashkirk.

Walter (1770–1854) eldest son of Walter, wright in Rulewater. He was a joiner at Blacklee, like his father. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Blackcleughmouth’ as a ‘Cart Wright’ and in 1851 as a carpenter employing 4 men. He married Isabella (‘Bella’) Chisholme, and she died in 1866, aged 85; her sister was Jane, wife of Robbie Turnbull, joiner and innkeeper at Bonchester Grigend. Their children, all born in Southdean Parish, were: Walter (b.1806); James (1808–53); Mary Ann, died in infancy; Robert (b.1812); William (b.1814); Helen (b.1816), who married John Turnbull, coachman at Weens; Gilbert (b.1818); Margaret (c.1820); and John (1822–95). Walter (1778–1827) eldest son of Gilbert, farmer at Stonedge and Adderstonelee. He married at Broadlee. Walter (1825–88) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of William and Isabella Turnbull Jeffrey. He was a commercial traveller and wholesale cloth merchant. He married Isabella Ruickbie, who was from Innerleithen (and surely a relative of the poet, James). Their children were: Agnes (b.c.1848); William (b.1850); Isabella (b.1855); and Rebecca (b.1859). He died in Hawick. Walter (b.c.1825) probably from Ashkirk Parish, and easily confused with the contemporary commercial traveller born there (who may have been a cousin, given the similarity of forenames). He emigrated to Canada, and married Isabella Cranston. Their children were: William (b.c.1848); Robert (b.c.1848); Agnes (b.1854); Walter (b.1858); Alexander (b.1860); and Isabella (b.1862). They were living in Ontario in 1871. William (17th/18th C.) elder of Hobkirk Kirk, recorded in 1727. Perhaps the same William was witness to a deed of discharge in the area in 1709. He must have been related to brothers Gilbert and Walter. William (1709–92) son of Gilbert, farmer at Coliforthill. He married Jennet Jardin, and she died in 1809. Their children included: Betty, who died in infancy; another Betty, who died at Cleithaugh, aged 50; and Jean, who died in 1828, aged 70 William (18th C.) tenant of Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule. His children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Margaret (b.1767); Janet (b.1773); James (b.1775); and William (b.1781). William (b.1741) son of Walter, farmer at Hawthornside. His sons included Walter and Gilbert. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Dryden and their children included Betty (b.1770). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Hermiston, Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Knox in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1798. Their children included William (b.1802). William (1791/2–67) son of shoemaker Walter and Jane Elliot. He was a shoemaker and postmaster, residing at Ashkirk Mill. He married Isabella Turnbull Jeffrey (d.1858). Their children were: Walter (b.1825); Nancy (b.1826); Janet (b.1827); James (b.1828), who was also postmaster; and Jane (b.1830) (former spellings include ‘Almes’, ‘Almos’, ‘Ams’, ‘Amis’, ‘Amous’ and ‘Amoss’).

analy  (a-na-lee  v., arch. to alienate, transfer lands to someone – ‘...and the said James sal nowdry sel, wodset, nor analy to na maner man nor woman of nan part of his said heretagis ...’ [SB1519].

Anaset lands  (a-na-set-lawndz)  n. former name for lands that marked part of the boundary of the 2 oxgnags between Whithope and Whames granted by Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews in about the 1190s. It is recorded as ‘ane-sotd terre’ and ‘anansote terre’, and may have been to the south of Whithope.

ance  (äns)  adv., arch. once – ‘...that no eild nolt be found at any time within the ineld, until ance the hail corne be cut down ...’ [BR1695], ‘How men that ance have ken’d aboot it ...’ [JBS], ‘Ance hae I made aith bie my halinnis ...’ [HSR], ‘Where ance I had name, now I reckon’d a dizzen ...’ [JT] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

Ancient Order o Mosstroopers  (än-shin’-or-dur-ô-mos-troo-purz)  n. formal name for the Mosstroopers’ Club. It explicitly refers to the holders of the badge given to those who complete the ride-out to Mossaunck and back, which entitles the rider to be nominated for club membership (if there exists any distinction then ‘the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers’ refers to the holders of the badge, while ‘the Mosstroopers’ Club’ refers more explicitly to the active membership). The Club began officially in 1920, and the model for the badge was probably J.E.D. Murray’s horse.

Ancrum  (ang-krum)  n. village about 10 miles from Hawick, near where the Ale Water meets the Teviot. It has kept its traditional stone and stucco buildings around the triangular green, containing a 16th century Market Cross. Nearby caves are said to have been used for shelter during Border wars. The area had the status of a Barony, owned by the Diocese of Glasgow until the Reformation. It had a special status with the Bishops of Glasgow from at least the 13th century. Made a Burgh of Barony in 1490 by Bishop Robert Blackadder of Glasgow, it was burned several times, including by Dacre’s men in 1514, an raiding party from Redesdale in 1542/3 and Hertford’s men in 1545. The village was originally called Nether Ancrum, to distinguish it from Over Ancrum (north of the Ale), which never recovered from the 1545 burning. The battle of Ancrum Moor took place nearby in 1545. It was also a hot-bed of Covenant-ter feelings, their minister being exiled to Holland in the 1660s, causing near riots, with offenders publicly whipped and sold as slaves. The village had a thriving local linen manufacturing enterprise until the early 19th century, with a Lint-mill and Bleachfield on the north side of the Ale, opposite the church. Ancrum House, originally built 1558 stood nearby, being burned several times and destroyed for good in 1970. The old parish church, near the Ale Water, contains an ancient hog-backed gravestone. An ancient carved spiral from here is in the Museum. ‘Mantle Walls’ (also known as ‘Malton Walls’), immediately east of the village, may have been the site of a palace of the Bishops of Glasgow. The historic Ancrum Bridge crosses the Teviot just to the south. Dr. William Buchan, who was influential in promoting hygiene to fight disease, was born here in 1729. The parish of Ancrum also contained Longnewton and Belses villages – ‘Dena! when sinks at noon the summer breeze, And moveless falls the shadowwork of the trees, Bright in the sun thy glossy beeches shine, And only Ancrum’s groves can vie with thine’ [JL] ‘Oh let me wander yince again By Ancrum’s fairy streams, And live yince mair wi’ memory’s train In childh البلد’s magic dreams’ [WP] (the name first appears about 1120 as ‘Alnecrum’, then as ‘Alnecrumbe’ in 1262/3, ‘Allyncrum’ in 1255, ‘Allyncrom’ and ‘Annecombe’ in 1296 and later as ‘Alnecrum’, ‘Acrum’, ‘Aneram’, ‘Ankrum’, etc.; it was often ‘Ancram’ until the 18th century; its meaning may be of p-Celtic origin ‘Alne + crwm’ for ‘bend in the river Ale’).

Anch  (ang-krum)  n. David  (17th C.) recorded in the county valuation for Ancrum Parish in 1643. It is recorded that the lands of ‘David Ancrum, &c for themselves and the remanent feuers of the seventeen lands in Nether Ancrum’ were valued at £944. John  (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne de alnecrum’ in 1252 when he witnessed the sale of a field of Fairninning.

John  (d.c.1362) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Clerk-Register 1360–62, his name appearing as ‘de Allincurum’, ‘Allincurm’, ‘Allyncurm’, etc. He was also Writer to the Privy Seal in 1362. The ‘fermes’ of Peebles were paid to him in 1362, but not accounted for because of his death; these were paid to his executors in 1364. It seems feasible that he was related to John of Ancrum who was recorded in 1252. There is a Burgess of Edinburgh with this name recorded in 1362, who could be the same man. John  (d.c.1393) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1364 and was still in that position in 1393. However, Thomas ‘de Mathane’ was Archdeacon a year later. It seems likely that he was related to the slightly earlier John. Richard  (12th/13th
Ancrum Kirk

C. recorded as Dean of Ancrum around 1220, and as Parson of Ancum and Dean of Teviotdale around 1223. He remained in office until about 1223. The church he was associated with appears to have been used effectively as his surnames. It is unknown what family he came from, but one possibility is that he was the same as Richard of Elwood, Canon of Glasgow, or Richard of Braid.

Richard (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Richard de Alnecrum’ in 1296 when he had his lands in Roxburghshire restored.

Ancrum Brig (ang-krum-brig) n. old preserved road bridge across the Teviot near Ancrum, where the A698 joins the A68. This replaced an even earlier bridge, which in 1623 was the site of a shocking murder when blindman John Elliot was robbed and thrown over the side by Abie Armstrong, who was later hung for the crime. Before the Teviot Bridge was built in Hawick in 1741, travellers who were unable to ford the river had to travel all the way to Ancrum to find a bridge. The 1782 red sandstone 3-arch bridge survives, but no longer carries the main road. The main pier contains a carved Douglas heart.

Ancrum Court (ang-krum-kör) n. part of Stirches, off the top of Atkinson Road, built in 1974 and named after the village of Ancrum.

Ancrum Hoose (ang-krum-hoos) n. former mansion built near the site of Over Ancrum and long the residence of the Scotts of Ancrum. The oldest known part was built by Robert Kerr of Ferniehirst about 1558 and much extended. It was altered about 1632. Tax was paid on 90 windows there in 1748 and 83 in 1753. It was almost totally destroyed by fire in 1873 and again in 1885. It was then rebuilt in Scottish Baronial style, but demolished about 1970. Although the house has disappeared, the extensive planted landscape survives.

Ancrum Kirk (ang-krum-kirk) n. Ancrum Church, a ruin dating from the 18th century, containing a carved stone from a Norman predecessor and an ancient hog-backed gravestone nearby. The earliest record of a church is 1116. The Bishop of Glasgow’s palace was located at the east end of the village, and attacked by William Wallace in 1297. The present church is from about 1890, replacing the 1762 structure. The village also had a Free Kirk. The lands of Ancrum Kirklands were once attached to the church and later became part of the estate of Elliot of Minto. The Manse was built in 1751, with later additions and renovations; the earlier manse had 16 windows according to the 1748 Window Tax Rolls and 17 in 1753.

Ancrum Moor (ang-krum-moor, -mewr) n. battlefield located 2 miles north of Ancrum, where in 1545 Archibald Douglas and Scott of Buccleuch, in retaliation for the burning of Melrose Abbey, Jedburgh and other Borders areas, routed a larger English army under Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun, leaving them both dead. The Scots leaders were Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, the Earl of Arran, Norman Leslie, Master of Rothes, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and Homes and Gordons from the Merse. The Scots laid in ambush in a marshy area, covering up and filling with pits the old Roman road, which was the easiest access for the English. The Scots used surprise, as well as having the setting Sun behind them and a wind blowing the gunpowder smoke towards the enemy. Some of the Borderers (perhaps including Croziers, Oivers, Halls, Turnbulls, Armstrongs and other ‘broken clans’), originally on the English side, stripped off their red crosses and crossed to join their countrymen. It is estimated that over 600 English were slain and 1,000 prisoners taken. The site is just east of the A68 at Lilliardsedge, traditionally named after the Maiden Lilliard who is said to have fought there with the Scots (although in fact the area was known as ‘Lilliard’s Cross’ from much earlier times). The Battle is also sometimes referred to as the ‘Battle of Lilliard’s Cross’ or ‘Muirhouselaw’, with the exact location being somewhat uncertain. The precise date of the Battle is also ambiguous. Another story told is of how a heron was startled on the field between the 2 armies – ‘The mountain-streams were bridg’d with English dead; Dark Ancram’s heath was dyed with deeper red; The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell, When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL], ‘. . . A was stannin on bluiddy Ancrum Muir’ [ECS].

Ancrum Pairish (ang-krum-pa-reesh) n. parish around the village of Ancrum, absorbing the ancient parish of Langnewton. Bounded on the south by the Teviot, it was surrounded by the parishes of Minto, Lilliesleaf, Maxton, St. Boswell’s, Crailing, Roxburgh, Jedburgh and Bedrule. In 1643 it was valued at about £10,000.

Ancrum Spittal (ang-krum spi-ul) n. hospital from mediæval times, situated on the outskirts of Ancrum, near Harestanes. It was burned down by Hertford’s men in 1545. However, in 1560 it was the location where a bond was signed to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers (it is ‘the Spytell’ in 1548/9 and ‘Ancoram Spittell’ in 1560).

Ancrum Wudheid (ang-krum-wud-heed) n.
Ancrum Woodhead, lands near Ancrum, once a seat of the Kers. In a bond of 1547/8 between the Scotts and the Kers they had a tryst at ‘Ancrumwoodeheid alias the Palisfuird’. The location is the modern farm of Woodhead, just north-west of Ancrum, and with Palacehill adjacent.

Anderson (awn-dur-, -dee-sin) n. Adam (b.1775/6) grocer and spirit dealer on the Howe-gate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His property is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a vintner in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is a publican on the Howe-gate on the 1841 census and a stone-mason at 18 Howe-gate in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth, and children included Alexander, Archibald, Margaret and Isabel. Adam (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Rev. Eneas (1889–1968) born in Aberdeen, he trained at Hackney Theological Academy and became minister at Bexley Heath in 1913 and then Nairn in 1918. He became minister of the Hawick E.U. Congregational Kirk in 1922, succeeding W.J. Ainslie. His period as minister saw the church recover from debt and install the organ. He was plagued by ill health. He left for Montrose in 1927, later being minister at Nairn again and then at Newport-on-Tay from 1953. He married in his own church in 1954. Alexander (18th/19th C.) purchaser of the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807. To make this purchase he borrowed money from Robert Turnbull in Roughtlee, and to repay the debt his heirs had to sell Kirkstile to Peter Smith. In 1811 he was listed as owner of halg of Kirknowe, valued at £39; the lands were later owned by Elliot of Wolfelee. Alexander (b.1829/30) from England, he was shepherd at Billhope in Castleton Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Michael, Robert, Alexander and William. Allan (1806–15) only son of James, who died in Edinburgh at age 8. The weeping elm tree on the lawn outside Wilton Lodge Museum was planted by his father in 1815 as a memorial. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Timbersidemill, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Andisone’. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Coom’ in 1762. He probably married Helen Park in Roberton in 1744. He was probably father of Isobel (b.1744), William (b.1746), John (b.1750), Helen (b.1755), Mary (b.1758), Andrew (b.1760) and James (b.1762). Andrew ‘And the Stilt’ (18th/19th C.) mentioned in 1798 when his sister Margaret died in Hawick. Note that his nickname is hard to read, and may be incorrect. Andrew (b.1798/9) born in Ettrick Parish, he was farmer at Woodburn. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret and sister Margaret. In 1851 he was farmer of 900 acres, employing 6 labourers. In 1862 he was visiting Thomas (perhaps his brother) in Galashiels. He is still recorded at Woodburn in 1868. Andrew (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Ekron and their children included: Agnes Ekron (b.1839); and Janet (b.1842). His wife may have been the daughter of John Ekron and Ann Johnstone born in 1796. Andrew Ballantyne (19th/20th C.) hosiery worker, who was grand-nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’. He played drum in the Drums and Fifes for 64 years from 1882, being band leader after his uncle Andrew Ballantyne retired. He was also Church Officer at St. George’s from 1908 until about WWII. Along with his wife he was presented with gifts for 25 years service in 1933. Archibald (1804/5–89) farmer at Changehouse near Teindside. In 1828 he married Margaret Potts (1802/3–84). His grandson Edward Barton was a marine engineer. Barbara of Tushielaw (d.1790) eldest daughter of Michael. She succeeded to the family estates on the death of her uncle Patrick in 1786. Her sister Christina was wife of Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches. She was ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw’ in 1785 when taxed for her lands of Tushielaw, Cornlaw and Catacraik. She is probably the ‘Mrs. Anderson Fusalaw Hawick’ who paid tax for having a female servant in 1787 and is clearly ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushilaw in Hawick’ in 1788–91. She was owner of Hislop and Ramsaycleuch in 1788, valued at £549 4s. She is probably the ‘Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw’ recorded as owner of the farms of Hislop and Ramsaycleuchburn in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased before then). She married Dr. Alexander Kirton (or Kirkton), surgeon in Barbados. Their children were: Anne (d.1804), who married John Allen Olton and Henry Peter Simmons, and whose grand-daughter Anne Vernonah Simmons later succeeded, marrying Benjamin Thomas Gaskin and secondly Rev. Thomas Gordon Torry; and John Kirton-Anderson (1758–1816). She secondly married William Caster (who as a result was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788), and they had a daughter, Georgina. Barbara ‘Babby the Cow’ (b.1806/7) housekeeper for Robert Scott, who kept a tenement at 43 High Street in the mid-19th century. Her first name was also written ‘Babby’. She is listed as servant there on the 1841 census. Benjamin Thomas Gaskin (1819–87) posthumous son of Benjamin Thomas Gaskin and Anne Vernona Simmons. He inherited the entailed estate of Tushielaw and Hislop through his mother, and hence took the additional surname ‘Anderson’. He was listed among the major landowners of Hawick Parish in 1839. His initials are inserted into the Land Tax Rolls in about 1874, as owner of Hislop and Ramsaycleuchburn. In 1853 he petitioned Lords of Council and Session to allow the estate to become unentailed, as a result of improvements he had made to the farms. In 1841 he married his cousin Emily Claxton Callender of the Barbados. His son of the same name (b.1842) was a Colonel in the Scottish Borderers. Charles (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in 1838, but presumably moved or died shortly afterwards. Charles (1827–86) son of Rev. James of Stoneykirk, Wigtonshire. He was a solicitor in Jedburgh. He was a Collector of Rates for Roxburghshire and Townshire. He was a solicitor in Jedburgh. He was Secretary of the Jedforest Club. He married Jessie Niven, eldest daughter of Dr. Robert. He was recorded as farmer of 2600 acres of moorland, employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elliot and their children included James, David, Janet and Christina. Elizabeth ‘Bet’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Glaury Wat’, who lived in a hovel in the Kirk Wynd in the mid-19th century. She used to sell coal by the stone. Fenwick (19th C.) resident at Larriston. He ran in the 1 mile race at the Liddesdale Gymnastics in 1837. George (16th C.) resident of Dellowaine. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1731, 1734, 1735 and 1736. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Craikhope at the same time. His children included: Walter (b.1730); Mary and George (b.1731); Robert (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); and an unnamed child (b.1736). George (18th/19th C.) resident at Birselees in 1811 when he subscribed to Andrew Scott of Bowden’s poetry book. George (b.1818/9) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Galalaw. He is thus listed among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he is an agricultural labourer at Galalaw Braefoot and was a farm servant there in 1851. By 1861 he was living at Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Isabel and their children included Elizabeth, Michael, Isabel, Thomas, Jessie, Janet, James, George, John and William. Henry (16th C.) listed in 1579 among people who owed money to Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. He was probably from the Ashkirk area. Henry (18th/19th C.) stone-dyker in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–37. He was in Newcastleton in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. His mother Margaret appeared to be living with him in 1841, as well as siblings Janet, Walter and Michael. Henry (19th/20th C.) born at Lymiecleuch, son of John (shepherd at the Wisp), grandson of Henry (who worked on a Cumberland farm for Mr. Aitchison of Linhope) and great-grandson of John (who came... from the Langholm area. He began as a herd at the Wisp and worked at Milsington. In 1874 he moved to Rulewater, first as a servant to the Rev. Ewen, then driving Douglas Taylor’s horses, wire-fencing, etc. He started as a carrier in 1881, particularly to and from Hawick. It is said he got lots of work from Sir Walter and Lady Elliot. He married Ellen, daughter of William Black of Lockerbie. Their children were John (who lived in Edinburgh), William (who worked as a butler at Wolfelee and then in Wales), Henry (who worked on the railway in Wales) and Tony. Hugh (19th C.) proprietor of Waterloo House in Hawick. A large stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. Hugh John (b.1843/4) son of Robert and Marjorie Michie. He married Betsy Laidlaw in 1866 and their children included Robert (b.1867) and Janet Scott (b.1868). Hugh (??-??) father of the 1898 Cornet and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. He was Acting Father in 1902, ran a builders firm and lived at Hazeldean. Isa (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1712 receiving money from the Hawick Parish Session ‘for teaching poor lassies’. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1716 when David Miller was fined for calling her a liar in court. J. (18th/19th C.) resident at Raesknowe. He is listed as ‘J. Anderson’ in when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. J. (??-?) born in Edinburgh, he was an apprentice at Innnes-Henderson, from 1930, leaving for the London office of Braemar 4 years later and eventually becoming a director of the Edinburgh knitwear store Romanes & Paterson. He spoke at the 1979 Callants’ Club dinner, his speech containing several Hawick nicknames. J. ‘Tojo’ (??-??) High School English and Arithmetical teacher of the mid-20th century. Known to be ‘belt-happy’, he was nicknamed after the Japanese military leader and Premier. James (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in Cavers in 1696. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Ramsacleuchburn in 1699. His son John was baptised in 1699, with witnesses James Grieve (tenant in Commonside) and Walter Scott. Helen (b.1702), baptised in Hawick, was probably also his child. He is recorded as ‘tenant in Ramsacleuchburn’ in 1720 when his daughter Margaret married William Hogg in Hawick. and whose daughter Helen married John Fairbairn in 1727. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthwickshields in 1713 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may also be father of Thomas (b.1703), James (b.1706) and Isobel (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School 1722–46. In Edinburgh in 1723 (but also recorded in Hawick) he married Jean, daughter of the late John Kerr from Ancrum. He served as a Bailie in the 1720s. The General Assembly were considering sending preachers to Gaelic-speaking areas where Catholicism was believed to be spreading. He applied for such a bursary in 1723, but the local Presbytery kept him, stating he had ‘such an Aversion to, and unfitness for performing in publick, as seem’d to them to be very inherent in his temper and constitution!’. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Tudhope. Also in 1723 he (along with the minister Charles Telfer) had a bond with the Session for ‘400 merks of ye poors money’. In 1725 and 1728 he witnessed baptisms for William Tudhope and in 1731 another for Robert Scott of Falnash. In 1740 he was ‘Grammar Schoolmaster’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott ‘Hynd at Crumhaugh’. He also witnessed a baptism for Rev. William Somerville in 1741. His children included: Francis (b.1724), baptised in Hawick (although his wife’s name is also recorded as Elizabeth). James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Cavers in 1710. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1728, Howcleuch in 1733, Borthwickbrae in 1737, Chisholme in 1742 and Easter Alemoor in 1753. He may be the James who married Janet Dalgleish in Roberton in 1730. Assuming this was all the same James, he was father of Helen (b.1728), Janet (b.1731), Marion (b.1733), Isobel (b.1735), James (b.1737), John (b.1739), Michael (b.1742), William (b.1744), an unnamed child (b.1747), James (again, b.1749), John (again, b.1753), Thomas (b.1753) and James (again, b.1755). James (18th C.) shepherd at Whitslade. He married Isabel Elliot and their children included Helen (b.1744); and Jane (b.1747). James (18th C.) resident at Bellendean in 1761 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was probably related to the James recorded at Bellendean Rig in 1841. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Helen (b.1744); James (18th C.) resident at Alemoor in 1762 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. This is only 7 months after the baptism of the son of James in Bellendean, suggesting that they were different men. One of them must be the James who married Helen Scott in 1757, and whose son Robert was baptised in 1758, as well as perhaps being father of Helen (b.1760). The other was probably father of Isobel (b.1758). James (1714/5–1782) tenant in Whitslade. In 1751 he married Catherine Linton (although she is transcribed from the gravestone as his sister), the marriage being recorded in Ettrick and Roberton Parishes; she died in 1780, aged 63. Children baptised in Roberton Parish who were probably his include: John (b.1753); Thomas (b.1753); James (b.1755), probably tenant in Hyndhope; Isobel (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Andrew (b.1762). Even although he was deceased by then, he could be the James recorded at Whitslade in Ashkirk Parish on the 1786–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. James (18th C.) married Janet Rutherford. Their children included: Margaret (b.1763), baptised in Crailling; and Helen (b.1765), baptised in Hawick. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Michael (b.1759), Nelly (b.1761) and Robert (b.1763). Perhaps the same James had a son Robert baptised in Southdean in 1760. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children probably included Michael (b.1759), James (b.1761) and William (b.1763). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Hannah Scott and their daughter Sarah was baptised in 1772. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish who married Janet Riddell. Their children included James (b.1769), Magdalene (b.1771), Janet (b.1773), William (b.1777), Magdalene (again, b.1779) and George (b.1785). James (18th C.) weaver at Blackcleughmouth. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. Janet (b.1783) and James (b.1786), also baptised in Hobkirk, were probably also his children. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Stobicote. He was one of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He is recorded at Stobicote on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He is recorded at Stobicote on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (d.1798) dyer in Hawick. He died in 1798, the record saying that this was ‘in Drink’. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Margaret died in 1800. James (18th/19th C.) carpet weaver who lived on the Loan. His daughter Mary married Thomas Baptie, who was letter carrier at Bonchester. James (1750–1844) born in Perth, he worked for the East India Company, along with his brother David. He was a Persian interpreter, associated with Warren Hastings, and some of his manuscripts are in Edinburgh University Library. After retiring he purchased Wilton Lodge in 1805 from Lord Napier. His land extended as far as what became Sunnyhill, as shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He was a Lieutenant Colonel in the Roxburghshire volunteers from about 1808. He created the Avenue as an entrance to the main house around 1810. He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He sold of some of the land separately, including the ground for the Free Kirk in 1843. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1814, and his family’s gravestones can still be seen in Wilton Old Cemetery. His mother (or perhaps mother-in-law) Mrs. Grant, died at Wilton lodge in 1805. He married Catherine Grant and they had two children, both baptised in Wilton: Allan (b.1806), who died young; and Mary (b.1809), who inherited the half Barony of Wilton and married David Pringle. He died in Bath. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Anderson and their children included William (b.1781). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Rachel Douglas and their children included: Isabel (b.1782); Janet (b.1784); Nancy (b.1786); and Rachel (b.1788). James (18th/19th C.) weaver in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as ‘younger’ in 1790 when he was in dispute with the wife and daughter of John Hislop ‘over weaving a breadth of plaid and defamation of his character’. He may be the son of James baptised in 1769. James (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1798 he married Betty Turnbull in Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) tenant in Hyndhope. He is probably the James, son of James and Catherine Linton, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1755. He married Helen Oliver, who died in 1827, aged 51. Their son William (1798/9–1818) was a student of divinity. The family are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery, along with James, tenant in Whitslade and Catherine Linton. James (18th C.) footman at Woll in 1786, when he was working for Charles Scott. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. who married Elizabeth Scott. Their children included William (b.1813). James (18th/19th C.) baker in Hawick. His name is first on the list of ‘Donations’ to the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Twisclehope. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (b.c.1790) born in Roberton Parish, he was a shepherd in Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw Floors in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He had previously lived in Innerleithen. His wife was Marion (or Mary) and their children included Janet, George, Alexander, Robert, James and Elizabeth. James (b.1796/7) born in Yarrow Parish, he was a farm worker living at Bellendean Rig in 1841. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor in 1861, when he was then listed as farmer of 900 acres. He married Margaret, daughter of John Sword and Janet Lunn. Their children included Janet (b.c.1836), Helen (b.c.1838) and Elizabeth (b.1840). He may have been the son of John, tenant of Drycleuch, born in 1795. It is possible he was related to the earlier James who lived at Bellendean. James (19th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–37. James (19th C.) grocer who bought 9 High Street about the 1860s, selling it to James Hogg. James (1867–1957) born in Brechin, he trained at the Independent College in Dublin and became Assistant Minister at Falkirk Evangelical Union Church in 1888. In 1894 he became minister of Emmanuel in Glasgow. He moved to Ballymena, County Antrim in 1901, Kingstown, Dublin in 1904, Albion Street, Aberdeen in 1909, Wardlaw Church, Glasgow in 1915, Albany Chapel, Edinburgh in 1917 and St. Andrew’s, North Shields in 1919. In 1923 he became minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk, and left in 1926 to go to Shotts. James ‘Jim’ or ‘Dimmer’ (1931–2015) Council employee who acted as Halberdier 1959–2008. His other duties included winding the Town’s clocks. His father also had the same nickname (which is apparently unrelated to being in charge of street lights!). He served with the K.O.S.B. and after the War worked for the Council’s maintenance department. He was asked by Bill Allan to be a Halberdier to replace the retiring Alec Dobbie. He thus served the Town for 50 years, which is probably the longest ever for a Burgh Officer. James ‘Jim’ or ‘Tio’ (d.2008) Hawick character, whose catch-phrase was ‘yo-ho’. Known for singing, especially ‘The 5-bar gate’ and ‘The Exiles Dream’ (to his own tune). John (16th C.) became holder of the benefice of Hassendean Kirk in 1544 when it was resigned in his favour by John Duncan. He then asked for 18 months prorogation to oust George Scott, who had ‘intruded himself’. John (17th C.) tenant in Barnes in the Slitrig valley. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. John (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Oakwood, descendant of smiths to the Scotts of Harden, who had come over from the Borthwick. His grandson, also John, was blacksmith at Ettrickbridge in the 19th century, and recounted (printed in the Border Counties’ Magazine of 1880) a story about how he helped Scott of Harden escape from the dragoons, by leading them astray when they came in the dark to his smithy. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Redfordgreen in 1723. He may be the John who married Bessie Telfer in Roberton in 1718. His children probably included Janet (b.1715), Jean (b.1719) and William (b.1723). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he married Helen Minto in Minto Parish. He may be the John recorded at Howcleuch in 1725 when his son James was baptised. Walter (b.1731), Isabel (b.1733), Jean (b.1735), William (b.1738) and Mary (b.1739), baptised in Minto Parish, may also have been his children. John (18th C.) weaver at Whitlaw in Hawick Parish. In 1719 he married Bessie Anderson, who was a servant to John Tait, tenant in Adderstonshiel; the marriage also announced in Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Jean (b.1720); Thomas (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and John (b.1728). The witnesses in 1720 were surgeon William Cunningham and Walter Scott (servant to Rev. Cunningham). It is possible that it was his daughter Betty who died in Hawick in 1781. John (18th C.) recorded being in Ashkirk Parish in 1742 when his marriage announcement to Margaret Waugh was made in Melrose Parish, with James Waugh as cautioner. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Appletreehall in 1759. He married Janet Turnbull in 1743 and their children included: Thomas (b.1745); James (b.1746); Margaret (b.1750); John (b.1752); Ebenezer (b.1755); and William (b.1759). The witnesses in 1759 were James Dryden and James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife). John (18th C.) tenant in Newton, Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Grundiston in 1770. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for William (resident of Appletreehall) in 1780. He married Jean, daughter of George Thorburn, smith at Ashkirk. Their children included: Jean (b.1770), who married Hawick hosier John Eckford; Michael; John (b.1773); and James (b.1780). George (b.1767), who was baptised in Wilton Parish was probably another son who died young. The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott. He may be the same as the farmer at Appletreehall, recorded as owner of 3 work horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (where his name is ‘Andison’). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Craikhope in 1781, Craik in 1785 and Parkhill in 1787. He married Bett Scott in 1780 and perhaps was married to a first wife before that. His children included an unnamed son (b.1777), Isabel (b.1778), William (b.1781), Walter (b.1783), George (b.1785), James (b.1787), John (b.1790) and James (b.1792). John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Isabel Thomson in 1786. He may be the same as the Robert who was at Craik. John (18th C.) tenant in Flask in Ewesdale. He married Agnes Rae and their children included: Robert (b.1780); James (b.1783); and John (b.1785). The witnesses in 1783 were John Stoddart and William Armstrong. John (18th C.) resident at Milsingtonhaugh in 1790 and 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Commonbrae according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1745/6–1815) tenant farmer at Drycleuch. He married Helen Laidlaw, who died at Fanns in 1848, aged 83. Their children (baptised in Yarrow Parish) included: John (b.1791); William (1792–1804); James (b.1795); Janet (1799–1856), who married Thomas Scott and died at Broadlee; Robert (b.1803), who died in infancy; and William (again, 1804/5–28), who died at Fanns. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. John Kirton of Tushielaw (1758–1816) son of Barbara and Dr. Alexander Kirton. His name is also written ‘Kirkton’. He was one of the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He married Angel Price, but they had no children. He was succeeded in the lands of Tushielaw and their children included: John (b.1791); William (b.1792), possibly an engineer in Shoreditch; James (b.1795); Janet (b.1799); Thomas (1801–77), who was also a blacksmith; and Robert (b.1803). John (18th/19th C.) smith in Lanton. His wife and children are buried in Bedrule kirkyard in the 1810s and 20s. John (b.1795/6) sheepherd at Wrae in Ewesdale. He was there in 1851. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, who married Stephen Doobie. John (b.1795/6) born in Hawick Parish, he was a shepherd at Falnash Parkhead. He is recorded there in 1851. His wife was Agnes. He was succeeded as shepherd by his son William. John (b.c.1815) tailor of Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about Back Road. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter Mary. John (b.1814/5) son of shepherd Henry, he was born in Ewes Parish. He spent his early years working near Langholm, then moved to the shepherd’s cottage at the Wisp Hill in 1841. He stayed at the Wisp until 1863. He married Betsy Scott (from Ettrick) and their children included: Mina; Henry, born at Lymiecleuch; Helen; Joanna; John; James; Betsy; and Francis. Sgt.-Maj. John (19th/20th C.) from Hamilton, Ontario, and served with the ‘Princess Patricia’s Canadian Light Infantry’ in WWI. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916, and lost a leg as the result of wounds. John (19th/20th C.) grand-nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’ and brother of Andrew. He retired from playing the fife in 1947 after 62 years service with the Drum and Fife band. Joseph (19th C.) from Glasgow, he was precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1879–83, being succeeded by Mr. Urquhart. Judith (b.1972/3) from Hawick, she has won the Hawick Golf Club Championship 17 times and the Border Women’s County Golf Championship 9 times. She has also been Manager of the Scottish Ladies’ Golf Team. Margaret (d.1798) recorded when she died in Hawick. She was ‘sister to little and s...it’, but it is hard to read her brother’s nickname. Mary (d.1885) daughter of James Anderson, she inherited Wilton Lodge and the half Barony of Wilton. She was listed as ‘Miss

Anderson

Anderson, Wilton Lodge' among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1858 she married widower David Pringle. Their initials 'DMP' were carved on the building during the 1859 alterations. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1719) purchased his lands in 1688, from Walter Scott of Tushielaw, who was his wife's brother. It is unclear where he came from, and where he was before he moved to Tushielaw. In about 1700 he is probably the Anderson of Tushielaw who it is said had a number of small cottages pulled down, making people homeless, in order to have Ettrick Hall built.

He was listed on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1699 and 1704. He acted as factor for Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in the 1680s and 1690s. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at over £500. In 1714 he resigned his lands of Tushielaw and Hislop to his eldest son, Michael, retaining liferent for himself. The entail mentions that he owned 'the lands of Hislops, Easter and Wester, and Ramsaycleughburn'. His wife's first name is not known.

His children included: Michael, to whom he resigned his lands, but who predeceased him, with his son Michael succeeding; and possibly James (b.c.1693), tenant in Burncleugh, whose descendants claimed the estates in the 19th century. The existence of James, and whether he could claim a right as male-heir to this first Michael, became a central point in the court case of the 1820s and 30s. Michael of Tushielaw (d.bef.1719) son of Michael. He is probably the 'Michael Anderson of Rashiegrain' listed in the 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish (separately from Michael of Tushielaw, who was presumably his father). He married Henrietta, daughter of Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. Since Porteous had no sons, his wife became heir to Hawkshaw, Carterhope and Fingland in Peeblesshire. His children included: Michael, who succeeded; John, who died in 1713, aged 28; Isobel (b.1695), who married Walter Welsh of Lochquharret in 1717 and divorced him in 1733; and Mary (b.1708). He predeceased his father, the lands going to his son Michael. Michael (17th/18th C.) herd in 'Longtown' (i.e. Langtonheight) in Ashkirk Parish. He married Elizabeth (or 'Bessie') Taylor, the marriage being recorded in both Ashkirk and Selkirk Parishes. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Robert (b.1705); William (b.1708); Mary (b.1714); Mary (again, b.1716); and Elizabeth (b.1719), who may be the Betty, daughter of Michael, who married Thomas Boston in Edinburgh in 1738. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1762) son of Michael. He also owned lands in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire and Peeblesshire in 1761. In 1732 he married Janet, 4th daughter of Sir James Nasmyth, Baronet of Posso. He had 3 sons: Michael, who succeeded; John; and Patrick, who later succeeded his nephew Michael. His daughter Christian (Christina) married Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches in 1768. Michael of Tushielaw (d.1779) son of Michael. He was the 3rd in a line of Michaels (although this situation is certainly confused in some accounts). He married Isabella Colville. His children included: Michael, who succeeded, but died young, to be succeeded by his uncle Patrick; and Barbara, who succeeded on the death of her uncle Patrick, and was in turn succeeded by her only son John Kirton Anderson.

Michael (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766 he married Agnes (or Helen) Scott, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included William (b.1768) and Agnes (b.1772). He may be the Michael whose son John died in Hawick in 1776. The witnesses in 1768 were the whole congregation and in 1772 were John and George Scott (who were probably related to his wife). Michael (18th C.) resident at Penmanshall in 1773 and 1775 when his sons John and Walter were baptised in Roberton Parish. Probably the same 'Mitchel' or 'Mitchael' was father of Margaret (b.1770), who was likely to be the same Peggy who married Thomas Scott in Deanburnhaugh.

Michael of Tushielaw (18th/19th C.) Laird in 1810, when a case was brought against him for illegally fishing in the Rankle Burn and elsewhere. This became something of a local 'cause celebre' at the time, and was finally ruled upon by the Sheriff, who was Sir Walter Scott. The story told was that a trout jumped out of the Rankle Burn and was struck with a stick and killed by one of his companions; he was acquitted of all charges. It is unclear how he was related to other Andersons of Tushielaw. He is probably the Laird of Tushielaw listed as a Commissioner in Selkirkshire in 1819. Capt. Michael (d.1814) young man befriended and brought up by Gilbert Chisholme of Stirches, from whom he purchased the estate in 1810. On his death 4 years later he bequeathed Stirches back to the Chisholmes, along with Sillerbithall, Nether Croft and Greenhall. He was probably either the brother-in-law or nephew of Gilbert Chisholme, since Chisholme's first wife was Christina, daughter of Michael of

Michael (b.1757/8) farmer at Gorrenberry. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835 and 1838. According to the 1841 census he was living at Gorrenberry with William, Michael (listed as ‘Schoolmaster’) and Thomas, who were young enough to be his grandchildren. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Michael (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Michael ‘Muckle Michael’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm man who was known as the local rhymer. He had a brother, Wull, who was well-known as a poacher. He recited one verse about the ‘bow o bale’ on 5th November in Denholm – ‘The Bough-a-bale ‘I’ll never fail, While burns grow trouts and gardens kail’. Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Todlaw in Cavers Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Muckle Michael’. Michael (1809/10-90) born in Denholm, he worked as a stockmaker there. From about 1830–60 he was the jailor of Hawick’s old prison (where 5 and 6 Allars Bank were built). After this was closed when the Police Act came in, he moved to 8 Wellogate Place. In 1840 in Hawick he married Margaret Henderson, daughter of carrier James, and she died in 1891, aged 72. Their children were: William, who emigrated to Brooklyn, New York; Janet, who married tinsmith Robert Russell; James; Thomas D.; Elizabeth; Margaret, who married tanner James Scott; Ellen, who married Robert Simpson, Customs Officer in Glasgow; Charlotte, who married clothier Abraham W. Kerr; and Anne, who married manufacturer Adam Darling. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Ninian (16th C.) recorded along with Robert of Howpasley in 1539. The pair received 289 sheep on behalf of Thomas Marjoribanks, which were owed to the King’s grace by Patrick Murray of Falahill, ‘Sanders’ Murray and James Grieve. Patrick (d.1786) of Hazelpike (Hislop) and Rashiegrain, heritor of Hawick Parish in the 1740s. He was 3rd son of Michael of Tushielaw, but succeeded to the Tushielaw titles after the death of his nephew, Michael. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed in 1780 as ‘of Hislop, now of Tushylaw’, on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire. He married Rachel Watt. He died with no male heirs, the estates going to his niece Barbara, leading to a legal battle in the 1830s. Peter (19th C.) from Lewisburn, England. He was listed as ‘coal grieve’ in 1841, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. Rachel (b.1788/9) born in Minto Parish, she was a shopkeeper at 40 High Street. Known for her kind nature, she was often imposed upon. A portrait of her by Charles Watson is in the Museum. She is recorded as a grocer on the 1841 to 1861 censuses, living at 44 High Street, and was unmarried. In 1861 her niece Wilhelmina Campbell was living with her. She was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. Robert (16th C.) notary who wrote the letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls at Minto in 1595. Robert (17th C.) leased part of the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1693. Robert (1643/4–1707) tenant in ‘Carritrig’ (i.e. Carewoodrig). Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Craikhope in 1736 and Wester Alemoor in 1741. He was surely related to George, who was also at Craikhope at the same time. In 1726 he married Isobel Riddell, who was also from Roberton. His children included: Bessie (b.1731); Helen (b.1736); John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and Robert (again, b.1741). Robert (18th C.) gardener recorded at Minto in the period 1778-88, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Lorraine in 1789, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Roberton Parishes. She may be the Margaret (b.1769), daughter of John Lorraine and Ann Mitchellhill, who died in Hawick in 1794. Robert (d.1819) mason in Hawick. He was father-in-law to carrier Walter Scott. Robert (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He was also listed as ‘Andison’, a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1816. Robert (b.c.1778) farmer at the West Port. He is recorded at about No. 5 Loan in 1841. His children included James, Margaret and William, but his wife must have already been deceased by 1841. Robert (b.1779/80) recorded as a widower at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. He was living with his granddaughter Ann, who was born in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of Abbotrule in Southdean Parish in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Crescent. He probably lived at 11 Slitrig Crescent, where his property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory and as a publican on the Crescent in the 1841 census. In 1851 he was at about 11 Slitrig Crescent, and was on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret and Robert. Robert (b.c.1795) born in Anderson

Selkirk, probably son of Charles and Betty Laidlaw. He was listed as a writer and notary of the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/26 and 1837 directories, and at ‘Teviot square’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the list of subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was also listed as agent for the Insurance Co. of Scotland in 1825/6 and again in 1837. He lived at 4 Sandbed. He was a political agent for the Conservative Party in Roxburghshire. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons investigation into ‘fictitious votes’, since he had purchased land in Selkirkshire along with George Oliver, apparently only so that they could vote there. In 1851 he was listed as ‘Procurator Admitted’, practising in Roxburgh Sheriff Court. In 1852 he was listed on Teviot Square as agent for English & Scottish Law insurance, as well as Insurance Company of Scotland. In the 1850s he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Isabella McClaine in 1839. Their children included: Charles (b.1840); John (b.1842); and Elizabeth (b.1847). Robert (b.1808) son of Robert and Marjory Michie. He was a mason living on Punch Bowl Close in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen, from Langholm. Their children included Robert, Mary, Margaret, Jemima, Janet, Hugh John and Beatrix. Robert (b.c.1820) coachman living at Northcroft in 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, William and Isabella. Robert Ballantine (b.1858) son of Charles. He was educated in Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University and was a qualified lawyer by 1875. He became a partner with his father. After his father’s death he followed in many of his appointments, e.g. as Secretary of the Jedforest Club, agent of the Royal Bank and Collector of Rates for Roxburghshire. He was also Honorary Sheriff Substitute for the county. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Changue, Ayrshire. Robert (19th/20th C.) Cornet in 1898, and Right-Hand Man the year before! He stood in (along with A. Turnbull) when that year’s Right and Left attended a funeral. He is seen in the Gaylor film clips of the Common Riding of 1899. He moved to work at Bamford Mills near Rochdale, and took over as Chairman of the Hawick Exiles’ Club there in 1904. Stephen ‘Silent Stephen’ (1847/8–1930) son of Stephen and Henrietta Telfer and brother of William. He was all his working life a warehouseman with John Laing & Sons. In later years he was active in public life, being on the Parochial Board, then the School Board and later a Councillor, Bailie and Police Judge. He was also verger of St. Cuthbert’s for nearly 60 years, and was the oldest surviving member to recall the opening of the church. His nickname came from his taciturn nature, although he was also known for his ‘pawky’ humour. He married Janet Edmondson, who died in 1928, aged 76. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He could be the Thomas who was recorded in 1712 when money was given to Bailie Martin by the Hawick Session to distribute to him ‘for teaching poor lasses’. He married Christian Wright and their children included: Robert (b.1706) and Archibald (b.1706); Robert (again, b.1707); and William (b.1713). The witnesses in 1706 were Archibald Gledstains of Whitlaw and James Gray in Whitlaw (which suggests he lived at Whitlaw). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberston Parish. He was at Mabonlaw in 1710 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme Town. He married Bessie Renwick and their son William was baptised in 1713. The witnesses were Andrew and William Ogilvie. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlsdie in 1741 when his son William was baptised. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary uaidlaw and their children included Mary (b.1787). Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Mary Wilson in 1781 and she died in 1795. Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He married Janet Wilson in 1793 and their children included: Isobel (b.1795); Thomas (1797–1873), also blacksmith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot; Robert (b.1802); and Margaret (b.1805). He is buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (1797–1873) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot like his father. He is recorded with his family there in 1841, along with William Pow and 2 assistants (and Thomas Scott, who was probably his father-in-law). He was still there in 1861. He married Mary Scott (from Cavers Parish) in 1828 and she died in 1885, aged 86. Their children included: Thomas (b.1828); Robert (b.1830–58), also a blacksmith; John (b.1832–67), a surgeon; Janet (b.1834/5–86); and William (b.1836/7). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1799) from Melrose, son of John and Mary Cumming. He was educated ‘at a country school’ and Edinburgh University.

He was teacher at Roberton School from 1833. He was recorded there in 1837 and until the 1860s. In 1841 he was living at Roberton Schoolhouse, with his servant being Elizabeth Govenlock. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1844 in Roberton Parish he married Margaret Dall, who was from North Berwick. Their children were John (b.1845), James Dall (b.1849), Agnes Robertson Dall (b.1851), Thomas (b.1853) and Andrew Margrave (b.1855). Thomas (1800/1–67) frameworker who lived at Roadhead in Wilton. He was listed on Langlands Bank in 1861. He married Eliza Purves, who died in 1890, aged 68. Their children included: Charles (1829/30–88); Johnstone (b.1837); Agnes (b.1841); Elizabeth (b.1849/50); James (b.1852/3); Robert (1859/60–88); John (1871/2–88); and 5 children who died in infancy. His family are buried at St. Mary’s.

Thomas (19th C.) son of Robert and Isabella Grieve. He was a plumber and Slater in Hawick. Anderson (b.c.1810) warehouseman in Hawick, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Roadhead among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was living at Roadhead in Wilton and in 1851 and 1861 at 7 Walter’s Wynd. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Finisher of Lams Wool Hosiery’. He married Margaret, daughter of John Michie, of Old Northhouse. Their children were: Isabella Cowan (1843/4–95); and Thomas (1837–1900), Sheriff-Substitute. Thomas (d.1873) son of a Sandbed blacksmith, he took over the business, and was succeeded by Peter Clark. He married Jane Dobson, who died in 1891. Thomas, J.P. (1837–1900) a native of Hawick, he was son of warehouseman Thomas and Margaret Michie. He served as the first Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He was also Chairman of the Parochial Board. He was manager for Thorburn & Co., twed merchants in Peebles and was later partner in the firm of Thorburn, Lowe & Anderson, retiring in 1878. He left much of his money to local institutions, through a trust that he set up. This trust paid for the erection of the Anderson Sanatorium (specialising in the treatment of tuberculosis patients), which was named after him.

Thomas Scott ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) Master of the Jedforest Hounds from 1892 for 11 years. He wrote the book ‘Hound and Horn in Jedforest’ (1909). W. (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turner and their son William was baptised in 1673. Walter (17th C.) flesher listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Walter listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was recorded as a flesher when he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Wilson in 1705 and for workman Robert Gledstains in 1708. He could be the same man as the merchant. He is probably the Walter married to Isobel Wilson whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1683); John (b.1685); Margaret (again, b.1686); Jean (b.1689); and Robert (b.1690). Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is probably the Walter who witnessed baptisms for fellow-merchant John Scott ‘Whitegates’ in 1707, 1713 and 1718. Also in 1718 his daughter Isobel married John Johnston, a merchant of Kelso, and in 1719 the couple were rebuked by Hawick Session for their ‘irregular marriage’ in Edinburgh. Walter (b.c.1800) shepherd and later tenant farmer in Sundhope in Castleton Parish. He was appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. His wife was Janet Forsyth and their children included Jessie, John, Agnes, Margaret, Walter, Elizabeth, Barton and Mary. Walter ‘Glaury Wat’ (b.c.1813) resident of a hovel at the Kirk Wynd in the mid-19th century. His sister ‘Bet’ used to sell coal by the stone, while he drove a scavenger’s cart. He is recorded as a carter on the Kirkwynd in 1841, living with Elizabeth. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for James Nichol and Helen (who was probably related to him). William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Clarilee in Southdean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) married Janet Henry in Ashkirk in 1702. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1704. His son Thomas was baptised in 1704, with witnesses Nichol Elliot (from Ewes Parish) and John Scott in Falnash. Margaret (b.1697) and James (b.1702) are probably also his children. William (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Blackcleuch. In 1716 his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Robert Scott, tenant in Blackcleuch, and Beadle Walter Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Bowanhill. In 1726 his son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish.
William (18th C.) resident of Raesknowe in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Elliot and their son William was baptised in 1742. The witness was Robert Deans servant to William Thomson. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Agnes Mark in Wilton Parish in 1744. They had a child baptised in Hawick in 1745, but with no forename given, and an unnamed son in 1746. He may be the William who in 1738 witnessed a baptism for William Gray, who lived at Clarilaw. William of Rashiegrain (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1780. He married Agnes Rathie and their children included: Mary (b.1780); and James (b.1781). The witnesses in 1780 were John Anderson and George Scott. William (d.bef. 1790) Hawick resident who married Jean Scott. Their children included John (b.1747). His wife died in 1790. William (1721–29) died at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane Graham, who died in 1814, aged 83. Their children included daughters Peggy and Jane, who died in infancy. They are buried at Ettrick. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish, who in 1792 married Janet Armstrong from Hawick. Their children included James (b.1793), John (b.1795), Janet (b.1797), William (b.1800), Adam (b.1803), Robert (b.1805), Alexander (b.1807) and Adam (b.1810). Possibly the same William is a Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he was listed after Michael, who was a carrier, and so was possibly related. It is likely that the same William, aged about 76 on the 1841 census, was living on Mill Bank with his wife Jane and son Alexander. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, who in 1792 married Margaret Graham, also from Hawick. William (b.c.1782) from Westerkirk, he was an agricultural labourer and shepherd in Roberton Parish. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at Craikshiel. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: Betty (b.c.1820); Jane (b.1824/5); Mary (b.c.1825); Agnes (or Nancy, b.1826); Janet (b.c.1827); Williamina (b.1832); and another daughter (b.1841). William (18th/19th C.) glove maker and leather dresser on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. A glover working with him (called 'Steffon') died in Hawick in 1811. William 'Wull' (18th/19th C.) known as a poacher around Denholm, he was brother of Michael the poet. He was said to be very fast, and to have a peculiar whistle that could summon the local dogs. He was described (in about 1830, reprinted in the Border Counties' Magazine in 1881) as 'a lang, lanky chield, just bones and muscle', who went barefoot and was dressed in rags. One story is told about 3 local gamekeepers and their helpers, who tried to ambush him while catching hares on Ruberslaw, and thought they had him trapped near the head of the Dean, but he jumped through a hedge, losing every stitch of clothing, and ran off stark naked. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick stocking-maker, who also worked as a teacher and merchant. He moved to Newcastle and then to Buckholmside in Galashiels. He is probably the 'Andison, Mr. W. merchant, Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's ' Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Mary Lang from Galashiels. Their son William was a missionary in Jamaica and Old Calabar. William (b.1794/5) born in Selkirkshire, he was farmer at Drinkstone. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. He was one of the first Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from 1848. In 1851 he was recorded at Drinkstone as farmer of 800 acres and employing 4 men. His wife was Helen and their children included Mary, Charles and James. William (b.1815/6) originally from Ancrum Parish, he was a tailor at Chesters in Southdean Parish, recorded in the 1860s. In 1861 he was a tailor at Chester, employing 1 man. His wife was Ann and their children included Andrew, Margaret, William, Archibald and Janet. William (b.1823/4) born in Ewesdale, he was son of shepherd John. He succeeded his father as shepherd at Falnash Parkhead. He was recorded there in 1861. His wife was Mina and their children included Barbara, John and Walter. William Milroy (b.1823/4) from Glasgow, he was Baptist Minister in Hawick, as well as a teacher. He probably became pastor of the church in 1852, taking over from Alexander Kirkwood. In 1861 he is recorded at 3 Slitrig Crescent. He left Hawick in about 1862, later living at Epworth. He married Mary Johnston and their children included James, William Christopher and Emma. William Christopher (b.1857) son of William M., minister of the Baptist Kirk, he was born in Hawick. He attended St. Andrews University 1872–76 and was later at Edinburgh University. William 'Meddling Wullie' (19th/20th C.) son of Stephen and Henrietta Telfer and brother of Stephen. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick and also a keen sportsman who used to cycle annually...
Anderson Place

Anderson Place (awn-dur-sin-pils) n. part of Silverbuthall, built in 1968 and named after the Anderson Sanatorium that stood nearby.

Anderson Sanatorium (awn-dur-sin-saw-nit-ô-ree-un’) n. originally a hospital for tubercular diseases, formally opened in 1911 and named after Thomas Anderson. It was built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn, north-east of Silverbuthall. The additions to the existing house, together with new ward and administration blocks were designed by Alexander Inglis and funded by the trust established by local businessman Thomas Anderson. It was originally run jointly by the Town Council and the Parish Council. It had 2 wards of 6 beds each, along with a dining room, a large balcony, 2 summer-houses and walks laid out in the grounds. It became empty from 1956, was thereafter used by other hospitals for temporary accommodation, and demolished in 1966. The Sanatorium and surrounding area was also known as ‘Howdenbank’; it is labelled ‘Howdenbank Sanatorium’ on the 1921 Ordnance Survey map. The hospital was operated by the South-east Regional Health Board from 1940, and dealt with fever cases (with tuberculosis treatment moved to the Fever Hospital in Burnfoot). In the 1950s a new long-stay ward was built and the hospital also dealt with problematic births; however it closed in 1956, with all former functions effectively transferring to Peel Hospital. The buildings served as a temporary maternity ward while the Haig Maternity Hospital was being renovated, and there was also a special school housed here briefly. The buildings ceased to be used in 1966 and were demolished in 1975, to be replaced by a children’s playground. The name survives in the nearby Anderson Place (also called the ‘Sanitarium’, and sometimes written ‘Sanitorium’).

Andieson (awn-dee-sin) n. former local pronunciation, and sometimes spelling, of Anderson.

Andra (an-dru) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Andrew – ‘Signs o’ simmer ...flights o’ swallows ...callants cuttin’ gress ...and ...Andra on the High Street!’ [JCo].

Andrew (an-droo) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1576 as ‘Johne Andro’. He ‘subscribes the act of caution for Johne Turnbull of Mynty’ (as well as for William Turnbull in Barnhills) in bonds relating to a feud among branches of the Turnbulls. This presumably means that he signed on behalf of Turnbull of Minto and Turnbull in Barnhills.

And We Ride (awn-dwee-rid) n. song written by Alan Brydon, first sung in public by him at the Balmoral Breakfast, after the Thursday Morning...
Hut in 2006. It was performed as part of the musical ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ in 2007 and also appeared on the Scocha album ‘Scattybooy’ in 2011.

the Andy ( thu-awn-dee) n. popular name for the playground area on the site of the former Anderson Hospital in Silverbuthall.

angel-noble (an-jel-nō-bul) n., arch. an English coin bearing a figure of an angel. It was first minted in 1465, in gold, and with a value equivalent to 80 pennies – ‘…under the pane of thre hundredtht angell nobillis, be this out band, written at Hawik … ’[RBA1561].

the Anglin Club ( thu-awn-glin-klub) n. Hawick Angling Club, founded in 1911, with premises at 5 Sandbed, formerly the Bridge Bar. The first such club on record started in 1858, with the goal of protecting trout in the Teviot and its tributaries. It had a membership of 172, each paying 6 pence, and with William Ogilvie of Chesters as its first President. This club folded at some point, to be replaced by the Upper Teviot- dale Fisheries Association in 1881, a body formed largely of local landowners, who controlled fishing. The Hawick Angling Club was formed in Oc- tober 1911 after representation had been made to the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries body to form such a club, to administer licences and to help police the waters. Since then they have worked together to administer fishing permits. The Club took over the oversight of Acreknowe Reservoir and Wullie- struther Loch in the 1920s. The Club also had its own hatchery, with yearlings raised at the Allan Water Reservoir, running until the 1970s. The Club moved to their current Sandbed premises in 1969.

Angus (awng-gis) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick resident who was recorded making a statement to the Magistrates about a case of a scuffle in the Kirk in 1685. He could be the Andrew born to George and Margaret Thomson in Hawick in 1648. He is probably the Andrew, married to Beatrix Gledstains, whose children included Walter (b.1676) and Margaret (b.1678). In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Bridges and John Scott in Barn Knowe. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Lookup. Their children included George (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1688). Beatrix (b.1691) and Elizabeth (b.1694), with no mother’s name given, were probably also his children. The witnesses in 1688 were wright Francis Gledstains and ‘officer’ John Stewart. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Bell. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included: Margaret (b.1646); Andrew (b.1648); Margaret (again, b.1648) and an unnamed child (b.1653). Isobel (b.c.1775) recorded as being ‘independent’ at about 50 High Street on the 1841 census. She was living with Margaret, probably her daughter. Her husband must have been the ‘Mr. Angus’ whose property there was shown on Wood’s 1824 map. John (16th C.) holder of half a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. It is possible that he was the man of the same name who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. John (1768/9–1850) farmer in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel, daughter of James Elliot, who was tenant at Little Whitlaw; she died in 1846, aged 73. Their children included: Catherine (1808/9–90), who married farmer James Bunyan; and Margaret (1811/2–59). They are buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) butler at Midshiels in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Oliver (1936/7–2018) local Councillor. After serving in the Air Force, he worked as a costing clerk at Lyle & Scott’s and then at Pringles for 40 years. He chaired Hawick Community Council before becoming a Scottish Borders Councillor for Wilton, chairing the housing committee. He later became Chairman of Scottish Borders Housing Association, with the boardroom at their Selkirk headquarters named after him. He was the Master of Ceremonies at the Exiles’ Night for 28 years (until 2015). He was also been heavily involved with the local Boys’ Brigade and Hawick Pipe Band (for which he was Drum-Major), as well as Lodge 424. He and his wife Anne celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2010. Their children are Bill and Mary. Patrick (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1702 and 1704 he witnessed baptisms for merchant Michael Scott and in 1709 for weaver Patrick Forman and for James Henderson in Weensland. Along with ex-Bailie John Binnie and glover John Hart, he was fined in 1702 for drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. In 1704 there were ‘letters of horning and poinding’ against him in Selkirk, instigated by John Shaw; in 1707 he was ‘sometime merchant in Selkirk now in Hawick’ when a Glasgow merchant was the assignee for the amounts due to him for the £500 that Selkirk paid to the Darien Scheme. He was a member of the Council in 1707, stated to have been absent during a meeting to discuss the fines on the 2 Bailies who had assaulted people at the Common Riding. He was also a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Marion (b.1700); James (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1704). The witnesses in 1700 were John Scott ‘Whitegates’, James Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and ex-Bailie William Laing, in 1702 were baxter John Whillans and Bailie George Martin and in 1704 were Bailie James Scott and Walter Gledstains.

Robert (d.1853) Church Officer of Hawick Free Kirk from the time of the Disruption until his death. The congregation erected a headstone to his memory in St. Mary’s churchyard. He may be the Robert who was a labourer living at Kirkyard in 1841 and 1851, married to Janet and with children Sibald, Jean, William, George, Jessie (or Janet), Betsy and Alison. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howpsley in 1789. He married Jean Pringle in Roberton in 1789 and their children included Robert (b.1789) and Jane (b.1792). They had further children Margaret (b.1794), William (b.1796), Elizabeth (b.1798), John (b.1801) and James (b.1806) in Yarrow Parish. His wife was probably from the Pringles who lived at Howpsley at the same time.

Angus’ Close (awng-gis-klös) n. passageway of the mid-19th century, located around 48 High Street.

an hing (an-hing) adv. et cetera, and so forth – ‘can ee git some peis an tattis an hing for the tei?’ (also an thing).

the Annai (thu-awn-ul) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, probably the same place as Harden Anna. The name is recorded in the mid-17th century and is clearly somewhere just to the east of Harden. It is recorded on 2 draft maps of neighbouring parishes in about 1650, with 4 ‘communicants’ recorded there, namely John Gardener, Agnes Murray, Bessie Douglas and William Gardener.

Annals of a Border Club (aw-nulz-ov-a-bür-dur-klub) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens and published in 1899, full title ‘Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’. It is nominally the history of the dining club established in 1810 for country gentlemen around Jedburgh, which includes a large fraction of the most prominent local-landowners of the 19th century. However, the bulk of the book is actually a history of each of these families, and as such is an invaluable genealogical and historical resource.

Annals of Hawick (aw-nulz-ov-hIk) n. one of the most useful resources for early Hawick history, written by James Wilson in 1850, the full title being ‘Annals of Hawick, A.D. 1214–1814. With an appendix, containing biographical sketches, and other illustrative documents’. It was compiled from Burgh records, kirk session books and court documents, and apparently stimulated others to write similar annals for other towns. ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1855) is essentially a giant addendum.

Annan (aw-nin) n. town at the head of the Annan estuary on the Solway, once an important town in the Scottish West March, now a quiet market town. It has an ancient annual Riding of the Marches festival in early July. It is supposed to be the original home of scampi. In the 19th century, before the railway, Annan was often the initial destination for Teries emigrating by ship, small boats ferrying people from Annan to Liverpool and elsewhere – ‘Through the Border ride an’ rin, Seek frae Berwick owre to Annan, Fairer maids ye winna win, Dotards, can ye leave them stannin’?’ [GWe] (Gaelic for ‘quiet water’).

Annandale (aw-nin-dal) n. valley of the River Annan, stretching roughly from Moffat to the Solway. It was a major valley of the West March, held in early times by the Bruce, Lords of Annandale, and possessing a bloody history, including battles between the Johnstones and Maxwells – ‘In Eskdale and Annandale, The gentle Johnstones ride, They have been here for a thousand years, A thousand mair they’ll byde’ [T].

Anne (awn) n. (1655–1714) Queen of the United Kingdom from 1702, when her brother-in-law William III died. She was daughter of James II (of England), but had supported William and Mary (her sister) during the Glorious Revolution. She married George, Prince of Denmark, failed to produce an heir, and struggled with porphyria most of her life. Her reign saw the final Union of Scotland and England and the beginnings of the 2 party system of government, as well as the time of the oldest surviving Common Riding Flag. Dr. Thomas Somerville (who was born in Hawick) wrote a history of her reign (see also Princess Anne).

Annelshope (aw-nelz-höp) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, just south of where the Rankle Burn joins the Ettrick. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. Annelshope Hill lies above, reaching 434 m. This is probably the farm of ‘Auldshope’ that was once a Crown property, leased to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in the late 15th century; this was Walter Scott (son of Alexander) in 1487–92. This is probably where Adam ‘of auldinnis hop’ was in 1494/5. Thomas Cockburn was also a tenant there in 1494/5. The Ranger there was Walter Scott (probably of Buccleuch) in 1496–98. In 1539 Sir Walter Scott and his mother Elizabeth Ker warned their tenants there to remove themselves by putting ‘stolls, jars and bowls outside their houses’. It was Crown property in 1541, occupied by Robert of Howpasley, but claimed by the Laird of Buccleuch, paying £22 yearly. It was still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1512, 1634, 1653 and 1661. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was written ‘Angleshope’ and formed formed part of the northern boundary of West Buccleuch. It was valued at £540 in 1785.
Annett Hill

It is easily confused (given the various spellings) with Eldinshope, which was also a Crown land (the name appears to have transformed from ‘Andel-’, which was a metathesised form of ‘Alden’; it was ‘Aldanhop’ in 1456, ‘Aldanishop’ in 1468, ‘Aldanyshope’ in 1477, ‘Aldishopp’ in 1491, ‘auldinishinghop’, ‘auldennishop’ and ‘auldennis hop’ in 1494/5, ‘Aldanehop’ in 1497, ‘Auldishopp’ in 1502, ‘Aldinhop’ in 1512, ‘Auldship’ in 1539, ‘Aldishope’ in 1541 and 1634, ‘Aneelshope’ in 1650, ‘Aldeingshop’ in 1653 and ‘Aldinghoppe’ in 1661; it is marked ‘Andshop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name ‘Aldwine’).

Annett Hill (a-ni’-hil) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of the road near the ruins of Castleton Castle It may have previously been called Arnott Hill.

Annettshiel Sike (a-ni’-sheel-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running to the north-east to join the Black Burn west of Newcastleton. There are remains of at least 13 small huts on terraces nearby. ‘Annotschell’ is listed in 1541 as a vacant land in the rental roll of Liddesdale.

Annfield Mills (awn-feeld-nilz) n. Barrie & Kersel tweed manufacturing factory in the early part of the 20th century on Teviot Crescent. It was based at the north end of Teviot Crescent, on the corner with Croft Road. Barrie’s moved to a new factory at Burnfoot in 1975.

Annfield Park (awn-feeld-park) n. field in Cavers, situated south of the big bend in the road after the modern Cavers Kirk, being the north (or west) side of the main avenue leading to Cavers village.

Ann Howard’s (awn-how-urdz) n. former knitwear factory, based at Hernounhill House in the 1950s and 60s.

Annie Jolly’s (aw-nee-jo-leez) n. former cottage at the Nipknoves end of the old curling pond at Hawick Moss. Nothing now remains of the cottage except for the popular name of the nearby ‘Jolly Tree’ and that of the field across the road, ‘Cottage Park’.

Annie’s Well (aw-neez-wel) n. spring on Braidhaugh farm in Rulewater, located just above the site of the old standing there.

annual rent (an-wul-ren’) n., arch. the rent paid on a property, often effectively meaning the interest on a loan (since it was formally illegal to charge interest, and hence this fee to the lender was the way around the law) – ‘...to in-feft the said Walter ...in an annualrent of 9 bolls victuals viz. foure bollis and twa firlattis meill ...’ [SPB1579].

annuel (an-wel) n., arch. an annual rent – ‘...of all maner, cornes, cattell, and gudis, in-sicht, airship gudis, dettis, sowmes of money, mailis, fernes, ressumes, annuellis, caines, ca-sualetteis, and vther gudis’ [SB1569].

an thing (an-thing) pron. and the rest, and so on, et cetera – ‘Watchin’ them catchin the saw-mun an’ thing’ [HNe1914], ‘A’m fair muitteeoot wi wui weshin an ernin, an thing’ [ECS], ‘She’d a grund set-oof for oo – aa her guid cheenie an thing’ [ECS] (also an hing).

An Old Hawick Close (an-öld-hIk-klös) n. painting of the early 19th century depicting a close adjacent to the old Town Hall.

Anti-Burgher (an-tee-bur-gur) n., arch. a member of the Sessession Church, which separated from the ‘Burghers’ in 1747 over the question of taking the Burgess Oath, adj., arch. relating to the Anti-Burghers (sometimes written ‘Antiburgher’).

the Anti-Burghers (thu-an-tee-bur-gurz) n. more properly known as the First Secession Church, a group who seceded from the main church following acts of the General Assembly of 1732, and then further split in 1747. They distinguished themselves from the Burghers (Second Secession) by considering it improper to take the Burgess oath, which asserted adherence to the true religion of the land. In Hawick they specifically objected to the use of the word ‘God’ in the Burgess oath. The local Anti-Burgher congregation began in 1763. Some of this congregation travelled to the church at Midholm, 9 miles distant. They tried unsuccessfully to get Richard Jerment and then Laurence Wotherspoon to be minister, but John Young was the first ordained (in 1767). They met at the Green Kirk in Myresslawgreen from 1765, and represented the first religious dissension since the secession from Rome. There was great animosity between the two secession churches in the latter part of the 18th century. However, they reunited as the United Seceders in 1820, but continued to preach in separate churches in Hawick. The church was rebuilt in 1823. The congregation moved to Orrock Church in 1874.

antrin (an-trin) adj., poet. occasional, rare – ‘An’ lambkins seek the scanty bield O’ dyke an’ hedge an’ antrin tree’ [WP].

The Anvil Crew

The Anvil (thu-awn-vil) n. fictional boat in William Easton’s song ‘The Anvil Crew’.
The Anvil Crew (thu-awn-vil-kroo) n. song written by William Easton about a group of local personalities who play with a raft on the Teviot. It is supposed that the tune was an invention of Easton himself, perhaps adapted from some other tune from around 1870. A hornpipe-style musical arrangement was made later by Adam Grant. The song was first recorded being sung at the Callants’ Club dinner by Ex-Cornet W. Thomas Grieve in 1905 (accompanying by Adam Grant), then at a Hawick night in Edinburgh in 1906, and at the 1907 Colour Bussing by William P. Gaylor. Scocha recorded a version in 2001, with a guitar arrangement and some singable changes to the chorus. A new brass band arrangement was composed by Alan Fernie in 2015.

the Anvil Crew (thu-awn-vil-kroo) n. annual dinner and entertainment held in Denholm on the Friday of the Common Riding since 1953. It was said to have started as an alternative for those who could not get tickets to the official Cornet’s Dinner. Each member of the organising committee is part of the ‘crew’ of the Anvil. The first captain was John C. Goodfellow, who started the tradition of serving for the same number of years as verses in the song, i.e. 5. The annual trip to the dinner in Denholm (with the bus being referred to as the ‘boat’) includes a stop at Hornshole on the way.

Appletreehaa (aw-pul-, a-pul-tree-haw, -hawl) n. Appletreehall, a community about a mile out of Hawick to the north, developed around a yarn and hosiery factory, driven by power from the nearby burn. There was once also a blacksmith’s there. The old factory was used for a while as a sawmill, but now only a few ruins remain of the once thriving village, while new houses have been built nearby. The origin of the name and the earliest records of the lands are unclear. The land of ‘Appletreerig’ was inherited by William ‘de Chartres’ (i.e. Charteris) in 1303/4 from his mother Agnes de Vesey, who had died there; the lands were held of the regality of Sprouston for a white sparrow-hawk or 5 ‘souz’ and were worth 40 ‘souz’ yearly. It is possible this refers to Appletreeleaves near Melrose, but since the de Charteris family held the half barony of Wilton it seems likely that these lands were either the same as the later Appletreehall, or at the very least the name was transcribed from some other place at this time. This was probably the ‘Apiltrie’ that was resigned by Thomas ‘Carnoto’ (i.e. Charteris) and granted to William Maxwell and his wife according to a charter of King Robert, probably around 1320. Alexander Scott of Howpasley and Abington paid redemption money for these lands (as well as Midshiels) in 1470, with a quarter part being separately leased by Henry Turnbull. The superior of the lands was William Livingstone of Drummy from at least 1470, with the superiority being transferred to Alexander, Lord Home in 1494, who granted them to Walter Scott of Howpasley in 1502 (excluding ‘half a merkland’ to the north). The lands were owned by the Cunninghams in the second half of the 15th century, being inherited in 1482 by Elizabeth, daughter of George Cunningham of Belton; at that time was said to be ‘then waste’, but in time of peace was valued at £5 Scots. The Laird of Appletreehall was fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary in Jedburgh in 1493, but the name of the Laird is not recorded. The superiority was confirmed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10 and forfeited by him in 1515 (after which he was beheaded), passing briefly to James Lundie, along with Midshiels and parts of Hassendean, and then back to the Homes. Robert Scott of Howpasley and his wife Isobel Murray had a charter of the lands (along with Midshiels) in 1536. In 1539/40 Robert Scott of Howpasley sold the lands there in ‘le mains called le cot rig’ to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’; at that time the tenant was William Bell. In 1543 the farm and the neighbouring farm of Chamberlain Newton, owned by Robert Scott, were raided by men from Tynedale, who stole a large number of cattle, sheep and horses, as well as removing goods from the houses and taking a dozen prisoners. In 1549 Robert Scott granted his 2 husband lands there to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; the lands were at that time occupied by Hector and David Turnbull and Patrick Gordon. The land were held for 1 penny Scotts, to be paid at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. In 1561/2 a largely illegible document in the Selkirk Protocol Books involves part of these lands and Midshiels. In 1562/3 Alexander Lord Home tried to have the Scotts of Howpasley removed as ‘pretended tenants’ who refused to leave and ‘occupied the lands by violence’. The land were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. It was owned by the Turnbulls of Knowe in the mid-18th century. John Martin was living there in 1682 and John Scott in 1688. It was part of Hassendean Parish until 1690, after which it fell within Wilton. The householders listed there in 1694 were James Rodger, William Scott, John Turnbull and Robert Riddell, with Walter Sanderson and John Scott listed among the poor. In 1693 John Ker of Cavers Carre was served heir to his uncle, Robert, Lord Jedburgh, including annual rentals of 300 merks here, pertaining to Walter Scott (junior and senior) of Chamberlain Newton. Thomas Telfer was there in 1696. Walter Scott was there in 1705 and John Govenlock in 1706. James Hart was a tenant and William Crozier a weaver there in 1708. Robert Turnbull was a tenant there in 1711, Walter Veitch was there in 1718, William Riddell in 1722 and James Dryden in 1723, Adam Miller in 1724, Alexander Moore in 1724–27, John Waugh in 1725, James Scott in 1729, John Anderson in 1759, John Hunter in 1764 and William Anderson in 1780. The residents recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls are John Andison, George Hunter and Thomas Elliot, with John Reid, James Scott and James Crawford being listed as ‘New Appletreehall’. In 1841 there were 15 separate households living there. Around 1935 a carved piece of sandstone was found in a garden here, believed to be a Romano-British deity, now in the National Museums of Scotland – ‘Catch the laughter-waking chords In the lilt of Clovenfords, Or the lullaby of Apple-tree-hall. Hear the slumber song of Ewes, And the mirth of Yarrow-feus Ringing over furrow, tree and wall’ [WL] (the pronunciation has become almost entirely anglicised and is never -tri-; the name is first recorded in the early 14th century and was spelled ‘Apiltrie’ and ‘Apiltrie-eriggs’, with the modern version appearing in the late 15th century; it is ‘Apilltrehall’ in 1482 and 1494, ‘apillitre haw’ in 1502, ‘Apiltrehall’ in 1502, 1509/10, 1536 and 1539/40, ‘Apilltrehall’ in 1549, ‘Apiltriehaw’ in 1561/2, ‘Appletreehall’ in 1580/1, ‘Apiltriehall’ in 1611, ‘Apletrehall’ in 1621, ‘Apletriehall’ in 1663 and 1681, ‘Appeltreehall’ in 1682, ‘Apeltreehall’ in 1682 and ‘Apeltree hall’ and ‘Apeltree hall’ in 1694; Stobie’s map of 1770 marks ‘New Appletreehall’ at the location of Newhouses, although whether this is an error is unclear; the origin of the name is presumably literal.

Appletreehall Mills (aw-pul-tree-haw-nilz)

n. Appletreehall Mills, a hosiery yarn spinning factory run by Peter Wilson & Co. around 1825. Later it was a hosiery factory operated by Peter Laidlaw and much later it was converted to a sawmill.

Appletreehall Road (aw-pul-tree-haw-röd)

n. Appletreehall Road, the beginning of the B6359, just past Burnfoot off the A7.

Appletreehall Toonfit (aw-pul-tree-haw-toon-fi’)

n. Appletreehall Townfoot, former name for part of the lands of Appletreehall. In 1788 (repeated in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) the lands were owned along with Crawhill by William Scott of Burnhead; the value was £417. It was later owned by the Watsons of Burnhead.

Appletreehall Toonheid (aw-pul-tree-haw-toon-heed)

n. Appletreehall Townhead, former name for part of the lands of Appletreehall. The trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe are recorded as owners in 1788 (and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £250. It was later owned by the Dicksons of Alton.

Appletreehaugh (aw-pul-tree-haf, aw-pul-tree-hawch)

a n. an alternative version of Appletreehall.

Appletreeleaves (aw-pul-tree-leevz)

a former farmstead just north of Galashiels. The lands were long held by the Darling family. The Scotts of Buecleuch also held lands (or perhaps superiority) there in the 1500s. The farmhouse incorporates part of the 16th century Ladhope Tower and is used as an outbuilding for Galashiels Golf Club (there is no obvious connection with ‘Appletreehall’ near Hawick, although sometimes the 2 may be confused; it is ‘Apiltreleis’ in 1574).

pp., arch. appointed – ‘...to sett scaffolds upon their neighbour’s ground, and ane time appointit them be the council to build the house in’ [BR1660].

a one of the early estates within Hobkirk Parish, the house being at the bend in the road between Harwoodmill and Highend, on the left bank of the Harwood Burn. In 1598 it was owned by Margaret Turnbull, termed ‘Lady Appotsyde’, when Hector Turnbull of Wanchope and his associates stole most of the livestock and goods from it. The feud increased over the next few years, with 3 men being killed. Over the period 1598–1605 the entire woods were cut down as part of this same feud, this including 1000 birch trees, 500 oaks, 300 alders and 400 hazels. The lands probably passed to the Lorraines of Harwood through Lady Appotside. By 1602 it was held by feu charter by James Hamilton of St. John’s Chapel (who had the wardship of the minor Hector Lorraine). In the next few decades the lands were involved in ‘wadsets’ and other deals with James Hamilton’s son Francis and son-in-law Rev. William Weir, as well as the Lorraines, who finally sold the main estate of Harwood to William Elliot in 1637, reserving Appotside for himself. It was owned by Edward Lorraine in 1643, when valued at £200. It was ‘Apitside, or Apudsie’ in 1663, when valued at £200 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. In 1654 part of the lands were still heritably owned by the Lorraines, with Walter Elliot of Harwood holding the rents in return for another loan. But in 1656 the lands were sold outright, with a small part reserved for Edward Lorraine of Harwood and his wife. There was a mill on the lands in the 17th century, perhaps the same as the later Harwood Mill. Edward Lorraine was still listed as owner in about 1663, when it was valued at £300. ‘Apudsie with mill thereof’ was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. The Laird of Harwood’s tenants there were taxed for having 3 hearths in 1694. It was part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood in 1788, valued at £200. There was already no sign of the former house by the mid-19th century, but a red sandstone block, about 20 inches acros, dug up there was built into a wall of Harwood Mill. This was part of a stone cross-head, probably for a wayside cross, and was later moved to Harwood House. The only vestige of the name now is a plantation above Tythehouse farm labelled ‘Abbotside Plantation’ on the Ordnance Survey map (spelled ‘Apatsyde’, ‘Apotsyde’, ‘Apitsyde’, ‘Apitsydye’, ‘Apudesyde’, ‘Aputsyde’, etc.; it is ‘Apothesyd’ in 1598, ‘Apotsevyde’ in 1606, ‘Apethsyde’ in 1610, ‘Apothesyd’ in 1630, ‘Appothsye’ in 1631, ‘Appitsyde’ in 1632, ‘Appiotsyde’ in 1637, ‘Apitside’ in 1643, ‘Abotsyde’ in 1649, ‘Appadcyde’ in 1655, ‘Apitsyde’ in 1656, ‘Apudsy’ in 1657, ‘Appudsyde’ in 1658, ‘Appitside’ in 1663, ‘Apitsydemillae’ in 1659, ‘Apitside’ in 1694, ‘Appyside’ in 1699, ‘Apitsyd’ about 1700 and ‘Appottsye’ in 1707; it is ‘Appotsyid’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Apotside’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it has been suggested that the name is a corruption of ‘Aldpethside’, i.e. the place beside the old path).
Appotside Mill

Appotside Mill (a-pot-sid-mil) n. former corn mill on the lands of Appotside in the 17th century. John Jackson was miller in 1632 and William Jackson the tenant there in 1637. The miller in 1654 was Andrew Turnbull and John Elliot in 1704. It may be the same place that was later known as Harwoodmill (‘Apitstymelne’ in 1632, ‘Apitsysdemelne’ in 1637, ‘Apitsyde myle’ in 1654 and ‘Abotssyde Mill’ in 1657).

Appotside Moor (a-pot-sid-moor) n. former farmstead near Appotside. It is recorded as ‘Apudsidemoor’ in the 1780s when William Inglis was there.

Apprehendit (aw-pree-hen-dee, -di’) pp. apprained – ‘...the Erle of Buccleugh causit rais vpoun the lettres of horneing lettres of captioun, and apprehendit the said Robert Elsit rais vpoun the lettres of horneing lettres of apprehendit { ‘...}') [BR1641].

Apudside see Appotside

are (awr) v., arch. to till, plough – ‘To are the fields, is a phrase of common use among the peasants in the south of Scotland, and signifies to till’ [JL] (probably local form of ‘ear’, but unclear how common this was).

douglas, earl of Angus (of the red douglases). James, earl of douglas escaped to england, but one of his brothers, archibald, was killed in the battle and another, Hugh, executed afterwards. All their property was declared forfeit, and this represented the end of the power of the Black Douglases. Included in this change was the transfer of Hawick (and much of Teviotdale) to the Scotts. The area was used for a while as a shooting range for Volunteers (also called ‘Erkinholm’; it is ‘Erkinhoome’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Arkle (awr-kul) n. Rev. James (1759–1823) minister of Hawick Parish 1800–23. He was probably son of lawrence ‘Arkley’ and Elizabeth Matters, born in st. Cuthbert’s Parish. He was licensed by the Presbytery of St. Andrews in 1786 and was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1791, becoming minister there the following year. He is recorded at Castleton on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1800 he was translated to Hawick, where he was also presented by the Duke of Buccleuch. He was Chaplain to the Roxburgh Volunteers from 1804. The Relief Church in Hawick was formed during his ministry. He was said to have been a supporter of Tom Jenkins, knowing him from when he first arrived in the district, and favouring him for the job of schoolmaster at Teviothead. In 1821 Charles Thomson became his assistant. In 1823 he performed a baptism in Cavers (probably at Caerlenrig). He published two of his sermons in Kelso in 1800 and in Hawick in 1806. He also wrote a description of Castleton Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. He died unmarried.

Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded as witness to some baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1801 and 1804. It seems likely that he was mother of Rev. James.

Arkleton (ar-kul-tin) n. farm in the Ewes valley to the east of the A7 between Mosspaul and Langholm. It was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. Ninian’s Geordie Armstrong was there in 1569. Archie Armstrong ‘of Arkleton’ signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. It was a seat of the Armstrongs until about 1610 and in 1611 was granted to William Elliot of Fahash (with Armstrongs still holding an interest). Ebie Armstrong, son of Ringan of Arkleton, was recorded in 1611. The 10-pound lands there were inherited in 1622 by Ninian Armstrong from his great-grandfather.
Arkleton Crags

Ninian of Arkleton. In 1623 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Falnash to Adam Cunningham, then in the 1640s it was sold to Walter Scott of Harwood and Braidhaugh (followed by his son Francis), who were Chamberlains to the Scots of Buccleuch. Walter Elliot of Arkleton recovered the lands for the Elliots in 1669 and it was valued at £700 in 1671. He probably had the tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, since a stone built into the present house shows the date 1676 and the initials ‘W.E.’ and ‘K.F.’ (for Walter Elliot and his wife Katherine Foster); additionally an old lintel was inscribed ‘WALTER ELLIOT, ALL VERTVE TOIL, ALL EARTHLY VERTVE IS BUT TOIL AND PAIN, SO ALL IS LOSS UNLES THAT CHRIST WE GAIN’. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1783. James Jardine was there in 1797. The former tower-house was demolished in the early 1800s and was said to stand to the left of the present house, by the archway to the stables. The modern farmhouse was built in 2 stages about 1860 and 1884, including a turreted tower; this may have been under the influence of architect Lewis Alexander Wallace, father-in-law of the owner William Scott-Elliot. James Jardine was farmer there in 1841 when William Elliot was shepherd. John Jardine was the farmer in 1851 and 1861. James Jackson was farmer in 1868. In 1894 the farm was sold by Walter Travers Scott-Elliot to Prof. John Higgs of Oxford. There are remains of an ancient settlement near the modern farmhouse. Arkleton Crag (or Hill) reaches a height of 521 m (1709 ft) above the farm. The Arkleton Trust was established at the farm in 1964. In 1965, starring Albert Finney.

Arnot Hill (awr-ni’-hil) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 3 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Ninian Armstrong. It is surely the same location as the modern ‘Annett Hill’, a small rise on the south side of the road by the remains of Liddel Castle.

Arnott (awr-ni’) n. John (1712–74) born at Schaws Mill, he was the first minister of the Denholm Cameronian Chapel, the congregation formed out of strict adherents to Covenant principles. He is buried in Denholm, his gravestone reading ‘Here rests from his labours Mr John Arnott, Preacher of the Gospel’. Arnott 1851. It is said that hill near there was used as a place of concealment for people of Ewesdale and was where a group were massacred when a traitor led English horsemen there (also ‘Arkleton Shiels’ and ‘Arkletonshiellz’).

arle (a-rul) v., arch. to engage services, pay a sum to secure employment – ‘He held out the shilling to arle the bit wench, In case it should enter her noodle to flinch’ [DA], n., poet. a token – ‘Shaw me an arle for guid, that thaye whilk hasta me may see it an’ be shmet .’ [HSR] (also erle).

arles (a-rulz) n., pl., poet. payment for services – ‘What were your arles, Tam: What did ye hain Efter a life’s work For a maister’s gain?’ [DH].

Armstrong see Airmstrong

Armstrong’s Last Goodnight (awr-smongz-lawst-good-nil’) n. play by John Arden, based on the story of Johnnie Armstrong of Gilnockie. It was first performed in 1965, starring James ‘Jimmy’ band leader of the Drums and Fifes in the mid-20th century. He also played the pipes.

Arnott Hill (awr-ni’-hil) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll, when it was valued at 3 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Ninian Armstrong. He is buried in Denholm, his gravestone reading ‘Here rests from his labours Mr John Arnott, Preacher of the Gospel’.
Arnside  (awrn-sid) n. former lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule (Parish of Hobbirk), which were part of the land dispute in the Barony in 1561 and 1562. Its location is uncertain, but it appears to have been adjacent to Langburn and to the west of Whelpinside, hence probably more like the upper Slitrig valley than the Rule valley. There is a village of the same name in southern Cumbria (written ‘Arnsyde’ and also ‘Irensyde’).

Arton Fell  (awrn-tin-fell) n. ridge in upper Liddesdale, running roughly south-west to north-east, with a triangulation pillar at the south-west summit, height 405 m. Below the pillar there are the remains of an old boundary dyke, around the head ofPaddington Sike. There are also extensive rig lines in the area. The name probably evolved from ‘Ernilton’, with ‘Erniltoun b. fell’ marked in roughly the same place on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

aroon  (u-, a-roon) adv., prep. around, in a circle, on every side – ‘... An’ a’ the countryside displayed Aroon’ the Border Queen’ [WFC], ‘Where heath clads hills stand guaird aroon ...’ [IWL] (also around).

Arres  (aw-res) n. Janet (d.1835) sister of John and Robert (of Kirkton). She was probably niece of Daniel Mather, tenant at Ashbyank. She married William Thomas Scott of Milsington and died in Edinburgh.

Arres-Mather  (aw-res-maw-thur) n. John (19th C.) son of Jessie Mather. His uncle Daniel left him his possessions when he died in 1869, so he became tenant of Hallrule and added the surname ‘Mather’ to his own. He lived at the farm for a few years, but eventually returned to his home in northern Scotland.

arri  (aw-ri) n. an arrow – ‘... he ordeens his ar-ras agayne the persikers’ [HSR], ‘For thine ar-ras stik faste in me ...’ [HSR], ‘... Withoot e’en a gledge At the craik and pen-whussle Yon arra-heid o geese ... ’ [DH] (there are spelling variants).

arseneek  (ar-se-neek) n. arsenic – ‘The pooder produced an proved teh be arseneek!’ [BW].

arse-verse  (ars-vers) n., arch. a spell written on a house to ward off fire – ‘Arse-verse, A sort of spell used to prevent the house from fire, or as an antidote to Arson, from which the term is supposed to be derived, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (the accents given by Jamieson suggest he may have meant this as ‘arsy-verse’).

the Art Club  see Hawick Art Club

arteestic  (aw-tees-tik) adj. artistic – ‘Weel, there’s an awfu’ difference arteestic de-sign an’ a mill chumley, an aw’ve heard it ca’ed baith’ [BW].

the A7 (thu-à-see-vin) n. main road north to Edinburgh and south to Carlisle, sometimes designated the A7(T), where ‘trunk’ means it is suitable for heavy vehicles. Passing through Hawick from north to south it followed Wilton Hill, Dovemount Place, North Bridge Street, High Street, Buccleuch Street and Buccleuch Road. In 2000 it was rerouted to pass via Commercial Road in the northerly direction and via Mart Street in the southerly direction (with new one-way detours). The approximate route has existed for many centuries, but has changed several times. The route through Hawick from the south went from near the present entrance to Goldielands, via Martin’s House, up the Longbaulk, down the Loan, across the Slitrig (by the Auld Brig or nearby ford), then the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, up Wilton Path and then via Stiches Road to Ashkirk. After 1741 it would proceed via the Teviot Bridge, avoiding the High Street, from 1816 along the New Road, avoiding the Loan, and from 1832 along the High Street and across the North Bridge, avoiding Wilton Path. Until the early 18th century the route went from Ashkirk to Selkirk to Darnick and then via a ferry, ford near the present entrance to Goldielands, via Martin’s House, up the Longbaulk, down the Loan, across the Slitrig (by the Auld Brig or nearby ford), then the ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd, up Wilton Path and then via Stiches Road to Ashkirk. After 1741 it would proceed via the Teviot Bridge, avoiding the High Street, from 1816 along the New Road, avoiding the Loan, and from 1832 along the High Street and across the North Bridge, avoiding Wilton Path. Until the early 18th century the route went from Ashkirk to Selkirk to Darnick and then via a ferry, ford and bridge to Lauder, Oxton, Fala and via Dere Street to Dalkeith. It was dramatically improved after the Toll Roads acts of the mid-18th century, and particularly with the opening of the Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike, after which it developed as a major passenger coach and carrying route. The new road from Selkirk to Edinburgh, via Fairnilee and Clovernords was built in 1755. However, even in 1826 a guide book describes the route between Hawick and Selkirk as ‘a most excerable road, ten miles in length’. The route from Galashiels to Stow, Heriot and Fushiebridge was not laid out until 1818 and the new road from Selkirk to Gala was completed in 1833. The part along the Ewes valley to Langholm was completed about 1770, and before that was little more than a bridle trail. The route up the Teviot valley used to cross the river at more than 10 fords before this road (with its bridges) was developed. It has continued to be (slowly) improved. It is now referred to as the ‘Historic Scottish Borders’ route owing to its historic state – ‘Neebors: be warried! – If ye’d bide leevin – Let’s have Hawick High Street, No’ A7’ [DH].

ashair (a-shär) v. to assure – ‘...for wei are ashaird that whatever presents itsel’ tae the human ei remains on the retina for an infinitesimal fraction o’ a second’ [BW1938], ‘...But rest ashared, the real foke are coming back’ [JuH] (also written ‘ashare’).

Ashby (ash-bee) n. Rev. William A. (19th/20th C.) from Walthamstow, he was assistant minister at Stirling Baptist Church and then minister of Hawick Baptist Church 1911–15. In 1911 a Women’s Auxiliary was formed, with his wife as President. The Bible Class reached its highest attendance of 120. For a short period he required police protection, having spoken out against a particular Protestant lecturer, against the feelings of some townsfolk, which formed a mob outside his Church. He moved to Bridge ton, Glasgow in 1915 and was at Paisley Road Church 1918–23.

Ashcroft (ash-kroft) n. Alexander (b.1808/9) from Canobic, son of James. He was farmer at South Berryfell. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres there. He was living with his sister Ann and niece Elizabeth. James (b.c.1785) lime burner at Stobs Limery, Linmeikenedge in 1841. His wife was Christy and their children included Alexander, Thomas, William and Anne.

Ashiebank see Ashybank

Ashieburn (aw-shee-burn) n. farm on the south side of the Ale Water, between Belses and Ancrum. 2 Turnbull brothers from there were transported to Virginia in the 1660s as a result of a ‘tumult’ when James Scott (son of Walter in Cat slack) was installed as minister, and their sister was ‘whipped through the streets of Jedburgh’. Walter Scott of Clarilaw bought the farm sometime before 1700 and his great-grandson Henry Erskine Scott sold it before he died in 1847. James Gray of Ashieburn was there in 1788. William Cochrane was there in 1797 and James Gray in the latter part of the 18th century.

Ashiestiel (aw-shee-stee) n. house next to Peel, on the south bank of the Tweed, dating from 1660, but with many later alterations. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, leased by the Kers and then the Murrays in the early 16th century. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst claimed he held the lands in feu in 1541, paying £26 13s 4d. It was owned by Russells at the end of the 18th century and Col. William of Ashiestiel paid the land tax there in 1802. Sir Walter Scott rented the property 1804–12 while Abbotsford... was being built. The Ashiestiel (or Low Peel) Bridge, built in 1848, was at the time the largest single-span rubble arch bridge in the world – ‘Brave Robin o’ Singlee was cloven through the brain, An’ Kirkhope was woundit, an’ young Bailleylee. Wi’ Juden, baith Gatehope an’ Plora were slain, An’ auld Ashiesteel gat a cut on the knee’ [ES] (also written ‘Ashiesteel’; it is recorded as ‘Esschisteile’ in 1444, ‘Eschisteile’ in 1456, ‘Eschelelche’ in 1457, ‘Eschistele’ in 1468, ‘Escheletteill’ in 1541, ‘Eschestill’ in 1563, ‘Eschestill’ in 1573/4 and ‘Eschiesteill’ in 1601; it is ‘Eshystill’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, and ‘Eshysteill’ on Adair’s 1688 map).

Ashkirk (ash-kirk) n. village 6 miles north of Hawick on the A7, also the name of the surrounding parish. Here side roads connect to the Borthwick valley (‘the Hill Road to Robertson’) and over Woll Rigg into the Ettrick valley. The earliest mention of the name is in 1116. Much of the area was owned by the Bishops of Glasgow from the 10th to 13th centuries, and the church is first recorded in 1170. Indeed it had the status of a Barony, owned by the Diocese of Glasgow until the Reformation. There is a charter of lands there to Orm of Ashkirk and his heirs, granted by William I in 1179. The perambulation of the pasture is described as being ‘from Stanford to the cross, and from the cross to the great alder-tree near the turf-ground – and thence as far as Illieslade – and thence to the small rivulet on the east side of Huntleie – and from the rivulet upwards to the rivulet of Akermere – and so upwards to the wenelachia of Richard Cumin – and so thereafter upwards to the sike which is next under Todholerig { and so from that sike which goes into the rivulet of Langhop – and thereafter as the boundary goes on the east side of Lepes between Askirke and Whiteslade into the Alne’. It was probably the ‘Askrige’ listed in a letter by Dacre listing places that were burned in 1514. It was once a country retreat of the Bishop, although ruins of the palace have been invisible since the 18th century. Lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Whiteslade in 1643 (valued at £110 10s), as well as an additional ‘six husband-lands’ (valued at £133). These same lands were owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1788 and sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795. Along with Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Kirkhouses, the teinds were valued at £80 in 1788. Alexander Scott is recorded as farmer there in 1797, when he owned 7 horses. The village was once an important coaching stop but became quieter after the railway was built. Ashkirk is also the name of the surrounding Parish, which lay partly in Roxburghshire (about ⅔) and partly in Selkirkshire until 1891. The area was ransacked in 1514 by Dacre’s men, specifically ‘the watter of Ale, from Askirke to Elmartour in the said Middilmarchies, whirupon was fifty pleughes, lyes all and every of them waist now’. The ‘Bishop’s Stone’ is a nearby marker. The University of Glasgow remained as superior of much of the lands of the Parish into the 20th century. The present church dates from 1790/1, with the interior renovated in 1893 and 1962. A school was built in the village in 1837, and it formerly had its own post office. A village hall was built in 1979. Above the village stands the transmission mast, which provides FM radio to the Borders and Northumberland – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Robertson, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the name first appears as ‘Asheschyrc’ in about 1120, in the late 12 century is ‘Askirke’, ‘Eschechirca’, ‘Axekirche’, ‘Aschechircha’ and ‘Ashachirche’, and is ‘Askirk’ in 1275; it appears in its modern form by the mid-16th century, although it is ‘Eskirk’ in 1529 and still ‘Eskirke’ in a charter of 1641; Blaen’s 1654 map shows it as ‘Askirek’ and on the south side of the Ale, while it is ‘Askirch’ on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland and ‘Askirk’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map; it presumably derives from the ash trees in the church area; other examples of spellings include ‘Aschachirche’, ‘Aschechirche’, ‘Aschechyrca’, ‘Ascheirche’, ‘Ashkirke’, ‘Askechirche’, ‘Askirk’, ‘Askirke’, ‘Askyrk’, ‘Axekirche’, ‘Eschirche’, ‘Eskirke’, ‘Eskirch’, ‘Eschircha’, ‘Eschirche’, ‘Eskirk’, ‘Eskirk’, ‘Hassechirke’ and ‘Heschirhche’).

Ashkirk (ash-kirk) n. Acolf (12th C.) first known member of the family who held lands at Ashkirk as vassals of the Bishop of Glasgow. It is unclear whether he himself held local lands. His surviving sons were Huhtred and Orm. Adam (12th/13th C.) son of Orm, he also had a connection with Ashkirk. Based on the dispute in the reign of Alexander II we know that he had a son William, but nothing much else is known about him. In the period 1170–90 he witnessed a gift by Anselm of Mow to Melrose Abbey: he is there ‘Adam of Ashkirk, son of Orm’. He also witnessed an agreement in about 1188 between the Bishops of Glasgow and Robert de Brus regarding several churches in Dumfriesshire. And in the period 1189–94 he witnessed a gift to St. Andrews Priory. Sir Alexander (13th C.) son of William and younger brother of Henry, from whom he was granted half the lands of Ashkirk following a dispute over Henry’s legitimacy, according to an undated charter made before 1249. He was also granted lands in Lilliesleaf by Walter Riddell in the early 13th century. Probably this same Alexander held the lands of ‘Walter de Ridale’. Sir Henry (13th C.) son of William and brother of Alexander. There was a dispute in the reign of Alexander II (sometime between 1214 and 1249) over his legitimacy and hence right to inherit the lands at Ashkirk. This was resolved when he granted half of Ashkirk to his brother, for his ‘homage and service’. In 1253 he was one of a number of men who granted lands (Oliver Castle in Peeblesshire) to David de Graham. In about 1256 he granted the lands of ‘Bellingdene’ (i.e. Bellendean) and Todrig to Coldstream Priory. Henry (14th C.) referred to as ‘of Ashkirk’ in 1362 when David II granted him lands in the town of Roxburgh that had previously belonged to Adam de Glenton (or possibly Glendinning). He was probably a descendant of the earlier Ashkirks, but appears no longer to have had any direct local connection. Hultred (12th C.) son of Acolf and elder brother of Orm. Since Orm had a charter of Ashkirk, then presumably he held lands elsewhere, but it is not known whether these were local. What is known is that he has a son, also Hultred, and a grandson, Richard. Orm (12th C.) son of Acolf and brother of Hultred. A charter of William the Lion, probably in 1179, grants him lands and rights at Ashkirk. This was a continuation of what had been granted to the family earlier by King Malcolm. There is a description of the boundaries of the land as parcelled out by the King’s Constable Richard de Moreville and others. He is also recorded (as a neighbouring landowner) in a charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1173. He had at least one son, Adam. William (12th/13th C.) son of Adam, he probably held the lands of Ashkirk. In the period 1204–07 he witnessed the charter of foundation for the Church of Hassendean. He had sons Henry and Alexander. William (16th C.) recorded on a marriage contract of 1526 in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He was one of the officials appointed to act on behalf of John Baird of Posso, and Janet Scott, daughter of Walter Scott of Howpasley (written ‘Askirk’, ‘Haschirch’ and variants).

Ashkirk Brig (ash-kirk-brig) n. bridge over the Ale Water at Ashkirk. It was built about 1773 and had 3 arches. It was rebuilt in 1841 by Smith of Darnick.

Ashkirk Kirk (shirk-kirk) n. church in Ashkirk, centre of the surrounding parish. The church there was recorded as early as 1170, and much of the land around the village was owned by the Bishops of Glasgow until the 13th century. There are records of the church being confirmed to Bishops of Glasgow by the Pope in 1170, 1174, 1179, 1181, 1186 and 1216. The early church was dedicated to St. Ninian, and probably stood on the same site as the current building. It was erected into a prebend of the Church of Glasgow in about 1275. In 1401 and in about 1440 it was taxed at a value of 40 shillings. In about the 1440s the canon of the church was ordered to pay the vicar 9 merks. A record of 1448 complains of the non-payment of salary for the ‘vicar of the choir’ there; the Bishop describes how the ‘fruits of the canonyr and prebend’ were so insignificant, as a result of which ‘divine worship remained incompletely performed’. A small amount was to be allowed for ‘the chaplain who should officiate at Ashkirk’, from out of the tithes and other income that went to the person holding the canonry and vicarage. The prebendary of Ashkirk appears to have been vacant in 1502. The names of the actual preachers in the parish are not mostly recorded until after the Reformation. At that point the ‘haill parsonage’ was valued at £120. The church was rebuilt in 1790/1, designed by James Trotter. It contains oak panelling in the pulpit and possibly also the Laird’s Pew from the old Minto Church (coming to Ashkirk after the old Minto Kirk was demolished in 1831). There are initials there also, ‘S/ GE’ and ‘D / (I)C’ for Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw (later Minto) and his wife Dame Jean Carre of Cavers. Another panel bears the date 1702. The aisle at the west end of the south side was added in the early 19th century. The exterior is harled, with red sandstone dressings, and it has a square bellcote. Its interior was renovated in 1893 and again in 1962 by J. Wilson Paterson, and also contains a war memorial plaque. A pictorial window was installed in 1910, to the memory of Esther, wife of John Corse Scott of Synton. The organ was built by Basil Wilson. There is a silver font, dating from 1851, and a carved communion table. There is a gallery level, reached by 2 staircases. The manse was built in 1784. The churchyard contains some older headstones, including the enclosure of the Scotts of Synton, dated 1646, but rebuilt in 1887 for the Corse Scotts. It also contains 5 table-stones of 17th century style, as well as a headstone of a gypsy boy hanged for stealing a duck. The village also formerly contained a Free Kirk, operating from 1844 until at least 1908. Kirk Session minutes date back to 1711 and Parish registers to 1630. A Free Kirk was established in 1843, when John Edmondston walked out with much of the congregation. Records for the Free Kirk exist for the period 1844–1908. The Parish Kirk was linked with Bowden 1977–83 and linked with Selkirk and Caddonfoot from 1986. The oldest surviving communion token is a large lead oblong, with ‘A.K.’ incised, probably dating from the 17th century; another is square with ‘A.K.’ finely scratched, while a more recent one comes from 1839. A booklet about the church was written by Alasdair Allan in 1984. A roll of ministers of Ashkirk Kirk is: Richard, Vicar in 1258; William Elphinstone, Rector from 1437; Simon of Dalgless, Canon and Vicar in 1448; James Heriot, Rector from 1505; William Watson, Vicar until c.1508; Richard Bothwell, Parson and Rector 1505–1549; David Scott, Vicar in at least 1516–28; Simon Shortreed, Vicar from at least 1532 until 1550; James Ker, Vicar from 1550; William Bothwell, Rector 1550–52; Adam Bothwell, Rector from 1552; John Reid, Vicar from 1552; John Muir, Rector c.1561–70; John Hamilton, from 1570; John Scott 1573–c.79; James Scott, Reader in 1575, Vicar in 1586; Thomas Cranston, Parson and Vicar 1579–82; Daniel Chalmers c.1583–85/6; Robert Scott, from 1585/6; Alexander Justice 1604–11; Alexander Hogg 1611–19; Robert Cunningham, Reader in 1638; Alexander Reid 1619–c.49; Robert Cunningham 1649–62; Thomas Courtney from 1663; Archibald Inglis 1675–c.85; Robert Cunningham (again) 1679–c.85; Richard Scott 1685–89; Robert Cunningham (once again!) 1689–90; Robert Wylie 1691–92; Charles Gordon 1695–1710; Robert Lithgow 1711–29; Walter Stewart 1730–62; Simon Haliburton 1763–97; Thomas Samuel Hardie 1798–1810; Gavin James Hamilton 1811–37; John Edmondston 1837–43; Laurence Mackenzie 1843–54; William McLean 1855–60; William Grierson Smith 1861–70; John Chalmers 1871–94; James Daun 1892–1926; James Reekie 1926–53; John Freedland 1953–61; Ewan S. Trail 1961–69; Henry M. Jamieson 1969–76; Thomas W. Donald 1977–83; John W. Slack 1983–86; Ian M. Strachan 1986–95; James W. Campbell 1995– (it is shown as ‘K. of Askirkc’ on Blaueu’s 1654 map in roughly the correct place, although ‘Askirkc’ itself is marked on the south side of the Ale).

Ashkirk Loch (ash-kirk-loch) n. small lake between Drinkstone Hill and Ashkirk Hill, a couple of miles south of the village itself. Long Moss drains into it, and it in turns drains into the Woo Burn (it is shown on Blaueu’s map as ‘Loch of Askirkc’).

Ashkirk Manse (ash-kirk-nawns) n. former manse for Ashkirk Kirk, also known as Halkyn. It was built in 1784, with later additions, and there is a carved lintel that says ‘MWS 1748’ (the initials referring to Mr. Walter Stewart). Rev. Stewart paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748 (presumably for an earlier building) and for 14 windows in 1753 (probably the newer building). The associated glebe lands consisted of 14 acres in the early 19th century.

Ashkirk Mill (ash-kirk-nil) n. former corn mill in Ashkirk, situated to the south of the road through the village, on the old mill lade. John Riddell was described as ‘late of Ashkirk mylne’ in 1580. In 1580/1 Walter Scott of Ashkirk sold the ‘knaischip and bannock’ of the mill to John Scott in Aikwood for 5 years. It was valued at Ashkirk Pairish

£84 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. Thomas Brown was miller there in 1698. The miller in the early 18th century was Walter Scott. In 1762 George Helm was cottar there and Thomas Renwick was a tailor. John Scott, Alexander Neil and Thomas Henderson are recorded there in 1797. It was owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1788, when the lands were still valued at £84. It was still recorded being owned by Thomas Wilkinson in 1811 (although probably sold before that), when the ‘Six Husband Lands, and Mill of Ashkirk, and Multures’ (together with Kirkhouses and Ashkirk) were valued at £529 10s. John Douglas was the tenant in 1825. In 1841 William Hobkirk lived there, as well as Thomas Gray being farmer, James Scott tollgate keeper and John Matheson vet and blacksmith. It was part of the property of Alexander Cochrane in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. James Melrose & Sons supplied a new pump in 1886 and water wheel in 1907, plans for both being in the National Archives (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Ashkirk-mill’ in 1678, ‘Askirk Milln’ in 1698, ‘Askirk-mill’ in 1788 and ‘Ashkirk-milln’ in 1797).

Ashkirk Pairish (ash-kirk-pa-reesh) n. parish centred around Ashkirk village, between Hawick and Selkirk. The village was formerly in Roxburghshire, while about 1/3 of the parish was in Selkirkshire (the former estates of Synton and Whitslade), but in 1891 it was all transferred to Selkirkshire, and a detached part of Selkirkshire included in the new parish boundaries. The parish is bounded by Selkirk, Lilliesleaf, Wilton, Roberton and Kirkhope parishes. The parish was part of the see of Glasgow until the Reformation. It is mentioned as early as 1116, and most of the lands (perhaps with the exception of North and South Synton) were confirmed to Glasgow several times in the 12th century. The rectorcy of Ashkirk was erected into a prebendary of Glasgow in about 1275. James IV confirmed the privileges of a free regality on the Barony of Ashkirk in 1490, held by the Bishop of Glasgow, but in 1641 Charles gave the same rights to Duke of Lennox. The bailyary of Ashkirk was gifted to Walter Ker of Cessford by the King in 1547 and in 1548 the Kers, along with English forces under Lord Grey burnt many of the houses and crops in the Ale valley. From very early times the land was held by a family called ‘Askirk’, who were vassals of the Bishop of Glasgow. Later, and for several centuries, most of the land was owned by various branches of the Scotts. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £5100 in Roxburghshire and £1600 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 the rents were valued at about £3200 in Roxburghshire and £1900 in Selkirkshire. In 1707 the value was £5181 18s 4d. The land around the parish formerly held many more extensive lakes, which were drained for agricultural improvements in the 18th and 19th centuries. The present church dates from 1791. In 1788 the feu-duty of Headslew were still held by the ‘College of Glasgow’, this being the last vestige of the association of the Parish with Glasgow. In the New Statistical Account (written 1837) the Parish is described as having 5 masons, 2 carpenters, 2 tailors, 1 smith, 1 farrier and no public houses. Parish registers exist from 1630, but have considerable gaps.

Ashkirk Schuil (ash-kirk-skill) n. former school for Ashkirk Parish, situation downhill from the Manse. It was built in 1837, replacing an earlier parish school, and had a schoolhouse each side, for the 2 teachers employed there. There were about 45 pupils in the 1830s, when the teacher’s house consisted of 3 rooms and a kitchen. The first record of a schoolmaster is Robert Cutlibertson in 1618. John Shiel was schoolmaster in 1709. James Wilson was schoolmaster in at least 1719–24. The master in the period 1795–99 was Walter Scott. From 1799 it was Jesse Elliot, who served for more than 40 years. In 1851 it was James Scott. In the 1860s it was James Smellie. The earlier school was located near the Kirk since the late 16th century, and may have been in the ruined building to the east of the church, later used as a burial aisle; the keystone of the arched doorway is marked ‘WS 1846’.

Ashkirkshiel (ash-kirk-sheel) n. former farm stead ing near Synton Mossend, marked on the west side of Synton Loch on Ainslie’s 1773 map. On a ridge just to the south is an ancient earthwork, probably a medieval settlement. The site now lies within forestry. A bronze sword-hilt and other artefacts were found there, suggesting earlier occupation.

Ashkirk Toll (ash-kirk-tol) n. former tollhouse located about 2 miles north of the village itself, at the old boundary with Selkirkshire. George Barclay was proprietor there in 1851—‘...And tramp tae Ashkirk Toll tae meet The sodgers coming in’ [WL1] (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ashkirktoon (ash-kirk-toon) n. Ashkirktown, farm to the left of the A7, just before Ashkirk village, on the south side of the Ale Water (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).
the Ashloanin (thu-aw-sh-o-nin) n. street in Denholm, off the Loaming, where ash trees once grew. It was the location for council ‘prefabs’ at the end of WWII, and more housing development since then.

Ashtreis (awsg-triz) n. Ashtrees, farm between the Rule and Jed valleys, off the road to the north of Chesters. It long belonged to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, with Olivers holding it in fee from at least the mid-16th century. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. In 1539 George Rutherford of Hundalee had a charter of these lands, whose superiority had been forfeited by Archibald, Earl of Angus. ‘Hobe Ollyver of Eshetres’ was recorded in 1544. The Laird of Ashtrees was one of the local leaders of a raiding expedition of about 200 Olivers and others in 1583, probably in retaliation for having cattle stolen. Adam Scott of Ashtrees paid tax on lands in Southdean Parish in 1678. James Oliver was there in 1684. Thomas was the last Oliver of Ashtrees, dying in 1739, when it passed to his daughter and son-in-law John Scott. In 1788 it was valued at £33 6s 8d, when held by Adam Scott. The Scotts held it through to the mid-19th century, and it passed to Dr. John Robson-Scott about 1858. Edward Hindmarsh (also known as ‘Hymers’) was farmer there in 1861 and 1868. There was formerly a tower house there. A set of 10 cairns are shown on the 1924 Ordnance Survey map, probably clearance heaps, but in any case now gone (it is ‘Eschetreis’ in 1538, 1539 and 1541, ‘Eschettres’ in 1544 and ‘Ash-trees’ in 1684; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ashybank (aw-shee-, e-shee-bawngk) n. hamlet on the A698, about half-way to Denholm. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, along with much of Teviotdale. The road to Denholm used to pass to the south of here. The main farm was formerly a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate; there are deeds relating to it among the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1498, 1550 and 1671. It was sold by Sir William Douglas of Cavers to Robert Ker in Sunderlandhall and sold back in 1498 for 240 merks. However, there was still a dispute between the 2 families over the farm in 1538. In 1511 it was listed as one of the 2 ‘domain’ lands of the Barony of Cavers, and again in 1558 when its ‘liferent’ was granted to Christian Kerr, widow of the former Laird of Cavers. The ‘mains’ lands of this name (along with the Coates) were inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. 5 people were listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. William Leyden was there in 1702. The lands were liferented as part of the estate of Bonjedward by 1707, along with ‘Cray’s park’. James Smith was there in 1709, James Oliver in at least 1709–18, William Scott in at least 1723–30, William Hood in 1725, James Thomson in 1726, James Dryden in 1733–42, William Hall (herd) in 1733, Walter Waugh in 1734, George Turnbull in 1735–47, John Scott in 1742–49 and Robert Stavert in 1745. James Oliver was tenant in 1755 and (probably) another James Oliver in 1778. It was the site of the first local ploughing competition, organised by the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1786. The Mather family farmed there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. George Forsyth was farmer in the 1860s, and there were Taylors there in the early 20th century. The farm was taken over by the Haddon family shortly before WWII and jointly farmed with the Halls for a while. A flat bronze axe found here in the 19th century is in the Royal Museum of Scotland (also spelled ‘Eschiebank’, ‘Ashiebank’ etc. in earlier documents; the name is probably just the Old English ‘esc banke’, meaning ‘the bank of ash trees’; it is first recorded as ‘Eschebank’ in 1498, is ‘Eschebank’ in 1511 and 1558, ‘Esschebank’ in 1538 and ‘Eschebanke’ in 1545, and had similar spellings until the early 17th century; it is ‘Eshiebank’ in 1687, ‘Eshibank’ in 1698 and ‘Ashibank’ in 1716; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Esshybank’, surrounded by a wooded area, and is hybanck’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland).

Ashybrae (aw-shee-bray) n. former name for a slope on the west side of the Dean Burn near Denholm, opposite the Well Brae and near the Burn Haugh. James Murray says that the earliest course of the road towards Hawick used to go this way, much higher up the Burn than the modern road, before passing into the fields of Honeyburn.

Ashy Burn (aw-shee-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising around Swarf Moss and running roughly north-west to become part of Whithaugh Burn.

asiament (äs-ya-ment) n., arch. an advantage in connection with land, easement – ‘...with all frutis, asyamentis and pertinentis to the sayd lands off the Hepe...' [SB1431].

aside (a-sid, u-sid) prep. besides, apart from, in comparison to – ‘...spanged the Yill owre the A698 (thu-ä-siks-nin- t) n. main road from Hawick to Kelso, beginning as Bourtree Place and Weensland Road, going through Denholm, past Jedburgh and on through Kelso. Something like the modern route was completed in the late 18th century. It was basically part of the road from Berwick to Carlisle.

the A6088 (thu-ä-siks-ö-r-i-t) n. a road that leaves Weensland Road just outside town and joins the main A68 road to Newcastle at the Carter Bar. It is the modern version of the centuries old route to Newcastle, which once went straight up the Wellogate.

As June Days Draw Nigh (awz-oon-düz-draw-nil) n. book published by the 1514 Club in 2001, being a pictorial of the Common Riding.

ask (ask) n., arch. the newt or eft – ‘Another creature which inspires much terror upon the mind of uneducated folks is the water-newt, in my district called an ‘ask’’ [RB] (also esk).

askeet see askit

ask for (ask-for) v. to inquire after, ask after – ‘tell yer mother A was askin for her’, ‘yer brother was askin for ee on the phone’.

Askirk see Ashkirk

askit (aws-kee’, aws-ki’) pp. asked – ‘...and heirupoun askit instrument of me, notar public, befor thir witnessiss’ [SB1574], ‘...of before she took them away she either made price with the pursurer, or askit his liberty to goe that lenth with them?’ [BR1680], ‘...did they believe the Bible, ye micht as weil hae askit ...’ [EM1820], ‘A was honoured ti be askit ti propose this toast’, ‘...Ah’ve askeet her an’ she says ee can’ [JCo], ‘And when they askit him the time o day ...’ [DH], ‘...they aye announce the taxis afore Jimmy’s askeet ti favour the company’ [IWL] (cf. as’t; also spelled ‘askeet’).

A Song O’ Hawick (a-sawng-o-hIk) n. song written by Robert McCartney in about 1990. In the summer of that year a tape was played to Ian Seeley (by a carer at the Buccleuch Rest Home) of McCartney singing a song he had made up, set to music by Billy Bell. It was transcribed by Seeley, and a piano accompaniment written. This was performed by the singing group ‘Quintessenence’ several times before McCartney’s death in 1996. The song was included in the 2001 Hawick Song anthology, with a 3rd verse finished off by the editorial committee, based on McCartney’s sketch. It is sung by Bernie Armstrong on the 2013 CD ‘The Mosstroopers’.

Atkinson (at-kin-sin, at-kee-sin) n. David, M.B.E., J.P. (1897/8–1985) ‘Davey’ or ‘Big Davey’, a native of Glasgow, he came to Hawick in 1938 from Tweedmouth. He had been a professional football player for teams including Clyde and Dunfermline, before becoming player-manager of Berwick Rangers. He worked as transport manager for Hawick Co-op, being the first President of the Central Borders Co-operative Society, and retiring from ‘the Store’ in 1963. He was a member of Hawick Town Council, for South High Street ward, from 1944, made a Bailie from 1945, and was first elected Provost 1958–62, when James Henderson declined. His re-election as Provost in 1968 was decided on a draw of the hat! He served as Provost until 1975, being the last before reorganisation, and during 1975–77 he was referred to as ‘Ex-Provost’ at the Common Riding. He then went onto the District Council, being Vice-Convenor of Roxburgh District Council and of the Borders Regional Advisory Committee, and was also made an Honorary Sheriff Substitute. He retired from the Council in 1977 as Chairman, having worked on the Water Board, Police Board and Joint Area Fire Committee. Hawick honoured him with freedom of the town in 1970, and he received an M.B.E. in 1973. He was a member of the Legion and Liberal Clubs and an Honorary Life Member of the Callants’ Club. He resided for a long time in the house attached to the former Store Dairy on Elm Grove. His portrait hangs in the Town Hall. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Kirton’ (presumably Kirkton) when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1687. His wife was Margaret Douglas and they also had a daughter Janet (b.1685). James (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. John (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolfelee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Atzensone’ in 1465/6 and 1483 when he was notary (‘imperial and royal’) to documents dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1468 he was described as ‘M.A., clerk, Glasgow diocese’ when he was notary for a document dealing with Harden in the Barony of Wilton. He was also notary in 1478 for a document relating to the Scotts of Branxholme and lands in Selkirk. In 1479 he was notary for a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. In 1488/9 he was notary for an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1492/3 he was a notary when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. In 1499 he was ‘Patrick Atzensone, M.A.’ when he was notary for Sir William Colville resigning the lands of Feu-Rule to Sir William Douglas of Cavers; he also notarised the granting of the lands to Andrew Ker in the following year. He is described as deceased in a disputed land case of 1533 referring to one of his documents. He may well have been attached to one of the local parish churches. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Boylayea Mertine sex pound per piece, . . . for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drumers coats att the Common Rydeing in amon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. His surname is recorded as ‘Atkinson’. Simon (15th C.) man whose progeny were bequeathed 12 lambs in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Symonis Atzensoun’. Walter (d.1904) from Sowerby Bridge in Yorkshire, he was Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band 1891–1904, during which period the band won prizes in 29 contests. He arranged ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Teribus’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’ for the band for the 1899 Common Riding. He also acted as Conductor for the Hawick Choral and Orchestral Society. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (formerly the same as Aitchison).

A True History (a-troo-his-tu-ree) n. ‘A True History of several honourable families of the right honourable name of Scot In the Shires of Roxburgh and Selkirk, and others adjacent. Gathered out of Ancient Chronicles, Histories, and Traditions of our Fathers’, a book in doggerel verse, written by Walter Scot of Satchells and first published in 1688. It was reprinted in Edinburgh in 1766 and in Hawick in 1786. Another reprinting, edited by John G. Winning was published in Hawick in 1894 with extensive notes. The book consists of two parts: ‘Wats Bellenden’; and ‘Satchels’ Post’ral’. The writer was ‘Capt. Walter Scot, An old Souldier, and no Scholler. And one that can Write nane, But just the Letters of his Name’. It is said to have been dictated by the author to schoolboys from Hawick when he was about 75. The book was an early influence on Sir Walter Scott. It is one of the earliest known examples of local literature, as well as being a valuable family history, even if not entirely reliable.

Auchmowtie (ach-mow’-ee) n. James (16th/17th C.) son of William, minister in Hawick. In 1609 he was served heir to his father’s lands and rights. This included 12 bolls of grain from the Barony of Cavers, an annual rent of 3 bolls from a piece of land in Hindhousefield, a tenement in Hawick, annual rent of 10 merks ‘de turre lie toure cum cauda lie tail’ in Hawick and rentals from Barnhills, as well as rent from 2 tenements in Jedburgh. The right of rent that he held in Hawick appears to have come from ‘the Toor with the Tail’, presumably meaning lands connected with Drumlanrig Tower and an associated piece of land. Rev. William (d.bef. 1609) Minister of Mains and Strathmain in the period 1568–72. He served as Minister for the Parishes of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton (as well as possibly Hobkirk) from about 1574.

until at least 1591, possibly the end of the century (although whether he served continuously is unknown). For this he received the stipend of £12 15s sterling, plus the Kirklands. He was thus one of the first post-Reformation ministers. He preached at the same time as John Sandilands and William Fowler (and perhaps others) held the position of Parson or Rector in Hawick, and Henry Scott, who was Reader. This may have meant that these others took most of the ‘living’ but may never have set foot in the Parish. Note that following the Reformation there was a shortage of suitable preachers, and so it was common for some of the acceptable pre-Reformation ministers to be assigned to several contiguous parishes. In 1575 he was assisted as Reader in Wilton by John Langlands, in Kirkton by George Douglas, in Hassendean by John Scott and in Cavers by William Slewman. In 1581 he was recorded as minister of Hawick when he was witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. He appears to be mentioned as minister at Duns in 1585. In 1609 his son James was served as his heir of rent from lands in Hawick and Jedburgh (also written ‘Auchinmoutie’).

the Auction Mert (thu-awk-shin-mer', -awk-) n. Hawick’s former auction market, for a long time the oldest in Britain, being established in 1817 by Andrew Oliver. It was particularly known for its lamb sales in August and September. The Mart moved to its final location off the end of Bourtree Place in 1883, and closed in 1992. The site was developed as the largest Safeway Supermarket in the Borders, built in 1993. An open market took place there on Saturdays from 1973 until the early 1990s, when it moved to the Haugh – ‘There is life there in the market When the lambs are up for sale, With the bustle and the beating Which the auctions must entail’ [WFC], ‘So they eyed oor Auction Mart, Where fermers came wi’ horse and cairt’ [IWL].

the Auld Alliance (thu-awld-a-II-ins) n. historical accord between Scotland and France, which was one of the world’s earliest mutual defence treaties. It was first signed in 1295, strengthened in the 14th century and continued until the Reformation. In a specific treaty of 1512 all Scottish citizens became citizens of France and visa versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise in 1560. The practical consequences of the alliance over roughly 3 centuries are extremely complicated (cf. the Auld Enemy).

Auld Alton (awld-awl-tin) n. another name for Alton, a former house, once belonging to the Scots, about 3 miles north of Hawick. The ruins, dated 1675, are still visible near Alton Loch. The form of the house was similar to that of Westgate Hall in Denholm.

Auld Baidie (awld-bä-dee) n. popular name for one of Hawick’s resident poor in the early 18th century. Payments to him are regularly entered in the Session books, and although his full name is not recorded, he is probably James Badie).

the Auld Band of Roxburgh (thu-awld-bawnd-ov-roks-bu-ru) n. bond signed by prominent men in Roxburghshire in 1551. This involved swearing loyalty to their Queen, promising never to side with the English, and to deliver up all law-breakers under their control. It was signed in Jedburgh by most of the local Lairds, including Cranstons, Douglasses, Elliot, Kers, Rutherfords, Scotts and Turnbulls. A further bond was signed in 1573, where the noblemen and landowners renewed their allegiance to the Crown.

Auld Braidlie (awld-brä-dee) n. Old Braidlie, farm in the Hermitage valley, situated up hill, to the north of the farm of (New) Braidlie. The original peel tower of Martin Elliot was somewhere near here.

the Auld Brig (thu-awld-brig) n. Hawick’s only bridge for several hundred years. It was known as ‘Slitrig Brig’, or simply ‘the Brig’ when it was the only substantial bridge in the Town. Said to have been built originally around the 13th century (although more likely from around 1500), it had 2 semi-circular arches, the larger one having a steep slope on the west side, and the smaller arch having a gentler slope on the east side (with some confusing accounts of a third arch). It was intended for foot traffic only, being high and narrow and quite steep on the west side. It was traditionally said that the stone had come from Whitrope quarries, and indeed the stone of the bridge’s ribs and the ashlars of the piers were found to be consistent with stones in the Whitrope Burn. There is a record of repairs to the bridge in 1744 and of the Council petitioning an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs in 1773, after damage from the great flood. During the flood of 1767 2 men were carried off from the Brig and drowned, while another dozen were rescued with the aid of a ladder. A story was long told of how the bridge was erected by a pious lady to help people get to St. Mary’s. This story may have arisen because the main arch contained a sculptured female face under it, at the top, which was said to have been either the lady who built the bridge, or the effigy of a woman who had fallen from it; in the early 1800s the face was still distinct, but was defaced later. The bridge was described in 1839 in the New Statistical Account. It was surveyed by Smith of Dar- nick before its demolition, where it was described as ‘done in a very imperfect manner’. The main arch had a 26 1/2 foot span, and consisted of 3 ribs of freestone with 2 layers of flat slabs on top. The smaller arch had about a 12 foot span, and the central pier of hewn stone was founded on a high part of the rock in the Slitrig. The bridge itself was about 9 feet wide, although the roadway within the parapet was only about 6 1/2 feet wide. Based on it style, the bridge probably dated from around 1500, when pointed Gothic arches were in fashion (although of course that may have replaced an earlier structure). The existing Canon-gate Bridge in Jedburgh is probably quite similar in construction. Hawick’s bridge is certainly indicated on Pont’s map of c.1500. There are at least 8 known sketches or paintings of the bridge, including one from 1776, which is the earliest known image of any part of Hawick. The bridge was used to facilitate access to St. Mary’s and the rest of the western part of Hawick from the eastern side of the Slitrig. The main road once ran up the High Street, across the Auld Brig, down Silver Street and up the Howegate, this changing with the construction of Drumlanrig Brig in 1776. The Brig survived the great Slitrig flood of 1767, although the eastern arch was swept away, and 2 men were carried off from it and drowned, when trying to escape by rope to Silver Street. The Auld Brig was finally demolished in 1851 to make way for the Exchange Buildings, amid much controversy, with a boy called Duncan being the last person to cross. A poetry competition in its honour was held in that year, with a silver medal being offered by the Magistrates. Many of the entries being published in ‘Competing and other poems on the Auld Brig’, and the prize was won by Agnes Douglas; a separate byroad called ‘Auld Brig’, written by C.E.S.P., was also printed at the same time. A Roman coin found during the demolition was donated to the Museum, as well as a trowel found beneath the foundations. Individual stones from the Brig are incorporated into 34 Loan, 48 Loan and the entrance to Old Manse garden. A plaque on the corner opposite the Tower marks the eastern end of the bridge, and was placed to commemorate 100 years from the demolition. The span of the bridge coincides roughly with the position of Tower Mills. The Snuffin used to take place on the bridge, and the present location approximates the old site. The Drums and Fifes also stop there to play ‘Teribus’ on the evening of the Thursday Night Chase, and take the route up Silver Street and down the Kirkwynd (and formerly over the Auld Brig) on their march on the ‘Nicht Afore the Morn’ – ‘Auld Brig ye’ve been a public gude For ocht I ken sin’ m. march on the ‘Nicht Afore the Morn’ in later life.

Auld Broughton (awl-d-brō’-in) n. nickname for a local character from around the mid-19th century, probably Broughton Newell – ‘The Duke o’ the Dean comes staggerin’ doon; O’ the ring i’ the Haugh auld Broughton’s boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin’ siller that’s squandered at Pitch and Toss’ [HI].

the Auld Coach-Hoose (thu-awl-kōch-hoos) n. the Old Coach-House, situated on the ground that was used to build the Corn Exchange in 1865.

the Auld Cross Keys (thu-awl-d-kros-kīz) n. the Old Cross Keys, name once given to the Cross Keys Inn on the High Street, to distinguish it from the inn of the same name at the Sandbed.

Auld Dand (awl-d-dawnd) n. nickname for a poor Hawick resident, who is recorded getting payments from the Kirk Session in the early 1800s. His full name is not given however.

the Auld Drove Road (thu-awl-d-drov-rōd) n. an ancient cattle driving route passing through Hawick, of which there are still traces. It ran south along the Slitrig, parallel to the B6399, and can be seen around Limeskilnhedge and elsewhere. To the north there is a wood between Hassendean and Lilliesleaf still called the Drove Road Plantation. There were other drove roads too in the area, some of which are still visible, including one near West Buccleuch, another through Deanburnhaugh, and the Thieve’s Road near Dod farm (see also drove road).

Auld Dovemount (awl-d-duv-mown’) n. former property on part of Dovemount acquired from George Haliburton in 1810, the name ‘Old Dovemount’ appearing later in the century.

Auld Dovemount Well (awl-d-duv-mown’-wel) n. another name for Dovemount Well.

Auld Drumlaurig (awl-d-drum-lawn-reg) n. nickname used for Sir James Douglas (c.1498–1578) in later life.

Auld Dunnerum (awl-d-du-ne-rum, -rum) n. nickname of James Cavers (also written ‘Auld Dunerum’ and other variants).

Auldearn see Aulderne

aulden (awl-din) adj. olden – ‘I hae taen serious though o’ the dayes o’ auld, the yeers o’aulden times’ [HSR].

aulder (awld-ur) adj. older – ‘hei’s thre days aulder than mei’, ‘Eh, but if ye saw ma faither; hei’s awfu’ little, an’ hei’s fer aulder than mei’ [JT], ‘Here’s to auld Hawick, now grown aulder than ever, Yet the aulder she grows the mair and mair straung’ [JEDM], ‘And so, abune auld Dauvit, We played an aulder Game, There in the airly stillness, Tilt it was time for hame’ [DH], ‘And then as A got aulder The game o golf A tried’ [IWL].

Auldern (awl-durn) n. village near Nairn that was site of a battle in 1645, part of the Civil War, in which at least 2,000 were killed in the Covenanters army by the Royalist army commanded by Montrose. The regiments of Loudon, Lothian and Lawers were attacking the Royalists up a steep bank and in the confusion were apparently attacked by their own cavalry. The Lowland companies, including the Teviotdale Regiment under Lord Lothian, suffered huge losses. Hawick men fought immediately under Douglas of Cavers for the Covenanters. Francis Gladstains, a young Lieutenant and his brother Capt. James Gladstains were slain, along with ‘other hyne sister’s Lieutenant and his brother Capt. James Gladstains were slain, along with ‘other hyne sister’s din, their escape was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade’ [RDW], ‘Ma auldest sister’s washed the clothes, The other yin’s done the flair’ [AY].

Auld Essenside (awl-d-e-sin-sid) n. still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps today, this is a possible former village site, or perhaps just a farmstead. It is located by an old track between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch, just north of Girnside Hill (clearly marked with 2 buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Auld Falnash (awl-fawl-nash) n. nickname for Gideon Scott, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the late 17th and early 18th centuries, who resided at Falnash.

auld-farrant (awl-faw-rin’) adj., poet. old-fashioned – ‘...Auld-farrant een wi’ a sense o’ richt Are the kindly cen o’ oor ain wee Loo’ [FL], ‘...So, sune, may some auld-farrant sap Set my sangs frei, To cheat the deil O’ the saul’s desolation’ [DH].

Auld Fodderlee (awl-d-fo-dur-lee) n. farm in the lower Rule valley, on the east side, near where Fodderlee Sike meets the Rule Water. This was once the main farm of Fodderlee (as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map). Wester Fodderlee lies to the south and Easter Fodderlee to the east (see also Fodderlee).

the Auld Fyre Station (thu-awld-fir-sta-shin) n. the former Fire Station on Commercial Road. It was built in 1913–14, with architect Alex Ingles, and had a distinctive brick tower. Used as part of the town yards since 1971, it was demolished in 2002 following a fire.

Auld Geordie (awld-jor-dee) n. former Hawick resident, known for his abilities as a hunter. He died in the mid-1800s and is immortalised in a poem by Thomas Chapman – ‘Fareweel to Geordie, nae mair shall we see him In Howgate, the Forerawn the Kirkwyn, or Loan; His dougie, puir creature, seems dowie without him, And a’ folk that kent him are wae that he’s gone.

the Auld Glebe (thu-awld-gleeb) n. area in the West End, part of which was divided into allotments in the 1840s. It was formerly part of the glebe lands of Hawick Parish Church. In 1692 ‘the old Gleb land’ of Hawick was leased by William Scott, apothecary, from the Duchess of Buccleuch. In the early 18th century the land was an area between the Loan and what became the New Road, lying to the west of Myreslawgreen. The last remaining piece, also known simply as ‘the Glebe’ was an open green next to the West End Church at the left-hand side of the bottom of Green Terrace. It was used as a drying green and children’s play area until built up in the latter part of the 20th century.

Auld Glebe Parks (awl-d-gleeb-pawrks) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were part of Deanfoot. The ‘four parks or inclosures called Old-glebe parks’ are recorded in 1780.

the Auld Haa (thu-awld-haw) n. name sometimes used for Westgate Haa in Denholm.

Auld Harden (awld-har-din) n. former house on the Harden estate, located about 1 km north of the present Harden House, the area still marked as ‘Old Harden’ on the Ordnance Survey map. It was a 14th century peel tower of which nothing survives.

Auld Hawick (awl-hilk) n. name used to refer to a hypothetical ancient settlement near Hardie’s Hill, considered to be the original location for the town, as described by Robert Wilson and James Wilson. It was also said to have been the place where the townspeople hid when the town was attacked. ‘Hab o Hawick’ apparently visited the location every Sunday, perhaps to commemorate the deeds of his ancestors.

Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame (awld-hikk-naw-bör-duːr-hām) n. song with words and music by Ian Landles, written in a modern Hawick vernacular in 1996 and dedicated to Iain Scott. It is included in the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Ian Landles.

Auld Hawick, My Dreams (awld-hikk-ml-dreamz) n. song written at the request of two local ladies (Jean Armstrong and Jeannette Johnston) who wanted a Hawick song in the form of a duet. The words were written by Robert A. Laidlaw, appearing in the Hawick Express in 1851. The music was written (or was simply an ‘arrangement’ in his words) by Adam L. Ingles, influenced by the German song ‘Die Lorelei’ and the Victorian duet ‘Whispering Hope’. The song is from the mid-1950s.

Auld Hawick Where I was Born (awld-hikk-whār-aw-wax-bōrn) n. song adapted from a poem written by George Davidson. The music is similar to ‘They’re Aye a-Teasin’ me’, arranged by Adam L. Ingles. It was first sung in 1950 at the Callants’ Club Smoker by James Kennedy. Ingles also changed some of the words, and later altered the music to make it simpler, removing the ‘piano symphony’ at the end.

Auld Hill (awld-hill) n. popular name for part of the farm of Denholmhill, near the hind’s house (used in 1863 by James Murray).

Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill (awld-ho-bee-ō-skelf-hil) n. local poet or minstrel of the 18th century, who left us with a version of ‘The Braes of Branxholm’, or ‘Jane the Ranters’ bewitching of Capt. Maitland to her Daughter’, which appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It seems likely that he was Robert Scott, who was tenant farmer in Skelfhill at about this time. Another story is told (in William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821) of a lamb lost from a herd that was taken to Irthing Water to graze, with the man who looked for it perhaps being tricked into eating meat from the beast; the farmer who owned the herd was said to be ‘Auld Hobby’ o’ the Skelfhill, who may have been the same man. William Scott describes him as one of the Scotts from Skelfhill who ‘was famed for his ready wit, and a fine vein for poetry’. Apparently the Duchess of Buccleuch was fond of conversing with him when she came to Hawick for the land-setting. On one occasion he sang her a ‘catch’ about the losses of her tenants during recent stormy winters, with some of her poorest tenants passing the window at the time, on their way to try to sell peats etc., far from home; because of his efforts, she became convinced to let them off with their rent. On another occasion he travelled to Denholm Fair to buy meal for the winter, but could only purchase half a load, and was then met by the inhabitants saying that they would starve if he took it away; taking pity, he decided to sell it to the local people in small measures at cost, leading to him being scolded by his wife when he returned to Skelfhill. He also farmed Doe cleuch, and the herd there brought him a large quantity of sheep skins (corresponding to the entire flock), and asked if he would be rehired, to which Hobbie replied ‘Would you have me give you a wage, for doing nothing’. He was said to abhor formal titles, and when someone called at his door asking for ‘Mr. and Mrs. Scott’ (meaning his son and daughter-in-law) he replied extemporeconaneously ‘There is nought now a days, But Mr. and Mrs. Scott, and Miss Baby; ’Twas a better world when there was nought, But the goodwife an’ auld Hobby’. With this abundance of anecdotes, it seems clear that there really was a character of this name, who farmed at Skelfhill and wrote verse (also written ‘Hobby’).

Auld Hornie (awld-hōr-nee) n. the Devil.

Auld Howpasley (awld-hōw-pas-lee) n. farm-house near the site of the former main residence of Howpasley, situated almost a kilometer up the Howpasley burn from the modern farm. The name is sometimes also used for the site of the 15th century peel tower, which stood just to the east of the steading, but of which nothing now survives. It was burned by the English in 1513. A little to the north-west are the remains of an ancient enclosure, about 15 m by 9 m in size. The track passing here is part of the former road leading over to Teviothead. In 1841 the residents recorded there include Pringles and Rodgers.

Auld Jethart (awld-jēth-ur’) n. Old Jeddart, farm off the A68, about 4 miles south of Jedburgh, supposed to have been the original location for the Burgh. It is believed that mound still known as ‘Chapel Knowe’ was the site of the chapel mentioned in a charter of 1165 being ‘in the forest glade opposite Xernwingslawe (Mervinslaw)’. It was valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 and described as 2 steddings. In 1541 half of the lands were held by Agnes Lee and the other half by Gilbert Lee; additionally William Lee was tenant in ‘Auld Jedburgh-heid’. John Waugh was tenant there in 1567. John Gotterson is listed there among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls (it is ‘Auld Jedburgh’ in 1538 and 1539; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Old Jedburgh’, while Stobie’s 1770 map shows buildings at ‘Old-Jedburghowntown’ and ‘Old-Jedburghstownfoot’).

Auld Joseph (awld-jó-zef) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. His name came from the fact that his coat was patched with scraps of cloth of every colour.

the Auld Kirk (thu-awld-kirk) n. the old church of Hawick Parish, usually referring to St. Mary’s, or in the later 19th century sometimes referring to the disused older Wilton Kirk – ‘When rings the Auld Kirk bell we meet Upon yon gow’ny green!’ [JT].

the Auld Kirk (thu-awld-kir-kur) n., arch. name used for the Established Church of Scotland to distinguish it from other Presbyterian denominations, particularly after the Disruption.

Auld Kirk (awld-kir-kur) n., arch. figurative name for whisky, particularly in the years after the Disruption (when Free Kirk members were more strictly teetotal) – ‘…believing sincerely in a wee drop o’ the guid Auld Kirk’ [JHH].

Auld Kirker (awld-kir-kur) n., arch. someone who stuck with the established Church of Scotland after the Disruption – ‘A staunch Old Kirker, he and his later neighbour in Teviot Crescent, Bailie Fraser, did not leave at the Disruption …’ [JHH].

Auld Kirk Style (awld-kirk-stil) n. name on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the Kirk Stile.

Auld Kirkyaird (awld-kir-yárd) n. Old Kirkyard or Churchyard, next to St. Mary’s Church, and previously part of the church grounds. The area now used as a street was once used for burials, with the surrounding wall and iron gates only being constructed in 1811. It became known as Kirkgate in the latter part of the 19th century, the name being discarded when the western approach to the Church was removed around 1882. It was renamed St. Mary’s Place in 1946.

Auld Laidlaw (awld-läd-law) n. nickname for William Laidlaw later in life.

Auld Licht (awld-light) adj., arch. relating to a particularly conservative group of Secessionists in the Scottish Presbyterian Church. The Burghers split in 1799 into the ‘Auld Licht’ and ‘New Licht’ Burghers, with the Anti-Burghers making a similar split in 1806. Later in the century, when these secessionist groups started to unite again, the ‘Auld Licht’ Burghers and Anti-Burghers largely ended up as part of the Free Church of Scotland – ‘This did not please the ‘auld licht’ section of the congregation’ [JTu] (sometimes written ‘auld licht’).

Auld London (awld-lun-din) n. nickname of Robert Laidlaw.

Auld Mag Lamb (awld-mawg-lawm) n. nickname, presumably for someone who had a stall at markets in Hawick. She could be the same Miss Lamb who sold ‘rock bools’ in Needle Street. Margaret Lamb, born in Wilton, was wife of James, living at 48 High Street in the 1861 census – ‘Sally Macclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Auld Man Fox (awld-maw-n-foks) n. nickname for a local farmer, probably in the 19th century – ‘Kate the Cuddy Wife, Tammy Lauder, Wullie Gotterson, Jockie Eye; Auld man Fox was never madder Than when the callants chased his kye’ [HI].

the Auld Manse (thu-awld-mans) n. the Old Manse associated with St. Mary’s Church, on Old Manse Lane. It dates from 1763 (or perhaps 1765) and is a 2-storey L-plan building, fronting onto an enclosed garden. It housed 7 successive Parish ministers. Alterations were carried out in 1824 and it was enlarged in about 1835. It was sold by the church to William Kedie around 1850, when the new Manse was built on Buccleuch Road. The former Manse occupied the same site prior to 1763, built in 1713 and was 54 feet long, 16 feet high, made of hewn stone, with 5 chimneys and a thatched roof. Tax was paid on 24 windows there in 1748. Before that there was an earlier Manse, which was a long, narrow, relatively low, white-washed, thatched (probably with turf) building, which may have had a brew-house and barn at one end, and a stable and byre at the other.

Auld Manse Lane (awld-mans-län) n. Old Manse Lane, short street near St. Mary’s Church. It was named after the church manse which was there until the middle of the 19th century, having been the parish minister’s residence from 1763–1850. It was previously called Manse Lane, and is also known by some as ‘the Rampart’. There was once a ford over the Slitrig near the foot of this street. Part was demolished in 1970 and made into a small car park. On the dog-leg in the lane there is still a corner-stone on the building, a remnant of the days of wagons. Nos. 2, 4 and 6 are grade C listed buildings (formerly ‘Manse Lane’).
the Auld Man’s Sate

the Auld Man’s Sate (thu-awld-mawnz-sä’) n. seat at the top of the Loan, offering a magnificent view of the town, and a welcome resting place for Hawick’s elder statesmen. This is where the Drums and Fifes begin to lead the Cornet and his supporters back into Town on the Saturday of the Common Riding, after their visit to the Moor – ‘No more sliding down the helter skelter. No more kissing in the Chinese shelter. No, if you’re looking for a place to meet, You’ll find me sitting on the old man’s seat’ [DF].

the Auld Man’s Steps (thu-awld-mawnz-steps) n. name sometimes used for the steps leading from the head of Twirlees Terrace to the Braid Road.

the Auld Mason (thu-awld-mäisin) n. nickname for William Scott from Falnash Mill.

Auld Meldrum (awld-mel-drum) n. nickname for James Turnbull.

Auld Melrose (awld-mel-röz) n. original site of ‘Mailros’ Abbey and St. Cuthbert’s Chapel, on a peninsula formed by a bend in the Tweed, to the west of Bemersyde Hill and Scott’s view. Founded in the 7th century, this was where St. Cuthbert first entered monastic life. The Chapel to St. Cuthbert was built there in the 11th century and continued in use for a couple of centuries after the abbey moved to the site of the modern Melrose. Today there are no signs of the former importance of the site, although there are many sculpted stones at Old Melrose farm.

the Auld Midraw (thu-awld-mid-raw) n. song, written as a poem by James Thomson in the 19th century, with music put to it around 2000 by Scocha – ‘Old age may sigh, though youth may laugh, As cherished idol’s fa’: Farewell, Farewell to hearth and home In the auld Mid Raw’ [JT].

the Auld Mid Raw see the Mid Raw

Auld Mill Toon see Old Mill Town

Auld Nancy (awld-nawn-see) n. nickname sometimes used for Agnes Hewitson, also known as ‘Nancy Whutson’ – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie liits a sang Tae Shauchles, Chinnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

Auld Nick (awld-nik) n. Old Nick, the Devil – ‘...Despite o’ ilka Tory trick, That might do credit to Auld Nick’ [RDW], ‘...The donnert mortals never will learn, That kicking the pricks can only earn, A jaggy road to Auld Nick’ [FL].

Auld Nickie Ben (awld-ni-kee-ben) n., poet. Old Nick, a name apparently invented by Burns for the sake of the metre – ‘The wund gangs reesh-lin’ throwe the bents Cryin’ ‘I dinna ken ...I dinna ken ...Unless it’s Auld Nickie Ben’’ [DH].

Auld Northhoose (awld-north-hoos) n. cluster of buildings on the high road between Northhouse and Priesthaugh. This was on the old route from Hawick to Teviothead and the south. It is now often on the route for the Mosspaul ride-out. Little remains of the once thriving weaving village that stood here. There were once many houses in the community, one estimate stating 15 and another claiming as many as 40. Blankets and shepherd’s plaid were woven there up until about 1800. There was a teacher appointed to teach the children there in the 18th century. A decision was taken by the Synod of Merse and Teviotdale in 1669 to build a church there for the people of the higher parts of the neighbouring parishes (although this does not appear to have happened). It seems that there was also an ancient chapel in the area. There are now no signs of the church, although the ancient burial-ground, in front of the steading by the burnside, has turned up several rough-hewn gravestones and it is said there were burials there up until 1792. It is said that the population thinned out after an epidemic in the early 1800s (see also Northhouse).

Auld Orchard (awld-or-churd) n. Old Orchard, the farm at the end of the Braid Road, with a distinction made between the old and new parts. The ‘new’ part is the Georgian Mansion, dating from about 1800. The ‘old’ parts are some restored early 19th-century cottages, which are harled and lime-washed. Presumably they are on the site of older buildings.

the Auld Pairish Kirk (thu-awld-pä-reesh-kirk, -paw-) n. Hawick Old Parish Church, located on Buccleuch Street just outside the Burgh boundary, built in 1844 as a gift of the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, because St. Mary’s had become too small to serve the growing congregation. Its first minister was Rev. John MacRae. The building was designed by William Burn and constructed by Andrew R. Michie out of local whinstone, with the adjoining Parish Halls built in 1885 in the same style (and the old Burgh boundary running between them). Henry Scott Riddell laid the foundation stone. The installation of the organ chamber and organ, along with substantial redecoration were carried out in 1893–97, to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1896 3 stained glass windows were placed in the church, designed by Ballantine & Gardiner and in memory of Gilbert Davidson and his family. The church became badly affected by dry rot and was closed in 1987, with a final service in 1989, followed by its demolition in 1992.
last minister was David L. Wright. The congregation merged with St. George’s (now Teviot Kirk), and St. Mary’s again became the Parish Church of Hawick. The adjacent Parish Halls still survive, some of the stone from the church was reused in the development of Lovel Court, and the wood from some pews was recycled for use in renovating Aikwood Tower. New housing was built there in 2001/2, named after ex-Provost Frank Scott, and incorporates the bell, which had originally hung in an italianate belfry. There is an existing communion token from the church bearing the date 1843.

Auld Plis Wud (awld-plis-wud) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Old Place Wood’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Auld Race Course Park (awld-rās-kōrs-pawrk) n. name for the field on Hawick Common to the east of Pilmuir farm, where races used to take place at the Common Riding. Parts of the former racecourse (a long straight with loops at each end, extending into the neighbouring fields) can still be made out.

Auld Reekie (awld-ree-kee) n. Edinburgh, or someone from Edinburgh – ‘A fine hervest mornin’ saw me take the coach frae Auld Reekie and three ‘oors or so later brought us into kem’d landmarks’ [JEDM], ‘An’ if ye taste auld Reekie’s ale, Whan ye dislade your boxes, Nae doubt your worship’s winna fail To ca’ at Lucky Knox’s’ [JR], ‘The cart wheels squeaked and clattered On Auld Reekie’s cobbles stanes, As through the smoggy saw me take the coach frae Auld Reekie and someone from Edinburgh { `A ne hervest mon-

the Auld Refrain (thu-awld-ree-frān) n. referring to the chorus of ‘Teribus’ or to the Old Song, i.e. the earlier version of ‘Teribus’, sung on the Friday morning – ‘Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT].

auld sair (awld-sār) n., arch. an old score, grudge – ‘The Border fairs, at a former period, were often the ‘Meets’ at which ‘auld sairs’ were settled’ [WaD], ‘Diina rake up auld sairs’ [ECS].

the Auld Sang (thu-awld-sawng) n. the Old Song, written around 1800, perhaps a little earlier, by Arthur Balbirnie; it thus only pre-dates ‘Teribus’ by about 20 years. However, there was probably an even earlier version, only the chorus of which survives. It also has a different chorus, ‘Up wi’ Hawick, its rights and common, Up wi’ a’ the Border bowmen! Teribus and Tiriodin, We are up to guard the common’; this again suggests that the tune was old, but the desire to put words to it probably came from about this time. The song consists of 13 verses. Unlike Hogg’s song, which focuses on the events at Hornshole, Balbirnie’s words describe the contemporary riding of the Common. The 8th verse, about Rodgie of the Green Kirk, must have been added later. The 2nd last verse also gives a dig at the landowners who had profited at Hawick’s expense after the Division of the Common. When consulting a map of the Common in 1900, the route of the Riding of the Marches was found to conform closely with the words of Balbirnie’s song. It is Sung annually from the steps of the Tower on the Friday morning following the Cornet’s breakfast, before the riders mount, with the Song Singer and 4 Principals taking it in turns to sing the verses. Until 1921 it was sung from an open window of a room in the Tower. In its early days it was sung from elsewhere, e.g. the Minister in 1839 writes that it was ‘sung by the cornet and his attendants from the roof of an old tenement belonging to the town, and loudly and enthusiastically joined in by the surrounding multitude’. It was filmed at least as early as 1929.

Auldshiels (awld-sheelz) n. former farm in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 in ‘Quarterium de Ludne’. In 1632 this farm and ‘Rouraltonholme’ were possessed by John Scott. From Blaeu’s c.1654 map it appears to be east of Greenshiels and north of Woolhope (it is ‘Aldscheliss’ in c.1376, ‘Aldsheilis’ in 1632 and ‘Oldshaels’ in c.1654).

Auld Stoulsie (awld-stooz-lee) n. name for William Oliver.

Auld Springkell (awld-sprīng-kel) n. nickname for a carrier for the nurseries in the early 19th century, whose real name was Turnbull. The nickname derived from his habit, when asked where he was bound on the road, of replying ‘As fer as Springkell’ (an area in Dumfriesshire). It was also written as ‘Sprinkle’. His son James was also written as ‘Sprinkle’. His son James was known as ‘Jimmie Springkie’, and he also had a daughter, Margaret. He may be the Robert Turnbull, who married Mary Laidlaw and was later a shoemaker on the Loan.

the Auld Toll-bar (thu-awld-tōl-bawr) n. popular name for the former toll-bar at Crumhaugh (now Parkdail), or later for the toll-bar facing the Old Parish Church. There was a white bar for closing the road, and the toll-house there was immediately to the west of Coble Entry.

Avenel (aw-vi-nel) n. Gervase (d.1219) Lord of Eskdale, son of Robert. In about 1185 there is a charter of confirmation by William the Lion of lands in Eskdale he and his father had granted to Melrose Abbey. In about 1190 he was witness to a charter for the lands at Hownam that were renewed to Melrose Abbey. At about the same time he is recorded as Constable of Roxburgh (presumably meaning he had responsibility at Roxburgh Castle). He witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey in 1208. He also witnessed a charter for King William granting the church of Roxburgh and another associated with Rutherglen. In 1214 he confirmed to Melrose Abbey grants of his father Robert for lands in Eskdale. His wife Sibilla, son and heir Gervase, and other son Robert, are also mentioned. Note that his wife and mother had the same name, but the surnames of neither of them are known. In 1215 he served as a prisoner for Scottish King in England. He was succeeded by a 3rd son, Roger and William was a 4th son. He was buried at Melrose. Robert (d.1184/5) Lord of Eskdale. He gained lands in upper and lower Eskdale from David I and was a benefactor to Melrose Abbey (giving them ‘Tumloher’ and ‘Weidkerroc’), where he died. He served as Justiciar of Lothian around 1165. He witnessed a renewal of the gift of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. He also witnessed the confirmation of the lands gifted to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1160s. He witnessed a royal charter for the lands of Whitslade around 1170, signed at Traquair. About the same time he witnessed a gift of lands at Hownam. He was witness to charters for Legerwood made by Walter Fitz Alan, in which his son Gervase is also recorded. In about 1185 there is a charter of confirmation by William the Lion of lands in Eskdale he and his heir Gervase had granted to Melrose Abbey. Shortly before his death he entered Melrose Abbey (presumably terminally ill) and there is a renunciation of the 4 merks that the monks of Melrose gave for the lands of Eskdale, these to be given as ‘pittances’ 4 times a year: on the day he came to the convent; the day he died; the 6th day from Nativity for his wife’s soul; and on the day of the death of his son Gervase. He married Sybil (or ‘Sibilla’) and was succeeded by his son Gervase. He also had a son Robert (who was a clerk) and an unnamed daughter, who was mistress of William the Lion. His grandson Roger died in 1243, with the estate passing to the Grahams through marriage. His seal showed an armed knight on horseback. Roger (d.1243) son of Gervase and younger brother of Gervase, who must have died earlier. He succeeded his father in 1219 and was Lord of Eskdale. He confirmed his father and grandfather’s grants of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed a grant of Walter Fitz Alan (the Steward) in the period 1212–37 and a document for Alexander II on about 1235. In about 1220 he witnessed a charter for Robert de Brus. Along with many other Scots nobles he signed a pledge to keep the peace with the English around the time of his death. He had a daughter who married Henry Graham of Dalkeith, and through her the family estates and titles passed to the Grahams. He is buried at Melrose Abbey (also written ‘Avennell’).

the Avenue (thəu-aw-vi-new) n. the drive leading to Wilton Lodge from the gates at the end of Victoria Road, being a tree-lined avenue along the Teviot. It was created about 1810 by James Anderson of Wilton Lodge, with the cutting of the bank supervised by James Elliot, the Wilton schoolmaster. It is clearly marked on Wood’s 1824 map. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the mounted procession rides through the gates and along the riverside, pausing near the Laurie Bridge, where the Principals stop to sing Teribus. The name is also given to a track through the woods at the top of the Nip Knowes, which horses take after the Chase.

Ayton (ätin) n. Borders town just off the main road near Eyemouth, which once had the A1 going straight through it. The nearby red sandstone Ayton Castle was often held by the English, burned down in 1834 and was rebuilt in 1851 as a Scots Baronial fantasy for William Mitchell Innes, Governor of the Bank of Scotland; it also has a beehive-shaped dovecote. The town was the site of the signing of a truce between James IV and the Earl of Surrey in 1497. Ayton also has the ruins of the 12th century St. Dionysius’ Church. Population (1991) 569. ‘The History of Ayton – A Berwickshire Village’ was published in 2018 (named after the Eye Water).

Aytoun (ätin) n. William Edmonstone (1813–65) poet and Professor at Edinburgh University, he wrote ‘From Edinburgh After Flodden’. Much of his work, such as the ‘Firmilian’ hoax, parodied bombastic poetry styles of his day.

The game as played in Duns was described as early as 1834. There is a suggestion that the Alewater and Ettrick people played a game around Woll Rig in the 18th century. The game in Galashiel was played up to about the middle of the 19th century, between the residents from Galashieals and Melrose parishes, but was stopped when the ground at Hollybush farm was drained and enclosed. There were formerly also games played in Lilliesleaf, Melrose and St. Boswells (note that the social event ‘ball’ is always pronounced bawl).
the Back Braes

the Baa-baas (thu-baw-bawz) n. nickname for ‘the Barbarians’, a rugby team traditionally selected from among the 4 nations (more recently also from further afield), often to play touring sides.

the Back Dam (thu-bawk-dawn) n. former name sometimes used for the Slitrig Dam, i.e. the old mill lade running along the south of the Slitrig alongside Backdamgate and across the Tower Knowe to the old site of Hawick Mill (‘back’ presumably meaning relative to the High Street etc.).

Backdamgate (bawk-dawn-gā) n. this area was first recorded in 1757 as the way to the Back Dam from Hawick Mill, hence the name. It was cleared of a garage, shops and old houses in the 1960’s and rebuilt into housing for elderly residents. The ‘Staney Brae’ is part of what was formerly referred to as Backdamgate, and essentially the same road was also once called the Back Vennel. This is where the horses and riders leave from at the Ride-outs, with muster spilling over into Backdamgate (often also 2 words, ‘Back Damgate’, occasionally ‘Back Dam gate’ and sometimes just ‘Dam Gate’; it is ‘Dam Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map and ‘Back Damgate’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Back Raw (thu-bawk-raw) n. | row of pended tenements that occupied the north side (i.e. right-hand side on the way up) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. A blacksmiths shop here was the location of secret labour organisation meetings in the early 1800s. There were at least a couple of pubs there from early times too, where the Stag’s Head and Holland House are now. A photograph of the Common Riding procession of 1895 shows it before part was demolished to provide an opening to the properties behind – ‘There’s auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw, Hei’s o’en shod ma clutes’ [JSB].

backside foremost (hauk-syd-för-moést) n. | reversed, the wrong way round (this appears to be Scottish; also ‘backside foremaist’).

Back Sike (bawk-sik) n. | small stream that joins Borthwickbrae Burn just north of Milsginton farmhouse.

Back Sike (bawk-sik) n. | small stream in the high land to the west of the Liddel valley, to the east of Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell. It runs into the Hartsgarth Burn. A sheepfold on the south bank has a carved inscription that reads ‘1820 Robert Elliot Tenant’.

Baden-Powell (bá-din-pow-ul) n. Lord Robert Stephenson Smith (1857–1941) soldier and founder of the Scout Movement. Famed for his part in the siege of Mafaking during the Boer War and for organising the South African constabulary. He formed the Boy Scouts in 1908 and with his sister Agnes the Girl Guides in 1910. Thereafter he devoted his life to the scouting movement, writing many books and travelling the world. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1910 during a visit when he inspected the patrols of Border towns amassed in Wilton Lodge Park. A short film clip survives of his visit to the Town. A specially illuminated Burgess ticket and silver-mounted casket were made for the occasion.

badge (bawj) n., arch. a badge given out indicating official status as one of the poor within a parish, allowing them to beg – ‘...might meet after sermon to hear ye list of ye poor read over, anent the badges to be given to the poor who are able to go through ye parish’ [PR1725]. In Hawick in 1725 there were 24 such people in the Burgh and 21 in the country part. The badge was probably pewter, bearing the name of the parish and perhaps a ‘P’, and worn on the breast.

badger-baitin (bawl-jur-bá-in) n. a sport involving captured badgers being fought to the death with dogs, usually with bets being placed. It is now almost universally regarded as needlessly cruel, although was certainly practised locally. Apparently on New Year’s Day in the early 19th century a badger would be released into a brock at the Loanhead, to be dragged out by dogs.

Badie (bá-dee) n. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1649 he was one of 2 men chosen as collectors of the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water. His wife was Margaret ‘Quarie’. Their son David was born in 1644. It seems likely he was father of James and also of Janet, who married William Lamb. James (17th/18th C.) married to Janet Scott. Their children included: David (b.1671); William (b.1673); Janet (b.1674); James (b.1677); John (b.1681); Bessie (b.1684); Isabel (b.1687); and Jean (b.1690). He is probably the ‘James Baudy’ recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is probably the James, weaver, who witnessed the baptism of David, son of James in 1701 (probably his son and grandson). He is recorded in 1701 when he was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to collect the ‘stent’ from ‘west the water’. This suggests he lived in the West-end. He may also be the ‘Auld Badie’ referred to in later Burgh records. He is probably the James, resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is also probably the James recorded in 1704 when someone was fined for passing him counterfeit silver coins. James (17th/18th C.) probably son of James and Janet Scott, born in Hawick Parish in 1677. He married Elizabeth Simpson in Hawick in 1700, and their son David was born in 1701. Note that either he or another James was a weaver who married Mary Wright in Hawick in 1702. He may also have been father of William (b.1704), Elizabeth (b.1706), Janet (b.1710), John (b.1710) and Jean (b.1713), with no mother’s names listed. James (17th/18th C.) weaver of Hawick Parish, possibly the same as James, who married Elizabeth Simpson. In 1702 he married Mary Wright in Hawick Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1707), and possibly David (b.1703, although with the mother’s name listed as ‘Christian Wright’). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of James born in 1681. He married Agnes Richardson in Hawick in 1706. His children included: Elspeth (b.1707); and John (b.1709) (the name may be a variant of Beattie, but appears to be written consistently as a separate surname in the 17th and 18th centuries).

bag (bawg) v., arch. to bulge out, to swell or hang down like a bag.
bageet see baggit
bagger (baw-gur) n. occupation in the knitwear industry, someone who puts the finished garments into bags.
Bagget (baw-ge’) n. former designation for a branch of the Elliots. It occurs in a 1516 ‘respite’ in the Register of the Privy Seal for William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale, plus others of their kin ‘of Elwald in Bagget’. ‘Baggat’ was another name for Bygate in Liddesdale.
baggie (baw-ggee) n. a large minnow – ‘that auld Champagne bottle’ll make a grand baggie-bottle’, ‘…where A coo sei sic a gliff as A gien the baggies an preenheeds whan A shoot ma dish inti the waeter’ [ECS], ‘Simmer mornins off oo set Catchin baggies in a net …’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘baggy’; so-called because of large abdomen).
baggie-net (baw-gee-ne’) n. a net on the end of a stick, used for catching minnows.
baggit (baw-ggee’, -gi’) adj. swollen, over-full, usually referring to food – ‘A’m fair baggit’, ‘Though feelin gey bageet, hei got umsel a haggis supper … ti wash the pies doon’ [IWL], fat, corpulent – ‘Jock’s a baggit boody’ [GW], pregnant – ‘Thro’ dub or syke she never faggit, But ran wi’ speed, Tho’ she bout fu’ o’ whalps was baggit, But now she’s dead’ [JR] (also written ‘bageet’).
baggit (baw-gi’) n., arch. an insignificant, little person, a feeble sheep, a contemptuous term for a child.
baggy see baggie
Bagimond’s Roll (baw-gi-mondz-ról) n. taxation roll drawn up by ‘Master Boiamund’ in 1275 when sent by the Pope to impose a tax of one tenth of all church revenues throughout Scotland, for use in the Holy Land. The original does not exist, although the information has survived through copies. The insistence that the tax be levied according to the true worth of each benefice meant that the roll contains valuable historical data relating to the state of the nation. This includes a listing for benefices ‘In Decanatu de Tevidual: Rectoria de Haweik, Rectoria de Wiltoun, Rectoria de Minto, Rectoria de Aboetrowll, Vicaria de Cassiltoun, Rectoria cum vicaria de Ediditoun, Rectoria de Badrowll’ of which Hawick was by far the most valuable at £16 and Wilton at £5 6s 8d. ‘Rectoria de Askirk’ and ‘Rectoria de Ankrum’ were listed separately, since they belonged more directly to the Archbishop (also spelled ‘Bagimont’ and other variants).
bags (bawgz) n., pl., arch. the abdomen, guts, stomach.
bailiary (bā-lee-u-ree) n., pl. the office of a bailie – ‘…it is actit, statut, and ordainit, that no personne sall bruick the office of bailiarie longer nor the space of twa years together …’ [BR1648], ‘…there was ane vacancy and interregnum of the office of bailiary until ane new election …’ [BR1697], ‘…and from whom he allenarly deryves his power and office of Baylyearie, or else to the most honourbale Lords of her Majesty’s Secret Counsell …’ [BR1706] (there are spelling variants).
bailie (bā-lee) n. a magistrate, municipal officer in Scotland similar to an English Alderman. In Hawick there were formerly 2 standing Bailies, with all those who had once served referred to thereafter as ‘Bailie so-and-so’. The word is now used as an honorary title for senior councillors. Formerly the word was also used to describe the person appointed by a Baron (or superior, including the Crown) to carry out legal functions on their behalf, such as the giving of sasine (from Old French; formerly baylyea; formerly spelled ‘bailly’ etc., and still often incorrectly spelled ‘baillie’ today; see also the Bailies).

Bailie Court (bā-lee-kōr’) n. the magistrates’ court in former times – ‘He’s been afore the Bailie Court, And fined for throwin’ stanes; My pouch has suffered for his sport In breakin’ window panes’ [JT] (also the Police Court).

Bailie Depute (bā-lee-de-pew’) n. deputy to a town Magistrate, also meaning the official appointed by the local Laird to represent him in the town, or perhaps his deputy. The title was probably synonymous with ‘Baron Depute’. In the 17th and 18th centuries the Duke of Buccleuch’s Bailie-Depute resided in the Tower, e.g. George Scott of Bailie Hill

Boonraw held this office in 1668 and Walter Elliot in at least 1709–18. Walter Scott was recorded as ‘late Bailie Depute’ in 1743 (see also Baron Depute).

Bailie Hill (bā-lee-hill) n. the highest point to the west beyond the race course at the Mair. The enclosure there is known as ‘Bailie’s Hill’. For a few decades after the Division of the Common the reading of the Burgess Roll was moved to near here – ‘... Down the Bailie-hill we’ll scamp[er]’ [AB] (also written ‘Bailiehill’ and ‘Bailie’s Hill’).

Bailielee (bā-lee Lee) n. former farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley, roughly between Kirkhope and Ettrickbridge, on the Bailie Burn. In 1502 it was Crown property and referred to as the eastern part of Gildhouse ‘vocati Balyelee’. In 1510 it was leased by Peter Turnbull. Andrew Ker of Greenhead tenanted the lands in 1541, paying £24. Gavin Elliott of Stobs held the steading in the 1570s and was sometimes referred to as ‘of Bailielee’. It is ‘Bailieleyis’ listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. It was ‘Bailieley (alias Eastfield) when purchased by Gilbert Elliott from Gilbert Ker of Lochtour in 1609. It was listed among the lands held by the Eliotts of Stobs in 1657 and sold to Patrick Murray, Burgess of Edinburgh, in 1661. It was part of the estate of Scott of Harden until about 1746 – ‘Hir face a smile perpetual wore, Hir teeth were ivorie, Hir lips the little purple floure That blumes on Bailielee’ [ES] (it is ‘Baileyey’ in 1573 and may be ‘Baillielaw’ in 1707; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘N, Baillyly’).

Bailie o Regality (bā-lee-o ree-gaw-lī’-ee) n., arch. officer appointed by the Baron to have jurisdiction within a town, also known as the Baron Depute. Walter Scott of Harwood held this position in 1669 for the Douglasses of Drumlanrig and shortly after 1675 the office was filled by an agent of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1686 Walter Scott of Alton was appointed by King James. This was on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch losing her office of heritable Bailie for not taking ‘the test’; it may be that before this the person acting as Bailie was known as the ‘Baron-depute’. It is unclear whether there was ever a Regality Court held (in distinction to the earlier Baron Court). It is also unclear to what extent ‘Baron Bailie’ and ‘Baron-depute’ were synonymous with ‘Bailie of Regality’. The appointment ended in 1747, when heritable jurisdictions were abolished – ‘... if he could not refrain from drinking to excess, he would be given up to ye bailie of regalite of this place, to censure him condignly ...’ [PR1717] (see also Regal Bailie and Baron Depute).

bailierie (bāl-yū-ree) n., arch. the office or jurisdiction of a bailie – ‘...did all unanimously, una voce, act and ordain Walter Chisholme (Laird of Stirks) to give over his office of bailizarie ...’ [BR1660], ‘We by thir presents binds and oblieess us and our successors in the office of baileyarie and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke successive in tymie coming heirafter to make dew and lawfull payment to the said schoolemaster’ [HAST1902].

the Bailies ( thu-bā-leez) n., pl. Hawick’s 2 Magistrates from early times until the end of the ‘Eternal Council’ in 1861, the number increasing to 4 Magistrates thereafter. The earliest records of election show that the Hawick Bailies were selected by the inhabitants gathered in the church and churchyard, sometime after Michaelmas (September 29th). Thus each new Bailie was elected by the inhabitants. For the riding of the Burgh, the Bailies chosen were for the use of the Burgh, and the first new Bailie usually serve for 2 years, first as Junior and then as Senior Bailie. In 1648 it was decreed that no person should serve as Bailie for more than 2 years concurrently, and then should wait at least a year before being on the short-list again. Over time there were complaints about abuse of office and how the business of the Town was sometimes decided in the inn of one of the Bailies. In 1670 it was resolved by the Council that the fines collected by the Bailies were for the use of the Burgh, but in 1673 it was switched back to having the fines belong to the Bailies ‘conform to the ancient pratique of this burgh since the first ryse and beginning of magistracry within the same.’ In 1673 the Bailies were indicted, along with other Hawick residents, for the riot at the riding of the fair. In 1697 there was a dispute over who had jurisdiction in the Town after one of the offices of Bailie became vacant. In 1718 there was a complaint that someone who had been elected Bailie was ‘lying at the horn’. There were clearly disputes over the election process, with complaints in 1737 that many of the votes were from servants or minors; in 1748 the Council banned the practice of ‘peuthering’ (or canvassing), allowed it again in 1756, but once more banned it in 1765. In 1749 the Council resolved that no Bailie would henceforth be allowed to sell liquor during his time in office. In 1750 someone was elected who refused to serve. In 1771 it was resolved that only the heads of households could vote and no candidate would be admitted without the consent of the Council. In 1778 (after the Division of the Common) a large group of Burgessess objected to the way that the Bailies were elected. This legal action resulted in a declaration from the Court of Session in 1781, laying out the rules for the election of the Bailies on the 2nd Friday in October, from a ‘leet’ of 6 names drawn up the Wednesday before, with no Bailie being allowed to serve for more than 2 years consecutively. This process of election continued through the early 19th century. The election was usually held from 11 a.m. until about 3 p.m., and was followed by a celebratory dinner. The front row of the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk was reserved for the Bailies, from at least 1684 (when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built), this custom continuing in the Old Parish Kirk until into the 20th. There are records of a dispute between the standing Bailies and sons of former Bailies over rights to this seating in 1708. There was also a dispute with the representative of the Patron (i.e. Scott of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain), leading to the unauthorised removal of the Bailies’ seat in 1734 and its subsequent rebuilding. In 1808 the Council resolved that the Bailie in his 2nd year of office was the Senior Bailie and should preside at Council meetings. In the days before there was a Provost, the 2 Bailies made the executive decisions in the town. They also served a judicial function, but it was not until about the 1830s that the office of Magistrate was coupled with that of Justice of the Peace. The number of bailies rose to 4 by the late 19th century, by which time they were often also J.Ps. Nowadays the title is purely honorary, and the Bailies are selected by the Provost’s Council to serve the ceremonial role at the Common Riding. However, they still wear the traditional red velvet and ermine robes; there are 4 Bailies in robes, along with the Provost and the Acting Father (as Acting Senior Magistrate). Note that in the 18th century ex-Bailies were often referred to as ‘Bailie’ in public records, making it a little unclear who was the standing Bailie (sometimes ‘late Bailie’ was used, the context usually making it clear whether or not they were alive!). Simon Routledge, who was an early Burgess of Hawick, is recorded as Bailie in a document of 1448/9; he was presumably Bailie of Hawick. In 1452 the sasine for the Barony of Hawick was signed by ‘Roberto Scot, Thoma de Blar, prefate wille de Hawik balliuis’; hence these 2 men were probably Bailies of Hawick at that time. The first definitive recorded Bailie was Adam Cessford in 1558, followed by Robert Scott in 1569. James Burne and David Scott were the Bailies in 1592, Robert Scott of Alton in 1603, Robert Scott of Alton and Robert Scott ‘Marion’s Hob’ in 1612, Robert Scott and Adam Scott in late 1612, Robert Scott (probably a different one) in 1614, Robert Scott of Alton in 1619, Robert Scott and James Burne in 1622, Robert Scott ‘Marion’s Hob’ in 1626, Robert Scott (again!) in 1627 and James Gledstains also within the 1620s. The following is a (probably incomplete) list per decade: (1630s) Robert (or possibly George) Deans, Robert Scott, Robert Scott of Goldielands, William Scott ‘at the Cross’; (1640s) . . .; (1760s) John Haig – ‘Forth the Bailies come to meet us, Wives and maidens out to greet us’ [RSC].

the Bailies’ Bible (thu-bá-leez-bi-bul) n. formerly a bible explicitly for the use of the Bailies of Hawick. It was purchased by Bailie Howison in 1734. In 1758 there is a record of money paid for ‘binding, covering, and putting Psalms in the bailies’ Bible, and postage’.

Bailie’s Hill (bá-leez-hil) n. name of the field to the north of the racecourse containing Bailie Hill.

Bailie’s Knowe (bá-leez-now) n. an old name for the Nipknowes, perhaps because the Senior Bailie would carry the Flag at the Chase there (also sometimes plural).

the Bailies’ Loft (thu-bá-leez-loft) n. former name for the balcony seating on the western side of St. Mary’s Kirk. This is where the Bailies would sit in the Kirk. The name was used for a smaller gallery in the pre-1763 church, this being distinct from the Wester and Parkhill Lofts, and was constructed in 1683, the first gallery to be built. The joiner was James Thorbrand, the cost was 200 merks Scots and it was built specifically for the use of the Bailies and Council, through an agreement with the Presbytery of Jedburgh. The name may also have been used for a specific bench seat in the Middle (or Steeple) Loft. It was ordained in 1735 that this front seat was for ‘the Bailies for the time, old Bailies, clerk, and thesaurer’, with no one allowed to sit there until these people first took their seats. In the new (late 18th C.) church it was also known as ‘the Western Loft’ or ‘the Weaver’s Loft’, since the websters and merchants had also helped pay for it, and had seating rights.

bailieship (ba-le-ship) n., arch. the office of bailie – ‘...that in caice he be guyltie of any mall adninistration ...during his bayleyeship ...’[BR1706].

bailif (ba-leef) n., arch. a bailie in a town, a baron’s representative – ‘Paid to Biline Howison for the Bible for the Bilifes in the church ... 2 8 0’[BR1734] (various spellings; balle is more common).

Bailleul (baw-yool) n. Hawick’s twin town in France since 1973, selected because it is a border town (with Belgium) and of a similar size. Various twinning events have happened over the years, including school trips and exchanges. The Hawick Pipe Band regularly plays in the annual Bailleul Mardi Gras parade. Note there are about 10 other towns of the same name elsewhere in France. One of them, Bailleul-en-Vimeu in Picardy was the ancestral home of the Bailids, who owned Cavers in the 13th and 14th centuries and produced 2 Scottish Kings.

Bailleul Grove (baw-yool-gröv) n. street behind Leaburn Drive. Building began in 1986 and many houses were built around 2001. This is only the second ‘Grove’ in Hawick.

Baillie (ba-lee) n. Alexander (b.1835) born in Gorebridge, he moved to Wilton. There in 1857 he married Ann, daughter of Martin Pott. Their children included: Mary; John (b.1858); Martin (b.1860); Alexander Simpson (b.1832); William (b.1864); James Little (b.1866); Agnes Simpson (b.1868); Robert (b.1869); Margaret Ann (b.1871); and David (b.1874). The first 3 children were born in Wilton and the rest in Selkirk. He worked as a joiner at Bowhill. Dame Isabella ‘Isobel’ or ‘Bella’ (1895–1983) born in Hawick at what is now No. 22 Princes Street. She was youngest child of master baker Martin Pott and Isabella Douglas. Her father had been born in Hawick, son of Alexander and Ann Pott. The family moved to Newcastle when she was 5. However, she can be seen hiding behind her mother’s skirts in an 1898 photograph of her father’s shop at what was then 8 Wilton Place. Showing early talent for singing, she won a scholarship to Manchester High School, where her family then settled. She worked as an assistant in a Manchester music shop and then in the Town Hall there. She became a singer and outstanding interpreter of oratorio, in particular Handel’s ‘Messiah’, which she performed over 1,000 times, the first time at age 15. She first appeared in London in 1921 and studied in Milan 1925–26. She was also well known for renditions of Haydn’s ‘Creation’, Mendelssohn’s ‘Elijah’, and Brahms’s ‘German Requiem’. She sung British music too, and was the first singer of Vaughan Williams’s ‘Serenade to Music’. In 1933 she was also the first British singer to perform at the Hollywood Bowl. She taught at the Royal College of Music 1955–1957 and 1961–1964, at Cornell University 1960–61 and at the Manchester School of Music from 1970. She became a Commander of the Order of the British Empire in 1951 and was made a Dame Commander in 1978. Her autobiography, ‘Never Sing Louder Than Lovely’ was published in 1982 and ends with the words ‘It has been a wonderful life and I would do it all again’. She married Henry Leonard Wrigley in 1917 and they had one daughter, Nancy. Her husband died in 1957 and afterwards she moved to London, where she died. A plaque at 13 Princes Street was unveiled in 2004. John (18th C.) postillion (i.e. coachman) at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Martin Pott (19th/20th C.) baker in Hawick. His shop was at 8 Wilton Place (on the north side of the modern Prices Street), and called Teviotdale Bakery. It can be seen in a photograph of 1898, which includes his wife and daughter, Isobel, later famed as a singer.

water had remission for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and his brother John at ‘Kelsop’. Rodman also had remission for stealing cattle from Alexander in ‘Tullus’, who may have been another brother. He is also recorded as Adam ‘Barnsfader’ in 1502 when several men had a remission for the murder of him along with Robert Brig, as well as stealing 200 sheep, 29 cows and goods from them. He was tenant at ‘Kelshope’ (possibly Kershope) with John ‘Barn-ifsader’. Robert Brig was also killed by the group of Olivers from Lustruther, Jedburgh and Strynds and a Waugh from Mervinslaw. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Adam. The pair are recorded in 1493 as farmers at ‘Kelshope’ whose sheep were stolen by Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He and Robert (presumably a son or brother) are also mentioned in 1502 when Robert Oliver in Strange had remission for stealing 33 cows, 200 sheep, 4 horses and other goods from them at ‘Kelsope’.

He and John were also recorded in 1502 when a group of 3 Olivers and a Waugh had remission for stealing livestock and foods from them at ‘kelshop’. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His surname is recorded as ‘Barnisfather’. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘Barnefather’ was one of the complainants against Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons raiding lands across the Border (also written ‘Barnisfader’ and variants).

bak and fore (bawk-awnd-fòr) adv., arch. back and front, the whole of a property – ‘. . . aie ten-ement of land bak and fore with the yaird thairof liand in Hawik’ [SPB1579].

bake (bàk) v., arch. to knead dough or other substance by hand, to shape peats by hand and lay them out to dry – ‘These are to give advertisement to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they have liberty and privilege to bake cakes in all the Mosses . . . ’ [BR1743], ‘Paid 2 men and the officers for searching Winnington Moss, for baking cakes, and breaking and throwing the same in the moss’ [BR1755], n., arch. peat that has been kneaded by hand and laid out to dry for use as fuel – ‘The said day, Marion Robison, spous to George Scott, pedder, was outlawed and amerciatt . . . for baking of Bakes in the Common mosses . . . ’ [BR1694], ‘. . . the inhabitants of Hawick went out to the Black Grain of Winnington Moss, where the bakes were made, where they broke and champped the bakes and throw many of them into the hole again’ [CkLi1767] (this specific meaning appears to be quite local).

baken (bàk, ba-kin) pp., arch. baked – ‘Barley scones, baken of that season’s meal, were eaten on St. Boswell’s Fair day’ [RM], ‘Howt! A’m fair staad o laif, eend on. Let’s sei a hyimm-baken scone’ [ECS] (also written ‘backen’).

bakers (bà-kurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated in 1741, and also sometimes called the ‘baxters’. Hawick bread was very popular in the middle of the 18th century, with more than 60 working bakeries at that time and Hawick carriers taking it to most of the neighbouring towns and villages.

Baker Street (bà-kur-stree’) n. lane connecting the High Street with Teviot Crescent, made when the new 75 High Street was constructed, including a baker’s shop, about 1868, replacing the former Mather’s Close. Until then there were two small shops at the top, with only a roughly 3 foot wide passageway connecting to the High Street. Named after this baker, originally R. Young & Sons (after Mr. Young rejected the proposal to name it Young Street). It has been a one-way street since the 1970s. The Harlequins clubrooms are at No. 6 and the No. 10 Bar is at the foot of the street.

Baker’s Corner (bā-kurz-kōr-nur) n. former name for a corner at Denholm Townhead, where there was a baker’s shop through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, now being a general store and newsagents.

Bakit (bā-ki’, -kee’) adj., pp. baked – ‘And the slow steam o’ new-bakit breid . . . ’ [DH].

Balbirnie (bawl-bir-nee) n. Arthur (b.1735) writer of ‘the Old Song’, penned sometime in the late 18th century, perhaps shortly before 1800. He came to Hawick from Dunfermline (although precisely when is unknown) and worked as a foreman dyer in the Orrock Place carpet factory; he may have been brought to Hawick by William Robertson, one of the owners, who came from Dunfermline. He was probably the Arthur, son of John ‘Balbirny’, who was born in Dairsie in Fife and the Arthur who married Margaret Russell in St. Andrews and St. Leonard’s Parish, Fife, in 1764. He had a daughter, Katherine, who married needle-maker John Rae. Since details of his death have not been found, it is possible that he returned to Dunfermline. Note that John, son of Patrick (both dyers) are recorded in Ferryport-on-Craig in Fife in 1782, and an Arthur is recorded in ‘Halkerston of Goatmilk’ near there in 1806.

Balcary (bawl-kā-ree) n. large house off Buccleuch Road, designed by J.P. Alison and built for the Laing family about in 1888/9. A studio and billiard room were added in 1891 and 1901, respectively. Patrick Laing lived there in the early 20th century. It was acquired by the Barnardo Charity in 1944 as a home for orphans, becoming a Barnardo's holiday home from the 1950s until 1974 when it passed to a Christian Missionary Group. After renovations it opened in 2016 as an 8-room hotel, called Balcary House Hotel.

Bald (bawl’d) n. John (b.1811) born at Carsebridge, he worked as a commission agent in Liverpool. He first married a lady from Sweden and secondly married Miss Campbell. He had 15 children in all. He leased Wells House from 1865 for 11 years with his wife and family and was recorded there in a directory of 1868. He and his wife were involved in many local charities as well as Liberal politics. He moved to Kent, where he died in the late 1880s.

Baldhill (bald-hil) n. former shepherd’s cottage in what is now Craik Forest, near the Rankle Burn, about mid-way between Craik and West Buccleuch. Bald Hill is just to the south-east. Robert Scott (d.1807) was shepherd there (‘Beldhillshiel’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Bald Hill (bald-hil) n. small hill on the north-side of the upper Borthwick valley, to the south-east of Baldhill cottage, between Crib Law and Coutlair Knowe. It reaches a height of 394 m.

Bald Hill (bald-hil) n. small hill on the south side of the Borthwick valley, between the farms of Philhope and Elrig. It is essentially a western spur of Lodge Hill. Directly north of this hill, just south of the road, there are the remains of an enclosure, consisting of a bank and ditch, D-shaped in plan, about 60 m by 50 m, with the road destroying part of it.

Baldie see bauldzie

Baldie (bawl-dee) n. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Finlay (also recorded as ‘Winla’) and their children included: John (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and James (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were William Scoon (servant to Rev. Somerville) and Kirk Officer John Telfer. Margaret (18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in the Session records of 1752 when ‘having never got a father to her child, the child now being well grown desires the Sacramant of Initiation and to take the vows upon herself’. After demonstrating sufficient biblical knowledge the child was Baptised (also written ‘Baldy’).

Bale-fire (bāl-fr) n., poet. a beacon fire – ‘Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The glaring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad warriors ride Along the wild and willow’d shore’ [SWS], ‘Old arch! oft has the clansman’s tread Rung o’er thy river’s rocky bed, When bale-fires rose, all glaring red, In midnight sky’ [WiS].

Balfour (bal-fur) n. Alexander of Dennyine (17th C.) son of Patrick. He was a lawyer in partnership with John of Pilrig. Around the time of the Reformation he acquired lands around Melrose Abbey and was then granted a charter of some of the Abbey’s lands by Michael, who was probably his uncle. These lands had been forfeited by James, Earl of Hepburn. He was said in 1568 to have seized the great chest of Melrose with its ‘charters and evidents’. A record of 1577 lists him as ‘heritable feuor’ of the Abbey’s lands, including the kirklands of Cavers and Hassendean, as well as Friarshaw, Cringills and others. In 1584 he gave a charter of Colmsliehill to John Hoy. He married firstly Marion Balfour of Inchrey and secondly Janet Hay. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Michael. Michael of Mountwhanney (d.1570) son of Andrew, his grandfather Michael having died at Flodden. He held the Rectory of Wilton from at least 1561–63. He was Commendator of Melrose Abbey 1564–68, taking over from James Balfour. In 1564/5 he was one of the curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, listed in a bond between the Scots and Kerrs; his name appears there as ‘of Burye’. In 1568 he gave a charter to William Douglas for the lands of Crook near Cavers. He married Janet, daughter of David Boswell of Balmuto and was succeeded by their son Sir Michael.

Balgownie (bal-gow-nee) n. house on Buccleuch Road. The Scoon family lived there in the early 20th century. It has latterly been run as a residential home.

Balieff (bä-leaf) n. John (b.1796/7) from England, he was listed as a master hatter and cap maker in Hawick in 1851. He lived at about 25 High Street. He was also listed as a hatter in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife Ann was born in Jamaica and they had a daughter Elizabeth.

Baliol (bä-lee-ol) n. Sir Alexander of Barnard Castle (c.1242–1278) son of Hugh of Barnard Castle and nephew of John, who was Lord of Scotland. He is easily confused with the man of the same name who was Lord of Cavers. He was listed as a crusader in 1270, and asked for his lands to be restored on his return in 1271/2. Also in 1271/2 he was listed as heir of his deceased brother Hugh, in his Northumberland lands. He married Eleonora (variously ‘Alianora’ etc.) de Genovra (or Geneve); she is mentioned several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland as ‘Alianora de Bailliolo’ or ‘Alianora, quae fuit uxor Alexandri de Bailliolo’. He died without issue.

Sir Alexander (d.c.1309) Lord of Cavers and Chamberlain of Scotland. He is often confused with another Alexander (d.1278) and there is also a possibility (given his apparent longevity) that there are two generations confounded here. The most likely possibility is that he was son of Henry, who held the office of Chamberlain of Scotland, his mother being Lora (or Lauretta) de Valoines, who was co-heiress of extensive lands in England. However, it has also been suggested that he was second son of Hugh. However, he was probably the Alexander, ‘son of Lora de Baylolo’ who was given safe conduct by the English King in 1266. He first appears in Scottish records as ‘Dominus de Cavers’ in 1270. The lands may have been inherited from his father. He probably also continued to hold lands in England, although making Scotland his base; in English records he was sometimes referred to as ‘of Chileham’. He is recorded in cases involving English lands in 1271 and 1272. In 1277 he was commissioned to serve in Edward’s Welsh wars. In 1284 he was one of the Scottish Barons who bound themselves to receive Margaret ‘the Maid of Norway’ as queen if Alexander III failed to produce a son. Also in 1284 he was summoned to serve in Edward’s army. He became Chamberlain of Scotland around 1287, succeeding John Lindsay, Bishop of Glasgow. He was involved with the Treaty of Salisbury in 1289 and the Parliament at Brigham in 1290 in which Edward I recognised the independence of England. He was at Cavers in 1291 when the Rector of Ford gave him a receipt there. He continued as Chamberlain under Edward’s control until about 1294. He was Chamberlain of Scotland until at least 1296, and signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, when he is described as being from Roxburghshire. His seal is also attached to the Rolls, and consists of a ‘voided escutcheon’ with the name ‘S’ALEXANDRI DE BALLIOL’. An existing receipt (in the National Archives) from the Chamberlain of Scotland is dated at Cavers in 1291. He was probably held captive in England along with his kinsman John (who was Scottish King). He probably served on the English side against Scotland around 1298–1301 and was present in the siege of Caerlaverock in 1300. In 1301 he was involved in capturing a dozen reivers on ‘the moor of Alkirk’, along with Sir Hugh de Audeley and Sir Robert Hastings. In 1301/2 he was directed to guard Selkirk Forest and was also one of 2 men appointed by Edward I to oversee the construction of a new castle at Selkirk. In 1302/3 his lands in Kent, Hertfordshire and Roxburghshire were seized by Edward, and he gave over his son
Baliol

Thomas as a hostage. He was again in the English King’s service in 1304 and was summoned by Edward II in about 1307. In 1304 he sold Bennington to John de Binsted. He married Isabella de Chilham (or Chileham), widow of David de Strathbogie, Earl of Atholl, and through her obtained lands in Kent. His sons included: Alexander, his heir; ‘William Baliol le Scot’, progenitor of the Scots of Scot’s Hall; and Thomas. It is possible that the ‘Roese de Chilham’, from Roxburghshire, who also swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 could have been a relative. Alexander of Cavers (13th/14th C.) son and heir of Sir Alexander, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. It is hard to separate father and son in the records. He may have had the lands of Cavers forfeited to the Earl of Mar. He may have married Isabel Stewart, Dowager Countess of Mar, but it is unclear when this would have been (since she had 3 other known husbands). His heir was Thomas, who was the last Bailiol Laird of Cavers. Edward (c.1283–c.1364) son of King John, recorded as being born at Cavers. He was also imprisoned when his father was captured, and was exiled to France. After many years he returned to claim the Scottish throne in 1332. After only a few months as King he was forced to flee half-clothed from nobles loyal to David II at Annan. He continued as a puppet King and gave much of southern Scotland to Edward III of England in 1334, including the castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Jedburgh. He is also surrendered all his titles to Edward III of England in 1356 in return for a pension. He died in France without an heir. Sir Henry (d.1246) son of Ingelram (or Ingram) and grandson of Bernard de Baliol. His mother (whose first name is unknown) was daughter and heiress of Walter de Berkeley, Chamberlain of Scotland under William the Lion (who also held the lands of Chamberlain Newton). He married Lora (or Loretta), daughter of Philip de Valoins, Lord of Pannmure, who had been Chamberlain of Scotland. After the death of his brother-in-law in 1219 he became Chamberlain (as both his wife’s father and mother’s father had been). His name appears regularly in court records in the period 1223-44, and he may have resigned as Chamberlain (perhaps retaining the title) in 1231. In 1234 he succeeded to half of his wife’s family’s lands in 6 English counties. In the 1230s he is recorded many times in English records relating to these lands. He was an executor of Joanna, Queen of Scotland. He accompanied Henry III in the Gascon war in 1241. He may have held the Barony of Cavers, although this is uncertain. His sons probably included: Guy, who died young; Sir Alexander of Cavers, also Chamberlain; and William, ‘le Scot’. His only daughter Constance married an Englishman called Fishburn. He was buried at Melrose. Sir Henry (c.1284–1332) 2nd son of John de Baliol (King of Scotland) and Isabella Plantagenet de Warrenne. He is supposed to have been born at Cavers. He swore fealty to Robert the Bruce, gaining the lands of Branxholme as a result in 1307 (except for the part already granted to Walter Comyn), with a confirming charter in about 1321. However, he did not hold the lands for long, and may never have been there, since they passed to the Earl of Strathearn before 1333. In about 1327 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire when he witnessed a charter for Roger of Alton, and he was Sheriff in 1328 when he levied money from the freeholders of Jedburgh. He was killed at the Battle of Annan, and had no heirs. Hugh (c.1189–c.1229) probably eldest son of Eustace de Baliol of Barnard Castle (near Durham). He signed the Treaty of York (to uphold peace between Alexander II and Henry III) in 1237. He may have signed this at Cavers, suggesting that either he or another family member already owned the estates there. Most likely this was his brother Sir Henry, who was Chamberlain of Scotland. He granted 26 acres of land beside ‘Heleychesters’ (probably in Temple Healey) to the monks of Hermitage Chapel, confirming the grant made by his father Eustace. He married Cecily, daughter of Aleaune de Fontaines, and he gained the title of Lord of Bywell. These generations are uncertain, but probably his son John inherited the main titles, and his grandson John would become Scottish King. John (1250–1313) youngest son of John and Devorguilla of Galloway, and brother of Alexander and Hugh, who both died in the 1270s. His uncle Sir Henry and cousin Sir Alexander were Lairds of Cavers. He was married to Isabel Plantagenet de Warren at Cavers in 1290. On the death of Margaret in 1290 he claimed the Scottish throne (through his mother), being one of at least a dozen candidates. Edward I of England decided in favour of him, and he declared Edward his superior. For this he was nicknamed ‘Turncoat’ (or ‘Toom Tabard’, since his coat of arms was removed after he gave in to English demands). He later renounced this homage to Edward and made an alliance with France, leading to war with England. Defeated near Dunbar, he was imprisoned in the Tower of London, but later released, dying at Baillieu-en-Vimeu in France. Scotland remained without a monarch for 10 years until Robert the Bruce acceded in 1306. His son Edward would later be King. His seal bore an ‘orle’. Thomas (14th C.) probably son of Alexander. He was the last Baliol Laird of Cavers, and the last of the family mentioned in Scottish records. Details of this time are confused, but it appears that the lands were forfeited after Robert the Bruce took over, and Cavers went directly to the Earl of Mar. However, he was repossessed in the lands by Thomas, Earl of Mar (his half-brother or brother-in-law), son of Isabella, Countess of Mar. He resigned the Cavers estate to the superior, William, Earl of Douglas in 1368, including lands of ‘Yarlside, Singlee and Penchryse’, and he was there referred to as brother of Thomas, Earl of Mar. He probably died childless. His seal bore an ‘orle’. William ‘le Scot’ (c.1251–c.1313) brother of Sir Alexander of Cavers. He also served as Chamberlain of Scotland. His lands were restored in 1305 (also spelled ‘Balliol’, and formerly ‘Baillol’, ‘Baillol’, ‘Bailo’, ‘Balloil’, ‘Balloi’, ‘Ballyol’, ‘Baylloyd’, ‘Baylolyt’, etc.).

Baliolhag (bə-lee-əl-hawch) n. lands near Denholm that were granted to Thomas Cranston by the Earl of Mar sometime before 1375. The lands are recorded as ‘Balleolhage’, and surely related to the former owners, the Baliols of Cavers. These lands were granted along with Denholm and Denholm Dean, but the precise location is unknown. It is probably the same as ‘Balezehag’ listed in the charter of the Douglases of Cavers in 1511 and ‘Balzehage’ in 1558. It is ‘Balze Hag’ in 1574 when included among the lands for which their were ‘non-entry’ in a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (the ending may be ‘Haugh’ rather than ‘hag’; it is ‘Balezehag’ or ‘Balyehag’ in 1511 and is transcribed ‘Bailiehaigestoks’ in 1687 and ‘Bailliehaig-Stobs’ in 1698).

the Ball (thu-bawl) n. the Common Riding Ball, held in the Town Hall, on the Friday evening of the Common Riding, following the Dinner. The dress code is formal evening wear, with ex-Cornets wearing their green coats. Reels and other dances are on the programme, with the Cornet and his Lass leading off the Grand March at 10.30 p.m. These proceedings are also watched from the balcony, the crowds for this once being as large as 500 people. At midnight the Cornet’s Lass receives the Cornet’s Sash, the men put on white gloves and the Principals, ex-Cornets and lasses dance their own special reel, the Cornet’s Reel. The dancing carries on into the small hours of the morning. It finally ends with a gathering at the Moat near dawn, with the Principals climbing the Moat to sing ‘Teribus’. It was in earliest times called the Cornet’s Dance, and then the Race Ball, being designated the Common Riding Ball by 1887. It used to take place in one of the local inns, moving to the Town Hall at the end of the 19th century, and also being held in the Exchange occasionally (e.g. 1889 and 1890). A second Ball used to be held for people who couldn’t get tickets for the main one, this taking place in the Crown Hotel, Marina, and elsewhere, and was stopped in the 1980s.

the Ballad o Kinmont Willie (thu-bawl-lid-ə-kin-mon’-wi-leel) n. Border ballad that tells the story of the rescue of William Armstrong from Carlisle Castle. This successful raid was the main reason for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being given the epithet ‘the Bold’. Details of the rescue are included in Capt. Walter Scott’s verse history of the family, these probably being related by his father, who was one of the 33 chosen men.

ballant (baw-len’, baw-lent) n., poet. a ballad – ‘Sung their feats in mairland ballants; Scotia’s boast was Hawick Callants’ [JH], ‘O’ pithy auld provers her mind is a mint, She sings them queer ballants that ne’er were in print’ [JT], ‘Let us sing the auld ballants that duly record How the brave-hearted Callants took buckler and sword’ [CB].

Ballantine (baw-lin-tin) n. James (1808–77) stained-glass window maker and poet from Edinburgh, bard of the Grand Masonic Lodge of Scotland, famous for the words of the song ‘Castles in the Air’ and poems such as ‘Ilka Blade o’ Grass’. He composed ‘Hawick’s welcome to Buccleuch’ for the laying of the foundation stone for the Exchange Buildings in 1865, and gave a talk to the Archæological Society.

Ballantyne (baw-lin-tin) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Newcastleton in 1837. He may have been related to Francis, who was also a mason at the same time. He is probably the Adam, residing at Ovenshank who was rebuked in 1832, along with his wife Janet Wilson, for ‘antenuptial fornication’. He was listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish for the first time in 1838. Alexander (19th C.) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 12 Back Row. He married Helen Ekron in 1851 (she was probably daughter of James Ekron and Margaret Thomson). Their children included: Margaret (b.1853); Elizabeth (b.1855); John (b.1857); Janet (b.1860); James Ekron (b.1864); Nelly Ekron (b.1866); Walter (b.1869); and Sarah Wemyss (b.1872). It is said that he moved to Philadelphia, where he had a jeweller’s business. Andrew (1841/2-1929) nephew of ‘Wat the Drummer’, he joined the Drums and Fifes in 1853 when he was 11 years old and played for the following 73 years! For a long time he was leader of the band, and his drum is in the Museum. At the Colour Bussing ceremonies he received an engraved cane and purse for 50 years' service and a portrait after 60 years (both of which still exist), along with a further presentation in 1922. The portrait presented to him in 1912 is a large photograph of him in his uniform, carrying his drum. David (18th C.) resident at the ‘toll Bar’ in 1795 when his son John died in Hawick. It is unclear which toll this was. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Shaws in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He could be the David who married Isobel Grieve and died in 1832. He is probably the ‘Mr. Ballantine of Shaws’ who was attacked by the mob in Hawick at the election of 1837. David (19th/20th C.) resident at Shaws in the early 1900s. He was Convenor of the Liddesdale Agricultural Society and was a member of the local organising committee when the Highland Show came to Hawick in 1914. He also served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Francis (b.c.1749) from Castleton Parish. His children were born at Whithaughburn and Riccarton. He had a house built at 44 North Hermitage Street in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Robson, who died in 1827. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1776), who married William Inglis; Christian; Francis (1779–1853), merchant in Hawick; Isobel (1781–1866), who married John Inglis, brother-in-law to her sister Elizabeth; William (1783–1863), who emigrated to New York and died in Smith Falls, Ontario; James (b.1786); and John (1789–1855), who married Mary Miller. He may be the Francis who was recorded as a Newcastleton mason in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Francis ‘Franky’ (1779–1853) from Castleton Parish, son of Francis and Margaret Robson. He was apprenticed to ‘Auld Cash’ the Hawick banker. He is recorded as a grocer, spirit dealer and wine merchant at the Sandbed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the ‘Mr. Ballantyne’ marked as owner of land off Langlands Road on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a merchant when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a ‘dealer’ as well as a grocer at ‘Slitterick bdge.’ It was said that the public grew to mistrust him over perceived irregularities after his employer died. This is partly because he took over much of Oliver’s business, as well as his premises. It was suspected by many in Hawick that he had profited somehow, and this was the reason why ‘Auld Cash’ was in debt when he died. It was commonly held that Oliver’s ghost haunted him in revenge, and this was even described in a poem (by David Waters) entitled ‘The Twa Frien’s or the Ghost of Coffer-Ha’’, in which he is implicated with his son-in-law Charles Thomson, in local vote rigging. He was also described in a second poem ‘Francisco, or the Man of Brass’ – ‘Those days when first emerged from Liddell’s bank A youth of stately mien both free and FRANK. Fraud in his heart and famine in his eye, He left his father’s house without a sigh’[RDW]. It was said that he attended a dinner of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, some of whom had lost money from the debts of ‘Auld Cash’, leading to some trying to hang him from a rope, and others having to cut him free. In 1837 he was one of the local men mentioned in connection with the arrangement of ‘fictitious votes’; he swapped his liferent in Selkirkshire for one in Roxburghshire with John Gray. He witnessed (from his window) the ‘Tully’s Mill’ election riot of 1837, but although called to London as a witness, apparently could not (or would not) name any of the participants. On the 1841 census he is at Slitrig Bridge and at Teviot Square in 1851. He is listed at ‘ Market Place’ on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Frances Brown, who died in Galway, Ireland in about 1868. Their children included: Janet (b.1804), who married Rev. Charles Thomson; and Margaret Brown (b.1810), who married George Sanderson. He died at Synton Parkhead. His wife could be the ‘Mrs. Frank Ballantyne’ who made the ‘rebel’ Common Riding flag of 1809. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Denholm. In 1788 her son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. There is no record of why only the mother’s name was given (this being quite rare at the time). Henry (b.1812/3) born in Traquair Parish, he was a farm steward in Kirkton in 1861. He is probably the Henry who was farmer at Deambrae in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, William Robina, Jeany, Henry and Marion. Henry

daughter of shepherd Ninian Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1794), who married Archibald Scott; Jean (b.1797); John (1799–1891), who married Elliot Cowan and died at Saugh-grain; and Ninian (1801–70), who Margaret Grieve. Robert (19th C.) recorded at Shaws in Castleton Parish among the gentry listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in 1764 when, along with Walter, he witnessed a baptism for fellow weaver John and in 1766 he and John witnessed a baptism for Walter (suggesting they may have all been brothers); all 3 men were surely related. He married Mary Brown and their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Walter (b.1768); and Mary (b.1771). The witnesses in 1763 were William Brown (perhaps the town piper) and Walter Ballantyne (surely either his father or brother), in 1768 were Walter Ballantyne and Walter Weens and in 1771 were Walter Weens and John (perhaps his brother again). Thomas (b.1823/4) from Yarrow, he was a schoolmaster in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at Birkwood. His wife was Margaret Dickson. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Berrybush. In 1685 he was charged, along with men of the upper Borthwick valley and elsewhere, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. It is unclear where he was from. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as piper in Selkirk from at least 1727. In 1742 he was paid ‘for salary and shoes (including 12s for Common Riding day)’. It seems feasible that he was related to the piper in Hawick of the same name a few decades later. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Dunn in 1754. Walter (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Ann Glendinning in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Gowens and their son Walter was baptised in 1768. He could be the Walter who was deceased in 1791 when his daughter Janet died. Walter (18th C.) recorded as a weaver in 1764 when he witnessed a baptism, along with Thomas, for weaver John. In the same year he is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine. He witnessed a further baptism for weaver Thomas in 1768. He also witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas (perhaps his brother) in 1763, the other witness being William Brown (possibly the town piper). It is possible he is the same man as the Town Officer and piper. Walter ‘Watt’ (18th C.) recorded as town drummer and possibly piper from at least 1751 until the 1770s, probably a relative of the other famous drummers. He may have overlapped with William Brown, and it is possible that there were 2 Town Officers who shared responsibility for piping and drumming in the latter part of the 18th century. He is probably the town piper of 1777, whose version of ‘Teribus’ exists in a manuscript form (so labelled) now in the Museum. He was probably the last of the Town Pipers. He may be the Walter who married Mary Ekron and had several children in the 1760s and 70s. The weaver, Walter, who died in 1797, may have been his son (recorded as ‘son to Decd. town piper’). Walter (d.1797) weaver in Hawick, who was son to the Town Piper. He may be the same man as ‘Watt’ the town drummer. He married Mary Ekron (perhaps daughter of William) in Hawick in 1760 and their children were: Mary (b.1761); Isabel (b.1766); Andrew; Elizabeth (b.1770); Alice; James; and Thomas (d.1776). The witnesses in 1766 were Thomas and John, who were surely relatives, perhaps his brothers. Walter (18th/19th C.) shoemaker of the Midrow, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son David was baptised in 1801. He may be the Walter, married to Betty Turnbull, whose daughter Betty was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1809. Walter ‘Watt the Drummer’ (1800–1881) famous town drummer, who joined the Drums and Fifes band in 1823 and played with them for 59 years. It was reported that he was missed in 1875, so may have been ill that year. When playing he always wore a dress coat, silk hat and black stock round his neck. He was also present at many other important events, for example the march of 1,000 Hawick workers to protest the 1831 elections in Jedburgh. He was sympathetic to Reform politics, but conservative about the Common Riding. His sister married James Richardson of ‘Saut Haa’. There is a photograph of him taken the summer before his death. He could be the weaver recorded at about 31 or 33 Loan on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, living with his wife Margaret and daughter, also Margaret (who married James Brown). Walter (b.1803/4) born in Cockpen, Midlothian, he was a stocking frame work knitter in Hawick. He was living at 25 Loan in at least 1841–61. He married Helen Turnbull, who was from Wilton. His brother Alexander and brother-in-law Richard Turnbull were living with them in 1851. He could be the same man as ‘Wat the Drummer’. William (18th
Balleny  the Balmoral

C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was in Denholm in 1761. His surname is written ‘Bellinden’ and ‘Belindean’. His children included: James (b.1758); Helen (b.1761); George (b.1763); and William (b.1765). William (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Cavers. This could be an error for ‘Walter’. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1792 he paid for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Elspeth Lamb. Rev. William Douglas (b.1831) son of James, he was born in Hawick. He became a Presbyterian minister in Toronto, Ontario. He married Joanna E. Schoolbred (spelled ‘Ballantine’, ‘Ballenden’, ‘Ballentin’, ‘Ballendine’, ‘Ballentine’, ‘Ballindon’, ‘Bellinden’, ‘Bellingden’, ‘Billindean’, etc. in early records; the origin for at least some of the people of this surname may be the Scott headquarters of Bellenden).

Balleny (ba-le-nee) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

Balliol see Balian

Ballion (bawl-yin) n., arch. a box, especially one carried by a tinker on his back, a knapsack, bundle (from French).

Ballit (baw-li’) n. ballot (note the pronunciation).

Ballop (baw-lup, baw-lup) n. trouser-fly, formerly a button-up flap, now usually with a zip – ‘yer ballop’s open’ (note ‘open’ is common, rather than ‘undin’ or ‘doon’; also spelled ‘ballup’).

Ballop relation (baw-lup-ree-lä-shun) n. a blood relation, ??.

Balmer (baw-mur) n. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1767 he married Beatrice Scott, who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Robert (b.1767); James (b.1772), with the mother’s name given as ‘Mary’; and James (again, b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were wrights Francis and Robert Paisley and in 1776 were ‘Mr’ John Laurie and Thomas Paisley. Probably the same George subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (1818/9–81) handloom weaver who lived on the Loan. In 1841 he was living in the house of Isabella Scott, in 1851 he was on the Fore Raw, with his sisters Catherine, Beatrice and Agnes and in 1861 he was at 11 Fore Raw with his sisters Catherin and Beatrice. He is probably the George who presented to the Museum in 1856 a ‘gold-plated sword’ found at Flodden. He is buried at St. Mary’s along with his sisters Beatrice (or Beatrice, 1815/6–1881) and Catherine (d.1884), with his sisters Agnes and Isabel (who died in the U.S.A.) also commemorated. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Euphan Scott and their children included: George (b.1808); and Robert (b.1810). Robert (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Marion (also recorded as ‘Helen’) Knox and their children included: Isabel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1739); Robert (b.1740); George (b.1742); Andrew (b.1744); and Robert (again, b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Ruecastle and Patrick Christie. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Elizabeth Tudhope in 1762, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Ann (b.1763); James (b.1765); and Agnes (b.1767). The witnesses in 1767 were smith Robert Beattie and schoolmaster James Inglis. Robert (18th C.) smith in Cavers, recorded in 1779. His children included Janet (b.1779). William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Aitchison in 1688 and their daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were George Johnstone and Andrew Fletcher. He may be the same man as William ‘Palmar’ recorded in the Hassendean area in 1688. William (c.1799–1892) veteran soldier who was later a bugler with the Upper Teviotdale Riffle Corps (Volunteers), and familiarly known as ‘Balmer the Bugler’. He used to start the Common Riding races in the Haugh by sounding his bugle. A photograph of him exists. He may be the William who was living at Damside in the 1841 census and High Street in 1851, recorded as pensioner of the 92nd Highlanders and journeyman hand-loom weaver; if so he was (secondly) married to Janet Miller and had children Andrew, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Thomas, Mary, Isabella and Ebenezer. He lived to the age of 93 and died at 12 Baker Street – ‘Wullie the Pailde, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI]. William (b.1818/9) stockling-maker, born in Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living at Highchests, in 1851 at 11 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 at 4 Tannage Close. He married Agnes Brown in Hawick in 1838 and their children included: Agnes (b.1839); Jean (b.c.1844); Isabella (b.c.1844); Jemima (b.c.1853) David (b.1857); Elizabeth (b.1860); and Wilhelmina (b.1863). There were also 4 Brown children living with his family in 1841 (also spelled ‘Balmar’, ‘Balmers’ and ‘Balmour’).

the Balmoral (thu-bawl-mo-rul) n. the Balmoral Bar, pub at 1 Langlands Road. It closed in the 2010s.
there were meetings at the Congregational Kirk once it was opened on Bourtree Place, and later at Orrock Kirk – ‘The Band o’ Hope was suire to be a draw, To Orrock weekly we wad steer; Oor mates oot at the front to speak or sing, Was worth a mint o’ gowd to hear’ [WL].

the Bandstand (tha-bawn-d-stawnd) n. ornamental platform designed for musical performances in Wilton Lodge Park, near the Boer War memorial. It erected in 1893, shortly after the Burgh took ownership of the Park. It was built by the Glasgow firm McDowell, Steven & Co. (the same firm that later supplied the Fountain). It was demolished in 1965, the base was turned into a paddling pool around 1970 and after only a few years became a flower bed. A new bandstand was built near the same location in 2015 in commemoration of Zandra Elliot, and usually referred to as ‘the Elliot Bandstand’. There was an earlier plain wooden bandstand in the Haugh in the latter part of the 19th century.

bandster (bawn-stur) n., poet. a harvester who binds the sheaves – ‘Wharewi’ the mawer fillsna his han’, nar the bandstir his bozimi’ [HSR].

bandwin rig (bawn-win-rig) n., arch. a ridge broad enough to be worked by a band of (usually) 4 reapers and a bandster.

bandy-legged (bawn-dee-le-gee’) adj. bandy-legged, having legs that bow outwards at the knees.

bark (bahn) n. bone – ‘that’ll be a grand bane for making soup’, ‘A’m workin ma fingers ti the bane’, ‘...And for tae mend his auld fail dykes, Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’[JSB], ‘And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle’[JTe], ‘Twa lang bare jaws – the teeth were gane – The neck was naething but a bane’[RDW], ‘...my strencht feals becaus o’ mine inequitie, an’ my banes ar con-summet’ [HSR], ‘As wi’ ane sword in my banes mine enemie reproch me ...’[HSR], ‘We win our bread wi’ aching banes, We lift and lay the ponderous stanes ...’[JR], ‘They clattered past my verra nose Wi’ rattlin’ banes an’ drumstick blows ...’[WP], ‘Her banes were big and her shape was hidden In drab claes worn at her father’s biddin’’ [WL], ‘Now stiff and cauld beneath the clay Tam’s banes repose until that day’[JCG], ‘...Invadin everywhere the agein’ banes O’ the year, stiffenin’ the mairchin’ step O’ medalled veterans’[DH], ‘The yin that blows the candle and sends shivers doon the banes o lone workers’[JuH].

banefire (bān-fi-ur) n., arch. a bonfire. At celebration times the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ parts of town would traditionally have rival bonfires, situated on the Tower Knowe and at Myreslawgreen in the 18th century. This took place at the ‘King’s Rantin’ (i.e. 4th June) or on Midsummer Saturday (as recorded in 1716, when several people were fined by the Council for fighting). Gangs from each side of town would collect material (consisting of anything that would burn, including animal bones) for about a month beforehand, and raids on each other’s fuel supply, as well as widescale battles, would not be uncommon (as described by Robert Wilson). This was a very old tradition, said to be connected with the town was burned (although there is no evidence for this). It was probably a continuation of the Beltane festival, which had formerly involved bonfires on May Day and only transferred to June during the reign of George III. The Magistrates tried to suppress the bonfires many times (largely due to the fights and injuries). In 1792 when someone leased some of the Burgh lands, he was barred from allowing ‘any bonefire to be burnt on said haugh’. The bonefires ended about 1800 when one of the sites (referred to as being at ‘the Common Lone’ in 1716, presumably at Myreslawgreen) was let as a garden, although their popularity had already waned by then. The spirit of the event was continued on Guy Fawkes Night (5th November), when several different parts of the town would mount their own bonfires, with local youths gathering ‘salvage’ and raiding each other’s supplies. It is unclear when Guy Fawkes Night started to be celebrated in Hawick, but the practice of local gangs building their own bonfires continued until at least the 1970s – ‘Several parties are fined for misdemeanours, riots, and bloodshed at the annual boon-fyr, on the west part of the river).晚上

bang (bawng) v., arch. to beat, thump, knock, drub, to surpass – ‘That bangs a’ print’, ‘That bangs a’ = that surpasses everything I have read or heard’ [GW], ‘...Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blink-bonny’ [DA].

bang up (bawng-up) v., arch. to surpass, overcome, jump up – ‘...they gar iz bang up bleithe again an buckle tui in nettle-yirrnist!’ [ECS].

Baniest James (baw-neest-jāmz) n. nickname for a local James Turnbull in 1601.

banish (baw-neesh) v., arch. to banish – ‘...and to be banished the toune in all tyme to come’ [BR1689], ‘...are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town’ [JW1700] (note that in standard English this would usually be followed with ‘from’).

banishit (baw-nil-shee,-shi) pp., arch. banished – ‘Item, whatsoever person committis the said theft ...sal be banyshit the town, and lose their freedom for ever’ [BR1640].

banjo (bawn-jo) v. to hit with a single hard blow, knock down – ? (recent introduction from Western Scotland).

Bank (bawngk) n. former farmstead in the upper Jed valley, roughly opposite Edgerston Rig. In 1541 William Oliver was tenant of half the lands, with John Laidlaw tenant of the other half, the whole being valued at 25s. Ninian Laidlaw was there in 1572/3 and Steven Laidlaw in 1590. The tenants there in 1669 were John Oliver and William Laidlaw. Robert Oliver was there in 1694 (it is ‘the Bank’ in 1571/2; it is ‘Banck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Banckent’ on the other side of the river).

Bank (bawngk) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1643 it was part of the main Riddell estate, valued at £143. It is recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694, when William Scott was there. It was still recorded as part of the lands of Riddell of that Ilk in 1788. It is unclear where this was exactly.

Bankend (bawngk-end) n. former farmstead in the Ewes valley, near Mosspeebie. The area is now marked on maps as Bankend Wood, but the house is long gone. It was occupied by Edgars in 1841.

Bank-end (bawngk-end) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 2 sets of ‘Five Bankend parks’ and one more are listed, valued at £195, with the liferent held by Robert Trotter. of Bush. They are probably distinct from the ‘six parks or inclosures called the Bank-head parks’ listed in a 1780 description of Deanfoot in Minto. The lands of ‘Bank-end Parks’ are still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

the Bankend Kirk (bawngk-end-kirk) n. former church in Sandholm, north of Newcastleton. It was built in 1808 and was the Parish Church of Castleton until 1952. It has recently been converted into a dwelling.

Bankend Plantin (bawngk-end-plawn-in) n. plantation in Hobkirke Parish, on the north side of the road to Harwood House, near to Tythehouse.

Banker Cash (bawng-kur-kawsh) n. another name for Auld Cash.

Bankheid (bawngk-heed) n. Bankhead, former name for lands, probably near Hartsgarth, which James Elliott given ‘in wadset’ by his father in 1637, paying off the ‘reversion’ in 1639. It is possible that the name is a transcription error (perhaps for ‘Blackhope’). This may be the lands where ‘Johnne Armstrong of the Bankheid’ was recorded in 1569.

Bankhead Parks (bawngk-heed-pawrks) n. Bankhead Parks, former name for lands that were part of Deanfoot in Minto. The ‘six parks or inclosures called the Bank-head parks’ are recorded in 1780 and the ‘five parks’ were part of a dispute over lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1780, with a rental of £20.

Bank Hoose (bawngk-hoos) n. former name for a house in Hawick, occupied by John Turnbull in the latter part of the 19th century. It may be the same as East Bank Hoose.

bankin (bawng-kin) n. a bank, embankment, slope of land – ‘Aa mind yince o’ sei-in a wice-like esh-plant that was growin’ on a steep cley bankin’ ...’ [DH], ‘...just as Wilton Bank further along the bankin was built be the Watsons ...’ [IWL], ‘...oo hed a sheet o’ cardboard ti gaun skeitin’ doon the bankin’ on’ [We].

the Bank o Scotland (thu-bawngk-ø-skö-lind) n. Scottish national bank, with its first branch opening in Hawick in 1791 (or perhaps 1792) with William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’) as the first agent. This first branch closed in 1802, and was said to have had no safe, with the banknotes tied in bundles and kept under the counter. The former British Linen Bank building at 7 High Street became a branch in 1971. This is a grade B listed building.

Bannatyne (baw-na-tin) n. Rev. Thomas son of Thomas of Newtyld, Forfar, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1594 and became minister of Ratho in 1606. He was then presented to Castleton Parish by the Lord Collector (Sir Gideon Murray) and Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch. Following some dispute over the promise made by Sir Gideon Murray, he became minister there in 1607. In 1610 he was translated to North Berwick and then to Douglas in 1621 (he may have been related to the Edinburgh merchant and benefactor of the same name who lived 1570–1635).

the Bannatyne Club (thu-baw-na-tin-klub) n. former organisation that published rare Scottish volumes, named after George Bannatyne, the great collector of 16th century poetry. It was founded by Sir Walter Scott in Edinburgh in 1823 and dissolved in 1861, having printed 116 separate books. Volumes of local relevance include records from Kelso, Melrose and Dryburgh Abbeys, and the pre-Reformation Diocese of Glasgow, as well as works of broad Scottish interest, such as the ‘Fasti Ecclesiæ Scoticæ’. The Maitland Club was founded in Glasgow just 6 years later as the western version.

the Banner (thu-baw-nur) n. another name for the Flag – ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us ...’ [JT], ‘...And gold as the curls of my little lass Watching the fluttering Banner pass’ [JYH], ‘Our gallant steeds, with impatient hoof, are waiting, each rider true, They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue’ [JEDM], ‘All hail tae the banner, unfurled tae oor view! In time-honoured manner we greet it anew’ [CB].

the Banner Blue (thu-baw-nur-bloo) n. the Hawick flag, a gold saltire cross on a blue background with the date ‘1514’ across it, and a thin vertical line straddled by the letters ‘HC’ at the bottom – ‘Then honour to the gallant few who fought and suffered loss, Yet gave to us our banner blue Which bears the golden cross’ [JI], ‘...Rearing on high the banner o’ blue’ [JEDM], ‘Of Scott and Elliot, Hogg and Kerr, who took the Banner Blue ...’ [NM].

The Banner Blue (thu-baw-nur-bloo) n. song with words by John Inglis and music by Joshua Taylor, published in 1892. It was originally called ‘The Banner of Blue’ and sung by James Haig at the 1894 Colour Bussing. Taylor wrote a complex accompaniment, which was simplified later by Adam Ingles. The song with the modern name was sung at the 1911 Colour Bussing. When first written the main line was ‘...which Bears the Crimson Cross’, this being changed to ‘Golden’ when the Flag’s colours were corrected.

Bannerman (baw-nur-mun) n. Dr. George Gunn (1859–1919) born in Kildonan, Sutherlandshire, son of farmer Alexander and Sarah Gunn. He qualified at Glasgow University as a doctor in 1885, practised in Glasgow for a year then came to Hawick as partner of Dr. Paterson in 1887. Dr. Robert Mair (famous as the only non-Teri Cornet) was also his assistant and later partner. He became a strong supporter of the Common Riding and was Acting Father in 1894. His wife was Mary, eldest daughter of Luke Greenwood and sister to Jessie (who married William Oliver of Thornwood). His elder daughter married Norman Laing. Eileen nee Barrie (d.2002) born in Hawick. She married Alastair. She was prominent in local theatrical productions, e.g. the Teri-Optimists in the 1930s. She was also long involved with local nursing and the Red Cross, for which she received the Coronation Medal, B.E.M. and M.B.E.

banni (baw-ni) n. a bannock, round flat cake baked on a griddle. These were formerly of barley meal, sometimes with some pease meal, and were a staple in Scotland through to the early part of the 19th century ‘Imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermy bannih . . .’ [ECS], ‘Thay hev gaen (gone) wui the bannih’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘banna’, ‘bannae’ and ‘bannih’).

bannock (baw-nuk) n., arch. a round flat oat cake, griddle cake, small loaf – ‘Ilk ane his portion on his bannock Gat handed by, baith Jock an’ Sannock’ [JR], an amount of meal sufficient to make a small loaf, one of the duties of thirlage – ‘. . . set to John Scot in Aikwod all the knaischip and bannock of his miln of Askirk for a space of five years’ [SPB1581] a (cf. banni).

Bannockburn (baw-nuk-burn) n. village in Stirlingshire, site of a famous battle of 1314 in which there was a decisive victory of the Scots over the English, effectively securing the throne for Robert the Bruce and being pivotal in Scotland gaining complete independence 13 years later. The Scottish force of around 5,000, was split into 4 Divisions, the Borderers being under the young Walter the Steward, with James Douglas (the ‘Black Douglas’) being the real leader. The young Edward II of England had accepted a challenge to relieve Stirling Castle by midsummer’s day. His army of perhaps around 20,000 mustered at Berwick, crossed the Border at Coldstream and marched towards Stirling, to be met by Robert the Bruce’s force near the ford over the Bannock Burn. After several skirmishes the armies encamped and the main battle took place on the following day. Fighting was extremely fierce, and eventually the English were forced to flee. The young Edward was chased by James Douglas’s force all the way to Dunbar Castle, where he escaped by ship. The Jethart staff is said to have played a key role in Scottish tactics. There is a tradition that the men of Jedburgh carried off a captured English standard. As a reward Bruce gave baronies in Teviotdale (which had been under English control) to several of his supporters about 1306 and they were probably able to take possession of these lands after Bannockburn.

Bantel (bawn-tel) n. toy and bicycle manufacturers, which had a small factory in Hawick in the latter part of the 20th century, and retain a presence in the Hawick Cycle Centre, 45–47 North Bridge Street.

banter (bawn-tur) v., arch. to rebuke, scold – ‘Oh banter enough, last year when I nursed him through his illness in the fall . . .’ [JEDM].

banyel (ba-ne-nil) n., arch. a bundle, package – ‘Ane banyel o’ myrrh is my weel-beloefet til me’ [HSR], n., pl. arch. baggage – ‘. . . an A thocht the sowl wad take a dwam, an kilt owre, – banyels, creel, an aa thegither’ [ECS].

bany-tickle (bā-nee-ti-kul) n., arch. a kind of stickleback.

bap (bawp) n. a bread roll – ‘. . . and others we called ‘baps’ with a slice of potted meat in between . . .’ [JR], ‘Ance happy o’er their baps and yill As for their sangs I hear them still’ [RF] (not particularly Hawick).

Baptie

(bap-tee) n. Adam Marshall (1857–1934) born in Hawick, he emigrated to become an early pioneer in Alberta, Canada. He moved to Calgary in 1888, where he ran a butcher’s shop. He later ran a ranch and was appointed Home-stead Inspector for the Cochrane Morley District. He married Susan McGrevey in 1890 and they had 5 sons and 3 daughters. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Southdean. He was recorded as farmer at Old Southdean according to the 1787–90 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary (1731–89), daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southdean. If he was father of the soldier Alexander, then he was living at Broadlee in Robertson Parish in 1782. Alexander (b.c.1785) from the Southdean area. He may have been son of the farmer at Old Southdean, born in Robertson Parish in 1782. He enlisted in the King’s Dragoon Guards and was present at the Battle of Waterloo, after which he was discharged with a small pension. He then became schoolmaster at Falstone-on-Tyne, where he was called ‘Old Sandy’. In 1805 he married Agnes, daughter of blacksmith George Stevenson. Their son George (b.1823) was a blacksmith (like his mother’s side of the family). His medal from Waterloo was donated to Jedburgh Museum by his son George. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Helen Richardson in 1838 and their children included Alexander (b.1839). Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch. In 1685 he was charged, along with other men of the upper Borthwick valley, with being a Covenantant. All the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. He was probably from the Blackcleuch near Teviothead. He may be the Archibald, married to Agnes Turnbull, whose son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1669. David (17th C.) resident of Southdean farm according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Rev. George (c.1641–88) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1661, he was licensed in 1665 by George, Bishop of Edinburgh. He was ordained at Southdean Kirk in 1670, as an Episcopalian minister. He complained to the Privy Council of being assaulted in 1676 in the churchyard of Abbotrule, resulting in letters issued for the arrest of several people. William Elliott (younger of Stobs), Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and the Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire were instructed to seize 5 women who were accused of attacking him. These were presumably locals who objected to having an Episcopalian in their Parish. He had daughters Magdalene (who married Benjamin McEwan in Edinburgh in 1709) and Elizabeth (who married wright David Crocket in Edinburgh in 1718). His will is recorded in Peebles Commissariot in 1688. George (b.1823) son of Alexander and Agnes Stevenson. He was a blacksmith to trade, helping his uncle Andrew Stevenson at Bonchester Bridge. He was recorded as a blacksmith’s apprentice at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. He later worked for Mr. Veitch of Inchbonny. His most prized possession was his father’s Waterloo medal. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Bordersers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Brauxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Badbie’ and he is listed after John, who must have been related. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Fanesh’ (i.e. Falnash). He married Jane ‘Givin’ and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1674); and Margaret (b.1678). The witnesses in 1678 were James Newbie and Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Southdean. He paid the Horse Tax there in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was also taxed for having 6 non-working dogs. He could be the James who married Elizabeth Riddell in Southdean Parish in 1803 and whose children included Douglas (b.1811); in 1841 Elizabeth was a midwife living at Chesters with Douglas. James (b.1816) 2nd son of Thomas. He was shepherd at Lymiecleuch in 1861. He married Cecily Buckham in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. Their children were: Thomas (b.1841); Mary (b.1844); James (b.1846); Betty (b.1848); Katherine (b.1850); Cecily (b.1853); Robert; and Adam M. James (1846–97) son of James and Cecily Buckham, he was born at Tythelhouse in Hobkirk Parish. He worked at Abbotrule and later was gamekeeper at Softlaw; assistant gamekeeper at Wolfelee and lastly worked at Hallrule. He may have lived at Wells Lodge. In 1882 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Joseph Paterson, farm steward from the Kelso area. Their children were: Grace (b.1883); James (b.1884) gamekeeper at Hallrule; Cecily (b.1886) born in Hawick; Christina (b.1887); Robina (b.1891); Margaret (b.1892); and Joseph (b.1894). He is said to have died of a ‘chill’ contracted at Weensmoor House. James (b.1884) eldest son of James. He was gamekeeper at Hallrule. Jane (b.1875) dressmaker at Howlands in Wilton Parish according to the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Badbie’ in the 1526 remission for Borders men who had earlier attacked the Earl of Arran. He was probably related to James who was listed after him. John (18th
C.) married Betty Hobkirk in Southdean Parish in 1776. John (b.c.1750) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a parish pauper and agricultural labourer, aged about 90. He was living with Janet and Betty, who may have been his granddaughter and great-granddaughter at a parish pauper and agricultural labourer, aged about 90. He was living with Janet and Betty, who may have been his granddaughter and great-granddaughter. He may be the John who married Elizabeth Hobkirk in Southdean in 1776, whose son (baptised in Robertson Parish) was Thomas (b.1791). John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Farnash in 1797, when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. John (b.c.1790) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was living at Parkhouses on the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and their children included David. John (b.c.1810) tailor at Appletreehall. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet. John (1811–90) eldest son of Thomas, he was an agricultural worker in the Rule valley and elsewhere, living at Haughhead, Swanshiel, Hawthornside and other places. He was said to be a real ‘character’, who would quote large parts of the bible from memory. He is probably the John living at Haughhead in 1841, in the house of miller John Oliver, along with his wife Elizabeth and (probably) sister Ann. He married Elizabeth, sister of the Oliver who was in Hislop & Oliver of Jedburgh. Their children were: Alison (b.1841); Thomas (b.1843); Mary (b.1845); and Elizabeth Oliver (b.1848). His wife died shortly after the birth of their 3rd child. He secondly married Betsy Renwick, who outlived him and died in Denholm. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Falside in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused of charging more than the allowed amount of interest; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It is unclear whether this is the Falside in Southdean Parish or the one in Ettrick. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer at Chapel Muir in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was listed there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included George, Hannah, Elizabeth, John and Thomas. Robert (d.1852) 3rd son of Thomas. He worked as a labourer. In 1849 he was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Jessie Clark at Harwood Mill. Their children were: Maggie; Mary; Thomas; William; Bella; and Robert, who died young. He died at the Dykes. Robert (b.c.1824) from Selkirk, he was shepherd at Newton in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his wife Jessie and son Robert. Thomas (b.1791) born at Gildis Green, Ettrick, but baptised in Roberton, son of John and Betty Hobkirk. He lived at Gilmancleuch, Alemoor and Priesthaugh, and later moved to the Rule valley to be a shepherd, living first at Langburnshiel. From about 1840 (when the penny post came in) he became letter carrier for the Rule valley, carrying a mail bag daily from Hawick to Bonchester. He was a Cameronian, and had most of his children baptised at Buccleuch by a Cameronian minister. In 1841 he was living at Thythehouse and in 1851 was at 1 Kirkstyle, listed as ‘Postrunner’ (presumably ‘postrunner’ is meant). In 1811 he married Mary, daughter of James Anderson, who was a carpet weaver in Hawick. Their children were: John (b.1811); James (b.1816); Robert; Janet (1819–66), who married; Catherine (1821–50), who died unmarried at Kirkstyle, Hobkirk; Elizabeth ‘Betsy’, who was unmarried; Agnes, who married Thomas Simpson; Mary, who died in America; Isabella (b.1828), who married Alexander Bain and died in Florida; Wilhelmina (‘Mina’, 1830–96), died unmarried in Hawick; Helen (1833–56), died unmarried at Yethouse, Rulewater; and Jane (‘Jeanie’, 1836–57), also died at Yethouse, unmarried. Walter (1740–1833) resident of Newton in Wilton Parish. In 1780 he married Hannah Hood, and she died in 1823, aged 70. They are buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. William (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. William ‘Bill’ (1929/30–2019) joined the Saxhorn Band at the age of 11, despite having no previous musical experience. He remained a member for 74 years, playing cornet and baritone horn. He worked as a knitwear tutor at the Henderson Tech. He married Audrey and they had children David and Cameron (also formerly ‘Babtie’, ‘Baty’ and other variants).

Baptist Church Lane (bawp-tist-church-lan)

n. more formal name for the Baptist’s Openin.

the Baptist Kirk (thu-bawp-tist-kirk)

n. following the ideas of the Haldane brothers for total immersion by adults, baptist churches opened throughout Scotland in the latter part of the 18th century. In Hawick the Haldanes gave open air services at the Tower Knowe in 1798, leading to the formation of the Independent Church.
the Baptist’s Openin

One of the most ardent of the early Independents was tailor William Thorburn, who eventually led the group of Baptists that separated from that church. James Blair, formerly of Ayr, baptised the first person in Hawick in 1844, and others followed. The new Baptist congregation was officially formed in 1846, and consisted of 23 members. It began meeting as a Baptist movement in the lower flat of a house (No. 8) on Algars Crescent, with the support of John Turnbull, dyer. Alexander Kirkwood was the first pastor, although supplemented by others. The next pastor was Mr. William M. Anderson, who ran the church premises as a private school during the week. In 1879 a financial arrangement was made with the Hawick Home Mission to help support a pastor. The congregation moved to the Temperance Hall in 1880. Then a piece of land (previously a bowling green) was sold to the congregation on North Bridge Street at about half price by Prof. Elliot of Goldielands. The present church was built there in 1882–83, designed by Edinburgh architect David Crombie. In 1891 the hall and vestry were added and a balcony erected in about 1905. The church hall was used as a recreation room for soldiers billeted in the Town in 1915. A displayed Roll of Honour shows the names of members who served, and those who gave their lives in the Wars. A manse was built in 1919. In 1985 the remaining premises of the Hawick Home Mission were given for use as a new hall. A roll of the ministry is: Alexander Kirkwood 1846–52; (Robert Macmaster c.1852); W.M. Anderson, 1852–62; John C. Hawkins, 1862–71; J. Hewson, 1871–74; John C. Hawkins (again), 1874–80; William Seaman, 1880–96; James Hodgson, 1896–97; Joseph W. Kemp, 1898–1902; Donald McNicol, 1903–07; John Dick, 1908–10; William A. Ashby, 1911–15; William M. Robertson, 1916–19; John Moore, 1919–22; B. Poole, 1923–26.

the Baptist’s Openin (tha-bawp-tists-ö-punin) n. Baptist Church Lane, beside the Baptist Church, running between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place. It follows part of the original eastern boundary of the Burgh of Hawick.

Barbauch Law (bawr-bawch-law) n. former name for a hill near Ashkirk (see also Bareback-law).

Barbersteed (bar-bur-steed) n. former land in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Barbarstede’ in a rental roll of c.1376 in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’, probably around the Hermitage Water.

Barbour (bar-bur) n. Robert (20th C.) professional Town Clerk in Hawick 1938–68, who had previously been Depute Town Clerk in Airdrie. William (13th/14th C.) received a charter of the lands of Kirk Borthwick from Robert the Bruce in 1321, having previously been in the possession of Adam of Hoddam. This proves that there was already a chapel there at that time, but we know little else about this man. He was granted lands at Philiphaugh and Shiregreen and the mills of Selkirk in 1314 and was appointed hereditary Constable of Selkirk. He also was granted Hoscote and possibly other lands in the Borthwick valley. The grant for parts of the ‘Kirkborthewyc’ lands included a third part of the mill, and the payment was certain military service, plus a suit 3 times per year. These mill lands of Kirkborthwick were said to be in the barony of ‘Minthow’, which was presumably Minto (even if that seems confusing). His name is transcribed as either ‘Barbour’ or ‘Barbitonsor’ (which is Latin for ‘barber’).

Barclay (bawr-, ber-klee) n. Alexander ‘Eck’ (1954– ) educated in Hobkirk and Denholm. He started work as an apprentice engineer with Turnbull & Scott’s, but after 2 years joined the Scots Guards and served for 7 years. He worked for the Forestry Commission and as a lorry driver, then in 1984 started as assistant janitor at Burnfoot School, where he worked for 36 years. He has been involved with the Unite union, the Scots Guards Association, the Ex-Servicemen’s Club and Hawick Rugby Club. He has been Halberdier since 2009. Andrew Jeffrey Gunion (1849–1943) born in Hawick, son of George and Jane Johnstone. He spent 9 years at school in Hawick and graduated from Edinburgh University in 1870, becoming a mathematics teacher at George Watson’s College. He was one of the men who proposed the founding of the Edinburgh Mathematical Society in 1883, and was that Society’s third President. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1886. In 1892 he moved to Glasgow High School, where he became Head Mathematics Master, retiring in 1914. He later lived with his son in London, and lived to be congratulated on being F.R.S.E. for 50 years. He was also known as a keen golfer, being Captain of Wester Gailes Club. He married Janet, who was from Shotts. Anthony (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Edinburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. He was probably son of John, writing-master in Dundee, who became Writer to the Signet in 1769 and died in 1811. George (1808–73) from Canonbie, he was a baker and publican in Hawick. He was listed on the Barclay’s

High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed at about 27 High Street, by 1851 he was at Ashkirk Toll, but was at 22 Howe-gate in 1861. He married Jane (or ‘Jean’) Johnstone, who died in 1886, aged 78. Their children included: Andrew, who died in infancy; Janet (b.c.1834), who married Bailie John Richardson; Francis (b.c.1837), Edinburgh surgeon; John (b.c.1839), spirit merchant, proprietor of ‘Barclay’s’; David (b.c.1841); Margaret (b.c.1844), who married Alex Roy of Dunfermline; and Andrew Jeffrey Gunion (b.1849), teacher in Edinburgh and Glasgow. G. (19th C.) gamedealer who was Cornet in 1874. In the following year he was unable to take up his duties are Right-Hand Man. John (1837/8-1910) of Balgownie, son of George. He was a spirit merchant who became proprietor of the Royal Bar, where the ‘Back room at Barclay’s’ was. He married Annie Henry, who died in 1935, aged 81. Their children were: Andrew, who died in infancy; Janet married Robert Young; Margaret (married Robert Young) and Maud (married farmer Douglas Tait), as well as George, Jane Johnstone, Annie Ingram and Daisy, all of whom died young. Margaret (married Robert Young) and Maud (married farmer Douglas Tait), as well as George, Jane Johnstone, Annie Ingram and Daisy, all of whom died young. Margaret (17th C.) local resident who was arrested in about 1678 for attending conventicles. Hawick merchant Thomas Waugh who was arrested in 1878 for attending rig Square, which has had many names, including ‘the Royal’ and ‘the Somewhere Else’, with ‘the Drop In’ downstairs. It recently changed its name to the designs of J.P. Alison in the 1890s. – ‘In the back room at Barclay’s The auld Stick he stands Grasping the bell rope with cold, shaking hands’ [WE], ‘... And your epic O’ auld Henry and his last battle Atween the medicine and Barclay’s yill Gan a’ unrecorded but in bruckle memory’ [DH].

barm (bawrn) n., arch. yeast, usually obtained from a brewery and used in former times for baking bread and brewing ‘treacle ale’ – ‘This cursed duty gars us roar, Just barm wi’ water workin’, Now may we p–ss for evermore, An’ never dry our forkin’ [JR], ‘... True indeed he had been shot But wi’ a cork, an’ what he thought His life bluid oozing warm, Wasna bluid, but only barm’ [FL] (from Old English).

barmie (bawrn-nee) adj., arch. yeasty – ‘The smeedum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses’ [JR].

barmkin (bawrm-kin) n., arch. a defensive enclosure around a tower house – ‘Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage castle, And Redcap was not by; And he called on a page who was witty and sage, To go to the barmkin high’ [JL].

Barnes (bawrnz) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, which was taken over by Stobs military camp. It has Barnes Burn passing it and a hill-fort above it to the south-west. In 1622 the lands of Over and Nether Swinstead were among those sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs; they were described as ‘commonly called the lands of Hilend Barnes and Newtown’, suggesting that Barns was once part of Swinstead. In 1684 the tenant, John Anderson, was among the men fined for attending conventicles. 4 men were listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Adam Armstrong lived there in 1712 and Robert Cavers in 1720. The farm was valued at £193 15s 6d in 1788, when part of the estate of the Eliotts of Stobs; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Barnes Loch (bawrnz-logh) n. small Loch to the east of Southfield, flowing into Barnes Burn above Stobs military camp. It is also known as Stobs Loch. The area used to be known as ‘Barnes Moss’ before it was dammed.

Barnes Moss (bawrnz-mos) n. marshy area to the south of Barnes Loch and east of Dodburn Hill, and former name for the area before the stream was dammed to make the Loch and reservoirs. There was once a rifle range there, used by Stobs Military Camp. It was 500 yards long, with firing points every 100 yards, and was once reached by a section of tramway (it is still ‘Barnes Moss’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Barnes Shiel (bawrnz-sheel) n. former farmstead near Barnes. It is recorded in 1790 when James Cavers (‘Auld Dunnerum’) was there.

Barnglies (bawrn-gleez) n. farm on the River Sark, close to the Border, west of Canonbie. It was once home of a branch of the Armstrongs (it is ‘Barnglesche’ in 1552, ‘Barngleis’ in 1579 and 1585, ‘Barnegleis’ in 1605, ‘Barnegleese’ in 1606 and ‘Barnegleische’ in 1622; it is marked ‘Barglongish’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map).

Barneo (bawrn-nee) n. nickname of Ian Barnes.

Barnhills (bawrnz-vI-a-dukt) n. viaduct on the Waverley Line, just before Stobs. It was completed in 1860 by the North British Railway. It has 4 arches and earth embankments.

Barney (bawrnz-nee) n. farm on the River Sark, close to the Border, west of Canonbie. It was once home of a branch of the Armstrongs (it is ‘Barnglesche’ in 1552, ‘Barngleis’ in 1579 and 1585, ‘Barnegleis’ in 1605, ‘Barnegleese’ in 1606 and ‘Barnegleische’ in 1622; it is marked ‘Barglongish’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map).

Barnhill (bawrnz-hil) n. area at the foot of Minto Crags, where the farm of Barnhills is now situated. It was in the Parish of Ancrum. It formerly held a tower, the home of Turnbull of Barnhill. The ruins of the former tower are buried in the woods there. The farm was burned around 1500 by Peter Turnbull in Bonchester and others, when the tenant appears to have been George Rutherford of Longnewton. ‘East Barnehill’ and ‘West Barnhill’ were burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. William Turnbull of Barhills is recorded in the period 1578–85. The ‘10 merk lands’ there were split in 1610 between the tenants of Spittal-on-Rule and the Grange. In the 16th and 17th centuries there were separate ‘Easter’ and ‘Wester’ parts. Hector Turnbull held the lands from at least 1531, and the Turnbulls held the lands until they were part of a loan with the Bennets of Chesters, with Ragwell Bennet buying Easter Barnhills in 1613 and William Bennet buying the lands outright in 1628. Gilbert Elliott gained the Wester part in 1618. In 1678 it was owned by Sir William Bennet and valued at £800, consisting of Easter and Wester Barnhills. William Brown was tenant there in 1683. Sir William Bennet of Rutherford sold it to Dr. William Rutherford in 1703, whose 3 daughters inherited the lands in the 1730s, from whom it passed to his son-in-law Rev. Alexander Mackenzie, and in 1749 sold to Walter Stewart, minister of Ashkirk. Walter’s son Matthew inherited the lands of Wester Barnhills, which passed to his 3 sisters on his death and they sold it to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto in 1797. The tenant in the late 1700s was Thomas Brockie, whose sons ran farms on the island of St. Helena and later farmed in Rule valley. He was recorded there in 1797, when he owned 6 horses.

Andrew Rutherford was there in the 1860s (often ‘Barnhills’, the name first appears in the 16th century and is probably from the Old English ‘beren hyll’, meaning ‘hill with the barn’; it is ‘Bernehill’ in 1502, ‘Borinhills’ in 1531, ‘Berne Hillis’ in 1541, ‘Barnehylly’ in 1548/9, ‘Barnhills’ in 1553/4, transcribed ‘Barnhills’ in 1571/2, ‘Barnhills’ in 1562, 1576 and 1580, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1579/80 and 1581, ‘Barnehills’ in 1581/2, the ‘Barnhills’ in 1584/5, ‘Bairnehillis’ in 1595, ‘Barnehills’ in 1604, ‘Bernehillis’ in 1605, ‘Barnhills’ in 1610, ‘Bernehillles’ in 1618 and ‘Barnehills’ in 1628; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Barhills’ and on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map correctly as ‘Barnhills’).

Barnhills Bed (bawrn-hilz-bed) n. a rocky ledge at Minto Crags, named after the notorious riever Turnbull of Barnhills. He lived at Barnhills Castle below, a peel tower near where the Barnhills farm now stands, and was said to have used the ledge as a refuge (also sometimes ‘Barnhill’s’) — ‘On Minto Crags the moonbeams glint, Where Barnhills had his bed of flint; . . . Mid cliffs from whence his eagle eye For many a league his prey could spy’ [SWS].

Barnhills Toor (bawrn-hilz-toor) n. former tower at Barnhill, once inhabited by a branch of the Turnbulls. It measured about 10.5 m by 7.5 m, with thick walls. The ground floor had a vaulted ceiling, 2 windows and gunloops.

Barn Knowe (bawrn-now) n. former farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It appears on the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, between Branxholm and Whitlaw, suggesting that it is fairly local. However, it is possible what is meant is the small hill of this name on the opposite side of the Ettrick from Carcaban, near Tushielaw Tower. In 1680 Margaret Martin from there was found guilty of trying to steal some shoes from a market stall in Hawick. John Scott and Robert Scott were also recorded there in 1680.

Barn Pool (bawrn-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water, just to the south of where the Kershop Burn joins (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Barns see Barnes

Barns (bawrnz) n. possible name for a former farmstead on Branxholme estate, just north of the Castle, probably corresponding to the Birns o Chaipelhill (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Barometer (thu-baw-ro-mee-ur) n. barometer and thermometer, gifted to the Town by manufacturer Charles John Wilson in 1898, and fixed to the outside of the Town Hall.

baron (baw-rin) n. someone holding a barony from the Crown, with certain privileges, including administration of justice, collecting of taxes from markets, appointment of clergy, etc. In Scotland there was a distinction between Lord Barons or ‘greater barons’ and ‘small’ or ‘minor barons’. Before 1587 any landowner whose lands had been erected into a barony (as opposed to being simply a Laird) could sit in Parliament and enjoy certain other privileges, while after that date they chose 2 of their number from each county as Commissioners. Their privileges were almost completely lost after 1747.

the Baron (thu-baw-rin) n. nickname for James Wilson of the 18th century.

Baron Depute (baw-rin-de-pew) n. official appointed to represent the interests of a Baron, essentially the same as a ‘baron bailie’ or bailie o regality’. He presided over the Court of Regality or Baron’s Court, which had extensive jurisdiction over the Barony, causing many disputes with the Magistrates of Hawick. The position ended with the abolishment of regalities in 1747. In Hawick the position was held by: George Scott of Boonraw, 1668; Walter Scott of Harwood, 1669; Thomas Rutherford, 1672; Robert Scott of Horsleyhill (probably), 1676; Gideon Scott of Falnash, 1677; Walter Scott of Alton, from 1686; William Scott, 1693; Gideon Scott of Falnash, 1700; Walter Elliot, 1709–18; Robert Howison, 1736; Walter Scott, 1740.

Baron o Hawick (baw-rin-o-hIk) n. holder of the title associated with the lands of the Barony of Hawick. The Baron had local legal powers, and was supposedly the protector of the town. He held a court that decided on legal and ecclesiastical matters; in Hawick this was delegated to the Baron’s agent, the Bailie (or Chamberlain) from...

at least the mid-17th century (‘Falnash’s court’ is in the 1722 Parish records). In earlier centuries the court would have been a serious matter, trying cases as serious as killing and major theft, and with the ability to sentence wrongdoers to death. The baron also collected rent and other fees for fairs and markets, and for the use of his weighthouse (which was in the former Town House). This right of custom was abused on several occasions, leading to riots and legal challenges to the baron’s authority. Locally the baron’s power was usurped in the 18th century, when the Scots of Buccleuch held most of the land in the Parish, although the title of Baron had passed to the Douglases of Queensberry. The formal end of the Baron’s power came in the early 19th century. The first Baron was probably one of the Norman Lovel family in the 1120s or 30s. However, it is unclear exactly when the barony was established and who the first baron was. The Lovels of Castle Cary and Hawick succeeded for about the next 200 years. The barony went briefly to the Murrays (starting with Maurice, Earl of Strathearn) in the 14th century and then passed to the Douglases, probably through the marriage of Sir William Douglas (3rd Earl), to Joan Murray (daughter of Maurice Murray and widow of Sir Thomas Murray). Details of the first century of Douglas control are sketchy, because of family power struggles and disputes with the Crown, as well as the minority of some of the heirs. In about 1407 the Barony was granted to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig by the 4th Earl of Douglas. Yearly payment was to be an arrow in ‘blech farm’ on the Feast of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. The Barony was confirmed to Douglas of Drumlanrig by James I in 1412, the charter written in the King’s own hand. After the first Douglas of Drumlanrig died in 1421 the barony was in the hands of the Earl of Douglas until being inherited by the 2nd William of Drumlanrig in 1427. There were then a series of Douglases of Drumlanrig, one of whom granted Hawick its ‘burgh of barony’ status. Those associated with being the ‘generous donor’ are Sir William Douglas, who was the 6th Douglas of Drumlanrig and Sir James, who was the 7th. The Barony was passed to the direct descendants of the Douglases of Drumlanrig, the Douglases of Queensberry, who still hold the title ‘Lord of Hawick’ today. However, the direct influence of the family on the Hawick area ceased in the 17th century, and the Barony (as distinct from the title of Baron) was granted to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in 1675. An approximate list of Barons is: Ralph Lovel ??–c.1159; Henry Lovel c.1159–c.94; Ralph Lovel c.1194–c.1207; Henry Lovel c.1207–c.18; Richard Lovel 1218–53 (possibly 2 generations); Henry Lovel c.1253–62/3; Richard Lovel 1262/3–63/4; Hugh Lovel 1264–c.90; Sir Richard Lovel c.1291–c.1307; Probably granted to both English and Scottish noblemen 1310s–30s; Sir Maurice Murray c.1342–46; Sir Thomas Murray c.1358–61; Sir Archibald Douglas, 3rd Earl of Douglas, possibly 1362–c.1400; Archibald Douglas, 4th Earl of Douglas, c.1401–c.07; Sir William Douglas, 1st of Drumlanrig, c.1407–21; Sir William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, 1427–44; William Douglas, 3rd of Drumlanrig, 1450–64; Sir William Douglas, 4th of Drumlanrig, 1464–84; James Douglas 1484–98; Sir William Douglas c.1498–1513; Sir James Douglas 1514–78; Sir James Douglas 1578–1615; Sir William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry, 1615–40; James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry, 1640–71; William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry, 1671–95; James Douglas, 2nd Duke of Queensberry, 1695–1711; Charles Douglas, 3rd Duke of Queensberry, 1711–78; William Douglas, 4th Duke of Queensberry, 1778–1810; Charles Douglas of Kelhead, 6th Marquess of Queensberry, 1810–37; John Douglas, 7th Marquess of Queensberry, 1837–56; Archibald William Douglas, 8th Marquess of Queensberry, 1856–58; John Sholto Douglas, 9th Marquess of Queensberry, 1858–1900; Percy Sholto Douglas, 10th Marquess of Queensberry, 1900–20; Francis Archibald Kelhead Douglas, 11th Marquess of Queensberry, 1920–54; and David Harrington Angus Douglas, 12th Marquess of Queensberry, 1954–.

Baron o Wulton (baw-rin-ő-wulz-in) n. holder of the title associated with the Barony of Wilton, which was for all of recorded history split into two half baronies; the eastern part being similar to what we now think of as Wilton, and the western part essentially being the northern side of the Borthwick valley. The first recorded Baron was probably Sir Roger ‘de Wilton’, although the evidence that he was not connected with another Wilton is perhaps weak. But certainly we have Robert ‘de Wilton’ in the last years of the 12th century, followed by John, probably a second John, and then it appears the eponymous family failed in the male line. The Baron went briefly to Walter de Percelay, son of Joan of Wilton. Lade Jane de Vesey was recorded as owner of part of the Barony in the late 13th century, and soon afterwards Alexander III gave the Baron’s Folly

In the 14th century, then the Douglasses (probably through marriage), and to the Douglasses of Drumlanrig around 1407. An irregularity around 1412 meant that the inheritance of the Barony was not properly endorsed by the Crown (and this was not fixed until 1511). When inherited in 1427 the Barony was valued at 300 merks yearly. William, Earl of Douglas had a sasine for the Barony in 1446 (during the minority of Douglas of Drumlanrig). In 1450 it was inherited by William, son of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig, and at that time was held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for payment of one arrow in Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. It was regranted to William of Drumlanrig in 1459, after being in the King’s ‘for certain causes’, and in 1464 was inherited by the next William of Drumlanrig. In 1484 it was inherited by James, son of William of Drumlanrig; the Barony at that time was in the hands of the King and was said to be waste, but in time of peace the Baron’s lands were still valued at 300 merks. The Barony was again in the King’s hands when granted to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511; at that point the Baron’s possessions were East and West Mains, Crumhaugh, Kirkton Mains, Flex, ‘Murinese’, Ramsaycleuch and Broadlee, along with other lands held ‘in tenandry’, namely Howpasley, Chisholme, Whithope, Dryden, Commonside, Over Harwood, Emmetshiels, Teindside, Carlinpool, Nether Harwood, Weensland, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langheugh, Larristofts, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Whitchesters, Fenwick, Adderstone, Adderstoneshiel and Whames. These lands were incorporated into a Barony, for William’s service to the King (although presumably this was a re-incorporation), and the town of Hawick was then confirmed as having all the privileges of a burgh in barony. In 1514 the barony passed to James Douglas, who held the same 300 merks of lands and patronage of churches (for payment of an arrow at the Feast of the Assumption) and superiority of the Barony (for payment of a suit yearly at any of the 3 head courts of Roxburghshire). It was still said to be worth 300 merks in 1615, when the listed among the Baron’s lands were ‘Mairishauch’, Shaws, Trowhaugh, Philhope, Eilrig, Teindsideburn and Slaidhills. Although the lands of the Barony passed to the Scotts in 1674/5, the title remained with the Douglasses, formally belonging to the Viscountcy of Drumlanrig and held by the Marquess of Queensberry – ‘it’s caaed the Barony o Hawick cos Hawick’s the best toon in the world, bar ony’.

tower-like structure on top of Down (or Dwon’s) Law (202 m, 663 ft), east of the A68 shortly before Lilliard’s Edge. It was built in the 1780s as a summer house and observatory by Robert Rutherfurd of Fainington, who had received the courtesy title of Baron of the Russian Empire after their war against the Turks in 1770.

the Baron’s Toor (thu-baw-rinz-toor) n.

Barony of Wulton

Barony of Wulton  (baw-ri-nee-ô-wul’-in) n.

The earliest Baron of Wilton on record was Lady Jane Vesey, who may have been an heiress. She possessed the (eastern) half-barony, which was re-granted by King Alexander (III probably) to her and her husband, Thomas ‘de Charteris’. Century. In 1303/4 the eastern half barony was confirmed to belong to William de Charteris. It was then held for the fourth part of a knight’s fee, and worth 10 merks yearly. At about the same time the other half-barony went to Walter ‘de Partchay’ (Percy). In 1306 the half baronies were given to Henry Wardlaw and Gilbert Maxwell. The western half Barony (essentially corresponding to northern side of the Borthwick valley) was held by the Wardlaws until the late 15th century, when it passed to the Scotts. The eastern half Barony went to the Langlands family from at least 1451 and was held by them for the next 300 years. There is another, unrelated, set of Barons of Wilton, the de Grays, in Hereford. In 1586 the lands of ‘Overhill, Woltoum Burne and Woltoum Grene, called the half baronie of Woltoum’ were referred to among the properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The Barony was included among lands combined into the Lordship of Hailes according to the service of heirs for Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. The Barony was listed among the properties of the Scotts in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch.

Sir John Nicholson (1872–1952) grandson of a major clothing factory owner and benefactor to the city of Leeds. His father pre-deceased his grandfather and so he became 2nd Baronet of Barran in 1905. He married Alice Margarita Parks and later Esther Frances Fisher, and their children were Sir John Leighton, Elise Margarita, Edward Nicholson and Sir David Haven. He was educated at Winchester College and Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1909 he became Liberal M.P. for the Hawick Burghs, and held the seat until it was dissolved in 1918. He was one of the chief guests at the 1914 quatercentenary Common Riding. He held the positions of Parliametary Private Secretary to the Home Secretary, Foreign Secretary, President of the Local Government Board and Postmaster-General. From 1910–16 he was Parliametary Private Secretary to the Prime Minister. He was also a J.P. in Yorkshire.

Adam (1777–1825/6) son of Robert, he was born at Langraw, near Berwickshire. He farmed at Stonedge and at Deansbrae. His wife was Mary. Their children were: Adam (b.1807), who probably died young; Robert (b.1808), Archibald (b.1809) and Adam (b.1812), who all farmed at Spittal Tower and died unmarried; Isobel (1816/7–1855), who died unmarried; Walter (1819–49), baker who died in London and whose son was Walter Scott, Provost of Hawick; Thomas (1821/2–1908), also a farmer near Denholm; John (1823/4–1906), farmer at Thornbank, who died at Denholm; and George Camptown.

Alexander (17th C.) one of earliest known local members of this family. His daughter Isobel was born in Ashkirk Parish in 1632. Alexander Barrie (18th/19th C.) native of Hawick who taught English in Edinburgh. He was author of several school books, including ‘A Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language for the use of Schools’ (1794), ‘A Spelling and Pronouncing Catechism’ (1796), ‘An Epitomie of English Grammar’ (1800), ‘The Tyro’s Guide to Wisdom and Wealth with Exercises in Spelling’ (published by George Caw in Edinburgh, 1800, with several further editions), ‘A collection of English prose and verse, for the use of schools’ (1800, and many other editions), and ‘Concise spelling book, for the use of children’ (1824). A portrait of him exists. Archibald (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Southdean Parish register in 1699. He is the earliest known family member in the Rulewater area, where they later tenanted many farms. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as cottar at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

farmer at Langraw, near Bonchester. His children included: Walter (b.1745), who probably died young; Robert (b.1747), said to be the eldest son; Walter (again), who farmed Langraw along with his older brother; Thomas (b.1752); William (b.1749), who died young; and Helen (or 'Nellie', b.1754), who also died young. In 1748 he was living at Weensmoor. James (b.1864) son of John and Helen Tunbull, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Hawick and was author of author of 'Historical Sketch of the Hawick Golf Club' (1898). He was Honorary Secretary and Treasurer of the club for many years, and also held the club record for some time. In addition he was Secretary of the Border Golfers' Association and also involved with the Tennis Club. He married Margaret Scott Nichol (whose father and brother were Provosts) and she died in 1942. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths there. John (b.1816) son of Walter and Christian Jamieson. He was farmer at Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was still there in 1868. He married Helen Turnbull. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Sundhope; Archibald, from Newcastle; Robert, Managing Director of Leven Brothers; William Turnbull, doctor in Hawick; Christina Jane, who married Rev. J. Panton, minister at Langholm; and James, a solicitor in Hawick. John (1847/8–1907) farmer at South Berryfell. He may have been an older son of John from Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Lillico, who died in 1926, aged 78. Their children included: Christine (d.1907); John; Walter (d.1917) killed in action at Messines; Helen, Mrs. Turnbull (d.1966); and Margaret Ann, Mrs. Hall (d.1972). Robert (1747–1809) eldest son of George, born at Weensmoor. In 1772 he married Margaret, daughter of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Howa. At that time he lived at Sclenty, but moved to Langraw on 1773. In 1786 he had a 15 year tack of Langraw with his brother Walter. In 1801 they had a lawsuit with the new purchasers, the Olivers, over upkeep on the farm. He is probably the Robert listed as tenant of 'Stentyhaugh' on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. His children were: Nelly; George, who farmed at Howaill and died without children; Adam, who farmed at Stonedge and Deanbrae; and Walter, who farmed at Hawthornside. The Margaret Barrie who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1815 could have been his wife. Robert (b.1808) eldest surviving son of Adam. He farmed at Spittal Tower. He was listed there in 1851 and in 1861 is recorded there as farmer of 530 acres; he lived there with his mother Mary, brothers Archibald, Adam, Thomas and John, and sister Isabella. He died unmarried. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in the 1860s. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in 1706 when he had a child born in fornication with Margaret Rule. It was baptised Agnes in Hawick, with witnesses weavers David Miller and David Taylor. His surname is written 'Berry'. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in 1745 when Agnes Lorraine was cited by Kirkton Parish for becoming pregnant by him. He was said to have come over from 'the water of Roull' and to then be a married man in England. In 1748 it appears that he married Agnes Lorraine (although this seems unclear) and was rebuked for his sin. She may have been a daughter of John Lorraine and Margaret Glendinning. Thomas (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School 1788–98. He replaced George Lamb in May of 1788, according to minutes of the Kirk Session, and resigned in July 1798, when he was replaced by James Kirk. Nothing else is known about him. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Teindside on the 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the same man as the Rector of the Grammar School. Thomas of Hartsgarth (18th/19th C.) owner of the farm in the early 1800s. He was listed there as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. Thomas (1821/2–1908) son of Adam. He worked as a ploughman on the family farm at Spittal Tower. He may be the Thomas who acted as librarian in Denholm. Thomas (d.1913) contractor in Denholm. He left no heirs when he died and his business fell to the Crown. Walter (d.1819) son of George. He was tenant farmer at Langraw along with his older brother Robert. He was recorded as tenant there in 1797 (along with Thomas Hope), when he owned 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Langraw in 1797. The owner of Langraw died before the lease expired in 1801, and there was a 2 year legal battle over the costs of repairs and rent. His children were: George; Alexander, who was on the poor roll most of his life; and Betty, who married mason Robert Scott. He died at Kirknowe. Walter (b.1780) son of Robert. He was farmer at Hawthornside. In 1813 he married Christian Jameson of Ashkirk Parish, and she died in 1858, aged 66. Their children were: Robert, who died at Denholm; John, who was tenant at Hartsgarth; James, farmer at Harden; Agnes, who married William Veitch of Inchbonny; Adam, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married James Wilson, farmer at Cleuchhead and Cockburn; and Walter, farmer at Stonedge. Walter (1819–49) son of Adam, farmer at Stonedge. He was a baker, who died in London, and is buried in Brompton Cemetery. His son was Walter Scott, who became Provost of Hawick. Walter (b.1829) youngest son of Walter and Christian Jamieson. He was born at Howahill. He moved to Highend farm in the Rule valley, and also tenanted Stonedge. He may be the Walter who is recorded along with Robert as tenant of Hawthornside in the 1860s. He married dressmaker Jane Hogarth. Their children were: John; Walter; Adam; Kate; Maggie and Agnes. Walter Scott (d.1912) born in Maldon, Essex, son of Walter and grandson of Adam. He was from an old Rulewater family and was educated in Bedrule. He joined the Royal Bank of Scotland in Hawick at age 15, then worked with Nixon & McKie and Wilson’s. He then began a partnership with James Scoon, forming Scoon & Barrie, tweed manufacturers, Teviotdale Mills, J.L. Hood later becoming a partner too. He abandoned manufacturing, farmed for a while in Rulewater, then founded Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, around 1900. In about 1879 he and James Scoon had a double cottage built on newly feud land at Loch Park. He gave 15 years service to Hawick Co-op, being secretary and general manager until 1887. He became a Councillor in 1889, a Magistrate in 1891, was Provost 1893–96, and re-entered the Council in 1904. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being Acting Father in 1896, while he was still Provost. He carried the Flag from the Nipknowes to St. Leonard’s in at least 1991–93. His Provostship saw much discussion about the new Fever Hospital and the demolition of the Coffin-End. He was one of the founders of Wilton Bowling Club, being first Vice-President, and presented a cup to the club in 1896. In addition he was a member of the Hawick Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Society, and helped resuscitate Mosspaul Inn in 1900. He married Williamina Rae. Their children were Adam, plus 3 daughters. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (1879/80–1917) son of John, farmer at Berryfell. He was nephew of Dr. William Turnbull ‘the Doctor’ (1859–1935) son of John and Helen Turnbull. He was born at Hartsgarth in Castleton and graduated from Edinburgh University in 1880. He was a ship’s surgeon for a while, but moved to Hawick in 1881, where he became assistant and then partner with Dr. McLeod and later Dr. McDonald. He lived at 18 Bridge Street. He was also Medical Officer for Teviothead Parish Council and Certifying Surgeon under the Factories Act. He was Hawick’s first ‘Free Gardener’, being Medical Officer for the Lodge for many years. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing and was Callants’ Club President in 1910. He was also involved with the Lawn Tennis Club, once Captain of the Golf Club and known for his dramatic talents. He was presented with 1,000 guineas, raised by public subscription, on the occasion of his jubilee of 1931. He may also have lived at Sundhope (also spelled ‘Barry’ in earlier documents).

Barrie an Kersel’s (baw-ree-an-ker-sulz) n. former hosiery manufacturers with main factory at Annfield Mills, on the left-hand side at the end of Croft Road. The firm was established by Walter Barrie and Robert Kersel in 1903, originally to manufacture knitted hosiery and underwear. In the 1920s they introduced cardigans and sweaters, focussing on fashion from the 1930s. In 1962 the firm changed its name to Barrie Knitwear, known locally as ‘Barrie’s’.

Barrie’s (baw-reez) n. knitwear company, formerly at Teviot Crescent, now based at Burnfoot Industrial Estate. It grew from Barrie & Kersel’s, which changed its name in 1962. In 1966 it became part of Dawson International and moved to a purpose-built factory at Burnfoot in 1975. Concentrating on high-end fashions, the firm also... supplies cashmere and luxury knitwear to many prestigious couture houses and designer labels (officially secret, but said to include Chanel and Hermès). The firm was taken over by Chanel in 2012.

barrin-ooot (baw-rin-oo’t) n., arch. former custom at Hawick Grammar School of the boys hiding in the school at lunchtime and locking the door, so they would get a half-day off. This was generally done on the shortest day of the year until about 1868. The same tradition was also carried out in other local schools, surviving at Denholm and Roberton until the early 1900s, and in Hobbirk until the 1940s. It is also known elsewhere in Britain, being recorded at an Aberdeen Grammar school in the 16th century – ‘Barring oot day’ was still a subject of discussion, but no one seemed keen to try’ [GOW].

barrin-ooot day (baw-rin-oo’t-dâ) n., arch. day on which pupils annually carried out the barrin-ooot tradition. This was typically the shortest day of the year, i.e. about December 21st.

Barton (bar’in) n. Rev. Angus (1785/6–1861) born in Morton Parish, he was assistant in Edinburgh University Library. In early life he acted as a tutor to the young Lord John Russell. In 1822 he was presented to Castleton Parish by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry and was ordained there as minister the same year. His name is incorrectly recorded as ‘A. Burton’ in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was very conservative in his views, making sure that the families of farmers sat apart from the families of shepherds and ploughmen at Communion. He insisted on punctuality and made sure that fast-days were properly observed. He was a close friend of ‘Robbie’ and ‘Willie’ Shaw (ministers at Teviotdale, then Ewes, and at Langholm), as well as Rev. Adam Cunningham of Eskdalemuir. He gave evidence at the inquest into the riots that took place in Hawick at the election of 1837. He received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1856. He remained as minister at Castleton until his death. He wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. Edward (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was a shepherd at Harecleuchhead in Kirkton Parish in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Jane and David. He left for the parish of St. Andrews in Livingston.

Bathgate (bawth-gā’) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Baggat’e. His name appears as ‘Master’ (meaning he was a cleric) in the 1220s, and he was also a Burgess of Roxburgh. He was listed as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1237/8. He is buried at Melrose Abbey.

the Baths (thu-bawths) n. the Public Baths, also known as the Corporation Swimming Baths, gifted to the Town in 1912 by James Glenny, Charles John Wilson and George Murray Wilson of Wilson & Glenny Ltd. They included a swimming pool and private bathing facilities. Earlier proposals had been made for a public swimming facility, including at the Haugh around 1888. It is said that part of the reason it was built was to stop children swimming in the nearby mill lade. The design was by Alexander Inglis. A public clothes washing building (the Steam) was added in the early 1930s, and closed in 1981. The facilities were long in use as changing and washing facilities by the local junior rugby teams. The pool closed in 1982, when Teviotdale Leisure Centre opened. In 1985 the building was converted into a sports facility catering to small-bore shooting, boxing, etc.

the Battle o the Brig (thu-baw’ul-ō-thu-brig) n. name sometimes given for a fight between 2 bands of gypsies around the Auld Brig of Hawick perhaps in the year 1772 or 1773, described by Mr. Simpson. It was fought between the Kennedy and the Taits. The Kennedys were led by Alexander Kennedy, his wife Jean Ruthven, father-in-law Little Wull Ruthven (also known as ‘the Earl of Hell’), along with Muckle Wull Ruthven and many others, including women and children. The Taits were led by Auld Rob...
Tait, his wife Jean Gordon, Jacob Tait, young Rob Tait, etc. They were armed with cudgels, cutlasses and serrated pieces of metal on sticks. Jean Ruthven was wounded and the Kennedys retreated, leaving Alexander Kennedy alone on the bridge to battle the Taits. He was thrown new cudgels by on-lookers, until the melee was broken up by the arrival of the constables. Sir Walter Scott describes in 1819 a court case in which he defended a Kennedy who had killed an Irving in Jedburgh, the feud apparently going back ‘to a desperate quarrel and battle on Hawick Green’ some 40 years earlier, involving the grandfathers of both the assailant and victim; this was surely the same event.

battles (baw'-ilz) n., pl. several minor battles and skirmishes took place relatively near to Hawick, and local residents played a major role in many other engagements further afield. He became minister of the Hawick Congregational Kirk in 1927. His time as minister saw the church adopt its modern name of James Campbell of Edinburgh, and she died in 1848. Their children included: Margaret Campbell, who married Rev. Adam Gourlay, who succeeded as minister of Lilliesleaf; Jemima Nicolina, who married William King, minister at Nelson, Ontario; Maria Anne, who married Alexander Fraser of Edinburgh; Harriet, who married Joseph French, a chemist in Australia; John David, who died young; and Helen Frances, who married E. Naysmith Houston, a doctor in Australia.

Baxtongill (bawk-stin-gil) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, adjacent to Hillhouse. On the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was combined with Hillhouse. However, it is unclear what part was Baxtongill, and whether there was a small stream of that name there.

Baxtonlees (bawk-stin-leez) n. another name for Peel in the upper headwaters of the Liddel, near the eastern border of Castleton Parish. The tower of ‘Martin Crosiers of bakstonleis’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. It was ‘Baxtounlyis’ among lands in upper Liddesdale that belonged to Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. In 1607 it was purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from John, son of John Home of Carolsyde. John Colthart was there in 1622. A tower house is marked as ‘Baikstonleys’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map, near the head of the Liddel, to the east of Myredykes. In 1645 William, son of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, was served heir to his father in these lands. However, by 1653, 1661 and 1663 it is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, John Elliot ‘in Backestoneles alias peel’ paid tax on land valued at £160 in Castleton Parish. By 1788 it was owned by Archibald Douglas of Douglas. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 listed ‘Backstonlees, Blackstonelees, or Peel’, when it was still valued at £160 and owned by Lord Douglas. Later in the 19th century it was owned by John Elliot-Scott (also spelled ‘Baxtonlies’, as well as ‘Backstanelees’, etc.; it is ‘Baxstanelees’ in 1622, ‘Bextanleyis’ in 1645, ‘Bastounlyis’ in 1653, ‘Baxtounleyes’ in 1657 and 1661 and ‘Baxtonelies’ in 1663).

the B.Bs. (thu-bee-beez) n. the Boys Brigade, founded by Sir William Smith in Scotland in 1883, now a worldwide organisation. In Hawick it began in 1893 (although something with the same name is recorded in 1888), and there were once as many as 6 companies, with 4 surviving: 1st Hawick (Wilton Parish); 2nd Hawick (St. Mary’s & Old Parish); 5th Hawick (Burnfoot Parish); and 6th Hawick (Trinity). Meeting spaces have included the Burcleuch Memorial, West Port Church, Hawick Parish Church, Wilton Church, Burnfoot Church and Trinity Church. The Denholm company was disbanded in the 1980s, but reformed in 2005. An important activity has been the annual dinner at St. Boswells inaugurated in 1805 to commemorate the False Alarm. It was started after a group left the Monteviot toll-house without paying for their drinks, when they heard of the alarm. They were asked to return 12 months later to settle up. It took place at the toll-bar for a few years, then in St. Boswells itself, lapsing after 1879 and was revived for the centenary.

Beaconsfield Terracce (bee-kinz-feeld-te-ris) n. street in the West End, built in 1878 and named after Benjamin Disraeli (1804–1881), who was Earl of Beaconsfield and Prime Minister at the time. Earlier the street was referred to as Westport Road, and the region immediately to the east known as Wylie’s Dub. The first houses were built by Messrs. Smith & Scott and the lower ones a little later by James Scott & Sons, builders (note the pronunciation differs from what Mr. Disraeli would have said; also spelled ‘Beconsfeld’).

Beaconsfield Terrace Lane (bee-kinz-feeld-te-ris-lin) n. lane behind Beaconsfield Terrace, reached from Green Lane. It is essentially the top houses of Beaconsfield Terrace, which are reached from the back (also known as ‘Beaconsfield Lane’).

Beattie son (bee'-sin, bá'-ee-sin) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded as 'Ade Batesoun' among men who raided the farms of Montbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. He must have been a supporter of the Armstrongs, who led the raid. John 'John o the Score' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among Armstrongs and about 500 others accused of raiding the farms of the Lairds of Prendick and Ryle in Northumberland. His surname is transcribed as 'Bateson' and it is unclear what his surname meant. Note that there is an Armstrong of the same nickname recorded in 1590 and so there may be confusion here. William (17th C.) named on a list of 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany.

Beaton (bee'-in) n. James (1473–1539) 6th and youngest son of John of Balfour. He was also uncle of Cardinal David Beaton. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1493 and became Precentor of Dornoch Cathedral, Provost of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, Prior of Whithorn and Abbot of Dunfermline. He was also appointed Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, succeeding his brother David of Creich. In 1508/9 he was made Bishop of Galloway, but before being consecrated he was selected as the successor to Robert Blackadder as Archbishop of Glasgow. He was thus Archbishop in Teviotdale and following Flodden he became the country's senior churchman and crowned the infant James V. In 1515 he became Lord Chancellor of Scotland and was an important political figure during the King's minority. In 1522 he was transferred to the bishopric of St. Andrews. He helped convince the King to ally the nation with France rather than England, thus incurring the wrath of Henry VIII. He died at St. Andrews. His seal bore an elaborate image of St. Kentigern, with shields and the words ‘SIGILLUM JACOBI ARCHIEPISCOPI GLASGOWEN’. James (1517–1603) son of James of Balfarg, who was a nephew of James, Archbishop of Glasgow. He was also a nephew of Cardinal David. He was educated in Paris and in 1550 was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550, although not yet being in priest’s orders. He was consecrated in 1552, becoming the last Archbishop before the Reformation. Like those before him, his jurisdiction included Teviotdale. He stood on the side of the queen-regent Mary of Guise, and opposed much that was happening in Scotland. In 1560 he left for France, taking many of the documents and treasures of the diocese with him; most of the precious objects disappeared during the French Revolution although he returned the was among the clergy declared as outlaws by the Privy Council. Somewhat bizarrely he was restored to the archbishopric and all its benefices in 1598 ‘notwithstanding that he has never acknowledged the religion professed within the realm’. He survived to see the Union of the Crowns, and died on a day when James VII was on his way to London. He is buried in Paris. Janet (see Janet Scott. Robert (b.c.1479) younger son of John, 4th of Balfour. The family name was also spelled ‘Bethume’ and ‘Betoun’. His brother was Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was Abbot of Cùpar and then Abbot of Melrose from shortly before 1510 until the early 1520s. In 1519 he assigned Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as bailie to the Abbey’s lands of Melroseland (formerly ‘Betoun’ and variants).

Beattie (bee-ee, bee-tee, ba’ee) n. Adam (d.1504) hanged at Dumfries for assisting the ‘King’s Rebels, at the horn, being of Eskdale in their ‘Thefts and Treasonable deeds’. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adame of the Burne’ in Monipennie’s list of Borderers drawn up in the 1580s. He was from somewhere in Eskdale. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Riccarton in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam of Hartsgarth (17th/18th C.) sold Hartsgarth and Langhaugh to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, probably in the early 1700s. He was probably the Adam who married a daughter of Christopher Irving, from whom he inherited Hartsgarth. Adam (18th C.) managed the farm of Hermitage for Robert Elliot in the mid-1700s. Elliot was farmer of an extensive set of farms centred on Braidlie. It is possible he was the ‘Adam Beatie of Leaugh’ (perhaps Leaugh in Liddesdale) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. Adam (1800/1–79) son of William and Isabel Glendinning. In 1851 he was a carter on South Hermitage Street in Newcastle. He married Helen Adams (1800/1–80). Their children included: William (b.1835), who died in infancy; William (1836/7–56); Archibald; Andrew; and Agnes. He could be the Adam, servant at Redheugh, charged as father of Jean Thomson’s child in 1832. Adam (19th C.) labourer in Liddesdale. In 1861 he presented a large stone celt from Toftholm to the Archaeological Society. There were 2 agricultural labourers living of that name living in Newcastle-on at the time. Alexander ‘Alie’ (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘oy’ (i.e. grandson) of James Scott of Gilmanscleuch in 1609. He was one of the men along with Walter Scott of Headshaw) who Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset, while they were ‘at the horn’ for not giving assurance not to harm Walter Scott of Tushielaw. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. He may also have had a brother William. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Margaret Murray, also from Hawick. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrew of Zerbyre’ on Monipennie’s 1580s list of Borderers. His lands were probably Yetbyres in Eskdalemuir. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at court in Hawick and Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Workman’s Andro’ along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He may have been the son of William born in Roberton in 1763. He was recorded at Craikhope in 1794. He married Jane Thomson in Roberton in 1793 and their children included: William (b.1794); and Jean (b.1797). Andrew (1787–1866) from Westerkirk, he lived at ‘Elliotfield’ (presumably Elliot’s Field on the Slitrig) in the 1820s and 30s, and some of his children were born in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. He was later tenant farmer at Watcarrick. He married Isobel Jackson (1788–1875). Their children included: Jane (1813–32), who died at Elliot’s Field; Agnes (1818–43); Helen (b.1821), born in Cavers Parish; Walter (1826–32), also died at Elliot’s Field; Margaret (b.1827), born in Hawick Parish; William (b.1833), born in Cavers Parish and later farmer at Watcarrick; and Walter (again, b.1836). Andrew (1807–65) son of John and Cilia Hall. He was a flesher in Denholm. He rented a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning, adjacent to Robson the blacksmiths. In 1835 he married Helen Ferguson (1817–82). Their children included: John (b.1837); Thomas (b.1839); Cecil (b.1841); John (again, 1843–1912); Cecil (b.1845); Helen (b.1849); George (b.1851); and Andrew (b.1858). Andrew (20th C.) son of John Beattie, his mother being Helen, he was born at 25 Loan. He was related to the Ekrons of Hawick. He was educated at St. Cuthbert’s and the High School and apprenticed as a frameworker with Wilglen Knitwear, later moving to Lyle & Scott. He joined the 4th Battalion, K.O.S.B., and reached the rank of Regimental Sergeant Major. He was famed for his tidyness and nicknamed ‘Little Nap’ (or Wee Napoleon). He was awarded the M.B.E. and Belgian Croix de Guerre for service during the war. Along with a few other men he celebrated the Common Riding in the town of Letzingen, Germany, using a flag provided by the ladies of Pringle’s mill. He was on the Common-Riding Committee and also associated with Weens Home, the Burns Club and Lodge 424. In 1939 he married Peggie Sim (from Silloth) and their son Drew was a teacher at Selkirk High School. He lived at 15 Langhope Drive. He died at the age of 84. Archibald (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parish’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and is recorded as ‘Beger’ (presumably meaning he was a beggar). Archibald (18th C.) tenant in Grainfoot. His son John (1751/2–77) is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Arthur (16th C.) listed as ‘Mungois Arthure’ in the list of Borderers from the 1580s. He is listed under ‘Batisons of Cowghorlæe’. He is ‘Mungois Arthur Batie’ when listed as a relief pledge for ‘Alyis Hew’ and ‘Johmne the Braid’ at a court held in Hawick in 1569. Arthur (17th C.) tenant at ‘Chorlesoip’ (probably Thorlieshope) in 1646 when he presented a bond for Adam Armstrong ‘called Rattas in Blackhoip’. This was along with John ‘in Ryndhills’ who was probably a relative. Arthur (17th C.) resident at the farms of ‘Gulenflatt & Grecholme’ in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1649 he was one of 2 men chosen as collectors of the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water. He witnessed baptisms in 1648 for Andrew Turnbull, in 1654 for William Hall and in 1656 for Robert Scott. He married Margaret Quarrie and their daughter Janet was married in 1644 (perhaps the Janet who married William Lamb). It seems likely he was father of James. David (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded in Roberton itself in 1735 when his son John was baptised. David (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Witton parish in 1739. Their children included David (b.1740). David (18th C.) tenant in Mangerton. His children William (1757/8–80) and John (who died in infancy) are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He is probably the commissioner of the people, who in 1753 requested a supply of preachers from the Associate Presbytery of Edinburgh. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Oakwood, on the estate of Hugh Scott of Harden. The Border Counties’ Magazine describes how he used to have a pet ram, who would but all visitors to his farm. It was the terror of the neighbourhood until a packman, who was chased from the farm, was forced to take his ‘ellwand’ to it, crippling one of its legs. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Edward (16th/17th C.) fined along with several others in 1699 for harassing and threatening Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was referred to as ‘callit of Calsay’: it is unclear where this was, although among his accomplices were Armstrongs of Liddesdale. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in Hudshouse in 1611 when ‘Adie Rakkes’ was cautioner for him at court in Jedburgh. Francis ‘Francie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Steill’ in 1623 when he served as caution for Mungo ‘in Carretrig’. He was probably tenant in the Steel in Liddesdale. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale. These were Rockstead, ‘Neirland’ (probably Netherraw) and ‘Podotoun’ (probably Paddington). Francis (17th C.) recorded as tenant in an unnamed farm in Castleton Parish in 1694. This is listed between the farms of Langhaugh and Redheugh. Francis (17th C.) tenant at Peel in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Girnwood. His son William was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1703. David (b.1707) was probably also his son. Francis (19th C.) from the Hawick area. In 1835 he emigrated to Canada with his family, settling in Puslinch, Ontario. He married Ann ‘Andison’ and their children included: William (b.1819); Robert (b.1821); Mary (b.1823); Euphemia (b.1826); and Margaret (b.1828). Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit Gavin of ye Hill’ when he was accused in 1622 of stealing a horse in 1620. However, he was acquitted. Gavin (17th C.) tenant in Overraw in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) started a hosiery factory at Denholm in partnership with Archibald Dickson in 1793. He is recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a stockingmaker in Denholm. By 1815 the firm had amalgamated into Dicksons, Beattie & Laings in Hawick, which became Dicksons & Laings on his retirement. He could be the George, stockingmaker in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Pinglehole when first recorded as a head of household in 1836. By 1841 he was shepherd at Larriston. Helen (18th/19th C.) servant at the Manse in Ewes in 1788. Helen (d.1838) resident of Hawick. The registration of her death gives her nickname as ‘Helen the Cook’. Hugh (16th C.) listed as ‘Hew Batie’ on Monipennie’s list of Borderers from about the 1580s. He is probably the ‘Hew Batie callit Alyis Hew’ who entered a pledge at a court in Hawick in 1569, along with ‘Johnne the Braid’. This was for men of the surname of Bateson, as well as Thomson and Glendinning. His brother David was also listed as a relief pledge. He is probably the Hugh whose son ‘Andro Baty’ is recorded being released from ward before 1573 and whose son John was warded with George Maxwell of Newark in 1574. Hugh (17th C.) tenant in ‘Bridghouscleughhead’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Hugh took out a lease on the farm of Greens in 1682. Isobel (17th/18th C.) servant on the Falnash estate. In 1720 Robert Welsh (who also worked on the estate there) confessed to the Hawick minister his sin of fornication with her, and went through the usual punishments. In 1724 she was threatened with excommunication if she continued to fail to appear for public rebuke; whether this was for the same or another transgression is unclear. In 1725 her daughter told the Session that her mother was helping the sick James Elliot in Bowanhill. If she was also guilty this seems to have passed unnoticed. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1700, along with weaver John, he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Briggs. Probably the same weaver married Mary Wright in 1702, both being from Hawick Parish. Their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Janet (b.1710). David (b.1703), with the mother’s name given as ‘Christian’ Wright, was probably also his child. Other children, baptised in Hawick, who could be his include Elizabeth (b.1706) and John (b.1710); and Jean (b.1713). He could be the James, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1677. His surname is written ‘Badie’. James (17th/18th C.) married Elizabeth Simpson and had a son William baptised in Hawick in 1704. The witnesses in 1704 were Michael Turnbull and weaver Mungo Swan. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1719 when he married Christine Scott, as recorded in Cavers Parish. James (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1723, along with another smith, John Scott, they were called to the session to explain their involvement with a ‘scandal’ committed in Ettrick Parish by a Janet Audison. He married Janet Robson and their children included: Helen (b.1719); Jean and Margaret (b.1720); Sara (1721–99); an unnamed child (b.1729); and John (b.1730). The witnesses in 1719 were Town Clerk Walter Gledstaines and merchant William Oliver. He may be the James (possibly smith, but hard to read) who witnessed a baptism for James Ekron in 1758. He is probably the smith James who, along with smith Robert (perhaps his son), witnessed a baptism for mason John Kyle and Helen Beattie (perhaps his daughter) in 1759 and along with Robert in 1766 witnessed a baptism for Richard Hardie and Jean Beattie (probably also his daughter). The burial of his daughter Sarah is recorded in Hawick in 1799. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Borthaugh in 1733 and 1735. He married Agnes Miller, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Bessie (b.1728), Robert (b.1730), Francis (b.1733) and Margaret (b.1735). The witnesses in 1733 were John and James Dryden and in 1735 were Francis and Patrick Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Borthaugh in 1751 and 1758. He married Bessie Moor in 1757 and their children included: Agnes (b.1749); James (b.1751); Mary (b.1753); Alexander (b.1755); Francis (b.1758); William (b.1760); and Janet (b.1763). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott and in 1758 were George Hart and John Riddell. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Fairloans in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) resident recorded at Southdean on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 7 horses. James (b.c.1773) son of William and Janet Anderson, he was born at Craikhope. Most of his children were also born at Craikhope. He married Margaret Oliver, from Roberton. Their children included: Helen (1799–1879), who married Robert Shannon; William (1801–27), who married Janet Lunn; Janet Anderson (b.1802), who died in infancy; James (b.1803), who probably died young; Robert (1804–37), who married Margaret Storrie; Janet (1806–80), who married James William Rae; Andrew (1807–85), who married Mary McDougall; Margaret (1809–60), who married William Scott; James (1811–84), who married Elizabeth Elliot; and Agnes (d.1852), who married John Elliot. The family emigrated to Canada, settling in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Denholm, along with John, who was probably his brother or son (or father). In 1815 they were recorded among Denholm men accused of ‘mobbing and deforcing water bailifs’, but acquitted. James (b.1795/6) shepherd at Whitropefoot in 1851 and 1861. He married Isabella Telfer, who died in 1875, aged 77. Their children included: Barbary (1827/8–47); John (b.1834), who died in infancy; Agnes; John; and Arthur. James (b.c.1815) son of Walter. He was listed as a teacher in Newcastleton in 1841, living with his parents at about 12 North Hermitage Street. John (16th C.) listed as ‘John the Braid’ among the Beatties of the Shiel in the c.1580s list of Borderers. He lived somewhere in Eskdale. He is ‘Johhne Battie callit Johhne the Braid in 1569 when he and ‘Alyis Hew’ were pledges for Batesons, Thomsons and Glendinnings at a court held in Hawick. John (16th C.) recorded in Burnfoot (on Ale) in 1579 when he witnessed the making of the inventory of Isabel Donald, widow of Robert of Palace. John (17th C.) tenant in Watscarrick (near Eskdalemuir). In 1675 James ‘Holme’ from Kelso was fined for accusing him of stealing 3000 plants from the ‘plant market’ in Hawick. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded being ‘in Pack’ (although it is unclear what place is meant). He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1670) and Janet (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were John (who was surely related) and smith at Newmill, John Dryden. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, married to Marion Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: John (b.1672); Thomas (b.1674); George (b.1676); Bessie (b.1679); Robert (b.1681); and Marion (b.1684). The witnesses in 1676 were Henry Halliburton and Thomas Scott. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Billhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1700, along with weaver James, he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Briggs. In 1705 he witnessed another baptism for John Bridges and his wife Janet Beattie (who was probably his daughter or sister). He could be the John whose daughter Helen married John Scott in Hawick in 1722. John (17th/18th C.) elder in Castleton Parish, recorded in 1698. John (17th C.) resident of Newton in Kirkton Parish. His children included John (b.1709). John (18th/19th C.) mason in Denholm, recorded in 1767 and 1770. His children probably included James (b.1759), Thomas (b.1760), James (again, b.1762), George (b.1765), John (b.1767) and William (b.1770). Probably the same John is recorded in Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be related to John the stocking-maker recorded in 1815. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (b.1786/7) originally from Bewcastle, he worked as a shepherd in Roberton Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Howpasley Comb (or ‘Come’). He married Isobel Scott, said to be a niece of Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford; she died in 1848, aged 59. Their children included: Beatrix (b.1815); John (b.1817); James (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1821); Isobel (b.1823); Andrew (b.c.1827); Janet (b.c.1829); Helen (b.c.1831), who married Walter Rutherford; and Peter (b.c.1835). His grand-daughter Isabella Govenlock also lived with his family in 1851; she died in 1854, aged 14. In 1861 he was visiting Langlee in Ladhope Parish. The family are buried in Roberton Cemetery. John (19th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was one of the early elders of St. Andrew’s Free Church. His daughter Jane Turnbull married farmer James Henderson. John (b.1814/5) from Dumfriesshire, he was farmer at Dodburn. In 1861 he was farming 900 acres there and employed 2 people. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, James, Andrew, Thomas and Charles. John (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. He was the first Vice- President when the Mission was formally founded in the next year. John (1852–1933) born at Craik, son of William and Elizabeth Grieve. He lived in Hawick. In 1879 he married Mary McLean, from Glencairn. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.1880); Samuel (b.1884); and William (b.1887). John (1862–c.1945) from Hawick, he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Ekron. They lived in Clydebank during WWI, but returned to Hawick, living on the Loan, then on Drumlanrig Square and also at 2 Slitrig Place. Their children were: John; Elizabeth; and Andrew (1887–1973), who married Lillie Nichol Nivet. John (19th/20th C.) served as a regular soldier before WWI and was captured in the first days of the War. Along with an Englishman and 2 Russians he escaped from a German prison camp, made his way to neutral Holland and returned to Hawick in 1917. He lived on Yarrow Terrace. Rev. John Donald MacFarlane Benny (b.1896) son of John B., a merchant from Montreal, Canada. He was educated at McGill and Edinburgh Universities and licensed to preach in 1923. He was assistant at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh and served during WWI in the Canadian Royal Artillery. He was ordained at St. Mungo’s and then translated to Wilton Kirk to be minister in 1931. He was minister of the Parish until 1959. He married Mary Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Harbiston Gray Wallace. They had a daughter Jean Elizabeth Mary (b.1936). John Armstrong ‘Jock’ (1907–77) joiner by trade he played as a forward for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1930s, becoming captain, gaining 23 Scottish caps, and going on to be President of the S.R.U. Beattie Court is named after him. Margaret (18th C.) already an old lady in 1788 when she gave evidence at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. She is said to have ‘brought forward no evidence of the slightest value’. Mary (b.c.1790) recorded as toll-keeper and spirit dealer in 1841. She was at Wilton Toll, i.e. Dovemount Toll. She also lived with her daughter Margaret. Mary (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘Miss Mary, Castleton’ in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. She could be the Mary who married Robert Armstrong and lived at Myredykes. Mungo (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Carretrig’ in 1623. Francie in Steel served as cautions for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was accused of stealing 35 sheep from Mugo Wood in ‘Sterkscheillhill’, but was acquitted. Nichol of the Shiel (16th C.) listed by Monipennie in the 1580s roll of Borderers. He is recorded as ‘Nicholl of the Scheill’ near Langholm. In 1569 he was listed as a relief pledge for ‘Alyis Hew’ and ‘Johhne the Braid’ at a court held in Hawick. Also in 1569 he was one of the Beatties (along with Nichol ‘in Carniesgill’ and John, son to ‘Wat of the Kerse’) for whom ‘Johnne Batie of the yairdis’ was held as pledge in Glasgow Castle. In 1574 he was ordered to remain warded with John Maxwell of Nether Pollock. He is probably the Nichol who signed a bond in 1584 with the English Warden, along with several other Beatties from Eskdale. His sons ‘Andro and Jamie Batie’ were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Nichol of Whisgill (16th C.) recorded in the 1584 bond of assurance as ‘Nycoll Batie of Whisygill’. It is unclear how he was related to the other 6 Beatties whose names are also listed. Robert (18th C.) smith in Hawick, probably son of smith James. He is probably the smith Robert who, along with smith James, witnessed a baptism for mason John Kyle and Helen Beattie in 1759 and another for William Dryden and Jean Knox in 1766; these seem likely to have been his sisters. In 1767 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Balmer. He may also be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for carrier Walter Aitkin in 1767 and 1772. Robert (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Meadow in 1776 and Craik in 1771. He married Marion Linton in 1765 and their children (baptised in Robertson) included: William (b.1766); Margaret (1768–76); and Isobel (b.1771). He is buried in Borthwick Waas. Robert (b.c.1775) toll-keeper at the Note o the Gate. He was recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Margaret and daughter Isobel. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Castleton Parish, he lived at Flashholm in Evesdale. By 1851 and 1861 he was listed as a gamekeeper there. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, Andrew, Elizabeth, Archibald, Janet, John and William. Robert (1809/10–91) tenant farmer at Wolvecleughhead, he was son of William and Janet Telfer, who are buried at Watcarrick. He married Jane Crozier, who died in 1886, aged 78. Their son Robert died at Ropelawshiel when he was 26. Another son William farmed at Broughton and a third, John, lived in Yarrow. He himself is buried at Ettrick. He must have been one of the last residents at Wolvecleughhead. Robert (b.1815) from Langholm, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is recorded as head of household in 1841. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1851 and on Doncaster Street in 1861. He was also listed on Pigot’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included James, Helen, William, Adam and John. Robert (b.1824/5) from England, he was shepherd at Pen, in southern Castleton Parish, in 1851. His wife was Jane. Robert (b.1828/9) from Stow, he was a carrier on the High Street in Hawick in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth from Castleton and they had children Jessie Scott, Mary Scott, Robert and John. He is probably the Robert listed as grocer on the High Street in Hawick in 1851. His wife was Jane and their children included: James, Helen (b.1680); Francis (b.1683); Marion (b.1685); and Helen (b.1688). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Mary married William Turnbull in 1714. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Scott in 1699. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Barnes in Kirkton Parish. His children included Robert (b.1712). He is probably the Thomas whose marriage in Kirkton is recorded in 1712. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Betty Wright in 1761. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for James Black in 1764. Thomas (17th/18th C.) town piper around 1700. He is recorded as ‘pyper’ on the list of contributors to the town bell fund in 1693/4. Walter was recorded as piper in Selkirk in 1737 and may have been related. Thomas of Meikledale and Crieve (1736–1826) owner of Hartsgarth farm and farmer at Meikledale. He was taxed for having a female servant in Meikledale in 1788–90. He was at Meikledale on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. Also in 1797 he was taxed for having 5 non-working dogs and a clock. He was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He supplied a version of ‘Tamlane’ to Sir Walter Scott and was also said to be responsible for introducing Gilpin Horner of Todshawhill into the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’. He also left a journal, which was recently transcribed by his great-great-great-grand-niece. He died in Langholm. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Agnes Lee, who was from Minto. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Cavers in 1790. Thomas (1826–98) son of John and Elizabeth Andison. He was a hosier warehouseman with Walter Wilson & Sons. In later life he owned several properties in Hawick. In 1855 in Wilton Parish he married Agnes Scott (who died in 1909, aged 78). Their children included: James; 2 sons who died in infancy; John of Broadview, mill manager with Wilson & Glenny’s; Robert; and Thomas, whose son, also Thomas, was cashier at Pesco’s and married Jean Anderson. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (b.1839) son of Denholm butcher Andrew. He was also a butcher and also travelled to serve Rulewater from about 1855. He married the cook at Wells House. He had a son Andrew, who continued the family butcher’s business in Denholm. Thomas (1848–1929) born in Harriethead in Eskdalemuir, son of Walter and Helen Scott. In 1882/3 he moved his family from Craighill in Ettrick to Broadlee in Roberton Parish. They moved again to Ashieburn in 1903 and emigrated to Saskatchewan, Canada in 1907. Their children were: John Little ‘Jack’ (1871–1946), who died in Calgary; Mary Wight ‘Mame’ (1874–1951), who died in Nanaimo, British Columbia; Walter (1876–87); Helen Scott ‘Nell’ (1879–1971), died in Calgary; George Thomas Little (1882–92); William ‘Bill’ (1883–1969), born at Broadlee and died in Alberta; Robert Anderson ‘bob’ (1894–1973), born at Broadlee, died in Calgary; Nichol Aeneas McInnes (1894–1973), born at Broadlee, died in Calgary; Thomasina Little ‘Dolly’ (1896–1989), born at Broadlee, died in White Rock, British Columbia; and Hector McDonald (1900–88) born at Broadlee, died in British Columbia. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1861) sculptor and artist. He was born in Hawick, son of the pioneering local photographer William and Helen Dalgleish. He drew portraits of ‘Andrew the King’, among others. He became a stone mason, who was responsible for stone-work on the Buccleuch Memorial among other buildings. He moved to Edinburgh with his family to obtain more regular work, and they stayed on Haymarket Terrace. He worked on the interior of the Usher Hall. He also completed the work on the Horse Memorial in 1921, adding the Latin inscription and some words about the sculptor, his son William, who had died in the War. Walter ‘Wat of the Corse’ (16th C.) listed on the 1580s roll of Borderers, along with other Beatties of the Shiel near Langholm. His lands were probably Corseholm on the Wauchope Water. Walter Beattie

(b.1809/10) blacksmith at Hermitage Bridgend in at least 1841–1861. His son-in-law, Andrew Easton, assisted him. His wife was Eliza and their children include Helen, Thomas, John and Mary Elliot. Walter (1926/7–2001) son of Walter and Bella, he grew up in Myreslawgreen. He served with the K.O.S.B. in 1944–47, including time in Burma and India. He wrote a memoir of his life from 1943 to 1947, covering his time in the army. He worked on the railways, in Lyle & Scott’s and finally at Lockerie’s (who had sacked him for enlisting in the army!). He married Jenimia Thomson and they had children: Anne (b.1948), who married Bill Douglas; and Alan (b.1951). William (17th C.) recorded as ‘Wm. Baitie in Todideon (b.1711). William (17th/18th C.) resident in Deanburnhaugh in 1715 when his son Thomas was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children who could be his included Isobell (b.1711). William (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw in 1717 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson. William (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Ealmuir’ (i.e. Alemoor) in 1717 when his son William was baptised in Robertson. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Highchesters in 1720 when his daughter Anna was baptised in Robertson. William ‘Will’ (18th C.) tenant in Park. In about 1750 he was hired by Robert Elliot, farmer at Braehead, to help with the mowing. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Crawhill in 1790. He married Euphan Douglas and their children included Adam (b.1785), Thomas (b.1787), Euphan (b.1789) and Margaret (b.1790), William (b.1793) and Archibald (b.1795). William (18th C.) married Jean Harkness in Robertson in 1764. He is distinct from the William who married Janet Anderson in 1762. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastle in 1841, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. He may be the same William recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a carrier operating weekly to Longnewton. He was probably father of the later carrier William. William ‘Will’ (1734–1829) son of Andrew and Isabel Aitchison, he was born in Dumfriesshire. He farmed at Craikhope. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at ‘Clarkhop’ in Robertson Parish, this presumably being a transcription error. A story is told (in ‘Beauties of the Border’) of him accosting some smugglers one morning at his farm, and refusing to drink when they offered it to him, suspicious they might poison him, but then his master (‘Mr. C—’) showed up; the group drank brandy together and he became drunk enough that he challenged his master to a contest for the best sheep of the flock. He received a ‘premium’ for serving one master for so long. In 1762 in Robertson he married Janet, daughter of James Anderson and Agnes Hastie. Their children included: Andrew (1763–1844), who married Jane Thomson and emigrated to Ontario; Agnes (b.1765), who married John Scott and remained in Scotland; Isabel (b.1767), who married Mr. Eden, and stayed; Elspeth (b.1770), who died in infancy; James (c.1773–1845), who married Margaret Oliver and died in Westminster Township, Ontario; John (1780–81); and John (again, 1782–1832), who married Christina McAdam and died at sea. He may also have been father of an unnamed son (b.1787) when he was living at Borthwickbrae Parkhill. William ‘Wull’ (18th/19th C.) well-known poacher in the Denholm area. His dog, Bob, would attend the Cameronian Kirk, whether or not his master was present. This same dog is said to have sneaked into the minister of Wilton’s house and stolen a leg of mutton. He is said to have taken exception to the ‘Black List’ of sins compiled by Rev. James Duncan, but claiming to the minister that poaching could not be on the list, since it was not mentioned in the Bible, although adding that he heard Dr. Charters of Wilton claim that Duncan himself was a poacher, because he said that ‘Duncan had entered his preserves, and quite relieved him of not a few foul birds’. It was said that his great-grandmother was wife of one of the Covenanters martyrs who died on Airdsmoss along with Richard Cameron. William (1801–27) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born at Craikhope. He married Janet (1806–79), daughter of James Lunn and Elizabeth Telford; she later married Robert Nichol. Their only child was William (1827–76), who was born at Craik Faulds. William (1804/5–79) carter and road contractor in Newcastle in 1821. In 1841 to 1861 he was at about 11 Douglas Square. He married Helen (‘Nellie’) Beattie, who died at Dykes, Rulewater, on 1887, aged 74. Their children included: William (1829/30–74); John (1833/4–55); George, a carter; Arthur (1836/7–71); James (1841/2–92); James; Mary (1844/5–89); Helen; Archibald (1848/9–80): Betty; Andrew; and John (again). He was charged as father of Betty Matthew’s child in 1832, but denied

it. William (b.c.1810) born in Denholm, he was a baker there in at least the 1840s to 60s. He was based on Westside. He married Janet Davidson and their children included Cecil, Euphemia, Mary W. and John W. It was probably his mother who was the ‘Widow Beattie’ recorded as a baker in Denholm in 1837. William (1819–88) born in Hawick, son of Francis and Ann Anderson. He emigrated to Ontario along with his father in 1834. He was a farmer in North Dumfries Township. In 1844 he married Isabella Walker, who was from Oxnam, and they had 10 children. William (1827–76) born at Craik Faulds, son of William and Janet Lunn. In 1841 he was a labourer with Walter Lunn at Meadshaw. He was a shepherd, living in Borthwickhead School-house in 1851. He married Elizabeth (1827–96), daughter of John Grieve and Mary Glendinning. Their children included: William (1850–1929), who died in Bowden; John (1852–1933); Mary (b.1855), who died young; Janet Greve (1857–88), who died in Oliver Crescent, Hawick; and Mary Glendinning (1862–1954), who married Thomas Storey. William (1830–91) stockmaker and pioneering photographer in Hawick. He was father of Thomas and grandfather of the sculptor William. He took a photograph showing the landscape around Hawick in 1862 (which exists in the form of a published sketch, although the photo itself has disappeared). It is also possible that he was responsible for the 1857 Cornet’s photo (but it is unknown for certain who the photographer was). His photographic studio was at ‘Old Toll House’, 11 Back Row roughly in the period 1855–60, and may then have moved to 4 Millport. He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Dalgleish, who was from Dalgleish. Their children included: Joanna (b.c.1857); Thomas (b.1861); and William (b.1863). William (1850–1929) son of William and Elizabeth Grieve. His children were born in Robertson Parish, some at Meadshaw. In 1875 in Minto Parish he married Christina Scott Heatlie, daughter of James Heatlie and Christina Scott. Their children included: Christina Scott (1875–1901); William (b.1877), who died in the U.S.A.; James Heatlie (1878–1929); Elizabeth Grieve (1881–1973), who married Frances Elliot; Janet (1882–1974), who married Thomas Dickson; Mary (1885–1989), who married Grigor John Cameron and died in Hawick; and John Grieve (1889–1909). William (19th C.) postman who served Ewesdale from Langholm. He survived an attack by Highwaymen near the Wrae Wood, but was later accidentally shot while cleaning the pistol that he kept for his protection. William Francis (1888–1918) sculptor, born in Hawick, only son of sculptor Thomas and Annie Kate. His father moved the family to Hawick and he was educated at George Watson’s and then attended the Edinburgh College of Art, where he eventually became a member of staff. He also joined the Brunstane Rugby Club and Portobello Amateur Rowing Club. In 1910 he joined the Lothian And Border Horse volunteer regiment. He set up business for himself as a sculptor in Edinburgh. In 1913 his plaster model for the ‘Horse’ monument was selected, and his statue completed in bronze, being unveiled in 1914. At the unveiling ceremony the manufacturer Peter Scott said in his speech that he ‘was a young man with a great future before him and at no distant time would no doubt be one of Hawick’s most distinguished sons’. However, he was called up when war broke out a few months later, and frustrated at remaining inactive he obtained a commission to the Royal Horse Artillery, being posted to France. In 1917 he was transferred to the 73/5 Brigade of the Royal Field Artillery and was awarded the Military Cross for carrying wounded soldiers under shell fire. He suffered from a gas attack in 1918, taking several months to recover, rejoining his unit in September when he was promoted to Acting Major. Just 2 weeks later he was fatally wounded in action, dying only a few weeks before the end of the war. His grave is located at Tin-court Military Cemetery in France. Shortly before his death he was made a life member of the Lodge St. John No. 111. His father later inscribed a permanent reminder of his loss into the base of the Horse monument, ‘Sculptor Major William F. Beattie M.C. R.F.A., a native of Hawick, born 1886, killed in France 1918’. In France the word ‘Teribus’ was added to his gravestone. In 2018 there was a procession and commemoration on the centenary of his death, with the horse draped in poppies (formerly ‘Badies’, ‘Baittie’, ‘Baty’, ‘Batie’, ‘Baty’, ‘Beatty’, ‘Betie’, etc.; see also Badie).

Beattie Court (bee-‘ee-, bee-tee-kür”) n. part of the Meadows, refurbished in 1986, and at that time named after rugby player Jock Beattie.

Beattie’s (bee-‘eez) n. John Beattie & Sons, funeral business operating in Hawick since 1806. It was taken over in 2009 by Edinburgh based firm William Purves Ltd.

Beattie’s Knowe (bee-‘eez-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, just north of Saughtree. Enclosures are shown there on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Beaty (bee'-ee) n. R. Stuart appointed an Assistant Designer at Pringle’s of Scotland in 1950, becoming a Director in 1964. He retired in 1974 after 34 years with the company.

Beauties of the Border (bew-teez-oh-thu-böö-dür) n. book written by William Scott, schoolmaster at Burnmouth in Liddesdale and published in 1821. It was essentially a follow-up to his popular ‘Border Exploits’. It contained descriptions of the counties and districts that lay on both sides of the Border. Coming so early, it contains many anecdotes that are recorded for the first time, or not noted elsewhere at all.

beb (beb) v., arch. to drink in small quantities; sip, tipple — ‘A saw um, thereckly, bebbin an taain oot ov a bottle’ [ECS].

beck (bek) v., poet. to bow, bend — ‘...thaye hae sethe thair eyne beckin’ doun til the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Thaye that dwall in the wuldirniss sall beck afore him ...’ [HSR].

Beck (beck) n. John (b.c.1770) from England, he was an innkeeper in Hawick. In 1825/6 he is recorded at the Grapes, Bucleuch Street, and in 1837 on Silver Street. In 1837 he was innkeeper of ‘Beck’s Inn’, which was also known as the Coach and Horses. In 1841 he was living with his wife Nanny at about 4 Silver Street. John (b.c.1783) younger son of William. He was a hosiery manufacturer of the early 19th century, operating in the High Street. He was listed as a hosier in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His might be the property marked ‘Beck’ on the north side of the east end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Margaret Walker and had children William, Thomas, Margaret and Helen. Mary (b.c.1780) vintner listed at West Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was listed as ‘Independent’ at the East end in the 1841 census. Robert (19th C.) flesher who was Cornet in 1834. He was either a descendant of William the manufacturer, or son of John and Agnes Wilson. He paid £23 for rent of the Bleachfield in 1832. He married Euphemia Thomson in 1835 (and so presumably gave up being Left-Hand Man). Their children included: John (b.1836); and Walter (1838–bef. 1881). It appears that he became a civil servant, being promoted from 4th to 3rd Class Customs Clerk in London in 1858. He lived at Peckham in South London. His daughters Jessie, Agnes and Euphemia worked as telegraphists, while Robert (b.c.1841) was a Shop’s Steward. William (18th/19th C.) from Carlisle, he was apprenticed to Bailie Hardie in 1775. Afterwards he started out on his own, and by 1818 was producing 41,000 pairs of hose per year. He became one of the most popular employers in Hawick, being the only manufacturer who refused to lower wages during the dispute that led to the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. He was recorded as a stockingmaker in 1786 when he witnessed a baptism for currier Christopher Aitchison. There is a record of 1788 (with the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of him asking for funds to purchase a frame for ribbed stockings. One of his frameknitting apprentices was John Pringle, half-brother of Robert, founder of Pringle’s; the letter of indenture as an apprentice from 1794 survives. He was a ‘hosier’ in 1812 when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott and Elizabeth Turnbull. He is still recorded as a stocking manufacturer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His firm was declared bankrupt in 1821, but must have recovered. However, it collapsed in 1826, possibly related to bank failures at the time. A sale of his company’s and personal effects took place in the Subscription Rooms in late 1827 (including the sale of his share in those Rooms). Since his household possessions were also being sold off, then probably he died in 1827. An engraved cup presented to him by his employees in 1819 is in the Museum. His stocking-shop was off the back of 21 High Street, and he is marked as owner there on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1779 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’), daughter of Walter Wilson (known as ‘Haunless Wat’) in Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1780), who died unmarried; Katherine (b.1781), who married Robert Douglas in 1800; Sarah (b.1783), who must have died young; John (b.1783), possibly a twin of Sarah; Sarah or Sally (b.1785), who married George Trotter; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1786), who married John Routledge and secondly M. Thompson; Betty, who married G. Farquhar; and Nanny (or perhaps Nancy), who married John Thorburn. He was said to be fond of good eating, and his house was a favourite eating place for friends and relations. In later life his wife was known as ‘Auld Peggy Beck’. William (b.1780) elder son of manufacturer William. He was a hosier and was Cornet in 1808. Like his father he was listed as a freeman of Carlisle in an election of 1816. He died unmarried.

Beck’s (becks) n. William Beck’s stockingshop. The building was constructed about 1800 and marks a transition between the cottage and factory industries. The firm collapsed in 1826 following bank failures. The upper floor of the building has small regularly sized and spaced windows, each of which would have provided light for a single stocking frame. It is hidden at the back of 21 High Street, and was converted into a dwelling by Dennis Rodwell for the National Trust for Scotland in 1991 as part of the ‘Little Houses’ scheme. It is a grade C listed building.

Bedda Cleuch (be-du-klooch) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, which flows into the Black Burn just north-east of Newcastleton.

Bedda Hill (be-du-hil) n. hill in Castleton Parish, to the west of Newcastleton, between the village and Hazelyside Hill. The area just to the south is called Bedda Flow. There is a field bank running round 3 sides of the hill, containing rig lines.

beddal (be-dul) n., arch. a beadle, minor church official – ‘To John Scott, Beddal, for his shues dune again’ [PR], ‘Wr. Scott the Beddel being laitlie dead, the minister thought convenient that John Scott son to the said deceast Walter should be admitted to supply the place’ [PR1717], ‘Thus John Scott son to the said deceast Walter should enter the `beddal’s stair’ . . . ’ [JJV] (see also beadle and bedrel).

Bedderule (be-du-rool) n. former spelling of Bedrule (indicating an extra syllable).

beddit (be-dee’, -di’) pp. put to bed, confined to bed – ‘. . . the whaups a’ beddit, and ilk lamb and yowe, Snug aneth the staur-licht, the haill nicht afore him’ [DH].

bedfast (bed-fawst) adj., arch. bedridden – ‘. . . aw did get an awfu’ fricht that nicht, an’ aw’ll ne’er deny that aw was bedfast for some days’ [BCM1880].

bedlar (bed-lur) n., arch. a bedridden person, especially an inmate of a poor-house, also a church beadle or bellman – ‘. . . the old noted bedlar of Wilton, Wull Reid’ [RM].

bedrel (bed-rul) n., arch. a bedridden person (there are spelling variants).

bedrel (bed-rul) n., poet. a beadle, minor church official – ‘And then he grippet the bedrel’s spade, Ane pye therewith to seeke . . . ’ [JTe] (see also beadle and beddal).

Bedrule (bed-rool, be-the-rul, -de-) n. hamlet eight miles north-east of Hawick, beyond Denholm, on the river Rule, about a mile up from the Teviot. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. The early history is very uncertain, although it seems clear that the Barony was named after an early owner called Lady Bethoc. This seems likely to have been the daughter of Donald III of Scotland, who married Uchtred of Tynedale (although the story is complicated by the existence of a later Bethoc, wife of Ranulph of Nithsdale, also with a connection to the district). The daughter of Bethoc, Hextilda married Richard Comyn, and this family held the lands for several generations, from about 1160 until 1306. In that year John Comyn was branded a traitor and slain, with his lands later granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce. From sometime in the 14th century the lands were owned by the Turnbulls, possibly as vassals of Douglas. For most of the subsequent time it has been the centre of Turnbull country. However, in about 1528 part was sold by the Rutherfords to the Kers of Ferniehirst. Also in 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme paid fees to the King for ‘non-entry’ of the lands and the right to arrange the marriage of the heir to the Lairdship; the Royal gift that followed included ‘the tour, mylnes and fischeings’.

The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545 and perhaps again by the English in 1571. The entire estate and barony passed to the Kers of Cavers Carre around 1623. In 1788 the set of lands were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre, valued at £1900 16s 8d, including teinds valued at £268 16s 8d. The farmer there in 1785–94 was James Goodfellow and in 1797 was William Pringle, who started a quarry and lime workings on the farm, which also supplied lime to neighbouring farms. The Barony was sold in 1801 to William Elliot of Wells and then in 1894 sold along with Wells to John Usher of Norton. In 1811 the ‘Mains and Mill of Bedrule, Fourteen Husband Lands of the Town of Bedrule unsold, Corse Cleugh and Fulton’ were valued at more than £1700. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. The present parish church was built around 1804, restored in 1876–77 and enlarged in 1914. The remains of Bedrule Castle are also near the church. The Parish Hall was built in 1922 by Sir Robert Usher, and since then has been used for a wide variety of community functions, including W.R.I. meetings, Sundays School and parties. The hamlet formerly contained the schoolhouse and smithy, as well as the Parish Kirk and a farmhouse. There is also a War Memorial for the men of this Parish. The farm was run conjointly with the neighbouring lands of Fulton from at least the 19th century. Tenants were: W. Pringle, until 1826; Mr. Haliburton until 1827; Robert Brodie of...
Bedrule

Bedrule (bed-rool) n. title of a Strathspey, written in 1984 by Betty Grant of Toronto, Ontario, in memory of her great-great-grandmother Elizabeth Turnbull Dickson who left Bedrule 150 years earlier to emigrate to Canada.

Bedrule Kirk (bed-rool-kirk) n. church in Bedrule, serving the surrounding Parish. It stands on high ground above the eastern bank of the Rule, with commanding views of the surrounding countryside. There must have been a chapel here since at least the 13th century. The patronage of the church was held by the Kerrs of Ferniehirst in the 16th century and passed to the Kers of Cavers-Carre in the 17th century, (curiously) remaining with them even after they sold the Barony in 1801. At the end of the 18th century the old church was described as being partly Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Robertus de Rulebetoc’ when he was on an inquest in about the 1260 for Simon of ‘Lede’. It is unclear if he is related to the Rules or the later Turnbulls.

Bedrule Brig (bed-rool-brig) n. bridge over the Rule Water to the south-west of Bedrule village. It dates from the 18th century and is a grade C listed building.

Bedrule Castle (bed-rool-kaw-sul) n. former castle in the parish and barony of Bedrule, built by the Comyns in the 13th century, later held by the Turnbulls, and destroyed by the English in 1545. The grass-covered remains can be seen on the eastern side of the Rule Water, between the churchyard and the river. From the air there are clear outlines of an oval wall, about 60 m by 40 m, with gatehouse and 3 towers, although the north-eastern part has been obliterated by cultivation. The interior contains a cross-wall, as well as signs of 2 buildings. The gatehouse was reached by a road that wound up from the river on the west. The castle was visited by Edward I of England in 1298. John Turnbull of Bedrule was Laird in 1432, but the castle was probably held by his ancestors for at least a couple of generations before this. It is supposedly near the site where 200 of the Turnbull clan were brought before James IV, with halters round their necks in 1510. It is said that some stones in the Bedrule churchyard, bearing carved bull’s heads, were saved from the ruins.

Bedrule Common (bed-rool-ko-nain) n. former common lands in Bedrule Parish. Parishioners had the right to pasture here. However, it was divided in 1696, with the land shared out among the main landowners, with the Rev. James Borland protesting that the minister had always had a right to use the common, but was being excluded from the division.

below ground, with only slits for windown, so that it was like ‘a family vault or damp cellar’ and in ‘a ruinous state’. The church was re-built on the same site in 1803/4, with further renovations carried out in 1876–77 and then extensively renovated in 1914 through the benefaction of Sir Robert Usher, with the architects being Leadbetter and Fairley. Inside hang panels bearing the arms of local families (Douglas, Elliot, Ogilvie, Oliver, Rutherford, Turnbull and Usher), and there are noteworthy stained-glass windows from 1922. There are two fragments of hog-backed gravestones inside, as well as another old stone with a carving of a robed figure and a sword. There are also many old Turnbull gravestones in the churchyard, including: a carved shield bearing the initials ‘GK HT’; and one bearing a carved mallet and the initials ‘GT HO 1618 IT MT 1638’ (which we could speculate are George Turnbull and Helen Oliver, plus John Turnbull and Margaret Turnbull). The church also contains a memorial to Bishop William Turnbull, who was born in the parish and baptised there. A memorial stone pillar was erected there after WWI. There is also a memorial plaque to Anthony Fasson, who died when retrieving the ‘Enigma machine’ and codebook from a sinking U-Boat in 1942. The manse is located to the south-west of the church and was built in 1794, replacing an earlier building on which tax was paid for 13 windows in 1753 (and which was condemned by committees in 1792 and 1793). The minister’s stipend included the vicarage teinds of the Baronies of Bedrule, Ruecastle and Knowesouth. The glebe lands consisted of about 4 acres of arable land, a steep wooded bank and the riverside, as well as a strip in front of the lodge for Wells estate. The church was linked with Denholm and had a common minister from 1963; it was also linked with Minto in 1976. In 2003 the church was connected with Minto and Denholm into a wider region known as Ruberslaw, and this was extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean the following year. Free Church members in Bedrule were served by the Free Kirk in Denholm.

Bedrule Women’s Guild was one of the oldest women’s Christian organisations in Scotland, being founded in 1892 by Lady Elliott of Wells, and merging with Denholm and Minto Guilds around 1999; a stained-glass window in the Church celebrated the centenary of ‘the Guild’. Communion cups were gifted by Kerr of Newton and his wife in 1716. Communion tokens exist dating from probably before 1700; they are made of lead and round, with ‘B.K.’ incised on them, and an older ‘B’ in relief visible on some examples. A roll of the ministry is: James Newton, Rector in at least 1468–1492; John Kirkton until 1538; Sir William Todd at least 1541–57; William Kerr, Parson in at least 1562 and 1563; John Stewart c.1562; Sir John Douglas 1563/4; John Allan c.1567; John Oliver, 1569; George Johnston, minister 1575 (Reader vacant); John Turnbull, Reader 1576–78; George Turnbull, Reader 1579–80; Alexander Tait c.1585–91; William Galbraith c.1599; Joseph Tennant c.1601–21; David Fowls 1633–34; Henry Pearson 1635–39; Harry (Henry) Elliott 1640–c.53; vacant c.1653–58; Hugh Scott 1658–62; James Adamson 1664–89; James Borland 1690–1713; John Gilchrist 1714–46; George Dickson 1748–87; William Brown 1788–1836; Archibald Craig 1832–76; John Stevenson 1875–1923; James D. Gordon 1923–44; Thomas McGinn 1945–63; Robert Waugh 1963–74; James F. Falconer 1976–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92 (‘K of Badroull’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, just north of the town).

Bedrule Mains (bed-rool-mänz) n. lands in Bedrule Parish, formerly belonging to the Turnbuls of Bedrule. In 1643 it was split into two halves, each valued at £130, one half owned by William Turnbull of Bedrule and the other half by Thomas Turnbull (probably his son). Both halves were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788.

Bedrule Mill (bed-rool-mil) n. former corn mill at Bedrule, located on the east side of the Rule Water and north-east of the modern farm of Bedrule. It is reached from the road by a bridge across the Rule. There has also been a sawmill further south and on the other side of the river. It is said that in fairly early times it was a ‘pirn mill’ making yarn, but this did not succeed, and so it reverted to a corn mill, but the farmers having become used to taking there grain elsewhere, it became vacant and was again rented by a manufacturer for making yarn before such manufacturing switched into the towns. It was owned by the Turnbuls of Bedrule until 1696 and was a separate farm until at least the mid-19th century. William of Bedrule was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £200. John Douglas was tenant there in 1674, when fined for selling meal in Hawick at 2 different prices on the same market day. William Ramsay was tenant at the end of the 17th century. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. George Scott was tenant there in 1857. About 250 m to the north-east are

the Beeching Report

Bedrule Pairish (bed-rool-pā-reesh) n. Parish of Bedrule, lying near the centre of Roxburghshire, consisting of a roughly oval shape about 4 miles long from north to south. The original boundaries probably correspond to the lands held by Bethoc in the 12th and earlier centuries. It is bounded by the Rule on the west and the Teviot on the north-west. The extent of the Parish includes the Dunion, Black Law and Rubserlaw. The main estates were Bedrule, Ruecastle, Knowesouth and Newton. In 1643 the lands of the Parish were valued at £3943 13s 4d. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £3800, with the land valued at about £3500 in 1678. The Parish of Abbotrule was united to Bedrule, but in 1777 it was divided between Hobkirk and Southdean. The bounding parishes were then Minto, Ancrum, Jedburgh, Hobkirk and Cavers (and Southdean before the boundaries were rearranged in the 19th century). In about 1795 there were 6 weavers, 3 tailors, 2 wrights, 2 gardeners and 2 blacksmiths; one of the blacksmiths employed several people in the manufacture of nails. The Parish had villages at Bedrule, Newtown, Ruecastle and Fulton, all of which were ‘now much decayed, and the number of houses greatly diminished’ by the late 18th century. In 1837 almost the entire adult population was engaged in agriculture, with 2 stockmakers and 1 smith; there were no tailors, shoemakers, joiners or ale-houses. The population was engaged in agriculture, with 2 stocking-makers and 1 smith; there were no tailors, shoemakers, joiners or ale-houses. The population was valued at £608, consisting of 16 husbandlands. ‘Fourteen husband-lands of the Town of Bedrule, at L. 18 each’ were owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788.

beggars (be-gurz) n., pl. paupers, collecting alms for a living, increasing as a social problem through mediaeval times. There were laws prohibiting begging except by those wearing a badge that was only given to people who were sick or otherwise genuinely unable to work. One of these ‘beggars badges’ from Cavers in 1729 is in the Museum of Scotland. Acts were passed to control begging outside ones own Parish, as well as to encourage the Parishes to provide some relief for their own poor and invalided. Begging became a major cause for public concern in the Hawick of the 18th and 19th centuries. During these centuries beggars were mainly from Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbrightshire, Galloway and Ireland. It is said that around 1820 the only full-time professional beggar in Hawick was John Brown, but there were many match-sellers and itinerant pedlars who also begged. The first plan to stop begging and provide poor relief began in 1822. By 1837 there were about 150 permanent paupers and 500 occasional paupers supported in the Parish of Hawick.

Bell (bel) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Adam (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. Adam (1730/1–1802) resident of Bedrule Parish, where he is buried. His children included: William (1764/5–1800); Janet (1772/3–1808); a son who died aged 17; Margaret; and Adam (1773/4–1831). Adam (b.1814/5) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor in Hawick. His business is listed on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his cousin, Elizabeth Phaup, at West Toll-Bar. Alexander (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was recorded as ‘called Crat Bell’, and the others named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Ninian Teviot ‘of the Hilhous’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’. It is unclear where he came from. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Craikhope in 1721. In 1720 he married Margaret Clerk, who was also from Roberton. Their children included John (b.1721). These children, born to Alexander in Yarrow Parish, may also be the same family: James (b.1828); John (b.1730); Margaret (b.1832); and Isabel (b.1736). Alexander (18th C.) servant in Falnash. In 1728 he married Helen Henderson, who was also a servant there. Alexander (19th/20th C.) partner with Robert Milligan in the firm Milligan & Bell. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded (by Pitscottie) in about the late 1530s as keeper of the King’s sheep in Ettrick Forest. There were said to be 10,000 sheep and he ‘made the king as good an account of them as if they had gone in the bounds of Fife’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitfield in Wilton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1709. Andrew (b.1800/1) wood forester living at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret and Thomas. Charles ‘Charlie’ first Cornet after WWII. Francis (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Colterscleuch in 1724 and Skelfhill in 1729. His children, baptised in Cavers, probably include Andrew (b.1724), Robert (b.1727), Janet (b.1729) and Bessie (b.1731). Francis (b.c.1785) hand-loom weaver in Hawick, born outside Roxburghshire. In 1837 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Pringle and Ann Buckham. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row along with Jane. Francis ‘Frankie’, ‘Dodo’ (20th C.) diminutive West End character of the mid-to-late 1900s, always wearing a peaked flat cap and greeting people with ‘Yo-Ho ...’ and his stick held high. Famous for his comment ‘Have ye seen the Struther, it’s black wi swans?’. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed baptisms for for several other residents of Borthaugh: James Pott and William Telfer in 1721; Walter Riddell in 1724, William Lorraine in 1725, 1729 and 1731; and James Scott and Thomas Wilson in 1729. He seems likely to be the George who married Jean Wilson in Roberton in 1712. George (18th C.) married Agnes Aitchison in 1727, the marriage being proclaimed in Bedrule and Minto Parishes. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Margaret Waldie, who was also from Hawick. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Muirfield, in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. George (1780–1859) eldest son of William and Markie Minto, he was born in Southdean Parish. He took over farming Menslaws from his father. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still junior of Menslaws. He is recorded there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1837 he was noted as the only heritor of Bedrule Parish who was resident there. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Scott (son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe and Barbara Haliburton) and Ann Scott (daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Jean Elliot); she was thus a cousin of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Their children were: Ann Scott (1814–81); and Marky Minto (1816–38). The farm of Menslaws was sold the year after his death to Thomas Cockburn. George Hardy (b.1774) son of John and Anne Johnston, he was born in Graitney, Dumfriesshire. He was a hosier in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His wife was Mary Wilson and they had children Helen (b.1807) and Agnes (b.1810) in Hawick. He could be the ‘stocking-maker and plasterer’ who died in Hawick in 1829. George (18th/19th C.) keeper of a public house... in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He could be the George listed as a 70 year old cattle drover in Lilliesleaf in 1841. George (19th C.) miller and farmer at Southdean Mill in the 1860s. Gideon William of Fortune, W.S. (1805–77) son of William, who was a farmer in Berwickshire. He purchased the estate of Woll in 1863 from Mr. Ainslie. He married Barbara Leonora Dirom and was succeeded by his son William Scott. Helen (17th/18th C.) servant of Robert Deans in Hawick. In 1725 she was admonished by the Session ‘for her unbecoming deportment in going the length of Bleckliesmont (probably Blackleemouth) in ye water Roule with Archibald Little, soldier, and was sharp lie rebuked, seeing she was hired to shear in ye Landward’. Isabella ‘Tibbie’ (1793/4–1863) from Canonbie, she was housekeeper of Walter Scott, farmer at Bowanhill. Her headstone at Teviothead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’. James (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Riddell (in the Fanns) and Janet Bell (probably a relative). James (1782–1843) son of William and Markie Minto. He went to India in 1811 and became a successful indigo planter and merchant in Bengal. He may have married Clara Ewen in Calcutta in 1817 and certainly married Betsy Laidlaw in Jedburgh in 1828. Their only child was Dorothea Laidlaw (b.1832). He died on passage from India. James (b.1808/9) from Minto, he was a grocer and spirit merchant on the Howegate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jessie, Margaret and Thomas. James (b.1818/9) from Langholm, he was a police officer in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street. He was also listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. His wife was Janet. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Whitchesters. His will is recorded in 1683. He is probably related to William, who was at Whitchesters in 1694, as well as the later John. He may be the John who, along with Walter, witnessed a baptism for John Henderson in Hawick in 1656. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1676. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Marion Bell and her husband David Graham in 1671. He is probably the John who married Malie Wilson and whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Henderson and Walter Bell. John (17th C.) tenant in Ramsaycleuchburn, where he is recorded in 1678. His wife was called Park and their son Thomas was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1678. John (17th C.) servant at Gorrenberry, presumably for Francis Scott of Gorrenberry. In 1684 he was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th/18th C.) servant to Adam Elliot of Arkleton. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish in 1702. John (17th/18th C.) recorded being at Whitchesters in about 1710, according to evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He was probably related to the William recorded in Whitchesters in 1694. John (b.1824/5) woodman living at Wrae in Ewesdale in 1851. His wife was Jane (from Perthshire) and their children included Ann, Margaret, Janet and Robert. John ‘Jock’ (19th C.) local athlete who competed in Common Riding games etc. He won most of the prizes for leaping competitions in the early 1860s. John (1871–1941) born at Ladylaw Place and raised in Lothian Street, he was son of John and Cecil Messer. He became a coach-builder by trade, but better known locally as a tenor singer. He was taught by Walter Fiddles Wilson, organist in Hawick. He was preceptor at Allars Kirk for 10 years from 1899, and performed widely at concerts etc. in Hawick and elsewhere. He was known for the musical lectures he gave in collaboration with Thomas Caldwell. ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’ was composed for and sung by him at the 1903–05 Colour Bussings, and he also first sung ‘Oor ain Auld Toon’ in 1903. Despite that, he left Hawick for Edinburgh in 1909, to take up a position with Scottish Motor Traction. He died in Edinburgh. Margaret (d.1732) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Her gravestone in the kirkyard there was inscribed ‘HERE LYS MARGRIT BELL, WHO, IN PRUDENCE DID EXCEL 1732’. Richard (1833–1909) local farmer, known for keeping a managerie. His brother-in-law was John Wilson, son of Christopher North’. He lived at Billholm, having the joint tenancy of that farm and Craikhope. In 1879 he moved to Castle O’er. He was also a keen antiquarian, and the first to record excavations at Castle O’er and Over Rig. He wrote ‘My Strange Pets’ (1905), which includes descriptions of his exotic hobby, as well as local farming stories. Dr. Richard (1897–1978), M.C., born in Newcastle ton, he was educated at George Heriot’s. He served with the 6th Border Regiment in WWI and was awarded the Military Cross. He returned to Edinburgh, qualifying as a doctor in 1924, settling into practice in Heydon Bridge, Northumberland. In WWII he served with the R.A.M.C. in Europe, where he met his wife Felicity. The couple had 2 daughters. He died at Hayden Bridge and is buried in Ettrickton Cemetery along with George Dalgleigh (d.1828) and family. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1755) son of John, minister at Smailholm, and said to have been a 'youth of promising parts', he graduated from the University of Edinburgh in 1699 and was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1693. He was called to Cavers late that year and ordained as minister of Cavers in 1694, becoming the first minister there after the Revolution. In 1705 (or possibly 1703) he dissented over an Act of the Synod relating to Church governance (along with Alexander Orrock of Hawick and Robert Cunningham of Wilton). In 1706 he was one of the minority of ministers who protested against the Anglican Prelates sitting in the U.K. Parliament. In 1711 he performed a marriage in Hawick Parish (after the death of Alexander Orrock). In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the new candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick. In 1719 his servant Margaret Wilson got married in Hawick. In 1720, the Laird of Sharplaw wrote to the Lord Advocate regarding how to act against those few local ‘nonjurant’ ministers and their supporters, stating that ‘Mr Bell, minister of Cavers, a gentleman of great piety, prudence, and learning (who was among the first that took the oaths), had a great hand in healing the breach’. He was translated to Crailing in 1721. In 1735 he was appointed one of His Majesty’s Chaplains in Ordinary for Scotland, but deprived for political reasons in 1744. He paid the window tax at Crailing Manse in 1748. He was ‘father of the church’ (i.e. the longest ordained minister in Scotland) when he died. He married Mrs. Kennedy and they had a son, John, who became minister of Gordon, and whose son became a clergyman as a condition of inheriting land from him. The earliest existing Cavers communion token, marked ‘CK’ (‘Cavers Kirk’) and ‘1699’ dates from his ministry. Robert (18th C.) wrignt in Bedrule. He married Helen Young, who died in 1772, aged 72, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard.

Robert (1730–1802) son of Thomas, he was born in Bedrule Parish. He was probably tenant at Menslaws before the present house was built. He is listed as ‘of Mainslaws’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although long deceased by then); he owned the farm, as well as ‘Two Husband Lands at the Waulk Mill acquired from Cavers’. In 1750 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Black. Their children included: William, who farmed at Menslaws; and Elspeth, who died in infancy. He died in Jedburgh and is buried in Ancrum. Thomas (19th C.) ran the licensed grocer’s in O’Connell Street, taken over by Henry Hunt. His daughter was Margaret R. Bell of 9 Teviot Crescent. Thomas ‘Tammie’ (19th C.) one of 3 men who instigated the Hawick Home Mission in 1872. Thomas M. (19th C.) owner of Liddelbank, recorded in 1879. He later lived at Minsca in Dumfriesshire. He married Mary, eldest daughter of Rev. John Black of Newcastleton. She died in Ontario in 1912. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Wilson and their children included John (b.1639), James (b.1648) and Janet (b.1650). He may be the Walter who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for John Henderson in 1656. Walter (17th C.) rented a third of the farm of Raesknoke in at least the period 1690–96. He was also resident at Raesknoke according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Scott, whose children born in Hawick included: Marion (b.1670); Helen (b.1673); Margaret (b.1678); and Janet (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were David Graham (also tenant in Raesknow) and John Purdom. Walter (b.c.1814/5) from Dumfriesshire, he was a lime-burner at Larriston in 1861 and was recorded at ‘Larriston Lodge’ in 1868. His wife was Jane and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, Ann, Jane and Janet. William (15th C.) priest of St. Andrew’s diocese who was notary for the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee for George Home of Wedderburn. He may have been associated with one of the local parishes. However, he also notarised 2 other documents for the Homes of Wedderburn in 1474. William (16th C.) tenant at ‘le cot rig’ in ‘le mains’ in Appletrewhall in 1539/40.

As recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book, the farm was then purchased by Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’ from Robert Scott of Howpasley. William ‘Willie Reidcloak’ (d.1628) head of the Annandale family, he was Laird of Blackethouse. Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and Robert Douglas, Provost of Lincluden, were cautioners for him in 1582. He is then stated to be ‘in Blacathous, alias Reidcloik’. He is ‘Reydelcloik’ in 1590 when there was a complaint against his brothers ‘Jock’ and Thomas for rieving and a further complaint against his brother John. He was involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, supposedly the man who carried off Kinmont on his horse, still bound in fetters. The English account of the raid refers to him as ‘Willie Bell ‘redcloake’, who took part along with 2 of his brothers. In 1596 there is a complaint that ‘Will Bell ‘read clooke’ led a raid into England, taking 200 cattle from Sark. The English Warden demanded a pledge for him in 1597. William (17th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably different from the William at Highchesters. He is probably related to the Johns recorded at Whitchesters in 1683 and in about 1710. He is recorded in Whitchesters when he witnessed baptisms in 1700 for wright John Dalglesh in Alton Croft and in 1704 for Robert Rodger in Whitchesters. He may be the William Bell who was fined for ‘casting of peats and turfs in the common moss and mure, being not ane burgess’. His son Archibald was baptised in Hawick in 1700, with witnesses Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Davidson in Newbigging. Janet (b.1696), baptised in Hawick Parish, may also have been his child. William (17th C.) shepherd at Easter Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Broadlee. In 1729 there is a report in the Roberton Parish session books of an argument between him and Robert Stewart, servant of Francis Coltert in Woodburn. He is meant to have struck Stewart on the Sabbath, but said he only used ‘a tip with a small hors wand, being so much provoked with his ill tounge’. He is probably the William who was recorded at Woodburn in 1723. His children included: John (b.1723); William (b.1727); and Isobel (b.1730). William (1755–1836) son of Robert and Margaret Black. He became farmer at Menslaws, perhaps purchasing the farm that his father had tenanted before him. He may be responsible for building the new house there in about 1786. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was also tenant of Rueycastle in the late 18th century. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1774 in Southdean Parish he married Markie, daughter of George Minto and Barbara Chisholme. Their children were: Barbara (b.1775), who married William Johnstone and emigrated to Canada; George (1780–1859) who farmed at Menslaws; James (1782–1843), Indian merchant; Marky (1784–1860), who died unmarried; Margaret (1786–1829), who married Alexander, son of Robert Scott, tenant at Roughheugh Mill; Euphemia (1788–1841), who married James Tait; Minto (1790–1838), who married George, son of John Grieve and Isabella Turnbull and emigrated to Quebec; Dr. William (1792–1862), who was Inspector General; Jean (b.1794), who married George Elliot; Isabella (1797–1880); and Robert (1799–1834), who worked in India with his brother and married Adolphina Rabeholm. He died in Jedburgh and is buried in Ancrum.

William (18th/19th C.) local farmer. In 1795 he married Violet, daughter of Robert Scott of Orchard. Their marriage was recorded in both Crailing and Kelso Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1797). William (b.1787/8) born in Jedburgh, he was miller at Southdean Mill (or Hundlee) for many years. In 1841 he was working as a joiner at Swinnie Moorfoot. He was listed as miller at Southdean in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was farming 53 acres and employed 4 people. He and his wife were original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He married Agnes Davidson and their children included: Janet; William, who purchased Hallrule Mill; John; and George. Dr. William (1792–1862) born in Bedrule Parish, son of William and Markie Minto from Menslaws. He graduated with an M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1812, entered military service, becoming Surgeon and eventually Inspector General of Hospitals. He served in Holland, China, Mauritius, India and Canada. He wrote several medical articles. He married Zébée Stewart, daughter of Gen. Alexander Gordon, in Montreal. Their children were Zébée Minto, Amy Gordon, Helen Symonds Dobree, William George Gordon and Rosie Annie Stewart. He died in Jedburgh. William ‘Willie’ (1828–66) from the Menslaws family, son of Robert and Adolphina Rabeholm. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became Chief-Constable at Leeds. He married Louisa Harriet Crozier and their children were Louisa Maria, William Edward and Alice Amelia. William (19th C.) mason at Wolfelee Glen in the 1860s. William ‘Willie’ (b.1831) born at Swinnie farmhouse, he was son of William (tenant of Southdean Mill) and Agnes Davidson (related to the ‘Dandie Dinmont’ family). In his youth he was known as the most powerful man in the parish. He purchased Hallrule Mill from Eliott of Stobs in 1855. He was still recorded at Hallrule Mill in 1868. From 1882 he was also joint tenant of Langraw, along with his son William. In 1852 he married Margaret, daughter of William Horsburgh, whose father farmed on the Hunthill estate. She died in 1904, aged 73. They had 7 children, 3 of whom died young, including: William (b.1856), the eldest son, who farmed at Langraw; Agnes (b.1858); Alexander Mein (b.1861), who farmed Town-o-Rule; Robert (b.1863); Ellen; and Agnes Janet (b.1865). William (b.1856) son of William, he farmed at Langraw. He became lame as the result of a fall. He married Agnes, daughter of William Ingles, shepherd at Priesthaugh. He had 3 children: Margaret, William (the eldest) and Thomas. William Scott (1859–1925) grandson of William Bell and Violet Scott, from the Falnash Scotts. His father Gideon William purchased Woll in 1863 from Mr. Ainslie. He succeeded to Woll from his father. He was a Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He married his cousin Ella Evelyn Crawford. Rev. William Frederick (1863–1929) born in Edinburgh, he studied at the University and New College there. He was ordained as minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk in 1897. He married Valerie Morant and their children were: Valerie Hamilton; and Ivan Monteath (1906–77). Rev. William Napier (b.1873) born in Glasgow, son of engineer David and Helen Napier. He graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1905 and was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1908. He was assistant at St. Andrews Parish in Glasgow for 2 years and was in 1910 ordained as minister of Saughtree Church. He was the first full minister of the Church, which at that time was erected into a separate parish from Castleton. He demitted his charge in 1920, when he was appointed as assistant to the Professor of Ecclesiastical History at Glasgow University.

Bella (be-la, be-lu) n. familiar name for Isabella. Bellendean (bel-en-deen) n. area an former farm near the head of the Ale Water, not far from Alemoor Reservoir, which was the site of Bellenden, the gathering place of the Scotts; hence the family rallying cry ‘A Bellendaine’. The main farmhouse lay to the south of the B711, near where the Bellendean Burn meets the Ale Water. In about 1250 these lands (along with Todrig) were gifted by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldstream Priory. Robert Scott exchanged lands at Glenkerry (on the Tim Water) for Bellendean with the monks of Melrose Abbey in 1415. This is probably the ‘bellentyne’ where Alexander Turnbull was recorded in 1494/5. George Nichol is recorded as the King’s shepherd there in 1540 when he was paid for 5 bolls of grain; probably this was among properties that Scott of Buccleuch temporarily forfeited to the Crown. Along with other Buccleuch properties it was burnt by the English in 1543. George Nichol was the tenant farmer there in 1574 and the last testament of Sir Walter of Buccleuch lists all the livestock on the farm at that time. In 1581/2 a group of Elliotics and Armstrongs stole 60 ewes from there, the farm then being the property of Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, Simon Nichol, Helen Grieve, Margaret Anderson, William Nichol, Helen Shiel, Helen Give- nlock, James Nichol, Helen Anderson, Archibald Campbell and Margaret Forest. It was marked prominently on the map of the whole of Scotland that Robert Gordon drew for Blaeu’s 1654 atlas. James Fletcher was a tenant there in 1685. The farms of Bellendean and Bellendean-shiel were part of Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Roberton Parish in 1689. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch the farm is shown (along with Henwoodie), covering 2572 acres and bounded by Borthwickbrae, Milsington, Girnwood, Meadshaw, Craik, Outersiderig, Hoscote, East Buccleuch, Whitslade and Redfordgreen. Thomas Nichol was recorded there in 1728, Walter Elliot in 1736–41, James Anderson in 1757–61, Thomas Jackson in 1764, Robert Cranston in 1781 and John Sinton in 1785. In 1785 and 1803 it was valued at £306. James Burnet was farmer there in 1797 and was joint tenant with his son Robert from about 1830. Robert Burnet was farmer there in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. The farmhouse was demolished about the time that the Alemoor Reservoir was developed in the late 1950s, and there is now little sign of previous habitation between Alemoor and Redfordgreen. The Bellendean Burn follows the B711 near here, with Bellendean Shank on the south side of the road and Bellendean Rig on the north side (former spellings include ‘Bellendeane’, etc., with ‘Bellingdene’ in about 1250, ‘Bellyndeen’, ‘Bellinden’ and ‘Bellenden’ in 1415, ‘Belindene’ in 1415, ‘bellentyn’ and ‘belfentyn’ in 1494/5, transcribed ‘Balloden’ in 1540, ‘Bellendean’ in 1738, ‘Ballendean’ in 1781 and ‘Bellenden’ in 1803; the origin is probably Old English ‘belling demu’, meaning ‘the valley with the little hill’, although the rallying cry has been suggested to be a corruption of ‘Ad Bellendum’, Latin for ‘To Battle’; ‘Bellindean’ is on the 1650 parish map, ‘Bellendenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Bellenden’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Bellenden).

Bellendean (bel-en-deen) n. William (16th C.) recorded in ‘Kirksteid’ in Selkirk, with his surname given as ‘Bellendene’. He was put in the Selkirk Tolbooth for a disturbance at the market and Gavin Wilkin and William Scott, younger, claimed that they should be freed from being his cautioners (this is probably the same as the surname Ballantyne, but a direct connection to the lands of Bellendean seems probable).

Bellendean Burn (bel-en-deen-burn) n. stream that rises near Goose Loch and meets the B711 from the south near Redfordgreen, following the road for a while to meet the Ale Water.

Bellendean Rig (bel-en-deen-rig) n. ridge of high ground on the right of the B711 after Alemoor Loch, on the opposite side of Bellendean Burn from Bellendean Shank. Its peaks are Muckle Knowe and Little Knowe. A cottage near there was home to farm labourer James Anderson and his family in 1841 and ‘Road Man’ Alexander Amos and family in 1851.

Bellendean Shank (bel-en-deen-shawngk) n. hilly area to the left of the B711 just before Redfordgreen, on the opposite side of the valley from Bellendean Rig. It is now under forest. There are some enclosures on the lower parts beside the road.

Bellendean Shiel (bel-en-deen-sheelz) n. former farmstead near Bellendean, recorded in the 17th century when it was in a detached part of Selkirk, joining Robertson Parish in 1690 (recorded then as ‘Bellingdone-sheels’).

Bellenden (bel-en-den) n. former name for the original home of the Scotts of Teviotdale, near the head of the Ale Water, before they moved to Branxholme and adopted the name Buccleuch. The area may have given rise to some instances of the name ‘Ballantyne’, ‘Ballantine’ etc., since that was often spelled ‘Bellenden’ in earlier centuries. The modern name for the area is Bellenden. The ‘Bellenden Banner’ is an ancient relic of the Scotts of Buccleuch, perhaps made in 1644 for the regiment of Earl Francis; it was also unfurled at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. The area inspired the rallying cry of the Scotts – ‘Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name: From Yarrowcleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselee to Chester-glen, Troop’d man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bellenden’ [SWS] (marked ‘Bellendem’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is uncertain, and it may be that the name comes from its use as a gathering place, rather than the other way around; it is probably the ‘Bellingdene’ of c.1256; see also Bellenden).

Bellenden (bel-en-den) n. Sir John of Auchinvoile (d.1577) eldest son of Thomas. He served as secretary to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1547 he was appointed as a Lord of Session, as well as Director of the Chancery and Justice Clerk. He was heavily involved in Scottish politics in the time of the Reformation and with the period of reign of Mary, Queen of Scots, up until the crowning of the infant King James. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scotts and the Kers and was also mentioned in support of the further bond in 1568/9 (see also Ballantyne).

The Bellenden Banner (thy-bel-en-den-bawnur) n. name sometimes used for an ancient banner of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was probably made in 1644 for the regiment of Earl Francis Scott, when he took part in the siege of Newcastle, but may have been made for the funeral of Earl Walter a decade earlier. It was carried by Walter, son of Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford at the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815. It was used as the subject of the poems that Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd wrote to mark the occasion – ‘Then up with the banner, let forest winds fan her, She has blazed over Ettrick eight ages and more; In sport we’ll attend her, in battle defend her, With heart and with hand, like our fathers before’ [SWS], ‘Then hail! memorial of the brave, The liegeman’s pride, the Border’s awe, May thy grey pennon never wave On sterner field than Carterhaugh’ [ES].

Bellenden-Ker (bel-en-den-ker) n. William (1728–1805) 4th Duke of Roxburghe. He was 7th Lord Bellenden and succeeded his cousin John Ker, 3rd Duke in 1804, but died not long afterwards. He married Mary, daughter of Capt. Bechinoe (a marriage that offended the 4th Duke). There was then a legal battle over succession and the titles were dormant until 1812 when James Innes-Ker became the 5th Duke. He is recorded as deceased on the 1808 subscription list for Janieson’s Scots dictionary.

Bell Hill (bel-hil) n. hill to the east of Selkirk. It contains the well-preserved remains of a hill-fort of the ‘ridge-top’ type. It is about 70 m by 30 m and had triple ramparts.

Bell Hill (bel-hil) n. hill to the south-west of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 348 m.

Bellingham (be-lin-jum, -ling-) n. small town in Northumberland, once a market centre for the area and the first sizeable community in the English Middle Marches along the North Tyne valley. It featured prominently in the history of Border raids, with Auld Wat of Harden raiding it in 1597. The 12th century St. Cuthbert’s Church is famous for having a stone roof to prevent it being burned. Bellingham is now largely a tourist centre for Kielder Forest and the Pennine Way. It had a ‘Riding of the Fair’ tradition in September that died out in the early 1900s, but was revived in 2003. Population 1,200.

Belling Hill (be-lin-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, just north of Falside, reaching a height of 354 m (1,162 ft). This is where the force of Sir Christopher Dacre was located in the skirmish at the Selaterford – ‘The sun beam is red on the Belling so brown – Can his redness be boding for good? Or can it be wrath, for the doings of death, The Sclaterford – ‘The sun beam is red on the Bell-Irvine (bel-ir-vin) n. James Jardine (1857–1936) younger son of John of White Hill. He was a partner in the firm Jardine, Matheson & Co., and a member of the Legislative and Executive Councils of Hong Kong. He lived for a while at Minto House and later at Makerstoun. He married Eva Gertrude Percy and had children Ethel Mary and Eva Margareta. There is a portrait of him by Samuel Henry William Llewellyn.

bellises (be-li-seez) n., arch. bellows (peculiar double plural).

bellman (bel-mawn, bel-mun) n. in former times the duty of one of the Burgh Officers was to ring the morning bell at 5.30 a.m. and the evening bell at 8 p.m., as well as to announce proclamations etc. He apparently charged a lower fee than the drummer for announcements. He had charge of the ‘deid bell’, and would ring the ‘passing bell’ at St. Mary’s at funerals. Along with the town drummer, it was traditional for him to go round the town at Christmas, collecting money for ringing the bells for the year. In 1707 it was decreed that he was to provide for oil for the clock and bell-ropes from his own income. In 1817 he was paid extra for also ringing the bells at 6 a.m. and 8 p.m. Known bellmen include: Jock Scott (recorded in 1612); William Scott (17th C.); Alexander Scott (early 18th C.); Alexander Young (early 18th C.); William Turnbull (early 19th C.); Michael Wintrup (mid-19th C.); Tom Cook (around the 1880s); and Samuel Lawrence (late 19th C.). Hawick’s last bellman was Alexander Stainton, sometime around the turn of the 20th century.

the Bellman (thu-bel-num) n. nickname for several Burgh Officers, e.g. William Scott in the 17th century or William Turnbull in the 19th century and Alexander Stainton into the early 20th century. In earlier times this officer of the Town would be given the task of walking the streets to tell of the deaths of citizens, using the ‘Deed Bell’. Later the Bellman would broadcast messages from the Council about meetings, changes in utilities (like water being turned off), etc.

Bellom (be-lom) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war in Hawick. He is said to have been an ensign on the ship ‘Ventura Felix NV’ (although no record of a ship of that name seems to exist), which was captured in 1811, later being detained in Hawick. He lived for several years with Ann Ekron, and they had an illegitimate daughter, Adelina. Adelina (1816/7–97) daughter of Adam and Ann Ekron. In 1837 in Hawick she married Thomas Scott, who worked at Weensland Mills. They had children Ann, Thomas, Catherine, Adam and Mary Ann. She is listed as a grocer on the Howegate in the 1851 census. Her name is also sometimes given as ‘Adeline’.

Bells

Bells (belz) n. former name for area on the Border with England, around Bell’s Burn and Bellskirk. It is mentioned in 1551 in the document making Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme the Justiciar of Liddesdale, specifically being listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddesdale where meetings could take place with the English Wardens.

Bell’s Burn (belz-burn) n. stream that follows part of the Border between eastern Castleton Parish and England, between Saughtree and Kielder. 2 polished stone axe-heads were found there while ploughing for forestry in 1970.

Bellshiel (belz-sheilz) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish, situated south of Annett Hill and east of Byreholm and Newstead. Mason William Oliver was there in 1821. There were 2 families living there in 1841 (it is ‘Bellshiel’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Bellskirk (belz-kirk) n. former church and village in the eastern part of Castleton, now situated in Northumbria to the north of Kielder village. It is recorded in a grant relating to William the Lion, and hence at that time was part of Scotland. It was used as a meeting point between deputes of the Wardens of the Middle Marches in 1590, there recorded as ‘the Belles Kyrk’. The church must have been disused from at least 1604, when Castleton Parish was reorganised. The existence of gravestones was mentioned in the 19th century, but now nothing remains, although ‘Bells Moor’ and ‘Bellsburnfoot’ are still marked on the Ordnance Survey maps (also written ‘Belkirk’; it occurs on mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland as ‘Bell kirk’).

bellum (be-lum) n., poet. force, noise – ‘And stand the bellum of the weather, Thro’ moss, and moor, and bent, and heather’ [JR].

bellum (be-lum) n., poet. a disrespectful epithet – ‘...Wi’ what some bellums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whusky, When ‘boot yer plans ye freendly tattle, An’ speech gets huskie’ [JoHa] (possibly used in error for ‘bellium’).

Bellview (bel-vew) n. house in Denholm on Sunnyside. It used to have stones outside it marking where the tenants had buried their horses and pets.

belly-balm (be-lee-bawm) n., poet. salve for one’s stomach, food – ‘If sae, I dinna gie a d—mn For a’ the affes, If I can get belly-bam, An’ bonny laffes’ [JIR].

belly-band (be-lee-band) n., arch. the loop of string in the middle of a kite.

bellyfi (be-lee-fi) n. a bellyful – ‘A’ room about stude the muckle black birds, Quiet and glutted wi’ bellys-fi daith’ [DH].

Belses (bel-seez) n. hamlet in Ancrum Parish, and former small station on the Waverley Line, the second one north from Hawick. The settlement is split into New Belses and Old Belses, and is about 8 miles north-east of Hawick. There was also once a toll house here. The estate was formerly quite extensive and formed a separate Barony. It was a possession of the monks of Jedburgh Abbey from early times until the Reformation, purchased as part of those lands by Adam French in 1569, when its mill was also mentioned. Hector Turnbull of Belses was recorded there in 1580, and other residents included John and William Bennet and James Cowan. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. The superiors of the lands there were the Cairncrosses of Culsnie in the 16th century and Thomas Hamilton in the early 17th. John Buckingham, Thomas Haswell, John Turnbull, Thomas Walker and William Waugh were all recorded there in 1502. There were Turnbulls there in the 16th–18th centuries, with George Turnbull of Belses being hanged in 1603 for a series of crimes, involving murder and theft. Andrew Scott of Aikwood inherited lands there from his father Robert on 1616. Lands there were owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. In 1643 lands there were owned by William Kerr, Earl of Lothian, Sir Thomas Kerr (valued at £291), Walter Scott in Shielswood (£130), David Scott in Newlands (£156) and ‘Morrishall, his lands in Belses called Pinnacle’ (£766 13s 4d). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the ‘Lands and mill of Belches’ were valued at £1143 18s 4d and owned by Sir Thomas Kerr. William Wylie was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenantter. Andrew Turnbull was there in 1688 and Robert Walker in 1731. James Wilson was farmer there in 1797, owning 14 horses. Harry Davidson was Laird in the early 19th century. John Edmund Elliot owned New Belses in the later 19th century and it passed to the Marquess of Lothian. There was also once a corn mill there. There is an ancient earthwork in a wooded area between here and Rawflat. Once suggested to be Roman, that is unlikely, and now it has been largely destroyed by cultivation – ‘Oo grumbled if oo got on Belses (bel-seez) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 20 shillings. They were among the lands owned by Jedburgh Abbey, but their precise location is uncertain. In 1541 they still pertained to the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1632 they were listed among with Westburnflat and Whithauch as possessions of Lanie Armstrong (it is ‘Belsys’ in c.1376, ‘Bel-sis’ in 1541 and ‘Belsches’ in 1632).

Belses Mill (bel-seez-mill) n. former corn mill and farm just north-east of Belses. It lies on the Ale Water, near where the railway crosses the river. Patrick Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. George Buckham was there in 1581. It was owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the 17th century. It was leased to John Buchan in 1632. John Turnbull in Standhill is recorded as owner in 1643, his lands valued at £200. John White was recorded there in 1683. In 1788 the ‘Lands and mill of Belsches’ in Ancrum Parish were recorded as owner valued at £21143 18s 4d and owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre (it is ‘Belses miln’ in 1581, ‘Belchesmilne’ in 1683 and ‘Bellshesmilne’ in 1684; ‘Belshiesmill’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Belstanerig (bel-stään-rig) n. former lands in Ewesdale, described in 1663 as ‘the landis of Wolflhope and pendicle theirof callit Belstanerig’ in among the Dun frie shire possessions of the Scotts of Bucleuch.

belt (bel) v. to beat with the fists – ‘Gi’e ’im a guid beltn’’[GW], to run headlong – ‘Rinnin’ owre the brae as hard as hei could belt’ [GW] (more common than in Standard English).

the belt (thu-bel) n. the tawse or leather strap used in Scottish schools to punish pupils by striking on the open palm, or in earlier times on the buttocks. Still common through the 1970s, the main manufacturer ceased production in 1982 and the practice was abolished in 1987 – ‘oo got hummers o the belt frae George Barclay’, ‘A’m no feared o the belt, mei’, v. to use the tawse – ‘hei belted maist o the cless even the lassies’.

Beltane (bel-tän) n. ancient pagan festival on May Day, involving great bonfires to mark the beginning of summer. In Hawick they were suppressed towards the end of the 18th century due to riots between different parts of the community – ‘and for my own part I would rather want corny work, till Beltin, as have the ill wishes of you poor half starved creatures . . . ’[WSB], used to describe one of the term-days, probably the same as Whitsunday – ‘Item, to the three persons of the Forrest kirk, for their Beltane terms last bipast . . . ’[SB1574].

Beltine (bel-tín, bel-tän) n. an alternative form of Baltane – ‘Frae Beltine tide to Yule e’en, Through foul and fair we toil . . . ’[JT].

Belvedere (bel-vi-deer) n. small wood on Cavers Mains farm, about a quarter mile south-west of the farm house. It is on a piece of land forming a plateau at a height of about 550 ft, offering magnificent views over Teviotdale. A cairn there was excavated in 1895 (or 1896) and contained a burial cist with a well preserved skeleton and some other artefacts; photographs are in the Museum. There is now little left of the original cairn, which may have been 20 m in diameter (also perhaps spelled ‘Belvidere’; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

belyve (bee-IV) adv., poet. speedily, quickly, at once – ‘Thus did he live, thus did he thrive, An’ turned a wealthy laird belyve’ [RDW].

bemain (bee-män) v., poet. to bemoan – ‘He sat that night aside his friend, An’ waefully his case bemainid’ [RDW].

Bemersyde House (bee-mur-sid) n. rectangular tower built around 1535, by the village of Bemersyde, near St. Boswells. Originally it was constructed there to protect the Monks’ Ford (between Dryburgh and Old Melrose Abbeys). It was burned in 1545, rebuilt in 1581, and added to in 1690 with stone from Dryburgh Abbey. Further extensions followed in the 18th and 19th centuries, with a survey and alterations carried out by J.P. Alison in 1923, and reductions around 1960. It was home of the Haigs, who died out in 1857, but was bought by the Government in 1921 and presented by a ‘grateful nation’ to Field Marshal Douglas Haig.

ben (ben) adv. within, to the inner part, any other than the present room, through in the other part of the house – ‘A’m ben in the bedroom, so ee’ll heh’i dae eet yersel’, ‘er ee ben there?’, ‘The auld gudeman came stamplin ben, On battle he was bent . . . ’ [JTe], ‘And as they rax to bring ben the unkenit bairn . . . ’[DH], n., arch. the inner room, particularly in a 2-room house – ‘A long low thatched cottage consisting of a but, a ben and a far-ben’[JAHM], ‘. . . baith in but and in

Benet (be-ni') n. Adam of Chesters and Grange (16th C.) perhaps the first of the family to be associated with Chesters. His parents names are unknown. He married Catherine Scott (but it is unknown which branch of the Scotts she was from). Their children included: Philip, who succeeded and married Janet Turnbull; and William, recorded in 1562 and 1564. Adam of Chesters (16th C.) 2nd son of Philip and younger brother of Mungo of Chesters. In a charter of 1595 he was granted the 10 merk lands of Wester Grange. He may have married another Benet. Their children included: William of Grubet, who married Margaret Elliott of Stobs; and Janet, who married Mark Pringle of Clifton in about 1616. Alexander of Chesters (18th C.) son of Andrew, who he succeeded. His only son was Robert, but he died in 1780 (with his will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794). It seems that Chesters Went to his sisters Jean, Ann and Agnes. The ‘Mrs Bennet of Chesters’ listed on the role of people in Jedburgh taxed for having female servants in the period 1785–91 was probably his wife. Andrew (c.1696–d.1758) Laird of Chesters, near Ancrum, son of Archibald. He had a grant of the lands of Chesters in 1719. He was one of the local landowners asked in 1739 to decide where to situate the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick. He married Dorothy, daughter of Alexander Collingwood in 1719; she was from ‘Litill Rill’ in Whittingham Parish, England. Their children were: Archibald (b.1720), who must have died young; Dorothy (b.1722); Barbara (b.1724), who married James Murray of Eves, emigrated to the U.S.A. and was the great-great-great-grandmother of Franklin D. Roosevelt; Alexander (b.1727), who succeeded; Jean (b.1728); Thomas (b.1729); Ann (b.1731); and Raguel (b.1732). In 1737 he secondly married Ann, daughter of Robert Turnbull of Standhill, and they had children: Helen (b.1738), who married Archibald Douglas of Timpmembership in 1765; Agnes (b.1739), who was unmarried; Isobel (b.1741), who married Archibald Hope, Convenor of Excise; John (b.1743); and Robert (1744–94). His son Alexander’s only son Robert (the obvious heir) died in 1780. Jean, Ann and Agnes may have jointly inherited the lands (there are records relating to their lands in Ancrum Parish among the papers of the Elsots of Minto in 1800 and 1801). ‘Lady Chesters’ paid the window tax at Chesters House in 1748 (suggesting he may have already been deceased) and 1753. The forename of Bennet of Chesters is left blank on the 1761 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire (presumably because the succession was not clear at that point). Archibald of Chesters (17th/18th C.) son of Robert. He was ‘younger of Chesters’ in 1696 when listed along with his father on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1682 he married Barbara, daughter of John Rutherford of Edgerston, and she died about 1706. He secondly married Rebecca Langlands in Hawick in 1708; she was presumably from the family of the former Lairds of Langlands. In 1708, before his marriage, he gave money to Hawick Parish, including a crown piece. In 1711 their unclaimed ‘pawnded’ money was given to the Hawick poor box. His children (mostly with his first wife) included: John, who must have died before his brother; Andrew, who succeeded and married Dorothy Collingwood and Ann Turnbull; Barbara, who married Mark, son of W. Chisholme of Parkhill, who inherited West Foderlee; and Anne, who married John Murray of Unthank. He was probably also father of Cecilia, who married John Rutherford of Capehope. He was still alive in 1713. Sir David of Grubet (18th C.) son of William. His son William was baptised in Eckford Parish in 1734. James (d.1550) priest associated with Hobkirk Parish. He was replaced by David Turnbull. James (d.bef. 1595) described as the deceased former resident of lands in Lilliesleaf when they were granted to Alexander Hogg in 1595/6. Jean (17th C.) recorded as resident at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1580 when he a witness to Hector Turnbull of Belses giving sasine to his daughter Katherine. His own son William was also a witness. Sir John (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when the General Assembly reported on ‘Professed Papists’. He was listed under ‘Merse and Tiviotdale’ and hence probably from the Bennets of Chesters. Mungo of Chesters (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Philip and Janet Turnbull. He is recorded in 1562 and 1564. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1576 he was listed among the major landowners of Roxburghshire and charged with sheep-stealing case in 1624. He was listed in 1628 ing to appear before the Commissioners’ Court for a Liddesdale sheep-stealing case in 1624. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. William held the lands of Barnhills from 1628, and must have been either his brother or son. Also in 1623 he was fined 100 merks for failing to appear before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was on a jury for a Liddesdale sheep-stealing case in 1624. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. William held the lands of Barnhills from 1628, and must have been either his brother or son. Also in 1628 William of the Grange complained to the Privy Council that despite a ban on wearing ‘hagbuts and pistols’, he ‘constantly rides up and down the country armed with these weapons awaiting an opportunity to take his advantage of the complainer’; Andrew in Chesters was also named, and so presumably related. He had a ‘resignation ad remanentiam’ (i.e. to the superior’s own hands) to William in 1576/7 there was a complaint that Walter Turnbull in Firth, servant of John Turnbull of Minto, attacked him, despite there being a bond between the feuding branches of the Turnbulls. Walter Turnbull ‘band him hand and fute, and thaireftir drew his swerd, quhairwith he cruellie hurt and woundit him … and left him for deid’. His attacker was warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth until £1000 satisfaction was paid. Philip of Chesters (d.c.1560), probably son of Adam. He married Janet Turnbull, and they had sons: Mungo, who succeeded; Adam, progenitor of the Bennets of Grubet; James, progenitor of the Bennets of Leivers, who married Ann Ker of Yair; and William, mentioned as brother of Mungo in 1584/5, who may be the progenitor of the Swedish branch. After his death his wife married Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1562/3 she brought an action against William Bennet, who claimed to be ‘tu-tor’ for Mungo. He could be the Philip who along with Adam was witness to an indictment (relating to Kers and Handale), probably from about the 1490s. Ragwell of Chesters (d.def. bef. 1670) son of Mungo in Chesters, his name is written ‘Ragvel’, ‘Raguel’, ‘Raynell’ and variants. He was one of 8 students who took part in the so-called ‘Royal High School Riot’ in Edinburgh and were imprisoned as a result, complaining about wrongful imprisonment in the Tolbooth. He was regranted the ‘10 merklands of Chesters and Grange’ in 1595. He is ‘in Chesters’ in a 1612 document listing men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he appeared to answer the charge and presumably paid a fine and was released. In 1613 he bought Easter Barnhills from John Turnbull. In 1623 he was the ‘Raguel of Chesteris’ who purchased Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. Also in 1623 he was fined 100 merks for failing to appear before the Commissioners’ Court in Jedburgh. He was on a jury for a Liddesdale sheep-stealing case in 1624. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. William held the lands of Barnhills from 1628, and must have been either his brother or son. Also in 1628 William of the Grange complained to the Privy Council that despite a ban on wearing ‘hagbuts and pistols’, he ‘constantly rides up and down the country armed with these weapons awaiting an opportunity to take his advantage of the complainer’; Andrew in Chesters was also named, and so presumably related. He had a ‘resignation ad remanentiam’ (i.e. to the superior’s own hands) to William in 1631, and another to Thomas Turnbull in 1635. He is probably the ‘Bagnel’ (or ‘Ragnal’, transcriptions vary) of Chesters whose daughter Marian married Robert Scott of Burnhead in 1636. In 1637 Rev. William was returned as his next-of-kin, suggesting that he died by then, with no surviving heirs; however, it is also said that he was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Anna, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1652 and was served heir to him in 1670. He may also have had a daughter Isobel, who married Adam Rutherford of Kidheugh. Robert (17th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Easton and their children included: Helen (b.1648); Bessie (b.1653); John (b.1654); and Bessie (again, b.1656). The witnesses in 1656 were Robert Laing and Adam Brown. Robert of Chesters (d.aft. 1653) son of Ragwell. He is probably the Robert recorded in 1643 as owner of ‘his part of the Grange Pastel’ in Ancrum Parish. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying tax on £1460 for Chesters. In 1670 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Rawflat, ‘Ryknow’ at the eastern end of Belses, with pasturage on Belses Common and Abbotsmeadow in Belses. In 1676 he was one of the local leaders in a covenanting meeting held near Selkirk. In 1677 he was arrested for supporting a conventicle meeting held near Chesters, and after refusing to pay the fine was imprisoned on the Bass Rock. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish. In 1696 he and his son Archibald were on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1652 he married Anna, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers, the contract being signed at ‘Yearlsyde’ (i.e. Earlside). His children included: Archibald, who succeeded; and Christine (or Christian, 1673/4–1708), who married Walter Scott, 2nd son of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh. He was still alive in 1703. Note that he is easily confused with Robert (d.1676), minister at Kilrenny. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ancrum Parish. He married Margaret Blaikie in 1729. His children included: John (b.1731); Isabel (b.1732); and Helen (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) had a ‘deed of excambion’ with Matthew Stewart for the lands of Barnhills in 1775. In 1780 he disposed the same lands to Alexander Allison in liferent and Matthew Stewart in fee. He could be the Robert of Chesters listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He could be the Maj. Robert who was living at Gala House in 1791. William (16th C.) son of John in Belses. In 1580 he was a witness to Hector Turnbull of Belses giving sasine to his daughter Katherine. His father John was also a witness. William (16th C.) brother of Mungo of Chesters. In 1584/5 he was among Turnbulls, Douglasses and others who were charged to appear before the Privy Council. It has been suggested that he may have been progenitor of the Swedish branch of the family. William (d.beft. 1637) son of Mungo and brother of Ragwell. He is recorded in 1608 and 1612 and appears to have led a wild life, finally being charged with murder. He must have died before Rev. William (probably his cousin) was declared next-of-kin of Ragwell. Rev. William of Grubet (c.1593–1647) son of Adam and grandson of Philip of Chesters and Grange. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1614 and became minister of Ancrum in 1622. He was a member of the Commission for maintaining Church discipline in 1634. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’, probably in Hawick. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He got in trouble with the church for exercising his rights as a freetholder to vote for a commissioner to the General Assembly. In 1637 he was returned as next-of-kin to Ragwell, who was probably his full cousin. He may be the ‘Mr William Bennet, for Monsmaynes’ recorded in the valuation rolls for Eckford Parish in 1643, as well as being owner of Broomhills in Ancrum Parish and lands in Yetholm Parish. At some point he acquired the lands and barony of Grubet, on Kale Water. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Sir William, who succeeded to Grubet; Robert, Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, who married Jean Colville; and probably Elizabeth, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum. William of Barnhills (d.c.1653) probably a son of Ragwell. He held the lands of Easter Barnhills from 1613. He bought Barnhills outright (or perhaps just Easter Barhills) in 1628 and had a further charter for the lands in 1634. He cleared the loans on Barnhills with Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1629, in 1630 gave a ‘precept of warning’ against the tenants in Barnhills and Nether Ancrum and in 1631 had a ratification of his rights to the lands. There is a further deed of 1633 from William Turnbull, clearing the final transfer of the property from the Turnbulls to the Bennets. His son William inherited these lands in 1653. William (17th/18th C.) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Barnhills in 1653. He had a Bennetholm

William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘portioner of Ancrum’. He had a son James baptised in 1705 and an unnamed child baptised in 1709. Probably the same William is recorded giving ‘cloth money’ to Ancrum Parish (presumably for a burial). It is possible he is the same man as Sir William of Grubet. William (18th/19th C.) house servant at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver (also spelled ‘Bennat’; see also Bennett).

Bennetholm (be-ni’-hôm) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, probably near the very southern tip of Roxburghshire, although the precise location is unknown. They are recorded as ‘Bennetholme’ in 1541, valued at 42 shillings and tenanted by William Forester.

Bennett (be-ni’) n. Bishop George Henry (1875–1946) born in the Antilles, was ordained a priest in 1898. He came to Hawick from North Berwick, serving as priest at S.S. Mary and David’s 1912–18. He returned for the opening of the new Nalls in 1930 and in 1944 to mark the centenary of S.S. Mary and David’s Chapel. Robert Brown (1895–1949) from Edinburgh, he served as High School Rector 1945–47, coming from being head in Jedburgh. He organised the Youth Sports at the Common Riding of 1946. He left Hawick to take up the post of Director of Education for Roxburghshire, but died only 2 years later.

sasine for ‘the lands of Barnhills and Dickeson’s Brae’ granted by the Duke of Lennox. He had a confirming charter in 1664 from the Archbishop of Glasgow. Sir William of Grubet (d.1707) son of Rev. William of Grubet and Margaret Elliott. He was served heir to his father in 1647, including the 10 merkland of Barnhills, as well as the Barony of Grubet and other lands. He must have succeeded when a minor, since there is a record from 1650 of Rev. Harry Elliot of Bedrule discharging a debt to Robert Pringle, his ‘tutor testamentary’. He (as well as his mother Margaret Elliot) paid tax in Morebattle Parish in 1663 and he also paid there and in Ancrum, Eckford, Morebattle and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1670. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690 and again in 1704, along with his son William. In 1703 he sold Barnhills to William Rutherford. He married Christian, daughter of Alexander Morrison of Prestongrange. Their children included: Sir William, who succeeded; Adam (d.1698); Sir John (d.1751); Jean (d.1710), who married William Nisbet of Dirleton in 1688; Christian, who married Charles, son of Alexander Stuart of Dunean; and Elizabeth, who married Sir John Scott of Ancrum. Sir William of Grubet (d.1729) son of Sir William, whom he succeeded in 1710. He was referred to as ‘Captain’ in his earlier life, being Captain of his own troop of horse. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Revolution and was appointed Captain of the eastern troop of militia in 1689. He was ‘younger of Grubet’ when he contributed 300 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1693 (when still ‘younger of Grubet’), serving until 1707. He was thus one of the M.P.s in the last Scottish Parliament who voted for the Union. He was also M.P. for Roxburghshire 1707–8 in the first Parliament of Great Britain. He presented the Roxburghshire petition on Darien to Parliament. He married Jean, daughter of Sir John Ker of Lochtour, secondly married Margaret, heiress of John Scougall of Whitekirk, and thirdly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir David Hay. His children were: Helen (b.1700), baptised in Eckford Parish; Sir William (d.1730), who had no children; Sir David (d.1741), who married Jean Ker and also had no issue; Robert (d.1733); and Christina, who may have married William Nisbet of Dirleton, who would have been her cousin. The ‘cloth money for Margaret Bennet’ recorded in Ancrum in 1726 is probably for his wife’s burial.

William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘portioner of Ancrum’. He had a son James baptised in 1705 and an unnamed child baptised in 1709. Probably the same William is recorded giving ‘cloth money’ to Ancrum Parish (presumably for a burial). It is possible he is the same man as Sir William of Grubet. William (18th/19th C.) house servant at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver (also spelled ‘Bennat’; see also Bennett).

Bennett (be-ni’) n. Bishop George Henry (1875–1946) born in the Antilles, was ordained a priest in 1898. He came to Hawick from North Berwick, serving as priest at S.S. Mary and David’s 1912–18. He started an early Mass, as well as the later one, assisted by Fr. Joseph West from the Dominican Convent. He became Bishop of Aberdeen and the North Highlands in 1918. He returned for the opening of the new Nalls in 1930 and in 1944 to mark the centenary of S.S. Mary and David’s Chapel. Robert Brown (1895–1949) from Edinburgh, he served as High School Rector 1945–47, coming from being head in Jedburgh. He organised the Youth Sports at the Common Riding of 1946. He left Hawick to take up the post of Director of Education for Roxburghshire, but died only 2 years later.

Ben-the-hoose

Ben-the-hoose (ben-thu-hoos) adv. a variant of ben-a-hoose.

Bentpath (bent-pawth) n. town in the eastern part of Dumfries & Galloway, about 5 miles north-west of Langholm, birthplace of Thomas Telford and site of the first major ride-out in the Langholm Common Riding.

Bents Rig (beunts-rig) n. name of an area to the north of Black Burn in Liddesdale, between Branch Cleuch and Mouly Sike.

Benty (ben-ee, ben-tee) v., poet. composed of coarse grass, covered with bent – ‘Oh, Liddesdale, thou land of mist, I lo’e thy benty bogs and rushes …’ [TCh], ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’ [HSR], ‘And they wad hev hides Like benty gress …’ [DII].

The Benty (thu-bea-tee) n. popular name for Bentpath, particularly during the festivities of the ride-out there, which is one of the major events leading up to Langholm’s Common Riding, and traditionally an all-male event.

Berand (berand) pres. part., arch. bearing, conveying, displaying – ‘… Berand that Robert Scot ane of the baillies of the burcht of Hawik …’ [SPB1579].

Berk (berk) n., v. bark – ‘if ee deh stop that dog berkin A’ll swabbe eet’ (also baikr).

Berkeley (birk-lee) n. Robert (d.c.1199) brother of Walter, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed a charter along with his brother for lands granted to Holyrood Abbey by William I. Also with his brother, he witnessed the grant of lands toOrm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He became Lord of Maxton, through marrying Cecily, daughter of Liulf and grand-daughter of Maccus. His daughter and heiress was probably Alicia, who married Hugo of Normanville. Sir Walter of Inverkeilor and Redcastle (c.1136–c.93) also referred to as ‘de Barclay’ and variants, and occasionally called ‘William’. His surname probably came from the village in Somerset and he was from an Anglo-Norman family. Along with his brother Robert he came to Scotland in about 1165 and entered royal service. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. He witnessed the grant of lands to Orm of Ashkirk in about 1170. He was appointed Great Chamberlain of Scotland to William the Lion in about 1171, serving until his death. He thus held important financial responsibilities, although little is known about the details during this period. He fought with William against the English in 1173–74, being present at the siege of Carlisle in 1174. He was listed among the 20 Scottish noblemen required to find hostages in the Treaty of Falaise. He was granted several estates for ‘knight-service’, notably Inverkeilor and Newton, later the Barony of Redcastle. He was also granted Newton, which was later the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. However, it is unknown whether he actually spent time in the Hawick area. This may be the grant of ‘Neutun’ in the period 1173–82 by king William (although it has been suggested this was rather Longnewton or Newton in Perthshire, these seem less likely, since we know he held Newton near Hawick). In the period 1179–90 he witnessed a grant for lands in Hassendean, involving Paisley Priory. From a kinsman, Robert of London (probably related to ‘Eschina de Londonis’ who held lands at Hassendean) he gained lands near St. Boswells and Haltwhistle in Tynedale. He also gained the Lordship of Urr in Galloway and probably had the motte and bailey castle built there. He may have first married an heiress of Ardoyne in Aberdeenshire and secondly married Eve, daughter of Uhtred, Lord of Galloway (who also married Robert de Quincy, Justiciar of Lothian); she later granted lands in Haddingtonshire to Melrose Abbey for the souls of her two deceased husbands and her brother Roland. He had at least 3 children: John, who predeceased him; Agatha, who inherited part of his lands and married Humphrey, son of Theobald de Adeville, who changed his name to Barclay; and another daughter of unknown name who married Enguerrand (or Ingram) de Biali, probably younger son of Eustace de Biali. His name stops appearing as a witness to royal charters in about 1193 (also written ‘Barclay’).

Bermey (ber-mee) adj., arch. barmy, raised by yeast – ‘imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermey bannih, sweet-begruten an baikent wui dirrt’ [ECS], ‘A face like a bermey banna’ [GW].

Bernicia (ber-ni-shu) n. kingdom founded by Celtic peoples in perhaps the 4th century, also known as ‘Bryneich’ and other variants, it was the southern part of the lands of the Votadini. It was centred around modern Northumberland and Durham, stretching from the Tees to the Forth and had Teviotdale at its western edge. It was taken over by the Angles, who formally founded it in the year 547. By 654 (perhaps earlier) it had been united with the southern kingdom of Deira into Northumbria. Certainly by the 7th century most of Roxburghshire was under its control. It is believed that the Catrail may be a boundary beryll (be-ree) n. formerly referring to the gooseberry in particular — ‘...still remember with pleasure the handful of ‘berries’ they got from her when they were bairst’ [RM].

Berrybush (be-ree-bush) n. farmstead between the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, lying on the Berryburn Burn, just off the B709. It was owned by the Crown from about 1456 until at least 1502, with Walter Scott holding the lands in 1513. William Stewart claimed tenancy of the lands in 1541, paying £12 yearly. Archibald Baptie was tenant in 1685 when he took ‘the Test’ in Hawick (it is ‘Berybus’ in 1541).

Berryfell (be-ree-fell) n. farm on the Newcastleton Road, about 8 miles south of Hawick, sometimes called ‘South Berryfell’ to distinguish it from North Berryfell. It is below Berryfell Hill, with the remains of an ancient fort, together with mediaval homesteads and enclosures nearby. A side road near here joins the A6088 near Hawthorndale farm. John Jerdan was tenant there in 1694 and William Nisbet in 1733. John Lorraine lived there in 1725, James Laidlaw in 1738 and John Reid in 1776. James Douglas was in ‘Berryfellhouse’ in 1787. John Turnbull was farmer in at least the period 1780–1797 and Alexander Ashcroft in the 1860s. The fort and homestead are on a spur overlooking the Slitrig, between the farm and the river. The fort is about 100 m by 60 m, and has a rampart that has been partly obliterated by the later homestead; both have signs of hut circles. Just to the south of the farm (to the right of the main road after the farm) are the remains of extensive earthworks, about 60 m in diameter and with ramparts. There is also a linear earthwork on the opposite side of the B6399. The top stone of a rotary quern, found there in 1872, is in the Museum; Mr. Dryden of North Berryfell farm dug up a heap of stones to the west of his farmhouse, finding an urn (which broke into pieces) and the quern (the origin may simply be ‘berry hill’ or ‘berg fell’, i.e. ‘hil hill’), but the existence of the adjacent hill-fort suggests ‘the hill with the fort’, with the Old English ‘byrig’; it is ‘The Berrifell’ in 1694 and 1776 and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Berryfell Hill (be-ree-fel-hil) n. hill south of Hawick, off the Newcastleton Road to the east of Berryfell farm. It reaches a height of 393 m. Its western side has smaller ridges called Hare Hill and Little Hare Hill, while its eastern flank is called Ringlees Knowe, where there is a standing stone (probably not very ancient) and the remains of a settlement.

Berryfell Lake (be-ree-fel-lak) n. former name for a headwater of Cogsmill Burn, south of Earlside farm. It flows in a roughly northerly direction, to meet other small streams and form Cogsmill Burn. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map and described in the Name Book (the meaning of the name is mysterious).

Berryfell Plain (be-ree-fel-plan) n. former farm near Berryfell, distinct from North Berryfell and South Berryfell. It was on the west side of the main road between Cogsmill and Berryfell, on the east side of Haits Hill. It is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses, when there were Scotts there (also written ‘Berryfellplain’).

Berry Moss (be-ree-mos) n. marshy area to the east of Dryden Greenhill farm. 3 flint arrow-heads, a square-shaped pounding stone and an anvil stone were found there, as described in 1927.

Berrymuir (be-ree-mewr-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Bertol (ber-tö-lee) n. Johnny (19th/20th C.) Italian immigrant, who lived in Hawick, and ran the chip shop at the foot of the Loan before WWII. His premises were at 5 Loan. He was interred during the War, with the local joke being that this was because he had made white puddings during the blackout. Unfortunately he died on the boat on the way to the internment camp in Canada.

Bert’s Cairn (bertz-kä-rn) n. relatively modern cairn on Teindside Hill, overlooking Northhouse. An inscribed stone bears the date 1880 and the letters ‘BERT’, along with what appear to be an hourglass and a plough (although now hard to read).

Johnny Italian immigrant, who lived

Berwick (be-reek) n. seaside town and historically important port, about 43 miles north-east of Hawick. Originally one of the 4 burghs of Scotland, it was long contested between Scotland and England, changing hands 14 times. One result of this is that it was famously at war with Russia for centuries. It has latterly been in England, although on the wrong side of the Tweed and its football team plays in the Scottish league. It is noted for the ancient town walls, 18th century Town Hall, ruined Berwick Castle and magnificent Royal Border railway bridge. This has 28 semi-circular arches of 61 feet 6 inches, is 2160 feet long and built 126 feet above the Tweed. It was designed by Robert Stevenson and built 1847–50.
The road bridge over the Tweed there is mentioned as early as 1199. The second bridge lasted 1498–1609. The present bridge, adjacent to the railway bridge, has 15 arches and was built 1611–34. The concrete Royal Tweed Bridge was added in 1925–28. In the 18th and 19th centuries the town was an important destination for Hawick carriers, bringing salt herring and other goods. Population 13,500 – ‘Through the Border ride an’ rin, Seek frae Berwick owre to Annan’ [GWe], ‘In the Mersey near to Liverpool, the Great Eastern she lay, But she boarded was by Hawick roughs And brought to Berwick bay’ [JCG] (Teries sometimes talk about going ‘doon ti Berwick’).

Berwick (be-reek) n. A. (18th C.) man who lived near Hawick in the summers and was one of the ‘faggot voters’ who voted for the Tory candidate in the elections of 1835 and 1837. He was attacked on both occasions by disgruntled people in Hawick, in 1837 having many of his clothes torn off and being beaten for refusing to swear against voting. His wallet was said to have been stolen, but actually returned to him later, when found in the street by a boy. He was said to be personally involved in setting up the system of fictitious votes in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Caithness. John (d.1354) Archdeacon of Teviotdale, known as ‘de Berwick.

Berwick Cockles (be-reek-ko-kulz) n., pl. peppermint sweets traditionally made in Berwick, also called ‘Ross’s Berwick Cockles’. They are red and white striped, like humbugs, but with a softer texture.

Berwickshire (be-reek-shIr, be-reek-shir) n. county to the north of Roxburghshire, now part of the Scottish Borders, paradoxically not containing the latterly English town of Berwick. It is sometimes synonymous with the term ‘the Merse’.

Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club (be-reek-shir-na-choo-rul-ists-klub) n. local learned society devoted to natural history and antiquities, founded in 1831, and very much a predecessor for the Hawick Archaeological Society. Its transactions contain many articles of relevance to Hawick and area. The club met a couple of times in Hawick in its early years, e.g. 1890, when they journeyed up the Slitrig.

the Berwick Smack (thu-be-reek-smawk) n. popular name for the waggon of Inglis’, which carted goods between Hawick and Berwick in the early 19th century.

beseech (be-seek) v. arch. to beseech, be earnestly – ‘Therefore we will beseeke your lordship to take this in gude part and consider our case . . . ’ [CBP1597] ‘Saufe now, I besek thee, O Lord: O Lord, I besek thee sen’ nowe prospirite’ [HSR].

Beshara (be-sha-ru) n. international school at Chisholme House since 1995, which runs residential courses in ‘intensive esoteric education’, mixing eastern religion and New Age philosophy. They follow the teachings of the 14th century Spanish philosopher Muhyiddin Ibn Arabi, and have several other centres in Britain. They are also associated with ‘Beshara Design Co. Ltd’, based at 10 Bourtree Place.

beside (bee-sid) adv., arch. besides, in addition – ‘. . . were extracted out of ye records of ye Session, and this day read over before them, beside his irregular marriage on the English side . . . ’ [PR1720].

besom (bi-, be-, bu-zum) n. a broom – ‘. . . by mending broken kettles, pots, and pans, making horn spoons, besoms, &c.’ [EM1820], ‘. . . with a duster tied over the head of a ‘buzom’ [BB], applied to a woman who is a busybody, a lowly, woman, a mischiefew girl – ‘look it that nosy besom looking oot her wundi’, ‘Come back this minute, you little besom!’, shouted mother . . . ’ [JeC], ‘Yae day she sought him up for tea, For weil the besom kent His manners were deplorable, An’ wi’ regrets he went’ [WFC], also used as a mild oath – ‘o ya besom!’ (also spelled ‘bizzim’, ‘bizzum’, ‘buzom’, etc.; J.A.H. Murray notes that the pronunciation of the 2 meanings was ‘quite distinct in southern Scotch’, with the broom being -n- and the woman being -i-).

the Besom Inn (thu-bu-zum-in) n. former inn near the bridge at Sclaterford. The name was said to be related to a sign of a broom indicating whether the excisemen were around. The building is now a private house (there is a place of the same name in Coldstream).

bespake (bee-späk) pp., poet. spoke – ‘Then up an bespake the Lord Mangerton, What news, what news, sister Downie, to me?’ [CPM].

Bessy Bell and Mary Gray (be-see-bel-and-mä-ree-grä) n. old song, published at least as early as 1709. It was long believed to refer to 2 young ladies who retired to Allanhaugh peel, and during a famine survived on oatmeal and a barrel of snails they had preserved with salt. However, it appears more likely that the ladies in the song lived at Lynedoch, near Perth.

Best (best) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on the Knowesouth estate. Perhaps the same Andrew was listed along with James on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, in what appears to be ‘rankyte’. Ann L. ‘Annie’ (b.1839) born at Velvet Hall in Northumberland, where her maternal grandparents were innkeepers. Her father was James Best from Hawick and her mother was Harriet Paxton. She was orphaned at an early age, and appears to have inherited her father’s carrier’s yard (at about 78 High Street), paying tax on it in 1855. In 1861 she was living with her aunt Elizabeth, wife of grocer William Brown, and listed as ‘Land Proprietor’. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Bedrule Parish. Their surname and location appear to be ‘besz’ and ‘rankyte’, respectively. James (1668/9-97) smith in Bedrule Parish. He is buried in the churchyard there along with his wife Margaret, both of them dying on the same day. He is probably the James listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Whiterige’ in 1682 when the will of his wife Janet Harkness was recorded. This could be Whitriggs in Cavers Parish, although somewhere else in Roxburghshire is possible. James (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (c.1810–bef. 1843) son of innkeeper Thomas and Margaret Rae. He was a carrier in Hawick, living at ‘Wool Yard’ (i.e., about 78 High Street) in 1841. Walter Scott was also a carrier at the same address at that time. In 1837 he was listed going to Kelso and Berwick from the High Street every Tuesday. He married Harriot Paxton (from Northumberland, who had earlier had a daughter, Margaret Ann, with a Thomas Scott), who died in 1842, aged 35. Their children included: Ann (b.1839); and Thomas, who died in infancy. He died in Kelso and is buried at St. Mary’s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Wellie’ along with other tenants of the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Parish of Cavers in 1621. It is possible this was ‘Woollie’ or ‘Wells’, but neither are in Cavers. John (1745/6–1822) lived for 32 years at Hud- son’s Bay. He died in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He could be the John, son of John, who was christened in Hobkirk Parish in 1747. John (1816) resident of Lilliesleaf. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He is probably the John who married Agnes Walker and had children Agnes (b.1818), Mary (b.1820) and Betsy (b.1822). Margaret nee Rae (b.1789/90) born in Stichill, she married Thomas. She was a publican at the Grapes Inn, according to the 1841 census. Her husband was not present at that time, but she was not listed as a widow. She was also listed as a vintner in Pigot’s 1837 directory and in Slater’s 1852 directory, when she was at the Fleece Inn. She was a widow listed as innkeeper of the Fleece Inn in 1851. Her children were Jessie, Jane, Margaret, Elizabeth, Hannah and Andrew. In 1861 she was also listed with her son-in-law James Hay and her 3 young children. Robert (1736–81) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at ‘Heatly’ according to his gravestone in Bedrule kirkyard. His wife Isabel Scott died in 1816. Their children included: Margaret, who died aged 14; Thomas (1773/4–1805); and Robert and Helen, who died young. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Deans and they had an unnamed son baptised in 1686. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably related to James and William. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith in Hallrule. In 1761 he married Isabel ‘miln’ (either Mill or Milne), who was from Cavers Parish. Children born to Thomas in Hobkirk, who are probably his included Thomas (b.1762) and Janet (b.1767). Thomas (b.c.1765) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1788 he married Agnes Bunyan, who was also from Cavers. He and his wife were living in Minto village in 1841, where he was an agricultural labourer. Thomas (d.bef. 1841) shepherd and innkeeper in Hawick. He was probably the Thomas born to Andrew in Roxburgh in 1778. By 1841 his wife was innkeeper at the Fleece Inn, and so he was presumably deceased. He married Margaret Rae in Crailing Parish in 1806. Their children included: James, who married Harriet Paxton, but along with 2 children, appear to have died by 1843; Jessie, who married William Inglis; Jane, who married Anthony Boiston; Margaret; Elizabeth, who firstly married James Taylor and secondly married William Brown; Hannah; and Andrew. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be related to James and Thomas, who are also listed in the same parish.

bestail (beest-ee-ul) n., arch. a collective term for livestock – ‘That they had also the sole power of regulating the pasturage of the Common, and fixing the number of bestial to be sent’ [BR1778].

The Best O’ A’ (thu-best-aw) n. song with words written by Kerr Hartop while a pupil at Hawick High School, and music written by teacher James Letham. It is rare among Hawick songs for being written in compound 6/8 time. It was first sung in public at ‘The Big Sing’ in 2011.

bet (be’, bet) pp. beaten – ‘oo wereni bet yit’, arch. ‘Bit Border folk are no that easy bett ….’[ECS], hardened or bruised by pressure or overuse – ‘A bet fit’[GW] (cf. bate and betten).

betaen (bee-tân) pp., poet. betaken – ‘I opinet til my beloefet: but my beloefet had betaen himsel awa ….’[HSR].

betchell (be-chul) v., poet. to beat, break – ‘Than did I betchell thame sma’ as the stour afore the wund’[HSR].

betchellin (be-chul-in) n., arch. a beating, thrashing – ‘Gee ’im a guid betchellin’’[GW].

Bethel Baptist Kirk (be-thel-bawp-tist-kirk) n. small Baptist group in Hawick that previously met in the building at the top of the Trinity Steps, and now has premises in Burnfoot (above the fish and chip shop).

Betherule (be-thu-rool) n. former spelling and pronunciation of Bedrule (having an extra syllable).

Bethoc (be-thok) n. (11th/12th C.) probable early owner of the lands of Bedrule, which were once ‘Rulebethoc’ and named after her. Bethoc may be an early variant of Beatrix and was a common Gaelic female name. She may have been the same as ‘Bethóc’, daughter of Donald III, King of Scotland, who was named after her great-grandmother, daughter of Malcolm II. She married Uchtred (or Huchted) son of Waldeve of Tynedale; their daughter and heiress Hextilda married Richard Comyn, who was Justiciar of Lothian (and as a result of this connection John Comyn was one of the 13 claimants to the Scottish throne after the death of the Maid of Norway in 1290). The Comyns certainly owned the lands of Bedrule through the 13th century, making this connection likely.

Bethoc (be-thok) n. (12th/13th C.) another lady with an early connection to Bedrule. Although it has been suggested that she gave her name to the barony, it is likely to have been an earlier Bethoc. At the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, she and her husband Randolph (or Ralph), son of Dunegal of Stranith (or Nithsdale), granted to the monks a ‘carrucate’ of land in Rucastle, which was within their Bedrule boundaries. The suggestion is that she was daughter of Fergus of Galloway and Elizabeth, daughter of Henry I of England. However, there may have been more than one lady of the same name, with their stories confounded. She died before 1204.

betten (be’-in, be-tin) pp., arch. beat, beaten (cf. the now more common baten and bet).

better (be’-ur) adv., arch. more, considerably more – ‘It wants better as five meenints a theri’[ECS], ‘Ee needna hurry – ee’ve better as haaf-an-oor ti feenish that woark in’[ECS]. A was feerd A’d be owre lang, for it was better as a quarter after fowr be the toon’s clock’[ECS], ‘Thay’ve been beidin at Spittal for better than a month now’[ECS] (usually with either ‘as’ or ‘than’; used when estimating time and other quantities).

Bet the Guard (be-thu-gärd) n. nickname of Elizabeth Airmstrong.

Betty Cathrae’s Well (be’-ee-kaawth-räz-wel) n. popular name for a former spring pump in Victoria Road.

Betty Johnny (be’-ee-jo-nee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’[HI].

Betty Revel see Revel

Betty the Bab (be’-ee-thu-bawb) n. nickname for a Hawick resident of the 19th century. Her fire tongs are in the Museum.

Betty Whutson (be’, be-ee-whut-sin) n. column in the Hawick Express, presented as a letter from a woman, written in dialect. It was originated by James Edgar, with later writers being Jock Dodds, Robert Laidlaw, Bert Leishman, R.E. Scott and Ian W. Landle. Originally the column was used as a mouthpiece for discussing locally controversial topics, but it grew into a local history discussion, with each writer putting his own stamp on the idea. The origin of the name is uncertain.

betwix (bee-twiks) prep., arch. between – ‘... as is contenit in the endentouris made betuix ws thairapoun’[SB1470], ‘... and finally endit betuix honorabil men, that is to say, Waltir Scot of Branxhelm ...’[SB1519].

betwixt an (bee-twikst-an) prep., arch. between now and ...– ‘... to enquire thereanent, betwixt and this day eight days, and to report betwixt and that time’[BR1734].

Bet Young see Young, Elizabeth

Bev (bev) n. informal abbreviation for the surname ‘Berridge’.

Bevin Boy (be-vin-boi) n. a young man conscripted through ballot to work in the mines as part of National Service in Britain during 1943–48, following a measure introduced by Minister of Labour Ernest Bevin.

Bridge that was used to house refugee children from the London Blitz, including First Minister Donald Dewar. It was based at Wolfelee House (which later burned down).

Beverley (be-vur-lee) n. William (b.1856) born at Kermeston, Aberdeenshire. He became a groom at age 14, then worked as a servant, coming to Wolfelee estate in 1879. He worked as butler for 12 years, then moved to Barnbarroch, returning to the area as Governor of Jedburgh Poorhouse in 1899. In 1886 he married Mary, only daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and they had no children.

bevver (be-vur) v., arch. to shake, tremble – ‘The fisslin leafs trimmelt an bevvert i the sim-mer breeze’ [ECS], ‘The leaves bevvered i’ the wund’ [ECS] (from Anglo-Saxon).

bevvy (be-vec) n. any alcoholic drink, an alcoholic binge (recent introduction from the West of Scotland).

Bewcastle (bew-kaw-sul) n. town over the Border into Cumberland, named from being ‘Bueth’s Castle’, and an important centre of cross-border conflict. The Castle had its ‘Captains of Bewcastle’, who were relatively independent leaders with special status. There was a nearby Roman fort (although it is over the wall into Scotland), and it is the site of the 8th century inscribed Bewcastle Cross (possibly the burial place of the Anglian King Alcfrith) – ‘The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, And he’s ower to Tevi-dale to drive a prey …’ [T], ‘Bewcastle brandishes high his proud scimitar, Ridley is riding his fleet-footed grey, Hedley and Howard there, Wandale and Windermere, Lock the door, Larriston, hold them at bay’ [ES].

bewest (bi-west) prep., arch. to the west of – ‘…it was found therein specified that ye loft bewest the church door was allocat to the Mechan-icks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 …’ [PR1717].

Bewlie (bew-lee) n. area roughly between Belses and Lilliesleaf. A drove road used to pass along the northern side of Bewlie Moor on its way towards Groundistone Heights and the Borthwick valley. Lands there were held separately by different families over the centuries, there apparently being a ‘five-pound land’ and a ‘five-merk land’ that were distinct. It was owned by the Riddells from at least the mid-16th century and passed to the Scotts of Harden in the mid-18th century. The remaining parts of Bewlie and Bewlie Moor were sold by Capt. Hutton Riddell in the late 19th century. John Scott was recorded there in 1528 and George Rutherford in 1580. John Alan was there in 1581. The Kirklands of Bewlie were given by Thomas Ker of Kippielaw to his son John in 1581. There were also Turnbulls associated with the land in the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1643 Andrew Turnbull’s lands there were valued at £364, Sir Walter Riddell’s lands at £273 and James Riddell of Haining’s lands at £390. Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663, with Walter Riddell also owning part of the lands. Walter Riddell is recorded paying tax on land valued at £273 there in 1678, with William Turnbull paying for another part, valued at £390, and John Riddell of Muselee paying for a third part, valued at £330. William Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for being a Covenant-ter. William Dodds, James Dodds, John Wight, Thomas Wight, William Riddell, John Dodds and Andrew Lowrie were listed there in 1694. In 1695 the 5-pound land there was inherited by Agnes Riddell (wife of John Nisbet) from her brother William Riddell. Archibald Elliot was smith there in 1737. Robert Wilson was owner in 1761. In 1779 the liferent of the superiority of the ‘five-pound lands, and half a cott land in the town of Lilliesleaf, commonly called the five pound land of Bewlie’ was granted to Charles Scott, younger of Woll, by Walter Scott of Harden, valued at £333. In 1788 the lands were in 3 parts, owned by William Riddell of Camieston (£465 5s, including teinds), Walter Scott of Harden (£333) and Charles Riddell of Muselee (£391 1s 2d). In at least 1787–97 Andrew Thomson was farmer there, with John Scott at Bewlie Mains. In 1797 Andrew Thomson and John Douglas were farmers there, while Robert Turnbull was at Bewliehill. In 1813 the ‘Five-pound land of Bewlie’ was valued at £273 (plus £60 in teinds) and owned by Scott of Harden, while the main lands of Bewlie were valued at £330 (plus £61 in teinds) and owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee. Alexander Drummond was there in 1868. There were separate farms of Bewlie Mains and Bewlie Moor in the 19th and early 20th centuries. A wood there was formerly known as the Droveroad Plantation. Bewlie Moss was apparently used for field conventicles around 1680 and was the scene of a skirmish between Covenanters and dragoons. It is said that when workmen were enclosing the farm they found a circular cairn that contained partially burned bones (the origin is probably from the Old French ‘beau lieu’, meaning ‘beautiful place’; it is recorded at least as early as 1551 and is variously spelled ‘Bewley’, ‘Bewly’, ‘Bewlye’, ‘Beulie’, ‘Bewlie’ and variants in early times; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 maps as ‘Beauly’ and ‘Beduly’, although it is clearly ‘Beauly’ on Pont’s 1590s manuscript).

Bewlie Bog (bew-lee-bög) n. alternative name for Bewlie Moss. It was said to be the site of a deadly meeting between attendees at a field conventicle and the dragoons of Graham of Claverhouse – ‘From Bewlie bog, with slaughter red, A wanderer hither drew, And oft he stopt and turn’d his head, As by fits the night wind blew’ [SWS].

Bewlie Hill (bew-lee-hil) n. former farm near Bewlie. In 1811 the ‘Lands in Bewlie, now called Bewlie-hill’ were owned by William Riddell of Camieston and valued at £407. In 1861 David Gourlay was there, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. It was recorded as ‘the 5 merk land of Bewlie & 2 merk land of Heidlaw’.

Bewlie Mains (bew-lee-mänz) n. former name for a farmstead near Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. John Scott was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–97.

the B.G.H. (thu-bee-je-ich) n. popular name for the Borders General Hospital.

the Bhundu Boys (thu-boon-doo-böz) n. Zimbabwean ‘jit’ musical group, originally including Rise Kagona, Biggie Tembo, David Mankaba, Shakespeare Kangwena and Kenny Chitsvatsva. They were brought to Britain in 1986 by Hawick men Gordon Muir and their records licensed in the U.K. by Doug Veitch, using money from the Enterprise Allowance scheme. Their first concerts involved borrowed instruments and small audiences, and they lived with Muir’s family for a while in Hawick (the rumour being that the Kenyan Commonwealth games team were in town!), even attending the Common Riding. But they soon became a national sensation, once opening for Madonna at Wembley Stadium. They also filmed a music video in one of the disused knitwear mills on Commercial Road, and recorded an (unreleased) version of ‘Rumblin Brig’ in Ireland in 1995. After a period of great success, the band had its share of tragedy, but surviving members still continue to produce music, with Muir as their manager.

There were Turnbull Lairds there in the 16th century, e.g. Adam in 1502 and Thomas in the 1580s. It was ‘Bulleruell’ among among the Elliott of Stobs properties in the Barony of Feurule in the late 17th century. In 1779 it was valued at £279 10s 6d. It was valued along with Hallrule in the county valuation of 1788. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century and the tenants were the Thomsons in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It was then tenanted by Turnbulls, Thomsons again and then Meins in the early 20th century. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. In 1811 the farm still had the same value and was owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs. A lodge was built there in the mid-19th century for Wells House. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The land may have given rise to the surname ‘Bullerwell’ A spindle whorl from there is Billholm (bi-lum) n. farm and hamlet between Eskdalemuir and Bentpath. The farm there was let along with Craikhope in the 19th century. There are several ancient settlements nearby.

Billhope (bi-lup) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, about half way along the road linking the B6399 with the A7. Formerly the main farm was further up the Billhope Burn, with another farm, 'Billhopefoot' nearer to the Hermitage. It was listed in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 10 merks, and in a roll of 1541 with a value of 12 merks, when leased to Thomas Armstrong of 'Meriantoun' (i.e. Mangerton). A Laidlaw 'called Billop' is recorded in 1540 among Scottish rebels who had fled to England. 'Jame Billop' is recorded in 1569 as a tenant of Elliot of Falnash, and may have taken his name from the place. It was possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1632. John Beattie was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 882 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Gorrrenberry, Twislehope, Carewoodrig and Linhope. John Currer was recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Alexander Anderson was shepherd in 1861. It was traditionally celebrated as a place that was good for game – 'Billhope braes for bucks and raes, And Carit haghhs for swine, And Tarras for the good bull-trout. If he be ta'en in time' [T] (also 'Billhope'; the name is probably from the Old English personal name 'Billa'; it is probably the 'Byllhop' of c.1376, 'Billop in 1516 and 'Billhope' in 1541 and 1632; it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie's 1770 map).

Billhope (bi-lup) n. James (16th C.) recorded as 'Jame Billop' in 1569 when he was a tenant of Gavin Elliot of Falnash. bingo (bing-go) n. religion particularly popular among senior women. It probably came to Hawick along with servicemen who had played it in the 1950s, and began to appear some time around 1960 in the social clubs (when they were relaxing their rules to allow women). It was originally called ‘tombolo’ and then ‘housey-housey’. It effectively replaced the whist drives that had previously been popular. By the mid-1960s there were several commercial venues in town, including Taddei’s and the Marina.

bink (bingk) n. a wasps’ or wild bees’ nest (locally more common than the general Scots bike. bink (bingk) n., arch. a large shelf, kitchen dresser, plate rack – ‘There are few cottages in the parish where you will not find a handsome eight-day clock, standing beside a very neatly arranged bink of crockery ware’ [RAC], ‘And bring the bottle frae the bink, And fill wi’ furthy glee ...’ [JT], a bench – ‘James Lands, journeyman baxter, is convicted of breaking ane timber bynke’ [BR1688] (also written ‘bynke’).

Binks (bingks) n. farm at the south end of Teviothead. The Gledstains family owned the lands in the early 17th century and there were Elliots there from the early 17th century (also called ‘the Binks’). ‘Simon Elliot of the Binks’ was involved in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters’ of Stobs and was forced to sell the estate to Gilbert of Stobs about 1620. It is said that this was a ‘hand-fasting’ and the cheap sale was part of the deal if he was unsatisfied. However, Simon’s son William bought the estate back and it was held by a later Simon Elliot of Binks, who appears to have sold it to Christopher Irving, who was owner in 1678, when it it was valued at £300. Agnes Nichol was recorded as tenant in 1694. It was ‘Bincses’ when the superiority was owned by Sir William Elliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. it was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692. It was in the Baron of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and his brother Archibald in 1698. Walter Scott was there in 1709. The last Simon Elliot of Binks sold the land again, to John Elliot of Thorleshope, sometime before 1718. John Elliot, designated ‘of Binks’, received a charter of the lands from Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs in 1718. John Renwick was there in 1730, Archibald Henderson in 1749, William Robertson in 1755, John Scott in 1780 and Thomas Elliot in 1783. It was valued at £300 in 1788 (and still recorded in about 1811), when owned by John Elliot. James Veitch is recorded as farmer there in 1797, W. Armstrong in 1821 and John Elliot in the 1860s – ‘Ye Weepin’ Gods o’ Teviot Stane, Shed a’ yer tears in mighty rain, An’ gie’s a flood ti whelm the Plain Frae Binks ti Tweed. I’ll dae the rest, consultin’ nane. daughter, Carol, is an art teacher in Edinburgh.

Bailie James (17th/18th C.) served as Magistrate in the 1690s and early 1700s. He is referred to in 1702 as ‘late bayleyea’, when he, Patrick Angus and John Hart were fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. It is possible his forename is an error for ‘John’, who was a Bailie at the same time. James (18th/19th C.) surgeon history of horse-racing. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Hawick Magistrate at the end of the 17th century and also in 1701. He witnessed baptisms in 1704 for tailor John Scott and for baxter Walter Boyd, in 1705 for shoemaker Walter Scott and in 1706 for tailor Walter Boyd, for Bailie Robert Hardie and for wright William Brack. He was thrown off the Council for his violent and abusive behaviour in 1706. This was probably related to the disputes over the Common Riding of that year. He was fined for ‘breach of waird, into qle he was incarceratt, and ryveing of the lock of the 是 John, married to Margaret Hogg, whose daughter Margaret was born in Hawick in 1685 and Christian in 1691 (also written ‘Bynnie’).

Binning (bi-nin) n. John (15th C.) cleric who was proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1426, but does not appear to have taken up the position. His surname is spelled ‘Benyng’. John (16th C.) listed as ‘calcario’ (i.e. shoemaker) in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear if he was local or perhaps from Peebles or Edinburgh.

Binning (bin-stur) n. local name for Bönchester ‘…where it jookeet doon threh the knowes away ayownt Bünister an Hobkirk’ [ECS], ‘The burn ’at rins throu’ Bünister rins’ throu’ ma heart’ [JiR] (also written ‘Bunister’, see also Bunster; it is ‘Boonester’ in 1797).

Birchhill (birch-hil) n. former farm in the Rule valley, between Billerwell and Hallrule (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Birchlea (birch-lee) n. cottage above Stirches, by the roadside east of Heip Hill.

bird (bir-di) n. birthday – ‘Happy Birdi ti yowe, Happy Birdi ti yowe, Happy Birdi dear Haw-ek, Happy Birdi ti yowe’ (note the lack of th in the pronunciation; also spelled ‘Birdhí’).

birdih see birdi

Swallow (swalli); Swift; Tawny Owl (hoot); Teal; Tree creeper; Tufted Duck; Whooper Swan; Wigeon; Woodcock; Woodpigeon (cushat); Wren (kittie); and Yellowhammer (yelli yorlin). Other species are seen more rarely, including: Cuckoo (gowk); Curlew (waupa); Great Tit (ox-ei); Kite (gled); Patridge (paitrick); Red Grouse (muirfowl, muircok, muirhen); and Wood Warbler (tam-tit). Prof. Elliot of Goldielands suggests that starlings numbers increased dramatically over the 19th century, and that the thrush population birdsang

was denuded by the prisoners of the Napoleonic wars. There was once a heronry at Wells.

birdsang (bird-sang) n. birdsong - 'A siller cadence fills her nellow voice That fa's like birdsang on the ear' [WL], 'Wild-flo'oers, blood-stock, Border lore, bird-sang, Rough logic, prejudices, courtesy . . .' [DH], 'It was a soft nicht, and birdsang seems to traveil better wi a souch o rain i the air' [DH].

Birgham (bir-gum) n. village between Kelso and Coldstream, a centre for Scottish-English diplomacy in the 12th and 13th centuries. The 1290 Treaty of Birgham arranged the marriage of the infant Margaret of Scotland to the English Prince Edward, and her death shortly afterwards led to the Wars of Independence. The name presumably relates to an early bridge across the Tweed there, although there is no trace of its existence.

birk (birk) n., poet., arch. birch tree - 'The hawthorn and the birk, Jean, Spread fragrance through the scene' [RF], 'Roses wild the braes adorn, Aged tree and twisted thorn, Sweetly scent the early morn, Among the birks o' Bleakburn' [DA], 'Among the birks o' bonnie Wells I looked, and, lo! I saw The ornamental trees of old Before the woodman fa' ' [TCh], ' Farewell ye hoary haunted howes O'erhung wi' birk and sloe' [TPr], 'The birk, the broom, and rowan clad by June's artistic skill' [JI], 'I pree my faring the birks amun . . .' [WL], 'Beneath the birk, a patch o' moss Had caught his gleg, appraisin' e'en . . .' [WP] (used in the name of local woods).

birken (bir-kin) adj., poet. composed of or relating to birch - 'Again my birchen pipe I'll blaw, And try to wake a simple strain' [JTe], 'They hunted high, they hunted low, By heathy hill and birken shaw' [LHTB], ' . . . till where in diminished stream it descends through the birken braes and hazel copses of Hagburn . . . ' [JAHM], 'The lilac blossoms in clusters braw, And the bluebells dance in the birken shaw . . . ' [WL] (also written 'birchen').

the Birkhill (thu-birk-hil) n. former group of cottages just to the south of Billerwell, in the Rule valley. The farms of Over and Nether Birkhill are referred to in 1562 in a dispute between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and Agnes Herries. George Turnbull was there in 1685. It was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. William Scott was there in 1690. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with Robert Turnbull, William Scott and Isobel Ballantyne also listed (and Thomas Henderson being 'deficient'). The Herknesses were tenants there when Bonnie Prince Charlie's men passed through the Parish in 1745. It is probably also the same place later referred to as 'Castle Knowe' (it is 'Birk hill' in 1684 and 1694, 'birkhill' in 1690 and 'Birch-hill' in about 1795).

birkie (bir-kee) n., arch., poet. a spirited man, lively fellow, animated youth - 'Sic birkies may crack weel indeed, By chiels like me, Who never win ayout the creed, Or A, B, C' [JR], 'Our birkie answered weel the end, An' gain'd his master for a friend' [RDW], ' . . . and ma twae yauld birkies wasna forty yards ahint him' [BCM1881], 'That shauchlin' birkie, lang an' thin, Seld a' his sowl for jinglin' tin' [WP].

Birkiebrae (bir-kee-brä) n. cottage on the road from Teviothead to Falnash. It may also have been known as Falnash Mill (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Birks (birkis) n. Alvare (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His first name is also given as 'Alvera'. He married Euphan Turnbull in 1788 and they had a son James (b.1789). George (18th C.) footman at Langlands in 1786, when he was working for Gilbert Elliot, and in 1788 for Thomas Elliot. In 1793, 1794 and 1797 he was a groom at Minto House, working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. George (18th/19th C.) nailer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the same 76 year old pauper recorded at Allars on the 1841 census.

the Birks (thu-birks) n. name for a plantation to the east of Newton in Bedrule Parish.

Birkview (birk-vew) n. house on Main Street in Denholm, once the site of a draper's shop. It is now part of a 'Class C' listed building area. It may also have been called Briarglen.

Birkwud (birk-wud) n. Birkwood, name for former lands just to the south of Hawick. Part of them are described in a feu charter of 1433 as 'lands of Byrkwode called the oxcang, between water of Slyttryk and lands of Qhhitelaw'. It was feuded by William Douglas of Drumlanrig to Simon of Routledge, who is described as 'burgess of Hawik'. In 1477 the lands were feuded by Simon to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The description is similar to the Duke's Wood or Whitlaw Wood of later centuries. It may also be the lands transcribed as 'Kirkwod' in the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick.
Birk Wud (birk-wud) n. Birk Wood, wooded area to the west of the Slitrig, running from Woodfoot south towards Stobs Castle. The wooded area immediately around the Castle was (and still is) called ‘Stobs Wood’. This is probably the ‘Birkward’ belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh that he accused George Henderson in Winnington and others of cutting down part of during 1605, including 100 birches, 300 alders, 300 hazels and 400 willows. It was also ‘Birkwood’ among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. ‘Birkwode and Birkwodheid’ are listed among lands on the Stobs estate in 1657. ‘Birkwood’ was valued at £58 2s 7d in 1788 and 1813, when still owned by Elliott of Stobs (marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Birkwudfit (birk-wud-fit) n. Birkwoodgoot, former cottage in Kirkton Parish, probably the same as ‘Stobs Wudfit’. Wright John Grieve and blacksmith Walter Turnbull both lived there in the mid-19th century.

Birkwudheid (birk-wud-heed) n. Birkwoodhead, former lands near Stobs, presumably at the head of the Birkwood (it is ‘Birkwoodheid’ in 1657).

birl (bi-ruil) v. to turn, spin, twirl, reel, dance briskly – ‘this time deh birl round till ee make yersel seek’, ‘…An’ mony an ell birls roond the beam, Afore the whistle blaws’ [IJ], ‘…What birlin world’s Ahint ilk pane!’ [WL], to move quickly, hurry – ‘…it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS], ‘Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birlin alang leike the bars o Ayre’ [ECS], ‘Pavements for shoppin crouds, Tarmac for traffic birlin …’ [WL], ‘Malt, saip, and soda, Sheep and kyne, And bedroom-suites, Gang birlin bye’ [DH], ‘…the leaves come birlin’ doon, and afore ye ken where ye ir, ye’re off …’ [DH], ‘For as the grey clouds curl and birl A snell wund makes the ether swirl, And through the mist the flags unfurl To greet the sky, St. Andrews fly’ [Sco], to pick knots etc. from the surface of cloth in finishing, n. a spin, turn, twist – ‘gie’d a guid birl’, ‘…wi an interesin’ birl, where the ruit’s hed to wun roond a stane’ [DH] (from Old English).

birlt (bi-ruil) pp. turned, spun, twirled – ‘Hei cam tui, an rallied, tho, an away ei birl’t, still buffin an smudgin inti eis sel’ [ECS].

birlyman (bi-lee-man) n., arch. local official for resolving disputes – ‘This is the worst day e’er we saw; Fecks, I’ve a mind to try the law, An’ birlymen set on the yard; Some shall pay for’t, if I be spar’d’ [JR].

birn (birn) n., arch. a burn, burnt mark, scorched heather – ‘…High up amang the heather cowes, Where winter girns And naething seen but heights and howes, And bent and birns’ [JR], a scorched stem of heather – ‘…aw had just looted doon to talk a birn oot o’ ma shoe for a minute …’ [BCM1880], a brand on a farm animal – ‘If in my yard again I find them, By Mahomet, I swear I’ll pind them; Or catch them in a net or girn, Till I find out the boost or birn’ [JR].

birn (birn) n., arch. a burden, load, especially something carried on the back of a person or animal – ‘…with lean horses loaded with peats and birns to sell, in order to get meal to fend their wives and bairns’ [WSB].

Birneyknowe (bir-nee-now) n. shepherd’s cottage in the hills behind Kirkton Hill, a few miles south-east of Hawick, with a small lake nearby (Buckstruther Moss), reached by a track just beyond Kirkton off the A6088. It was once part of the extended Cavers estate. James Greenshields was tenant there in 1684 when he was declared a fugitive for attending field conventicles. James Glendenning was there in 1716, James Dryden in 1725-26 and John Leyden in 1742. Thomas Oliver is recorded as farmer there in 1794–97, as well as William Helm in 1797. James Grieve was shepherd there in the early 19th century. The main route from Hawick to Newcastle used to pass here, between Ormiston and Forkins, until about 1830. This was also part of an old drove road (also spelled ‘Birnieknowe’; it is ‘Birnie-know’ in 1684; it is ‘Birnyknow’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is probably ‘birns’ meaning burned stalks of heather etc.).

Birnie (bir-nee) n. Fr. ?? (?-??) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1947–56. He was known as a quiet, unassuming man. Michael (16th/17th
C.) recorded as tenant at ‘Fairnylies’ in 1623 when he was entered to the Justice Court in Jedburgh, with cautions John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ in Thoreshope and John Turner in Nether Nisbet. He was accused of stealing 30 sheep from the land of ‘Fairnylies’ belonging to Walter Scott of To-drig, Simon Nichol ‘in Fairnylies’ and their sons. He was found guilty and ordered to be hanged. He may have been from Fairnielees in Rulewater. Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, probably son of William. His name was written both ‘Birnie’ and ‘Burnet’ (even on the same page of the Parish records!). In 1761 he was a shoemaker when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Rutherford. In 1761 (along with William, perhaps his father) he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver and Barbara (who was probably his sister) and witnessed another baptism for the same couple in 1772. He married Mary Hardie in 1755 and she died in 1811. Their children included: William (b.1756); James (b.1759); Robert (b.1762); James (b.1763); and Janet (b.1765). The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. William (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Isobel Hardie in Hobkirk in 1726 and their children included: Thomas (b.1728); Isobel (b.1730); William (b.1736); and Robert (b.1741). The witnesses in 1741 were merchants Andrew Scott and William Oliver, junior. Alexander (b.1727), baptised in Minto, may also be his child. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobel Wight and their children include Barbara (b.1738), who married William Oliver. In 1761 (along with Robert) he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver and Barbara (who was probably his daughter). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick, probably son of William. He married Janet Hardie and their children included William (b.1761) and Janet (b.1770). He was the third male in his family to marry a Hardie. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife, who was an Ogilvie, died in 1798 (this was a local pronunciation for Burnet).

Birniecleuch see Birny Cleuch

the Birns o Chaipelhill (bhu:birnz-ö-chä-pul-hil) n. place name of obscure origin near Chapellhill farm, about 4 1/2 miles south-west of Hawick. It was described by Ninian Elliot in 1892, who had lived near here, but the name already almost having disappeared by then. It is identified as a steep-sided spur of land running roughly NE–SW from the hillside to the flat land around the Newmill Burn (the R.C.A.H.M.S. show the site being about 250 m south-east of the 245 m peak south of Chapelhill Covert, between the Newmill Burn and the farm road that passes the Braux-holme Lochs). The top of the spur was once an Iron Age fort and later the site of a chapel. The date of the founding of this chapel is unknown, and it probably ceased to function in the late 16th century, following the Reformation. It may have been supplied by a chaplain from Hassendean and served the detached part of that Parish, which lay just across the Borthwick. The building is likely to have been of simple construction, since no ornate stonework has survived. According to the New Statistical Account it could still be traced in 1834 and the 1858 Ordnance Survey Name Book notes that the burial ground could still be seen. There are now no structural remains evident, however, its outline may still be indicated by a patch of nettles in summer. A former track led to the top, going round the north side of the spur, possibly the route up to the chapel. A little to the north, i.e. east-north-east of the summit, the ruins of a farmstead are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, probably the older site of Chapelhill farmhouse (a farmstead near there appears as ‘Barns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the site of the chapel is marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Birny Brae (bir-ne-brä) n. area in Castleton Parish, south-east of the B6357 near Riccarton, along the upper part of Shielden Sike. There is a circular enclosure there, as well as rig lines, showing signs of former cultivation.

Birny Cleuch (bir-ne-klooq) n. former name for a small stream in the Borthwick valley, lying between Eilrig and Howpasley (hence on the southern side of the valley). In 1616 it is described how some of a gang of Scotts met at ‘Birny-cleuche’ (three quarters of a mile after the foot of Eilrig Burn) after riding from Hawick under cover of darkness to slaughter the sheep at Howpasley belonging to the Laird of Drumlanrig. It is probably the same stream marked ‘Birny Sike’ on the modern Ordnance Survey maps, running roughly north to join the Borthwick near Craik village (also written ‘Birniecleuch’ and ‘Birniecleuche’ in 1616; the origin is probably from ‘birny’, i.e. covered in burned heather stems).

Birny Knowe (bir-ne-now) n. small hill above Broadhaugh, on the southern side of the Teviot valley, being essentially a ridge to the north-east of Broadhaugh Hill to the north. There is an ancient D-shaped rampart on the plateau linking this hill with Ringwood Hill. Inside the enclosure is a rectangular platform, suggesting this was a settlement of some sort (note a small hill of the same name in the Borthwick valley, and also that Birneyknowe has essentially the same name).

Birny Knowe (bir-nee-now) n. small hill between the Borthwick and Teviot valleys, just west of Branxholme Wester Loch. A linear earthwork runs from near the head of the Wood Burn to a marshy area near the Loch, a distance of about 350 m; it could be part of a boundary extending from the head of the Newmill Burn to a stream feeding into the Borthwick, and hence potentially a boundary connecting the 2 valleys (not to be confused with Birneyknowe or the hill of the same name near Broadhaugh).

Birny Sike (bir-nee-sik) n. small stream joining the south side of the Borthwick Water just to the east of Craik village.

bIRR (bir) n., arch. a whirring sound, like that made by a revolving wheel, a violent whirring motion, force, rush, impetus – ’...and have heard the 'brrr' of the winding wheel indoors ...' [AL], ‘Oot frae a’, the roar an’ rustle O’ the factory’s brr an’ bustle’ [RH], v. to move rapidly, bustle, whir, make a whirring noise, be in turmoil – ‘A wheen fashionable bummies birrin’ about yin’s lugs’ [ECS], ‘For the gutter bluid is stirring. As it stirs but once a year, When the drums and fifes are birring The Slogan through the air’ [TK] (from Medieaval English).

Birrell (bi-rul) n. Andrew (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster in Lilliesleaf, he lived at Oakbank in the village. He was also Parish Registrar. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. His only son Andrew Smith was killed at the Battle of Arras in 1917. Rev. J.A. (19th C.) assistant minister of Hawick Parish (under Dr. McRae) who left with part of the congregation in 1881, following internal dissention, and founded Wellington (later St. Margaret’s) Church.

Birrell’s (bi-rulz) n. High Street confectioners at the corner of Walter’s Wynd in the mid-20th century, part of a chain.

Birren Rig (bi-rin-rig) n. small hill to the east of Arkleton farmhouse. It contains a roughly circular enclosure. It was also known as ‘Birrıg’. bIRRIT (bi-ri’) n., arch. a brat, troublesome youngster.

bIRS (birs) n., arch. the gadfly.

bIRSE (birs) n., arch., poet. bristle, anger – ‘... in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head rise like the birses of a hurcheon’ [LHTB], ‘Wi’ yelps an’ queer uncanny whines His birsies rise, for whae can tell ...’ [WFC], ‘...Her birs was up, and she coos her plan I’ the teeth o’ her prood and heidstrong man’ [WL], v., arch. to put a bristle on, particularly in shoe-making – ‘The shuemaker birsled his lingle-end’ [GW] (from Old English; also spelled ‘birs’ and ‘birs’; the Soutars of Selkirk formerly held a ‘licking the birse’ initiation ceremony).

BIRSLEES (birs-lees) n. farm between Belses and Longnewton, about 10 miles north-east of Hawick, in Ancrum Parish. George Anderson was there in the early 19th century (also written ‘Birsleslee’ and variants; its origin is probably the Old English ‘meadow belonging to Birse’).

BIRSELTON (bir-sul-in) n. former name for an area bordering on Myreslawgreen in the 18th century, owned by Robert Oliver of Burnflat, and then his son baker and Bailie James Oliver. In the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common lands and the depositions regarding privileges on the Common it is describe as belonging to both Bailie Turnbull and to Robert Oliver of Burnflat; presumably one of them in fact owned adjacent land, or the land had been split at some earlier time – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, DeeEvil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

bIRSL (bir-sul) v., arch. to scorched, roast, toast (also written ‘birstle’).

bIRSLID (bir-suld, sul’) pp., adj., arch. scorched, roasted – ‘...So the farmer they followed, and soon they sat down To flagons of milk and scones birssel brown’ [JCG], ‘...A plate o’ stovie tatties birsled brown, A kail pot steamin’ owre the fire’ [WL], ‘In the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn’s rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again’ [IWl], dried up, overcooked – ‘ee’re that late yer chips er aa birselt’ (also spelled ‘birsselt’, ‘birstled’ and ‘birsled’).

Bishop (bi-shap) n. Rev. Patrick (16th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1585, he became Parson at Minto in 1589 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1590 or 91. He also had responsibility for Hobkirk, Bedrule and Minto. John Bonar took over from him at Abbotrule in 1593 (spelled ‘Bishop’). Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

bISHOPS (bi-shups) n. ecclesiastical heads of the Diocese of Glasgow, which contained Teviotdale, and therefore had authority over Hawick and much of the surrounding area. The first bishops are recorded in the mid-11th century, and were appointees of the Archbishop of York. However, it was only by the late 12th century that the men carrying this title had any real involvement with Glasgow, or with Teviotdale. From 1492 the title was upgraded to Archbishop. After the Reformation there continued to be bishops within the independent Scottish Church, often in name only, with no obvious influence in the Borders, until Episcopacy was abolished in 1689. After this there were bishops within the Episcopal Church, and later in the Roman Catholic church. A roll of the bishopric is: Magsuen (or Magnus), late 1050s; John Scotus; late 1050s until c.1066; Michael c.1110; John Capellanus c.1115–47; Herbert of Selkirk 1147–64; Ingram 1164–74; Jocelin 1174–99; Hugh 1199–99; William Malveisin 1199–1202; Florence 1202–07; Walter Capellanus 1207–32; William de Bondington 1232/3–58; Nicholas de Moffat 1259; John de Cheam 1259–68; Nicholas de Moffat 1268–70; William Wishart 1270–71; Robert Wishart 1271–1316; Stephen de Dumnideer 1316–17; John de Lindsay 1317; John de Egglescliffe 1318–23; John de Lindsay 1323–c.35; John Wishart 1336–37; William Rae 1338–67; Walter Wardlaw 1367–87; Matthew de Glendonwyn 1387–1408; William de Lauder 1408–25/6; John Cameron 1426–46; James Bruce 1447; William Turnbull 1447–54; Andrew de Durisdeer 1455–73; John Laing 1474–83; Robert Blackadder 1483–1508; James Beaton 1508–23; Gavin Dunbar 1523–47; James Hamilton 1547–48; Donald Campbell 1548; Alexander Gordon 1550–51; James Beaton 1551–70; John Porterfield 1571–72; James Boyd of Trochrig 1573–81; Robert Montgomery 1581–85; William Erskine 1585–87; James Beaton 1598–1603; John Spottiswoode 1603–15; John Law 1615–32; Patrick Lindsay 1632–38; Andrew Fairfoul 1661–64; Alexander Burnet 1664–69; Robert Leighton 1671–74; Alexander Burnet 1674–79; Arthur Rose 1679–84; Alexander Cairncross 1684–87; and John Paterson 1687–89.

the Bishop’s Stane (thu-bi-shups-stæn) n. ancient boundary marker at Woll Rig, near Ashkirk, built into the base of a dry-stone dyke near the cattle-grid at the top of the Rig. It measures about 5ft in length and 2ft 3in in width. It is on the old march dyke between the lands of Woll and Hartwoodmyres. The carved letters ‘G.H.’, possibly for ‘Grieve of Huntly’ are on one side (although this may be a relatively recent addition), and the wall forms part of the old march between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. It is said that it once lay on the ridge of the hill nearby. The name suggests a connection with the Bishop of Glasgow, who formerly owned most of Ashkirk Parish. A story is told about Jamie Murray seeing a ghost there on a moonlight trip from Headshaw back to Ettrick; the story was written by ‘C.’ in the Border Counties Magazine of 1880, and is valuable for its early examples of local dialect.

Bishop Well (bi-shup-wel) n. spring in Ashkirk Parish, named for an association with the former Bishop’s of Glasgow, who held the lands there. It is situated about 200 m east of the church, to the south of the road leading from the A7 through the village.

Bitchlaw (bich-law) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, presumably near Bitchlaw Moss. Walter Davidson was farmer there in 1797. It is possible that ‘Bitchlaw’ is the same as ‘Blak Law’, which is just to the north. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map already shows no signs of a dwelling in this area.

Bitchlaw Moss (bich-law-mos) n. marshy area near White Hill, to the north-west of Adderstonelee (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, roughly between White Hill and Bleak Law.

Bithet (bi-thi’) n. William (14th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from 1488. He was witness to a document of Melrose Abbey relating to Hassendean in about 1488/9, where his name is given as ‘williame bithet vicar of Caueris’. Probably the same ‘Beythet’ (the first name being misspelled as ‘belle beythat’) recorded as Vicar of Cavers when he witnessed the granting of the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Douglas in 1464. Helen (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears to be written ‘nelle beythat’.

bits o (bitz-o) adj., arch. mere, small, used depreciatively – ‘...ther seam was ti gin the bits o moppies skiltin about’ [ECS], ‘...bendin’ oot the bits o’ kinks, and shapin’ the hannel to eer fancy’ [DH], ‘When we were bits o’ bairns, And ring games were the thing ...’ [WL] (this plural version does not occur in standard English; cf. bit).

bits o blood (bitz-o-blud) n., pl., arch. literally specimens of good pedigree, i.e. mettlesome horses – ‘Till round the Haugh our flag is flying; And some, their ‘bits o’ blood’ are tryin’ [AB].

Bitstane Burn (bit-stan-burn) n. Bitstone Burn, stream in the Borthwick valley, rising on Easter Park Hill and flowing into the Borthwick Water just east of Roberton. It is also known as Bitstone Linn. On the eastern side of the lower part are the remains of a settlement, with a single bank, still visible on the north and east sides.

the Bittens (bitz-ain) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, referred to as ‘the Bittenis’ in the 1562 document regarding the dispute over superiority of the lands. It is described as ‘merchand with the Zarlesyde (probably ‘Earlside’) on the eist’ (also written ‘the Byttannis’ in 1562.

Bitterbeard (bi’-ur-beerd) n. nickname of William Kerr.

bittie (bi’-ee, bi-tee) n., arch. a small portion, small amount of time, little bit – ‘...’ [ECS], ‘...’ [ECS], ‘Than A pandert up an doon a bittie, hed a bit crack wui yin an another ...’ [ECS].

blabber (blaw-bur) v., arch. to babble.

black (blawk) adj. black in colour, dark in complexion or hair colour – ‘Wee, John Cochrane, an auld lame tall black man, with some grey hairs in his heid ...’ [BR1700], also in suggestive uses, evil, morally reprehensible, intense, to the utmost – ‘black-affrontit’, ‘Black-burnin’ shame’ [JR], evil, immoral – ‘Hei’s gaun a black gate’ [GW], to ‘have the black dog on one’s back’ is to have a fit of depression.

Black (blawk) n. Agnes (18th C.) housekeeper for Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in Hawick. In 1765 there is an inventory of household furniture (presumably from Drumlanrig’s Tower) handed over to her, including a pair of backgammon tables and a card table in the dining room, a bed with tartan curtains in the tartan room and some linen, ‘birds eye, rose knot, dambroad, duke’s garter, shagg knot’. This was about the time when the Scotts of Buccleuch abandoned their town house in Hawick. Alexander (b.1814) joiner from Berwick. In 1841 he was living at ‘New Church’, i.e. on Buccleuch Road. His wife was Mary and they had a son William. By 1851 they had moved to Kelso. Andrew (18th C.) married Agnes Thomson. Their son Adam was baptised in Hawick in 1778. The entry was just after a birth for Robert Pringle and Helen Thomson (who may therefore have been his wife’s sister). The witnesses were (probably, the name is hard to read) William Gledstains and James Elliot. Andrew (b.1812/3) farmer at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. He donated a stone ball to the Museum. His wife was Helen. He may be the Andrew (b.1812), son of James and Agnes Reid, who was baptised at the East Bank Kirk. Rev. Armstrong, D.D. (1851–1923) born in Newcastle, son of Rev. John and Mary Beattie. He was minister at Palmerston Place Church in Edinburgh 1876–92. He then moved to Birkenhead, Cheshire. In 1899 he became minister at St. Andrews’s in Toronto and Chaplain for the Highland Regiment there. Charles (18th/19th C.) recorded at Synton in 1797 when he was taxed for having ‘a Cur’. Prof. Ebenezer Charlton (1861–1927) born in Newcastle, he was the youngest of 7 children of Rev. John, minister at Castleton. He went to Edinburgh University when he was just 13, and studied there for 7 years, winning several student prizes. Among his classmates was the writer J.M. Barrie. He was one of the founders of the Edinburgh literary and philosophical society called The Symposium. He studied further in London and then spend 7 years living at Liddelbank. Travelling to North America in 1890 to give lectures, he was 2 years later appointed Lecturer at Harvard University. In 1894 he became Principal of the Language and Literature Department at the New England Conservatory of Music and in 1900 was appointed Professor of English Literature at Boston University. He received an honorary doctorate from Glasgow University in 1902. He published extensively on Shakespeare and other topics. He married Agnes Knox and they had 3 children. George (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1772 he married Margaret Aitchison in Bedrule Parish. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); and George (b.1775). George of Menslaws (18th C.) owner of the mansion house at Lanton, according to valuation roll in 1788. He is probably the ‘Mr. Black' who is said to have sold Menslaws in about 1786; however, in 1788 he is still recorded as owner of Menslaws, valued at £263 16s 3d, as well as the ‘waulk-mill’. George (1774/5–1817) cooper in Newcastle. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery beside Sarah, daughter of Thomas Martin of Whitehaven. George (1816–99) born at Silverbuthall, son of James and Margaret Liddell. In 1843 he emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. He is recorded returning to visit Hawick in 1884. He married Mary Edgar in Canada and had 2 sons: James, who married Margaret Guthrie and Janet Rodger (whose family had come from the Hawick area); and George Douglas. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick, who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). It is possible she was the same woman as Agnes, housekeeper to the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1728 and Toddshawhaugh in 1732. His children included: William (b.1728); and James (b.1732). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and their children included: Thomas (b.1764); and Archibald (b.1766). The witnesses in 1764 were James Paterson and Thomas ‘Baity’ and in 1766 were Thomas and William (surely close relatives). James (18th C.) said to have been born near Hawick in 1749. He married Mary Turnbull (from Yarrow Parish) in Selkirk Parish in 1771. George Black, servant to William Aitchison (tenant in Hartwoodmyres) was cautioned for the groom, and John Turnbull (servant to Pringle of Torwoodlee) for the Bride; presumably George was a close relative. His children, baptised at Parkhouses in Wilton Parish, were: George (b.1774); Agnes (‘Nancy’, b.1776); Margaret (‘Peggy’, b.1779); and James (b.1781), farmer at Northcroft. James, Nancy and Peggy all later emigrated to Canada. He and his wife were buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. James (18th C.) listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when he leased the farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He could be the James who married Betty Elliot, and whose children included: John (b.1795), Jean (b.1797), Anne Mary Douglas (b.1802) and James (b.1805), baptised in Wilton; and Robert (b.1809), baptised in Cavers. James (b.1781) son of James and Mary Turnbull, he was baptised at Parkhouses. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Wilton and then became farmer at Northcroft near Stirches. He firstly married a Miss ‘Reyes’, who died, and he secondly married Margaret Liddell (or ‘Peggy Liddle’) in 1811. The family were members of the Burgher Congregation, and their children were baptised in the East Bank Kirk. He is recorded at Northcroft in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Robert, George, John, Helen and Mary. His children were baptised at Lockiesedge, Silverbuthall and Stellhouse. They were: James (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); George (1816–99), who returned for a visit to Hawick in 1884; John (b.1820); Helen (b.1822); and Mary (b.1825). In 1843 he and his wife, along with their younger children and 2 of his sisters (Nancy and Peggy) emigrated to Canada, to join his sons James and John. Most of the family are buried in Ayr, Ontario, Canada. James (b.1783/4) miller at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. He was born in Jedburgh. In 1851 he was a widower there, with his daughter Jane. Probably the same miller was living at Trow Mill Stables in 1841. He may be the James who married Agnes Reid in Cavers in 1810 and whose children, baptised in the East Bank Kirk included Jean (b.1811) and Andrew (b.1812). James (1811/2–59) grocer in Hawick, born in Wilton. He was recorded as an innkeeper on the Howegate (about No. 12) in 1851. He is listed as a vintner on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes (from Westerkirk, who died in 1884, aged 86) and is buried in Welloagate Cemetery. His children included: James (1833–36); and Elizabeth, who married James Newman. His wife is probably the widow Agnes Black listed as a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Fore Raw in 1861, living with her young grand-daughter Elizabeth Black. James (b.1812) eldest son of James and Margaret Liddell. He was an assistant road overseer living at Stellhouse in 1841. He married Janet (1813–57) from Robertson Parish, eldest child of Thomas Scott and Agnes Leithhead. Their children included: James (1833–36); Thomas (b.1835); Agnes (b.1837); James Scott (b.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). In 1842 he and his family, along with his brother John, emigrated to Canada. More children followed in Canada, and his wife died after the 11th child. He died in Blenheim Township, Ontario. James (19th C.) President of the Hawick Phonographic Association in the 1880s. Possibly the same James, son of James, was a greengrocer at 25 High Street. Rev. John (1801–79) born in Airdrie, probably son of John and Margaret Smellie. His father was an elder of the Parish Church of New Monkland. He went to Glasgow University when he was about 12 and entered Secession Hall in 1820. He was ordained as minister of Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1829. He describes his first visit to the area, explaining that he could not find Liddesdale on any map, but was told to make for Langholm and then ask for directions! In the troubled years before the passing of the Reform Bill, he was threatened with prosecution for his strong Liberal political views. Controversy during his ministry led to the establishment of an Evangelical Union Kirk in Newcastleton around 1850, as well as the Free Kirk around the same time. The church and manse were renovated in 1875, while he was minister. He continued the popular Sunday School established by his predecessor. He was said to be a strong speaker, but to give overly long sermons. He was also a great lover of literature, especially poetry and Border ballads. In 1848 he married Mary Beattie (1823–93), who came from Castleford Parish. Their children included: William (1850–70), who was lost at sea; Rev. Dr. Armstrong of Edinburgh (1851–1923); Mary (1853–1912), eldest daughter, who married Thomas M. Bell, sometimes of Liddelbank; Ann Agnes (1855–1939), who married John Christie; James Gavin (b.1857); Rev. John Waddle (1859–1912), minister in England and Canada; and Ebenezer (1861–1927). He had strong views on education and refused to send any of his children to school, educating themselves so that they all read Greek and Latin before they were 10 years old. He died suddenly while in his 51st year as minister. Shortly before his death there was a jubilee celebration for him in which he was presented with a portrait of himself, painted by William McTaggart, R.S.A., as well as a small marble bust. He was buried at Etterston, with a long inscription on his gravestone. Rev. John Waddle (1859–1912) born in Newcastleton, 4th son of Rev. John. He was minister of the Presbyterian Church in England and then in Canada. He died in Boston, U.S.A. Robert (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Bessie Dodds and their children included: Robert (b.1681); and James (b.1684). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Scott and William Lamb. Robert (17th C.) miller in Haseendean. In 1697 he was fined in Hawick ‘for selling insufficient humil corne meils’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1720. He probably married Betty Douglas in Cavers in 1719. Their children included: William (b.1720); and James (b.1724). He is surely related to William who was also at Orchard. Robert (d.1899) bookseller, stationer and newsagent in Hawick. He published the 'Hawick Newsletter' briefly in 1846, mostly with material taken from the Galashiels-based 'Border Watch'. In 1857 he published the 'Hawick Times', which only lasted for 12 issues. His premises were at 17 High Street. He made several donations to the Archiological Society's collections. Thomas (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Janet Cumming and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Isobel (b.1741); Jean (b.1743); John (b.1744); Janet (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); and John (again, b.1757). The 1757 witnesses were Thomas Scott, Elder, and Charles Miller, weaver. He could be the Thomas who (along with William), witness a baptism in 1766 for James. William (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the William whose children, baptised in Cavers, included William (b.1696), Thomas (b.1698) and Mary (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Elrig in 1712 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. His surname is written as 'Bleak'. He married Elizabeth Falsyde and their children included Thomas (b.1708), William (b.1711) and Adam (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were gardener William Scott and weaver Adam Brown, in 1711 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde (probably related to his wife), and in 1721 were John Stevenson and weaver Adam Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1723, 1726, 1729 and 1733. He probably married Janet Turnbull in Cavers in 1721. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); Bessie (b.1726); William (b.1729); Janet (b.1731); James (b.1733); Mary (b.1735), who probably married Thomas Reid in Hobkirk in 1766; and John (b.1742). He is surely related to Robert who was also at Orchard. He could be the William, son of William, baptised in Cavers in 1696. William (18th C.) owner of the farm of Menslaws. He was recorded being 'Mensless' among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, his name there recorded as 'Blake'. He was probably succeeded by George. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Aitkin and their children included Thomas (b.1782) and Marion (b.1785). He could be the William who (along with Thomas), witness a baptism in 1766 for James. He could be the gardener William who in 1786 witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Aitkin. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded being 'in Borthwickshiel at Ettric' in 1785, with his surname as 'Bleak'. His children included Nelly (b.1785). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Penmushall in 1793. He married Margaret Inglis and their children included Walter (b.1793) and William (b.1810). William Davidson (d.1881) studied at St. Andrews University 1840/1. He was the first minister of the Congregational Kirk in Newcastleton in 1850, but only stayed there for about a year. He was then at Montrose, Kilmarino, Dundee, Berwick-on-Tweed, Middlesbrough, Southport, Huddersfield and Crieff. He died in Langholm (formerly spelled 'Blake') and other variants and hence easily confused, or once synonymous, with Blake and Blaikie).
godfather of the future James V. A letter of protection to his tenants and others while he travelled to Rome in 1504 gives a useful list of people associated with the Diocese. The document refers to a respite of his tenants, factors and servants for several crimes, especially for the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey, excepting those who actually slew him with their own hands; it is unclear exactly what local or national political conflicts led to these events. He died on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, 22 members of his entourage catching a contagious infection after their ship left Venice. His seal showed St. Kentigern, and a shilling and shields, together with the words ‘S’ ROTUNDUM ROBERTI EPI. GLASGU’.

Blackadder’s (blawk-a-durz) n. sweet shop at the foot of Wilton Hill in the mid-20th century.

black affrontit (blawk-a-fron-‘tee), a-fron-‘ee’) adj. acutely embarrassed, grossly insulted, publicly hurt in pride and feelings – ‘if ee dae that A’ll be black affrontit’ (also written ‘blac-affronteet’, etc.).

Black Andrew (blawk-an-dro, -dru) n. nickname of Andrew Scott, Cornet in 1724. The nickname may also have been in use later, including the mention in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Black Andr’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Bailie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

Black Andro (blawk-awn-drō) n. Black Andrew, hill in the Yarrow valley, south of Yarrowford, reaching a height of 501 m. It has Black Andrew Wood on its northern slopes, but is now marked ‘Fastheugh Hill’ on maps – ‘I see the white clouds hover Above Blackandro’s crest; I see the heath-bush cover The grey-hen’s simple nest’ [WHO].

black-avised (blawk-a-vldz) adj., arch. black-faced, having a gloomy aspect (cf. reid-avised).

Blackbeard (blawk-beerd) n. nickname of a dyker, mentioned in 1634 when he was paid 40 shillings to mend the wall between Branxholme Town and the field of Branxholme. In a financial account of 1638–40 the cook at Branxholme also has the same name, suggesting some connection.

black betty (blawk-ne-‘ee) n., arch. another name for ginger wine or some other dark, homemade drink – ‘…and a bottle of Black Sugar Wine, or Black Betty, as we called it’ [JRa].

the Black Bull (thu-blawk-bul, -bool) n. pub at the Sandbed in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It had a ballroom, which was popular for dances. Adam Scott was the landlord in the late 1700s, then the Herriots in the early 1800s, John Hunter from at least 1825, Mary Hunter in 1837 and Walter Brodie by 1841. James Heriot was listed there in 1851 and 1852, and his wife Euphemia in 1861. For many years it was a stopping point for stage coaches passing through Hawick, and for carters leaving the town. It was located on the eastern side of the Sandbed, with a lane giving access to the Slitrig. The site was later occupied by Bailie Lawson’s jewellery shop.

the Black Bull (thu-blawk-bul, -bool) n. former inn in Lilliesleaf. In 1837 the proprietor was Andrew Laing.

the Black Bull Lane (blawk-bul-lān) n. name used in the 19th century for a lane leading from the Sandbed to the Slitrig, alongside the Black Bull Inn. It was referred to as ‘Young the Baker’s Close’ around 1900.

Black Bull Pairks (blawk-bul-pārks) n. former name for fields opposite Shankend farm, being 2 fields enclosing 28 acres. This could be the ‘Blackbell and Blackbill’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century.

the Black Burn (thu-blawk-burn) n. stream in the upper Jed valley, essentially rising on the Carter Fell. There are several other streams of the same name, e.g. one near Newcastleton. A farm there, ‘Blackburnys’ was among those disputed by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1538. It was ‘Blakburn’ in 1539 when it was among Crown farms to be let (Blaeu’s 1654 map marks ‘Black b.’ and ‘Inner Black B.’ to the east).

Black Burn (blawk-burn) n. former name for a stream that flows into the Allan Water. It is mentioned as part of the description of the boundary of Ringwood, when given to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. The precise location is unknown. However, a connection with Blackcleuch Loch seems possible.

Black Burn (bleek-, blāk-, blawk-burn) n. major stream that rises in the hills to the north-west of Newcastleton, fed by several ‘Gills’. It passes under the main road and joins the Liddel Water just north of Newcastleton. In the upper section and on the adjoining Lang Gill there are waterfalls, which are spectacular after heavy rains. There was a natural stone bridge here, of which a sketch exists; it was about 55 feet long, 10 feet wide, and 28 inches thick. It stood spectacularly at 31 feet above the water level, but collapsed in 1810. The farm of the same name was shown in a survey of 1718, with old wood trees along the banks of the burn. The watershed of this burn contains many archaeological remains, including boundary banks and ditches, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds of various ages.
Fragments of a jet ring found there are in the British Museum; this could be the ‘massy gold ring’ found ‘on the side of Blakeburn’ more than 2 centuries ago, and suggested to have been from the Countess of Northumberland, who was said to have been robbed in the area in about 1570.
Locally the name is pronounced ‘Bleakburn’ – ‘Looking up the rugged dell, Where the mountain ravens dwell, Wildest grandeur – Nature’s sel!’ – Is seen i’ bonny Bleakburn’ [DA] (also ‘the Black Burn’).

Blackburn (blawk-burn) n. farm about a mile north-west of Newcastleton. It is first recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 6 shillings.
In 1541 the tenant was Martin Armstrong and the lands were valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence.
The stream that passes here to join the Liddel is the Black Burn. The original farmstead was located on the south bank of the stream and is shown on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that point it was a farm of 499 acres, bounded by the Liddel, just north of the modern Newcastleton.
The 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties shows a farmhouse near the foot of the burn, on the north side. There were once 2 cottages and an inn here. Gilbert Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century.

Blackburnsteed (blawk-burn-steed) n. former name for the area where the Black Burn joins the Liddel, just north of the modern Newcastleton.
The 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties shows a farmhouse near the foot of the burn,
on the north side. There were once 2 cottages
and an inn here. Gilbert Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century and John Grieve in 1797 (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Sto-ie’s 1770 map).

Blackcastle Hill (blawk-kaw-sul-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 277 m. At the south-west end of the summit is a section of rampart about 15 m long, and a less distinct bank along the south-east side, these being all that remains of a fort, which gave the hill its name. There is also a hill-fort on a broad rocky ridge on the northern side. There are ramparts and ditches, but the site has been much denuded by cultivation. Inside are the remains of what may be a later settlement. The north-west slope of the hill shows cultivation terraces and the north-east side shows traces of rig-and-furrow lines.

Blackchesters (blawk-ches-turz) n. former farm in Southdean Parish, roughly opposite Roughlee. It is marked on Roy’s c.1750 map to the south of Waterside. By the Shaw Burn, near Hilly Linn, there are the remains of an old tower house and settlement that is probably this same place. The tower is 11.5 m by 7 m and is attached to a longer building. There are also a couple of separate buildings, and then a little further south are 2 more farmsteads. William Common was recorded there in 1544. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists 3 people at Blackchesters (it is ‘Blackchester’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but has disappeared by the time of Stobie’s 1770 map; also written ‘Blackchester’).

Blackcleuch (blawk-kloo-ech) n. area above Teviothead, along the upper Teviot valley on the Merrylaw side road. There is a farm there, as well as a small stream called the Black Cleuch and the ridge Blackcleuch Rig above. In 1627 it is etimated to pay ‘stock to 20 lb., vicecarage 4 lb.; no corn’. Archibald Baptie from there was charged with being a Covenanter supporter in 1685. Robert Scott was tenant in at least 1704–24 and John Scott was recorded there in 1705. By 1707 the farm was valued along with Crumhaugh Hill at £266 13s 4d. Thomas Telfer was workman there in 1708 and William Anderson was shepherd in 1716. Robert ‘Hutson’ was there in 1741. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the first half of the 18th century and passed to the Scotts of Buceluch in 1758. Gideon Forsyth is recorded as herd at the farm in 1797. It was valued along with Crumhaugh Hill (still at £266 13s 4d) in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as part of the holdings of the Duke of Buceluch. Shepherd William Murray and his family lived there in 1841 and 1851. Marl may have been collected from here around 1800 for soil improvement. Signs of a ‘scooped settlement’ were found on Blackcleuch Rig (marked as ‘Blackcleuch’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map; also written ‘Blackcleugh’, it is ‘Blackchugh’ in 1705; note the confusion with Blackcleugh in Hobkirk Parish).

Black Cleuch (blawk-kloo-och) n. stream that joins Lurgies Burn in the upper Rule valley. A linear earthwork reaches from near here to Brown’s Sike in the Slitrig valley.

Black Cleuch (blawk-kloo-och) n. stream in the northern part of Castleton Parish. It rises on Leap Hill, to the west of Whitrope, and runs south to join the Sundhope Burn.

Blackcleuch Loch (blawk-kloo-och-loch) n. small loch at the head of the Loch Burn, between Stobicote and Broadhaugh Hill. It is labelled ‘Blackcleuch Moss’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Blackcleugh (blawk-kloo-och) n. genral name for the area near Blackcleughmooth.

Blackcleugh Cottage (blawk-kloo-och-ko’-eaj) n. cottage at Blackcleugh. It was home of builder Andrew Waugh in the late 1800s.

Blackcleughmooth (blawk-kloo-och-mooth) n. Blackcleughmooth, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, just to the east of Forkins, consisting of just a few acres. It is near the mouth of Blackcleugh Sike and also known as ‘Blacklee’. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule and sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Weaver James Anderson was there in 1788. John Taylor was farmer here in 1797 and John Elliot recorded there in 1800 and 1807. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1811. It was once on the main route between Hawick and the Carter Bar. An inn here was once known as the ‘Changehouse’; it was built by William Kerr of Abbotrule and a stone above the door contained the letters ‘W. K. Julie ye 1715’. The hamlet to the east is now known as Cleuch Heid, and is the location of the main farm for the Wolfelee estate (also spelled ‘cleuch’; not to be confused with Blackcleuch near Teviothead).

blackcock (blawk-kok) n. male black grouse – ‘...The bee had flown from the bloom o’ the ling, The blackcock’s head was over his wing’ [WHO].

Blackcockhaa (blawk-kok-haw) n. former farmstead in the headwaters of the Ale Water, also known as Byreleecbough.

Blackcraig (blawk-kraig) n. area between Groundistone Heights and Satchells. The area contains the craig itself, along with a plantation of the same name and a boggy area called Blackcraig Moss. There was once a farmstead here, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. Blackcraig Moss is already on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

the Black Daith (thu-blawk-dath) n. the Black Death, Bubonic Plague, or ‘the Pest’, which swept Europe in the mid-14th century. After devastating England in 1348-49, some in Scotland used the opportunity to attack, gathering at Selkirk in the Autumn of 1349 and raiding Durham. The retreating army probably brought the plague back with them, and there was a massive outbreak throughout Scotland in the Spring of 1350. At least 30% of the British population was killed, and it was the worst disaster ever to befall Britain. Further outbreaks occurred in the 1360s and 1370s and it only really died out in the 17th century. In 1363 it is said that the living of the parish ‘on account of wars and pestilences brings no fruits’. The Plague also ravaged much of Scotland in 1514 after Flodden. There were several outbreaks in Edinburgh in the early 16th century, as well as Selkirk in 1535 and Jedburgh in 1536. There is an English record of a sickness dispersed through Teviotdale and the Merse in 1597, as well as occurring in Edinburgh and Carlisle. A letter of 1602 describing lands at Fulton (in Bedrule Parish) speaks about a farm being ‘waist sen the pest tyme’, suggesting the plague may have struck there some years earlier. The special taxes raised by the Bailies of Hawick, complained of by the Baron in 1612, was partly to repay the debts contracted ‘the tyme of the visitation of the said towm with the plaige’. In the summer of 1636 the markets of Hawick, Melrose, Coldstream, Duns, Kelso and Selkirk were all closed because of an outbreak in the English Border towns. In 1637 there is a record of ‘scavengers at the time of the plague ... in Quhitchester’s lordship’ and also of people in Branhxolme and Wilton ‘who had nothing to maintain themselves with in time of the visitation’. There was also a proclamation in 1638 given to the Sheriff of Teviotdale and others, with special powers to stop the movement of people (particularly across the Border), forcibly confine poor people and suspend markets. There were stated to be cases in Jedburgh and Crailing, and there must have been cases in the Hawick area too, although there are no specific records. There was a violent outbreak in Leith in 1645. There are records of a special watch for strangers being maintained at the ports in 1645, and the election of magistrates was held outdoors that year as a precaution. There were also laws enacted by the Council banning people from travelling too far for sheep shearing (presumably with concerns that they might bring back the Plague). A special collection for local victims in Ashkirk is recorded as recently as the summer of 1655. In 1665 there is an order in the Town Book forbidding the inhabitants to cross the Border into Northumberland ‘during the suspicion of the plague in England’. There is a local tradition that a mound near Midshiels is the remains of a cottage that was entirely covered over when it was discovered that the inhabitants has the plague. Another tradition ‘in a wild and secluded spot in Teviotdale’ (described in the Border Counties’ Magazine) describes a shepherd’s cottage, where the plague was contracted from a purchased piece of finery, and when the shepherd went for help, the neighbours instead buried the cottage, ignoring the cries of the shepherd.

Black Dod (blawk-dód) n. name used for the northern extension of Ruberslaw.

Black Gate (blawk-gā) n. name for an area at the head of a stream in western Liddesdale, just east of Watch Hill, in the headwaters of the Black Burn. Blackgate Rig is marked on the modern Ordnance Survey map (it is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

the Black Grain (thu-blawk-grān) n. alternative name for Blackgrain Moss on Hawick Common, or perhaps for the stream passing through it; this second meaning is the same as Gate Burn. Burgesses were told they could cut their peat on the moss here in 1733. The name is used in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767—‘... and then westward by hillocks on the south side of the upper moss called the Black Grain, and thence west by hillocks to the Trowtlaw Ford’ [C&L 1767].

Blackgrain (blawk-grān) n. former lands in the Yarrow valley, presumably near Blackgrain Rig on modern maps. These were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century. In at least the period 1480–1501 it was leased by David and then Patrick Crichton, along with Catslack. In 1539 it was inherited by James Crichton of Cranston Riddell from his father, and was then valued at £17 16s. 8d., but 40 merks in time of peace. In 1541 it was valued at £70 3s. 4d. It passed to his widow Janet Beaton, and then to her 2nd husband Sir Walter Scott. It later formed part of the estates of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The tenant in 1574 was James Shiel, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhxolme. It was subject of a ‘wadset’ between Walter Earl of Buccleuch and Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank in 1622. It was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties in 1718 (it is ‘Blakgrayne’ in 1460, ‘Blacgrane’ in 1471, ‘Blakgrane’ in 1489 and ‘Blakgrane’ in 1539 and 1550).

Blackgrain (blawk-grān) n. former name for lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The 1599 charter from James VI to Sir Walter Scott of Branhxolme (referred to in a later 1693 charter) mentions ‘the free tenement of Blackgrains’ in Wilton Parish. And in 1604 Sir Walter Scott had another charter for ‘the lands called the steadings of Blackgraine and others in parish of Wilton’. However the ‘manor place of Blackgraine, within the said sheriffdome of Selkirk’ is also mentioned, so there may simply be confusion here. However, this is clearly unrelated to Blackgrain Moss by Hawick Moor. In the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs for the Scots of Buccleuch there is a description of a tenement of Blackgrain, with the rectorage and vicarage teinds of Castleton, being combined with lands in Wilton and Teviothead, into a tenement of Blackgrain. So it seems that this might be the same as the place in Castleton Parish. It is still mentioned along with Wilton-grain, Wiltonburn, Overhall, Frostylee, Linhope and Phaup, along with the patronage of Wilton Kirk, among the properties of the Scots of Buccleuch in 1663; at that time the ‘the tenement of Blackgraynes’ contained all of these lands, according to the infeftment to the deceased Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch by King James VI ‘. . . To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commonside, and Milsant-hill, And Eiridge is left all alone, Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (it is ‘Blackgrains’ in 1599 and ‘Blackgrayne’ and ‘Blackgraynes’ in 1663: ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for the branch of a stream, deriving from Old Norse).

Black Grain (blawk-grān) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Black Height and flows in a southerly direction behind Kirk Hill to become part of the Tinnis Burn. There are old sheepfolds and turf walls in the area. This may be the place where a ‘tenement of Blackgraine, with the personadge and vicrag teinds of the pariss-kirk of Edingtoun and Cassiltoun’ is listed among properties inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653.

Blackgrain Moss (blawk-grān-mos) n. name for the bogggy area to the east of the Caa Knowe, the southern part of Winnington Moss. The area is also marked on some maps as Lightpipe. It was formerly on Hawick Common, near the southern end, but after the Division lay just beyond the southern extent. In 1757 it was proclaimed by the Hawick Town Council that this area was not to be used for making ‘bakes’ (i.e. hand-made peat ‘logs’) and so a party led by the Bailies set out and broke up the ‘bakes’ on the Common belonging to the tenants of Hawick Shiel, Over and Nether Southfield and Longflat – ‘. . . the order was that no bakes were to be made in the Black Grain of Winnington Moss’ [C&L1767].

Blackhaa (blawk-haw) n. Blackhall, former name for lands in the Ewes valley, near Moss-paul and Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1506 and 1509/10. It is further recorded in 1535 when superiority of parts of Ewesdale were confirmed to George, Lord Home, and also listed as part of the Lordship of Ewesdale about 1610. Tom Scott in Blackhall is recorded in 1569 and 1585 and his son Thomas in 1611. Andrew Elliot from here was among men accused of raiding into England in 1590. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scots of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 654 acres, bounded by Fiddleton, Unthank, Twislehope, Burnfoot and Carewoodrig. David Scott was there in at least the period 1787–97. James Beattie and John Jackson were there in 1841, Robert Byers and John Nichol were shepherds there in 1851 and John Govenlock was farmer in 1861. There are suggestions of an archaeological enclosure just to the southy, but the banks may in fact be natural (it is ‘Blakhaw’ in 1506; it is marked ‘Blakhall’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Crawford’s 1804 map just to the east of Fiddleton).

Blackhaa (blawk-haw) n. (Blackhall) Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (b.1703) daughter of John Blackhall, who was a shoemaker in Selkirk, and Catherine Currer. She married shoemaker Robert Oliver (c.1699–1764) in Hawick in 1728. Several items bearing her name have been passed down through her Wilson descendants. She was known as a great yarn spinner and it is said that she had a seat fitted in the open roof of her house, so that she could spin the yarn with much greater length. A story is told of how, during a period of local famine, she rode to Newcastle and back in the middle of winter, carrying yarn and blankets, which she sold for a pittance, thereby feeding her family. John (d.bef. 1765) shoemaker in Selkirk. He was probably son of John ‘elder’ (recorded as a cordiner in Selkirk in 1716, 1718 and 1727), with his mother being Bessie Scott. In 1731 he and his son Thomas were involved in ‘ane manifest blood and riot’ in a house in Selkirk. He is probably the deacon of the Selkirk cordiners recorded in 1742 and the John involved in a court case in 1743 for ‘drinking the Pretender’s health’. In 1743 he is still ‘elder cordiner’ and in 1745 and 1649 both he and the ‘younger cordiner’ are recorded. He was ‘elder souter’ in 1761. In 1752 he and Thomas (or perhaps his sons John and Thomas) were involved in property dispute in Selkirk, relating to a disposition of 1733. He married Catherine Currer and their children included Elizabeth (b.1703), John (b.1706), Thomas (b.1708), Jean (b.1711), Helen (b.1714) and Margaret (b.1716). His daughter Bessie (b.1703) married Hawick shoemaker Robert Oliver. Cordiner Thomas (probably his son) was accused of ‘fighting, drunkenness and blasphemy’ in Selkirk in 1737. John junior (probably his son) is recorded along with his wife Janet Fairbairn in 1742 and 1743. He was still alive in 1761, but his son John was no longer ‘junior’ by 1765.

Blackheid (blawk-heed) n. nickname for John Oliver in the 16th century, as well as Archibald Elliot, John Elliot and William Elliot in the early 17th century.

Black Height (blawk-hi) n. hill on the road to the west of Newcastleton, situated between Hazelyside Hill and Black Edge, reaching a height of 383 m.

Black Hill (blawk-hil) n. prominent hill just south of Earlston, reaching a height of 314 m and having a hill-fort and triangulation pillar. There are many other hills of the same name.

Black Hill (blawk-hil) n. hill in Wauchope Forest, to the east of Hyndlee. It reaches a height of 359 m. On its western slopes is an ancient settlement, about 100 m by 60 m in size, and has a ditch and outer bank. It has been partly erased by cultivation and now by forestry plantation. There are also signs of cord rig on the hill.

Blackhouse Toor (blawk-hoos-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined tower up the Douglas Burn from the Yarrow, near Craig Douglas farm. Once a populous area of the Ettrick Forest, the barony of Douglasburn was seat of the Douglasses from the 11th century, and scene of the ‘Douglas Tragedy’ ballad, where the 7 Douglas brothers fell. The lands of ‘Garlauch and Blackhous’ were Crown lands from at least 1456, tenanted by James Alemoor of that Ilk in 1484, then Robert, Lord Lyle, then James Alemoor of that Ilk and his son John from 1488. John continued to lease the lands until taken over by Pringle of Tinnis in 1509. William Stewart of Traquair was tenant of the lands in 1541. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd lived at the farm here for about a decade at the end of the 18th century (spelled ‘Blakhous’ and variants; there are many other places in Scotland with the same name).

Blackhope (blawk-höp) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, to the east of Saughtree. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh in 1612, but part of the dispute between the Elliots and the Scotts. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. Adam Armstrong, called ‘Rattas in Blackhoip’ was one of the last of the Border thieves brought before the Earl of Buccleuch in 1646. It was valued at £200 in 1678. William Davidson (merchant in Jedburgh) purchased the farm in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. William Glendinning was there in 1694. It was sold in 1786 (along with Over and Nether Larriston) by William Oliver of Dinalbyre to Col. William Elliot. However, William Oliver was still recorded as owner in the 1788 county valuation, when it was still valued at £200. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when the valued was unchanged. John Dodd and family lived there in 1841. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (it is ‘blackhoup’ in 1613, ‘Blackhoip’ in 1624 and ‘Blackhop’ in 1637; it is marked ‘Blairops’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there are several places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. between Peebles and Heriot).

blackie (blaw-kee) n. blackbird – ‘The blackie warbilin’ blithely, The lintie and the lark …’ [WL], ‘The blackie’s note, the cheepin’ speugs oot’ mang the hedge …’ [WFC], ‘…Wi sparras cheepin gleg on the rones, the cocks crawin, And the blackies whusslin owre a’ the braes and gairdens!’ [DH], ‘…nae doot mavis and blacklie sang on the top o the Jeddart gibbets i’ the auld days …’ [DH], a black sheep – ‘A blackie, as I watched it grew twa horns as big’s a Kyloe coo’’ [TD].

Black Jimmie’s (blawk-jii-meez) n. popular name for a tailor’s shop in Denholm in the late 19th century.

Black Jock (blawk-jok) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

black keel (blawk-keel) n., arch. plumbago, graphite – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel’’ [JAHM].

the Black Laird (thun-blawk-lárd) n. nickname for James Ormiston.

Black Law (blawk-law) n. hill about 10 miles east of Hawick, just south of the Dunion, and east of Bedrule, reaching 338 m and having a mast on top. There is a linear earthwork (not necessarily of great antiquity) running across the north side of the hill, which probably once joined the top of Knowesouth Burn with Greypeel Burn, hence marking a boundary extending from the Jed to the Teviot. Note that there are several other ‘Black Laws’ in the Borders and further afield.

Blacklee (blawk-lee) n. cottages south of Hobkirk, between Forkins and Cleuch Head. It was the location of a blacksmith’s in the 19th and early 20th centuries and also a saw mill in the 19th century. This is essentially the same place as Blackcleughmooth and is now marked ‘Blacklee Cottages’ on the Ordnance Survey map. The hill there was called ‘Blackknowe’. The farmhouse there was near to the gate of Wolfelee and was last lived in by the Taylors (also spelled ‘Blackley’).

Blacklee Brae (blawk-lee-brai) n. former name for the road going uphill from Forkins and Blacklee Cottages to Cleuch Head. The main road from Hawick to Newcastle used to go this way before the early 1800s.

Blackleemooth (blawk-lee-mooth) n. Blackleemouth, former name for the area called ‘Blackley’ in Hobkirk Parish where there was once a blacksmiths. It is unclear if it was exactly the same place as Blackcleughmooth, which was certainly nearby. William Elphinstone lived there in 1637 when it is recorded as ‘Blacklyemouth’ and he is alias ‘Steytheveyage’ (possibly a variant of Stanedge). William Shiel was ‘cottar’ there in 1694, with George Turnbull, Agnes ‘Dax’ and Margaret Paterson also residents. James Adamson was there in 1786. It incorporated part of the former farm of Unthank around the early 19th century. The smiddy was originally at Unthank, then moved to Forkins, only moving over to Blacklee around 1850. George Rutherford was joiner there in 1851. The small thatched cottage there was home to the Renwick family in the 18th and 19th century. The Pows were blacksmiths there in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Blacklynamouth’ in 1637, ‘Blackleemouth’ and ‘Blacklimouth’ in 1694, ‘Blacklemouth’ in 1709, probably the place transcribed ‘Blackleesmont in ye water Roule’ in Hawick Session records of 1725 and ‘Blacklynamouth’ in 1786).

Blacklock (blawk-lok) n. John of Leahaugh (1772–1837) born in Westerkirk, son of John and Janet Manderson. He was owner of Leahaugh near Newcastleton, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Margaret Scott and their children were: Janet (b.1807); Walter (b.1808); Hannah (b.1812); Margaret (b.1815); and Agnes (b.1817). William (18th C.) resident of Nether Tofts in Kirkton Parish. He married Peggy Scott in 1787 and their children included: Betty (b.1788); Peggy (b.1790); and Isabel (b.1792).

Black Ludge (blawk-luj, -loj) n. name sometimes used for the lodge house for Stobs estate, situated just to the right of the B6399, at the bend in the road nearest to Stobs House. The gate of the old estate is there.

blackmail (blawk-mail) n., arch. literally ‘black rent’, the illegal rent paid to a riever to buy protection – ‘Gae seek your succour frae Martin Elliot. For succour ye’s get nane frae me, Gae seek your succour where ye paid blackmail, For man, ye ne’er paid money to me’ [T] (this gave rise to the modern use of the word).

Blackmoorhaugh (blawk-mewr-hawch) n. former lands in Rulewater, lying to the west of Templehall and Brewlands, and described in a bounding charter of 1567. It is described as extending to Wauchopbank (‘Blakmuirhauch’ in 1567 and ‘Blakmuirhawch’ in 1604).

blackneb (blawk-neb) n., arch. a person having anti-Government political views, a closet revolutionary, particularly used as a derogatory term for a person refusing to volunteer against France in the years before and immediately after 1800. They wanted every man to be equal, and a fair division of wealth, and were essentially early socialists. The term might be applied to those with views such as Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s, and was usually a term of contempt. Hawick meetings of like-minded people were often held in the Subscription Rooms in the early 19th century. Opponents claimed that they had all laid a claim to the estate that would be theirs when the lands were redistributed, and that 2 of them fought over a claim on Midshiels – ‘...a party of extreme politicians known by the name of ‘blacknebs’, who ardently desired the spread of Revolutionary principles ...’ [AM].

Blacknowe (blawk-nowe) n. former name for the hill at Blacklee near Hobkirk. Several ancient burial urns were dug up there in the 19th century. They wanted every man to be equal, and a fair division of wealth, and were essentially early socialists. The term might be applied to those with views such as Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s, and was usually a term of contempt. Hawick meetings of like-minded people were often held in the Subscription Rooms in the early 19th century. Opponents claimed that they had all laid a claim to the estate that would be theirs when the lands were redistributed, and that 2 of them fought over a claim on Midshiels – ‘...a party of extreme politicians known by the name of ‘blacknebs’, who ardently desired the spread of Revolutionary principles ...’ [AM].

Black Paling (blawk-palin) n. popular name for the lane running from Bath Street to Albert place, after the black railings that were once there. The official name is ‘Blackpaling Lane’. The palings on the Wilson & Glenny’s side were removed after the 1959 fire, with a wide Black Pool (blawk-pool) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, precise location unknown. It is mentioned as part of the boundary description for the lands of Ringwood, which were granted to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. The description is fairly vague, but the suggestion is it was a pool in the Teviot, between the modern villages of Newmill and Teviothead; it is not impossible it is the same as the Horse Pool. Probably the same lands are referred to in a 1450 ‘letter of reversion’ from Walter, son of Andrew Ker of Altonburn to William Douglas of Cavers. They were at that time worth £40. There was also a charter in the same year in which Douglas of Cavers granted Blackpool to Walter Ker, who appears to have been his nephew or grandson. The lands were held for one penny, payable at Christmas if asked. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Blakbull’ in the confirming charter for the lands of Cavers in 1511. It is probably the ‘Blakbull’ listed as part of the estate of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Elliott from his half sisters in about 1608. It is still ‘Blackbull’ in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and transcribed ‘Blackhall’ when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698 (it is ‘Blachapol’ in the 1160s and ‘Blackpole’ in 1450).

the Black Pool (thu-blawk-pool) n. dark pool in the Tweed Burn, to the south-east of Newcastle.

Black Quarries (blawk-kwaw-reez) n. former quarries reached via a track off the top off Wellogate Brae, behind the Braid Road, and near Target Pond. The basaltic rock found here has been suggested to be part of the Acklington Dyke, a huge geological feature spewed out from the volcanoes around Mull about 61–55 million years ago.

Blacksidelees (blawk-sid-leez) n. former farmstead near Mangerton. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is part of the farm of Mangerton, but it is not clear which part. This could be associated with the ‘Blackstone lee’ where it is described in an English letter of 1596 that John Elliot of Copshaw had built a tower. It is also possible that it is the same as ‘Baxtonlees’ and Peel.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in the Borthwick valley which joins the Hoscoat Burn just below Girnwood Linn.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in southern Castleton Parish, which joins the Tinnis Burn. On its banks are the remains of a small township, including 5 buildings, a possible corn-drying kiln, and several enclosures.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in the upper waters of Liddesdale. It runs southwards to join the Liddel, close to the remains of Hudshouse, to the north of Dinlabyre. The woods there were formerly Black Sike Plantations.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, joining the Liddel on the north side of the valley, just upstream from Dinlabyre Bridge. A plantation there was formerly known as Blackisike Plantin.

Black Sike (blawk-sik) n. short stream in Liddesdale, running into the Ralton Burn just above Raltongside.

black squad (blawk-skawwd) n. in a knitwear factory, those who get the dirtiest, specifically a term applied to the engineers and mechanics.

Blackstock (blawk-stok) n. Rev. Robert (1827–88) born in Kirkmichael, Dumfriesshire, son of Peter and Margaret Oughterson, he was educated at Edinburgh University. He was schoolmaster at Brydekirk, was licensed to preach by Lochmaben Presbytery in 1853 and ordained as minister at Ladhope in 1858. He was translated to Lilliesleaf in 1881. In 1866 he married Joanna (who died in 1916), daughter of Robert Hall (a Galashiels builder) and Flora Sanderson. Their children were Flora Agnes, Margaret Josephine Oughterson (married Thomas Ovens of Galashiels), Joanna Hall, Christian Patricia (married John Crawford), Agnes Catherine Hall and Robert Patrick Hall (of Eskbank). He wrote ‘Sermons Against Swearing’ (1872), ‘The Principles and Advantages of a National Church’ (1879), ‘Voluntaryism and Establishment’ (1879) and ‘Memorial Sermon for William Roberts of Netherby’ (1879).

black sugar-witter (blawk-shoo-gur-wi’-ur) n., arch. liquorice juice – ‘Blackschoogir-waeter = Spanish liquorice (‘black sugar’) dissolved in a bottle of water. The solution was often bartered by the children thus: – ‘Black shoogir-waeter, a paep a sook!’ [ECS] (sometimes called ‘black witter’; see also sugarallie witter).
Black Tarras

Black Tarras (blawk-ta-ris) n. another name for Tarras Moss. The lands there were made up of the farms of Lodgegill and Cooms. There were Elliots of Black Tarras in the 17th century (it was ‘Blak terres’ in 1541).

the Black Toor (thu-blawk-toor, -tow-ur) n. name sometimes used for Drumlanrig’s Tower.

Black Wat (blawk-waw’) n. nickname of Walter Scott, Cornet in 1765.

Blackwudhill (blawk-wud-hil) n. Blackwood Hill, hill to the east of the Ninestane Rig. On the western side, near the Roughley Burn are the remains of a settlement. This could be the ‘Blacwd’ listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale in the ‘Foresta’ section, with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence.

blade (błād) n., arch., poet. a leaf of cabbage, lettuce, rhubarb, dock, etc., applied figuratively to a person – ‘But be ye ploughman, be ye peer, Ye are a funny blade, I swear’ [BS], ‘Lament him, ilka heartie maid, Mourn for him, every canty blade’ [JoHa], ‘The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade’ [RDW], v., arch. to strip a large-leaved plant.

blae (blă) adj., arch., poet. dark blue, bluish-purple, discoloured through cold – ‘They pass’d the muir of berries blae, The stone cross on the lee; They reach’d the green, the bonny brae, Beneath the birchen tree’ [JL], ‘…Instead of poortith, cauld and blae, The curse o’ barley-bree’ [DA], ‘And the sheep were sair wabbit afore the lee; They reach’d the green, the bonny brae, Beneath the birchen tree’ [JL], ‘…'

blaeberry (blā-be-ree) n., arch. fruit of the bilberry, European blueberry (Vaccinium myrtillus) – ‘Sine off we’d lie tae Minto Woods For blaebberries and slaes’ [WL], ‘…Under the haufblin stare O’ blaebberries; the universe Starred wi’ un-numbered galaxies O’ tormentil’ [DH], ‘First of all, it was a boyhood hill, with racing cloud-shadows and blaebberries and the crying of whaups’ [DH].

Blaeberry Plantin (blā-be-ree-plawn’-in) n. plantation south of Wollrig farm. To the east there are remains of an enclosure and traces of old cultivation.

Blaeu’s map (blawz-map) n. map of Teviotdale published by Dutch cartographer in Joan Blaeu (c.1599–1673) in 1654 as part of his ‘Theatrum Orbis Terrarum’, which was the most expensive book money could buy in the late 17th century. Although still crude, this is probably the first useful map of the area. There are also maps of nearby regions, including Ewesdale and Liddesdale. The Scottish maps published by Blaeu were based mainly on the manuscript maps of Timothy Pont (c.1560–c.1614), which were probably made within a few years of 1590. Thus the map refers to the places of about 60 years earlier than the publication date. Only one small draft section of Pont’s mapping of Teviotdale survives.

blaewort (blā-wur’) n., poet. the bluebell, Campanula rotundifolia, sometimes also the bluebottle – ‘Though the roses on their cheek Turn like the blaewort flower’ [JT].

blaff (blawf) n., arch. an explosion – ‘The gun gaed off wi’ a blaff’ [GW].

blaikent (blā-kin’) adj., arch. bleached, made pale, turned yellow by the Sun – ‘Grass maun be blaekent ere it can be hay’ [JoHa], turned back to its normal colour (of skin) after a sore, withered by frost – ‘The tatae shaws are a’ blaiken’t’ [GW].

Blaikie (blā-kee) n. Francis of Hermiston (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from or how long he owned these local lands. Robert Moffat was also an owner of part of Hermiston at the same time. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included Robert (b.1786). The witnesses were Weaver Charles Scott and hosier Robert Scott (who were probably related to his wife). George (1785/6–1849) saddler at 3 Tower Knowe. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a saddler and harness maker on the High Street. In 1837 he was listed on the Tower Knowe. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1861, aged 74. Their sons were: Robert (b.1814), who spent many years in Newcastle; William (b.1817), also a saddler; George, coal merchant; Thomas, corn dealer; and John, who emigrated to Australia. They also had one daughter, Jessie, who married William Inglis. His widow Isabella was listed as ‘Annuitant’ in 1851. Bailie George (1820/1–97) 3rd son of saddler George. He was a Town Councillor and Bailie of the 1800s. He learned his father’s saddlery trade, then became a tin-smith and ironmonger. His premises were at 2 Tower Knowe (later Turnbull the grocer’s), then 46 and finally 67 High Street (which he sold to the Co-op, to become their drapery store). In 1851 he was living on Backdamgate and in 1861 was at 2 Tower Knowe, employing 5 people, with his wife also keeping a ‘Temperance Coffee house’. He was recorded as an ironmonger and a tin-plate worker at Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory, and ‘George Blaikie & Son’ was listed as a saddler there. In 1869 he commenced as a coal agent, along with his son George, succeeding to the business of his son-in-law George Jobson. This grew to become the most extensive coal dealers in town, Messrs. George Blaikie & Co. Although said to be of a quiet disposition, he served as Town Councillor for 12 years, including several years as a Magistrate. He was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish Kirk who left along with the minister during the Disruption of 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. He became the first Treasurer of the new church, also serving as Session Clerk 1861–66 and again 1874–89. He was superintendent of the Sunday School at Hawick Parish Kirk, carrying on this task at Hawick Free Kirk after the Disruption, and continuing until 1889 (about 60 years in total). On his retirement from church activity he was presented with his portrait, which still exists.

In 1843 he married Margaret Briggs Dryden, who came from Ewesdale and died in 1891, aged 73. Their children were: Jane Dryden (or ‘Jeanie’, b.1844), who married George Jobson; George (b.1846), also a coal merchant; John Wallace (b.1851), an ironmonger; and Alexander Brown (b.1856). George (1846–86) son of coal merchant George. He was a partner with his father, but pre-deceased him. He lived at Bridge House. He married Isabella Ward, who died in 1922, aged 72. Their daughter Margaret married Charles William Scott. George H. (d.1938) grandson of coal merchant George, he wrote the poem ‘Our Borderland’, dedicated to the Callants’ Club. He held several offices in St. George’s Kirk.

Hector (18th C.) ferryman before the opening of the Teviot Bridge in 1741, taking passengers across the Coble when it was not fordable. He lived at the foot of what was known as Blaikie’s Brae. In 1751 he is recorded at ‘Boathouse’ in Wilton Parish. He may have been a witness to a baptism for cooper John Miller in 1757. In 1761 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Nichol and Janet Blaikie (who was probably related, perhaps his sister). Probably the same Hector (although possibly his son) was listed in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, valued at £9. In 1791 (along with Pater) he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, resident of Roadside in Wilton. He was also recorded at Roadside on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was still listed as owner of ‘Part of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), with the same lands later owned by David Hall. He married Agnes Scott in 1747 and their children included: Walter (b.1751); Patrick (b.1753); and Robert (b.1755).

The witnesses in 1751 were Walter Turnbull and Andrew Irvine. Hector (b.c.1780) labourer in Wilton Parish, surely descended from the earlier Hector who gave his name to Blaikie’s Brae. He is recorded at Roadhead among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at Howdenburn in 1840. He is a ‘Road man’ at Howdenburn on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Leggt in Wilton in 1824. Their children included Robert (b.1822). Henry (16th/17th C.) notary public who wrote the bonds in 1599 (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘Bleak in 1687 when he had an unnamed child baptised in Hawick Parish. His wife was Elspeth Scott and the witnesses were Walter Scott of Goldielands and William Scott, apothecary, who may have been close relatives of his wife. His son Walter was born in 1692. He could be the James ‘Bleackie’ who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish in 1680 and 1686 for John Sanderson and Margaret ‘Bleakie’ (who could have been his sister). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes ‘Hitoun’, ‘Heuton’ or ‘Helen’ in Melrose in 1705. He was living at Burnfoot in 1721 and ‘Calfot’ (perhaps in Melrose Parish) in 1724. The couple had a daughter Janet (b.1707) who in 1730 married John Oliver in Oxnam Parish; their descendants emigrated to Canada in about 1840, settling in the area of Galt, Ontario. Other children included: Agnes (b.1712); James (b.1713); Agnes (b.1721); and Isabel (b.1724). The witnesses in 1721 were William and James Scott and in 1724 were John Scott and Walter Scott. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Falnash. He married Margaret Henderson. Their son Robert was born in 1726. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Langlands. He paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish in 1789. He is probably the ‘James Blake in Hawik’ who paid the tax in 1791 and who was also listed at Pathhead in Wilton as ‘James Blaky’. Additionally, in 1791 he witnessed a baptism for William Dalgleish, resident of Roadside in Wilton. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: Peter (b.1760); James (b.1762); Patrick (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); Hector (b.1767); Robert (b.1770); Janet (b.1771); Robert (again, b.1773); Janet
Blaikie's Brae

(again, b.1775); and Agnes (b.1777). The witnesses in 1770 was Charles and Walter Scott. Perhaps the same James was recorded as a stockingmaker at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but his name does not appear in the 1840 list. Robert, stockingmaker at Roadside in 1840, may have been his son. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Anne Wood and their son James was baptised in 1810. John (16th C.) witness to a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Johanne Blaike’. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Roberton Parishes. He married Catherine (or ‘Kathren’) Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1674), baptised in Hawick; and Helen (b.1686), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1674 were Walter Grieve and Adam Laidlaw (probably related to his wife) and in 1686 were Thomas Laidlaw (also probably related to his wife) and a Scott (with no forename given). His name appears to be written ‘Bleak’, but it seems likely he was related to James and Margaret Blaikie, who are recorded in the same area at that time. John Wallace (1851–99) son of George and Margaret Dryden. He was an ironmonger in Hawick. He married Isabella Leyden Scott, who died in 1912. Patrick (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Burnhead in 1752. He married Margaret Lowrie and their children included: James (b.1739); Agnes (b.1745); and Patrick (b.1752). The witnesses in 1752 were Robert and James Scott. He is probably the ‘Peter’ who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, resident of Roadside in Wilton. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1722 he is recorded at Todshaw when his son Hector was baptised. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Hector (b.1779); Agnes (b.1783); George (b.1785); Margaret (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); Robert (b.1792); Peter (b.1795); and Joseph (b.1797). He is probably the deceased stockingmaker Robert whose son George died in Hawick in 1815. Robert (18th C.) house servant recorded at Midshiels in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. He was probably related to Samuel, who was also a servant with Douglas. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be related to the Robert (1720/1-81) who is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, along with his wife Janet Scott, and daughter Elizabeth. Samuel (18th C.) postilion at Midshiels in 1778, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. He is probably the same man recorded as Samuel ‘Sibbald’ in 1779, making it unclear which surname is correct. Thomas (d.bef. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Hardie in 1772 and their children included Isabel (b.1773). The death of his widow Agnes was recorded in 1816. Thomas (b.1825/6) corn dealer in Hawick, he was son of saddler George and Isabella Scott. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is recorded as a corn dealer on ‘Market pl’. In 1851 he was at ‘Marketplace’ with his mother, brother Robert and sister Jessie. In 1861 he was living with his mother and sister Janet at 3 Tower Knowe. William (17th C.) recorded as cottar at Ruletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Blaicke’. William (1816/7–59) son of saddler George and brother of coal merchant George. He was a saddler himself in Hawick. He was one of the first deacons of Hawick Free Kirk, from 1844. He married Margaret Veitch, who died in Manchester in 1897, aged 80. Their children included William Veitch and George Veitch. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (also formerly ‘Blackie’, ‘Blaky’, ‘Bleakie’, ‘Bleckie’, etc.; cf. Blake).

Blaikie’s (blā-keez) n. saddlery shop at the Tower Knowe, which also had a hostelry in the cellar.

Blaikie’s Acre (blā-keez-ā-kur) n. former name for lands in the East Mains of Hawick, i.e. possibly around Weensland. This is referred to as ‘acram terre vocatam Blakatis ayker’ in a 1557 charter for the Trinitylands. The lands were owned by Trinity Collegiate Church and leased to William Scott. In 1565/6 there was another lease to William Scott and his son Robert, the lands being there described as ‘Blacatis-aiker, in lie Eist-manis’. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Ralps aicker’ in 1692 (it is possible this is ‘Blake’s Acre’ or something else, since the origin of the name is unknown).

Blaikie’s Brae (blā-keez-brā) n. name used since the 18th century for the road from the Coble pool up to Sunnyhill, now called Roadhead. Also used for the road along Sunnyhill to the Dean. Until about 1815 it was part of the main road to the Borthwick. Named after Hector Blaikie, who stayed there, and was the Coble ferryman at the bottom.
Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel

Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel (bla-keez-tem-pu-rins-ho-tel) n. late 19th century, where ??.

Blair (blār) n., arch. a scar or blemish, mark left by a sore.

Blain (blān) n. James Alexander Hutchison (1815–98) born on the day of Waterloo at Maybole in Ayrshire, he came to Hawick to teach in 1846 and became Headmaster of Wilton Public School. He wrote some poetry and referred to his house as ‘Blainville’. His wife was Mary W., and their children included William C., Margaret and Martha H. He was buried in Wilton Church-yard, although when the road was widened his daughters moved his headstone to the garden at Blainville (also written ‘Blane’).

Blaine (blān) n. Thomas J.S. (19th/20th C.) chemist and druggist in Hawick, based at 5 High Street. He specialised in the manufacture of mineral waters, the manufacturing premises being on Commercial Road.

blair see blare

Blair (blār) n. Hugh of that Ilk (d.bef. 1357) probably son of Roger, he held the lands of Blair in Ayrshire. According to ‘Robertson’s Index’, during the reign of David II he had a charter ‘of the forfaultrie of Eustace Lorane in generall’. This probably included the lands of Harwood in Roxburghshire, which his son had confirmed to him a little later. Lorraine probably forfeited the lands for supporting the English side, but the family regained them at some point within the next century. James of that Ilk (d.1375) son of Hugh. He is recorded in 1374 when he gained the lands that had been forfeited by Eustace Lorraine and had previously been granted to his father. This certainly included Coshogle in Dumfriesshire (according to a charter of 1374), but also ‘Heroud’ (i.e. Harwood in Rulewater) and other lands in Roxburghshire and Ayrshire. He was probably succeeded by a son who was also James. James of that Ilk (14th C.) son of James and probably bother of Sir John, progenitor of the Blairs of Adamton. In 1375 he had a charter for the lands of Coshogle in Dumfriesshire and Harwood in Roxburghshire, which had been granted to his father after being forfeited by Eustace Lorraine. However, the Lorraines probably recovered their lands of Harwood soon after (and certainly before the mid-15th century), and hence it is unclear if he ever had much local influence. He was succeeded by a son who seems to have been called both David and Hugh. James (15th/16th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese who notarised a sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus in 1499. Possibly the same ‘notar publik’ was among the witnesses for the 1500 letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers and wrote the instrument of sasine in 1500 for Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme etc. He may be the same as the James of Glasgow Diocese who was clerk for sasines of Synton in 1508 and 1513 and witness to Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. In 1507/8 he was the notary for the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’, drawn up between Murray of Falahill and Scott of Whitchesters. In 1508 he was notary for the sasine giving Adam Hepburn the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands. In 1511/2 he was notary for the sasine for the Barony of Hawick. He may be the same as the as the man with lands in Hawick who is mentioned in the 1530s. James (16th C.) named in the Charter of 1537 as having 1 ‘particale’ on the north side and half a ‘particale’ on the south side of Hawick. He had some special status, since some other Burgesses were tenants of his. His heirs were to pay one penny Scots in ‘blench farm’ at the feast of Pentecost and to provide a lamp of burning oil before the parish church of Hawick at high mass and vespers, on all holy days, for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, the founders of the lamp. He was probably the clerk of Glasgow Diocese on a Feu-Rule sasine of 1531 (for the Lorraines of Harwood) and who was notary in a Jedburgh document of 1533 relating to Longnewton. It is possible that he was descended from the Blairs of that Ilk of Perthshire. Rev. James (1797–1859) preacher from the Baptist Union born near Dunfermline. He preached at Saltcoats and Kilwinning, Ayr, Dunfermline and elsewhere. On his Borders preaching tour of 1844 he arrived in Hawick on Friday June 7th, and remarked that ‘a heavy rain, and the tumultuous excitement of the people with a yearly amusement called the Common Riding, prevented the possibility of any good being done, as multitudes were in a state of beastly intoxication’; however, he preached many times in the following week. He visited Hawick in 1844, when he baptised George Niven and again in 1845 when 5 people were baptised, the baptisms taking place in the mill dam in S Pittrig Crescent. These events helped inspire the local Baptist congregation. John (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1815. Thomas (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1472 when Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church (Edinburgh) brought an action against him for withholding the 5 merks of ‘mails’ owed to him for the lands ‘pertenying to the Kirk of Sowtrie’ (Soutra, i.e. the ‘Trinitylands’). He is described as ‘dwelling in Hawick’ in 1471. Probably the same Thomas is deceased in 1484 when John Waugh sold a ‘tenement’ to Robert, son of David Scott of Branzholme, which is described as being in the south part of Hawick, north of his own lands. Probably the same ‘Thomam de Blar’ was on the 1450 ‘retour’ for William Douglas inheriting his father’s Barony of Hawick. And in 1452 he was ‘Thoma de Blar, prefate wille de Hawik balliuis’ when he witnessed the sasine for the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas; he was thus an early Bailie of Hawick. In 1455 he was ‘Thomas de Blar’ when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and in 1456 he was listed as a Burgess on a related document. He was probably related to the James who is listed in the 1537 charter. Rev. Thomas (c.1651–1736) minister of Coldstream, where he was translated from Tynninghame in 1686. He was deprived in 1689 for being an Episcopalian. He was afterwards responsible for more ‘irregular’ baptisms and marriages than any other clergyman in the Borders. This included a marriage between John Young and Margaret Clerk mentioned in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1706 and the marriage of James Scott (surgeon in Hawick) and Margaret Scott (sister of the Laird of Burnhead) in 1724. He himself married Christian Elliott, youngest daughter of the Laird of Stobs, and she died in 1729. Their son David is recorded holding a bursary of theology from Kirkcaledy Presbytery in 1692 and 1693. He was appointed to Cornhill and Bradxton in 1728. Captain Ord composed this epitaph: ‘Here lies the Reverend Thomas Blair, A man of worth and merit, Who preached for fifty years and mair, According to the Spirit. He preached off book to shun offence, And, what is still more rare, He never spoke one word of sense – So preached Tammie Blair’. Walter (15th C.) nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when William Croyser was deprived in 1441. However, he never possessed the office, and was in litigation with Patrick Hume, in whose favour he resigned in 1446. William (15th C.) priest of the Glasgow Diocese who wrote the charter in 1452 for William Douglas of Drumlanrig resigning the Barony of Hawick into the hands of the King. He was also notary for an instrument of 1468 involving the Scotts of Buccleuch and the lands of Lempitlaw. It is possible that he was related to the Blairs recorded in Hawick in the 15th and 16th centuries. He may instead have been the William who moved from Linton to ‘Carrall’ about 1469. William, M.D. (19th C.) graduating M.D. from Glasgow University in 1863, he was a doctor in Denholm in the 1860s, also serving the neighbouring parishes.

blait (blaɪt) v., arch. to bleat, make a noise like a lamb – ‘Blait, to cry like a sheep. The Scottish peasantry likewise use blea, and blair [JL] (also blare and bieh).

Blake (blaɪk) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to George, who also subscribed. He also subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’, along with Miss Isabella (perhaps his daughter). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to Archibald. James (17th C.) shepherd at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written ‘Bleack’ and he was surely related to Robert, shepherd at Todshawhill. James (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789. He was listed as a carrier in Hawick, ‘Blaiq’, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1799/1800) farm worker, born in Hawick Parish. In 1841 he was living at Borthwickbrae Cottages, in 1851 was a ploughman living in Denholm and in 1861 was in Ancrum Parish. He married Helen Miller and their children included Margaret, Andrew, Isabel, Jane, Helen, Alexandrina and James. James (b.1824/5) stone mason in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 12 Slitrig Terrace. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary L., Wilhelmina and Thomas. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Dayell and their children included John (b.1670) and Thomas (b.1673). The witnesses in 1673 were Walter Purdom and Francis Simpson. John (b.1812/3–84) from Eskdalemuir, he was a farm worker and later farm steward in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Chisholme Lodge. He also lived at Milston Shankfoot and was listed as a labourer at Deanburnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a farm steward at Gilliestongues in Jedburgh Parish. He married Elizabeth Smith, from Hob Kirk Parish, who died in 1883, aged 75. Their children included: William (1835–55); Peter (b.1837), who died in infancy; Peter Smith (b.1838), who died aged 10; Helen (b.1840); Jane (1843–59); Mary (b.1845); Walter Scott (b.1848), died young; and Mark
Blake-bell

(b.1852), died in infancy. They also adopted Margaret Smith (b.1852/3). He died at Cogsmill and the family are buried in Robertson Cemetery. Robert (17th C.) shepherd at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname is written ‘Bleack’ and he was surely related to James, herd at Castleside. Robert ‘Deef Robbie’ (18th/19th C.) son of shoemaker Thomas (who died in 1816). He could be the Robert (b.1775), son of Thomas and Helen Anderson. Thomas (d.1816) shoemaker in Hawick. He was father of ‘Deef Robbie’, as recorded in the Hawick death register. He could be the Thomas, married to Helen Anderson, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1775. Thomas (18/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1792 he married Betty Porteous, also from Hawick. Their children included: William (b.1795); Margaret (b.1797); and Helen (b.1799). His surname is recorded as ‘Blaik’. He is probably the same Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Thomas, aged about 75, who is a farmer recorded on the Back Row in 1841, along with wife Elizabeth. Thomas (1812–81) son of Robert, who lived at Drumlanrig Place and farmed fields up the Loan, and Margaret Moffat. He married Janet Little, who died in 1891, aged 73. Their children were Margaret, Jane and another Margaret, who all died young, plus Helen, Betty and George (long manager of the Co-op grocery branch). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (c.1795–bef. 1851) thatcher at Wilton. He is recorded at Appletree-hall among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and at Sunnybank in 1840 and 1841. He married Janet Scott and their children were: Archibald (b.1822); William (b.c.1825); Alexander Nivison (b.1827); Walter (b.1831/2); Elizabeth (b.c.1834); Margaret (b.c.1838); and Robert (b.1839/40). His children were born in Robertson, Cavers and Wilton Parishes. In 1851 his widow and 3 sons were living at ‘Burn row No. 11’ in Wilton Dean. William see William Black. William (18th/19th C.) listed along with Robert Hardy and John Hardie as a carrier in Hawick, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is given as ‘Blaiik’, and so it is possible this is ‘Blaikie’ or ‘Black’. William (b.c.1765) shoemaker of the Midrow, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His name occurs as ‘Bleak’. In 1841 he was a shoemaker living on his own on the Back Row (probably around the modern 10 Drumlanrig Place). He was possibly related to Thomas, who lived a few doors away William (b.1810/1) born in Robertson Parish, he was shepherd at Alton in Wilton in 1851 and recorded there as farmer in 1868. His wife was Mary and their children included William, John, Walter, Agnes and Thomas (also written ‘Bleak’ and variants; see also Blaikie and Black, with which it was formerly easy to confuse).

Blake-bell (blak-bel) n. another name for Blakebillend.

Blakebillend (bläk-bil-end) n. ridge overlooking the Slitrig near Shankend, containing one of the largest ancient fortified homesteads in the Slitrig valley. The site can be approached using an old military track from the viaduct. The ridge is north-east of Burnt Craig and has a roughly triangular earthwork enclosing an area of more than 3 acres, containing 5 hut circles. Part of the ramparts have been erased by cultivation and the interior was used as a mortar site during military training at Stobs Camp. A ‘beehive quern’ found there is in the Museum. There are linear earthworks extending to the north-west, north and south-west. On the north-west side there are signs of cord rig. There is also a cairn just to the south-west, where a flagpole was erected in the 20th century. On the south-west slope there are 5 water-filled hollows, probably firing positions for large calibre guns, as well as a few buildings associated with the target range. The lands are easily confused with the nearby Blackpool, probably listed as ‘Blakbull’ (along with others in southern Cavers Parish) in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. Both ‘Blackpool’ and ‘Blackbill’ are listed (along with Caveling) among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott of Stobs in 1592, showing that they were different places.

Blakeden (bläk-den) n. former place name in the upper Ale valley, recorded in the charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It may have been between Whitslade and Alemoor, and is referred to as the ‘ortum de Blakeden’ (i.e. the ‘rise’ or ‘rising’). It is unclear where this may be, but the Bleakhill Burn would be one possibility (pronunciation is also uncertain).

Blakelaw (bläk-law) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Nether Whisgills. Along with William Armstrong, he was accused in 1698 of travelling with laden horses on the Sabbath (also written ‘Blaiklaw’).

Blazyca (bla-ee-ku) n. George (1952–2005) born in Hawick, he was son of Jerzy (‘George’) and Maria Grilli, who had settled in Scotland in 1946. His father was a signaller with Polish forces in Italy and was demobbed at Stobs Camp. He was educated at St. Margaret’s and Hawick High School, where he was noted in debating competitions (under the mentorship of Jock Houston), and started what may have been Scotland’s first underground school magazine, ‘Withered Roots’. He attended Sussex University, where he graduated with a B.Sc. in Maths and Statistics and obtained a D.Phil. with a thesis on the Polish economy. He became Head of Department at Coventry Polytechnic/Greenwich University and became Professor at Paisley University in 1992. There he was founding Director of the Centre for Contemporary European Studies. He was said to have a beautiful writing style and have been an eloquent speaker. He married Wendy in 1975 and their children are Rachel, Anna and Sam.

the Bleach (thu-bleech) n. the Bleaching Green, a common drying green and former bleaching green for linen goods, situated in the West End, south of the Loan. The land was gifted to the town by the Duke of Buccleuch on the occasion of the opening of the Allan Water works in 1865. It was built upon by the new Drumlanrig School in 1961 – ‘Weel can I mind o’ The Bleach and the wild Ballet o’ weshin’s on blawy spring Mondays’ [DH].

The Bleach (thu-bleech) n. poem evoking the lost days of the communal drying green near the Mote, written by David Hill and first published in the Hawick Express in 1961. It is included on the tape ‘Hawick Speaks’ and on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, recited by Madge Elliot.

the Bleachfield (thu-bleech-field) n. once an enclosed area of the Under Haugh used for the public drying of clothes, but let to the Hawick Inkle Company in 1782 for 30 years. The linen tapes were then bleached here. The name continued to be used long into the 1800s, for half a century after the area no longer served this use.

bleachin green (blee-chin-green) n. a place for communal laying out of washing to dry and bleach in the sun, a drying green.

the Bleachin Green (thu-bleechin-green) n. popular name for two areas within Denholm. One is a former field on the southern side of the Loaning, once used for drying clothes and also for grazing, but now a playground. The other was on the right side after crossing the Dean Burn. Some of this survives as a grassy area, but the rest was taken up by the modern road.

the Bleachin Rivulet (thu-blee-chin-ri-view-litl) n. small stream once running from a sluice in the mill lade across the Common Haugh to the Teviot, which can still be seen today joining the river. Townspeople used to be able to dry their clothes to the west of this stream. It was used as a ‘runner’ carrying excess water from the mill.

Blenkhorn

Blenkhorn

Daisy Eva Farrar (1885–1963) adopted daughter of John Farrar and Minnie. She was raised with the family from her first year. Her ‘coming-of-age’ party in 1906 involved over 1,000 guests at Stürches House, with a fireworks display and a huge bonfire on the Heap Hills. Nine months after her father’s death she married Walter Brydon, probably against her father’s wishes. She volunteered to work in a munitions factory during WWI, and her son Jimmy stayed with his grandmother at Stirches. Divorced in 1922, she died in Edinburgh. There is apparently an oil painting of her. Daisy Eva Farrar Blenkhorn Amos was named after her.

John Farrar (1853–1909) born near Thirsk in Yorkshire, he came to Hawick in the mid-1870s as a traveller for Armstrong & Diener. He later went into a partnership as Borthwick & Blenkhorn, then (with his brother-in-law John Richardson) established the tweed manufacturers of Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. at Abbots Mill in Galashiels in 1880, moving to Eastfield Mills in 1893. He was thus a powerful tweed merchant in Hawick in the late 19th century. He became the Managing Director of the Company when it became limited liability in 1898. He lived at the Limes and Northville, before renting Stirches House in 1890, and purchasing the estate, along with Whitehaugh, in 1898. He had Stirches House rebuilt as his residence, and it was sold the Archdiocese of St. Andrews and Edinburgh when he died. He took little part in public life, although he was President of the St. Cuthbert’s Church Club, and he entertained the cast of ‘The Gutterbludes’ at a complementary dinner. He was also a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He married Minnie Richardson, daughter of Robert and brother of John. They had no children of their own, but adopted Daisy Eva. His grave in the Wellogate Cemetery marked is marked with a white celtic cross. Lilian Laurie Farrar Blenkhorn (1912–2002) adopted daughter of Minnie. She came to Hawick as a Belgian refugee about 1915 and was adopted at some point during the War. She moved to ‘New Stirches’ (13 Laveroockbank Terrace, Edinburgh) after the death of her adoptive mother in 1922 and was then raised by her aunt Esther. She married Ian Wilson Hunter and they continued to live at ‘New Stirches’. She made one last return trip to Stirches in 1996. Mina ‘Minnie’ (1852–1922) eldest daughter of Margaret Lawrie and Robert Richardson, she married John Farrar at age 20. They adopted Daisy Eva in 1886, and she also adopted Lilian Laurie. She was associated with a number of local charitable institutions. She died exactly 13 years after her husband.

Blenkhorn Richardson (bleng-khorn-richard-sin) n. Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd., woollen manufacturers of Hawick, formed in 1881 and liquidated in 1975. The original partnership was between John Farrar Blenkhorn and John Richardson (whose sister Blenkhorn married). Their main premises were at Eastfield Mills on Mansfield Road. Minute books and other records covering 1881–1974 are stored at Heriot-Watt University.

Blenkie’s (bleng-kees) n. popular name for Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., particularly their Eastfield tweed mill, which operated from 1881 until 1976. It apparently had the last mill whistle to sound in Hawick. The company was established at Abbots Mill in Galashiels, establishing themselves in Hawick with the opening of the new factory (officially opened in 1883). Blenkie’s became a public limited company in 1898. It downsized following the death of James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1909, with the worsted spinning department sold off in that year. Much of their records are preserved at the heriot-Watt campus in Galashiels.

blent (blen) pp., poet. blended – ‘Twas here my childhood’s days were spent, ‘Twas here my wild ideas were blent’[JTe], ‘Humour and faith well blent thegither To match the master o’ the days’[WL], ‘...Wi’ love an’ hunger strangely blent An’ muckle glee’[WP].

blether (ble-thar) v. to engage in idle chat, blather, prattle – ‘yow per wad blether a day’, ‘Though they rattle anes’ lugs wi’ their bletherin’ noise ... ’[WFC], ‘But dinna keep me bletherin’ here, says Hab’[DH], n. idle chat, foolish talk – ‘oo hed a guid blether’, ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ eer blethers’[JEDM], ‘...whan ma lugs are staaed o throaply blethers an’ ma paap’ o’the-hass is yookin ti let oot some richt, guid, braid lugs are staaed o throaply blethers an ma paap-o’. ‘oo hed a guid blether’, ‘I wish tae guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mei wi’ eer blethers’[JEDM], ‘...whan ma lugs are staaed o throaply blethers an’ ma paap’ o’the-hass is yookin ti let oot some richt, guid, braid Haaick’[ECS], ‘Hei never tried tae hide his views in a blether o’ words’[HEx1921], ‘The crack was guid, no a feckless blether About the chanzy state o’ the weather’[WL], a person who talks idly, a chatterbox – ‘she was an aw’blether’.

Bliburgh (blif-bu-ri) n. William (13th/14th C.) Clerk of the King of England from about 1290. His family was associated with Bliburgh Parish in Suffolk, and probably the Priory that was established there. In 1290 he was mentioned in a letter describing jewels sent by Edward I to Queen Margaret, and again in 1291 in regard to expenses connected with English affairs in Scotland. He was appointed as the Parson of Cavers (in Glasgow Diocese) from 1296/7. He was there recorded as ‘Willlemus de Biliburgh’ and granted this right from Alexander Baliol, which now lay in the hands of the King. However, it is unlikely if he ever played any role in the Parish. In 1305 he had a letter of protection for ‘going beyond the seas’. In 1306 a writ from Edward I requests that Eymer de Valence try to maintain his rights to the church of Cavers. And in 1310 he was given permission to crenelate his house in Kent.

Blinkbonny (blingk-bo-nee) n. farm about a mile south-east of Newcastlestout, in Castleton Parish. It is possible that it corresponds to the farmstead previously called ‘Spoutgills’. William Oliver was there in 1770. ‘Cuillie Jock’ was an old weaver there in the early 19th century and Betty Linton was the tenant around the same time. Labourer Robert Beattie and his family lived there in 1841. John Elliot was shepherd there in at least 1851 to 1861. The nearby Blinkbonny Height reaches 265 m (864 ft) (the name may not be very old and may have been transplanted from elsewhere; it is ‘Blinkbony’ in the 1841 census; there are places of the same name near Eckford, Nenthorn in Berwickshire and Newlands in Peeblesshire).

blind (blind) adj., v. blind – ‘er ee blind or what?’, ‘The dog hed a blinnd man leedin be a carbuncle’ [ECS] (note pronunciation).

Blinndhaugh (blind-hawd) n. Blindhaugh, former lands near Blindhaugh Burn. The flat land just west of where Fanns Burn meets Blindhaugh Burn is called Blind Haugh. George Scott of Blindhaugh is recorded in the 1530s and 40s and signed a bond with other Scotts in 1550. In 1544 he gave the liferent of the steading of Blindhaugh to his wife, Margaret Turnbull, as well as the ‘hail towr of blyndhauch fra the blyndhaich burn est to the vatter of all est and soucht lyand’; at the same time his son Walter was assigned ‘bradle a pendikil of blynndhauch fra the blyndhauch burn vost to the march … eschynesyd with the pertinenches’ (i.e. Broadlee, a pendicle of Blindhaugh). The superiority was then held by the Bishop of Glasgow. Thomas Shortreed and James Vogan were there in 1581, when the liferent was transferred from Isobel Turnbull, widow of John Scott in Blindhaugh to her son Walter Scott. Walter Scott of Blindhaugh signed the Scott clan bond in 1589 and Walter Scott of Woll had a charter for the lands in 1609 (it is ‘Blyndhauch’ in 1538, ‘Blyndhauch’ in 1544, ‘Blyndhaucht’ in 1561, ‘Blynndhaucht’ in 1580 and ‘Blyndhaucht’ in 1581).

Blindhaugh Burn (blind-hawch-burn) n. Blindhaugh Burn, stream which rises near Akermoor Loch and runs into the Woll Burn. It is surely the ‘rivulet of Akermere’ listed in a charter of about 1170, granting lands to Orm of Ashkirk.

Bliss (blis) n. former lands in the Ewes valley, between the A7 and the river, just to the south of Wrae. It is listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale in about 1610. It was listed in 1670 among lands whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The lands are also listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (it is written 'Bliss' and 'Blisse' in 1663 and 'Blisses in Ewesdale' in 1667; not to be confused with Bush

Bloody Burn (blu-dee-burn) n. stream in Branxholme Glen, rising to the north-west of the Castle, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map. It may also be another name used for the Branxholme Burn (the origin of the name is unknown).

the Bloody Bush (thu-blu-dee-bush) n. name of a former path over Larriston Fells from Lidddesdale into Northumberland, roughly mid-way between Newcastle and Kielder. It is now marked by a pillar on the Scotland/England Border (delineated there by the edge of Kielder Forest) beside what is now a bike and hiking trail, but was once a more major route over the Border.
The road was upgraded by Sir John Swinburne around 1830 and used to transport coal northwards. The name is said to refer to a former skirmish at the site, traditionally the slaughter of a party of Northumbrians who were resting in a thicket on their way home after a foray into Liddesdale. However, the stone was probably erected at the time of the toll road. There is also the remains of a former toll-house nearby.

the Round Close in the 19th century, also known as the Royal Oak.

blue bonnet (bloo-bo-ni') n., arch. a flat-topped cap, generally made of coarse blue cloth, worn locally by most men around the middle of the 18th century, and gradually going out of fashion thereafter. The hat was considered to have special properties to ward off the influence of fairies and other malevolent spirits – ‘This, in for-er times, in Teviotdale at least, was used as a charm, especially for warding off the evil influce of the fairies'[JoJ], ‘An unchristened child was considered as in the most imminent danger, should the mother, while on the straw, neglect the precaution of having the blue bonnet worn by her husband constantly beside her. When a cow happened to be seized with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies), she was said to be elf-shot, and it was reckoned as blue cloth

much as her life was worth not to ‘dad her wi’ the blue bonnet’. ‘It’s no wordie a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase when expressing contempt, or alluding to anything not worth the trouble of repairing’ [EM1820] (see also bonnet and bunnet).

blue cloth (bloo-kloth) n. crude form of cloth woven during the developing days of Borders industry, e.g. in Galashiels in the early 19th century. It was also said that the first kind of woollen cloth made in Hawick for the external market was a coarse blue cloth, which was sent to Leeds to be finished. ‘Blue bonnets’, presumably made of such cloth, were once generally worn by men in Teviotdale, the practice ceasing in the latter part of the 18th century.

the Blue Laird (thu-bloo-laird) n. nickname for George Richardson, James Richardson and probably other members of the same family. They may have had a field in the Westend – ‘Black Andra’ and the Birsin’ Badger, Tammy Robertson, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin’ Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell’ [HI].

Blunt (blun’t) n. Matthew (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule. His house and yard ‘in the greine’ are mentioned in the document of 1562 dealing with the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule.

Bluntwood (blun’-wud) n. Bluntwood, lands probably in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. In 1476 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus granted these lands, as well as ‘Dalman’ and ‘the Crouke’, to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. They had previously belonged to David Purdom. In 1541 the lands were said to belong heritably to a later Robert of Redheugh.

blurrin (blu-riin) adj., arch. emitting a mournful sound – ‘Blurin’ bleater blew his drone on high’ [JoHa].

blush (blush) n., arch. a blister caused by chafing, v. to raise a blister by rubbing – ‘A’da naether bumble, brizz, bate, nor blusht-bit ti play the limm an gar iz humple or turn lameter’ [ECS], ‘A’ve blusht ma fit wi walkin’’ [GW].

Blyth (blith) n. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in Cavers whose will is recorded in 1685. Andrew (18th C.) farmer at Nether Tofts in Cavers Parish. He was listed at Nether Tofts on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. He was the uncle of Isabella Scott, who was mother of Dr. John Leyden. He later lost his sight and Nether Tofts was taken over by Leyden’s father, also John. It is said that he was fond of reciting ballads and tales to his young relative.

Sir Charles. C.B.E., B.E.M., ‘Chay’ (1940–) famous Hawick-born yachtsman. Brought up in Crumhaugh Road, he attended Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. He left school at 15 and began working at Lyle & Scott’s, before joining the paratroopers at age 18, becoming a Sergeant 3 years later. In 1966 he rowed the Atlantic with Capt. Ridgeway in a 20 foot dory called ‘English Rose III’; from Cape Cod to the Aran Islands in 92 days. In 1970 he became the first person to sail round the world single-handedly ‘the wrong way’ in the 59 foot ketch ‘British Steel’. Subsequently he has been involved in competing in and then organising many other yacht races. For these achievements he received the B.E.M. and the C.B.E. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1971, as well as having Chay Blyth Place named after him, and in 1997 was knighted for services to sailing. He has written or co-written several books about his adventures, including ‘Fighting Chance’ (1967), ‘Innocent Aboard’ (1970), ‘Impossible Voyage’ (1971), ‘Their is the Glory’ (1974), and ‘Challenge: the official story of the British Steel Challenge’ (1993). He reads ‘The Hill Road to Roberton’ on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). _Dollie_ (16th C.) listed among the tenants and other associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541. Her name appears to be ‘dolle blyt[h]’ and she was probably related to Walter and William, who were also listed. _Esther Faa_ ‘Ettie’ (d.1883) born between 1801 and 1804, second child of Charles, she was the last of the ‘royal’ Faa gypsy family. She lived a travelling life until crowned the Gypsy Queen, succeeding her uncle William Faa. Afterwards she lived in a small cottage in Kirk Yetholm. She visited Hawick about 1866, loaning her crown, royal robe, sword and slippers for temporary show. She married John Rutherford (‘Jethart Jock’) and they had 12 children, including Charles Faa Blyth who returned to Kirk Yetholm to claim the gypsy crown – ‘From hamlet to hamlet the sad tidings sped All over the Border that Esther was dead; In her ‘Castle’ at Kelso stern death laid her down, And took from her Highness both sceptre and crown’ [TCh]. _Francis_ (b.c.1780) farmer up the Loan. He is recorded at about No. 47 on the 1841 census, living with his wife Mary. Andrew, who lived in an adjacent house, could have been his son. _James_ (d.c.1690) smith at Cauldmill. His will is recorded in 1690. _James_ (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. _James_ (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1721 he witnessed a baptism for James Lees at Clarilaw and in 1727 abother for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw. He was living at Clarilaw in 1725. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’) Wight in 1718. Their children included: Margaret (b.1720); Isabel (b.1722); Bessie (b.1725); Mary (b.1727); Bessie (again, b.1732); Christian (b.1735); and Bessie (again, b.1739). The witnesses in 1725 were William and Adam Armstrong. _James_ (b.1801) from Kirkton Parish, son of John and Janet Scott. He was farmer at Borthwickshiel from at least 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1200 acres there, and employed 8 labourers. By 1861 his widow was at Ettrickhill farm. His wife was Helen and their children included William (b.c.1825), James (b.c.1829), Margaret (b.c.1831), Walter (b.c.1833), John (b.c.1835), Thomas (b.c.1838), Elizabeth (b.c.1839), Robert (b.c.1844); and Jane S.P. (b.c.1849). _Janet_ (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694...
Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (b.c.1790) from England, she was a grocer on Silver Street. She was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was there, along with Helen, probably her daughter. John (17th C.) tenant in Cauldmill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was blacksmith at Cauldmill. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the John, married to Bessie Brown, whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1671) and Margaret (b.1673). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant in Heap in 1719 and was living at Silverbuthall in 1723 and Stirches in 1728. In 1723 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Wilson. He married Isobel Laidlaw in 1719, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton; his wife was servant to Thomas Hume in Commonside. Their children included Isobel (b.1720), Andrew (b.1723), Thomas (b.1725) and Helen (b.1728). The witnesses in 1723 were John Scott and John Wilson and in 1728 were Thomas Irvine and James Dryden. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1796 he married Janet ‘Boe’ (i.e. Bowie), from Hobkirck Parish. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scott in 1795/6, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Margaret (b.1796); Isobel (b.1798); Nancy (b.1799); James (b.1801), farmer at Borthwickshiel; Thomas (b.1801), probably twin of James; Andrew (b.1803); Janet (b.1805); John (b.1809); and Betty (b.1811). Dr. John (1815–92) son of William and Janet Walker, he was born in Hawick Parish. He is mentioned in the New Statistical Survey in 1839 in relation to information about the Town, and so had presumably already been there for a few years. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as a physician and a druggist at ‘Slitterick bridge’. In the 1841 census he is recorded as a physician in the same house as Walter Graham, and so he was presumably Dr. Graham’s assistant. He became a Chemistry Professor at the Royal Agricultural College in 1847 and at Queen’s College, Cork, in 1849. He converted to to the dubious practice of homeopathy, becoming Physician at the Dublin Homeopathic Dispensay and edited works of Justus von Liebig. He married Christina Dods Crooks in Paisley in 1845. Their children were Marion Helen, William Frances, Janetta Harriet, Peter Howard, John Graham, Christina Rosa and James Gibson Craig, all born in Dublin. He was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Archaeological Society in 1863. A portrait exists of him. Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Reid he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. In 1771 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Andrew Hunter and in 1772 another baptism for William Douglas at Clarilaw. He is probably the Thomas who married Isabel Reid in 1761, both being from Wilton Parish. Their children included: John (b.1762); Walter (b.1764); Andrew (b.1766); Isabel (b.1767); Thomas (b.1769); John (again, b.1772); Barbara (b.1774); Agnes (b.1777); and Andrew (again, b.1782). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Irvine, who was from Hawick. Thomas (b.1775) son of Thomas and Isabel Reid. He was from the family that was long associated with Cavers estate. It is said that as a boy John Leyden used to spend his holidays with him at Whitriggs. He was living in Minto Parish when his children were baptised. In 1861 he was living with his wife Ann at ‘Whitriggs Cottars House’ and was a former farmer. He is probably the Thomas who was tenant of East Middle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Ann Armstrong and their children included: Joseph (b.1822); Susanah (b.1819); and John (b.1825). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Jean Tait and their children included Jean (b.1802), Thomas (b.1704), Walter (b.1805) and William (b.1811). Thomas (b.1792) born in Wilton Parish, son of Walter and Betty Scott. He was farmer at Nether Tofts and at Whitriggs. He was farmer at Nether Tofts in 1841. In 1851 he farmed 550 acres at Whitriggs and employed 7 labourers, and in 1861 was employing 8 labourers. In later life he lived with his sister Agnes Little and nephew William. He is surely related to the Thomas who was previously farmer at Whitriggs. Thomas (19th C.) great-grandson of Thomas, who was friend to John Leyden. He became tenant farmer of Wolfelee in the late 1800s. He died quite young and his widow ran the farm and remarried to Hawick wood merchant Mr. Robson. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably related to ‘Dolle’ and William, who were also listed. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Tofts, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (16th C.) listed among the tenants and other associates of Douglas of Cavers in 1541. William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William (18th C.) recorded in East Cote in 1772 and as tenant in Little Cote in 1776. He may have been a descendant of the earlier William who lived at Muckle Cote. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, probably included: William (b.1764); Margaret (b.1766); Katherine (b.1768); John (b.1769); Thomas (b.1772); and Janet (b.1776). William (18th C.) ostler in the Tower Inn (recorded as ‘Hostler’), whose child died in 1798. He may be the William whose marriage in Wilton is recorded in 1792. His wife Betty ‘Bowlin’ and his son William both died in 1811. William (b.1824/5) born in Eskdalemuir, he was a shepherd, and then took over the farm of Whitriggs from his uncle Thomas. He was farmer there in the 1860s, and also a registered voter in Cavers Parish. He may also be the William who was farmer at Effledge in 1868 (also formerly written ‘Bleeth’, ‘Blith’, ‘Blyhe’ and ‘Blythe’).

blythe (blith) adj. happy, merry, blithe – ‘Auld and young sae blythe and gay’ [RH], ‘But yin blythe Easter morning I bo’ed to see his stane . . .’ [DH] boardin-hoose (bör-din-hoos) n. room or building where garments were stretched on boards in a knitwear mill, usually before drying. The damp garments were stretched on boards their same shape and size and placed in a ‘klin’ to dry. This method was effectively replaced with the Paris press.

the Board o Trustees (thu-börd-ō-tru-steez) n. the Board of Trustees for the Encouragement of Manufacturers was an organisation set up to encourage Scottish industrial policies, established in 1727. It was also known as the Board of Trustees for Fisheries, Manufactures and Improvements in Scotland. Originally the organisation particularly focused on the linen trade, and in fact its exertions there led to the forming of the British Linen Company and later the British Linen Bank. It was very influential locally in the 18th and early 19th centuries, for example, giving out many grants to help new firms. Within about a year of being founded, the Board had set up 10 wool-sorting stations around Scotland, including one in Hawick, the Board paying salary for wool inspectors, who were responsible for scouring, combing etc. In 1734 it helped support the spinning school that had been set up in Hawick. In the next few decades it gave out several grants to help set up the carpet manufacturers in Hawick, and later it helped provide frames and other items for the fledgling hosiery industry. Until about 1843 the Board gave out many grants for equipment and ‘premiums’ for demonstrating quality of manufacture, many of the Hawick companies of the time benefiting.

body o the kirk (bo-dee-o-thur-kirk) n. the assembled company, any group of people – ‘come an join the body o the kirk’.

the Boer War (thu-bör-wawr) n. war of 1899–1902 between Britain and the descendants of Dutch settlers in South Africa. The rationale for the war was debated at the time and it had a lasting aftermath in the region. Many local men were involved, including Col. John James Scott Chisholme, who died in the first few weeks. A flagpole was erected in the middle of Wilton Lodge Park in June 1902 to mark the declaration of peace in South Africa. It remained there for many years. A memorial statue was built in 1903 in the Park.

the Boer War Memorial (thu-bör-wawr-me-mö-ree-ul) n. memorial in Wilton Lodge Park to local men lost in the South African War, unveiled in 1903 by Lord Roberts, then Commander-in-chief of the British Army. The unveiling ceremony was a huge occasion, with 20 carriages transporting the officials and guests, and a crowd of several thousand, along with 300 Regular and Volunteer troops on parade. Part of the occasion was filmed. Subscriptions for the monument were raised from all over the Borders. It was also referred to as ‘the Patriotic Memorial’. It was designed by John Nicol Scott & Alexander Lorne Campbell, architects of Edinburgh (who also designed the Library), in collaboration with sculptor William Birnie Rhind, A.R.S.A. (and probably not his brother Sir Thomas Duncan Rhind), and consists of a 12 foot high pedestal topped with a figure of a soldier grasping his rifle in readiness, with a machine gun by his feet (and is said to be the first statue anywhere in Britain to depict such a weapon). It is constructed out of Northumberland freestone. A tablet contains the names of 23 local men who fell in South Africa. The cannons that originally flanked the monument were removed for scrap metal in 1940. The statue was broken in a gale in 1974 and repaired. There was a centenary ceremony there in 2003 – ‘Seeventy ear’s a lang time to stand guard, Wonderin what it was for... And only the pipes can say, in lament, How it’s aye the young lost deid we honour: Never a war’ [DH].

bog-bluter (bög-bloo′-ur) n., arch. the bittern (also mossbluiter; once relatively common, this bird has long been absent from the Hawick area).

bogey (bö-gee) n. a child’s homemade cart – ‘...before hurling home their neatly folded bundles up the Black-palings on a bogey’ [BB], ‘...and deliverin milk on a bogey afore schule ...’ [IWL], a small two-wheeled vehicle, buggy – ‘An fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, laarie, caager’s cairt or hurlie cood A airt oot or hear tell-o gaun up Teiot’ [ECS], a wheeled recepticle used for transporting partially finished garments between departments in a mill (also spelled ‘bogie’ and ‘boaggie’; ‘cartie’ and other words are more common elsewhere in Scotland).

Bogfit (bög-fi′) n. Bogfoot, cottage in the Ewes valley, near Brieryshaw. There were Welsches there in 1841.

Boghaa (bög-haw) n. Boghall, farmstead in Castleton Parish, on the Boghall Burn, which runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water near Dinlabyre. Near the head of one branch there is a ruined farmhouse marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Peter Robson was there in 1835.

Boghaa Burn (bög-haw-burn) n. Boghall Burn, stream in Liddesdale, rising on the slopes of Hurklewinter Knowe and running roughly north-west, passing Boghall farmstead to join the Liddel Water at Dinlabyre.

Boghaa Moss (bög-, bög-haw-mos) n. Boghall Moss, marshy area to the south of Groundistone farm and west of the former farmstead of Boghall.

bog-hay (bög-hëi, -hi) n., arch. hay that is obtained from boggy land, balks or road-sides.

bogie see bogey

bogle (bö-gul) n. a spectre, goblin, bugbear, phantom, bogeyman – ‘deh gaun doon that lane, it’s where the bogles bide’, ‘...about supernatural appearances, or what are vulgarly styled bogles ...’ [EM1820], ‘An’ he, like Tam o’ Shanter, Aboot him glowered wi’ care Lest bogles catched him unaware’ [FL], ‘...hotchin wi’ bogles, up and doon the stairs, wee bogles, big bogles, auld and young bogles, Embra bogles, Border bogles, Fife bogles, Festival bogles, aa year and aa-age bogles ...’ [JuH] (also bogle).

bogle boo (bö-gul boo) n., arch. a hobgoblin, terrifying ghost – ‘If a young swankie wi’ his joo, In some dark nook play’d bogle-bo ...’ [CPM], ‘Will ye never close yer een? There’s the bogle boo! Ye dinna’ care a single preen { Ye wee croodlin’ d’oo’ [JT] (also ‘bogle-bo’).

Boglehole Haugh (bö-gul-hól-hawch) n. former name for a haugh in Rulewater, lying above ‘Commonsie Park, shown on a map of 1772 (the name is presumably because a hobgoblin was supposed to inhabit a hole there).

bogle-rad (bö-gul-rawd) adj., arch. afraid of goblins and ghosts – ‘The master being less ‘bogle-rad’ than his servants ... seized the wizard ...’ [EM1820].
bogley (bög-lee) adj., arch. boggy (note that the Scottish National Dictionary give the example of Smith’s ‘boaggly’ for this word, but this is probably incorrect).

boglie (bög-lee) adj. spooky, haunted, eerie – ‘…although the great body of the people laughed at the boglie stories that had frightened their forefathers …’ [RM], ‘…alang bye a boaggly, gloomin planteen, where the whussellin wund gaed soachin throwe’ [ECS] (also boogly).

Bogliebarns (bög-lee-barnz, boog-lee-barnz) n. house that stood on the site of 26–28 Weensland Road, once the only house between the Easter Toll and Weensland (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). Later it was named Brammelhall and demolished in 1902. In the early days of the Common Riding there used to be a horse-back procession out to here before the Friday morning Chase, said to commemorate the march to Hornshole (as the Chase commemorates the return). In the earliest times the Cornet would collect the Flag from the house of the Senior Bailie and then proceed out to Bogliebarns at a canter along with the unmarried men, while the married men left for the Moor. In later times the Cornet and supporters would go out, the Councillors etc. waiting at the end of Union Street on their way round Wilton. The tradition lapsed in the mid-19th century, being revived in 1887, and discontinued again after 1904, since the Bogliebarns had been demolished. It was briefly revived again 1934–36, however. The existence of this tradition supports the idea that the 1514 skirmish took place on the southern side of the Teviot (so in a sense it was at ‘the Trows’ rather than ‘Hornshole’). The main route to Denholm used to pass through the location of Eskdaill Terrace (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) and rejoin near here (possibly named from its spookily isolated position, with the ‘barns’ perhaps associated with the nearby kiln; it is ‘Boogle Barns’ on the 1841 census).

the Bogs (thu-bögz) n. former name for an area perhaps to the west of Clearburn and Kingside Loch, but south of Buccleuch (it is marked ‘the Boggs’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘The Bogs’ on Moll’s map of 1745).

Bogue (bög) n. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as ‘Independent’ in the 1841 census, when she was at about 51 High Street, living in the same house as grocer John Stenhouse. She was probably a widow of the man connected with draper’s Bogue & Henderson listed on Buccleuch Street in 1837. William (1829/30–99) baker in Hawick. He married Euphemia Mathieson, who died in 1914, aged 68. Their children included: Louisa Mathieson (1870–1); and Margaret Hope (1852/3–1916). They are buried in the Wellogate (see also Boag).

Bog Well (bög-wel) n. former name for a spring north-west of Kirkton Hill, near the boundary between Cavers and Kirkton Parishes.

Boig (boig) n. former name for a merkland of land in Cavers Parish that was part of the kirklands of Cavers. It was among the lands inherited by Archibald Douglas from his brother William in 1698. It is unclear where this was located, or whether it is transcribed correctly.

boiled (boild) pp., adj., arch. having an extremely tired-looking face – ‘One whose face is bleared or ‘heavy’-looking (e.g., as a result of insufficient or of unrefreshing sleep) is said to be boiled i the face, boiled-leike, or boiled-lookin’ [ECS].

boilin (boi-lin) n. a quantity required for a single boiled meal (of soup, potatoes etc.) – ‘most farms allowed each employee to take ‘a boiling’ for their own home’ [GM].

boil the pot (boi-ul-thu-po’) v., arch. to make soup – ‘When mother was making broth she said she was ‘boiling the pot’’ [JTu].

Boiston (boi-stin) n. Anthony (1816/7–1861) from England, he was son of John of Kirkley West Gate. He worked as a carrier between Newcastle and Hawick. In the 1851 census he was staying at the Fleece Inn, and in 1852 he is listed leaving Hawick for Newcastle every Tuesday from the Fleece. He later took over what had been known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’ (she was Jessie, the widow of William Inglis, and sister of his wife Jane) and changed its name to the Half-Moon Inn. He is listed there (64 High Street) in 1861. He married Jane, daughter of Thomas Best and Margaret Rae. His widow was recorded as innkeeper of the Half-Moon Hotel in 1868. He is buried at Ponteland in Northumberland.

Bolbeck (bol-bek) n. Hugh (d.c.1262) 2nd son of Walter and Sybil, he succeeded after the death of his brother Walter. He gave his permission for 2 charters in which his brother granted lands and a hermitage at ‘Merchinlee’ to 2 monks of Kelso Abbey, Roger and William; this would give its name to the Hermitage Water as well as the Castle. During his life the monks at the hermitage asked to be placed under the direct protection of the Pope. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed acharte in 1211/2, relating to the Scottish King’s lands in Northumberland. He was appointed to an assize in Newcastle in 1228/9.
Bolburg

In 1236 he was appointed Governor of Bamburgh Castle, and is recorded many times in English documents over the next 25 years. His daughters and heirs Philippa, Margery, Alicia and Matilda are mentioned in 1262/3 in a document relating to his lands. He may be the Hugh whose heir Cecilia is mentioned in 1287. Walter (11th/12th C.) from a Northumbrian family. He witnessed 2 charters of King David and founded Blanchland Abbey in Northumberland. He is recorded as ‘Gulletro in Bolbec’ when he witnessed a founding charter for Selkirk Abbey in about 1120. Walter (c.1140–c.86) second son and heir of Hugh. The family came from the North of England and may have had some local involvement; note that the ‘Hawick’ in Northumbria was in their Lordship. He was probably the Walter who is recorded (sometime before 1200) in the annals of Kelso Abbey setting up a monastic cell at ‘Merchingburn’, dedicated to St. Mary, for prayers to be said for the souls of him and his wife ‘Sibilla’. This is suggested to have led to the renaming of the stream as Hermitage Water, and hence the naming of the castle there, built perhaps in the 1240s. He married Sybil de Vesey (probably related to the later Barons of Wilton) and they had at least one daughter, Isabel. His sons Walter and Hugh are also mentioned in related charters. Walter (d.1204) son of Walter and brother of Hugh. In 2 charters he granted ‘the hermitage called Mecheleia’ to William and Roger, monks of Kelso, some time before 1206. These were re-grantings of the lands granted to Kelso Abbey by his father, the hermitage being what would become Hermitage Chapel. It was granted with the permission of his brother and heir Hugh, and one of the witnesses was his mother ‘Sibilla’. He was succeeded by his younger brother Hugh (also written ‘Bolbec’, ‘Bolebech’ and ‘Bolbech’).

Bolburg (bol-burg) n. former name for lands that were near Westcoterig and Southdeanrig. It is recorded along with them in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540, when Richard Henderson was the King’s shepherd there. It is possible that this is a mis-transcription for another farm.

Bold (bōld) n. Alexander (19th C.) boot and shoemaker in Lilliesleaf listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His widow and children were living in Galashiels in 1851. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Jane Scott, who was also from Hawick (this could be a variant of Boyd).

the Bold Buccleuch (thu-bōld-bu-kloo) n. popular name for Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch, due in particular to his rescue of Kinmont Willie from Carlisle jail in 1596 – ‘My hands are tied, but my tongue is free, And whae will dare this deed avow? Or answer by the Border law? Or answer to the bauld Buccleuch?’[T], ‘...Tey were all knights of mettle true, Kinsmen to the bold Buccleuch’[SWS], ‘...And high on the western rampart flew The Border flag of the Bold Buccleuch’[WHO], ‘Of Scott and Elliot, Hogg and Kerr, who took the Banner Blue, Of them and many more besides, who followed Bold Buccleuch’[NM], ‘...Set the rustling robbers bustling From the Bold Buccleuch’[WL].

bole (bōl) n., arch. an opening through the wall of a house having a wooden shutter, a recess – ‘It was a quaint old building, full of holes, boles and wee windows’[V&M], a wooden stopper to close up the opening when smoking hosiery.

boll (bōl) n., arch. unit of measure for dry goods, equivalent to four Winchester bushels (or firlots) for wheat or beans, six bushels for oats, barley or potatoes, or two bushels for salt! It was formerly used as a unit to value land, or to pay workers. The ‘Linlithgow boll’ was the standard unit for Scotland and was equivalent to 4 firlots. However, the Roxburghshire boll for oats and barley was 5 firlots and was apparently 1.0645 times bigger than the Linlithgow measure – ‘Item, sawin vpoun the Kirkland of Hawik, threttene bollis aittis ’...’[SB1574], ‘Chaplehill sett to James Home for 18 bolls halfe beare halfe meall and 18 keans’[Buc1690], ‘Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bolls of beir from the Lady Newtoume, and ane from Gladstanes’[BR1699], ‘...The officer gott a boll of meall and fourty shills yearly ’...’[GT], ‘...Walter Hyslop had for maintenance of his household 3½ bolls of oat-meal 23 peaks of bear-meal, a boll and a half of bear, and half a boll of peas’[JaT].

Bollinesburn (bo-līnz-burn) n. former name for lands that were near Westcoterig and Southdeanrig. It is recorded along with them in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540, when Richard Henderson was the King’s shepherd there. It is possible that this is a mis-transcription for another farm.

Boldness (bo-līnz-burn) n. former name for a stream on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley. It is described as part of the boundaries of Ringwood, when it was granted to Melrose Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear where this was, but Northhouse Burn is an obvious possibility, or there could be a connection with Bowanhill.

Bonaparte (bō-na-pawr') n. Prince Louis-Lucien (1813–1891), nephew of Napoleon, he was a French Senator, and also a great linguistic scholar. Henry Scott Riddell wrote a version of St. Matthew’s Gospel in Lowland Scots for him.

Napoleon (1769–1821) Corsican who rose from obscurity to become Emperor of France. He was finally defeated at Waterloo, which is commemorative by the Penielheugh monument. Some of the officers captured during the Napoleonic wars were prisoners of war in Hawick 1812–14. The ship that took him to St. Helena had among its crew John Robson, from Denholm. While he was exiled on St. Helena the British warships there were commanded by Sir Pultney Malcolm from Eskdale. And later the Governor of the island was Gen. Alexander Walker from Bownland, near Galashiels. After his death the Honourable East India Company’s farms on St. Helena were run by George and David Brockie, sons of a Barnhills farmer. They apparently used the former Emperor’s bedroom as a cattle-stall. When David returned to the Rule valley he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the Emperor’s bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door itself. His writing desk from St. Helena was later purchased by Hawick Provost Robert Fraser Watson, and used to be at Hassendenburn. The ‘False Alarm’ happened in 1804 during a time of concern over invasion by Napoleon’s forces. Bet Young wrote several poems to commemorate his defeats. It is said that the grand-daughter of Robert Paterson (‘Old Mortality’) married a brother of Napoleon’s. The Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, is credited with making cashmere fashionable in the courts of Europe. Napoleon’s pen case and blotter are on display in Abbotsford. Sir Walter Scott wrote a 9 volume ‘Life of Napoleon’ (1827) – ‘Scarce a cot could Cheviot claim That knew not dread Napoleon’s name, Scarse farm or stell or shearing-stance But echoed with some jibe at France’ [WHO].

Bonar (bō-nur) n. Rev. John (16th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1582 he became minister at Abbotrule in 1593 (although it is unclear if Patrick Bishop also still held some of the local benefices). However, he also had charge of Bedrule, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, Minto and Wilton at about the same time. He was probably assisted in the various parishes by Readers, many of whom would have been trained as priests before the Reformation. In 1594 he was translated to Hassenden, but additionally had Cavers, Southdean and Kirkton in his charge, as well as perhaps Abbotrule and the ones he had care of previously. At the same time he may have held the benefice of North Ronaldsay. He was translated to Girton later that year or the next year. He was then translated to Gelston in 1597, when he also held Kelton. John (b.c.1780) carrier in Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living there with his wife Ann and daughter Betty. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed leaving from the Grapes in Hawick to go to Jedburgh every Wednesday. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694 (also written ‘Bon’er’ and ‘Bonnar’).

Bonchester (bon-ches-tur, bin-stur) n. Bonchester Bridge, village about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, centred around the bridge over the Rule Water. It is usually the site of the first ride-out of the Common Riding each year. The modern farmhouse of this name is just above the bridge, to the east. The original location may be higher up at the head of Rob’s Cleuch. The farm was in the old parish of Abbotrule and was once rented from the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. The lands were formerly split into Nether and Upper (or Over) Bonchester, recorded from the end of the 15th century. The original location of Over Bonchester could be the remains of a farmstead near the head of Rob’s Cleuch. There were Turnbells at Bonchester from at least the late 15th century. David Turnbull and Walter Turnbull were recorded as tenants there in 1493, Mark and Robert Turnbull in 1494/5 and Robert Turnbull in 1501. About 1502 Peter Turnbull from there was involved in the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick. William and David Turnbull were also recorded there in 1502. It was burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and a tower there was burned by the English in 1545. William Turnbull was tenant in 1581. In 1643 Adam Turnbull, ‘Clerk’, was a tenant there, holding lands valued at £25, while Thomas Turnbull of Bonchester’s lands were valued at £30. A farm to the east of here is marked ‘Bonnechesterr’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map. The superiority of both farms were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1694. William Laidlaw was farmer there in the mid-19th century. The farm of Nether Bonchester was held by a branch of the Scott family from 1632 until the mid-1700s, when it was sold by Thomas Scott to William Oliver of Dinlabyre. After that there were significant improvements, with the bridge being constructed to carry the new road from Hawick to Newcastle. The Over and Nether farms were among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. The cottages at Bridge-end were built around 1800, to join the Horse and Hounds, which has been a coaching inn here since 1701. A stone pillar was erected in memory of locals who fell in WWI. There has long been a joiner’s shop there. Along the lower part of Hob’s Burn are the remains of an ancient earthwork. Since about the 1500s the village has been on the main route between Hawick and the English north-east, where the Rule Water is crossed. Before that time there was little development on the east side of the Rule, since the main road crossed further south near Forkins. It is only in relatively recent times that this has been used as the general name for the area. This may have been encouraged by the postmark of ‘Bonchester’ used in the area because of the location of the post office there (rather than ‘Hobkirk’). A macehead-type ancient hammer found near there is in the National Museum of Antiquities (the origin is probably the Old English ‘bun ceaster’, meaning ‘reedy fortification’, presumably because of the rushy areas on the slopes of Bonchester Hill, with its Iron Age fort, however a p-Celtic derivation is also possible, like with ‘Binchester’ in County Durham; it is ‘bonechester’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘Buchester’ in 1501, ‘Bonechestir’ and ‘bonchester’ in 1502, ‘Bewncheste’ in 1543, ‘Benchester’ in 1566, ‘Bonechester’ in 1618, ‘Boonchester’ in 1684, ‘Boonchestir’ in Hawick records of 1699 and ‘Boonster’ in 1797).

Bonchester Brig (bon-ches-tur-, bin-stur-brig) n. Bonchester Bridge, the full name for Bonchester, or ‘Binster’, as it is sometimes called. The bridge itself was constructed in the early years of the 19th century as part of the new toll road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. It was built at the instigation of William Oliver of Dirlabyre, Sheriff of Roxburghshire. Before it was built the road from Hawick to Newcastle used to cross the Rule Water near Forkins.

Bonchester Brigend see Brigend

Bonchester Cheese (bon-ches-tur-cheez) n. a soft, mould-ripened, unpasteurised cow’s milk cheese, with a rich creamy flavour and Brie-type texture. It was made from 1980 until 1999 by John Curtis at Bonchester, and won many awards, including British Cheese Awards bronze medal, and Champion Cheese at the Royal Highland Show. Another variety, ‘Teviotdale Bonchester’ was also made.

Bonchester Close (bon-ches-tur-klös) n. street in Chislehurst, in the south-eastern outskirts of London. It borders on the former estate Bonchesterside (bonches-tur-, bin-stur-sid) n. former farm a little to the north of the modern Bonchester Bridge. It is possible that it corresponds with Upper Bonchester. Adam Rutherford was tenant there in 1684 when he was listed among men declared fugitives for not conforming to Episcopalianism (marked ‘Boonchestersyd’ on Pont’s c.1590 sketch and ‘Bunchestersyd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but absent from Stobie’s 1770 map).

Bonchester Toonheid (bonches-tur-, bin-stur-toon-head) n. Bonchester Townhead, former holding near Bonchester. Adam Turnbull ‘in Bonechester townhead’ is recorded in 1618. This is probably the ‘…head’, in Abbotrule Parish, where in 1643 Adam Turnbull held lands valued at £25, David and (presumably a separate) Adam Turnbull held lands valued at £30 and William Turnbull held lands valued at £44.

boncin bon-sin adj., arch. brazenly bold – ‘She’s a boncin’ bizzim – aye gaun maisterin’ aboot’ [GW] bondage (bon-deej) n., arch. serfdom, service due from a tenant to a superior, particularly the obligation of a farm-worker to provide a female out-worker when the farmer requires help.

bondager (bon-dee-jur) n., arch. a worker pressed into service through serfdom, particularly a female worker provided through an arrangement between a cottager and the main farmer – ‘… and the hinds are bound to supply workers in the field when wanted, who are called bondagers’ [RDA], ‘I was a dyke-back gett: A bondager’s wean, Wi’ never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain’ [DH].

Bone (bou) n. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas.

Bonello (bo-ne-lô) n. Samuel (19th C.) native of Nottingham, he was well known in Hawick from the 1840s until he left in 1862. A stockmaking to trade, his eccentric habits included breeding cageless canaries in his house and preparing herbal nostrums. He was a boarder on the Crescent on the 1841 census and later lived in Underdamside, Upperdamside and Wilton Dean. He was a teetotaller and sometimes engaged in open-air preaching. When over the age of 70 he once walked from Nottingham and back to attend the Common Riding – ‘All you teetotalers rise and sing The praises of your teetotal king. Who quenched his thirst at the mountain spring, The great Sam Bonella’ [JTu] (possibly also spelled ‘Bonella’).

Bonjedward (bon-jed-wurd) n. village near the confluence of the Jed with the Teviot. It was also formerly the site of a house and estate that was long a seat of a branch of the Douglas family. The lands were granted to Sir James Douglas in the ‘Emerald Charter’ of 1324. They were forfeited by Roger Pringle around the 1340s, and granted to William ‘Pettiliok’. They were among the lands and titles whose superiority was held by Sir James Sandilands and passed to George Douglas Earl of Angus (and back again) in 1397 and 1404/5. In 1404 (possibly earlier if this was a regranting) the lands were inherited by Margaret Douglas from her half-sister Isabella, Countess of Mar; her husband Thomas Johnstone changed his name to inherit, and thus was started the line of Douglas of Bonjedward. ‘Johannis Myrtoun’ had a sasine for a villa there in 1458. Richard Hart gained some of the lands in 1458/9. William Kirkton had a sasine for lands there in 1483 and was also recorded as owner (perhaps of the superiority) in 1502. In 1493 it is recorded that crimes had been perpetrated against Thomas Rutherford and John Waugh there. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £20. The town and 2 towers near there were razed by Hertford’s men in 1545, along with the Laird of Bonjedward’s house. The Kirktons of Stewartfield held 3 husbandlands of land there in the early 17th century. The estate was long held by the Douglasses, with many generations of Lairds recorded there. The ‘Town and Mains’ were valued at £2400 in 1643. In 1644 it is recorded that the ‘pest’ was ‘brought by certain persons from England to Nisbitt and Bonjedburgh’. It seems to have been used as a garrison by the Royalists in 1655. The Laird paid tax on land valued at £4000 in 1663 and 1678. An ‘account book of debursements for the laird of Bonjedburgh’ is in the National Archives of Scotland. Tax was paid on 17 hearths for the main house in 1694, with a large number of people living on farms owned by the Douglasses of Bonjedward. By 1707 the Laird of Wells had

Bonjedward Hoose

Bonjedward Hoose, Scottish Gaelic Bonné wurd hooos, 17th to 18th century built limestone house near Jedburgh in the confluence of the Jed and Teviot, it was in the latter part of the 18th century, replacing an earlier tower. It was remodelled in the 19th century and used as a dover house by the Marquess of Lothian. It is built of cream-coloured sandstone rubble, with polished dressings. The house also has a lodge, walled garden and stable yard. Former versions of the house were the home of the Douglases of Bonjedward. The estate later passed to the Rutherfords, the Jerdons and the Marquis of Lothian. In 1800 the estate consisted of several neighbouring farms, as well as farms in Eckford Parish.

Bonmar (bό-nur) n. John (b.c.1780) carrier, operating between Hawick and Jedburgh, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was recorded operating between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 he was living in Jedburgh. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Knowesouth in 1690 when he is recorded owing some money to the deceased Mark Turnbull, portioner in Fodderlee. A man of the same name is recorded having children baptised in Jedburgh about 30 years later, and was probably related.

Bonnet (bo-ni) n. a thick woven cap worn predominantly by older men – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill’[JT], ‘The weet seeped throwe oor bonnets And lashed oor smertin’ cheeks’[WL] (see also bunnet and blue bonnet).

Bonnetie (bo-ni’-ee) n., arch. leapfrog played by boys piling their bonnets on the back of the stooper, whose place was taken by any leaper who dislodged a bonnet.

Bonnet-laird (bo-ni’-laird) n., arch. a person with a small holding that they farm themselves.

Bonnie (bo-neec) adj. pretty, attractive, beautiful, appealing, pleasant to look at – ‘that’s a bonnie new hat’, ‘It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe . . .’[AD], ‘And as for Peggy Duncan, She is a bonnie lass’[JSB], ‘Bonnie for situatione, an’ the joy o’ a’ the yirth, is Muunt Zion’ . . .’[HSR], ‘. . .for it is pleasant, an’ prayse is bonnie’[HSR], . . .Oh bonnie toon on Tievot’s side!’[JLH], ‘Hey the bonnie, how the bonnie, Hey the bonnie mortcloth’[TP], . . .Here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’[GWe], ‘The Dean’s still fine to look upon, The Slitrig’s bonnie whiles . . .’[WFC], . . .Comes cheerily hame to his ain Bonnie Jean’[WL], . . .there is also a sound which lies midway between that [ə] and oo, a characteristic sound heard occasionally in the local pronunciation of bonnie, mony, etc.’[ECS], ‘Bonnie troots a-plenty Hae frizzled in my pan . . .’[DH], also used in an ironic sense, goodly, considerable – ‘ee’ve made a bonnie mess o that hevnet’ee?’, ‘that’ll cost a bonnie penny’, ‘Od, we’re a bonny set! a bonny set, guid trewly?’[WNK], ‘Hei’s gaun a bonnie length’[ECS], ‘A bonnie penny = A goodly sum of money; A bonnie wheen = A goodly few’[ECS]
The Bonnie Banner Blue

(also spelled ‘bonny’; note the former slightly diphthongal first vowel).

The Bonnie Banner Blue (thu-bo-nee-baw-nur-bloo) n. song written in 2005 by Alan Brydon, with arrangements by Iain Scott and Ian Seeley. It was first sung by Iain Scott at the Mosstroopers’ Dinner of 2005 and is included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Iain Scott. It soon became popular, and is sung regularly at Common Riding events. The words appear in the 2009 re-edition of the Hawick song book.

Bonnie Johnnie (bon-nee-jo-nee) n. nickname for John Scott in the early 17th century.

The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme (thu-bo-nee-laws-ô-brank-sum) n. ballad first published in a broadsheet about 1701, a version was later included in Allan Ramsay’s play ‘The Gentle Shepherd’ (1725) and published in William Thomson’s ‘Orpheus Caledonia’ (1733). It is also known as ‘The Braes o Branxholme’, under which title a different version appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), which is stated to be ‘from an old M.S. entitled ‘Jane the Ranter’s bewitching of Capt. Maitland to her daughter’ by Old Hobby (or Robert) in Skelfhill’. The ‘lass’ was a daughter of ‘Jean the Ranter’, keeper of an ale-house at Scatterpenny; she was said to be washing clothes in the Teviot when noticed by the passing Capt. Maitland, who later married her. If the story was based on fact, then the man involved may have been Robert Maitland, who commanded a troop against the Covenanters. Maitland’s daughter (and hence also the Bonnie Lass’ daughter) Elizabeth married Robert Grierson of Lag, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been suggested that the ‘Poetical Museum’ version is more authentic; it consists of 14 8-line stanzas, while Ramsay’s published version contains only 5 8-line stanzas. The version of about 1701 may contain the first mention of Hawick in a poem (if it predates Robert Cunningham’s ‘Ode to Hawick’) – ‘As I came in by Tiviot side and by the braes of Branksome, There met I with a pretty Lass, that was both neat and handsome ... Then unto Hawick did we gang, And of the Way we thought not Long. Of us composed was the Song, My pretty bonny Lassie’ [AHS].

Bonnie Prince Chairlie (bo-nee-prins-chär-leee) n. common name given in Scotland to Charles Edward Stewart or Stuart.

bonnier (bo-nee-ur) adj. prettier, more attractive – ‘... ti sei’d owre again, bonnier as ever, at the skrich o day!’ [ECS], ‘Oh the servants are bonnie an’ dressed up tae kill An’ the dressmaker bonnier still’ [WAP], ‘There’s higher hills? Aye! But where’ll ye sei A bonnier view o’ the Border?’ [DH].

bonniest (bo-nee-ist) adj. prettiest, most attractive – ‘Ancrum – where weel-putten-on Naiter’s buskeet in er bonniest braws’ [ECS].

Bonnie Teviotdale (bo-nee-teev-yi’-däl) n. song written by John Halliday, with the music possibly by him also. The song is recorded being sung by Andrew Rutherford Oliver at the Richardson, Noble & Co. soiree on Old Year’s Night 1874. It was first sung at a Colour Bussing by A. Caldwell in 1909. A new arrangement was published by Adam Grant in 1924, dedicated to Andrew Rutherford Oliver. Adam Ingles moved the key up, while further changes to the accompaniment are to be found in the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’. Scocha recorded a version with a new guitar arrangement in 2001.

bonnily (bo-ni-lee) adv. prettily, pleasantly, attractively – ‘And, oh! it bloomed sae bonnily ...’ [JI], ‘... And silver snatched from Slitig when the sun blinks bonnily’ [JYH].

Bonnington (bo-nin’-in) n. former seat of a branch of the Scotts. The lands are those near Peebles, although associations of some Scotts with similarly named lands near Kilmoarock and in East Lothian (just to the south of North Berwick) are also possible. The family were related to the Scotts of Aikwood, and they are mentioned in many more local records in the 16th and 17th centuries. The family first obtained these lands in 1552 when Janet Wylie and Marion Wylie each sold their halves of ‘Bonnytoun called Bonnytoun Wylie’ to Robert Scott ‘in Aikwode’ and Adam Scott his son. Robert held the lands ‘of the Queen for service of ward’. They passed from Adam to his son Simon, and then briefly to Simon’s brother John in 1624. The lands were inherited by William Burnet of Barns, grandson of ‘Sym’ Scott of Bonnington in 1627. The last of this line was Charles, who was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. However, Scott of Satchells says the Laird of Carnwath Mill was their representative in about 1688. A separate branch of the Scotts of Bonnington (in Lothian) was started by James, son of Lawrence of Harpersrig and Clerkington, who provided Chamberlains to Scott of Bucleuch. The last of this branch was Gilbert Scott. Since the family Christian names are similar in the 17th century, it is easy to confuse the 2 separate families (also spelled

Bonsor (bon-sur) n. James Brian ‘Brian’ (1926–2011) music educator, born in Hawick, son of manufacturer Tom. He joined a solicitor’s firm, then served in WWII on minesweepers with the Royal Navy. Afterwards he trained at Moray House (gaining the L.R.A.M. in 1947), and qualified as a music teacher at Trinity College London in 1957. However, studies for the B. Mus. were interrupted by the sudden death of his father. He taught at Hawick High School for 17 years, becoming Music Advisor for the Borders’ Region, before retiring in 1983. He published a large number of arrangements for recorder, the 15 volume ‘Enjoy the Recorder’ being particularly popular. He also wrote an opera, Shades of Night, as well as publishing compositions for piano, voice and junior ensemble. He received the M.B.E. in 2002 for services to teaching music, especially the recorder. He married Mary Hargreaves in 1966, and they had 1 son and 1 daughter. A commemorative CD entitled ‘Bravo Bonsor’ was released by the Society of Recorder Players in 2012. James Clement (1826–97) from the Leicestershire district, son of Richard and Mary. He had to leave the area after being involved in some industrial difficulties, making his way to Liverpool, working his passage to Annan and then apparently walking to Hawick, where he entered the hosiery trade. He was the first person in the town to work a power rotary frame. In 1851 he is listed as a frame-worker living on the Backdamgate. In 1847 in Leicester he married Sarah Woodward (1830–89), and the family returned to Leicester for a while (being there on the 1861 census), but later settled permanently in Hawick. Their children were: Harriet (1847–49); Clement (1850–6); James (1852–1926) of Thorterdykes; Mary Ann (1855–1931), who may also have been called Margaret; John (1857–1913), wool buyer of Peebles; Sarah (1859–1939), who married John Boyd; Ada (b.1862), who died in infancy; Clement (again, 1865–1937), commercial traveller of Whitley Bay; and Thomas William (1867–1946), hairdresser. He died at 16 North Bridge Street. James, J.P. (1852–1926) son of James Clement and father of James Clement. He was a hosiery manufacturer and involved with early technical education in Hawick. In 1901 he was living with his family at 56 Loan, also known as Croft Cottage. By 1904 he had moved into Thorter Villa, the house that became Thorterdykes. As an employer, he was said to be the first to organise an outing for his workers, taking them to St. Mary’s Loch in a charabanc. He also changed the starting time of work of the children in his factory from 6 a.m. to 8 a.m. In 1882 in Edinburgh he married Margaret McAdam Dickson (1855–1918) and their children were: James Clement (1883–1963); John Dickson (1885–1973); Margaret Fergusson Dickson (1888–1951); Sarah Woodward (1890–1939); and Thomas (‘Tom’), 1894–1959. James Clement, J.P. (b.1884) son of James. He was a Councillor and President of the Callants’ Club in 1933. He was a manufacturer and also involved in technical education. He was Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk 1925–35 and Session Clerk from 1935 and wrote the booklet ‘St. George’s Church and Its Associations’ (1938). He also wrote articles on local churchyards for the Archological Society Transactions and was President of that Society. He also served as Honorary Sheriff-Substitute. He married Jessie Kerr Deans in 1910. They lived at Ellabank. John Dickson (b.1885) son of James and Margaret McAdam Dickson, he was a hosiery manufacturer. He was Cornet in 1912 and Acting Father in both 1920 and 1928. In 1972 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Common Riding Committee for 52 years of service. He married Annie Mary Wilson in 1916. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1894–1959) son of James and Margaret Dickson. He also worked in the family manufacturing business. In 1918 he married Ann Tait Burnet (1893–1963) and their children were: Mary Paterson (1918–2001); and James Brian (1926–2011), populariser of the recorder (also sometimes written ‘Bonser’).

Bonsor’s (bon-surz) n. hosiery manufacturers operating out of the old Subscription Rooms on Buccleuch Street as James Bonsor & Co. in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. For a while the company was known as Bonsor & Ashford, this partnership being dissolved at the end of 1903. Later the name was used to refer to their new factory off Green Lane, sometimes known as Buccleuch Mills. The business was eventually sold off to Lan-Air-Cel Blankets of Glasgow.
bon-vale (bon-väl) n., arch. a farewell salute or entertainment – ‘Paid 28 shillings Scots for ale, drunken by the soldiers that were taken down to Jedburgh, and their attendants, at the taking of horse, and bon-vale’ [1697].

booch (boo-ch) v., arch. to bark in a suppressed way – ‘The road was thrang ... wui nurri teikes snackin an yowfin an boochin’ [ECS] (also bouch).

Bodie’s Law (boo-deez-law) n. hill in the former Hasseende Parish, between Horsleyhill and Muirfield (also called Bodie’s Law).

Boog (boog) n. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) weaver to trade, he was a distant relative of Robert Thomson of Bilerwell farm, who left him £1200 at the end of the 1700s, a small fortune in those days. He managed to spend it all within about a year (with the aid of his ‘friends’) and eventually had to seek poor relief. Thomas Elliot (d.1893) only son of William. He is recorded as farmer at Tythe-house in the 1860s. He also farmed Lanton near Jedburgh. He married Isabella Halliday McNeillie of Castlehill, Kirkcudbrightshire. Their children were William Elliot, Agnes Halliday, Margaret Elliot. Robert David McNeillie, Anne Elliot, Thomas Henry, John Elliot (who succeeded to the lands at Peel), Richard Leigh, Helen Elliot and Thomas Elliot. On the death of John Elliot (maternal uncle of the children) they took the surname Scott so they could succeed to Riccalton. He later farmed at Timpendale and was factor for Robert Elliot of Clifton Park, who was a distant cousin. William (19th C.) farmer at Sweethope. In 1836 he married Margaret (1810–39), 4th daughter of Thomas Elliot in Kirndean and Helen Scott, from the Scotts of Peel. Their only surviving child was Thomas Elliot (perhaps the same as Boag and Bogue).

boogle (boo-gul) v. to lurk, mess about, fumble – ‘what’re ee booglin about it?’, ‘The paraffin lamp in the close Tae stop booglin’ about at night’ [AY], boogle (boo-gul) n., arch. a spectre, goblin, bogey-man (also bogle).

boogly (boo-gu-lee) adj., arch. relating to bogeys, haunted by spectres – ‘The time for enchantments in Scotland has lang been fixed at Hallowe’en, but they’re din, boogly enchantments ... ’[DH].

Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch (book-ov-samz-inlō-liund-skoch) n. book by Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. It was published in 1857, with the texts being taken from the authorized (‘King James’) version. Only 250 copies were printed, at the instigation of Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte, who also printed Riddell’s earlier translation of St. Matthew and later translation of the Song of Solomon. The language is an idiosyncratic mixture of genuine dialect words, borrowings from older Scottish works and what can only be described as oddly spelled English. Despite not being anything like an authentic local version of these texts, the work still contains a huge number of examples of pieces of vernacular from the Hawick area.

booksome (book-sum) adj., arch. bulky – ‘...the muckle Cairter – booksome an blewe-leike wui the ferness o’d – raise fer owre on ma left’ [ECS].

bool (bool) n. a large black ball used in bowling – ‘ee’r fower shots doon, wi’ only yin bool left, what er ee gaun tae dae?’, a child’s marble – ‘...Wi’ the bools and the peeries at the Auld Smiddy end’ [JT], ‘...As long as each one had his bool, There was some game to play’ [WFC], ‘...Aathing frae leather soakers and gless beads, To comics, bools and haberdashery’ [WL], ‘In my boyhood, it would have been, ‘Chucks-me! yon glessy bools!’ [DH], any other round object by analogy – ‘But there’s still a wee sweetie shop, That sells hame-made rock bools’ [L], v. to bowl, play a game of bowls (from the French).

booler (boo-lur) n. person who plays the game of bowls – ‘...when well over a hundred ‘boolers’ ... would converge on the Teviot Crescent venue’ [GM].

boolin (boo-lin) n. bowling, the game of bowls. Bowling was introduced in Hawick in the early 19th century and from about 1820 there was a green where Peter Scott’s would later be built. Hawick Bowling Club was founded in 1854, the oldest in the Borders, originally playing on Allars Crescent and then where the Baptist Church was later built. This green can be seen in a photograph from the 1860s. They moved to Buccleuch Street in 1874. Buccleuch Bowling Club was founded in 1872 to encourage the game among the working classes. Wilton Bowling club was established in 1895. Note that a form of the game was played by gentlemen in the 18th century, with evidence, for example, that there were bowling greens laid out at Wells House around 1730 – ‘The sun is shinin’ day and night And there’s boolin near aw the time ... ’[AY].

bools (boolz) n. the game of bowling – ‘When lang Tam Lowrie o’ the Raws, now lying i’ the mools, Sair loondert puir wee Jocky Bell for boon (boon) n., arch. a band or set of reapers – ‘...For no a pair in a’ the boon Wi’ Rab an’ me could shear’ [JT].

boond (boond) n. a bound, boundary, limit – ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boond ...’ [FL], ‘Yis, thaye turnet bak, an’ tempet God, an’ sete bounds til the Haly Ane o’ Israel’ [HSR], ‘...Thereafter, canny, rode the boonds, The weiser for an auld man’s wounds’ [MB], v. to bound (sometimes spelled ‘boond’).

boond (boond) n. a bound, leap – ‘able to lowp ower muckle biggins in a single boond’, v. to bound, leap – ‘Like lichtnen flash she’s through the yett, And far away she’s boonded’ [RH], ‘...boonlin bleithely on wui ma airms shuggiein lowce threth ma oxters’ [ECS].

boondary (boon-da-ree, boond-ree) n. a boundary – ‘...inside the booneries o’ oor ancient burgh’ [BW1979], ‘...was yin o the last ti milk kye within the toon boondary’ [IWL], ‘...But niver was thae ride again, the boond’ry o’ thaeer land’ [MB].

Boonraw (boon-raw) n. district about 3 miles north of Hawick, around the farms of the same name. A document from 1481 mentioning sale of land at ‘Bundray’ is probably an old spelling. It was then in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and sold for 300 merks by James Newton of Dalcove to Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw. The associated instrument of sasine is in 1487. By 1504/5 the ‘6 merkland of old extent’ was sold by David Hopringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Middlemas to Robert Scott of Stirches. It was owned by Walter Scott of Synton in the early 16th century. The land was then owned by a branch of the Scotts through the 17th and early 18th centuries. Their motto was ‘Reparabit Cornua Phoebe’ and their arms had 2 mullets on a crescent. The arms were given by deed in 1700 to Scott of Harden, as heir. In 1610 it was described as a ‘6 merk land’ when inherited by George Scott from his father Walter of Synton. In 1643 it was valued along with Stouslie (‘but disjoined’) at £67 3s 4d, along with Stouslie. The ‘Lyfrenter of Boonraw’ (perhaps the former owner, or his widow) was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Stouslie. William Nichol was shepherd there in at least 1682–96. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1708 and 1711. The last Scott of Boonraw, Archibald was ready to sell in 1714, and there was a plan proposed by the Hawick Kirk Session to the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain to purchase the lands as an investment for the ‘Orrock Bequest’; however, this appears not to have happened and it eventually became part of the Buccleuch estates (its purchase described in a letter by the Duchess of Buccleuch around 1720). In 1718 it was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, at that time consisting of an irregularly shaped farm of 418 acres, bounded by Newton, Galalaw, Stirches, Stouslie, Tandlaw, Drinkstone and Groundistone; the 2 farmhouses are clearly shown on the map. James Leithead was recorded there in 1723, William Lamb and James Ormiston in 1724, Robert Scott in 1729 and Robert Ormiston in 1733–38. It was farmed by the Ormiston family for several decades, as well as another branch of the Scotts. James Scott, farmer there, was involved with the establishment of the first Secession church in Hawick in the 1760s. Robert Ormiston was recorded there in 1746, John Scott in 1751–58 and another John Scott in 1764–67. Ormiston were tenants through most of the 18th century, perhaps longer. In 1797 the farmers recorded there were Robert Ormiston, Walter Ormiston and Walter Scott. In 1788 (and still recorded this was in 1811) it was valued at £223 16s 8d, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It is now split into the houses at East and West Boonraw (several variants exist, including ‘Boonrow’, ‘Bonraw’ and ‘Bowraw’; it is first noted in 1481 and 1487 as ‘Bundray’ and ‘Bundraw’, it is ‘Bondraw’ in 1504/5, ‘Boydraw’ in 1505, ‘Bundraw’ in 1528/9, ‘Bondraw’ in 1610, ‘boneraw’ in 1638, ‘Bonraw’ in 1643, ‘Bonraw’ and ‘bondrau’ in 1678, ‘Bondrau’ in 1680, ‘Bounrawe’ in 1686, ‘Bonra’ in 1696, ‘Bondraw’ in 1711, ‘Bonraw’ in 1718, ‘Bonra’ in 1720, ‘Bounra’ in about 1720, ‘bondra’ in 1723, ‘bondraw’ in 1724, ‘Bondraw’ in 1733 and 1738 and ‘Bonra’ in 1758; the modern spelling appeared by 1692; the origin is possibly ‘good reaping or ploughing land’ in Old English or ‘the bondsman’s house’ or ‘bondsman’s corner’ from Old Norse ‘bondi vra’, which might then imply a feudal relationship with Drinkstone).
Boonraw Burn

Boonraw Burn (boon-raw-burn) n. stream that flows through the Boonraw area and then the Burnfoot housing scheme to join the Teviot opposite Haughhead. Burnfoot is named for being the end of this stream's course.

Boonraw Floors (boon-raw-flörz) n. former cottage near Boonraw. Stockingmaker William Brown and shepherd James Anderson lived there in 1841 and 1851. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as ‘Boonrawfloor’, on the east side of the road between Stirches Mains and the ‘Fower Road Ends’.

Boonraw Road (boon-raw-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1956, and named after the Boonraw Burn and district.

the Boosie (thu-boo-zee) n. popular name for a thick plantation of fir trees just to the south-west of Newcastleton, also called Boozie Plantin – ‘The joy of youth I felt yestre’en Down on yon bonny flowery green; And aye I turned my wishfu’ een On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA].

Boosmill (booz-nil) n. former farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, on the Ale Water roughly opposite Hermiston, now marked as ‘Bowismiln’ on the Ordnance Survey map. It was once part of the possessions of the Riddelles of that Ilk, e.g. being inherited by Sir Walter from his father in 1636 and being described as ‘lie Maynes de Bouismilne’ when inherited by Sir John Riddell in 1669. John Shiel and his brother were tenants there in 1684 when they were declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John Shiel was there in 1694. Simon Laidlaw was farmer there in at least 1773–94. Andrew Elliot was farmer there in 1861, when it consisted of 186 acres – ‘And memory loves to linger long By bonny Bossemill Haugh, Where merrily the river glides Past clumps of stately saugh’ [FL] (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘the mill belonging to Bowes’ and first appears in 1596; it is ‘Buismynhe’ in 1636, ‘Buismill’ in 1684, ‘Boosmiln’ in 1694 and ‘Boosmiln’ in 1773; it is ‘Bewes Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Booz mill’ on Stobbie’s map of 1770).

Boosmill Hill (booz-nil-hill) n. hill just to the west of Bowismiln farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. This is probably the ‘Beuse Mill Moss’ referred to by James Murray in 1863. It reaches a height of 215 m and has the remains of a hill-fort.

the Border ABBEYS WAY (thu-bőr-dur-aw-beez-waï) n. public footpath, linking the 4 Border abbeys, covering 68 miles (109 km).

Border ballad (bőr-dur-baw-lid) n. term used to denote a particular kind of traditional song, originating in the Borders, and often concerning raids or other conflicts. The precise definition of the term is unclear, and there is debate about which of the song should be considered as ‘true’ Border ballads. They probably originated in the 15th and 16th centuries, although they most likely evolved in the retelling. Several people collected the ballads in the 18th and 19th centuries, gathering verses from oral tradition, but often editing them before publication. Famous collectors include Sir Walter Scott, John Leyden, James (‘Ettrick Shepherd’) Hogg, Andrew Lang, Francis James Child and Arthur Quiller-Couch. Some had their first publication in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’, printed in Hawick in 1784. The original authors are unknown, although tradition states that many were penned by the boy who was accidentally taken to Harden during a raid, and raised there. Examples of the more locally-based Border ballads (many of which are known in several variants, often with different titles) include: The Battle of Otterburn; The Braes of Yarrow; The Chevy Chase; Dick o’ the Cow; The Douglas Tragedy; The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow; Hobbie Noble; Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead; Jock o’ the Side; Johnie Armstrong; Kinmont Willie; The Outlaw Murray; The Raid of the Redeswire; Tam Lin; and Thomas the Rhymer.

the Border BARDs’ ASSOCIATION (thu-bőr-dur-bawrdz-aw-sö-see-ä-shin) n. organisation of local poets, formed in January 1878 in a meeting at Murray’s Temperance Hotel in Hawick. Members included Hawick’s Robert Hunter, James Simpson, Cecile McNeill Thomson and Elizabeth M. Sinclair. John Inglis was the last surviving member.

the Border BEACON (thu-bőr-dur-bee-kin) n. the Scottish Border Beacon Lodge, a local temperance society of the late 19th century. Part of the Good Templar movement, it was one of the last of the lodges to survive, existing into the early 20th century.

the Border COUNTIES ASSOCIATION

The Border BEACON (thu-bőr-dur-bee-kin) n. early, but short-lived periodical, based in the Scottish Borders. It was edited by James Dodds, printed by George Greig, Kelso, began in late 1835 and ran to just 5 issues. William Scott of Hawick was among the contributor.

the Border BOWMEN (thu-bőr-dur-bő-min) n. gentlemen’s club that existed in the Borders in the early part of the 19th century, along the lines of the Forest and Jedforest Clubs. The club jackets had buttons with ‘B.B.’ marked on them.

the Border BURGHS (thu-bőr-dur-bu-ruz) n. another name for the parliamentary constituency known as the Hawick Burghs, which existed from 1868 until 1918. This name was in general use, and probably arose to assuage the feelings of the townspeople of Selkirk and Galashiels.

the Border CLUB (thu-bőr-dur-klub) n. social and non-political club in Hawick, established in 1890, using rooms in the Exchange Buildings until 1973. The club then moved to Jed Murray’s former studio at 43 North Bridge Street, which had been designed by J.P. Alison and constructed in 1899–1900. Wives of club members bared all for a 2005 charity calendar. The first female Club President was in 2019.

Border Collie (bőr-dur-ko-lee) n. a breed of dog, developed in the Border country, having a wavy black coat with white markings, and often used for herding sheep – ‘Though man may often curse and doubt you, not a herd could herd without you, faithful honest beast’ [TD].

the Border COMMISSION (thu-bőr-dur-ko-mi-shin) n. commission set up by James VI in March 1605 to bring order to the Borders. It consisted of 5 English and 5 Scottish commissioners, with garrisons in Scotland and England led by Sir William Cranston and Henry Leigh, respectively. These forces carried out a ruthless process of suppressing local rieving activity by execution and banishment. Probably hundreds were hanged over the next few years, and there was also a forced emigration of families to Northern Ireland. Many once prominent families on both sides of the Border were suppressed during this period, e.g. Armstrongs, Beatties, Bells, Carruthers, Croziers, Elliotts, Irvines, Johnstons, Kerrs, Maxwells and Moffats.

the Border COUNTIES ASSOCIATION (thu-bőr-dur-koon’-eez-aw-sö-see-ä-shin) n. also known as the ‘Edinburgh Border Counties Association’, this was an organisation of mainly expatriot Borderers based in Edinburgh. It was set up in 1865, largely through the efforts of Thomas
The Border Coonties Line

Usher (who was secretary for more than 30 years), to model the Galloway Association. Their major purpose initially was to distribute book prizes to Border schools, particularly in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. They were involved in celebrating events and preserving Borders history, including erecting monuments (such as at Trimontium) and purchasing property (such as Thomas the Rhymer’s tower and the Leyden family cottage in Denholm). Other events included several centenary celebrations of famous Borderers and a Handicrafts’ Exhibition in Hawick in 1887.

The Border Coonties’ Magazine (thu-bőr-dur-koon-’tee-z-maw-gu-zeen) n. magazine with a brief run, published in Galashiels and with the tag line ‘A popular monthly magazine of the history, bibliography, poetry, folk-lore, etc. of the Border districts’. Th editor was Thomas Lister. It was only published in 1880 and 1881, lasting for about 18 months.

Borderer (bőr-dur-ur) n. someone who lives in or comes from near the Scotland/England border, particularly on the Scottish side.

The Borderers (thu-bőr-du-rurz) n. television drama set in the Scottish Borders in the 16th century and broadcast by BBC Scotland in 1969 and 1970. It starred Iain Cuthbertson as ‘Sir Walter Ker of Cessford’ and Michael Gambon as ‘Gavin Ker of Slitrig’. There were 2 seasons, each of 13 50-minute episodes. The show was created by Bill Craig, and freely mixed fact with fantasy. All but 8 shows (all from the first season) may have been lost.

Border Forest Park (bőr-dur-fo-rist-pawrk) n. cross-Border park formed from the combination of Kielder and Wauchope Forests, with visitor centre in the old Kielder Castle.

the Border Golfers’ Association (thu-bőr-dur-gol-furz-aw-so-see-à-shin) n. organisation of golfers across the Scottish Borders, set up in 1893, with W. Rutherford of Crailing Tofts as the first President and James Barrie as Secretary. They organise annual competitions at different Border golf courses.

Border Heritage (bőr-dur-her-i-’eej) n. television production company based in Carlisle, which made video histories of Border clans, as well as releasing the Scocha CD and video.

the Border Horse Racin Association (thu-bőr-dur-hörs-rä-sin-aw-so-see-à-shin) n. body set up to run local ‘fapping’ meetings. It began in January 1972, with founding members Donald Fairgrieve (Gala), Charles McCrerie and Murray Richardson. Their first race meeting was in the middle of July at Hawick Moor, the first race being won by a Horse called Moby Dick, owned by Andy Morgan and ridden by Murray Richardson. Many Border towns broke away from the B.H.R.A. in 1987 and so the Hawick Horse Racing Association was formed.

the Border Hunt (thu-bőr-dur-hun’) n. small fox-hunting group, formed in 1869 and covering parts of Northumberland and Roxburghshire, with the Hunt Master based at Otterburn.

Border Kinematograph (bőr-dur-ki-ne-na-TO-graF) n. film company set up by David Gaylor in Hawick about 1899 and operating across local towns until about 1906. Gaylor’s partner was local manufacturer Sime. There are 2 newsreels in the Scottish Screen Archive, each containing a set of captures of parts of local Common Ridings (Hawick and Selkirk) and other festivities and events. Gaylor set up a 12 foot screen and showed them at the Shows during the Common Riding, in the Exchange Hall, Selkirk, Jedburgh and nearby villages. Films may have continued to be shown until about 1917, although the last local clips appear to be from 1903. The films were shot on 35 mm stock, and were developed (by the foot) by Gau- mont; hence they were expensive, but of very high quality for their day. The surviving clips represent some of the earliest moving images made in Scotland.

Borderland (bőr-dur-land) n. poetic name for the Borders, or more specifically its countryside – ‘Dear borderland, I only know You have a spell that binds me so’[IJ], ‘The Borderland, the Borderland, My first love and my last’[JEDM], ‘My Bordelnd, my Borderland, The sweetest spot I know’[DJ], ‘Then join with me the dear refrain With willing heart and hand, And we will sing another strain To our dear Border Land’[JT], ‘There are landscapes much richer and warmer.

which the suns of the tropics nursed, but what can compare to the Spring in the air when the buds of the Borderland burst ‘[TD], ‘My ain Borderland, My ain Borderland, Oh, weel do I like My ain Borderland’ [JGC], ‘Borderland, with pride I pledge thee, in thy matchless beauty dressed, When I cross that other border – this will be my last request, Lay me where the song of Teviot croons of joy and peace and rest’[GHB], ‘This haugh, this dale, yea all this glorious land, Is home to me, God’s given, guarded home, My Borderland’[WL], ‘...The Queen o’ a’ the Borderland, Auld Hawick, ma Border hame’[IW], ‘...And we ride over our Borderland and we ride, and we ride and we ride’[IW], ‘This is our Borderland These are the hills we call our own Here are the hearts that beat as one Where we are home Here in our Borderland’[ALB].

Border Laws (bőr-dur-lawz) n., pl. a set of specific rules drawn up to try to keep peace on the Border, describing the jurisdiction of the Wardens of the Marches, etc. The earliest such laws date from 1248 and were called the ‘Leges Marchiarum’. The laws were re-drafted several times over the next 350 years.

the Border Line (thu-bőr-dur-lín) n. imaginary line separating Scotlend and England, about 60 miles (100 km) as the crow flies, but running to about 110 miles (180 km) long. It is roughly south-west to north-east in direction, from Solway to Berwick, but with many odd twists. The Border is mainly unmarked, but consists essentially of the Tweed, the Cheviot watershed and the Solway. It was only formally established in 1215 and has changed very little since – ‘Our men will ride, abin the moss The strong and ancient borderline to cross, Invading force our men will spurn As the moon is glintin’ off the burn’[ALB].

The Border Magazine (thu-bőr-dur-maw-gu-zeen) n. name of several former magazines. The first was published in Berwick in 1831 and 1832. The second illustrated magazine was published in Edinburgh in 1863 and 1864. Finally there was a more recent and longer running magazine published in Edinburgh and Glasgow from 1896 until 1939. It was ‘an illustrated monthly devoted to Border Biography, History, Literature, and Folklore’, covering both sides of the Border. Additionally the ‘Dumfries, Galloway, and Border Magazine’ was published in 1843.

Border Motor Transport Company (bőr-dur-mo-ur-tran-spőr’-kum-pi-ne) n. local bus company, bought out by the S.M.T. about 1930.

Border pipes (bőr-dur-pîps) n. also called Lowland pipes, they were played over a wide area on both sides of the Border, with the peak in their popularity being the 17th and 18th centuries. Hawick’s former town piper probably played these. They differ from the more familiar Highland pipes by being bellows-driven, having 3 drones on a common stock, and being quieter.

The Border Queen (thu-bőr-dur-kween) n. song written by James Thomson, with music by John Rutherford, published around 1880. The poem does not appear in the original 1870 version of Thomson’s ‘Doric Lays and Lyrics’, but is in the 1884 revised version. It was first sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Scott Irvine, and has been sung at every one since. The tune was published at least by 1892, and the suggestion is that Rutherford wrote it before he emigrated to Australia in 1884. The words, which had earlier been tried with different tunes, poke fun at other Border towns, particularly Galashiels. It has also been referred to as ‘Queen o’ a’ the Borders’. Adam Ingles made a minor alteration to the tune in the 1957. It is also a mainstay of the Saxhorn Band, using the 1935 arrangement by George Guy, which is closer to Rutherford’s authentic version.

the Border Reivers (thu-bőr-dur-ree-vurz) n. professional rugby union side, set up in 2002 and lasting until the end of the season in early 2007. The team had started as ‘Borders Rugby’ in 2001, amalgamated briefly with Edinburgh as the ‘Edinburgh Reivers’ in the 2001–02 season. They were folded by the Scottish Rugby Union due to lack of financial support, despite attracting much larger crowds than the Glasgow side. They played their home matches at Netherdale in Galashiels, and their strips were white with red and black trim and black shorts and stockings. The strip was reminiscent of that of the ‘South’ side that last played in the 1990s. Scocha recorded a theme song for the team in 2002.

the Border Rifles (thu-bőr-dur-rí-fulz) n. the Borders Rifle Association, former volunteer unit, forerunner of the Territorial Army. They were founded in 1861 as the 1st Administrative Battalion, Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers, becoming the Border Rifles in 1868. In 1881 they were linked with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, but transferred to the King’s Own Scottish Borderers in the Borders

1887, becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. The local companies were ‘D’ and ‘E’ and had their headquarters at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent. The ‘Borders Rifle Association’ also refers to a separate body, existing to support the volunteer corps and rifle shooting generally, and that administered an annual competition at Melrose.

the Borders (thu-bör-durz) n. area of southern Scotland, below the central lowlands, and stretching across the country from coast to coast. It is also sometimes meant to include the neighbouring counties of England. After the Union of the Crowns, during the time of James VI (I of England), the use of the name was prohibited, with the term ‘Middle Shires’ to be preferred. However, despite the official ban the name has continued to be used – ‘Oor hearts sigh for hame, and nae music’s sae sweet As the soft lowland tongue o’ the Borders’ [WS], ‘When I die, bury me low Where I can hear the bonnie Tweed flow A fairer place I never did know Than the rolling hills o’ the Borders’ [MM].

The Borders (thu-bör-durz) n. CD single released by the band Scocha in 2002 as a theme for the (short-lived) Borders rugby team. The chorus is particularly good. The CD features 3 versions of the song, including the dance re-mix by Kirk Turnbull.

Borders College (bör-durz-ko-leej) n. local further education institution. In 1984 several further education centres in the Borders Region were amalgamated into the Borders Colleges of Further Education, which became the Borders College. Headquarters are in Galashiels with other locations in Hawick, Newtown St. Boswells, Duns and Peebles. The Hawick branch at the Henderson Building on Commercial Road was closed in and a new smaller building constructed below the old Cottage Hospital in 2009.

Borders Exploration Group (bör-durz-eks-plö-rä-shin-groop) n. non-profit organisation founded in 1981. It is run by adult volunteers and arranges expeditions for young people, the trips often involving environmental or local community-based projects. Expeditions have been organised every 2 years to: Lesotho 1993; Ecuador 1995; Kenya 1997; Mongolia 1999; India 2001; Peru 2003; and Vietnam 2005. They built the ‘Nan Lyle Academy’ in a small village in Kenya. There have also been shorter European and U.K.-based trips, as well as local training and fund-raising events. It was set up by Roger Hemming, Allan McGee and others.

Borders Family History Society (bör-durz-fä-mu-lee-his-tu-ree-su-si-i’ee) n. organisation with the aim of encouraging the study of genealogy in the Scottish Borders. Founded in 1985, it publishes a magazine for members, provides records through its web-site, and has collated local monumental inscriptions, poor law records and other information.

Borders Forest Trust (bör-durz-fo-ris-truq-truq) n. charitable organisation set up in 1996 to manage some of the Borders woodland areas.

Borders General Hospital (bör-durz-je-nurul-hos-pi-i’ul) n. built in 1988 on the Huntlyburn estate just outside Melrose to replace Peel Hospital as the region’s main hospital. It is also the biggest building in the Scottish Borders (usually referred to as ‘the B.G.H.’).

Borders Health Board (bör-durz-heith-bord) n. formed in 1975 as part of a new system of local government health boards, responsible for all medical and nursing services in the region. Their offices were in the Prudential Building until 1984, then at Springbank Clinic, before moving to the Health Centre in 1989.

the Borderside (thu-bör-dur-sid) n. general term applied to the lands around the Border – ‘There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne’ [WHO], ‘Far away from forge and mill, Arm in arm with wood and hill, Lie the clachans of the Borderside’ [WL].

Borders Region (bör-durz-ree-jin) n. former local government administrative area in southeastern Scotland, east of Dumfries & Galloway, south of Lothian Region, and with an administrative centre in Newton St. Boswells.

the Border Standard (thu-bör-dur-stan-dur) n. newspaper launched by W. Morrison & Co. of Hawick in the early 1880s for circulation in the Langholm area. It was transferred to that area, but lasted only a few years, although there was a Gala newspaper of the same name later.

Border Television (bör-dur-te-lee-vo-shin) n. local television station, which opened on 1st September 1961, being part of the Independent (i.e. commercial) TV network, interestingly serving both Cumbria and the south of Scotland (and later the Isle of Man). It provides local news and other programming, with headquarters in Carlisle, and Hawick’s transmitter being near Selkirk.
The Border Tour

The Border Tour (\textit{thu-b"or-du-toor}) \textit{n.} travel book published in 1826 ‘By A Tourist’, later identified as Kelso man John Mason. It was one of the earliest guide books to the Border country, and included a description of Hawick and district in this period.

the Border Union Railway (\textit{thu-b"or-du-yoon-yin-r"al-wi}) \textit{n.} line from Hawick to Carlisle, owned by the North British Railway, opened in 1862, and together with the Edinburgh and Hawick Railway, becoming known as the Waverley Route. Debate over whether to go via Langholm or Newcastleton was heated and protracted, and although there were many advantages in the Dumfriesshire option, the Liddesdale plan eventually succeeded. The sod-turning ceremony in 1859 was a great cause for celebration in Hawick, with banners around the Town and a procession out to Lyndwood, including the Cornet in full uniform. The first sod was turned by Mrs. Hodgson, wife of the North British Railway Chairman. This was followed by a banquet of about 1,000 people in a marquee on the Under Haugh.

Borland (\textit{b"or-lind}) \textit{n.} Rev. James (1644/5–1713) graduating from Glasgow University in 1670, he became Schoolmaster and Session Clerk at Mauchline in 1673, quitting about 1680. He then officiated at Galashiels for a while. He became minister of Bedrule in 1690 and remained until his death. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692. It appears that he preached in Hassendean Kirk in 1693. He married Marianne (or Mary Ann) Stevenson, who died in 1713 aged 66. Their daughter Margaret married Benjamin Haistie. He and his wife left £100 to the poor of Bedrule Parish. He is associated with a tale told of how a child at Minto Cragfoot was switched with a changeling by the fairy folk (recounted in the 1820 Edinburgh Magazine and later in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways in the Border’), administering boiled fox-glove to the infant to reverse the spell; however, he was not the first post-Reformation minister, as claimed in the story. The story is said to have been told to the author by a friend, whose great-grandmother was niece of the minister. His tombstone in Bedrule Kirkyard has a long Latin inscription, describing him as ‘a man of straight mind, open and generous by nature; distinguished in scholarly learning, as a young man he sought the way of truth through varied fortune; he continued steadfast amid the hostility of those pursuing him’. This suggests that he had been opposed by Episcopalians in the Parish (also written ‘Bourland’).

Born in the Borders (\textit{b"orn-in thu-b"or-durz}) \textit{n.} visitor centre adjacent to the Scottish Borders Brewery at Lanton Mill, off the A698. The brewery started in 2011, with the visitor centre opening in 2014.

borrel (\textit{bo-rul}) \textit{n.}, arch. a hand tool for boring holes – ‘Borrel, a borer, or wimble; in common use; hence borrel-brace, a species of carpenter’s wimble-shaft’ [JL] (also written ‘boral’ and ‘borel’).

borrel-trei (\textit{bo-rul-tri}) \textit{n.}, arch. the handle of a wimble (noted by J. Jamieson).

borrowed days (\textit{bor"od-d"az}) \textit{n.}, pl., arch. the 3 last days of March – ‘But when the borrowed days were gane, The three silly hogs came hirplin hame’ [JL].

Borrowman (\textit{bo-r"o-mun}) \textit{n.} George (c.1815–45) draper on the Tower Knowe according to the 1841 census. He married Grace (1815–97), daughter of manufacturer William Laidlaw. Their youngest daughter Jessie Laidlaw married James Black. Their other children included James and William.

Bortha (\textit{bor-thu}) \textit{n.} poetic name for the Borthwick Witter – ‘Where Bortha hoarse, that loads the meads with sand, Rolls her red tide to Teviot’s western strand, Through slaty hills whose sides are shag’d with thorn, Where springs, in scattered tufts, the dark-green corn’ [JL].

Borthaugh (\textit{bor-tuf}) \textit{n.} farm and house just over Martin’s Bridge on the Roberton road, about 2 miles outside Hawick. The area was also once a small thriving hamlet, including a mill, smithy, joiner’s shop and several houses, located on the haugh a little above the present cottages. It may also be the place referred to as ‘Branxholme Woodfoot’. It is recorded as a home of Scotts in the early 16th century. There was a dispute in 1528 after George Scott died, since he confessed that he had not had dispensation to marry his cousin, and so inheritance should go to Walter, eldest son by his second wife. A panel of other local Scotts decided in favour of John, the eldest son of his first wife, since he had never been declared to be illegitimate. The lands then passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk. In a charter of 1531/2 Roger Langlands gives the lands to Alan Mossman, Burgess of Edinburgh, along with the attached mill, but within a few months it was sold on to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In late 1548 it was among the farms of Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers.
The tenant in 1549 was Robert Scott, when it was among lands that were raid and burned by a group of Kers and Englishmen under Patrick, Lord Grey. In 1574 the farm ‘and mills thereof’ were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, valued at £10 ‘in time of peace’ and ‘held in chief’ of James Langlands of Wilton in blanch, for payment of a penny Scots, if asked. James Scott was there in 1579. Scott of Satchells writes it as ‘Borthoheugh’ and says that Scott of Todshawaugh derived from this family. There were 28 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Miller, Bessie Scott, Robert Scott, James Main, Margaret Graham, William Scott, Margaret Riddell, Robert Scott, Marion Scott, William Martin, Janet Telfer, David Miller, Margaret Inglis, Mary Miller, Robert Forrest, Margaret Scott, James Forrest, Adam Forrest, John Cavers, Margaret Henderson, Walter Hendry, Marion Miller, Andrew Riddell, Janet Inglis, Alison Scott, John Scott, Bessie Mathieson and Isobel Thomson. In 1690 the farm was rented to Robert and Patrick Hume, James Scott and James Ogilvie, and these men plus Robert Scott in 1691 and 1692. Robert Scott ‘Scrivener’ (presumably a lawyer), James Ogilvie, Robert Hume and James Scott were renting the farm in 1694, and also in 1696 and 1698, with widow Margaret Scott replacing her husband James. The Hearth Tax rolls list 12 separate households there in 1694. Archibald Riddell was recorded there in 1704, William Riddell in 1707 and John Riddell in 1712. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 409 acres, bounded by Wiltonburn, Brieryhill, Overhall, the River Teviot, Todshawaugh and Easter Highchesters. The small piece of land in the fork between the Teviot and Borthwick was also part of the farm at this time and it was also stated that ‘there is very little meadow in this farm and the water hath done some damage by altering its cours’. In 1718 the main farmhouse was next to the mill, with the modern farmhouse being built further to the east at a later date. William Telfer was living there in at least 1721–38, James Pott 1721–24, Walter Riddell in 1723–29, Robert Cowan in 1724, James Scott in 1724–35, Walter Scott in 1725–29, William Lorraine in 1725–36, John Kersel and William Ker in 1727, William Helm and Thomas Wilson in 1729–33 and James Beattie in 1733–35. Walter Ker, James Beattie and James Pott were there in 1751 and Robert Cowan, James Beattie, William Telfer in 1758 and Walter clerk in 1790. John Sibbald was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Dr. Walter Graham lived there in the 1850s and George Oliver was farmer in the 1860s. It is run as a Christian retreat and also a guest house, called (confusingly) Whitchester Christian Guest House and Retreat. The road to the Borthwick via Borthaugh was built in 1826, at the same time as Martin’s Bridge. The slopes immediately north of the farmhouse are the possible site of a fort or other earthwork. A stone axe found here and reported in 1888 is in the Museum – ‘The mistress of Bortugh cam’ ben, Aye blinking sae couthy and canny; But some said she had in her han’ A kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES] (many older spelling variants exits, e.g. ‘Borthauche’, with the first perhaps being ‘Borthauch’ in 1526 and 1527; it is then ‘Bourthaugh’ in 1526/7, ‘Borthauch’ in 1527, ‘Borthaucht’ in 1528, ‘Burthauch’ in 1530, ‘Borthauch’ in 1531/2, ‘Borthauch’ in 1549 and 1574, ‘Borthacht’ in 1579, ‘Borthwach’ in 1690 and ‘Bortough’ in 1705; it appears on 1650 parish maps as ‘Borthauch’ and ‘borthawche’, on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Borthauch’ and is ‘Borthough’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin has been suggested as Old English ‘fort meadow’, but seems likely to be simply ‘the flat land by the Borthwick’).

Borthaugh Cottages (bor-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages near Borthaugh farm. There were 9 separate households living there in 1841. They were listed as ‘Borthaugh Hind’s Cottages’ in 1861.

Borthaugh Fitbrig (bor-tuf-fi’-brig) n. proper name for what was popularly known as the Joogly Brig and its modern replacement.

Borthaugh Hill (bor-tuf-hill) n. hill about 2 miles from Hawick, just north of the Roberton road, height 270 m. It marked the boundary between Wilton and Roberton Parishes. At the top is a hill-fort, about 120 m by 60 m in size, and formed of 3 stony ramparts, much mutilated by ploughing. A polished stone axe was found near here (reported by J. Hardy in 1886), and is still in the Museum.

Borthaugh Hoose see Borthaugh

Borthaugh Mill (bor-tuf-mill) n. corn mill attached to Borthaugh, mentioned in a charter of 1531/2. The mill lade is clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The mill was situated quite far to the west of the modern farmhouse. The tenant there in the late 18th century was George Tait.

Borthaugh Road (bor-tuf-röd) n. private housing development built in 1970 and named after Borthaugh Hill and Borthaugh House.
Borthaugh Wudfit

Borthaugh Woodfoot, house beyond Borthaugh, also referred to as Branxholme Woodfoot. There was once a blacksmith’s here, run by 3 generations of the Pow family (perhaps taking over from the Humes, who were blacksmiths at Borthaugh at the end of the 17th century). William Riddell was there in 1759. The tenant recorded there in 1797 was Richard Thomson. On the spur of land near there between the Teviot and Borthwick there is an ancient circular earthwork, about 60 m in diameter, but almost obliterated by ploughing (it may be the place marked ‘Woodhed’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Borthwick \( (\text{thu-bor-theek}) \) n. usual name for the Borthwick Water and its valley. The area used to be more heavily populated than it is today, with many more small farms. The name is first recorded in the reign of William I, mentioned as one of the boundaries of the lands of Melrose Abbey. Lands there were later granted to the Barbour’s, the Scotts and then the Borthwicks (who took their name from the area) by the early 15th century. In 1410 the lands of ‘Borthwick and Thoft Cotys’ were resigned by Robert Scott into the hands of the Duke of Albany and granted to Sir William of Borthwick (although whether the Borthwicks held these lands earlier is unclear). The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as ‘the watter of Borthuike within the same Marche, beyng in lienth 8 myles, that is to sey from Borthwyke mouthe to Craike-crosse, wherupon was 200 pleughes’. It also appears from records that it was still fairly forested up until the early 16th century, being essentially an offshoot of Ettrick Forest; there were several cases of proprietors being fined for cutting down trees there. Craik, Howpylesay and the rest of the upper Borthwick have always been remote, and are now at the entrance to Craik Forest. The lands were once a separate barony, still referred to as such as late as 1555/6. It gave its name to the family that held the barony in the 15th and early 16th centuries. Much of the valley was populated by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century. The Chisholmes of Chisholme were also once a prominent family there. A list of ‘communicants’ in the valley in 1650 exists, essentially forming a census of the adults of the area at that time. Until the mid-18th century there was a route from Langholm to Selkirk that crossed from Teviothead via Fulnash to Howpylesay, and then via Deanburnaugh, Milsington, Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Howcleuch and Harden, then behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundistone Height. However, the road along the valley was not properly developed until the early 19th century, and not until Martin’s Brig was built (1826) did the main route to the valley go round the south of Borthaugh Hill. The area had two small ancient chapels, one at Kirk-Borthwick (near Borthwickbrae), with its churchyard at Borthwick Waas, and another near Chapelhill. The area was largely in Hassendean Parish, until Roberton Parish was created in the late 17th century. Parts of the valley have been included within the county of Selkirkshire at different times. A book ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and ‘Roberton: the making of a parish’ by George O. Wood in 1992 – ‘He passed the peel of Goldieland, And crossed old Borthwick’s roaring strand’ [SWS], ‘The green woods of Borthwick with music shall ring, When the song birds awaken their harps in the spring’ [TCh], ‘As I came down on the Borthwick side The thorn stood white as a waiting bride . . .’ [WHO], ‘Dear heart, in that serener air, If blessed souls may backward gaze, Some slender nook of memory spare For your old happy Borthwick days’ [IWL] (the name occurs around 1200 as ‘Bordewich’, was later ‘Borthwic’, ‘Borthwick’, etc.; it is ‘Borthwyk’ in 1466, ‘Borthuik’ in 1533 and ‘Borthik’ in 1547/8; it is ‘Borthäck R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Borthwick’ W on Adair’s c. 1688 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘bord wic’, meaning ‘the steadings made of boards’, although there may be influence from Old Norse ‘bor’).

Borthwick \( (\text{borth-wik}) \) n. hamlet in Midlothian, near Gorebridge and adjacent to Borthwick Castle. The name ultimately derives from the Borthwick region in the Borders, original home of the family who built the castle there in the 15th century. The surrounding parish was formerly called Lochorwalt or Locherwart and belonged to the Hays until purchased by the Borthwicks in the 15th century. They changed the name and transferred their main seat there from the Borthwick valley.

Borthwick \( (\text{borth-wik}) \) n. area near Duns that was the site of an L-shaped tower of the 16th century. There was probably an early connection with the lands in the Borthwick valley, possibly through the Borthwick family. The name first appears in 1502/3 and it was split into Easter and Wester portions soon after. The Cockburn family owned the lands for a couple of centuries. The castle remains were demolished by quarrying...
Borthwick

about 1979, following emergency archaeological excavations. A cairn now marks the spot, and plays a role in the Duns Riding of the Marches ceremony.

Borthwick (bor-theek) n. Alan (14th C.) recorded along with Robert in 1362 as ‘dominus Roberto et Alani de Borthwyk’, when they acted as security for a loan to the Bishop of St. Andrews. He was thus a cleric of St. Andrews. His relationship to other Borthwicks is unknown.

Alexander Hay (1775/6–1837) son of William. He succeeded his grandfather as farmer at Sorbie, when only 16. He was farmer at Sorbie in 1797 according to the Horse Tax, Dog Tax and Clock Tax Rolls. He later moved to Hopsrig, but also held the tenancy of the farms of Langshawburn, Mosspeebie and Lodgegill. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Thomas Chalmers. Their children included: Isabella, eldest daughter (1808–1827); Elizabeth (b.1809); William (b.1811); Thomas Chalmers (b.1813), who continued to farm at Hopsrig and Langshawburn; Walter (1815–25), 3rd son; Alexander Hay (b.1817), who farmed at Mosspeebie; Agnes Jane Helen (b.1820); and John James Malcolm (b.1822), who farmed at Tarong in Queensland, but returned to Scotland. Alexander (1798/9–1877) miller of Newmill on Teviot, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1836 he was listed as joint proprietor with Robert Hardie, farmer at Sorbie. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Newmill, living with his brother Jane, brother Thomas and younger family members Jessie and James. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 60 acres there, with his brother as miller and sister Helen as housekeeper. In 1861 he was farmer of 50 acres, employing 1 man, and was unmarried, living with his sister Helen and brother Thomas. It seems likely he was son of Thomas and Jane Little. Alexander Hay (b.1817) son of Alexander Hay, he was farmer at Mosspeebie. He was recorded there in 1841, 1851 (when he was a ‘Pastoral Farmer’ with 4 labourers) and 1861 (when he was farmer of 4000 acres, employing 3 shepherds and with 5 farm servants). He married Jane Murray in Westerkirk in 1856 (although this date is confusing). Their children included: William (b.1849), who emigrated to Australia; Alexander Hay (b.1857); and Janet (b.1859). Alexander (b.1836) son of Andrew, he was a tweed manufacturer in the partnership Borthwick & Blenkhorn from the mid-1870s until about 1880, and in Borthwick & Ingram in the 1880s. He was Treasurer for St. George’s Kirk 1895–1914. Alexander Hay (b.1857) son of Alexander Hay and Jane Murray. He emigrated to Victoria, Australia along with his brother William. Their uncle John James Malcolm had gone to Australia earlier. He married, but had only 1 child, a daughter, Agnes (who died young). Andrew (1802/3–86) grocer and spirit dealer who lived on the High Street (No. 4, near the Tower Hotel) and later at 6 Allars Crescent. He is listed as a ‘victual dealer’ on the High Street in 1837 and as a corn dealer on Backdamgate in 1852. In 1851 he was living on Backdamgate. He married Agnes Oliver, who died in 1884, aged 77. Their children included Andrew Thomas (who died young), Andrew, Thomas (tweed merchant), Elizabeth Purdom (who married architect John Guthrie), Thomas and Alexander. They are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Probably the same Andrew was one of the first deacons of St. George’s Kirk, from 1844, also being Treasurer for the church for about 30 years. Christopher (b.1808/9) born in Hawick, he was recorded as teacher of mathematics at the Hawick Grammar School in 1837. In 1851 he was schoolmaster in Middlebie, Dumfriesshire. His wife was Bella and their children included Jessie, Alexander John and Thomas William. David (16th C.) Procurator (i.e. lawyer) acting for Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme in several cases in the 1540s, especially against the Kers. He is recorded as ‘Maister Dauid Borthuik’ as a procurator in the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. He is probably David of Locchill, who became Lord Advocate of Scotland in 1573. George (d.c.1446) Archdeacon of Glasgow from 1414 until about 1446. His precise relationship to the Lairds of Borthwick is unclear. Grizel nee Scott (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ Scott of Branzholme and Buccleuch. Her mother was Janet Beaton. She married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and is said to have had an unhappy marriage. In 1569 she was served heir to the superiority of her father’s lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall, as well as the alternate patronage of the Church of Wilton. She accused her husband of associating with Elspeth Preston. In 1579/80 she brought an action against her sister Margaret for the crimes of ‘Incest and Adulterie’ with her husband. She in turn was accused of the same crimes with Walter Scott of Tushielaw (possibly husband of another sister, or other close relative); however, ‘the assyse was desert’ (i.e. the trial was abandoned). She brought an action against her husband Lord Borthwick in 1582/3 for desertion and cruelty. These events point to some sisterly rivalry perhaps, but also foreshadow a later feud when Grizel of Thistlelaw eloped with a later Walter of Tushielaw in 1616, with that Walter being killed by a group of Scotts (perhaps the inspiration for the Braes of Yarrow). In 1580 she is recorded owing £10 to Elizabeth Turnbull in Haining Castle (perhaps wife of Thomas Scott of Haining). She secondly (before 1593) married Walter, son of John Cairncross of Colmslie. Her son Walter Cairncross was declared a rebel in about 1610. Her seal of 1576 bears the inscription ‘GRISSILIDIS SCOT’ and has 2 stars and a crescent on a ‘bend’. She was said to have been an early practitioner of the italic form of handwriting. James (1570–99) 7th Lord Borthwick. In 1573 he was served heir to his brother William, Master of Borthwick, in the Barony of Borthwick, including lands in the counties of Selkirk, Edinburgh, Peebles, Lanark, Aberdeen and Berwick.
He was probably a minor at this time, and it may be that he did not succeed until his father died in 1582. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, Lord Yester and was succeeded by his oldest surviving son, John. James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel, recorded in 1708 and 1716. He married Margaret Miller and their children included: James (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1716). The witnesses in 1708 were Walter Nixon and James Gray in Whitlaw and in 1716 were Simon Miller and Walter Nixon, also in Hawick Shiel. Agne (b.1714) and an unnamed child
(b.1719) may also be his children. In about 1735 he was said to have fallen asleep on Hawick Common when the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, came past with the Hawick sheep and ‘davered him with a staff, and hounded James Borthwick’s gear with two dogs off the Common down the corn and meadow’. James (18th C.) cottar in Gilmansleuch in 1752. He complained about a bar-er in Selkirk for unpaid rent. James (b.c.1790) from Langholm, he was a weaver in Newcastle. He is listed among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. His wife was Elizabeth.
James (19th C.) grocer at 70 High Street in the 1860s. Jemima, O.B.E. (1868–??) born in Hawick, she was councillor and Bailie for several years, working in the Post Office and moving to London in 1888. In 1912 she was put in charge of the women’s section of the new National Insurance scheme, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1920 for service to the State. She retired to Hawick where she organised women’s voluntary organisations, evacuees’ accommodation and other social causes. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johann de Borthwick’ in the 1440s and 1450s. He was presumably a brother of the Laird of Borthwick at that time. He could be the John ‘de Borthwyk’ listed along with Alan as a clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews in 1444. John (15th C.) listed as ‘John of Borthwic’ in 1497 when he had remission for the slaughter of ‘Vigeane Multare’ and for fleeing to England afterwards, as well as ‘tresson in the kings person, birynyn and revasing of women except’. He could be the John of Borthwick of Crookston who (along with his brother Thomas) had a court case in 1494 with Alexander, son of Adam Hoppringle of that Ilk, for tearing down the tower house at Burnhouse. He was also mentioned in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing livestock and goods from his farm at Crookston. Sir John of Cineray (d.bef. 1570) known as an evangelical Protestant reformer, he was tried after he had already fled to England in 1540. He is likely to have been a descendant of the Lords of Borthwick, but the exact relationship is unclear. He married Margaret, daughter of the 4th (or 5th) William, Lord Borthwick. In 1538 he and his wife Margaret had a charter of the lands of Borthwickbrae, granted by his father-in-law. His children with Margaret included William, who was called to the succession of the Borthwick estates in 1570. In Geneva in 1556 he secondly married Jane Bonespoir and had at least one more child, Jane. John 5th Lord (1520–66) son of William, the 4th Lord. He was probably the last head of his family to own lands in the Borthwick valley.
In 1543 he is recorded complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford being granted lands in Stow.
In 1551 he was recorded as superior of the lands of Hoscote when they were inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, and in the ‘precept of sasine’ for these lands in 1555/6. He was a Privy Councillor and is recorded many times in association with council business in the 1540s to 60s.
He also fought at Ancrum Moor. He was involved in the struggle for the Regency, being a supporter of James, Earl of Arran, and was for a while imprisoned in Dalkeith Castle, his wife luring Patrick, Earl of Bothwell as a prisoner at Borthwick Castle in retaliation. In 1547 he was to be excommunicated by William Langlands, a clerk from St. Andrews Diocese, but the priest was given rough treatment by the mob, urged on by the ‘Abbot of Unreason’; he was thrown in the mill dam and made to eat the letters of excommunication, after they had been soaked in wine! He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1560. He was one of the few Lords who dissented when the Confessions of Faith were read before Parliament in 1560. He married Isobel, daughter of David Lindsay, Earl of Crawford. His children included: William, who became the 6th Lord; Mariotta, who married Andrew Hoppringle of Galashiels; Isobel, who married Thomas Davidson and secondly William Hart; and Margaret, who married Patrick Hepburn, Parson of Kinoir. John 8th Lord (d.1623) son of James, he succeeded his father in about 1602 and had a charter for the main family lands in Midlothian in 1610. However, it was not until 1621 that he was served heir to his father’s lands in Selkirkshire, namely ‘the lands of Borthuik, alias Borthwickbre’, with pertinents commonly called Slack and Westside of Howcleuch, united within the Barony of Borthwick. He married Lilias, daughter of Mark Ker, Earl of Lorn. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Haywick Parish in 1676. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William, who farmed at Raeshaw (near Heriot) and later Howpasley. He farmed at Howpasley with his brother William. It was said that the Covenanting martyr Andrew Hislop spent the night in their house in 1685 before being hunted down and shot by Claverhouse’s men. His name was among those local men accused of being a Covenanter. Thomas (1707/8–93) younger son of William and Janet Scott. He farmed at Shaws of Ettrick Parish from 1732, and remained there until 1783. In 1760 he also started farming Langshawburn. He moved to Sorbie in Ewesdale, where he died. He married Jean Elliot, from Borthwickbrae; she was daughter of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and she was also the niece of his brother William, who had also married an Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their eldest son was William (1749/50–92), who pre-deceased him. He was succeeded as farmer at Sorbie by his grandson Alexander Hay. Thomas (1759–1816) son of Alexander, miller at Miltown, Langholm, and Margaret Anderson. He was farmer and miller at Newmill. He was recorded there in both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls. He married Jean (or Jane) Little (1772–1849) in 1798; she was also from Hawick Parish. Their children were probably: Alexander (c.1799–1877), farmer at Newmill; Helen (b.c.1801), housekeeper for her brothers at Newmill; Margaret (c.1802–77), who married Dickson Scott; Christopher; Jane (b.c.1810); Isabella (b.1811); and Thomas (b.c.1814), miller at Newmill. Thomas (b.1813/4) corn miller at Newmill. He was younger brother of Alexander, who was the main farmer there. He was still unmarried in 1861. Thomas (1843/4–77) son of Andrew, he was a tweed merchant. Walter (18th/19th C.) postmaster in Newcastleton. In 1841 his wife Janet Elliot was listed as ‘Wife of Walter Borthwick Post to Langholm’, living around 29 Montagu Street. His children included Helen, Thomas, Jesse and Walter. Sir William of Borthwick (bef. 1368–c.1417) son of Thomas, first of his family to be styled ‘of Borthwick’. In 1368, while still a minor, he appeared in court in a dispute with Thomas of Hay over lands at Middleton. In 1378 he was in possession of the lands of ‘Catkune’ near Edinburgh. He witnessed the grant of Drumlanrig to William Douglas in the period 1384–88. He was Scottish Ambassador to England 1398–1413. In 1401 he witnessed a charter at Dunbar for John ‘de Suynoun’. In 1410 he was already ‘of Borthwick’ when he was granted the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoftcotys’ (possibly Hoscote) in Selkirkshire by the Regent Albany on the resignation of these lands by Robert Scott. He was thus one of the first of his family to have an association with any place called ‘Borthwick’, the name that they subsequently transferred to Midlothian. It is possible that the family was previously called either Scott or Barbour, given that these were the former owners of the lands in the Borthwick valley. However, probably the same Sir William was witness to a charter of the Countess of Mar in 1389 when he was already ‘of Borthwick’, so the charter of 1410 may have been a confirmation. In 1405 he was one of the hostages for Archibald, Earl of Douglas, who was captured at the Battle of Shrewsbury. He also witnessed the charter of the lands and Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Hawick in about 1406. And he witnessed other charters and notorial instruments in 1410 and 1411. In 1410 and 1415 he received expenses at the Days of Marches. He was ‘of Katkone’ when witnessing charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Around 1413 he witnessed a document for David Home of Wedderburn. In 1415 he was among a group of supporters of the Earl of Douglas who refused to pay customs to the King. He witnessed a charter for James Dundas in 1416, along with his son William. In 1417 he (along with his son and heir William) witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. His children included: Janet, who married Adam Hepburn of Hailes, and was thus the ancestor of the Earls of Bothwell; Sir William, who succeeded; George, who became Archdeacon of Glasgow; and John, also a priest. Note that there may be 2 generations mixed together here. Another daughter of his (or perhaps of his son William) married Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgy. Sir William of Borthwick (c.1384–bef. 1439) son of Sir William. He was probably the second of his family to be ‘of Borthwick’, although it is possible there is one extra William in there. In 1412 he broke arrest and shipped his goods without paying custom. He is probably the William, son and heir of Sir William, who witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1417, other witnesses being his father and Robert ‘of Borthwye’. He was Captain of Edinburgh Castle in 1420. He was a hostage for James I in 1421, was a Commissioner to negotiate for the King’s release in 1423 and was again a substitute hostage for James I in the period 1424–27. He witnessed several charter granted by James I around the 1420s. He was Knighted in 1424/5. In 1411 he married Beatrice, daughter of Henry Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, and may also later have married a daughter of Thomas Hay of Locherworth. His children included: Sir William, who became 1st Lord Borthwick; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas, 1st Lord of Dalkeith and later 1st Earl of Morton, and secondly married Sir George Crichton, Earl of Caithness; and probably Margaret, who married Sir William Abernethy of Saltoun, owner of Teindside and Harwood, and then William Douglas, younger of Dalkeith (who would have been her sister’s step-son, thus requiring papal dispensation). Sir William Hay (possibly his father-in-law or brother-in-law) sold him the estate of Locherworth when he moved to Yester, and in 1430 the King granted permission for a tower to be built there; this was the original Borthwick Castle, a version of which still stands there to this day. Thus the family moved their centre to Midlothian, although they would retain lands in the Borthwick valley for several generations. William 1st Lord Borthwick (c.1412–c.83) son of Sir William and Beatrice Sinclair. He was Knighted in 1430 and became Lord Borthwick in 1452. In 1450 he had a ‘composition of resignation’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He witnessed a charter for James II in 1450/1. In 1458/9 he gained the lands of Glenegelt in Berwickshire. He was Ambassador to England in 1459 and 1461. In 1463 he was among the witnesses in Edinburgh to the charter erecting Branxholme into a Barony. He served as a justiciar ‘on south half of Forth’ in 1464/5, and in that capacity was mentioned in the sasine of that year for William of Douglases getting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. Also in 1464/5 he was on the 'retour of service' for Archibald Douglas to inherit his father's Barony of Cavers and Sheriffsip of Roxburgh. In 1473/4 he had remission for two of his sons, for unspecified crimes. He married an unknown woman in 1426/7 and secondly married Mariota Hoppringle about 1458. His children included: Sir William, who became 2nd Lord; James, who lived at Glenelt; Sir Thomas, who lived at Colliaw and married Helen Rutherford; Alexander, who lived at Adilsaw; John, who was 1st of Crookston; Margaret, who married Sir John Maxwell of Calderwood; and Agnes, who married Sir Archibald Dundas of that Ilk. William 2nd Lord (d.c.1484) son of William the 1st Lord, he appears not to have lived long as Lord himself (although these generations are confused). He is recorded as son and heir apparent of the 1st Lord when they witnessed a charter in 1468. He served as Ambassador to England in the 1470s. He was probably the Lord Borthwick who was witness to the confirmation of the transfer of the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane in 1483. He may have been the Lord William who was an auditor in the Exchequer Rolls of 1483. He may have married a Hoppringle of that Ilk, but again, this could be confused with his father. His children included: Sir William, who became 3rd Lord; Catherine, who married William Cunningham, 4th Earl of Glencairn, and whose son Alexander held the Barony of Hassendean; Mary, who married James Hoppringle of Galashiels, who must have been a cousin; Alexander, who married Margaret Lawson, lived at Nenthorn, died in 1513 and was father of William, 1st Laird of Soltray (i.e. Soutra); Agnes, who married Sir David Kennedy, 1st Earl of Cassillis, who died at Flodden; Adam; and Margaret, who married Sir Oliver Sinclair of Roslin. Some of these children may have been in the next generation. William 3rd Lord (d.1503) son of the 2nd Lord, although these generations are very confused, and even the numbering of the Lords is uncertain. He is recorded in a charter of 1483/4 as son of the late William. He held the office of Lord Auditor, Master of the Household and Privy Councillor, as well as being Conservator for at least 2 treaties with England. In 1488 he was one of the witnesses to the charter whereby James III regranted the regality of Cavers to William Douglas of Cavers. As Clerk of Accounts of the Royal Household, his name appears several times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1490s. He would have been the superior of the lands of Hoskote when they were resigned to him in 1493/4 and then conferred on the Homes. He was probably owner of the lands later called Borthwickbrae. In 1494/5 it is recorded that sheep were stolen from his farm of Lugar (near Stow). His wife's name is unknown. His children included William, who became 4th Lord; and Gavin of Fenton, who was illegitimate and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenton of that Ilk. However, it is hard to separate his own children from his father's children. William (d.1513) said to have been 3rd Lord Borthwick. He is on a list of men who were slain at Flodden. He had a sasine in 1503 for his lands of Borthwick near Edinburgh (and Herrit, Middleton, etc.), as well as Borthwick in Teviotdale. He was 'Willelmo domino Borthuik' when he witnessed a document relating to the Scotts of Whames and Muirhouse in 1505/6 and the William, Lord 'Borthuik' who had remission for theft and mutilation in 1506. He is said to have married Maryota de Hope Pringle and been succeeded by his eldest son William. William 4th Lord (d.1543) son of the 3rd Lord. However, it is possible there was another Lord William who died at Flodden, so even the numbering of the Lords is uncertain; there were about 8 generations all called William! He was a guardian of the infant James V after Flodden and was involved with securing a treaty with England in 1517. He was superior of the lands of Hoskote according to a charter of 1522. In 1530 he was involved in a conflict over his lands of Stow. In 1535 the King revoked several earlier charters relating to the lands held by the Homes, and so Hoskote (or perhaps its superiority) passed from him to George, Lord Home. Also in 1535 his servant, John Mark, had a horse violently taken from him, part of the riving crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was found not guilty. In 1538 James V confirmed the lands of Locherworth (where Borthwick Castle was built) to him, as well as the lands of Borthwick in Selkirkshire. He was a great lover of falconry. He probably married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, Lord of Yester. His children included: Thomas (possibly also known as Arthur), who married Mariot (or Majory), daughter of George, Lord Seton, but who died before his father; John, who married Isobel Lindsay and became 5th Lord; Catherine, who married Sir James Crichton of Frendraught; Janet, who married Alexander Lauder of Hatton; and Margaret, who married Sir John Borthwick of Cineray. William 6th Lord (d.1582) son of John, the 5th Lord (also sometimes referred to as the 7th Lord). He may have been the first head of the family to have no direct connection with the area which was the origin of their name, the Borthwick valley. He was superior of lands in Peeblesshire and was a great supporter of Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 (along with Scott of Branxholme, Langlands of that Ilk and Scott of Thirlestane) he was one of the sureties for some Elliots, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. In 1573 he was surety for several Borderers and in signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, although he alleged that she was involved in an intrigue (with Walter Scott of Tushielaw) in 1579/80, while she brought a complaint of desertion and cruelty against him in 1581, including claims of ‘strying and dinging of her to the effusion of her blude in greit quantitie ... being than greit with chyld’. He was also accused of an intrigue with his wife’s sister Margaret as well as Elspeth Preston. His children included: William, who pre-deceased his father; James, who became 7th Lord and married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, Lord Yester; William; John; and Alexander. He died in Edinburgh from ‘the French disease’, i.e. syphilis. William (17th C.) said to have been a descendant of Lord Borthwick, he was tenant farmer at Raeshaw near Heriot. He fought a duel that resulted in the death of James Pringle, after which he hid out in Eskdale. After it seemed like he was safe from prosecution he became tenant at Howpalesley. He died there, leaving sons William and Thomas, who continued on the farm. William (d.c.1684) tenant in Trow Mill. His will is recorded in 1684 William (17th C.) son of William. With his brother Thomas he farmed at Howpalesley. It appears that the brothers were Covenanter supporters, and had their farm taken away in about 1685. They moved to Glendinning, where he became tenant. In 1701 he married Janet, sister of David Scott of Merylaw. They had sons: William, who farmed at Glendinning; Thomas, who farmed at Shaws on Ettrick Water; and probably Walter, who lived at Enzieholm. William (18th C.) son of William and Janet Scott. He farmed at Glendinning until 1753, when he sold his stock of sheep by public auction. He then purchased the small farm of Cassock, where he retired a ruined man at the age of 60. He may have later moved to Irvine and worked as a customs inspector. He married Margaret Elliot, who was from Borthwickbrae. They had 3 daughters and 2 sons, including Lieut.-Col. William, who was at the Siege of Gibraltar. William (1749/50–92) eldest son of Thomas, who farmed at Shaws and Langshawburn, and Jean Elliot, from Borthwickbrae. He is probably the William recorded at Sorbie on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–90. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Alexander Hay, portioner of Inveresk (her mother being Janet Smith). His eldest son Alexander Hay inherited the farms of Sorbie and Langshawburn. He died a year before his father Thomas (who is recorded at Sorbie in 1792). His widow is probably the Mrs. Borthwick who was recorded at Sorbie on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. She secondly married Walter Lunn, merchant of Hawick, and was involved in the legal case against Lunn when he was declared bankrupt in 1799. William (b.1824/5) from St. Boswells, he was a tailor in Denholm. His shop was on Eastgate. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scott, who was from Lilliesleaf. Their children included Catherine, Walter, Mary J., William S. and Charles. William (b.1849) son of Alexander Hay and Jane Murray. He emigrated to Victoria, Australia with his brother Alexander Hay. He became bank manager in Maffra, and eventually settled in Sale. He married Ada Maud Mary Bell and had many descendants, including several with the same family forenames (formerly spelled ‘Borthwiku’, ‘Borthwic’, etc.).

Borthwick Brae see Borthwickbrae

Borthwickbrae (bor-theek-brä) n. mansion and estate just west of Roberton. This may have been essentially the site of the estate in the Borthwick valley that was mentioned in the early 13th century and later passed through the hands of Barbour, Scots and Borthwicks into the 16th century. The ancient chapel of Kirkborthwick was located nearby. In 1538 it was granted to the protestant reformer Sir John Borthwick of Cinray and his wife Margaret, daughter of William, Lord Borthwick. It was still a property of Lord Borthwick when inherited by John (8th Lord), from his father James, and was still considered as part of the main family Barony of Borthwick in Midlothian, and had pertinent of ‘Slak et West-sye de Howcleuch’. In 1581 the lands were assessed for tax at £10. It was later owned by the Scotts, with the deceased William Scott of Borthwickbrae being recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1678, when his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. There were 21 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Scott, Margaret Scott, William Scott, Walter Scott, Andrew Rutherford, Walter Armstrong, John Scott, George Short, George Purdie, John Scott ‘Edr.’, John Scott ‘Younger’, Lilian Davidson, Janet Hislop, Adam Hislop, Janet Little, Margaret Little, Bessie Johnston, Mary Thomson, Margaret Elliot, Katherine Hislop and Bessie Little. An aisle in Selkirk Kirk for the Lairds was mentioned in 1676. It was owned by the Elliots (or Elliotts) from the end of the 17th century, the first Laird being William from 1698. The 4th Laird became Elliott-Lockhart, and the family produced M.Ps. for Selkirkshire. The main house is Georgian, built mostly around 1800 on the site of an earlier building. It is 3 stories, harled, and with Palladian windows on the wings. In 1887 the estate passed to Scott-Noble of Glebe Mills, with a new extension on the south side (and a new lodge) erected soon afterwards, designed by J.P. Alison. The Lairdship was formerly very important in the area, commanding a ‘seating’ in Robertson Kirk of 10½ feet (2nd in size after Bucleuch) according to a list of 1701. This area was formerly called Kirk-Borthwick and was the site of the former parish church. It was where Sir Arthur Forbes’ force stopped with their prisoner, Andrew Kerr of Chatto, before the pursuing English Commonwealth force caught up with them at Philip in 1653. Up until 1689/90, when Robertson was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish. Walter Turnbull was recorded there in 1711, Walter Haliburton in 1714, Robert Murray in 1718–21, James Donaldson in 1720–23, John Shortreed in 1720, Robert Scott in 1722 and Andrew Main in 1724. Walter Watson was there in at least 1723–34. James Riddell in 1734, James Noble in 1735, James Anderson in 1737, Robert Gledstains in 1742, James Murray in 1743–53, Alexander Arthur in 1756 and Thomas Common in 1761–63. John Clerk and John Henderson were listed there in the 1770s and John Waddell in the 1780s. In 1785 John Elliot paid the land tax on about £950 for the Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch, with Thomas Scott of Stonedge (Elliot’s father-in-law) holding about half of it in liferent. Also in 1785 Elliot paid the portion of ‘the feu duty formerly payable to Lord Borthwick’. John Scott was tenant there in the 1790s. The estate once extended to 4,345 acres, including Borthwickbrae, Greenbank, West Alemoor and Burnfoot, which were all in Selkirkshire. In 1802 William Elliot paid the Land Tax of £950 for Borthwickbre and the west side of Howcleuch. There was a post office here in the early part of the 20th century. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (so-called presumably for the steepness of the ‘High Road’ which passes there; it is ‘Borthuikbra’ in 1573 and 1589, ‘Borthuikbray’ in 1581, ‘Borthwickebre’ in 1621, ‘Borthwickebra’ in 1644 and ‘Borthwickbrae’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Borthikbrae’ on Blaen’s 1654 map and has its modern form on Adair’s c. 1688 map).

Borthwickbrae Burn (bor-theek-brä-burn) n. stream that rises near Whaupshaw and runs to the east to join the north side of the Borthwick Water near Borthwickbrae. On its south side, fairly near Milsington, there is an area where rig and furrow cultivation can be seen in aerial photographs.

Borthwickbrae Burnfit (bor-theek-brä-burn-fi’) n. farm, houses and former community where the Borthwickbrae Burn meets the Borthwick, and where ‘the High Road’ joins ‘the Low Road’. It has also been known as ‘Borthwickburnfit’ and is called simply ‘Burnfoot’ by residents of the Borthwick valley (but there are too many other places of the same name!). Walter Coltart was there in 1736, Robert Cowan in 1742, John Stoddart in 1764–72, John Col tart and Alexander Heatley in 1772, John Coltart in 1775, James Robson in 1780 and Thomas Inglis in 1787. James Murray and Walter La idlaw were farmers there in 1797 and James Murray lived there in 1798. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 18th to early 20th centuries, at the end of the row of cottages. William Co therd (who lived to the age of 102) was smith there in the early 18th century, Thomas Anderson in 1797 and another Thomas Anderson in 1841. The smiddy was run by the Pow family from the mid-1800s and was a popular meeting place for the local youth. The estate was farmed by the Scott-Nobles through much of the 20th century. A neolithic axe head was found there, donated by Frak Scott in 1966, and is now in the National Museum (it is ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1742; it is ‘Borthwickbrun Foot’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Borthwickbrae Cottages (bor-theek-brä-ko’-ce-jeez) n. row of cottages past Robertson, popularly known as the Cement Cottages.

Borthwickbrae Heights (bor-theek-brä-hītts) n. popular name for the high ground roughly between Greenbank and Alemoor.

Borthwickbrae Parkheid (bor-theek-brä-pawrk-head) n. former name for a farmstead above Borthwickbrae. John Ballantyne was there in 1764, John Inglis in 1771 and Gideon Scott in 1772. Gideon Scott and Thomas Rae were there in 1774, when it is ‘B. Brae parkhead’. John Rae was there in 1781, John Waddell in 1786, William Beattie in 1787, Peter Waldie in 1792.
Borthwickburn

Adam Nichol in 1793, Walter Scott and William Lockie in 1798 and Walter Scott in 1800. Thomas Scott was shepherd there in 1808 and George Carter also lived there in 1808 (also sometimes just Parkhead).

Borthwickburn (bor-theek-burn) n. former name for a farmstead in Roberton Parish. William Sinton was there in 1714. It may be the same as Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Borthwickburnfit (bor-theek-burn-fi) n. another name for Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Borthwick Castle (borthwik-burn-sul) n. 15th century double tower near Gorebridge in Midlothian, known for its extremely thick walls. It was built by Sir William Borthwick in 1430, on the site of an earlier tower that had been owned by the Hays. The former name for the area was Locherworth, with the new name coming from the family, which in turn derives from the Borthwick Water area. Mary Queen of Scots and the Earl of Bothwell were besieged there in 1567, both managing to escape. Cromwell’s army attacked it with cannon in 1650 and it was soon after abandoned. Restored in the period 1890–1914, it was converted into a hotel in 1973.

Borthwick Chaipel (bor-theek-chā-pul) n. name used by locals into the early 20th century for Borthwick Waas Cemetery (presumably referring to the ancient church).

Borthwick Court (bor-theek-kōr) n. housing developed by Eildon Housing for elderly residents, built off Borthwick Road in the 1990s.

Borthwickhaugh (bor-theek-hawgh) n. former name for an area in the Borthwick valley, whose precise location is unclear. John Harkness was living there in 1707. In 1709 William Harkness was recorded as tenant there and Walter Scott also lived there. In 1711 Wilton Parish appointed someone to act as teacher to the local children there (it is ‘Borthickhaug of M…law’ and ‘Borthickhaugh’ in 1709).

Borthwick Hill (bor-theek-hil) n. former name for a hill between Branxholme and Hawick, perhaps referring to Branxholme park Hill or Borthaugh Hill. It was stated in the time of James I that it was one of the places in Scotland where gold could be found, and Col. Borthwick (Director of Mines in the late 17th century) reported that copper was found on its northern side.

Borthwick Kirk (bor-theek-kirk) n. another name for Kirk Borthwick.

Borthwick Mains (bor-theek-mānz) n. farm 6.5 km west of Hawick, by the left-hand side of the road shortly before Robertson. It was also known as ‘Borthwickshiel Mains’ and was probably part of the demesne lands of the Barony of Borthwick. It was a 5-pound land when inherited by Walter Ker of Littledean, from his father Andrew Ker of Hirsel in 1575; it was then described as demesne lands of Borthwickshiel, called ‘Mains’, with another adjacent 5-pound land on the east side also inherited by Ker at the same time. There were 30 ‘communicants’ recorded at the farm in 1650, namely John Wilson, Margaret Scott, Margaret Riddell, Walter Riddell, Margaret Hislop, Willia Hislop, James Wilson, Christian Clerk, David Glendinning, Janet Kilpatrick, Margaret Hendry, Robert Learmonth, Agnes Hangingside, James Learmonth, William Noble, Margaret Armstrong, Malle Noble, Walter Riddell, Margaret Chisholme, Elizabeth Scott, Robert Riddell, Margaret Scott, Michael Scott, Chritsian Scott, Helen Scott, John Fenwick, Esther Scott, James Scott and Margaret Scott. The farm was part of the Harden estate in the 17th century and was in Hassendean Parish before Robertson Parish was formed in the late 17th century. It also appears to have formally been part of the Barony of Maxton when that was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. James Scott was there in at least the period 1703-17. Ownership of the lands passed from Gideon Scott of Highchester to Walter Scott of Woll in about 1707. Robert Cowan was there in at least 1710–16, John Learmonth in 1717–34, Walter Hume in 1720–23, John Gowans in 1722, John Scott in 1723, Thomas Hobkirk in 1725, William Allan in 1726, Thomas Learmonth in 1727 and 1728, Walter Turnbull in 1727, John Taylor in 1729–36, George Turnbull in 1731 and George Scott in 1735. James Laidlaw was there in 1743, James Scott in 1752, James Hume and Walter Turnbull in 1762, James Murray in 1788–93 and Walter Murray in 1792. Thomas Elliot was farmer there in 1797, mason Andrew Chisholme was living there in 1798 and mason Thomas Scott in 1799. In the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed as ‘Mains of Borthwickshiel’, with Charles Scott of Howcleuch as owner and the valuation being £146 4s 9d (£168 in 1811, perhaps including the teinds). Another Thomas Elliot farmed there in the 1860s. In the latter half of the 20th century it became the local post office. It was once the part of the demesne lands of the Barony of Borthwick. Here stands a mysterious stone, bearing a carving of a salmon-like fish, which was once in the Teviot at Commonside. It was believed once to be a Pictish stone, but it may in fact have served to mark fishing rights in the 6th or 7th centuries; it is 1.5 m high and roughly square in section (often formerly called simply ‘Mains’ or ‘the Mains’, also written ‘Maines’ or ‘Mainse’ and sometimes ‘Borthwickshiel Maines’); it was ‘Borthuikmains’ in 1586, ‘lie Maynes de Borthwickscheills’ in 1670 and ‘Mainse’ in 1762; it is ‘The Maines’ on a parish map of 1650 and is marked ‘Mains’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was presumably once the home farm for Borthwickshiel; there is another Borthwick Mains in Midlothian).

the Borthwicks (thu-bor-theeks, borth-wiks) n. family that possibly originally came from Hungary and were granted lands in the valley of the Borthwick Water in the late 11th century. In the 14th century they acquired more lucrative lands elsewhere, moving their seat to Catcune, and building Borthwick Castle near Gorebridge about 1430, when the first Lord Borthwick was created. By this time they had no local presence, but were of great influence in Midlothian and elsewhere.

Borthwickshiel (bor-theek-sheelz) n. farm estate and former hamlet just north of Roberton. Before Roberton Parish was created it was contained within Hassendean. The estate was once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, and as such was forfeited by Sir Laurence of Abernethy in the reign of Robert II (about 1375), passing to Sir William de Lindsay. In the reign of James IV it appears to have been connected with an official of the Court. In the early 15th century the northern part of the estate was possessed by Sir Laurence Abernethy, then passed (probably through marriage) to Sir William Douglas of Strathbrock. About 1425 Douglas granted the (half) lands to George Crichton of Cairns, who sold them to the Kers. In 1433/4 there are ‘letters of obligation’ by Stephen Crichton of the Cairns and James of Parkle of Linlithgow promising that they would compensate Andrew Ker of Altonburn if the heirs of Sir William Douglas of Hawthornden tried to claim the lands. In 1444 all the lands were granted by George Crichton to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. However, the lands of ‘Hardenwod’, contained in the estate were still held in tenandry by Henry Wood, Chaplain (possibly of Kirk Borthwick or of Hassendean); in 1445 he leased his tenandry for 19 years to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. By 1502 they were owned by the Kers of Dohlston. In that year 3 brothers from Liddesdale called Armstrong were tried for burning it and stealing 300 sheep, 60 oxen and cows, 20 horses and other goods. In 1526 part of it was destroyed in the raids led by the Earl of Angus to weed out thieves on the Border. And in 1543 it was burned by the English during the ‘Rough Wooing’, with 6 prisoners, 60 cows, and 10 horses taken. In the 17th century it was owned by the Scotts of Harden. Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras paid the land tax for £600 there in 1678 (when it was listed under Hassendean Parish). It was later owned by a branch of the Elliots and then the Potts of Todrig. There were 22 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Robert Elliot, Euphemia Hastie, Thomas Elliot, William Paterson, Michael Gledstaines, Margaret Stevenson, Robert Paterson, Malie Thomson, Archibald Paterson, Helen ‘Haire’, Margaret Paterson, Marion Scott, Janet Alastair, Robert Rule, Margaret Riddell, Bessie Rule, John Brydon, Helen ‘Birrens’, Malie ‘Birrens’, James Baptie and Bessie Murray. Robert Elliot was tenant here, as well as in Bewlie. His son (later Laird of Borthwickbrae) was probably the William who paid tax on 4 hearths here in 1694, with other residents being John Reid and James Noble. There were lands there, formally in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, which were inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1694. Thomas Scott was recorded there in 1710, Robert Larmouth in 1711, James Anderson in 1713, Adam Fletcher in at least 1718–24 and William Fletcher in 1721–29. Adam Scott paid tax for 16 windows there in 1748. Walter Scott was living there in 1762, David Scott in 1763–64, James Kidd in 1780–85 and Adam Robson and William Black in 1785. Alexander Pott was recorded as owner in 1789–97, with William Graham also a tenant there. Alexander and Robert ‘Potts, Esqrs’ were listed as owners in 1788, when it was valued at £600. Alexander Pott was still listed as owner in 1811. By about 1874 George Pott of Todrig was recorded as owner. The present main house probably dates from the 18th century, but with many alterations and additions (including some by J.P. Alison in 1913). There is also a walled garden. The estate became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1690, having formerly been in the detached part of Hassendean. It appears to have been regarded as a Barony in its own right in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. The house is located within an extensive plantation. A drove road used to pass near here as it went from Groundstone Heights to the upper Borthwick valley. A stone axe-head was found nearby in the 20th century – ‘The winding road to Roberton is little marked of wheels, and lonely past Blawearie runs the track to Borthwickshiels’ [WHO] (formerly spelled ‘Borthwicksheilles’ and other variants; it is ‘Borthwicksheelys’ in c.1375, ‘Borthwykesheelys’ in c.1425, ‘Borthwikesheelis’ in 1433/4, ‘Borthwicksheillis’ in 1445, ‘Borthwikscheelis’ in 1471, ‘Borthikshelis’ in 1479, ‘Borthiw Shellis’ in 1491, ‘Borthuikschelis’ in 1502, ‘Borthuikschelis’ in 1540, ‘Borthwiiksheillis’ in 1575, ‘Borthwickscheelis’ in 1643, ‘Borthiecksheillis’ in 1676, ‘borthicksheels’ in 1678, ‘Borthwicksheilis’ in 1685, ‘Borthick sheeles’ in 1690 and ‘Borthick sheelis’ and ‘Borthick sheillis’ in 1694; it is ‘Borthick sheelis’ on a 1650 parish map, appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Borthikshou’, on Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘Borthwick sheels’, and on Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650 as ‘Borthick sheels’, although wrongly placed to the east of Hawick).

Borthwickshiels Horn
(bor-theek-sheelz-horn) n. hill on the north side of the road opposite Borthwickshiels, the north-eastern spur being called Kemp’s Castle. On the western side is an earthwork, about 65 m by 50 m, defined by an earthen bank, with entrance probably at the south-west. The interior has been quarried, but there is an arc-shaped bank, probably part of a circular enclosure. There are signs of cord rig and other cultivation on the western side.

Borthwickshiels Loch
(bor-theek-sheelz-loch) n. small body of water to the west of Borthwickshiels itself, hidden from the road by trees.

Borthwickshiels Mains see Borthwick Mains

Borthwickslack
(bor-theek-slawk) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Borthikslack’, between Borthwickbrae and Howcleuch, possibly where Greenbank is now. It is also marked ‘Slacke’ on a draft map of the neighbouring parishes.

Borthwick Waas
(bor-theek-waw) n. Borthwick Walls, ancient cemetery on the left-hand side of the road in the Borthwick valley, a couple of miles beyond Roberton. Nothing now remains of the associated chapel of Kirk Borthwick, which was probably on the other side of the road. The area around there was referred to as ‘Borthwick Chaipel’ as recently as the early 20th century. The churchyard originally covered a larger area than what is currently enclosed. It was cleared up and shrubbery planted at the expense of Robert Noble and members of the Grieve family about 1895. A book ‘An historical record of Borthwick Wa’as burial ground’ was written in 1987 by Kathleen W. Stewart – ‘The Grieves, the Potts and the Craws a’ lie thegither in Borthwick Wa’s’ [T], or alternative version ‘All the Potts and the Craws Lie within Borthwick Wa’s’ [T], ‘By Borthwick Wa’s and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch . . . ’ [WHO].

Borthwick Waas Kirk
(bor-theek-waw-kirk) n. another name for Kirk Borthwick.

Borthwick Water
(bor-theek-waw-tur) n. poem by William Landles, set to music by Adie Ingles. The poem was first published in 1935 in the Edinburgh Evening News and then the Hawick Express, and appeared later in Landles collection ‘The Turn O’ The Year’. The precise date when the tune was written is unknown. It is recorded being sung in duet by Alison Seeley and Etta McKean at a 1514 concert in 1987. The tune was published in 2001, from Ingles’ manuscript, with a piano arrangement by Ian Seeley.

Borthwick Witter
(bor-theek-wi’ur) n. Borthwick Water, a tributary of the Teviot, which has its source near Craik and flows 16 miles (26 km) to near Martin’s Bridge. It is formed from the Craikhope, Howpasley and Aitthouse Burns, which rise near the Roxburghshire/Dumfriesshire boundary – ‘Borthwick Wa’ter, fairest daughter Of the moorland dew’ [WL], ‘We view these hills with greatest pride, Which rise up from Borthwickside, Long may we gaze and peace abide, In Borthwick Water’ [JRE], ‘Have you followed Borthwick Water, thro’ the heather to the glen . . . ’ [GHB] (the origin of the name is probably ‘old farmstead’ in Old English; it is ‘aquam de Borythwyk’ in 1420; it is ‘Borthick fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map).

Bosells
(boz-ulz) n. local name for St. Boswells. The original settlement, adjacent to Newton St. Boswells, is an old village with a tree-lined village green, probably Scotland’s largest at about 40 acres. It is also the name of the surrounding Parish and was formerly known as Lessuden. It was also a station on the Waverley Line. The village is known for its large livestock fair and for holding the Buccleuch Hunt. It contains Lessuden House (the family house of the Scotts of Raeburn), the 1908 Scots baronial Braeheads House, and Dryburgh Abbey is nearby. It marks the beginning of Elliot Cowan Smith’s ‘Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’ – ‘As we gaed oot frae Bosells Tae climm the Bowden brae . . .’ [WL] (the name derives from a medieval chapel dedicated to St. Boisel, recorded at least as early as 1551).
Bosells Fair

Bosells Fair (boz-ulz-far) n. St. Boswells Fair was an important gathering of the country’s gypsies on the village green on St. Boswells Day, July 18th, when they traded horses and other wares. It attracted people from all over the Borders and remains an important event for travelling people. It was the scene of the ‘Great Riot’ in 1849, when a young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy.

bosomer (boo-zu-nur) n. affectionate name for a mill frame used to make silk ladies underwear, also called a ‘papper’ (see gore).

boss (bos) n., arch. an upright wooden frame around which a stack is built during harvest.

boss (bos) adj., arch., poet. empty, hollow – ‘An what A’d ti hand-sae, A Wasna boass, – if the truth be teld, A was riftin-fowe!’ [ECS], ‘I mind o’ boss turnips like faces . . .’ [WL], deficient when usually full – ‘a boos-nit (a deaf nut), a boss tree’, etc.’ [GW] (also written ‘boass’).

boss-heid (bos-heed) excl., arch. empty head, idiot.

boss-her-tit (bos-her-i’, -i’) adj., arch., poet. heartless – ‘A thick-skull, rotten, black, boss-hearted squad’ [JoHa].

boss-kill (bos-kil) n., arch. a ‘stack-funnel’, space in the centre of a hay- or corn-stack formed by a frame to enable drying (see boss and kill).

Boston (bos-tin) n. largest city in Massachusetts. Many locals emigrated to this area in the 19th century. Hawick exiles had their own Common Riding in the suburb of West Roxbury in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

the Boston Plate (thu-bos-tin-pla’) n. former race run at the Friday of the Common Riding from the late 19th century. It was one of the ‘Cornet’s Races’, restricted to horses and riders who had followed the Cornet.

Boswell (boz-wel) n. G. (18th/19th C.) artist in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Janet (b.c.1750) listed as a 90 year old pauper in Newcarnilton in 1841, living at about 40 North Heritage Street. She could be the ‘J. Boswell, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. She was surely related to ‘Mr. G.’, who also subscribed. John (1720/1–75) recorded as ‘husband to Jean Kyle in Heughhead’ on his gravestone in Ettrick Cemetery. His daughter Isabel is also buried there. Thomas (18th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in Minto Parish 1794, when he was working for David Simpson (also formerly ‘Boswell’).

Boswell Cottages (boz-wel-ko-ee-jeez) n. cottages on the Wells estate, somewhere in the Rule valley in the early 1900s.

bot (bo) prep., arch. without, except – ‘. . . nor clame ony mair of the said nyne hundreth merkis bot alaneer fyve hundir merkis’ [SB1470], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis keip na swine nor Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and the rest by William Turnbull of Langraw. Rev. Thomas (1676–1732) preacher and theologian, born in Duns, he became minister at Ettrick. His writings, including ‘Human Nature in its Fourfold State’ (1721) were very influential in their day. He married Katherine Brown. Their youngest son Thomas went to Hawick Grammar School. His ‘View of the Covenant of Grace’ was printed in Hawick in 1788. Thomas (1713–67) son of the more famous preacher. He was born at Ettrick and sent to Hawick Grammar School for a while. He became minister at Oxnam, but left after disputes over whether he should be the next minister in Jedburgh. These arguments over patronage led to his involvement in establishing the Relief Kirk, with its first congregation in Jedburgh. In 1738 he married Elizabeth, son of Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. Their son Michael also became minister of a Relief congregation, and 3 of their 4 daughters married Relief ministers. He was buried at Jedburgh Abbey. A letter of his was donated to the Museum in 1863.

Bothwell College

Bothwell College (both-wel-ko-leej) n. The Collegiate Church of Bothwell in North Lanarkshire, founded by Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1398. Like the other Collegiate Churches of Scotland it was founded by a wealthy landowner, partly for the salvation of their families. They operated almost like miniature cathedrals, run by a Provost and with a number of 'prebendaries',

Botetourt

Botetourt (bo-te-toor) n. Sir John (d.1324) 1st Lord Botetourt and English Admiral. It has been suggested that he was an illegitimate son of Edward I. He was given possession of Hermitage and Liddesdale sometime between 1300 and 1306, dispossessing Johanna, widow of Sir John de Wake temporarily.

Bothert (bo-th-urt, -urt) pp. bothered – ‘Aye, so hei’s gotten away, Auld Slack … Weel, hei got throwt Gey cunny. But of course Hei was aye bothered Wi’ his back’ [DH].

Bothwell see Earl o Bothwell

Bothwell (both-, both-wel) n. Adam (c.1529–93) younger son of Sir Francis, who was Provost of Edinburgh. He was also uncle of the mathematician John Napier. He was educated at St. Andrews and in France. In 1552 he succeeded his brother William as Rector of Ashkirk, which was a valuable benefice at that time. He was appointed as Bishop of Orkney in 1559, but met with severe resistance from former Catholics there. He also suffered other set-backs, including capture by the English and a shipwreck (where he saved his life by leaping into the lifeboat in full armour). He became an extraordinary Lord of Session in 1564. He was the minister who married Mary, Queen of Scots, to the Earl of Bothwell and he was at the coronation of James VI. He was chastised for not attending to his diocese in Orkney. In Edinburgh he had 2 residences, the ‘commendator’s house’ by Holyrood Palaca and a house on Byres’ Close. He was also known to possess an impressive library. It is unclear how long he kept the benefice of the Rectory of Ashkirk. He married Margaret, daughter of John Murray of Touchadam and his children included: John, 1st Lord of Holyroodhouse; Francis of Over and Nether Stewarton; Jean; James; George; William; Adam; and Helenor. Richard (d.1548/9) 2nd son of Richard, Provost of Edinburgh and Elizabeth Somerville. His elder brother Francis was a Lord of Session and maternal grand-father to Napier of Merchiston. He is listed as studying in Paris in 1500 and became Prebendary of the Diocese of Glasgow. He is listed as Rector of Ashkirk in records of the Diocese of Glasgow from 1505; however, it seems unlikely that he actually officiated in the Kirk at Ashkirk. He was Parson of Ashkirk in 1507 when witness to a document at Holyrood in 1507 and Prebend of Ashkirk in 1510 when he was witness to a Glasgow charter. He was also Vicar of Peebles and Prebendary of the College Church of Corstorphine at the same time. He gave administrative service during the reign of James IV. He was Rector of Ashkirk in 1518 when he witnessed a letter of Queen Margaret to Master George Ker of Fairmilee. He also acted as Director of Chancery for James V and was the first of the Ordinary Lords when the College of Justice was formed in 1532. He also held the degree of Doctor of Civil and Canon Laws and was Provost of ‘Kirk-o’-Field’ (i.e. St. Mary in the Fields) Collegiate Church. In 1534 and 1535 he was one of the commissioners for continuign the parliament, being chosen as one of the Lords of Articles in 1535. He was ‘parsound of askirk’ in 1536 when he let part of his kirklands to Simon Shortreed, who served as Vicar of Ashkirk. He was relieved of his duties because he was ‘grettile troubled be infirnate and seiknes’ in 1539. Also in 1539 he gave money (raised from the house of David Wilson in Glasgow) to establish an anniversary to be celebrated 3 days after the feast of All-Souls. His name occurs regularly as a witness in the period 1525–48. His death is recorded on the 1st of January 1548/9, but he appears still to be Rector of Ashkirk in a 1550 record. William (d.1552) son of Sir Francis and Janet Richardson. He appears to have succeeded his uncle Richard as Rector of Ashkirk. He is probably the ‘Rector de Askirk’ who was among clerics and noblemen who ruled on a case before the Privy Council in Edinburgh in 1550. His death is recorded in 1552, when he was ‘Mr. Will. Bothwell, rector’.

Each having his own benefice, with their appointments often being in the hands of the founder’s family. Thus Hawick became a ‘prebend’ of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447/8 (or perhaps 1443, confirmed in 1447/8), at the instigation of William Earl of Douglas (who was presumably the superior of the Hawick Baron of the day, Sir William Douglas, 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig). The Prebendaries of Hawick were to pay 6 merks of the ecclesiastical income to 2 ‘boy-clerks, to serve perpetually in the choir of the said church of Bothwele’. This connection lasted until the Reformation, although ‘the kirk of Hawick and prebendaries of the college kirk thairof’ are still mentioned among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. One of the early Provosts was Thomas Barry, who celebrated the Battle of Otterburn in Latin verse. Of the original building only the choir remains from pre-Reformation, and is now incorporated into Bothwell Parish Church.

Bothwell Court (both-wel-kör) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1971, and named after the Earl of Bothwell who Mary Queen of Scots visited in Hermitage Castle.

the Bothwells (thu-both-welz) n. the Hepburn family, as Earls of Bothwell, were important locally, as well as throughout Scotland, particularly in the 16th century. They took their name from the barony of Bothwell (in Lanarkshire, southeast of Glasgow); Hawick Church was a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell from 1447 until the Reformation. The Earls of Bothwell had the right of patronage at Hawick as recorded in charters of 1488, 1498, 1511, 1581 and 1585. They also had the alternate right of patronage of Wilton after they purchased part of that barony in 1494. They held lands in Liddesdale, including Hermitage Castle for 100 years from 1492. Mary Queen of Scots visited James the 4th Earl in Hermitage in 1566 and married him in 1567. The 5th and last Earl of Bothwell was Francis Stewart.

bothy (bo-thee) n. a cabin, cottage, formerly applied to a building provided on a farm to house unmarried workers, now applied to a hut providing shelter for hill-walkers – ‘...In his bothy, Auld Time keeps open hoose, like a’ guid men’ [DH], ‘Thinks the haufin up in the bothy ‘But it’s snug here!’ ’[WL], ‘The Yowes seemed settled – naethin’ bleatin’. The bothy stove would still my greetin’ ’[TD].

laired within some mossy haggie’ [JT], ‘...the sicht garrd the gutter-bluid lowpin and puttin an stoonding throwe aa ma book’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘bowk’ and ‘book’).

boulgie (bool-gie) adj., poet. bulging, bowing out – ‘...ye sall be sleyn a’ o’ ye: as ane boulgie wa’ sall ye be, an’ as ane waigglin’ fense’ [HSR].

Boulton (bool-tun) n. John (14th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale by Edward III in 1354. Little else is known about him. However, it is possible he was simply the same man as John ‘de Boulton’ who was Chancellor and Chamberlain of Berwick in 1354. He was also presented to the Church of Cavers (in Glasgow Diocese) by Edward III in 1368.

boun (bown) v., poet. to prepare, make ready – ‘Bonjeddart bauldly made him boun, With a’ the Turnbulls strang and stout ...’ [CPM], ‘...And on her clog she toed the spurr, And boun’ to join the ride’ [JTe], ‘In cappers, right cany, our steeds we bestroyde, And bowne to the Foray on our Border-side’ [HSR].

Bour

Bourtree Hoose Seminary (bör-tree-hoo-se-min-u-ree) n. ??.

Bourtree Place (bör-tree-plis) n. street at the east-end of the old town boundaries, the right fork of the High Street at the horse. So-called because of the bourtrees, or elders, which grew there, the street was named around 1842. Historically this area marked the eastern edge of the Burgh. It contains several shops and businesses, as well as the Congregational Church and Conservative Club. A railway bridge, with adjacent public toilets, crossed the street until demolished in the mid 1970s, to make way for Mart Street.
The street marks the beginning of the route to Denholm, Jedburgh and Kelso (it is ‘Bower Tree Place’ in the 1851 census).

Bourtrees (bör-treez) n. area that formed the eastern boundary of the town, according to the 1537 charter – ‘Between the lands commonly called Bourtrees in the east ...’ Named after the bountree or bourtree, which is an Old Scots word for the elder, a species often planted to mark boundaries. A photograph exists showing the last such tree, standing on the north side of Bourtree Place in the late 19th century. There are said to have been similar trees at the western and southern town limits, but if they existed they were already gone by the mid-19th century.

Bourtrees (bör-treez) n. surname that once exinisted in the Borders. In 1502 it is recorded that ‘Jacobo bourtreis’ (i.e. James Bourtrees) was a rebel, whom James Rutherford in Nisbet had remission for associating with. It is possible this is the same name recorded later as ‘Bawtry’.

Bourtree Terrace (bör-tree-te-ris) n. small street off Bourtree Place, named in 1896 and previously being part of Bourtree Place.

Bourtree Well (bör-tree-wel) n. former public water source behind the Congregational Church, also known as ‘the Steading Pump’.

bour trei (boor-trï) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra, often used as a boundary marker, and traditionally said to ward off evil – ‘I once heard a woman say, that having struck a bough of bower tree above her door head, she heard the witches and fairies ‘greeting’ at her door ...’ [EM1820], ‘Then with the boortree wand, she gave his beardy chaftis a stroke, – And oure the bed aeneath her sprung,
A lang lean toothless brocke!’ [JTe] (also written ‘boortree’ and ‘boortree’; cf. Bourtrees; the origin is suggested to be a corruption of ‘boun tree’, from its use to mark boundaries, or from ‘bower tree’ from the ability of its branches to be bent

Bourtree Bank (bör-tree-bawngk) n. houses
up a pend off Bourtree Place, built in 1861.

the Bourtree Bush (thu-bör-tree-bush) n.
popular name for the last tree on Bourtree Place,
surviving until the latter part of the 19th century.

Bourhill (bör-hil) n. Thomas (17th/18th C.)
resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as gardener in Synton in 1717. He married Jean Spottiswood and their children included John (b.1717).

Bourhooms (bow-ar-hooms) n. fortified house marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map, near the present Hermitage Cottage, on the opposite side of the Roughley Burn from Shaws (it also occurs in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas and on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; it is marked ‘Byholm’ on later maps).

Bourtree Bank (bör-tree-bawngk) n. houses
up a pend off Bourtree Place, built in 1861.

the Bourtree Bush (thu-bör-tree-bush) n.
popular name for the last tree on Bourtree Place,
surviving until the latter part of the 19th century.

into an arbour, but James Murray suggests that the meaning comes from the ease of extracting the pith from its branches to makes ‘bores’, i.e.
pipes or play-guns).

boust (bowst) v., poet. to boast, triumph – ‘O my God, I trust in thee: letna me be shanet: letna mine enemies boust themsels over me’[HSR], ‘…an a’ the workers o’ inequitie boust thame-sel’s’[HSR].

Bouston (bow-stin) n. Hugh (16th/17th C.)
notary for the instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1592. These were given by William Scott ‘in Hawik’, and so he was almost certainly a lawyer in Hawick at that time. He is also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1604 (also ‘Boustoun’; possibly the same name as Boston).

bout (boo) n., arch. mood, whim, fancy – ‘…thae thocht help iz ti cast ma dowth, thole-muddy boot’[ECS] (also written ‘boot’).

bouzy (boo-see) adj., arce. bushy, branchy, covered with bushes – ‘A bouzy burn; a boozay bush’[GW], ‘Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride …’[DH] (there are spelling variants).

Bovina (bo-vi-nu) n. town in Delaware County,
New York State. It was a common arrival point for Hawick people who emigrated to the United States in the 19th century. It is said that the nearby hills (part of the Northern Catskills) may have reminded early settlers of Scotland. Once much more populous, the town today has a population of about 700 people. It was founded in 1820 from the amalgamation of parts of 3 other towns. The name comes from the Latin word for cattle, with the area known for its dairy products.

Bowmanhill

Bowmanhill (bô-in-hil) n. farmhouse on the right-hand side of the main A7 at Teviothead, previously also known as ‘the Knowe’ or ‘Henderson’s Knowe’, the hill itself being on the other side of the road. The farmhouse and out-buildings were formerly situated near the crest of the hill (a few trees later marking the site). More recent buildings were constructed by the side of the road. This area is where the side road to Falnash and Hislop crosses the Teviot; before the mid-18th century this road was an alternative route to Hawick, crossing to the Northwick valley via Lairhope and Old Howpasley.
It was formerly part of the lands of Ringwoodfield, owned by Melrose Abbey. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that point it covered 686 acres and was bounded by Colterscleuch, Southdeanrig, Binks, Rig, the River Teviot and Commonside. Simon Scott of ‘Fernili’ and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented it along with ‘Grangia alias Stany-etoum’ in about 1557; it was valued at £5 at that time. It was recorded as still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. Archibald Elliot and James Pott are recorded there in 1694, along with herd James Telford. Robert Nichol was tenant in 1720. Archibald Elliot is recorded as the tenant there in 1722, renting from the Duke of Buccleuch, then halved with James Elliot the follow-ning year. William Anderson and Robert Nichol were there in 1726 and Robert Welsh in 1731.
In 1744 Archibald re-leased his half, with Isobel Scott (William Goodfellow’s widow) leasing the other half. Gideon Forsyth was there in the 1780s and James Scott in 1792. There was once a black-smith’s here, now converted into a museum and craft centre. It seems that the original Bowmanhill farm was actually up on the hill, with ‘Bow-annahill Roadside’ by the road. Archibald Elliot was there in 1791. In 1797 the farmer at Bowmanhill itself was Archibald Elliot, with ‘Roadside’ being farmed by William Gladstones, Thomas Hogg and William Miller, and John Scott also recorded living there. J. Ingles was there in 1821. William Smith was a mason living at ‘Bowannahillbridge’ in 1851. Walter Scott was there in the 1860s (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘bogan hyll’ meaning ‘rounded or bow-shaped hill’, cf. Bowhill; it is probably the ‘Bovennhil’ listed in 1500, is ‘Bowandhillen’ in 1557, ‘Bowandhill in 1564, is recorded with the modern name at least as early as 1609, ‘Buenhill’ in 1634, ‘Buanhill’ in 1653, is transcribed ‘Bowmanhill’ from a 1723 document, is ‘Bouandhill’ in 1726, ‘Bowandhill’ in 1781 and 1786 and ‘Boanhill’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Bowannhill’, but not obviously in the right place; on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map it is high on the hill to the east of the main road, with the modern Bowanhill being labelled Henderson’s Knowe.

bowat (bowi-) n., arch. a small lantern – ‘Cautious burghers required to light themselves in the darkness by carrying ‘bowats’ or lanthorns in their hands’ [JJV], ‘Wi their nets and their leis-ters, their bowats and gegs, They seldom if ever get rest for their legs’ [UB].

the Bowat (thu-bow-i’) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

bowater (bow-wi’-ur) n., arch. person who fishes using a bowat – ‘Yer netters and bowaters, they are the boys For drinkin’, fechtin’ and makin’ a noise’ [UB].

Bowatsyde (bow-i’-sid) n. former small holding on the Abbotrule estate. It is probably related to the area known as ‘Bowset’, which is referred to in the English report of the Sclaterford skirmish in 1513. It was part of the lands purchased from Jedburgh Abbey by Adam French in 1569 and part of the Lordship of Jedburgh inherited in 1587 by Alexander, Lord Home. The lands (or perhaps just their superiory) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. The lands were later incorporated into the farm of Ruletownhead (it is ‘Bowatsyde’ in 1567, ‘Bowatside’ in 1587, ‘Bowatsyde’ in 1588 and transcribed ‘Bonnattsyde’ in 1680).

Bowden (bow-din) n. village lying between Selkirk and St. Boswells. The market cross, restored as a War Memorial, sits in the main street. Bowden people served as models for Tom Scott’s painting ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. Poets Andrew Scott and Thomas Aird were from here, as well as Hawick’s James Thomson. It is also the name of the surrounding parish, through which the Bowden Burn runs on its way to meet the Tweed. The church, originally dating from 1128, but rebuilt in the 17th–18th centuries and restored in 1909, includes the ‘laird’s loft’ bearing the arms of the Kers of Roxburgh and a Norman arch (possibly a remnant of the earlier building) over a pew with memorials to the Kers of Cavers Carre. The Barony of ‘Bolden’ was granted by King David I to Kelso Abbey; it comprised the lands of Bowden, Holydean, Midlem, Lilliesleaf, Clarilaw, ‘Fawdon’, Whitmuir, Whitelee and Newton. ‘Bowden Kirk 1128–1978’ (1978 and 1994) was written by J.S.M. Macdonald – ‘And memory, roaring o’er the deep, In lonely hours will turn Back to the cloven Eildon’s steep And banks o’ Bowden Burn’ [JT], ‘Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o’ Bowden! Our cat’s kittled in Archie’s wig; Tillieloot, Tillieloot, Tillieloot o’ Bowden, Three o’ them naked, and three o’ them clad!’ [T] (the origin is possibly ‘village dedicated to St. Bathan’ or more likely the Old English ‘bothl demu’, meaning ‘valley with a building’; it first appears in about 1120 as ‘Both-endenam’, then occurs as many variants, such as ‘Boulden’, ‘Bothelden’, ‘Bouildene’, ‘Bowelden’, ‘Boweden’ and ‘Bowdein’ until the end of the 17th century).

Bowden Moor (bow-din-moor) n. hilly moorland area north-west of Bowden, on the slopes of the Eildons, through which the B6359 runs, reaching a height of 814 ft.

Bowden Road (bow-din-rød) n. part of Stiches, at the top of Atkinson Road, built in 1974, named after the village of Bowden.

bowdie (bow-dee) adj. bandy, bow-legged – ‘His bowdie legs raced owre the ground In brecks gey frayed an’ old . . . ’ [WFC] (also ‘bowdy’).

bowdie-leggit (bow-dee-leg-ee’, -i’) adj. having bandy legs, bow-legged.

bowe (bow) n., arch. a boll, pod of flax, unit of dry measure (cf. boll; this was once pronounced with a longer o-o diphthong).

bowl (bow-ul) n. a bowl (note the diphthong).

bowl-hive gress (bow-ul-hiv-gres) n., arch. the field lady’s mantle, parsley breakstone, Alchemilla arvensis, once believed to cure inflammation of the bowel (known as ‘bowel-hive’).

Bower (bow-ur) n. James (b.1794/5) from Melrose, he was a worker on the farm of Burnhead. He is recorded among male heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41, being a ‘hind’ in 1835 and ‘servant’ later. By 1861 he had moved from Burnhead Cottages to Lees. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and Agnes. John (14th/15th C.) forfeited the lands of Bowerhope

Wauchopehead that were granted by Robert III in 1404 to John Turnbull. His name was written ‘Bour’. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for gardener James Scott in Hawick Parish in 1768. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Katherine Scott in Roberton Parish in 1789.

Bowerhope (bow-ur-hop, boor-up) n. farm on the south side of St. Mary’s Loch. It was among lands in Ettrick Forest owned by the Crown from about 1456 until the early 16th century. Sheep and goods were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. The Laird of Cessford was tenant there in 1541, paying £20 yearly. It was inherited by Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane from his son Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621 and still held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1667 (it is spelled ‘Bourhop’ in 1456 and 1502, ‘Bourhope’ in 1541 and ‘Bourhoip’ in 1621).

Bowering (bow-u-ring) n. Mary (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when her will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. She could have been a servant of Lord Minto, perhaps associated with Robert Raper, whose will was also recorded later in 1815.

Bower Rig (bow-u-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, just on the left (south) of the B6357 road before reaching Dinlabyre. It is possible that nearby was the farm of ‘bour’, which was tenanted by James Elliot on the 1694 Hearth Tax records, ‘wt an kilne’.

Bowes (böz) n. Sir George (1517–56) posthumous son of Sir Ralph of Daliden, Streatlam. He was involved in Border wars from an early age and was an important leader during the ‘Rough Wooing’. He served as Governor of Berwick. He accompanied Lord Hertford on his raid on Edinburgh and other towns in 1544. He married Muriel, daughter of Lord Evers, but had no male heirs. Sir Richard (c.1497–1558) born at Streatlam Castle, County Durham. He became Warden of the English Middle and Eastern Marches in 1541, together paying £26 yearly. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from 1514, together paying £26 yearly. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and valued at about £400 in 1678. In 1690 it passed to the Murrays, then to James Veitch, before the Scotts reacquired it in 1747. The present house was built in 1812 to designs of William Atkinson, William Burn and David Bryce, and enlarged later that century. Much of the stone came from Denholmhill Quarry. The estate was extensively landscaped by Thomas Gilpin, including the artificial loch and a considerable amount of tree planting. Queen Victoria was a frequent visitor in the 19th century. It was used as a military hospital in WWI and was also occupied by the army in WWII. It is open to the public in the summer and has an adventure playground. As well as a large collection of paintings, artefacts relating to Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd are also on display. The grounds contain an adventure playground, as well as what is probably the oldest ash tree in Scotland – ‘Ca’ up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlesteed, and Hainen’s valiant Will’ [WSB] (the name derives from Old English for ‘curved hill’; it was ‘Bouhill’ in 1694).

bowl (bowf) n., poet. a bark, cough, loud exclamation – ‘But she juist heezed her coats And cried Bowff, Ye toornie auld man!’ [DH].

Bowholm (baw-, bö-hom) n. former house belonging to a branch of the Elliot family. Its probable location was pointed out by locals as ‘Baholm’, recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858. The location is in a wooded area just to the east of Shaw farm on the north side of the Roughley Burn in Liddesdale (as marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map). Note that it is distinct from the relatively nearby Byreholm. ‘Hob of Bowholmes’ is recorded in about the 1580s. Will Elliot, brother of Dandie of Bowholmes was recorded in 1611. Archie Elliot ‘of Bowholme’ is mentioned in Circuit Court records in 1623. It may be the ‘Bolsholme’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, where 2 men named William Armstrong were listed. It was included along with Over Closs, Byreholme, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 (it is ‘Bowholme’ in 1718).

bowie (bow-ee) n., arch. a hard, shallow dish, a round wooden vessel for potatoes etc. – ‘But a great bowie on the table, An’ ilk ane supp’d what he was able’ [JR] (once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

Bowie (bow-ee) n. Adam (15th C.) received 6 shillings and 8 pence in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Ade Bow’. Rev. Adam McC. minister of Southdean and Hobkirk 1888–96. He was the first minister of the united parishes, and also had links with Cavers and Kirkton. Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) laundry maid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Mrs. Agnes (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Elizabeth Graham, in the mid-1800s. She may have been the wife of blacksmith James. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Parkhill. The will of his wife Margaret Scott is recorded in 1682. Andrew (1802/3–76) son of William, he was blacksmith and veterinary surgeon on the Fore Row. He became a Burgess in 1842. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a blacksmith on ‘Front Row’. In 1861 he was described as ‘Horse shoer, West Port’. The public water supply near there was named ‘Bowie’s Well’ after him. He had several children with Helen Tait (from Eilrig in Robertson Parish), although they never appear to have married. His sons include: James, also a farrier in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1827). Andrew (1827–88) son of Andrew and Helen Tait, he was born at Eilrig. In 1852 in Robertson he married Margaret Byers (1829–98). Their children included: James Tait (b.1852); Janet (b.1853); Helen (b.1855); John (b.1856); Henry (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Cochrane; Gilbert (b.1860); George (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Maggie (b.1866); Andrew (b.1868); and John (b.1871), who married Annie Burns. He died at 8 Gladstone Street. Andrew (d.1947) son of James and Mary Best, he was a blacksmith and farrier on Havelock Street. He married Lily Fraser Douglas, who was from Appletreehall. They had 3 children, including James Tait (1928–2005) and Henry. When he died this ended what is said to have been centuries of local blacksmiths of the name ‘Boa’. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. Andrew L. ‘Andra’ (20th C.) frame-worker at Pesco’s and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He served with the Royal Marines in WWI and joined the Greens in 1919, playing for 13 seasons, including being Captain in 1924/5. He was also a great Sevens player, having 54 medals. He was long a member of Committees at Hawick R.F.C. and served on the South of Scotland Selection Committee. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the first residents of the cottages at Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. His son Thomas was also mason at Bonchester Bridge. His daughter Margaret married James Deans and was mother of Rulewater historian Walter Deans. He possessed an old sword that was said to have been used by his grandfather at the Battle of Killiecrankie, and later passed to his descendant James Small. Henry (1858–93) son of Andrew and Margaret Byers. In 1879 he married Elizabeth Cochrane in Hawick, and she died in 1924, aged 70. Their children were: Andrew Tait (b.1879), who emigrated to Geelong, Victoria, Australia; David (1882–96); Maggie (b.1884); Henry (b.c.1886); and James Tait (b.1889), who married Barbara Hogg and lived in Hawick. James (c.1822–70) blacksmith on the Fore Row in the mid-1800s, located by the gate to the Poorhouse. He was a younger son of blacksmith William, and brother of blacksmith Andrew. In 1860 he married Agnes, daughter of baker James Oliver; they appear not to have had any children. He died by committing suicide in a police cell. He was succeeded as blacksmith by James Kedie. His widow was still alive in 1881, living at 1 Drumlanrig Square. James (19th C.) farrier in Hawick, son of Andrew. He lived at Gladstone Street. He married Mary Best. Their son Andrew was a blacksmith in Hawick. Janet (b.1829/30) eldest daughter of Thomas, who lived at Bonchester Bridge. In the 1840s she became postmistress for the Rule valley, with her sister Margaret assisting. She was listed in 1849 as a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1851 she is recorded as ‘Side Post Mistress’. In 1857 she married Alfred Bibby Davis, who was in the Royal Engineers, and gave up the post office. John (17th C.) joint tenant along with Thomas Miller in Timberside mill according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. They were recorded as having ‘an klin betwixt thm’ and his surname is listed as ‘Bue’. He could be the John ‘Bo’ married to Helen ‘Kaidyie’ (i.e. Kedzie) whose son William was baptised in Hawick in 1681. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Knowes in 1705. He was ‘John Buie’ when his son Archibald was baptised in Cavers. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, whose surname was written ‘Bowey’. In 1709 he married Janet Scott in Ashkirk Parish. John (18th C.) blacksmith in Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Cavers itself in 1776 (with his surname as ‘Boe’). He married Christina Watson, who died in Hawick in 1811. Their children included: Margaret (b.1770); William (b.1772), who was blacksmith on the Fore Raw in Hawick; James (b.1774); John (b.1776); Christian (b.1778); James (b.1782); and Isabel (b.1785). John (18th C.) tenant in Glebe in Southdean Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised there in 1776. John (c.1800–41) eldest son of William, who was blacksmith on the Fore Raw. He may also have been a blacksmith, like his father. In 1841 his wife is listed as ‘Bell Scott’ on the Mid Raw and the family surname given as ‘Boa’. By 1851 his wife was a widow at about 13 Loan. He married Isabella, daughter of John Scott and Isabella Turnbull; she died in 1876, aged 76. Their children included: Isabella (c.1826–97), who married William Turnbull and secondly John Ogilvie; William (c.1828–88), who died unmarried; Walter (c.1834–75), also a blacksmith, who married Jane Anderson; Margaret (b.c.1836), who married Robert Balmer; Elizabeth (c.1838–86), who appears to have lived with Richard Whellans; and Joan, who married George Edmonson. Margaret (b.1832/3–1905) daughter of mason Thomas. She helped her sister Janet run the post office at Bonchester Bridge. In 1855 she married James Smail in Hobkirk; he was a banker from Jedburgh who wrote under the pseudonym ‘Matthew Gottomson’. Their children were: Jessie Scott Boa Smail (b.1857); George Rutherford Smail (b.1859); Thomas Scott Smail (b.1863); Merlin Mill Smail (b.1863); Elliot Redford Smail (b.1865); James Reid Smail (b.1869); Johanna Crosby Smail (b.1870); and Maggie May Sterling Smail (b.1873). She died just 9 months after her husband. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (c.1783–1849) mason in Hobkirk Parish, residing at Bonchester Bridgend. He was son of Gilbert and his sister Margaret was mother of local historian Walter, who was his apprentice. In 1841 he was living at Bonchester Bridge with his wife and 2 daughters. He was said to be one of only 2 residents of Brigend who stayed in their houses during the flood of 1846. He probably married Jessie Scott of Cavers Parish in 1828. His widow Janet (possibly the same as ‘Jessie’) was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk; she was living at ‘3 Bonchester Bridge’ in 1851. His children were: Janet (b.1828/9), who became postmistress in Bonchester in the 1840s; and Margaret (b.1832/3) who assisted her sister, and later married James Smail from Jedburgh. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1719 as ‘servitor’ in Langside in Cavers Parish, when he married Margaret Grieve, ‘servitrix’ to William Ogilvie in Branxholme. His children (with no mother’s name given) probably included: Robert (b.1721), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1723), William (b.1731) and Walter (b.1732), baptised in Kirkton. Walter (18th C.) blacksmith at Cavers in the 1750s. He had a child who ‘drowned in a bonie’ in 1752. Walter (b.1834/5) blacksmith, who lived at 50 Loan in 1861. He married Janet Anderson and their children included Jane and John. He also had a step-son George Bell. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, where his name is recorded as ‘Buie’. He married Janet Shiel and their children included Thomas (b.1650) and Agnes (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were Thomas Vogan and William Donald. William (17th C.) listed at Alton Croft among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Bessie Bell and whose children baptised in Hawick included Marion (b.1685) and Janet (b.1686). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1709 he married Margaret Anderson, who was from Ashkirk Parish. William (1772–1859) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Christina Watson. He was blacksmith at the West Port. It is said that the family were hereditary smiths to the Douglases of Cavers, and it was a ‘Boa’ who shod the horses that went to Otterburn. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at the top of the Fore Row (around the modern 17 Drumlanrig Square). In 1799 he married Margaret Hogg, who came from Sanquar, Dumfriesshire; she died in 1854, aged 80. Their children were: John (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Scott; Andrew (b.c.1802), also a smith; Margaret (c.1805–64), who married William Kennedy; William (b.c.1811), who married Mary Renelson; Euphemia (b.c.1820), who married Robert Murray; and James (c.1822–70), another smith, who married Agnes Oliver. He was said to be 89 years old when he died, which is either an error, or he was christened a few years after he was born. He is buried at St. Mary’s. William (b.c.1810) younger son of blacksmith William. He was also a blacksmith in Hawick, located on the Mid Raw in 1841 (when his surname is given as ‘Boe’). He married Mary Renelson (or Ronaldson) in 1835. Their children included: Richard; William, who died young; Euphemia; and Andrew, who also died young (formerly often written ‘Bo’, ‘Boa’, ‘Boe’ and variants).

Bowie’s Well (bow-eez-wel) n. former public water supply at the foot of the Loan, near West Port. It was once one of the main public wells in the town centre, and named after Andrew Bowie, the Smith at West Port the early 19th century.

bowk (bowk) v. to retch, gag, vomit, spew up – ‘Ei says ei’s leike ti bowk. A dinna wunder at eet; ei ett till ei was leike ti burst’ [ECS], ‘…afore the self-proclaimed sei-fishin expert was bowkin owre the side’ [IWL], to belch, to emit smoke – ‘…whan A keek oot ov a slaistert woark-place wundih on ti bowkin hums’ [ECS], n. a retch, incidence of vomiting – ‘An’ syne he gaed a fearfu’ bowk, An’ bang’d them a’ for spuein’ Clear drink that day’ [JoHa].

Bowknowe (bow-now) n. former farmstead south-east of Synton. George Scott was tenant there in 1635. Its location is marked today by the plantation called Bowknowe Strip (it appears incorrectly as ‘Howknon’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Bowland (bow-lind) n. former station on the Waverley Line north of Gala, near the Bowshank Tunnel. There were Pringles there from at least the late 15th century. The castellated house there was built in the early 19th century.

Bowmaker (bō-mā-kur) n. John (15th C.) cleric who claimed some of the rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale around 1424, against William Croyser. He lost the battle in 1428, and was probably never actually Archdeacon. He may have been related to the near contemporary Walter, of the same surname, who was Abbot of Inchcolm and historian.

Bowmont Burn (bō-mon’-burn) n. also known as the Bowmont Water, a stream that runs from near Windy Gyle on the Border, past Yetholm and on into Northumberland. The first substantial bridge was built in the 1830s between Kirk Yetholm and Town Yetholm. The area had a reputation for being a favourite haunt of fairies (noted for example by Sir Walter Scott), with stones of certain shapes found there being called ‘fairy cups and dishes’ – ‘That day I left the Bowmontside My heart beat sad within me; Each ferny glen and rugged peak I grieved to leave behind me’ [TCh], ‘The floods are down in Bowmont Burn, the moss is fetlock-deep . . . ’ [WHO], ‘And my heart a shrine has sought her That will last life’s little day – At the foot of Bowmont Water, Bowmont Water – far away’ [WHO] (also sometimes spelled ‘Beaumont’).

t (bow-, bö-se’) n. former name of an area in Abbotrule (probably associated with Bowshot Hill and the stream at its foot) where Lord Dacre and his men were pursued by the Sheriff of Teviotdale and a force of about 1200 men in late 1513. It has also been suggested that ‘Bows’ referred to the Bowmont Water, but that seems less likely.

A solitary ash tree there marked the site of ‘Old Bows’, a farm that is recorded as ‘Bossithill’ in 1643 when James and Helen Turnbull were proprietors. It was ‘Bowstysyd’ among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. It was ‘Bosathill’ in 1694 when shepherd James Riddell was ‘deficient’ in paying the Hearth Tax there. It was still ‘Bossithill’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls when owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule; it was listed along with parts of Ruletownhead and Burnkinford, which were partly in Southdean Parish and partly in Hobkirk, which had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224. The site of the skirmish is also known as ‘Slateford’, on the road over the Fodderlee Burn, and a memorial was erected there around 1900. The farm of ‘Bowatsyde’ is probably the same place, being a small holding that was later incorporated into Ruletownhead.

Bowshank Tunnel (bow-shangk-tu-nul?) n. tunnel on the Waverley Line north of Galashiels, the only major tunnel between Hawick and Edinburgh, 249 yards long.

Bowshot (bow-, bö-se’) n. former farmstead on the side road between Ruletownhead and Easter Fodderlee. There is still a cottage with that name on the Ordnance Survey map, beside Bowshot Wood. Slightly further up the hill there is another building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. This is the area also known as ‘Bowsett’.
Bowshot Hill

Bowshot Hill (bow-, bō-se’) n. small hill in the former Abbotrule Parish, east of Fodderlee and just west of Faw Hill. It reaches a height of 297 m. The summit contains the possible remains of a fort, now levelled by cultivation, but still visible as a shallow semi-circular depression. A solitary ash tree on the hill marked the site of the old farmstead of ‘Old Bowset’. The nearby farm was still known as ‘Bossithill’ in the 19th century.

bowsome (bow-sum) adj., arch. willing, compliant – ‘A bowsome lad’ [GW].

bowsterous (bow-ste-ris) adj., arch. rowdy, boisterous.

bowster (bow-stur) v., arch. to bolster.

bowl (bowl) pp. bought – ‘Aw felt like the felleth that bowl the pub an kept it tae izzel’ [MB] (cf. the older boucht and bocht).

bowt (bowt) n., arch. a bolt, the phrase ‘bowt o’ knittene’ is a length of woven tape, sold in a folded skein.

the box (thu-boks) n., arch. the poor box in a church – ‘The Session ordered that John Scott called Herd should have out of ye Box for helping to buy ane horse for carrying his motherless child in ye countrie in ye summer season’ [PR1714], ‘. . . that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be rouped . . . ’ [PR1722] (often capitalised).

boxin (bok-sin) n. boxing, once a popular spectator sport at local fairs, with a booth set up at the Haugh during the Common Riding in the 19th century.

box-master (boks-maws-tur) n., arch. a treasurer, especially of a trade guild.

Boyd (boid) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) from Jedburgh, in 1794 he married Betty Ballantyne, who was from Hawick. Their son Alexander was baptised in Jedburgh in 1804. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (c.1930–) newspaper columnist who used the pseudonym Minerva, author of ‘The way we were, sketches of a Hawick childhood’ (1982). James (15th/16th C.) witness in 1510/1 to a letter of acquittance by George Scott of Whames and Borthaugh, written in Edinburgh. James of Trochrig (d.1581) elected as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1573, he served until his death. However, it is unclear whether he played any ecclesiastical role in the Borders. His eldest son Robert was Principal of both Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. His seal showed an elaborately presented St. Kentigern, with the words ‘SIGILLUM JACOBI BOYD ARCHIEPISCOPI GLAS’. James (17th C.) appointed in 1686, along with John Tudhope, as ‘marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell, being joyned to John Hardie, William Purdome, and William Paysley, who were former marchers’. He is probably the ‘baxter’ whose widow Beatrix Turnbull is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may also be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 (although probably drawn up 2 or 3 years earlier), when he paid tax on 2 hearths. His children with Beatrix Turnbull included: Walter (b.1673); William (b.1675); Thomas (b.1677); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); William (again, b.1683); James (b.1686) James (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Scott. Their children included: Janet (b.1653); Margaret and Christian (b.1670); James (b.1688). There is a big enough spread in ages that there is probably an error here. James (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Helen ‘Bo’ (or Bowie). Their children included Andrew (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Walter (perhaps his father) and shoemaker Walter Scott. James Fleming (19th/20th C.) Governor of the Hawick Poorhouse in the early 20th century. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick ‘flesher’. In 1711 he was fined, along with Robert Cowan, of being found in an alehouse on the Sabbath. John of Flex (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was probably nephew of Bailie Robert, who sold Flex in 1768. Bailie Robert (18th C.) baxter (i.e. baker) of Hawick who was a Magistrate in the 1730s and 40s. He owned 11 High Street, which he sold to Walter Wilson (‘Haunless Wat’). He is probably the Robert who (along with William Tudhope) witnessed baptisms for William Davidson and for Robert Ker in Hawick in 1731. He witnessed baptisms in 1737 for wright James Winthrope, in 1739 for weaver William Roger (when he was ‘Bailie’), in 1742 (when he was ‘present Bailie’, along with Francis Gledstains) for Rev. William Somerville, for merchant John Ruecastle and for Excise Officer Patrick Panton, and in 1743 (when he was ‘late Bailie’) for writer James Weir. He was also involved with the bond for the Teviot Bridge in 1740. He may be the same Robert, recorded as an innkeeper in Hawick in 1745 (for the celebration of the birth of Lord Whitchester). He was listed as present Bailie in 1745 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson. He paid tax for 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He purchased the Flex in 1751, and in the 1750s was involved in a petition to the Commissioners of Supply for a reassessment of the ‘cess’ between his lands and those of Whittle owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Session as trustees for Francis Rucastle’s estate. In 1753 there is a record of march stones being set out at the burnside to mark the boundary between the Flex and the Common. He is probably the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for blacksmith John Ker in 1758. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. In 1768 his nephew, John, tenant in Mertoun Parish, sold his lands there. He may be the Robert who married Betty Boyd in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young and in 1743 another for Skinner John Currie. He could be the Robert who married Betty Boyd in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Beatrice Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1772); and William (b.1775). The witnesses in 1771 and 1772 were the whole congregation. Thomas (17th/18th C.) gardener at the Flex and also a drummer. He may be the son of James and Beatrice Turnbull baptised in Hawick Parish in 1677. He was described as ‘drummer to ye Toun of Hawick’ in a baptismal record of 1713, suggesting that he held this official position at that time. He married Elspeth Gardner and their children included: Magdalen (b.1699); Elizabeth (b.1702); John (b.1705); Robert (b.1708); James (b.1710); and Beatrice (b.1713). The witnesses in 1699 were baker Walter Boyd (surely a relative) and gardener John Gardner, in 1705 were James Scott ‘Colifart’ and weaver William Miller, in 1708 were Francis Henderson and Francis Paterson, both in Flex, and in 1713 were carrier Walter Rucastle and cook James Wright. Walter (17th/18th C.) ‘baxter’ in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for gardener Thomas (who was surely a relative, perhaps his brother) and in 1705 for shoemaker Walter Scott. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism for carrier James in 1705, who was probably a close relative. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1701); William (b.1704); Robert (b.1704); Mary (b.1706); James (b.1708); and Gideon (b.1710). The witnesses in 1704 and 1706 were Bailies Robert Hardie and John Binnie and in 1708 were merchant William Craig and baxter William Hodge. He may be the Walter, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1673. Walter (d.bef. 1781) recorded in 1781 when his son Robert died. Walter (19th C.) one of the people who helped resuscitate the Common Riding around the 1880s, being a founding member of the Ceremonial Committee. It was his suggestion that the Colour Bussing be moved from one of the local inns to the Town Hall. He also acted as a Steward at the Races and was an occasional singer. William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. 2 unnamed children of his died in 1808. He is probably the William, married to Ann ‘Punton’, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1808. Rev. William (19th C.) minister at Mlnathort and Forrest Hill, London. In 1875 he obtained the degree of LL.D. from Greenville College, U.S.A. He was the first preacher in 1889 at the ‘Ern Kirk’, which was the start of the United Presbyterian congregation in Wilton, which would become Wilton South.

Boyes (boiz) n. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Boyis’ when he was still owed some fee in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Braugholme. It is unclear whether or not he came from close to the Hawick area, like a large fraction of others listed. John ‘Jock’ (19th/20th C.) drystone dyker in the Liddesdale area.

Boyken Burn (boi-kin-burn) n. stream joining the Esk near Bentpath. This was the site of the chapel at ‘Boykin’ which in 1391 was endowed with some lands by Adam ‘de Glendonyng’ of Hawick. The settlement there is recorded on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and Roy’s mid-18th century map, but was abandoned before 1810.

Boyle (boi-ul) n. Edward (?–? ) Head Janitor at Hawick High School, awarded an M.B.E. for services to education in 1997. Walter (16th C.) recorded in Woll in 1579/80. He was a witness in Kirkhouses for a case between Dalgleishes and Scotts. He was also in Woll in 1580 when witness to a transaction for Isabella Turnbull, widow of John Scott of Blindhaugh.

Braid Crossroads (brād-kros-rōdz) n. name sometimes used for the junction at the top of Wellogate Brae, with Braid Road to the left, the Cross Road to the right, and the ‘Well o the Gate’ ahead.

Braid Haaick (brād-hālk) n. subtitled ‘A treatise on the vernacular speech of Hawick’, an extensive glossary of Hawick words, together with a description of pronunciation and grammar, written by Elliot Cowan Smith. It was published in the Archaeological Society Transactions in 1927, several years after Smith’s death. It represents the first thorough study of the specific dialect of Hawick, building on Sir James Murray’s earlier and more general work ‘Dialect of the Southern Counties of Scotland’, and being used heavily (while in manuscript form) in George Watson’s ‘Roxburghshire Word Book’. It begins with the apology: ‘It is with hesitation that one who has been long resident furth of the land of his birth would venture to profess himself a judge of the continuing purity or the growing adulteration of the vernacular speech of his native district’. But the article demonstrates how serious a student of the local vernacular Smith was, despite his relative youth. He says that ‘Braid Haaick constitutes a potent and prolific part of the upper Teviotdale vernacular, which itself is one of the purest and richest branches of the vernacular of Scotland’. His habit of collecting words and meanings peculiar to Hawick was encouraged by the articles and lists that appeared in the local press in preparation for George Watson’s dictionary. He includes an attempt to use spelling to indicate pronunciation, since ‘the representation of the Scottish vernacular is marred by the tendency to Anglicize its spelling’.

Braidhaugh (brād-hawf) n. Broadhaugh, farm on the left of the A7 just past Newmill. There were Dalgleishes there in the early 16th century. William Dalgleish was recorded there in 1502 and 1508. ‘Ade Dalgeslch in Braidhauch’ and 2 other family members received remission for associating with rebel Turnbulls in 1507. And Thomas Dalgleich in ‘Braidhaugh’ was recorded for stealing horses in 1510, as well as resettling other Dalgleishes. The Laird of Branxholme’s servant ‘Hob Dalgles’ was killed there around the 1570s by a group of Scots from Allanhaugh. Tenants in 1620 were Thomas Launder and Thomas Aitchison. This was the home of Walter Scott, a Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch in the 1630s and 40s. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. About that time the land tax value was £684 for ‘Braidhaugh or the present tenent of falsnasch’. The Hearth Tax records of 1694 list Gideon Scott, James Nichol, herd James Murray and Robert Scott. Francis Gledstains was there in 1707. It was surveyed in 1718, when it consisted of 674 acres and was bounded by the Allan Water, Stobicote, Northhouse and the River Teviot; woods of mainly ash trees were also marked. James Grieve was there in 1724. Robert Elliot was there in at least 1747–48 and James Reid in 1747. The Ogilvie’s were tenants in the 18th and early 19th centuries, with Robert Ogilvie recorded there on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and William Ogilvie the farmer on the 1851 census. James Hobkirk is recorded as farmer there in 1868. Some flints found there are in the Museum collection. There is a cairn and possible settlement revealed by aerial photography on the hill to the north-east, as well as signs of several settlements around Broadhaugh Hill to the south-east. It seems reasonable to suppose that this is the same place as ‘Ryngwood-chat’ (probably ‘Ringwoodhaugh’), which was a property of the Scots of Branxholme and Buccleuch. Certainly the lands were still listed as part of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose among Buccleuch possessions in 1634. There may have been a tower near the present farmhouse (the name appears as ‘braidhalch’ in 1502, ‘Braidhaugh’ in 1507, ‘Braidhaucht’ in 1585, ‘Braidhaugh’ in about 1599, ‘Braidhaughe’ in 1620, ‘Broadhauche’ in 1637 and 1652, ‘Braidheugh’ and ‘Braidhauch’ in 1634, ‘Braidhaucht’ in 1640, ‘Braid Hauche’ in 1646, ‘Braidhauch’ in 1651, 1661 and 1663 and ‘Broadhaugh’ in 1707; it is ‘Braidhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is already anglicised on Stobie’s map of 1770; the origin is clearly from the Old English ‘broad flat land by the river’).

Braidhaugh (brād-hawch, -hawf) n. Broadhaugh, farm near where the ‘Note o the Gate’ road branches off the A6088 just past Bonchester. It was formerly part of the Barony of Abbotsrule and was enlarged with part of the comonalty of Mackside. It was apparently once known as ‘Spain’, the name being given as a joke by the Elliots of Wolfelee. There were Turnbulls here in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1611. In 1622 James, son of William Turnbull in Braidhaugh, was accused of stealing cattle from Earlside; in 1627 William and his son James promised to atone for causing a disturbance at Abbotsrule Kirk. It was valued at £80 on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. John Douglass was tenant in the 18th century. In the 1707 valuation it was included in the estate of William Kerr of Abbotsrule. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and still in 1811), valued at £128 6s 8d. Tenants in the 19th century included John Telfer, Thomas Grierson, Thomas Storrie, Charles Renwick, and then John Waldie into the 20th century. It was sold by William Kerr of Abbotsrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. The old farmhouse was demolished in the early years of the 19th century (with the stone used for dykes) and could still be seen a century ago on the left side of the road; the newer farmhouse was built at the upper end of the haugh, about a quarter of a mile further up. It contains a piece of land called ‘Thorton’ and also the ‘Ffoull Well’ – ‘What errand hath brought thee to Braidhaugh Brow, And where is that thief Wat Harden now?’ [WHO] (it is ‘Braidhauch’ in 1611; marked ‘Braidhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Braidhaugh Cottages (brād-hawf-ko’-ce-jeez) n. cottages at Broadhaugh in the Rule valley.

Braidhaugh Hill (brād-hawf-hil) n. Broadhaugh Hill, hill south of Broadhaugh farm, making a ridge between the Teviot and Allan valleys.

It reaches a height of 279 m and has signs of an ancient settlement on its western side (as well as another on Birny Knowe just to the north-east). This measures about 150 ft by 115 ft, being composed of a low bank and ditch and with perhaps a couple of hut platforms inside.

Braidhaugh Park (brād-hawf-pawrk) n. name used for a field near the farm of Braidhaugh in the Rule valley, near where the old farmhouse stood.

Braidie (brā-dee) n. Marjorie (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed half a year’s fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere.

braidit (brā-dee’, -di’) pp. braided – ‘... Hae the same leme o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braidit in her hair’ [DH].

Braidlie (brā-dee) n. farm near where the burn of the same name meets the Hermitage Water. William ‘de Bradeleye’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, may have been an early owner. It is listed as a 5-pound land on a c.1376 rental list among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1428/9 the lands were given by William, Earl of Angus, to Archibald Douglas of Cavers and granted by a later Earl of Angus to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later. ‘Andree Elwald et aliis’ were the tenants in 1541, when the lands were valued at 8 merks. In the mid-16th century Martin Elliot of Braiddie was the leader of that clan. Around that time there was a feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch, which lasted several years. This led to an area around Branxholme being burned and pillaged in 1565, probably including Hawick, i.e. ‘the Brodies’ who are recorded in a letter of the time burning Hawick were probably none other than the Elliots of Braiddie. The original peel tower was near Old Braiddie, while the newer farmhouse (sometimes called ‘New Braiddie’) lies closer to the Hermitage Water. John Robison was tenant there in 1694. Andrew Kyle was farmer there in 1797, Arthur Kyle in the 1830s and 40s, David Kyle in 1851 and James Graham in 1868 (also spelled ‘Braidley’, ‘Braidlee’, ‘Braidles’, ‘Braidily’ etc.; the name probably derives simply from the Old English ‘brad leah’, meaning ‘broad clearing’; it is ‘Brade’ around 1376, ‘Bradele’ in 1428/9 and 1470, ‘Bradelye’ in 1472, then is recorded in 1511...

and many times in the 16th century as ‘Braidley’ etc.; it is ‘Braidlie’ in 1694 and ‘Broadlee’ in 1797; it appears on Blaen’s c.1654 map as ‘Braillres’ and is ‘Broadlie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Braidlie (bräid-lee) n. older name for Broadlee by Deanburnhaugh or near Ashkirk.

Braidlie Burn (bräid-lee-burn) n. stream on the north side of the Hermitage valley, formed from the Crib Burn and Barley Burn and joining the Hermitage Water between Braidlie and Gorrenberry. It is marked ‘Braidley Burn’ on the Ordnance Survey map.

Braidliehope (bräid-lee-hop) n. farmstead located up the Braidlie (or Braidley) Burn from Braidlie farm in the Hermitage valley. The cottage is now derelict. Alexander Easton was shepherd there in 1835. William Armstrong was there in the mid-1800s. William Little was shepherd there in 1851 and Charles Scott in 1861 (also written ‘Broadleehope’).

Braidlies (bräid-leez) n. former name for lands adjacent to Brieryyards in the Barony of Hassettean. In 1637 they were inherited along with Brieryyards by William Scott of Chamberlain Newton, from his father John Scott of Brieryyards. James Douglas lived there in 1747, when the lands were within Wilton Parish. It is unclear exactly where these lands were (it is ‘Braidleyis’ in 1637 and ‘Broadlees’ in 1747).

Braid Road (bräid-rodd) n. last part of the road from Orchard to the Wellogate, running behind Orchard Terrace. Presumably named for its relative breadth at some point. A ‘retouched flint’ found here is in the Museum.

Branch Cleuch (brawnch-klooch) n. stream in Liddesdale that rises on the slopes of Roan Fell and flows roughly south-east to join the Black Burn near Kiln Knowe (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, with ‘Branchcleuch Bogg’ between here and Kiln Syke).

Brand (brawnd) n. James (1843–1908) born in Culross, he trained at the Church of Scotland Normal College in Glasgow and came to Hawick in 1866 as assistant to James C. Mudie. This was for the private school that ran at the former Subscription Rooms (now the Halls for the Catholic chapel). He left to form his own school after a clash of personalities, being based first in the Baptist Chapel in Allars Crescent, then at 10 Union Street and later expanding into property at the other end of Union Street. This was called Teviot Grove Academy, but familiarly known as ‘Brand’s School’. It is said that he provided such strong competition that Mudie was forced to leave Hawick. The school took boarders, some of them from other parts of the country. The school ran as a private institution until 1895 when taken over by the School Board, with Brand becoming Rector of the senior part of the Buccleuch School, which ran technical and art classes in the Buccleuch Memorial. He was also a private music teacher, as well as being Session Clerk for Hawick Parish. He retired in 1906. He married J.E.D. Murray’s older sister Isabella A. (1849–97). Their children were James (a nurseryman in Vancouver), Murray (paymaster at Woolwich Arsenal), Ira (who married a Sheldon), Alice (who married another Sheldon), May (who became a teacher) and Jessie.

hand to hand we’ll fight; For one of us shall surely die, And God assist the right’ [JTe].

brander (bran-dur) n. a grid-iron used for cooking, a drain cover, especially an iron grill type – ‘ma buol went doon the brander’, ‘I’em, ane brander for ane goospan. Item, ane rosten brander . . . ’ [SB1651], ‘. . . or clairy wui lifty glaar an creesly glet thre ghooel seidaen an brander’ [ECS], an iron frame for protecting the piers of a bridge from heavy flotsam – ‘Paid a pint of brandye, when the brander of the middle pillar of the new Teviot Bridge was in the water’ [BR], v., arch. to cook on a grid iron, grill food – ‘I’ll heck them brandered, boiled, or basted’ [DH] (from Old English).

brandin (bran-din) n. former method of punishment, last administered in Hawick in 1697. Offenders would be branded with a letter prominently visible, typically on the face. The ‘H’ branding iron was unfortunately not preserved – ‘. . . and at the east end of toun to be burned on the chick with the letter H . . . ’ [BR], ‘. . . never again to be seen . . . within the Burgh of Hawick . . . and if they do on the contrair, they consent to be branded with ane hott iron on the face’ [BR1700].

Brandside (brawnd-sid) n. former name for lands near Winnington Rig. They were listed as ‘Brandsyde’ as part of the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. ‘Bransidebrae’ was listed among the lands in the Barony in the late 17th century and it is transcribed as ‘Branksydbrae’ in 1670.

Brand’s Schuil (brawndz-skil) n. private school at 10 Union Street in the latter part of the 19th century, run by James Brand, and also known as the Teviot Grove Academy. It was the continuation of the Academy previously located at the Subscription Rooms. In 1895 the premises were taken over by the School Board for use as part of the secondary school.

brang (brawng) pp., poet. brought – ‘He brang me til the wassail-ha’, an’ his baumir ower me was loe’ [HSR], ‘. . . ther she brang thee furth that buure thee’ [HSR] (this used more as the past tense; cf. broucht, browt and brung, which are past participles).

brank (brawngk) n., arch. a kind of bridle – ‘. . . brank of ane naig’ [BRe.1649], ‘. . . As country lands be all array’d, Wi! branks and brecham on ilk mare. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craige as wanrestfih as branks an brecham roond a yaud’ [ECS].

branks (brawngks) n., pl. arch. the mumps, a bridle, halter – ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craige as wanrestfih as branks an brecham roond a yaud’ [ECS].

Branxholme

Branxholme (brank-sum) n. estate centred on Branxholme Castle, which was owned by the Lovels, the Baliols, the Murrays and the Inglises before passing to the Scotts. In 1420 (and confirmed at Cavers Kirk in 1431), in the reign of James I, half of the lands were exchanged between the Scotts and the Inglises for Mudiestone in Lanarkshire. It is said that this followed Sir Thomas Inglis complaining of incursions by the English, and that after the trade Sir William Scott remarked that ‘the cattle of Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale’ (but in fact the trade was between the fathers of these two gentlemen). The half lands are described as being ‘from the river of Branchselme to the water of Borythwyk, and as the water of Teveot runs’ (although this description seems obscure), including the lands of ‘Styll’, ‘Lonnehyll’, ‘Holstruther’ and ‘Meyrle’ (all of which are lost names). In 1446, in the reign of James II, the other half was granted to Sir Walter Scott and his son Sir David to be held in ‘blanch’ of the Crown, for the payment of a red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The land has been owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1903 by Margaret Scott (whose local connection is unclear), who named the school after Branxholme, presumably inspired by Sir Walter Scott’s ‘lay of the Last Minstrel’. Branxholme Park is an adjoining (and affluent) suburb of Poole.

Branksome (brawngk-sum) n. area within Poole in Dorset. It is named after a house, Branksome Tower, which was inspired by Sir Walter Scott’s ‘lay of the Last Minstrel’. The school was originally situated at 102 Bloor Street, later relocating to a 13-acre campus in the Rosedale district. The school opened an Asian branch in Korea in 2012.

Brannan (braw-nin) n. John (1861/2–1915) lived at the Round Close. He served in the 7th Battalion K.O.S.B. and died at Gallipoli. At age 53, he must have been one of the oldest men killed at the front line. His son Andrew died 2 months later at Gallipoli.

branny (braw-nee) n., poet. brandy – ‘The mistress of Bortugh cam’ ben, Aye blinking sae couthy and canny; But some said she had in her han’ A kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES].

Brankan (braw-nik) n. 1861/2–1915 John lived at the Round Close. He served in the 7th Battalion K.O.S.B. and died at Gallipoli. At age 53, he must have been one of the oldest men killed at the front line. His son Andrew died 2 months later at Gallipoli.

then. It originally lay within the Barony of Hawick, but was erected into a separate Barony in 1463. The Barony was created to include all the major lands of Sir Walter Scott at that time, i.e. Lanton, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Eckford and Whitchesters, as well as Branxholme itself. Payment was to be one red rose ‘as blench farm’ at the feast of John the Baptist. The feudal superior of the new Barony was Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, while the neighbouring Barons of Hawick were the Douglases of Drumlanrig; for some period around then it may also have been considered to be part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1484/5 there is reference to the ‘three head courts’ of the barony (but it is unclear how these legal functions were divided). When the lands were inherited by Walter Scott from his grandfather David in 1492 they were described as being then waste, and valued at 24 merks yearly in times of peace. In court cases of 1493 and 1494/5 the ‘Elliot of Branxholme’ are mentioned. The Scotts of Buccleuch moved their main seat there in the last years of the 15th century. The farm was burned (but probably not the tower) and raided around 1510 by John Dalgleish and English thieves, including ‘Black John’ Routledge. An English raiding party burned the tower, farm and neighbouring farms in 1533/4 (as reported by Clifford). The tower and farm was again burned in 1544, when the English took 600 cows, 600 sheep, 200 goats and 30 prisoners, as well as killing 8 men. It was described as a ‘24 merk land’ in 1553/4, when inherited by Walter Scott, from his grandfather, Sir Walter; the mansion and mill are also mentioned. Along with Whitchesters it was valued at £44 in 1574. ‘Branxhelme, Eister and Wester, with fortalice, maner place, and wodis therof’ are mentioned in 1586. Pont’s map of the 1590s shows an enclosure around the estate, including much of the present Branxholme Park, and some of Branxholme Braes, with much of it being wooded. It was re-erected as a Barony in 1599, when the ‘reddendo’ to the superior was one red rose. The name is also used for the hamlet near there, previously having many more houses, and sometimes being referred to as ‘Branxholme Town’. By 1634 the Barony included the lands of Branxholme itself, as well as Eckford, Buccleuch, Lanton, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Rankleburn, Eilrig and Kirkurd. Adam Ogilvie and William Hope were there in 1684. The Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 lists the householders there as John Elliot, Andrew Ogilvie, James Ogilvie and Jean Scott, as well as James Anderson and Walter Scott listed among ‘the poor’. Residents in 1702 included James Ogilvie, John Scott and William Scott. John Scott was tenant there in 1709 and Walter Cook also lived there. In 1711 Andrew Ogilvie was tenant and John Cavers was herd. The tenant farmer through much of the 18th and 19th centuries was the Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, whose official residence this was from about 1767. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls the tenants were Adam Ogilvie and Thomas Graham. In 1678 the Barony (along with the free teinds of Hawick Parish) were valued at about £4700, and still had the same value in 1811. It was stated in 1838 that the largest tree in Hawick Parish was an ash situated near the Castle. A stone disc with a hole through it, from here, is in the Museum. The area was used as a setting for one of Allan Ramsay’s songs ‘The Bonnie Lass of Branksome’ – ‘As I cam’ in’ by Teviotside And by the braes of Branksome, There first I saw my booming bride. Young, smiling, sweet, and handsome’, ‘Do the phantom horsemen gather at the foot o’ Branxholm Brae? Does the minstrel from the Castle sing again his stirring lays?’ [GHB], ‘Yet, there it stands in black and white, That Henry Lovel, Branxholme’s lord, Two ozen gang of land did gift, According to his promised word’ [JCG], ‘Neath youn hill’s shade in a flowery glade, Stands Branxholme’s massive tower, Where of old the Knight in armour bright, Arrayed him for the field of flight And left his lady’s bower’ [JI] (almost interchangeably spelled ‘Branxholm’; the name first appears in 1183 as the Latinised ‘Branchuella’ and about 30 years later as ‘Brancheshelm’, then around 1315 as ‘Branxshelme’, with the substitution of ‘holm’ soon after; it is ‘Branchelme’ in 1420, ‘Branxhelme’ about 1430, ‘Brankishelme’ in 1435, ‘Brangisholme’ and ‘Brankanishame’ in 1446, ‘Brankishelme’ in 1447, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1456, ‘Brankyshelme’ in 1461, ‘Branxhelme’ on 1463, ‘Branxhame’ in 1475/6, 1478, 1500, 1501 and 1502, ‘Branxhaim’ in 1479, ‘Brankishame’ in 1481, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1482, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1484, ‘Branxeme’ in 1492, ‘Branxhame’ in 1492 and 1493, ‘Branxame’ in 1494/5, ‘Brankschayme’ in 1500, ‘branxhame’ in 1502, ‘Branxhame’ in 1510, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1500, 1523 and 1526, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1517 and 1524, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1525, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1527, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1528, ‘Branxhelme’ and ‘Branxhelme’ in 1529, ‘Branxelme’ in 1530/1, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1539, ‘Brankisholme’ in 1540 and 1564, ‘Branxhelme’ in 1543 and 1550, ‘Branxhame’ in 1550, ‘Branxhelme’ in

Branxholme Braes (brank-sum-bräz) n. farm on the right hand side of the road a little beyond Branxholme, formerly part of the Branxholme estate. In 1621 it was granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his uncle, Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin’s widow sold the lands to William Elliott, younger of Stobs. It was farmed by Grieves in the 19th century. ‘Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill’ wrote the poem ‘the Braes of Branxholm’ – ‘Come ye, lads, by Branxholme Braes, Whaur Teviot, gentle river, Glides among the saughs and slaes’ [GWe] (also spelled ‘Branxholm-bræs’ and ‘Branchholm Braes’).

Branxholme Brig (brank-sum-brig) n. bridge over the Teviot near Branxholme, by the junction with the road to Haysike, and also known as Michie’s Bridge and sometimes Goldielands Bridge. It was probably built as part of the new turnpike road around 1762 and was repaired in 1820 by Smith of Darnick. A footbridge near Branxholme was swept away in a flood.

Branxholme Brigend (brank-sum-brig-end) n. Branxholme Bridgeend, farm and scattered houses near Branxholme Bridge, at the road junction between the A7 and the Haysike road. The Michie family were here for many generations. A side road also leaves the A7 near here to reach the Borthwick valley near Milsington. This is probably the same place as ‘Goldielands Bridge End’, where Hugh Michie was recorded in 1797.

Branxholme Castle (brank-sum-kaw-sul) n. castle 3 miles south-west of Hawick, hereditary seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch since the middle of the 15th century. It may have been originally built by the Lovels, who certainly owned the land from the 12th century. It passed to Sir Henry Baliol in 1307, then to the Earl of Strathearn around 1333 and soon after to the Inglis family. It passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1420, and soon became the principal residence of the Scotts. Hawick Kirk then became the burial place of the family for several generations. The residence was strengthened and extended by Sir David Scott in the late 15th century. The Scotts must have expanded the Castle in the 15th century, since by 1463 the documents of the Scotts were made at the ‘capitale messuagium’ (i.e. principle dwelling house) of Branxholme, and no longer at Rankleburn. The tower was for centuries the centre of power in Upper Teviotdale, and is presently one of the homes of the 9th Duke of Buccleuch. However, the family stopped using it much after they purchased Dalkeith, and for a while it became the residence of the Duke’s Chamberlain. The house used to be bigger, with the original tower burned in 1532 by the Earl of Northumberland, probably burned again in 1544 by Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun’s men, and blown up in 1570 by the Earl of Sussex’ force. A corner tower remains of the original, and most of the rest dates from rebuilding carried out by Sir Walter Scott and his wife Margaret Douglas 1571–1576. A plaque over the doorway (moved from its original location on the north of the courtyard) reads ‘IN YARLD IS NOCHT NATURE HES VROUCHT YAT SAL LEST AY THAIRFORE SERVE GOD KEIP VELL YE ROD THEY FAME SAL NOCHT DECAY SCHIR WALTER SCOT OF BRANXHOLME KNYCHT, MARGARET DOUGLAS 1571’, as well as another with the arms of Scott and Douglas marking the work they undertook, the inscriptions reading ‘S(I)R W. SCOT UMQ(UHI)L(E) OF BRANXHEIM KNYT SO(N)E OF S(I)R WILLIAM SCOT OF KIRKURD KNYT BEGANE YE VORK OF YIS HAL VPON YE 24 OF MARCHE 1571 ZIER QUHA DEPAIRTED AT GOD’S PLESOUR YE 17 OF APRIL 1574’ and ‘DAME MARGRET DOUGLAS HIS SPOUS COMPLEITTIT THE FORSAID VORK (IN) OCTOBER 1576’. The main building is 3-storeyed and Z-shaped, with 2 towers, the stronger and probably older one called ‘Nebsie’. A tower of the walled castle courtyard is known as ‘Tentyfoot’, and tradition says that there were once 4 towers in all. In 1694 tax was paid on 5 hearths at the main house here. Charles Scott paid tax for 40 windows there in 1748 (when it was called ‘Branksholm house’). Additions were made to the north side and to both ends from 1790. Alterations by William Burn from around 1836 included blocking up the arched doorway. It can be seen in 2 sketches from around 1800 and 1808, before the Victorian improvements. It is a grade A listed building. The tower is well known as the main location for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Nine-and-twenty knights of fame Hung their shields in Branksome-Hall, Nine-and-twenty squires of name Brought them their steeds to bower from stall’ [SWS], ‘O’er Branxholme tower, ere the morning hour, When the lift is like lead so blue, The smoke shall roll white on the weary night. And the flame shine dimly through’ [JL], ‘The morning star with flickering light Looks down on Branxholme’s ancient tower’ [RHL].

Branxholme Common (brank-sum-ko-min) n. former name for farmland near Branxholme. In 1802 it was leased to James Hume along with Chapelhill.

Branxholme Cross?? (brank-sum-kros) n. ??.

Branxholme Easter Loch (brank-sum-ees-tur-loch) n. the eastern of the two Branxholme Lochs, on the slopes of Chapel Hill, west of Branxholme. It is sometimes called just ‘Branxholme Loch’ or ‘Easter Loch’, to distinguish it from Chisholme or Wester Loch. It was formerly used as a site for collecting marl for improving soil in the fields of the farms attached to Branxholme. The whole loch was drained, and only restored once the marl was exhausted, around 1850. A small cottage to the south-east is called Loch Cottage. Thomas Laidlaw and family were there in 1841. The plantation to the south is Loch Rig and the one to the north is Loch Strip (it is marked just ‘Branxholme L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Branxholme Gate (brank-sum-gâ’) n. former name for a cottage near Branxholme, probably at Branxholme Lodge. James Robson was shepherd there in 1851.

Branxholme Hall (brank-sum-hal, -haw) n. romantic name for Branxholme Castle – ‘Gar seek your succour at Branksome Ha’, For succour ye’se get nane freae me! Gae seek your succour where ye paid black mail, For, man! ye ne’er paid money to me’ ’[T], ‘If any one should say to me That Branxholme Hall held many a ghost I would reply with levity That those who thought so sure were lost’ [JCG].

Branxholme Knowe (brank-sum-now) n. cottage between Baranxholme Park and Branxholme Castle, recently available as a holiday unit.

Branxholme Loch (brank-sum-logh) n. actually Branxholme Easter and Wester Lochs, located about 4 miles south-west of Hawick and a mile apart. They are reached along a road, with several gates, which leads from the Teviot to the Borthwick via Chapelhill. The lochs flow into the Newmill Burn. There is also a cottage by the Easter Loch, tenanted by the Douglas family in the 19th century. The name is often just applied to the Easter Loch, with the Wester one sometimes called ‘Chisholme Loch’. A record of 1796 states that a lease was arranged (with neighbouring tenant farmers) for ‘Branxholmlock on account of clearing the Marle therein of Water’. In 1841 the cottage at ‘Wester Branxholm Loch’ was occupied by Douglastes.

Branxholme Mains (brank-sum-mânz) n. former name for the ‘home farm’ at Branxholme. It is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as ‘Manis of Branxholme’, and the amount of grain grown there is noted. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, the farm consisting of 467 acres, bounded by Branxholme Park, the River Teviot, Branxholmetown, Todshawhill and Todshawhaugh; the map shows some lines of planted trees, which are described as ‘some timber trees as Ash and Sycomer and abundance of young thriving wood’. In 1627 it was described as paying about 32 bolls of grain. In 1671 it was leased, along with Branxholme Park, to James Scott, as well as John Scot, James Allan and perhaps others. In at least the period 1672–77 it was leased to Walter Scott of Harwood. In 1691 it was leased (‘without the Park of Branxholme’) to William Scott of Burnhead and others and in 1696 to Andrew and James Ogilvie and John Scott. In 1735 ‘that part lately inclosed by a stone dyke’ was leased to Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and the rest to William Ogilvie (it is ‘Branxholme Maynis’ in 1627, ‘Branxholme Maynes’ in 1671 and ‘Branxholmemanines’ in 1735).

Branxholme Muir (brank-sum-mewr) n. land near Branxholme, consisting of the higher ground to the north. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, at that point consisting of 671 acres of high moorland, bounded by Whithope, Todshawhill, Branxholmetown, Chapelhill, Reggs, Harwood, Vales, Hott, Outer Slaidhill and Easter and Wester Parkhill. In 1671 it was leased to William Scott, having previously been leased by James Chisholme. In 1672 the east end was leased to James and Andrew Chisholme and the west end to William Scott of Hartwoodmyres. In 1677 the east end was leased by Andrew and James Chisholme and the west end by James Scott. In 1691 and 1696 the east end was leased by Andrew and Walter Chisholme and in 1691 the west end was leased to James Scott. In 1735 the east end was leased to William and Walter Chisholme and the west end to William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. It was the subject of a dispute between Sir James Stewart and John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in the period 1743–60 and in 1763–64 between Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and the heirs of Chisholme of Parkhill (it is ‘Branksholm Moor’ in 1718).

Branxholme Park (brank-sum-pawrk,-pärk) n. farm on the right-hand side of the road just before Branxholme Castle, long a tenanted farm of the Branxholme estate. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scots of Buccleuch, consisting of 215 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, a small part of Goldielands, the River Teviot, Branxholme Mains and Todshawhaugh. At that time it was stated that the farmland was ‘much incombered with young thriving wood as Ash Burch and Willow’; the plan shows trees along the south, east and north sides of the farm. It was home to the Grieve family for several generations, the first lease being signed in 1691 by Walter Grieve. The land is first referred to in 1649 as a ‘park’, the suggestion being that it was used as a deer park for the Branxholme estate. In 1694 the householders there were Walter Grieve, John Telfer and Robert Scott. William Allan was there in 1712. Walter Grieve paid tax for 12 windows there in 1748. James Grieve was tenant there in 1797, and was recorded having 11 work horses on the farm (it is ‘Braxom park’ in 1737 and ‘Branksholm park’ in 1748).

Branxholme Park Hill (brank-sum-pawrk-hil) n. hill to the north of Branxholme, reaching a height of 250 m and having a triangulation pillar.

Branxholme Pot (brank-sum-po’) n. old brass vessel belonging to the Scots of Buccleuch, presumably once from Branxholme. It is recorded at Dalkeith in the 1661 inventory of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch as ‘Item, ane great pot of brasse called Branxholme Pot, much worene, having a hole in the bottome’.

Branxholme River (brank-sum-ri-vur) n. stream near Branxholme, mentioned in the 1420 charter of half of the lands of Branxholme. Since the Teviot and Borthwick are also referred to, then this must be the name for either the stream which runs through Branxholme Glen (also known as Bloody Burn) or perhaps Newmill Burn.

Branxholme Road (brank-sum-röd) n. part of Silverbuthall built in 1965, named after Branxholme Castle.

the Branxholme Stakes (thu-brank-sum-stäks) n. prize race at the Common Riding, replaced by the Medway Cup in 1927.

Branxholme Toon (brank-sum-toon) n. former name for the village around Branxholme, or more specifically for the farm of Branxholmtown. This was located about half a mile west of the castle itself, or coming from Hawick, the farm was on the right-hand side of the road, just before Newmill. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scots of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 252 acres, bounded by Branxholme Mains, the River Teviot, Castlehill, Chapelhill, Branxholme Muir and Todshawhill. The modern farm of Branxholme Braes encompasses the lower land that was once part of this farm. The tenant farmer there in 1574 was John Martin, when the inventory of livestock was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Steven Scott was tenant there in 1611. Another John Martin was there in 1623. In 1627 it was described as paying ‘32 bolls in stok and teynd; estimat to pay 16 in stok, 4 in parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. in teynd’ in an average year. There were Scoons recorded there from at least 1671–1735. In 1671 it as leased by Margaret Murray, John Richardson (younger and elder), William Hope, Partick Scoon, James Allan and James Martin. In 1677 the tenants were Patrick and Robert Scoon, William Hope, James Richardson and Margaret Murray. In 1690 the farm was leased to Janet Wilson, John and Patrick Scoon, James Crawford and Robert Richardson (with Richardson being replaced by William Nixon in 1691 and then Andrew Wilson in 1692). There were also Craws, Nichols and Scotts there in the early 18th century. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the householders listed there were Walter Wilson, James ‘Crinklaw’, Patrick Scoon, John Scoon, Andrew Laidlaw, James Craw and Walter Scott, as well as Robert Richardson being listed among ‘the poor’. In 1698 Andrew Wilson’s widow took over his part. James Laidlaw was there in 1702. James and Walter Craw, Margaret Riddell and Scotts were there in 1708. John Riddell, Thomas Anderson and James Craw were all there in 1713. Robert Scott, Walter Crow and John Nichol were recorded there in 1717. John Craw and John Wilson were tenants there in 1723. John Wilson and James and Walter Crow were tenants in 1725. The cluster of houses is clearly shown on the 1718 survey, in the same location as ‘Branxholmtown’ marked on today’s Ordnance Survey map. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1720 and other residents included Robert Scoon and James and Walter Crow. In 1725 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon, John Wilson and Walter Craw. In 1735 the tenants were James Craw, Robert and Walter Scoon and John Wilson. Robert and Walter Scoon were still tenants in 1742. In the 1740s the tenants included James Craw, John Crawford’s widow and John Wilson. Charles Scott was tenant in 1748. The settlement at ‘Branxholmtoun’ was significantly bigger in the 17th and 18th centuries than it became later. It even had its own teacher around the 18th century. By the mid-19th century it was already reduced to 8 or 9 houses. It was once the home for the retainers of Scott of Branxholme. The road from the head of the Borthwick valley into Hawick used to pass by here (also written ‘Branxholmtown’, ‘Branxholmtoun’, ‘Branxholmetoun’ and variants).

Branxholme Waltz (brank-sum-walts) n. only piece of pure piano music composed by Adam Grant. He wrote this in about 1880, dedicating it to the Duchess of Buccleuch and it was published in 1882.

Branxholme Wester Loch (brank-sum-wes-tur-loch) n. the western of the two lochs in the hills above Branxholme, and the source of the Newmill Burn. It was also formerly known as Chisholme Loch. The ‘Wester Loch House’ listed in 1774 must have been a cottage near here. Widow Isabella Douglas and several children were here in 1841 and 1851 (it appears to be labelled ‘Chishamra L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, while the Easter Loch is marked simply ‘Branxholme L.’). The name was discarded in 1882.

Branxholm Terrace (brank-sum-te-ris) n. original name for the lower houses in Dalkeith place, the name deriving from the Barony of Branxholm. The name was discarded in 1882.

Branxton (brangs-tin) n. village in Northumberland, near Flodden Field. The site of the battle is immediately to the south of the church, the graveyard of which is supposed to contain many of the bodies of those who died there. A granite memorial cross on top of Branxton Hill marks the site of the battle.

the Brethren Fellowship (thu-breth-rin-fe-li-ship) n. evangelical group meeting in Slitrig Hall, Old Manse Lane, with their local origin dating back to the 1870s. They are also referred to as ‘Plymouth Brethren’ or ‘Christian Brethren’. Their practices include full body baptism (some previously carried out in the nearby mill lade!) and Communion. They held popular ‘lantern shows’ in the mid-20th century. Another group known as ‘the Brethren’ met in Oliver Place in the late 19th century. There was also a ‘House of Brethren’ on the north side of Eastgate in Denholm at the end of the 19th century, with mill workers travelling from Hawick to worship there. The ‘Needed Truth’ (so-called from their monthly magazine) separated from the ‘Open Brethren’ in 1888.

Brewbuss (broo-bus) n. former farmstead, probably in the upper Jed valley near Roughlee. It is recorded in 1669 as ‘Brewbuse’ when the tenant was William Laidlaw. Probably the same place was ‘Breirbus’ in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, valued at 20 shillings. It was part of the five steadings of ‘Fawsyde, Rouchleis et Brerebus’ with past rentals claimed by William Douglas in 1538 and 1539 (it is ‘Breirbus’ in 1538 and ‘Breirbusk’ in 1539; it is unclear where exactly this was or what the name means, although ‘Briar bush’ seems possible, given the earlier spellings).

the Brewery (* thu-broo-ur-ee*) n. Hawick had a brewery in Slitrig Crescent, between the present Nos. 16 and 19, which closed in 1879. It is shown in a painting of Hawick by J.B. Pringle in about 1850. John George King was brewer there in the mid-19th century, with Robert Winter taking over from him. Part (No. 18) was converted into a church hall for St. Cuthbert’s, while Nos. 17 and 19 are private houses. The lower ground floor ceilings and higher upper floor ceilings are remnants of its use as a brewery, and part of a hoist can still be seen above one of the upper windows. There was also a brewery down Walter’s Wynd marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Brewery Haugh (* thu-broo-ee-hawd*) n. area between the main road and the Slitrig, where St. Mary’s Church Hall and parts of St. Cuthbert’s were built. It was named after the nearby
Breweryhooses

Breweryhooses (broo-ur-ee-hoo-seez) n. Breweryhouses, a name sometimes used for Whusky Hooses. The existence of a 'stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge' (recorded in 1738) may explain the confounding of the names. 'Brewery' is marked on Wood's map.

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for lands that were part of the Harwood estate, and probably adjacent to Templehall. In a feu charter of 1567 they (along with Templehall) are recorded passing by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull, having been resigned by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. These lands were confirmed to his nieces in 1604, when Templehall and Brewlands are described as being west of Wauchope and north of the Rule Water (it is 'Brewlandis' in 1604).

Brewlands (broo-lindz) n. former name for part of Raperlaw. They are 'Brewlandis in Rapperlaw' in 1569 (when among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French) and the 'Brewlands of Raperlaw' in a listing of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670.

Brewster (broo-star) n. Sir David (1781–1868) born in Jedburgh, son of the rector of the Grammar School there. It is said that he had an early infatuation for Mary Somerville, who also lived in Jedburgh, and learned to make a telescope with James Veitch of Inchbonny. He went to Edinburgh University at the age of 12 to study theology, but eventually became a physicist (amongst other things). He invented the kaleidoscope and a precursor of the Fresnel lens, improved the stereoscope and discovered the law of angle of polarization of light (known as the 'Brewster Angle'). He wrote biographies of several eminent scientists, as well as many other books, including one discussing life on other planets. He also experimented with early photography, published over 2,000 papers and became one of the foremost scientists of his day. Additionally he edited the 18 volume 'Edinburgh Encyclopædia' (writing many of the science articles himself), which was very influential at the time. Locally known as 'of Allerly', he was a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in the 1860s. He was also a Vice-President of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He was made a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1864. An early photographic portrait of him exists and a portrait was gifted to Jedburgh by his daughter.

Brieryshaw (brI-ur-ee-shaw) n. former settlement on the main road through the Ewes valley, to the north of the church and school. It was valued at £90 in 1671. On the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties, it is explained that the farm had corn land intermixed with that of Kirkton and they shared 583 acres of pasture, with no marches, but this farm holding 1/3 of the lands, and hence 1/3 of the animals in the combined herd. It was owned by the Laird of Byreleuch, whose name is not given. James Scott was there in at least the period 1787–97. Jane Scott was living there in the cottage in at least the period 1841–61. In 1841 and 1851 John Dryden was blacksmith there, James Sword was joiner and Andrew Thomson was a road surveyor. There was a blacksmith and post office here on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map. Thomas Gaskell was farmer there in 1868 (it is ‘Bryeryshaw’ in 1718).

Brieryshaw Hill (brI-ur-ee-shaw-hil) n. hill opposite Arkleton in Ewesdale, being essentially the south-eastern shoulder of Stake Hill. It contains the remains of a hill-fort, which commanded a view up and down the length of the entire valley. It measures about 64 m by 57 and has a double rampart. There are remains of a separate enclosure about 100 m to the south and the south-west side of the hill shows signs of rig-and-furrow.

Briery Yairds (brI-ur-ee-yärds) n. estate, with its mansion house built near Hornshole, overlooking the Teviot, formerly in the Barony of Hassendean. It is reached from a driveway just to the north of Hornshole Bridge, and situated to the north-east, overlooking the caravan park. ‘John de Cauerhull de Breyzard’ witnessed a document for the Scots of Buccleuch in 1456. Cuthbert Glencairn had a sasine for the lands in 1492. In 1510/1 the lands were granted by James IV to Master John Murray of Blackbarony, after they were forfeited by Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. There were Douglases there around the time of the Hornshole incident and through the 16th century. It was burned along with much of the rest of Teviotdale by Hertford’s men in 1545 (probably the closest place the raiding party came to Hawick). Robert Douglas inherited lands from his father John Douglas of Brierryards in 1606. John Scott was recorded as tenant there in 1611, and Scotts held the lands through the 17th century. It is among lands whose superiority was inherited by Thomas, Earl of Haddington in 1634. In 1637 William Scott of Chamberlain Newton inherited these lands (along with Braidedes) from his uncle John Scott of Briery Yards; at that time they were valued at 100 shillings, and included a mill. In 1643 and 1663 the lands were valued at £260 and owned by John Scott. In 1678 it was combined with Hornshole (in Hassendean Parish) and valued at £360. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. Lands here were still listed as being part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1680 (a vestige of a connection with Melrose Abbey). The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until assigned to Wilton in 1690. The estate formerly owned land in the town, near where Croft Road and Lothian Street were built. Tax was paid on 4 hearths there in 1694, when William Scott was probably Laird; other residents recorded there at that time were Adam Morton, John Goodfellow and Thomas Henderson. It was purchased by William Ogilvie in 1705. Thomas Liddell was there in 1722 and Thomas Scott in 1724. David Ogilvie paid the tax on 12 windows there in 1748. Robert Oliver was recorded as a resident there in 1770. In 1783 the lands passed to the Turnbulls of Fenwick through marriage, and this family sold them at the end of the 19th century. It was later home of historian David Dundas Scott, Provost Robert Fraser Watson and Thomas Lindsay Watson. Lindsay Watson had the old house demolished and a new house built using some of the same stones (also spelled ‘Brieryyards’, ‘Briery-yards’ and ‘Brierie-yards’; it is ‘Bryeryards’ in 1456, ‘Breyryards’ in 1492, ‘Brieryardis’ in 1510/1, ‘Breierzardis’ in 1517, ‘Bryeryards’ and ‘Breare Yarde’ in 1545, ‘Brieryards’ in 1588, ‘Breeryard’ in 1603, ‘Braizearzdis’ in 1606, ‘Brieryeardis’ in 1611, ‘Breiryeardis’ in about 1621, ‘Briiriezardis’ in 1633, ‘Breiryeardis’ in 1634, ‘Briirizaerdis’ in 1637, transcribed as ‘Bririyards’ in 1638, ‘Brierzardis’ in 1640, ‘Bridieyards’ in 1643, ‘Breidieyairdis’ in 1646, ‘Breiryeardis’ in 1648 and ‘Breiryeardis’ in 1649, ‘Brieie yards’ in 1663, ‘Brierieyeardis’ and ‘Brieryardis’ in 1670, ‘Bridieyerds’ in 1678,
Brig

brig (brig) n. a bridge – ‘To spent in Michael Stevenson’s, with the magistrates, at petitioning the mending of the auld brig, damaged by the flood . . .’ [BR1773], ‘Auld Brig shake hands, I maist can greet To see ye harried sae complete’ [WNK], ‘. . . Hae stood, and still as lang might stand As oon brig in a’ the land’ [AD], Jookin’ here a sturdy brig or there a cauld’ [JEDM], ‘The road splet, an, ti the richt, spanged the Yill owre a brig’ [ECS], ‘. . . Hawick Wattie’s brocht another Spring. Oo saw’m hismelf ayont the brig’ [WP], a gap between two things, particularly stacks of peet – ‘. . . to take no more ground to spreed peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns, and to leave sufficient briggs . . .’ [BR1743] (from Old English).

Brig (brig) n. George (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in a marriage contract of 1581/2 between his daughter Katherine and James, son of John Melrose. The couple were to be given John Melrose lands in Langnewton, lying between those of ‘Jock the Laird’ Robson and William Robson ‘the officer’. The witnesses included John Scott in Aikwood, and Thomas and Robert ‘therei’ (probably meaning in Langnewton, who were surely relatives). James (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Martin (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1581 when he witnessed a marriage contract for the son of William Robson. Robert (d.c.1500) killed along with Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelshope’ (probably Kershope) by a group of Olivers and others from Strynds and nearby, who had remission for their crimes in 1502. In a second entry in 1502 they were named as Robert Oliver in Lustruther, Robert, son’s brother of David Oliver, James Oliver and Robert Waugh in Mervinslaw. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1580 when he witnessed a tack for land in Langnewton between Patrick King and Stephen Bulman. In 1581/2 he witnessed a marriage contract involving George Brig in Langnewton, with Robert as another witness. Thomas (16th C.) probably tenant in Langnewton. He is mentioned in 1581/2 when he witnessed a marriage contract involving George Brig, with Robert being another witness.

the Brig-end (thu-brig-end) n. former popular name for the Kedie House at the west side of the Auld Brig, or more generally for that area. Shoemaker John Oliver is described being from ‘Bridge end’ when he died in 1787.

Brigend (brig-end) n. another name for Ashkirk Brigend.

Brigend (brig-end) n. Brigend, former name for the houses, including the public house at Bonschester Bridge. It is stated that there was an inn there from 1701. The tenant of the farm there was George Stevenson in 1797. A new house and joiner’s shop were built by James Chisholme of Holburn in the early years of the 19th century. However, it was soon changed into a public house, with the joiner, Robert Turnbull, talking over as proprietor. This was around 1820, when the new toll road was opened. The Turnbull family also ran a grocer’s shop there, which, from 1835, was used as the first post office in the Rule valley. The rest of the row of cottages was built a little while after the pub (now the Horse and Hounds) by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Other early residents were mason Gilbert Boa, road contractor William Laidlaw and blacksmith George Stevenson (also written ‘Briggend’, it is ‘B. Bridgend’ in 1797).

Brigend see Hermitage Brigend

Brigend Hoose (brig-end-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Bridge Hoose.

Briggend (brig-end) n. Bridge-end, former settlement near Darnick which had a rudimentary bridge consisting of planks across 3 piers, for a long time it must have been the only bridges across the Tweed between Peebles and Berwick. It probably did not survive Hertford’s army in 1545, and although the settlement is marked on Pont’s 1609 map, there is no bridge there. It is explicitly mentioned in 1629 as being already ruined and was romanticised by Sir Walter Scott in ‘the Monastery’. For some time afterwards there was a ferry across the Tweed at this location until the bridge was built at Darnick in 1750, and then replaced shortly afterwards.

Briggs (brigz) n. (Bridges, Briggs) Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Riddell and their children included: John (b.1641); and Adam (b.1648). Adam (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Agnes Riddell, born in Hawick in 1648. He is probably the Adam who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism.
for Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges in Hawick in 1678. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick, who who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for gardener George Lamb in 1760 and the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas in 1768. John (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was a witness, along with another weaver, Walter (presumably a relative), for a sasine of 1610. John (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably related to the earlier weaver called John. In 1713 he is described as 'weaver att the easter kirkstyle'. He married Janet Beattie (or 'Badie') and their children included: Margaret (b.1700); James (b.1703); Isabella (b.1705); John (b.1707); Jean (b.1710); and Margaret (again, b.1713). The witnesses in 1700 were weavers James and John Beattie (surely related to his wife), in 1705 were weavers John Beattie and Adam Scott, and in 1713 were John Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and carrier Walter Ruecastle. John (17th C.) fleather recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same John was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1683 he was fined for insulting William Paisley and Michael Turnbull, 'calling of them two drunken elders'. He may be the John whose children born in Hawick included: Marion (b.1703); Andrew (b.1706); and John (b.1710). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Liddersdale in 1700. He may be the John whose daughter Helen married John Scott in 1722. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Lamb in 1781. Probably the same John married Isobel Scott (who was from Robertson Parish) in 1767 and their children included Isobel (b.1769), John (b.1773), John (again, b.1775), Robert (b.1776) and Betty (b.1779). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in 1771 for James Laidlaw. He is probably the John whose child was buried in Hawick in 1772. Bailie John (1810/1–87) Magistrate of the mid-1800s, of whom a portrait exists. He was a tailor by trade and was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk. There were people of the same name at Mabonlaw in the mid-17th century. He was recorded at about 1 High Street in 1841 and on the Howegate in 1851 (when he employed 3 men). He was also listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Wilhelmina, sister of Provost John Nichol, and she died in 1865, aged 52. He later moved to Glasgow. Col. John (1825–93) 2nd son of Col. J.F. of Strathairly, he distinguished himself in India, retiring on full pay as Lieutenant Colonel. He was tenant at Linthill for a few years and then at Bonjedward. He was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt, but became permanently lame after his horse fell on him. He married a daughter of A. Lamont of Knockdow and secondly Louisa, daughter of Capt. Briggs. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire and a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote 'Heathen and Holy Lands' (1859). In later life he lived in Hampshire, where he died. Michael (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, with surname sometimes written 'Bridge' or 'Bridges'. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Session for being at a late night drunken brawl, although he stated he 'was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan'. He is probably the Michael who witnessed bapisms for James Jolly, Andrew Jerdon and William Gardner (along with Adam Jerdan) in 1705, for weaver Andrew Richardson in 1706, for James Jolly in 1707, for weaver Mungo Swan, for weaver Thomas Turnbull and for weaver Thomas (surely related) in 1708 and for weaver Jasper Richardson in 1709. He married Helen Allan (from Cavers Parish) in 1709 and their children included: Janet (b.1710); Rachel (b.1712); Thomas (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); and Helen and John (b.1719). It is probably that he was the Michael, son to fleather Thomas, who was listed among the young men who were fined for their part in the disturbances at the Common Riding of 1706. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Douglas and their children included James (b.1671) and Janet (b.1674). Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1693 he gave evidence before the Magistrates when John Hardie was accused of assaulting Steven Greenshields in St. Mary's Kirk. He is probably the Patrick listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Patrick, married to Bessie Anderson, whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1678); William (b.1681); Patrick (b.1684); and Mungo (b.1687). The witnesses in 1678 were Thomas Lunn and William Swan. He could be the Patrick who (along with Adam) witnessed a baptism for Andrew Jardine and Janet Bridges in 1678. Thomas (17th C.)

resident of Hawick. His wife was Grizell Bridges and their children included John (b.1637) and Janet (b.1639). Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 when he was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick. He is listed separately from Thomas the the weaver. He could be the ‘flesher’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the man listed on the rental records for the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, where he was ‘in Hawick’ and a cautions, perhaps for Robert Richardson. He was presumably the flesher Thomas whose son Michael was among those fined for their part in the disturbances at the 1706 Common Riding. Thomas (17th C.) weaver listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1708 and 1711 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger (whose mother Janet Briggs was surely related to him, perhaps his sister). In 1717 he was charged with collecting money ‘westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He must have been older than the Thomas born in 1680, but could have been the father. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Wigholm, whose children born in Hawick included: an unnamed son (b.1672); William (b.1673); Margaret (b.1676); Isobel (b.1678); and Thomas (b.1680). The witnesses in 1678 were Robert Lauder and James Bridges and in 1680 were Andrew Angus and shoemaker John Scott. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Porteous in 1688. Thomas (17th C.) referred to as ‘younger, weaver’ in 1686 when he was fined for ‘abstracting and resetting of lyne from the church style building’ (i.e. stealing cement from a building at the Kirk Style) having been seen by Bailie Laing. He is also listed as ‘younger, weaver’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas (b.1680) probably son of Thomas and Margaret Wigholm. He married Jean Cook in 1707. It may be that there are 2 generations of Thomases confused with each other here He was a weaver in Hawick when his son Thomas was baptised in 1708, with witnesses Michael (surely a relative) and James Wilson, ‘servitor Horslhill’. Thomas (18th C.) weaver who married Isobel Waugh in Hawick in 1724. His wife was also from Hawick. Walter (16th/17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1610 he was witness to a sasine in Hawick, along with John and others. Walter (b.1815/6) listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. In the 1851 census he was a shoemaker at around 7 Tower Knowe. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a shoemaker on the High Street. His wife was Betsy. William (d.c.1684) weaver in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1684. He is probably the William who was on the Council in 1668 and also the weaver called William who was elected to the Council in late 1648. He may be the William who witnessed baptisms in 1648 for Andrew Turnbull and for James Lunn. Probably his relatives (perhaps including himself) were the 3 people named ‘Bridgs’ who were imprisoned in the Tower by the Bailie of Regality in 1668, for ‘ryving of others hares’, with the Bailies of Hawick requesting their release; they appealed to the Supreme Court for the fine imposed on them. He is probably the William who married Bessie Brown, their children including: Helen (b.1636), who probably married Mungo Swan; Patrick (b.1639); William (b.1646); and Janet (b.1652), who probably married Andrew Jardine. In 1673 and 1680 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine and his wife Janet Bridges, who may have been his daughter. In 1678 he witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott and Isobell Bridges (who may have been another daughter). In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for Francis Scott and James Lunn. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Elliot. Their children included William (b.1646). It is possible there is an error and his wife was Marion ‘Scott’, making him the same as the William whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1647. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Scott. Their children included Isobel (b.1647), who may be the Isobel who married Francis Scott and had children baptised in the 1670s and 1680s. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Goodfellow. Their children included: Bessie (b.1671); William (b.1673); Helen (b.1680); and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1673 were William Swan and Andrew Jardine and in 1678 and 1780 were William Swan and Mungo Swan. He is probably the William, son of William and Bessie Brown, baptised in Hawick in 1646, with Andrew Jardine being his sister Janet’s husband (note that this was sometimes formerly written ‘Bridge’, ‘Bridges’ and ‘Bridge’).

Brighoose (brig-hoos) n. Brighouse or Bridgehouse, former place name for an area on the opposite side of the Liddel valley from Dinlabyre. Brighouse Burn runs south under the old railway line, past Cleuch Head and Steele Road to join the Bright Eyed Lasses (thu-bri'-Id-law-seez) n. pseudonym used by Lesley Fraser and Judith Murray.

Brighoose Burn (brig-hoos-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near the Steele and running southwards to join the Liddel near Dinlabyre. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 16 shillings and the tenants were Alexander Nixon and 2 William Nixons. William Nixon, his son William, together with George, Ringan and Dandy Nixon, are also recorded there in 1544. Rowie Nixon was in Brighousecleuchheid in 1622, and William Elliot was also a tenant there. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. William Nichol and William Johnstone were at ‘Bridghouse’ in 1694 and Hugh Beattie was tenant in ‘Bridghouscleughhead’. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch the former farmstead was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads; it was there written as ‘Robsland alias Brighouse’. Patrick Oliver died there in 1779 and Robert Oliver was farmer there in 1797. Labourer William Hardie lived there in 1835. The site of the first house is indicated beside the Bridgehouse Burn on an 1816 estate map of Liddesdale and on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map, while the second has been suggested to have been at Cleuch Head, but there is no obvious sign of anything of great antiquity there (it is ‘the Brighous’ in 1516, ‘Brighowes’ and ‘Brigehows’ in 1544, ‘Brighous’ in 1667, ‘Briighouse’ in 1691 and ‘Bridgehouse’ in 1797; ‘Briighouse’ and ‘Briighousecleughhead’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Bridghouse’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Brighoose Plantin (brig-hoos-plawn’-in) n. plantation along the Brighouse Burn in Liddesdale, to the north-west of Dinlabyre.

the Bright Eyed Daughters (thu-bri’-Id-dow’-urz) n. organisation set up in 2008 with the aim of helping to educate the schoolchildren and townspeople of Hawick about the Common Riding. They support the Mosstroopers’ gymkhana, organise an annual dinner, and arranged for upgraded landscaping for the Hornshole Monument in 2014.

Bright Street (bri’-stree’) n. street in the West End, very steep at its upper end. It was built around 1880 and named after reformer John Bright (1811–89): Bright was brought up a Quaker and attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire, where some of Hawick’s Wilson family also were sent at about the same time. The entrance to the Convent (later St. Margaret’s Home) is about half-way up the street.

brigs (brigz) n., pl. Hawick’s first bridge was the ‘Auld Brig’ across the Slitrig, built possibly as early as the 13th century (but more likely around 1500), and demolished in 1851. A document of 1507/8 refers to a tower in Hawick, owned by the Scotts of Whitchesters that was mysteriously described as ‘between the bridges’, suggesting that there was another bridge in the town at that time. A sasine of 1622 refers to ‘the king’s highway which leads between the bridges’. In 1701 there is a record of Burgh debts ‘for repairing of the two bridges’, but what the other bridge was is unknown (although it is possible it is simply the main bridge over the Slitrig Dam at the bottom of the Backdamgate). There were certainly various bridges across the mill lades, these ‘damm brigs’ being mentioned as early as 1704. In the early 18th century there is a record of payment towards construction of a bridge at the ‘Hackman’s Dubb’, the location of which is also unknown. In 1715 it is recorded that a man and horse were hired to carry sand to repair the ‘bridges’ (making it clear that there was more than one). A Session record of 1721 refers to both ‘ye Bridge’ and ‘ye Meekle bridge’, but it is unclear if they refer to 2 separate bridges. The first bridge over the Teviot was built in 1741 at the Sandbed, and rebuilt in 1865. The bridge at Hornshole, the next down the Teviot, was completed in 1774, and the North Brig in 1832. In 1802 the Council decided not to build 2 new bridges across the Slitrig on account of lack of funds. Other nearby road bridges across the Teviot include Martin’s Brig (1826), Brauxholme Brig, the bridge at Broadhaugh, Teindside Brig, the bridge towards Falnash, and the bridge to the Merrylaw road. There is also a suspension footbridge near Brauxholme Castle and other footbridges near Commonside, across both the Teviot and the Allan Water near Newmill, across the Borthwick near Roberton and at the Snoot, and several small ones in the upper Teviot beyond Teviothead. The Waverley Bridge was added near the North Brig in 2000. Footbridges within Hawick include Victoria Brig (1851), the Lawson Brig (1886), Mansfield Brig (1888), Langlands Brig (1894), the Laurie Brig (1924), the
Brig Sike

James Thomson Brig (2005), all across the Teviot, the Slitrig footbridge to the Back Braes path, and later the ‘Joogly Brig’ across the Borthwick. A more practical bridge (than the Auld Brig) across the Slitrig, called the Slitrig Bridge (later renamed Drumlaurig Bridge) was completed in 1777. Tower Mill was built over the Slitrig in 1852, with the adjacent Kirkstile bridge replacing the Auld Brig. The Exchange Buildings were also built over the Slitrig in 1865. Slitrig Crescent Brig was built in 1864 (once the site of a former footbridge called the ‘Wyre Brig’), the bridge to Lynnwood House around 1860, Crawbyres Brig came later and Hummelknowes Brig was built in 1869. The footbridge behind Lyle & Scott’s was built for workers in the West-end in about 1957. Other Slitrig bridges include those at Whitlawhaugh, Colislinn, Wudfit Brig, and at Stobs Castle. There are also many small footbridges across the streams in the vicinity of Hawick, as well as across the mill lades within the town. Local railway bridges were the Slitrig Viaduct (‘Six-Airch Brig’), the Mill Peth Brig, the Loch Park Road Brig, the Bourtree Place Brig and the Station Viaduct, while road bridges across the railway included the Wellogate Brig and the Melgund Brig. In the late 18th century there were only 2 bridges in the entire Parish of Bedrule. Denholm had a chain suspension bridge from 1827, replaced by the Teviot Bridge completed in 1865. Many of these bridges have of course been repaired, extended or replaced entirely.

Brig Sike (brig-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising around Ewe Knowes and running south to become part of Ryedale Burn.

brik (brik) v. to break – ‘hei minds o brikkin the odd wundl’, ‘sticks an stanes’ill brik yer banes, but names’ll never hurt ee’, ‘Let us brik thair ban’s asinder … ’[HSR], ‘Brik thair teeth, O God, in thair mooth … ’[HSR], ‘… o’ her gaun tae the well for witter, yince ower often whereby she may fa’ and brik a leg or airm … ’[JEDM], n. a break, breach – ‘there was a brik in up it the bank, when somebody threw a brik in’, ‘the brik o frost’ is a thaw’ (also spelled ‘brick’).

Brisbane (briz-bin) n. James (1792–1862) from Dumfries, he was a hairdresser in Hawick. In 1810 he enlisted in the 91st Regiment of Foot and served in the Peninsular War and at Waterloo. He served for over 6 years, and was discharged for poor eyesight and being undersized (he stood just 5 feet 1 inch tall). He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a hairdresser on the High Street and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He is recorded at 2 Silver Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861, also being listed as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1811 he married Christian Hislop, just before being deployed in the army, and she lived with her family in Hawick; she died in 1823 at the age of 28. Their children were: William (1811–90), who emigrated to Andes, New York; Margaret (1818–1901); James (b.1820), who studied medicine at Glasgow University; and Robert (1823–97), who emigrated with his brother. In about 1834 he secondly married Mary Elder and their children included: Isabella (1834–52); and James (1835–1901). He is buried at St. Mary’s. Sir Thomas Makdougall (1773–1860) born near Largs, he had a strong connection with the Kelso area, marrying Anna Maria McDougall (or ‘Makdougall’), heiress of Makerstoun, and apending that family name to his own. He was educated in Mathematics and Astronomy at the University of Edinburgh, and joined the army in 1789. He had a distinguished military career, becoming Major-General and was also Governor of New South Wales 1821–25, establishing a constitution for the colony, and building the first astronomical observatory in Australia, at Parramatta. The Brisbane river and the city on its banks were named after him. He returned to Scotland in 1825, taking up the life of a country gentleman. He was President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1832 (succeeding Sir Walter Scott) and collected honorary degrees and other recognition for his scientific work, e.g. the gold medal of the Royal Astronomical Society. He built an astronomical and magnetic observatory at Makerstoun, and was the first President of the Tweedside Physical and Antiquarian Society, which set up a museum in Kelso in 1898. There is a sundial to his memory in the village of Makerstoun.

British Linen Bank see British Linen Co.

British Linen Co. (\textit{ bri’-eesh-li-nin-kô}) \textit{n.} British Linen Company, the former name of the British Linen Bank. It was the first bank to establish a branch in Hawick, in 1783. This was under the management of Bailie Thomas Turnbull at 29 High Street. It later moved to 18 High Street where it remained until the middle of the 19th century, with Gilbert Davidson the agent for a long time. In Wood’s 1824 map the bankers listed are ‘Messrs. Dickson & Davidson’, and it appears to be the main bank in town. A new building was constructed for the bank at 7 High Street (previously the ‘Ruecastle Tenement’) in 1862, designed by David Cousins, the company’s official architect. The building is unusual for its first floor balcony. The bank was founded in Scotland in 1746, was taken over by Barclays in 1919 and acquired by the Bank of Scotland in 1969. The Hawick branch has been a Bank of Scotland since 1971.

the British Lions (\textit{thu-bri’-eesh-II-inz}) \textit{n.} touring rugby team, formed in 1888 (but not named until 1924), and with players selected from among the 4 home nations.

broad (\textit{brôd}) \textit{adj.} strikingly regional – ‘hei speaks broad Hawick’ (cf. the older \textit{braid}).

Broad (\textit{brôd}) \textit{n.} John (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Horselee in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. Michael is listed before him and so surely related. Probably the same John was living at Hoscaretshiel in 1800 and had the following children baptised in Robertson Parish: Mitchel (b.1797); James (b.1800); and John (b.1803). Michael (18th/19th C.) farmer at Horselee in the Slitrig valley, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1778. He was at Outersideshiel when his daughter Christian was baptised.

Broad Law (\textit{brôd-law}) \textit{n.} highest hill in the Borders, reaching 2,756 feet (840 m) at its broad summit east of Tweedsmuir.

Broadlee (\textit{brôd-, brôd-leen}) \textit{n.} farm across the Borthwick from Deanburnhaugh, with nearby earthworks. It was contained in Hawick Parish until the Parish of Robertson was formed in 1689/90. In 1479 the lands were held by Robert Turnbull of Broadlee, and it then extended to a ‘five merk land of old extent’. Either the same or a later Robert Turnbull is recorded there in 1498. This is probably the ‘Braidle’ recorded as part of the property of the Baron in the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home purchased the lands in 1512/3 from Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to lands of Alexander, Lord Home (who was beheaded in 1516), including the lands here, being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to the deceased Gavin Jardine. However, in 1523/4 sasine was given to George Lord Home and in 1551 it was confirmed.
as one of the lands inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as superior, held ‘bleck for a red rose on 24th June’. In 1535 this is probably the ‘Braidlee in the Forest’ where a group of Armstrongs stole sheep from John Hope and John Hall, the King’s shepherds; these same 2 men were recorded being paid for grain in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540. In 1572 and 1594 it was included in the list of lands belonging to the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. It was sold to Martin Elliot of Prickinghaugh and Braidlie in about 1606, the 400 merks being paid to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1607. In 1615 it was listed among the Baron’s lands, and also had the ‘pendicles’ of Philhope and Elirig attached to it; this connection further confuses the Braidlie that was seat of the Elliots in Hermitage (who also once owned Philhope), with this farm on the Borthwick. The mill is also there mentioned in 1615 among the Baron’s properties. In a 1627 valuation is was ‘estimat to 50 lb. in stok, 10 lb. in teynd’. In 1643 the teind was valued (along with Leap Hill, Woll and Castleside) at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. In the mid-17th century it was separately formed out of ‘Wester Braidley’, ‘Mid Braidley’ and ‘Easter Braidley’. There were 14 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650 (with surnames Armstrong, Chisholme, Clerk, Hope, Hutton, Martin, Scott, Shiel, Spence and Wylie), when it was also labelled ‘The thrie braidlies’. In 1650 the reversion with the Elliots was exercised by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry, and it passed out of the hands of the Elliots. However, it was still recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when John Elliot (brother to Elliot of Falnash) paid tax on £216. William Elliot of Philhope paid the land tax on £216 there in 1678. It was part of the estates of Chisholme of Stirches and there were Chisholmes of Broadlee around 1700. The Hearth tax rolls for Hawick Parish record ‘Breadlie not Listed yet paid yr’, but the tenant’s name is not given. Walter Elliot was recorded there in 1726, William Bell in 1727, Andrew Lauder in 1731, John Welch in 1732 and James Scott in 1742. Thomas Stavert was living there in 1753-63, James Brydon in 1765, John Hislop in 1767, Thomas Davidson in 1772, Alexander Baptie in 1782, John Graham in 1785, Andrew Goodfellow and John Graham in 1793 and Thomas Graham in 1794. In the 1788 county valuation (and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued along with Philhope at £216. Thomas Jackson and his family were there in 1841. There is an extensive set of ancient earthworks to the north-east of the farmhouse, roughly oval in shape, about 50 m by 53 m in size, and consisting of an inner and outer bank (it is ‘Bradelee’ in 1479 and was formerly ‘Braidlie’, ‘Braidlea’, ‘Braidlee’, ‘Braidley’, ‘Braid Ley’, ‘Braidleyys’, ‘Braidlie’, ‘Braidlies’, ‘Broad- lies’, ‘Broadly’, etc., and later ‘Broadlea’; it is ‘Braidlies’ on a 1650 parish map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map records ‘W. Braidly’ and ‘P. Braidly’, although this may be an error for ‘E.’; the name may derived from ‘Braidlie’ on the Hermitage Water, through the Elliots of Braidlie, who acquired the nearby Philhope in the mid-16th century).

Broadlee (bröd-lee) n. former farm in Askirk Parish, near Broadlee Hill. It was once part of the Whitslade estate, with Scotts there at early times. It was owned by Cochrane of Ashkirk in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Alexander and John Scott ‘in braidlee’ are recorded in 1493 and in 1494/5, separately John and John son of Alexander Scott; this was probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. George Scott of Blindhaugh assigned the liferent (along with Castleside) to his wife Margaret Turnbull and then to be assigned to his son Walter; it was specifically described as ‘bradle a pendikil of blyndhaucht fra the blyn- dhauch burn vest to the march…eschynesyd with the pertinences’. The superiority was then held by the Bishop of Glasgow, ’Mar. Scott, for Braidlies’ was listed in the 1643 county valuation, with the lands valued at £160. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braidlie’ paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. The men listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls are William Grieve, Andrew Scott and John Scott. John Scott was tenant in 1724. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson and valued at £160; the teinds of the lands (along with Castleside) were £62. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was valued (along with Salenside and Castleside) at £519 (it is ‘bradle’ in 1544, ‘Braidley’ in 1609, ‘Breadlie’ in 1694, ‘Broadlie’ in 1724 and ‘Braidlies’ in 1788; it is marked ‘Braidlie’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Braidly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Bradlee’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Broadlee Burn (bröd-lee-burn) n. small stream that runs roughly north past the farm of Broadlee to join the Muselee Burn.

Broadlee Burnfit (bröd-lee-burn-fi) n. former farmstead near Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. It could have been located where the Broadlee Burn meets the Muselee Burn, between the farms of Broadlee and Muselee. It is also possible that it is the same place as Broadleeshiel. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1771 and John Scott, as well as cooper James Scott, in 1781. Walter Currie and Andrew Geddes were there in 1787 and John Graham in 1793 (it is ‘Broadlie burnfoot’ in 1771 and 1781 and ‘Braidly burnfoot’ and ‘Broadly burnfoot’ in 1878).

Broadlee Dean (broyd-lee-deen) n. name for the wooded area of the Muselee Burn between the farms of Muselee and Broadlee.

Broadlee Hill (broyd-lee-hil) n. hill to the west of Ashkirk, reaching a height of 265 m and containing a hill-fort. The fort lies to the south-west of the summit, and is oval in shape, about 90 m by 60 m in size. The ditch on the north-west side is particularly impressive. There are also some small enclosures at the north-eastern and south-eastern ends. Just south of the farm are the remains of a possible farmstead. On the south-eastern slopes and also to the north-east and east are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Broadlee Loch (broyd-lee-loch) n. small lake in the hills between Deanburnhaugh and Northhouse, above Broadlee farm, and with the Catrail passing nearby. It was drained in the 19th century to provide ‘mari’, and was then known as ‘the Marl Loch’. However, it was later restored to a lake, and used (along with the nearby Philhope Loch) to boost the water level in the Teviot for Hawick’s water-powered mills. Apparently a shepherd was retained to open the sluice gates when required. The old road from the head of the Borthwick to Hawick used to pass near here.

Broadlee Moss (broyd-lee-mos) n. high area between Broadlee Loch and Philhope farm. The hills there reach a height of 297 m.

Broadleeshiel (broyd-lee-sheel) n. former farmstead near the farm of Broadlee in the Borthwick valley. William Laidlaw was there in 1728 and James Glendinning in 1729. Robert Scott was living there in at least 1762–71 (it was ‘Broadlieshiel’ in 1762).

Broadley Bank Park (broyd-lee-bawng-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Broadlie see Braidlie

Broadmeadows (broyd-, brad- me-doz) n. house and estate in the Yarrow valley, between Yarrowford and Newark Castle. It was once owned by the Crown and leased to Raph Ker in the late 15th century. It remained Crown property until at least 1502, with the ‘fermes’ owed by Patrick Murray in 1512. Andrew Ker of Greenhead was occupier in 1541, paying £30 yearly. It was once a seat of the Murrays of Philiphaugh and Falahill, with Patrick Murray having a sasine in 1589 and Sir John Murray in 1620. In 1624 it was granted by Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh to Andrew, son of William Scott in Fauldshope, who became Andrew Scott of Broadmeadows. He sold it to William Scott of Tushielaw in 1648 and in 1676 his son William Scott of Broadmeadows had permission to build a loft in Selkirk Kirk. In 1695 the estate passed to the Balfours through the heiresses Isobel and Jean Scott. In 1678 the lands were valued at about £1600. It passed again through an heiress to the Scotts of Woll, who sold it in 1803 to John Boyd, who built a new mansion house. James Laidlaw was tenant there in the late 18th century and John Nichol was shepherd there. Keith Pringle (4th son of Alexander of Whytbank) enlarged the house in the late 19th century. The remains of an 18th century dovecote are now roofless. The nearby youth hostel there was opened in 1931 as the first S.Y.H.A. hostel (it is ‘Brademedow’ in 1456, ‘Brademedo’ in 1468, ‘Braidmedo’ in 1488, ‘Brademedow’ in 1490, ‘Braidmedou’ in 1502 and ‘Braidmedois’ in 1541; it is curiously marked ‘Fraidmedowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; there is a place of the same name in Berwickshire).

Brocholey (broyk-lee) n. former settlement in Liddesdale, located on the south-western part of the Hermitage valley to the west of Langhoua. The name occurs from the 14th to 16th centuries in several variants and it appears to have been abandoned by the early 17th century. It was valued at 8 shillings in a rental roll c.1376, and also in 1541, when the tenant was Robert Elliot. It is probably the settlement of around 10 buildings whose remains are on the east bank of Thief’s Sike (it is ‘Brocholey’ around 1376, ‘Brokellie’ in 1541 and marked ‘Brocol’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

brocht (brocht) pp., arch. brought – ‘she was brought up in Denum’, ‘See, ha’e! there’s a letter the post laddie brocht . . . ’ [JJ], ‘Aw was born at the ‘Green’ and she was brocht up at the Kirkstyle’ [JEDM], ‘. . . Yet strengthening ties o’ kinship Had brocht me back at last . . . ’ [DH], ‘. . . Has that calm-breathin’ hour in its peacefulness brocht’ [JJ], ‘Hawick Wattie’s brocht another Spring . . . ’ [WP], ‘It brocht to mind anither day hanst syne . . . ’ [DH], ‘It brocht to mind anither day hanst syne . . . ’ [DH].
brock (brok) n. the badger, Meles taxus – ‘The stinkan brockke wi’ his lang lank lyske, Shotte up his gruntle to see’ [JTe].

Brockie (bro-kee) n. David (b.1796/7) son of Thomas and brother of George. In 1825 he joined Thomas on the island of St. Helena, as clerk for the East India Comany’s farms there. When he returned to the Rule valley in 1833 he brought with him a walking stick made from a tree that grew near the former Emperor Napoleon’s bedroom and a wash-stand made from the bedroom door. In 1852 he was a factor at Minto Kames as reported in a court case related to the late David Nisbet. In 1861 he was at Minto Kames, farming 1,000 acres and employing 11 people. His wife was Jessie and their children included: Catherine; and Thomas, who was farmer at Hawthornside.

George (19th C.) son of Thomas. About 1823 he was chosen by the Governor of St. Helena (Gen. Alexander Walker, of Bowland near Galashiels) as superintendent of the East India Company’s farms on the island, not many years after Napoleon’s death. He hired his brother David as his clerk. They converted Longwood, the former Emperor’s house for agricultural use, with cattle in his bedroom and gots in the saloon. They remained until 1833 when the company’s charter expired. On his return he married Catherine, only daughter of Robert Symington, farmer at Edstoun, near Peebles. This was against the wishes of her parents, and was apparently an elopement.

Thomas (18th/19th C.) tenant at Barnhills in the late 1700s, moving to Prieston (in Bowden) in his last years before retirement. He is recorded there in the 1789-97 Horse Tax Rolls for having a saddle horse. He also owned 6 farm horses in 1797. He married Mary Nisbet and they lost a daughter in her youth. Their son George married Catherine Symington, and they also had other sons, including David.

Thomas B. (19th/20th C.) son of David, he was tenant farmer at Hawthornside. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1872 he married Anna Henderson Renwick, daughter of William and Isabella Usher (sister of Thomas from Melrose Parish). They had 2 sons and 4 daughters, most of whom emigrated. He was actively involved with the Hobkirk School Board.

Brockie Law (bro-kee-law) n. hill on the farm of Hyndlee, just to the east of the B6357 and south-east of Hyndlee. It reaches a height of 366 m. A fairy story was once told about this area (the name could relate to the badger).

brod (bröd) n., arch. a board, table, piece of wood, collection plate – ‘Paid to Andrew Turnbull for putting on the letters in the brod in the Quire of Hawick’ [PR], ‘Paid to John Pringle, Wright, for a brod to hands of clock … 0 6 0’ [BR1732], ‘Paid James Wintrop for falding brods in Bailies’ loft, 1 14 0’ [BR1735], ‘Paid Andrew Turnbull, elder, for building in the brod at the steeple head, kce., … 0 2 0’ [BR1755], ‘It’s as fit to be yokit i’ the cart as ever ye was to be inside the brods o’ a poopit’ [HAST1868], ‘Syne, crup thegither, hullerie, Under the shelter-brod, watchin the cauld blashes O wet snaw … ’ [DH], ‘Wi’ halesome fare my brod You’ve set … ’ [WL] (also bred).

Brodie (brö-dee) n. Alexander Bryden (1821/2-67) born in Selkirk, he was son of Walter, publican at the Black Bull in the Sandbed. He was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed at Ladylaw Place. In 1861 he was on Albion Place (probably the north side). His wife carried on the grocer’s shop until 1897. He probably firstly married Margaret Laidlaw, who died around 1845; their children included Walter and George (b.1845). In 1848 in Wilton he secondly married Mary (b.1819), daughter of Andrew Govenlock from Jedburgh. Their children included Elizabeth (b.1850), Helen (b.1853), Catherine (b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Jane (b.1858), Peter (b.1860), Robert (b.1862) and Mary (b.1864).

Andrew (1856-1928) son of Alexander and Mary Govenlock, he was a knitwear manufacturer in Hawick. His company was known as A. Brodie & Co., with its ‘Kumfy’ brand, which was taken over by Innes, Hennder-son in the 1920s. He married Barbara (1853-1928) daughter of farmer James Cairns. They had a son Alexander (b.1881).

Rev. B. principal teacher of the Wilton Lodge Academy 1892-98, and the West End Academy before that, running the schools along with his wife.

James (b.1781/2) from Westruther, he was farmer at Deanfoot in Minto Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1851 he was farming 225 acres and employing 10 labourers. His children included James (b.1807), Mary (b.1809), Giles (b.1809), Stuart (b.1820) and Agnes (b.1823).

James A. (19th/20th C.) foreman printer with the Hawick News, he was well known as a promoter of the Temperance movement and the Friendly Societies in the town. He acted as Session Clerk for St. George’s Kirk 1924–35 as well as helping run the Sunday School there.

Michael (19th C.) local architect who designed the Buccleuch Hotel in 1882 and the the Brodies

(frontage of the main Hawick Co-op Store in 1885. He practised in at least the 1860s to 80s. He also designed the Old Parish Church Halls about 1883, as well as the South U.P. Church in Langholm. He was still alive in 1901. Peter (b.1811/12) born in Selkirkshire, he was a mason in the Dean. He was living at 13 Burn Row in 1841 and 1851, which was just called Wilton Dean in 1861. His wife was Annie and their children included Janet, Helen, Agnes, Jean, Margaret, Walter, Elizabeth, Annie, Betsy and William. Robert (19th C.) from Nottylees, near Kelso. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule, taking over from Mr. Haliburton in 1827 (shortly after William Pringle) and remaining until about 1846. He did not carry on the limeworks started by Mr. Pringle. Walter (1786–1849) born at Sunderland near Selkirk, son of Peter and Mary Murray. He was inkeeper at the Black Bull on the Sandbed. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Helen and children Jane, Alexander (inkeeper in Innerleithen) and Helen. He married Helen Brydon (1787–1873). Their son Alexander (b.c.1821) became a grocer in Wilton. Their daughter Margaret (d.1842) appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson) with cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. The family are buried in Wellogate Cemetery. William (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Upper Keith in East Lothian. In 1793 he purchased Gatehousecote and Over Bonchester from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. He combined them into a farm he called Chesterhill, although the purchase was never completed (either because he could not come up with all the money or because of haggling over the sale), and he eventually had to give up his Rulewater ambitions. Nevertheless he is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as owner of 9 horses. He is probably the William of Gatehousecote recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He had a son, John.

the Brodies (thu-brō-deez) n. name recorded for a group who burnt Hawick in 1565, stated in a letter from the Earl of Bedford to Sir W. Cecil. It is uncertain who they were (there are no obviously relevant local occurrences of the name ‘Brodie’ in those times). The most likely is that what was meant was ‘the Braidsleys’, i.e. the followers of Elliot of Braidslie, who was feuding with the Scotts of Branxholme around then. This raid may have been what led to the ambush of the Scotts at Ewes Doors.

the Bromyleaks (thu-brō-mee-leeks) n. former name for an area between the main B6399 and Hermitage Castle.

the Bronze Age (thu-bronz-āj) n. period between the Stone and Iron Ages, characterised by the use of bronze tools and weapons, lasting in Britain from around 2300 B.C.E. until about 750 B.C.E. There is plenty of evidence of occupation in this period in the Tweed and Teviot valleys and their tributaries, including cairns, stone circles, burial cists, standing stones, axe heads, bronze pins and ornaments, pottery and beads. 3 bronze shields found near Yetholm were one of the most impressive Borders discoveries, and a mirror was found near there in 2004. The Hawick Museum has a flanged axe from the Middle Bronze Age, as well as other artefacts from a similar period. There are 9 Bronze Age burial cairns situated around Smasha and Whitfield Hills, a few miles west of Hawick, each being about 30 feet in diameter and only 2 or 3 feet high.

broo (broo) n., arch. brow – ‘... And mither’s got nae broos to kiss, For nane o’ them were greetin’ On Young Year’s Day’ [TCh] ‘The croon o’ contentment is light on her broo’ [WAP], ‘His lang drawn face an’ furrowed broo Support his waefu’ manner ... ’ [WP] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

broo (broo) n., poet. soup, broth – ‘I’d plunge the boiling liquid through, Wi’ haly mettle; Till little should be left but broo, In a’ the kettle’ [JR].

the broo (thu-broo) n. the dole, unemployment benefit, or the office where people sign on for the dole.

broo-band (broo-bawnd) n., arch. a brow-band – ‘It was interesting to see the more elderly of the women ... in many cases wearing the ‘broo-band’ ... ’[V&M].

brook (brook) v., arch. to possess, have the use of – ‘... and considering what large room and share they brook and possess of ye said kirk, they earnestly desired that the school might be built in anie other convenient place’ [PR1714].

Brooklands (brook-lindz) n. one of the newer houses on Sunnyhill Road.

Brooklands (brook-lindz) n. house on the corner of West Stewart Place, facing Wilton Hill. It was for some time an Abbeyfield Home for the elderly.

the Broom (thu-broom) n. farm on the Teviot near Ancrum. It was purchased in the 1790s by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters and William Brown was tenant there in 1797 – ‘... And that day he’d been a’ the way doon at the Broom’ [UB].

Broombauks (broom-bawks) n. former farmstead to the west of Hass, near the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes. The stream there is Broombaus Burn. There are signs of stock enclosures, rig lines and an ancient farmstead there.

Broom Cavers (broom-kā-vurz) n. former farm near Caverton in Eckford Parish. It is unconnected with Cavers Parish, even although there were Douglasses there in the 17th century.

Broomhaa (broom-haw) n. Broomhall, former farmstead just north of Greensidehall, identified with the more modern Broomiebraes and Broomieknowe. Archibald Turnbull was there in 1759 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomhill (broom-hil) n. farmstead to the south-west of the modern Flex and directly south of the old Flex house. There is now no sign of the former farmhouse, although its location is still easily seen on maps. Walter Martin was tenant there in 1797 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Broomhills (broom-hilz) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, just east of Chester’s. Rev. William Bennet owned the lands in 1643, valued at £800. There were 2 hearths recorded there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas Mein farmed there around the 1860s (also called ‘Broomhill’, it is written ‘broomhils’ in 1694; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomholm (broon-mum) n. farm about 2 miles south of Langholm, which was held by the Maxwells and farmed by the Armstong’s in the 16th century. John Byres and Mrs. V. Patterson were there in 1821. There is a nearby Roman fort, covering about 4 1/4 acres and occupied roughly from the years 85–100 (it is ‘Brunholm’ in 1585 and ‘Bromholm’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

Broomiebrae (broo-mee-brae) n. former farmstead near Greensidehall, once part of the estates of the Scotts of Whitehaugh. The farmers there in 1792 were Robert Scoon, Andrew and James Waugh, James Black and Robert Renwick. Robert Scoon was there in 1812. It was later the name of a villa-style residence reached off Stirches Road (also called ‘the Broomiebraes’; probably the same as ‘Broomhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Broomiebraes Spring (broom-mee-braiz-spring) n. former water supply in Wilton, near Broomiebrae, but its precise location uncertain – ‘O, few folk mind now o’ the Broomiebrae Well, O, few folk mind now o’ the Broomiebrae Well; Yet in my young days mony a story we’d tell As we a’ sat around the Broomiebrae Well’[JCG].

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. lands owned by the Scots of Buccleuch from the 16th century, possibly the same as the farm of this name between Langholm and Canonbie. It is recorded as ‘Brwneknow’ in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574.

Broomieknowe (broo-mee-now) n. house off Greensidehall Road, just west of the former U.P. Manse. It was for a while the residence of Provost Mitchell, then purchased by Sir Thomas Henderson and rented for the use of the minister of St. George’s before being gifted to the church as its new Manse in 1925. This is also the name of a house in Denholm, once a blacksmith’s.

Broomielaw (broo-mee-law) n. ?? – ‘Westward Ho! We’re bound for Canada Where the mighty mountains rise; Ships await us at the Broomielaw To take us to our prize’[JEDM].

Broomlands (broon-lindz) n. house on the left off Stirches Road, shortly after Raeson Park. It was built for manufacturer Francis E. Wilson in about 1880 and is now divided into flats.

Broomlands (broon-lindz) n. former place name, recorded in the 1760s along with Clarilaw, in a dispute over teinds between William Scott of Burnhead and Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. Probably the same Broomlands was given in a charter, along with Pinnacle, from Robert Scott of HowPasley to Hector Turnbull in 1550.

Broomscleuch (broomz-klooch) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 as ‘Brumesclewis’ along with ‘Brounishall’ (probably Broon’s Hill), ‘Roberthill’ and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs.

Broomshaugh (broomz-hawf) n. former name for part of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1815 they are described as ‘the twenty shilling land of Salenside called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh’.

Broomy Hill (broo-mee-hil) n. another name for Broomhill??.

broon (broom) adj. brown – ‘...hei was aye broon as a berry’ [IWL], ‘The black and the broon Ran nearest the toon’[JP], ‘And in amang the buds o a broon hazel tre, It’s up there gat a wee bird, and sang a sang to me’[TDa], ‘Here’s to our married lads and here’s to our horses! Here’s to the black yins, the broon, and the grey!’[JEDM], ‘A hankie at his chowks, and a thick broon chowe ... ’[DH], ‘Doon comes Robin wi’ his auld broon fiddle, Turns he a lightsome air ... ’ [WL], ‘Attired in a cloak o’ a licht reddish-broon ... ’[DJ] (also spelled ‘broun’).

Broon (broom) n. (Brown) Adam (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Other men named include Scotts and Turnbulls. He may be related to John, who is also listed there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction between John Johnstone of Hermiston and Patrick Johnstone. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Renwick and their children included: Robert (b.1644); Isobell (b.1647); Isobell (again, b.1649); and Adam (b.1652). If he was father of weaver Adam, then he was probably also a weaver. He probably witnessed a baptism for weaver Robert Bennet in 1656. He was probably the Adam who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for John Oliver in 1680. He was probably the ‘Adam broun head-hous elder’ who witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Tinlin in 1705. Adam (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He may be the ‘Adam Brown, younger, weiver, called of Headhous’ who was sentenced to the stocks in 1683; this was for insulting the Bailies in court after breaking out of prison and running ‘up and down the town … more like ane mad and distracted man than a reasonable person, who had solemnly made and given his burgess oath’. In the baptismal record of 1706 he is ‘called headhouse’ and in 1709 he is ‘distinctioinis causa called headhouse younger weaver in Hawick’. Either he or his father witnessed a baptism for merchant William Black in 1708. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver William Turnbull in 1724. He married Bessie Murray and their children included: Nicholas (a daughter, b.1700); Benjamin (b.1702); and Agnes (b.1703). In 1706 he appears to have secondly married Janet Buchan, who was also from Hawick, and had further children including: Blench (b.1706); Adam (b.1707); and James (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were merchants Walter Elliot and Robert Brown (probably a close relative), in 1702 were carrier Andrew Clerk and weaver William Brown (probably also related), in 1706 were Bailie Robert Brown and flesher Robert Renwick and in 1709 were wig-maker Richard Miles and weaver James Scott. Other children may have included: an unnamed daughter (b.1690); Bessie (b.1697); and John (b.1711). He could be the Adam, son of Adam and Malie Renwick, born in Hawick in 1652. Adam ‘Heidhoose’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is surely related to the earlier Adam ‘called of Headhous’ (but cannot have been the son born in 1707). He is recorded as ‘Young Headhouse’ in 1719 when he married Isobell, daughter of Francis Paterson in Flex Their children included Bessie (b.1720) and Adam (b.1722). The witnesses in 1720 were smith William Young and ‘fowler’ Archibald Little. Adam ‘Yedie’ (c.1790–1853) born in Hawick, son of Tom and Beatrix (or ‘Beattie’) Kyle. His father was a Burgess, and was said to disapprove of his interest in drawing, so that he would hide away by the Teviot at the Sandbed, drawing on slates, and painting using crushed up stones. He apprenticed as a shoemaker, but was more interested in painting and fishing. He never received any instruction in art, but was completely self-taught. He gave up shoe-making, after encouragement by the assistant minister, Charles Thomson. He was said to have a great ability to tell funny stories, but detested getting up early in the morning, and a tale is recounted of how he scared his father one early morning by setting up a sheep’s head with a theatrical costume. In another story, an example of his aversion to whisky as a young man, he was asked to return to Town from the Loanhead, to procure a bottle of whisky for his friends on a hot day, but instead came back with a load of treacle toffee, which they proceeded to put down his shirt in revenge. He painted several portraits of local worthies in the early 1800s; the ‘Brown Gallery’ in the Museum is composed of portraits of Wullie Gotterson, Robbie Davidson, Wull Slush, Wull the Cutler (twice), Robert Rutherford, and an unnamed girl. There are also paintings (somewhere) of Wullie Bulloch, Nannie Cumming and John Brown. Although relatively crude, these are amongst the earliest likenesses of inhabitants of Hawick. There are also miniatures of Mr. & Mrs. Turnbull of Allars, Isabell and Margaret Elliot of the Cross Wynd, and Miss Grieve of Howden, Selkirk. Additionally he painted ‘Leistering on the Teviot’ and ‘Scene in the house of James Ruickbie the poet’, which are also in the Museum (while ‘At Hornshole’ and ‘Scene in the Sandgate of Newcastle’ are additionally referred to as being donated to the Museum in 1863, but their present whereabouts are unknown). At the age of 30 he became paralysed in his right side, and retaught himself to use his left hand. He subsequently left Hawick, living in Alnwick for a while, where he married Eleanor Longstaff and had a second family. He later moved to Newcastle to become a portrait painter; he is described as a portrait painter from Scotland living in All Saints, Newcastle according to the 1841 census. However, he also seems to be referred to as ‘Ralph’ in the 1851 census, suggesting he may have changed his name (or used that as his artist’s name, or else it was simply a mistake). He married Agnes Scott in Hawick, and she was born in Ashkirk Parish around 1782. Their children included: Thomas (b.c.1810), who married Jane Guthrie and was a shoemaker; William (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Ferguson and was also a shoemaker; and James S. (b.c.1822). Their children William and Beatrice died as infants in 1815 and 1816. His wife Agnes appears to be living alone in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and although she was listed as a widow, it may be that they divorced (and he abandoned his young family). In Alnwick in 1832 he married Eleanor, daughter of William Longstaff and Eleanor Forster; his 2nd wife died in about 1843. They had 4 children together (2 before they were married): Adam; Charles; James; and Agnes (b.1837). Little is known about his later life, although W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) says that he remained cheerful through ill-health and poor circumstances, and that the phrase ‘as lightsome as Yedie Broon’ became popular in Hawick. He died in Newcastle in the 1853 cholera outbreak and was buried in a mass grave in St. Anne’s Churchyard there. Alexander (18th C.) employed as manufacturer in Hawick, relating to the spinning school and early industry supported by Douglas, Elliott, Chisholme and other local gentry. He was overseer for the company from about 1739, but was forced to resign in 1742 due to concern over performance of his duties. Alexander (18th C.) Session Clerk of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1751. Alexander (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Esq. Orchard’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. His portrait, by William Irving of Longtown, was exhibited in Carlisle in 1824. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Browns. Alexander Laing ‘Sandy’ (b.1851) manufacturer of Galashiels who was brother of Andrew Haddon’s mother. He was born in Selkirk, son of William and Marjory Donaldson Laing. He was Liberal M.P. for the Border Burghs 1886-92. He beat G.O. Trevelyan in the 1886 election with the narrow margin of 30 votes, the election being fought largely on the Home Rule Bill, with Trevelyan then a Unionist and Brown a Liberal. He was defeated by Thomas Shaw in 1892. He married Esther Brown, daughter of the minister of Crossmichael, Kirkcudbrightshire. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Gledstains. Andrew (1672/3-1750) resident of Castleton Parish. He and his wife Betsie Turnbull are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Whitlaw in 1740. He married Agnes Scott and their children son Andrew (b.1740) was baptised in Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who married Agnes Scott in Minto Parish in 1733. Other children who may have been his, with the mother’s name not given, are: Bessie (b.1734), baptised in Hobkirk; William (b.1737) in Hobkirk; Isabel (b.1738) in Jedburgh; Marion (b.1739) in Cavers; Helen (b.1744) in Crailling; Christian (b.1745) in Minto; George (b.1747) in Jedburgh; Adam (b.1748) in Minto; and Andrew (b.1750) in Jedburgh. The witnesses in 1740 were shoemaker William Wright and Robert Scott, servant to Rev. William Somerville. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wilson and their son John was baptised in 1785. Andrew (18th/19th C.) from Harbottle, in 1791 he married Margaret Dryden from Cavers. Andrew (18th/19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, in 1798 he married Margaret Scott in Hawick. Andrew (d.1799) mason in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of John Leitch and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1799. In the record of his death he is ‘mason son in law to John Leitch’. Archibald (b.c.1810) from Ancrum, he was farmer at Craggs in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer on 70 acres, employing 1 labourer. He was still recorded there in 1868. Carl (19th/10th C.) writer of the poem ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is probably the same as ‘Karl’. Charles (18th C.) described in 1733 as ‘late servant to Cavers’. In 1733 in Cavers Parish he married Ann Lamb and his daughter Ann was baptised. Charles (b.c.1800) foreman at Nixon’s Mill. He was living by the factory in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Thomas and Charles. Clement (19th C.) born at Bankhousestone in Midlothian. He was a boarder at Yarrow School, along with his brother Tom. He was from the Tower Inn in Hawick, and so presumably son of innkeeper Billy. He became long guard on the mail coach from Edinburgh to Langholm and was later an innkeeper in Langholm. In 1851 he was keeper of the Crown Inn in Langholm. His wife Agnes was from Wilton Parish. David ‘Gallopin Davie’ (1800-69) eldest son of Peter of Rawflatt and Margaret Elliot. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1823 and farmed at Hundalee. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. About 1846 he moved to Wales to work as an estate agent and died there. He married Miss Bedford from Ireland, then later Margaret Shortreedee, and also married a third time. David ‘Dave’ first Cornet from Stirches, being selected in 1979. He worked with Lyle & Scotts, then helped train racehorses with Alistair Whillans, before becoming a builder’s labourer in Edinburgh. He married his Lass, Margaret McLeod. George (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hallrule, mentioned in the 1562 Feu-Rule Baronial land dispute. He is probably an ancestor of the later Browns at Hallrule. George (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. George (17th/18th C.) resident in Harden. He married Helen Douglas in Roberton in 1712 and their children included Elspeth (b.1713). George (18th C.) contracted by Sir Gilbert Elliott (on behalf of local gentlemen interested in manufacturing in the Hawick district) in 1736 to use some looms for manufacturing coarse, tarred wool. He appears to have been replaced by Alexander Brown by 1739. George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1776 and 1780. His children included Betty (b.1772), George (b.1774), Christian (b.1776), Christian (again, b.1778) and an unnamed child (b.1780). George (18th/19th C.) son of William, landlord of the Tower Hotel. He was Cornet in 1811. George (19th C.) apparently a native of Jedburgh who became Cornet in 1854. He took over the grocery business at 9 High Street from Robert Thomson, and was thereafter referred to as ‘Cornet Broon’. George (1815–86) son of James and Lizzie Hope, he was born at the Carterhaugh Toll Bar. At age 15 he ran away to Canada, returning 11 years later with a French-Canadian wife (Margaret Egan, 1825–1901) and starting a long series of jobs. He first became toll-keeper of the Tweed Toll (between Gala and Selkirk), moving to Whillian Toll (between Gala and Stow) after a year, then to Belses, Deanbrae, Hawick Wester Toll, Deanbrae and Wester Toll again. While the railway was being built he drove a cart to Whitrope for James Turnbull (grocer) and later for John Young (baker). After that he ran a green-grocer’s shop at 43 High Street, where he also kept cows. He later moved to the Crown Close, where he still kept cows, and sold fresh herring in season. His children were Mary Ann (who died young), James (controller of Greenock Post Office), John (who became an engineer), George (a wool-sorter of Slitrig Bank) and Mary (who married William Davidson, Provost of Haddington). Hector (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed in the same place. Hector (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and may be related to the man of the same name in Minto Parish. Isobella (b.1811/2) originally from Selkirk, she is listed as grocer in Denholm from 1837 until at least the 1860s. She probably lived on Sunnyside, and was living alone in 1851. James (15th/16th C.) appointed as attorney to Sir William Douglas to represent him at the giving of sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1511/2. His name is recorded as ‘Jacobo Browne’ and the ceremony took place at the Mote. He is probably the same ‘Jacobo’ who was witness to the baronial sasine for Hawick in 1514. James (16th C.) mentioned in one of Hawick’s first existing sasine of 1558. It is stated there that he owned the lands to the north of those being transferred, suggesting perhaps around the modern Buccleuch Street. He may have been related to Thomas, who held lands according to the 1537 Charter. James (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire. His lands in Hawick were valued at £6. He may have been related to Robert, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at ‘mylnholme’ in Castlelaw Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1694 he witnessed a baptism for James Inglis. He married Isobel Brown and their son John was baptised in 1694. Perhaps the same John also married Margaret Stavert and had further children Sarah (b.1696) and Thomas (b.1706). The witnesses in 1694 were John (probably a relative) and Patrick ‘Dunce’. James (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1703 he was fined for being found drunk in the house (i.e. pub) of Robert Brown after 10 o’clock. He is probably the James who married Margaret Bridges in 1703. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1705, with witnesses mason John Napier and weaver Adam Jardine. James (18th C.) recorded as meal-maker in Fanns (in Ashkirk Parish) in 1747 when he had a bond with the officials in Selkirk. There were discharges in 1742, 1749 and 1757, then another bond in 1757, with the discharge in 1760. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1761 he married Janet Fletcher, who was from Wilton Parish. Their children included: William (b.1762); Andrew (b.1766); William (again, b.1768); James (b.1769); Walter (b.1772); and Betty (b.1776). The last 4 children were baptised in Yetholm. The witnesses in 1766 were baker John Kedie and shoemaker John Oliver. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Thomson in 1785 and their children included: Robert (b.1788); Margaret (b.1785); Agnes (b.1790); and Andrew (b.1793). The witnesses in 1793 were ‘Special Congregation’. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd who married Lizzie Hope (from Cavers) and became proprietor of the East End Toll Bar in Hawick. They later moved to the Selkirk Toll Bar. Their son was George, toll-keeper and shop-keeper of Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the ‘Woollen S.W.J.’ listed at around 60 High Street on the 1841 census, with wife Margaret and children Margaret, Agnes, Mary, George, James, William and Robert. James ‘Jamie Cant’ (1846/7–91) poor, struggling individual, who was a familiar sight on the streets in the late 19th century. He was a simpleton who rarely worked, and was a pal of ‘Hawick Wattie’. He stayed in various lodging-houses, spending most of his life in Hawick, where he died in the Poorhouse. He was photographed with a sandwich-board by J.Y. Hunter in about 1890, advertising the photographer’s own business – ‘See their eyes are sairy swollen And they’ve lost baith hair and skin, They’re Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in’ [WE]. James B. (1832–1904) known by the pen-name ‘J.B. Selkirk’, he was a poet and essayist from Selkirk. He was also an artist and lover of music, and had an interest in ecclesiastical matters. He wrote ‘The Last Epistle to Tammas’ (better known as ‘A Border Burn’), and many other poems with a Border flavour. His books included ‘Yarrow and Other Poems’ (1869), ‘Poems’ (1896), ‘Bible Truths and Shakespearean Parallels’ and ‘Ethics and Æsthetics of Modern Poetry’. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally in Hawick held at Loch Park. He is buried in Selkirk Auld Parish Kirkyard. ‘J.B. Selkirk, 1832–1904: centenary reflections’ was compiled by Wilma Derry and edited by Avril Jack in 2005. Janet (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s. 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (19th C.) recorded in about 1874, along with Mrs. Rodgie, as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. This may have been around Buccleuch Street. It is unclear how she was related to other Browns, or if she was connected to Rev. Rodgie. Jean (17th C.) resident at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. She was probably widow of a former tenant farmer there. Jean (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Jean (18th C.) chambermaid at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. John (15th C.) Canon of Glasgow, he was appointed to Lilliesleaf Kirk in 1480, succeeding Robert Turnbull. He is said to have entered ‘the great gate with the key of the same, and touching the baptismal font, the chalice, the book, and the other ornaments, according to use and wont’. He probably still held the benefice in 1489 when there was a dispute about teinds with Walter Ker of Cessford and James Riddell of that Ilk. It is possible he was the same John who was nominated as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1479, but not confirmed. John (15th C.) witness to a document of 1484/5 giving lands in Mangerton to Walter Scott of Branxholme and also witness to a document relating to Whitcheste rs. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Broune’ who was among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for the capture of John Douglas of Balvery. He may be related to Adam who was also listed there. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. John (17th C.) recorded as Procurator Fiscal of Hawick in the 1660s. He could be the John who married Janet Johnston and had children William (b.1648) and Marion (b.1652) baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1652 were James (probably related) and Andrew Rutherford. John (17th C.) resident of the Hassendean area that was still part of Roberton Parish in the 1680s. There he witnessed baptisms for William Turnbull in 1683 and for George Knox in 1684. John (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms for John Taylor in 1690, for John Renwick in 1691 and for James (probably a relative) in 1694. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1740 for flax-dresser William and wright (at Branxholme Park) James Riddell and another in 1745 for miller James Scott. He may also be the John who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for Hugh Anthony (whose mother was Margaret Brown). He married Margaret Graham and their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1742. The witnesses were dyker William Elliot and ‘junior w…’ William Turnbull. John (18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book of 1767 when he was paid ‘for going post to Edinburgh with a letter’.

It is unclear what his occupation was, but presumably it included travelling. John (18th/19th C.) carrier of Denholm, listed along with Alex Hogg, in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. They went from Denholm to Edinburgh every Monday fortnight. John (b.c.1790) carter on the Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen, and their children included Beattie, Ann, Helen, Thomas, Janet, Mary and Agnes. He could be the same man as the Denholm carrier. John (c.1782–c.1840) Hawick man who became a well-known beggar. It was said that he started begging from an early age and by the mid-1820s was the only professional beggar in Hawick. He supposedly enlisted in the army and deserted many times, after spending the cash inducements; although he usually got away, he was also flogged several times after being caught. He spoke a combination of Yorkshire and Scottish dialects, and spent time in towns on both sides of the Border. He also had a dog called ‘Hawick’. He was sometimes a seller of ‘spunks’, and pretended to be many things during his life in order to extort money. He faked being deaf and often had his jaw tied up with an annel and wore an old hat and handkerchief on his head. There is a story (recounted by W.N. Kennedy) of how, after a long absence, he reappeared in Hawick about 1820, disguised as a preacher, but was soon recognised by the residents. He was said to have been a stout, large boned man in his prime. In 1816 his mother Christian Scott died in Hawick, with her being recorded as ‘mother to John Brown the Deserter’. He may be the John born to John Brown and Christian Scott in Ashkirk in 1770. A painting of him by Adam Brown is in the Museum. He may be the ‘Packman’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (18th/19th C.) publican in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (1806/7–40) father of William of Alloa. He married Janet Sprot, who died in 1849, aged 47. They also had a daughter, Janet, who died in 1848, aged 19. He is buried in St. Mary’s kirk-yard along with his wife and daughter. He may be the ‘Packman’ whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1840. John (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Elizabeth Ekron in 1835. John (b.1832) from Haddington, where he was helped in his education by Dr. John Cook, minister there. He was assistant teacher at Haddington for a while and then attended the Normal School, being admitted to Educational Institute of Scotland in 1847. In 1854 he was appointed as schoolmaster in Newcastleton, and a few years later a new, larger school was built. He also served as Librarian, Registrar, Collector of Rates, Inspector of Poor and Heritors’ and Session Clerk for Castleton Parish. He was also Superintendent of the Parish Church Sunday School from 1855 until 1903. He retired in 1900, after 51 years as a teacher and 46 in Castleton Parish; there was a celebratory dinner for him in Newcastleton. In 1903 he retired from his additional posts as Inspector, Clerk and Collector; the first entry in the death Register after he retired was his own. His wife was Jane Amos, and their children included Anna Jane and Janet Young. John Brotchie (19th C.) from Edinburgh, he moved to Hawick to be a tailor. He was given the nickname ‘Topper Broon’ on account of the top-hats he would wear. In 1886 he married Elizabeth Gracie. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1887), who married a Swinton; Elizabeth Alice (b.1888); Isabella (b.1890), who died young; John (b.1893), who was injured during WW1; Ada (b.1897); Freddy (1903–92); and Isa (1905–88), who married Robert Spowart. John (19th/20th C.) son of George and Mary Egan. He was an apprentice with John Melrose & Sons, and became second engineer on the Cunard ship ‘Umbria’. In Liverpool he was nicknamed ‘Little Brown’, to distinguish him from another John Brown of Hawick. John (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who worked in Liverpool and was known as ‘Big Brown’ to distinguish him from the other Hawick John. He was also sometimes nicknamed ‘Caliper’ on account of his bandy-legs. John ‘Foosty Broon’ or ‘Jocky Foost’ (20th C.) shopkeeper of a general store at the foot of Wellington Street in the mid-20th century. The shop was well known for stocking everything, including very old sweets, etc. The shop window also contained hand-written epithets, such as ‘the end of the world is at hand’. In later life he suffered from mental illness, being often seen on the streets talking to inanimate objects. Karl (19th/20th C.) pseudonym of Charles Stewart. Keith wrote the article ‘Double modals in Hawick Scots’ in ‘Dialects of English’ (1991) edited by P. Trudgill & J.K. Chambers. Lowenger (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His forename is unusual. In 1796 he was described as ‘Drainer in Ormiston’. His children included John (b.1796) and Helen (b.1798). Lyle (d.1598) servant of Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood. He was killed during attacks on the Turnbull Clan, brought about through quarrels with Lady Margaret, herself a descendant of the Turnbull Clan. She was born at Eskdalemuir. She was a daughter of James, who farmed at Craik and Garwad, she was born at Eskdalemuir. She was a resident of about 17 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and 1851. She was widow of Rev. Dr. William, and had a farm of 18 acres, a railway line and a railway station. In 1851 she was at Newton in Wilton Parish, with 30 cows, 60 sheep and 5 horses stolen from it, according to the trial of 1606. His name is recorded as ‘Lyell Broun’. Margaret nee Moffat (1762/3–1855) daughter of James, who farmed at Craik and Garwad, she was born at Eskdalemuir. She was a resident of about 17 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and 1851. She was widow of Rev. Dr. William, and must have come to Hawick after his death in 1838. She is listed as ‘Ind.’ and ‘Annuitant’, and in and about Arnot (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to the 1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Ricardi Broun’, valued at 12 shillings. Richard (16th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale, according to the 1376 rental roll. The list includes ‘Locus Ricardi Broun’, valued at 12 shillings. Richard (14th C.) recorded in Headshaw in 1580 when he and John Thomson acted as cautioners for Walter Scott of Headshaw to make payment to Thomas Ker of Kippielaw. Probably the same Richard was recorded as occupier of a husbandland in Ashkirk in 1580/1, when Walter Scott in Ashkirk held, and offered to Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1581 he was ‘in Askirk’ when he ‘licensed his heirs and assignees’ to build on his tenement in Selkirk. Also in 1581 he was recorded as former occupier (along with George Easton) of Salenside Croft and ‘Skakriggis’, lands that were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. Richard (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Rowlespittell’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule) in 1610 when he received part of the... lands of Barnhills and ‘in Reullspittell’ in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. He failed to appear in Edinburgh to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel by the Privy Council. Richard (d.1930) from Broxburn, he came to Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) as precentor in 1892, serving in that capacity until he retired in 1920. His daughter Susan (later Mrs. Whitelaw) later filled the position of church organist. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpalsley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569 when listed among those for whom Sir Walter acted as cautioner in Hawick, before the Warden. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others had to make public repentance for playing at ‘nineholes’ (i.e. nine men’s morris) on Sunday. Perhaps the same Robert married Helen Thomson and had children baptised in Ashkirk, including Bessie (b.1647), James (b.1652) and Isobel (b.1657). The witnesses in 1652 were John ‘Fraiter’ and James Kedie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £4. He may have been related to James, who was also a landowner in Hawick at the same time. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) Junior Bailie in 1706 who carried the Flag back through the town at the Common Riding, after the Senior Bailie, Robert Hardie, had carried it out. This is because the Cornet-elect refused to carry it, perhaps from its dish-evelled state. Also in 1706 he was Magistrate when ex-Bailie John Binnie was fined for his behaviour. His name was also spelled ‘Browne’. In 1707 he and the other Bailie, Robert Ruecastle, were fined by the Council for assaulting others during the Common Riding. Such censure by the Council of their own Magistrates is surely unprecedented, and although the incident is not described in detail, it presumably had something to do with the disturbances at the Common Riding the year before. In 1710 he was given custody of the Charter Chest, which contained the new Flag. He was an ex-Bailie on the Council when the bond was granted (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the merchant on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for weaver Adam (perhaps a relative) in 1700 and another baptism in 1702. He may be the merchant who is recorded in 1703 when weaver John Brown was fined for being drunk in his house after 10 o’clock; he presumably kept a public house. He witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Tinlin in 1704, when he was described as a merchant (and not Bailie, suggesting he had not yet served as Magistrate). He witnessed further baptisms in 1706 for weaver Adam Brown ‘Headhouse’ (who may have been related), in 1711 for cooper Alexander Weens and in 1712 for smith Thomas Oliver. Robert (d.bef. 1799) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1772. He married Agnes Scott in Hawick in 1755, and the family were members of the Associate Kirk in Midlem (with several baptisms later written into the Hawick Parish records). Their children were: unnamed (b.1756); Walter (b.1758); Margaret (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1766); Robert (b.1768); and Nelly (b.1772). The early baptisms were performed by Rev. Arnot, the 1756 and 1758 ones performed at Midlem, the 1760 one at Whitehaugh, and the 1762, 1766 and 1768 ones in Hawick. The 1766 one was performed in Hawick by Rev. Morrison of Norham and the 1768 one by Rev. Young. The 1772 baptism was recorded in Wilton Parish and performed by Rev. John Young of the Green Kirk. His wife Agnes Scott died in 1799, by which time he was already deceased. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Todrig in 1787 and 1789 and Hoscote in 1792. He married Magdalene (or ‘Mady’) Inglis and their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Adam (b.1787); Hannah (b.1789); William (b.1790), spirit-dealer in Deanburnhaugh; and David (b.1792). He is probably the Robert who was at Middlestead in Selkirk Parish when his daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton in 1781. He is probably the 80-year old Robert living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Robert (b.1804/5) from Langholm, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 his widow was living at Harden. He married Mary Lockie and their children included:
Elizabeth (b.c.1834); Janet (b.1836); Henrietta (b.1838); William (b.c.1840); Robert (b.1842);
Margaret (b.c.1844); James (b.1846); George (b.1849); Mary (b.1852); and Jane (b.1855). His first few children were baptised in Ettrick Parish.
Robert (b.1824/5) from Cavers Parish, he was a grocer and tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He was on the south side of Main Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and they had children Jessie, Robert and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Muiselee in the 1860s. He could be the Robert (d.1901) commemororated at Borthwick Waas. Robert Laidlaw
'Magenta Robbie' or 'Magenta Robert' (d.1906) native of Hawick, who worked as a stockingmaker, but spent his last 25 years as a peddler, selling odds and ends from his 'tin carpet bag'. One story tells of his nickname coming from the colour he decorated his stockingmaker's lamp during the 1863 royal wedding celebrations, but a perhaps more likely alternative is that it derives from his mother's referring to him as 'Ma gentle Robbie'.
He had a woebegotten expression and an aversion to soap and water, and was known as a harmless, simple-minded soul. There are several amusing stories told about him, e.g. that when he had a child born, and his friend first asked if it was a boy, and when that guess was wrong, said that it must be a gir1 then, Robbie said 'Here, wha has tel't ye?' He is said to have written on the census that 'widower, as his wife was living in America' and on another occasion written his age as '50 and 8', the number thus being recorded as '508'. Appearing in his night-clothes at the entrance to his close and was told by a passing policeman that he decorated his stockingmaker's lamp during the night, and desiring him to cum out for his hanging'. It is not known which Walter Scott argument was. He could be the Thomas married to Helen Deans (whose daughter Margaret was born in 1648) or the Thomas married to Helen Swan (whose daughter Helen was born in 1652).
Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a court case of 1673. William Scott was accused of striking his brother Robert Scott, apparently because he (Thomas) had called William a 'yal-langer', 'the provocation being 'given' be Robert Dickson, shoemaker, and the said Thomas Broun being contumacious'. Thomas (17th C.) serv-itor to John Wilkie in Hassendean. In 1684 he was named as a fugitive for being a Covenanter.
Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Presumably the Thomas listed as owner of a hearth at Craigend (in the same Parish) was a different man; the will of Thomas 'in Minto Craigend' is recorded in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) blacksmith at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. In 1493 he was described being 'in Minto' when, along with George Davidson in Raperlaw, he had remission for stealing livestock, as well as for associating with the for-er Duke of Albany and for stealing sheep along with James Elliot before his earlier remission; his surety was Walter Scott of Whitchester. Possibly the same 'Thomas Brun' was on the 'retour of inquest' for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather's lands of Tillilee and Caudleleuch in 1497/8.
He may be the Thomas in Cavers who, along with Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead, was surety for George Turnbull in Weens in 1502. Thomas (16th C.) owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1541 among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Thomas (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioneer for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probabrably related to Hob, who was also listed. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1650 when Walter Scott was fined for striking 'his dure, in the night, and desiring him to cum out for his hanging'. It is not known which Walter Scott this might have been, and what the nature of the argument was. He could be the Thomas married
to Helen Deans (whose daughter Margaret was born in 1648) or the Thomas married to Helen Swan (whose daughter Helen was born in 1652).

the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in 1686. Thomas (17th/18th C.) miller at Ashkirk Mill, recorded there in 1698. He married Isobel Hislop and their children included: William (b.1691); Isobel (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); John (b.1703); and Thomas (b.1705). Thomas (17th/18th C.) tenant in Synton. He married Isobel Brown and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Jean (b.1701); and John (b.1703). Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included Isabel (b.1779), Mary (b.1781) and Margaret (b.1788). The witnesses in 1788 were weaver John Elder, senior, and John Elder, junior. In 1794 his mother ‘Old Mrs. Brown’ died. Thomas ‘Tom’ (d.1823) shoemaker, probably on the High Street. He was appointed as a Burgess of Hawick in 1782. In 1784 he witnessed a baptism for fellow shoemaker James Cheap. He may be the Thomas who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for gardener James Kyle (perhaps his brother-in-law). He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owning a work horse. He married Beatrix Kyle in 1773 and their children included: William (b.1774); James (b.1775); John (b.1777); Janet (b.1780); Helen (b.1782), who could be the bookbinder living on the Howegate in 1841; Agnes (1785–87); Margaret (b.1787); Adam (b.c.1790), who was a shoemaker and portrait painter; and Walter (b.1793). The witnesses in 1793 were gardeners James Kyle and John Hardie. The death of a grandchild of his is recorded in 1805. Thomas (1794/5–1870) flesher on the Cross Wynd. He is listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the Cross Wynd with his wife Agnes (or Nancy) and children Beatrix, Thomas and William. In 1851 and 1861 he was a butcher at 10 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Laidlaw and their children included: Beatrix Kyle (b.1831); Thomas (b.1834); Margaret (1837–40); and William Laidlaw (b.1840). His wedding celebrations took place in the Fleece Inn, and it is said that (along with his best man) he broke with protocol in inviting the minister’s wife to join them for dancing in the ballroom. Based on the naming of his children, it seems likely he was a late child of shoemaker Thomas and Beatrix Kyle (and therefore that he was a brother of the painter Yedie). Thomas (b.1810/1) boot and shoemaker in Hawick, son of the painter Yedie, with his mother being Agnes Scott. He may be the Thomas who was listed (along with Archibald, presumably a close relative) in Pigots 1837 directory. He married Jane Guthrie in 1835. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street, living with his wife Jane and daughter Margaret. In 1851 they were listed at 3 High Street (although this may be a different numbering scheme). By 1861 he was listed as a shoe salesman (and widower) at 76 High Street. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) resident of the Howegate, remembered in a poem by Thomas Chapman – ‘The winds round the mountains of Teviotdale sigh, And down in the woodlands the cushions complain, And warm tears are streamin’ frae mony an eye, For Tammas o’ Howgate that’s now frae us gane’[TCh]. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1813/4) born in Stow, he was farmer at Ruletownhead. He was a keen horseman, huntsman and shooter. Once, returning from Hawick in a hurry, he went over the parapet at Hallrule Brig, and although unhurt, his friend John Usher marked the letters ‘T.B.’ into the stone to mark the event. He is recorded as Judge at the Common-Riding Races in 1861. In the 1861 census he was farmer of 430 acres, employing 9 people. He was recorded at Ruletownhead in a directory of 1868. Never a successful farmer, he spent his last years selling farm merchandise. He married Ellen Kerr and their children included Thomas, Mary J.P., Robert Kerr and William. Thomas (d.1890) teacher in Ancrum and then in Hawick. He worked at the Science and Technology School, being assistant to Mr. Pitcairn in the teaching of senior classes. He was replaced by Mr. A.S. Williams in the 1880s. He also wrote some poetry, as well as a biography of Leyden. He published ‘St. Mary’s Loch, A Poem’ and ‘The Battle of Ancrum Moor’ in Hawick in 1889. He could be the Thomas whom John Guthrie painted a portrait. He died at Bonjedward. Thomas (b.c.1823–1911) born in Hawick, son of Charles and Margaret Ferguson. He moved to Dumfries with his father and brother to help set up a hosiery firm and became a foreman carder. In 1857 he married Jane Emma Burns, who was a daughter of Robert, eldest son of the poet Robert Burns. In about 1870 he moved with his family to Canada, where his elder daughter Isaballa Ferguson became ill and died. He worked at McCrae’s Woollen Mill in Guelph. Several years later (before 1880) they returned to Scotland and in 1903 moved into Burns old house in Dumfries, acting as caretaker for the museum there (with Andrew Carnegie supplying them with £60 per year). His surviving daughter, Jean Armour Burns (1864–1937), was said to bear a strong resemblance to her famous ancestor, and was the last legitimate descendant of the Brod. Walter (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to George, who was also listed there. Walter (d.1930) from Lilliesleaf, he was ordained as 1st minister of Galashiels South U.P. Church in 1877. The new church there was opened in 1880. He turned down the chance to move to Glasgow and then Edinburgh, but in 1886 he went to the new congregation at Braid, Edinburgh. He retired in 1919 and there was a celebration of his jubilee in 1929. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Bennet and their children included: Bessie (b.1640); William (b.1643); and Margaret (b.1649). He may be the William who in 1654 witnessed a baptism for William Hall. William (d.c.1683) tenant in Barnhills. His will is recorded in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1683. William (d.c.1684) tenant in Minto Mill, whose testament is recorded in 1684. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot and their son James was born in 1687. Andrew was a witness and hence presumably related. They also had an unnamed child born in 1689. He was listed as a weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the William who, along with Adam, witnessed a baptism for John Oliver in 1680. He was a witness in 1702 to a baptism for weaver Adam (who was surely related). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He could be the William in Menslaws whose wife was Margaret ‘Rough-heath’, her will being recorded in 1687; her surname may be a variant of Routledge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. In 1694, along with James Pringle, he witnessed a baptism for William Tait. He is probably the William who married Janet Somerville and had children Thomas (b.1688) and William (b.1691). His wife’s name appears as ‘Elizabeth’ in 1688, with witnesses possibly Andrew ... and James ... William (17th C.) resident at Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records William (17th/18th C.) probable resident of Hawick (the entry is hard to read). He is recorded in the Wilton Session records for 1706 as ‘Post’ when he was paid for the purchase and carriage of a session book. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Highchesters in 1731 when his son James was baptised. He could be the William who married Margaret Scott in Roberton in 1730. William (18th C.) resident at Scawmill in 1733 and ‘under Miller’ in Hawick in 1741. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1733); John (b.1735); Sarah (b.1741); William (b.1743). The witnesses in 1733 were James Scott and John Dryden and in 1741 were writer Thomas Watson and merchant Charles Tudhope. William (18th C.) flax-dresser in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Riddell in Wilton in 1736. Their children included: Margaret (b.1738); and William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were shoemaker John (probably a relative) and wright James Riddell (perhaps related to his wife). William (18th C.) Town Piper in Hawick. He was recorded as piper in 1745 and also 1756–57. However, it may be that he overlapped with Walter Ballantyne, and that the pair shared responsibilities for piping, drumming and other duties of the Burgh Officers. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism, along with Walter Ballantyne, for Thomas Ballantyne in 1763. He married Mary Allan and they had daughters Jean (b.1743) and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker John Scott and carrier John Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1774 he married Jane Hardie and their children included: Christian (b.1775); and William (b.1777). William (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was in possession of the lands of Kameside Park. William (18th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1781 and 1792. His brother Peter died in 1809. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Allie and their son Henry was baptised in Hawick in 1801. The witnesses were baker John Wilson and printer Robert Armstrong. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. His son Robert died in 1798. William (18th/19th C.) heckler in Hawick. He married Isobel Beattie in 1775 and her death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. Their children included Helen (b.1780). William (d.bef. 1809) heckler in Hawick. He married Helen White in Hawick Parish in 1785 and she died in 1809. He may have been witness for a baptism for Robert Renwick in 1781. William (18th/19th C.) shoemaker of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Rev. William (d.1836) minister of Bedrule, from Greenlees. He was usher at an academy in France and another near London, became teacher at George Watson’s Hospital in Edinburgh and was licensed to preach in 1782. He then became tutor for the family of Sir John Stewart of Allanbank. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in 1787 and became minister there.
the following year. He remained Bedrule’s Minister until his death, serving for 48 years. He wrote a lengthy and detailed description of the Parish for Old Statistical Account. In it he gives lengthy footnotes in which (among other things) he berates local landowners from being absent from the church where they hold land, and as a result neglecting their responsibilities to support the fabric of the church, the school and the poor. He paid the Horse Tax at Bedrule Manse in the period 1789–97. Archibald Craig was appointed as his assistant and successor in 1832. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He paid the land tax at Lanton Moor in 1813. In 1813 (at Kirkton Manse) he married Janet, eldest daughter of Archibald Henderson of Mackside, and she died in 1839. Their children were: Janet (b.1814); Alison Cockburn (b.1816); Robert Rutherford (b.1818); and Archibald Henderson (b.1820). He is described as having great literary talents. He was also apparently an obstinate man who became involved in many lawsuits. He published ‘The Pronouncing Testament’ (1796), as well as a description of the Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account.

William ‘Billy’ (d.1839) landlord of the Tower Inn in the first half of the 19th century. He was recorded there in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was known as somewhat of an irascible character. He is said to have owned the first ‘gig’ (i.e. two wheeled carriage) in Hawick. He was also one of the founding members of the Wisp Club. His children must have included Clement and Tom, who boarded at the school in Yarrow, and George, who was Cornet in 1811. His son William junior died in 1817. He is probably also the ‘Mr Wilson Tower Inn’ whose illegitimate child with Isabel Miller died in 1810. He is probably the ‘Mr Brown, Tower Inn, Hawick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is buried in St. Mary’s churchyard, and there is a portrait of him in the Museum (by an unknown artist). There seems to be some uncertainty about whether he died in 1839 or 1842. He is probably the ‘W Brown, Hawick’ whose portrait was painted by William Irving. His wife is recorded dying in 1821; she is said to have taken the young Tom Jenkins under her wing, when his sponsor James Swanson died. Rev. Dr. William (1764–1835) son of Peeblesshire stonemason William, whose 2nd wife was an aunt of Thomas Carlyle. He was licensed to preach by Stirling Presbytery in 1791, he became minister of Eskdalemuir in 1792. He received a doctorate from Aberdeen in 1816. In 1797 he married Margaret, daughter of James, farmer at Craik and Garwald; after his death she lived in Hawick, and died in 1855. Their children were: James (1798–1820), Lieutenant in the 10th Native Infantry in Madras; Robert (b.1803); Margaret (b.1804); John (1805–23), who died while a student at Edinburgh University; Janet (b.1808); and Alison (b.1811). His publications include ‘Antiquities of the Jews’ (2 volumes, 1820), and accounts of the Parish of Eskdalemuir for the statistical accounts. He left a manuscript register of events in his parish, covering the years 1793–1809. This includes much of interest to the folklorist, including an account of the appearance of the mysterious creature Gilpin Horner at Towdshawhill (not the one near Hawick), which inspired Sir Walter Scott, and a description of the ‘Gonial Blast’. William (b.1790) born in Roberton Parish, son of Robert and Madgalene Inglis, he lived at Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded there as an innkeeper and spirit dealer and in 1851 as a meal dealer. He married Barbara Neil and their children included: Isobel (b.1815); Madgalene (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); Alexander (b.1822); Margaret (b.1824); Adam (b.1825); Mary (b.1830); and Barbara (b.1833). William ‘Will’ (18th/19th C.) butler at Wolfelee House. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He was ordained as one of the first two elders there in 1850. He is probably the William, formerly in the service of Elliot of Wolfelee, who died at Causewayfoot, Wolfelee in 1861, ‘at and advanced age’.

William (b.1807/8) from England, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘GROCER (MASTER)’ at 4 Mid Row. He married Elizabeth Best, widow of James Taylor. William Wells (c.1814–84) fugitive slave from Kentucky who became a leading speaker for the abolition of slavery, as well as a writer, being usually credited with writing the first novel by an African American. As part of his European tour he visited Hawick in 1850, collecting many anti-slavery signatures, as described briefly in his 1855 book ‘Sketches of Places and People Abroad’. William (b.1820/1) son of Yedie and Agnes Scott. He worked as a shoemaker, which had been his father’s initial trade. In 1861 he was listed as a ‘Boot Closer’ living at 52 Loan with his family, as well as his brother James. He married Isabella Ferguson and their children included Christina and Agnes. William, J.P. (1837–1908), Hawick native, son of John and Janet Sprot. He was a draper’s apprentice with Richard Rutherford, but moved to Alloa in 1856. There he became a draper, then in 1877 switched to being an auctioneer and valuator. He was an active member of Alloa Parish Church and a staunch Conservative in politics. He was also a regular contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s and a frequent donor of artefacts to the Museum. He lived at Salisbury House, Forth Street in Alloa, where he died. He bequeathed money (£1,500) to his native town, which was used to build the Brown Fountain, near to where he was born. He also left money to support the Common Riding, Cottage Hospital and St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1899 he erected a gravestone for his father, mother and sister in St. Mary’s kirkyard. Rev. William (1865–1940) son of builder Andrew, he was born in Montrose. He attended St. Andrews University 1883–90, was licensed by Brechin Presbytery and was ordained as minister of St. John’s Kirk in Hawick in 1894. Hoewver, he was but transferred to Campsie in 1902 and then went to Dunbar in 1918 (formerly spelled ‘Browne’, ‘Broun’ and ‘Broune’).

Broondeanlaws (broon-deen-lawz) n. hill in Jedburgh Parish, reaching a height of 1358 ft (the origin is probably Old English ‘bruna dun’, meaning ‘the brown hill’; it is first recorded as ‘Broundoun’ in 1451).

the Broon Fountain (thu-broon-fown-in) n. the Brown Fountain, in the middle of Drumlanrig Square, part of an ornamental garden on the site of the Auld Mid Raw. Money for the fountain was bequeathed by William Brown, who had moved to Alloa (and hence the stonework incorporates the arms of both Hawick and Alloa). The design was by J.P. Alison, and consists of an ornamental fountain incorporating a clock. It was built in 1910–12 by John Marshall & Sons, with the granite carving by Mackay & Morren from Aberdeen. Iron ornamentation on top of the corner columns has since been removed. It is a grade B listed building.

the Broon Gallery (thu-broon-gaw-ru-ree) n. name sometimes used (coined perhaps by W.N. Kennedy) for the Museum’s collection of paintings of local personalities painted by Adam Brown. The paintings include those of John Brown, Wullie Bulloch, Nannie Cumming, Wull the Cutler, Robbie Davidson, Wullie Gotterson and Wull Slush. They were presented to the Archaeological Society by various people in 1863. Other paintings include a scence at Hornshole, another in the house of James Ruickbie, a portrait of a girl, a scene of ‘eistering’ in the Teviot and a view of the Sandgate of Newcastle.

Broonlie (broon-lee) n. (Brownlie) Rev. Charles (b.1865–1904) born in Glasgow, son of engineer John and Agnes Dyer. He was educated at Glasgow University and licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1893. He was ordained at Laurieston Chapel, Falkirk in 1896 and became minister of St. Margaret’s in Hawick in 1898. He married Mary Jackson (who died in 1904) Rev. Robert (c.1589–1645) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1610, he was presented to Kirkton in 1619 and became minister there in 1620. However, the settlement appears not to have gone smoothly, since Walter McGill (minister of Cavers) was inhibited ‘to mak any molestation or hindrance in the premises directlie or indirectlie’. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1638. Also in 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’, probably in Hawick. He was murdered by members of Montrose’s army a day or two after the Battle of Philiphaugh, ‘being living at home in his awin hous in a most sober manner’.

He married Margaret Lumsden, and she and his fatherless children petitioned Parliament several times for support in the following years. One of his daughters married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts.

Broonlie the Muirs (thu-broon-mawn-o-thu-newrz) n., arch. fantastical creature that inhabits the moors, said to be malicious and clad in brown – ‘Brown dwarf, that o’er the muirland strays, They name to Keeldar tell! – The Brown Man of the Muirs, who stays Beneath the heather-bell’ [JL].

Broomoobrook (broom-moor) n. Brownmoor, farm in southern Selkirkshire, situated between Hartwoodburn and Middleston, on the road off west of the A7 towards Ettrick just before Selkirk. The high ground to the south, between here and Headshaw Loch is known as Brown Moor Heights, and reaches 308 m. This could be the ‘Brown Moor’ whose church dues (presumably from the owner at that time) are recorded in Hawick Parish in 1762.

Broonrig (broon-rig) n. Brownrig, former house in Liddesdale, on the east bank of the Hermitage Water, just south of Shaws (marked as ‘Broungrigg’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

brook sauce (broom-saws) n. a sauce popular in fish and chip shops in Scotland, something like a mixture of ‘H.P.’ sauce and vinegar.

Broon’s Hill (broonz-hil) n. Brown’s Hill, hill in the upper Slitrig valley, on the east of the B6399 between Shankend and Langburnshiels, with Brown’s Sike to the north. On the north side of the hill is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary marker connecting Brown’s Sike to Black Cleuch. This is probably the ‘Bronishall’ listed among lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1607.

Broon Sike (broon-sik) n. former name for a stream and lands in Hob Kirk Parish, lying somewhere between Birkhall and Hallrule. It is mentioned in the Baronial dispute of 1562 as ‘Broun-sike’. It is possible that this refers to ‘Brown’s Sike’ in the upper Slitrig valley, just over the hill from other places mentioned in that document.

Broonsteed (broon-steed) n. Brownstead, former house in Liddesdale, just to the north of Park. In 1541 it was valued at 14 shillings and tenanted by Robert Elliot (it is ‘Broneiston’ in 1541 and marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Brounstead’).

Brophy-Parkin (bro-fee-par-kin) n. Caroline, M.B.E., Captain in the local Salvation Army. In 2020 she received an M.B.E. for the services to the community in Hawick during the Covid-19 response.

brosce (broz) n., arch. porridge-like dish of oatmeal or peasmeal mixed with boiling water, milk or fat – ‘Let’s gie the Bridgroom a sheep’s head But gie the bride brose and butter’ [ES], ‘Ye sorr- mou’d fo’k pang’d fu’ o’ prose, As e’er a webster was o’ brose’ [JR], ‘But stuff my wame wi’ guid kail brose, To fleg the caul’’ [JR], ‘. . . it was reckoned lucky . . . to give her a breakfast of brose in the morning . . . ’ [EM1820], ‘I liked to see the big man twirl the poke, And stap it fu’ o’ sugar and brose meal’ [WL], sometimes treated as plural – ‘A’vewr fe wbrose!’ [JAHM] (from French via Mediaeval English).

brosy (brö-zee) adj., arch. porridge-fed, stout, fat and limp, puffy – ‘Imagin iz: A reed, lowpin, broazy face leike a bermy bannih . . . ’ [ECS] (also written ‘broazy’ and variants).

brothc (brotch) n., arch. a spindle, a slender person, especially in nicknames – ‘But Kate, the brothc, she was a thin ane, Sat still an’ heard person, especially in nicknames { ‘But Kate, the brothc, she was a thin ane, Sat still an’ heard person, especially in nicknames} [JoHo], ‘Hang ye,’ cried Tibbie the brothc to a company of women who seemed marshalled under her generalship’ [RM].

brother-german (bru-thur-jer-min) n. a full brother, sharing both the same mother and father (common in legal documents from the 17th century and earlier).

brotten (bro-in) pp. brought – ‘it was brotten ower fri Amairica’.

brouch (browch) n., arch. a ring around the Moon (also bruch).

brought (browcht) pp., arch. brought – ‘. . . and because nane claimit the said meir, the said Adam Gowanlock brought the said meir to the mercat-crose of Hawick . . . ’ [BR1641], ‘. . . for thaye ar confunnel and an’ brought untill shame that soocht my skailth’ [HSR], ‘Hie broucht thame owt o’ mirkniss an’ the skaddaw o’ deeth . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . A gowden hairst to my humble sawin’, Broucht hame in eternite’ [WL] (also spelled ‘browcht’; cf. brocht, along with browt and brung).

brough (browch) n., arch. a burgh – ‘. . . within ye said toune and brough of Hawicke . . . ’ [BR] (cf. brugh).

Brougham (brum) n. Lord Henry Peter (1778-1868) born in Edinburgh, he helped found the Edinburgh Review, then moved to London where he entered Parliament, becoming a Liberal leader. He fought against the slave trade, and for religious equality, as well as introducing educational and legal reforms, particularly as Lord Chancellor (1830-34). Specifically, he was the champion of the Reform Bill, which vastly increased the number of people eligible to vote. He visited Hawick in 1834, being made an Honorary Burgess, and later Brougham Place was named after him.

Brougham Place (bro-, brow-chum-plis) n. street running uphill at the north end of the High Street, with buildings constructed around 1837, and named after Lord Brougham. Earlier it was known as the Minister’s Entry and sometimes Milligan’s Path, but more popularly in recent times as the Cafe Brae. The row of houses was built entirely on the south side, with Trinity Church and the former St. Mary’s Infant School on the north side. The Drums and Fifes march here on the Thursday night, near the position of the former Easter Toll, and stop for the traditionally refreshment of rum and milk. The bridge over the railway at the top of the street gives access to ‘the Terraces’, but was closed to traffic in 2013 (note the local pronunciation differs from Lord Brougham’s).

browst (browst) n., arch. a brewing of malt liquor, tea, etc. – ‘Ee canna be boss efter sic a browst’ [GW], ‘...An’ let every sinner suffer By drinking the browst that they brew’ [FL], the brewing of a storm – ‘For a’ had borne a fear-some browst O’ raging wind and weather’ [HSR], a hotch-potch, the consequences of one’s actions.
browt (browt) v. brought – ‘hei browt up his whole denner’, ‘whae browt her onyway?’, ‘Thae browt ‘im a mount for heiz got the smittal Juist half the size o’ a donkey at Spittal’ [MB], ‘...his fither dei’d young and James and his brothers were browt up be their struggling mother’ [HIS], (cf. the older brocht and broucht and the occasional brung).

Brox (broks) n. farm to the north of Newcastle-terton, just after Sandholm, on the right between the main road and the old railway. In 1699 Jean Henderson was a resident there, who was rebuked for ‘Sabbath profanation’. Weaver James Brydon lived there around 1840. Labourer John Grieve and family lived there in 1841. The Liddesdale Stone (an early Christian gravestone) was found there in 1933. Just to the north-west are the foundations of a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Brocks’ in 1699 and ‘Brocks’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Bruce (broos) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendeanbank, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 12 horses. He married Janet McLean and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Byrness in 1813. Rev. George (d.1795) from Rothiemay, Banffshire, he became schoolmaster of Forglen and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1734, becoming minister to the congregation in Newcastle that same year. In 1742 he was suggested as minister at St. James’s Island, South Carolina, but declined. In 1744 he was presented by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto as assistant and successor to John Ritchie at Minto, and he was ordained as minister early in 1745. He paid the window tax at ‘the manse’ in 1766 (although there was some opposition, largely because of the weakness of his voice), where he remained until his death. He married Elizabeth Hall (who died in 1770) and their children were George, Sarah, Gilbert and Thomas. He wrote ‘Personal Religion, a Necessary Qualification in a Minister of the Gospel’ (1943), as well as an account of Dunbar Parish.

He gave £50 for the poor of the Parish in 1751, and a further sum of £100 for the schoolmaster in 1795. James (d.1447) son of Robert, a landowner from Clackmannanshire, he was Rector of Kilmany and Archdeacon of Dunkeld. He became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1441 and then was translated as Bishop of Glasgow (and hence Hawick’s bishop) in 1447. However, he must have held the office for only a few months before he died, his successor being William Turnbull. He is buried in Dunfermline. James Semple (1870/1–1950) born in Bhangalpore, India, he was educated in London and worked for the Chartered Bank of India, Australasia and China, working abroad and eventually becoming the London manager. He bought the Chisholme estate in 1927 and retired there 3 years later. He served as President of the West Teviotdale Agricultural Society, and the Hawick branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. He was also responsible for handing over the land at the Snoot to the Youth Hostel Association. James, M.B.E. (1908–92) born in Hawick, son of a railway signalman. He was educated at Hawick High School, was an apprentice gardener at Alnwick Castle, and then went to Howick Hall, Northumberland. He became an expert horticulturalist, whose fame spread. During WWII he gave advice on food production at military camps and elsewhere. He became President of the Royal Caledonian Horticultural Society, and was awarded the M.B.E. He later became Head of the College of Agriculture teaching section, based in Edinburgh and later Penicuik. He and his wife Amy retired to Craster in Northumberland. He had a reputation as a great teacher and speaker at W.R.I. meetings. He also presented the BBC radio series ‘The Scottish Garden’, chaired ‘Gardener’s Forum’, and contributed to other programmes. John ‘Nixon’s John’ (19th C.) resident of Hawick, perhaps who worked for Nixon’s mill. His mother is recorded dying in 1840. He is probably the same as the John living on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, with his wife Agnes and son William. Peter (19th C.) shepherd at Swinnie for about 30 years. He married Mary Whillans. His children included: Thomas, who emigrated to near Canterbury, New Zealand and called his house ‘Inch-bonny’; Joan, who married William Haig and died in Galashiels; Robert, who farmed at Dodderlee; Helen, who was housekeeper for Daniel Mather at Hallrule and married David Scott, mason and parish registrar; Peter, who was ploughman at the Bruce

Hallrule and then joint tenant at West Fodderlee with his brother Robert; and Mary, who married James Sinton. Robert see Robert, King of Scotland. Sir Robert (d.1332) illegitimate son of King Robert I, ‘the Bruce’. In 1322 he was given the Lordship of Liddesdale (following the fall of William de Souils) and probably held it until his death. He died at the Battle of Dupplin Moor. Robert (b.1843) son of Peter, he was born at Winnie. At age 3 he was rescued from a well by his sister. He started working on the farm of Mr. Davidson at age 9. He worked as shepherd at other farms in the area, then in Northumberland and on the Cheviot. He became a tenant farmer in 1880 and went into business with John Wight of Jedburgh in 1883. He added several other sheep farms, including West Fodderlee in 1887, Dodburn in 1889 and Priesthaugh in 1901. In 1891 he married Joan, daughter of Robert Wood, and had 3 sons and 2 daughters. His wife was recorded as owner of West Fodderlee in the Land Tax Rolls of around the end of the 19th century. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who served for 8 years as a regular soldier during the Boer War. During his WWI service he kept a diary (against regulations), providing a valuable first-hand account of conditions at Flanders and elsewhere. He returned to Hawick as a postman. Wallace (1844–1914) U.S. Consul in Leith, he was also known as a poet. He was a guest at the Common Riding of 1889. He was the poet at the unveiling of the Burns statue in Central Park, New York. William (b.c.1800) carrier on the Kirkstyle in 1841 (formerly ‘Brois’ and variants).

the Bruce see Robert

Bruce Court (brous-kor’) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1971 and named after King Robert the Bruce.

bruch see brugh

bruch (bruch) n., arch. a halo round the Sun or Moon – ‘...hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin’ [ECS], ‘A bruch roond the muin’s a sein o bruckl weather’ [ECS] (also brough).

Brugh (brouf, bruch, brouch) n. another name for Burgh Hill and surrounding area near Dodburn. The lands here were formerly a seat of a branch of the Elliots, who were once very well represented in and around Hawick. It was probably a 2-storey bastle house of the 16th century; the ruins of which were used to built dykes in the 1760s when the farm was joined with Priesthaugh; in 1809 Robert Scott of Skelfhill remembered it as ‘a muckle ha’ house’. It was said to have been on the south shoulder of Burgh Hill (as confirmed in the survey map of 1718), although there is nothing now to suggest that a house was located there. The land was leased by Scott of Brantholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500 for 19 years, along with other lands, except for the ‘chaplainry of St. Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ (possibly the old chaple at Northhouse). The King’s shepherd there, George Henderson was recorded being paid in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540. ‘Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch’ paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey in 1557; it was worth £4 at that time. It is recorded as tenant by Robert Scott of Alanehaugh in 1560 and was owned by Gavin Elliot in 1595. In 1597 it was described as part of Ringwoodfield. It became part of the Buccleuch estates in 1632 and was described as part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield in 1634, 1653, 1660 and 1661 and still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1663 and 1693. James Glendinning was tenant there in 1684 when he was declared brui (bri, bru) n., arch. broth, soup (this is pronounced with a long draw-out sound at the end).
bruik (brid) n., v., arch. brood.
bruikit (бри, брю-kee’) adj., pp., arch. variegated, mottled – A bruiket sheep [GW].
bruiky (бри, брю-kee’) adj., arch. grimy, dirty.
bruise (brooz, bruз) n., arch. a once traditional horse- or foot-race at a country wedding, with the bride’s handkerchief as prize. It often took place between the church or bride’s house and the groom’s house (perhaps related to briz).
bruissit (brу-sul’) pp., arch. sweated from exertion – ‘...As he bruissit and whewed the bullet-shells, and bang’t the drum away’ [DH].
bruisy (brooz-ce) adj., arch. overfleeced with brose, having a fat and flaccid face.
bruit (bri’) n. brute, animal of various sorts – ‘can ee no git that bruit o yours ti shut up?’; ‘Yow take mine an’ aw will gle the stubborn brit a skelp ...’ [MB], also used as a mild oath – ‘...the King hes brung me into his chamber’ [H_SR], ‘...let thame be turnet bak an’ brung til confusion that devaise my skaith’ [H_SR].
bruize (brуз) v., arch. to scorch, burn – ‘...whan the bruizin, frizzlin heat turns flush things tewd an rizzert’ [ECS].
Brumingam Jack (bru-ning-gum-jawk) n. nickname for a tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century, said to be ‘the most notorious of the fraternity’. He would go around cleaning clocks for people, sometimes taking it apart and not proceeding until a bottle was produced. He would also help with agricultural jobs and he was a great story-teller. One popular story was of how he was asleep in a cemetery and scared off some body-snatchers, who left behind their horse and cart, which he was then able to sell.
Brumrig (brum-rig) n. Thomas (16th C.) listed as a cook in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when he was owed for his fee. It is unclear whether or not be was local. His surname may be a variant of Brownrig.
brumstane (brum-stan) n., arch. brimstone – ‘...wi a guff a wat strae and neeps and a glisk o brumstane ...’ [DH] (cf. brunstane).
Brunemore (broon-mor) n. recorded as ‘super Dod’, i.e. on the Dod Burn, when it was used as part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood in the 1160s. The precise location, or identification with any other place is unknown. However, a connection with the lands of Brugh seems not unreasonable (the origin could be the personal name ‘Brun’ or ‘brown’, plus ‘moor’).
brung (brung) pp. brought – ‘did ‘ei bring eet? aye, ‘ei brung eet’, ‘...the King hes brung me into his chamber’ [H_SR], ‘...let thame be turnet bak an’ brung til confusion that devaise my skaith’ [H_SR].

Brunt Burn (brun'-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Ralton Burn in Liddesdale. It rises near North Birnys Fell and flows roughly south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Bruntfield (brun'-field) n. William (d.bef. 1693) surgeon in Hawick. His widow Elizabeth Burn is listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. She is recorded as ‘widow of Wm. Burnfield, chirurgeon’. William (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for James ‘Badie’ in 1701, another for merchant Walter Weens in 1704 and one more for glover James Scott in 1705. He married Jean Hart in Hawick in 1711. Their children included: Elspeth (b.1712); John (b.1714); Andrew (b.1716); William (b.1718); an unnamed child (b.1719); and Elizabeth (b.1721) (also written ‘Brunfield’).

Brunton (brun'-in) n. Mr. ?? Hawick man who became Mayor of Beaconsfield, South Africa. He returned to Hawick for the 1891 Common Riding. Rev. David (19th/20th C.) minister at Roberton Free Kirk (‘the Snoot Kirk’) 1912–25. He was known as a preacher of the old Calendar’ in Hogg’s `Winter Evening Tales’. He worked on stocking frames.

Brydon (bri-din) n. Adam (d.c.1687) tenant in Dodburn. His will is recorded in 1687. Adam ‘Aedie o Aberlosk’ (1766–1841) son of William, tenant farmer at Aberlosk in Eskdalemuir. He made significant improvements to the farm and later became joint tenant of Locherben farm (in Closeburn Parish) with James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He is described in ‘The Shepherd’s Calendar’ in Hogg’s ‘Winter Evening Tales’. He had a reputation as a hard drinker. He is also infamous for writing to King George IV to complain that he had walked 30 miles to pay his taxes, but had been unable to get the official to take the money, and hence he was enclosing the sum of £27; he requested that the receipt be sent care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick, suggesting some location connection, and he ended with ‘P.S. This way of taxing farmers will never do’. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1799. Their children were William, Janet, Adam, Elizabeth, Margaret, David, James and Robert.
wife was Janet or Jessie and their children included Margaret, Euphemia, Jessie, Mary and James. His children were also born in Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf parishes. Agnes (18th C.) lady’s maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Alan Gilbert (1961–) born in Hawick, he has worked in the textile industry, and written several technical articles and a book on card clothing. He trained at the Scottish College of Textiles and was later visiting professor at Leeds University. Known locally as a musician and singer, he wrote the words and music for the popular song ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ in 2005, and has written many others, including ‘Old Jock’, ‘A Man O’ Mony Pairts’, ‘Return From Hornsbole’ and ‘One Call of a King’. He published a novel ‘The Keeper of Teviotdale’ in 2006, and co-wrote ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Ian Landles. He was a member of the band ‘Scocha’ for several years, writing many songs, and playing a wide variety of instruments on their recordings. He also co-wrote the musical play ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ with Ian Landles in 2007. Alexander (1775/6–1856) weaver in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was living on South Hermitage Street and receiving parish relief. He married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1866, aged 82. Their children included: Mary (1810/1–61); Margaret (1818/9–1900); William (1822/3–41); and Helen (1828/9–99). They are buried in Ettleton. Andrew (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Woll’ in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Robert, Burgess of Selkirk. He may have been associated with ‘Well’ in Selkirk rather than Woll. David ‘of the Well’ is also recorded in 1580. George (b.c.1810) joiner at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Eliza and James. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. James (15th/16th C.) resident of Selkirk, married to Janet Turnbull. In 1533 he assigned a tenement in Selkirk to his wife and also to his son James. He could be the late James ‘of the well’ whose son Richard is recorded in 1542. James (17th C.) merchant Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in a SASIN of 1671, along with his unnamed spouse, resigning a tenement in Hawick. This may be the same tenement that passed to Robert Oliver in 1713. Perhaps the same James is recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the James recorded in 1683 when clothing belonging to him, being bleached at the side of the Teviot, was ruined by a group of men throwing stones; they were fined £100 Scots for the damages. He is probably the merchant James whose widow Agnes Riddell is recorded in 1693/4 on the subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). The witnesses in 1676 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan. He is probably the deceased James, ‘sometimes merchant in Hawick’ recorded in 1708 when his daughter Margaret had an illegitimate son John baptized. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhaugh in 1725 when his daughter Janet was baptised. James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1755. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1765. He married Mary Park in Roberton in 1764. His children included William (b.1765), Walter (b.1768) and Janet (b.1770). He could be the James recorded at Redfordgreen in 1791 in a letter preserved in the Walter Mason collection. James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1755. James (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Leyden and for John Kedie. James (1816–83) son of Alexander (1777–1856) and Elizabeth Scott (1784–1866), he was born in Castleton Parish. He was listed as a weaver in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–37. In 1838–41 he was at Brox. He was also Church Officer in Castleton. He moved to Wilton Dean before the time of the 1841 census. In the 1851 census he is recorded at Dean Fore Row No. 6 and was on Dean Road in 1861. He married Esther Laidlaw (b.1821) in Hawick and their children included: Alexander (b.1839); Jane (b.1841); Elizabeth (b.1843); William (b.1847); John (b.1850); Mary (b.1853), who married Peter Scott, founder of Pesco’s; and James (b.1855). James (b.1816/7) tailor in Ashkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage, and employing 3 people. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Walter, Isabella, Helen, Agnes and James. James (1824/5–90) Hawick grocer. Originally from Ashkirk, he trained as a grocer with John Stenhouse on the High Street, and then worked for John Goodfellow on Buccleuch Street, as well as in Dalkeith. He set up his own business at the Station Buildings, which was a successful grocer’s for about 40 years. He was a keen abstainer and churchman. He also farmed at Dimpleknowe and Satchells. He married twice, secondly to a daughter of John Murray from Hobkirk Parish. He is buried at Ashkirk. His shop can be seen in a photograph taken around the 1880s. Dr. James (1834–1905) born in Hownam Parish, son of William and Anne Dalgleish. He lived at Whitslade and went to Robertson School, then St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities. He spent 2 years as demonstrator at Surgeon's Hall and resident at the Royal Infirmary. He came to Hawick as a doctor in 1858. His practice was based at 4 Sandbed. He was a member of the first School Board (where he was almost a lone voice supporting science education), President of the Archeological Society and published poetry anonymously in the local press. He was also police surgeon. In 1873 he published a description of archeological remains around Hawick for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell and edited ‘The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell’ (1871), also writing a memoir as the preface. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. His house was at 2 Slitrig Crescent. He was known for always giving a shilling to tramps who would sing ‘Scotland Yet’. He married Mary Middleton (b.1840), who was English. Their children were: William (b.1860), who also became a doctor; Annie (b.1863); an unnamed child (b.1865); James (b.1866); Mary Middleton (1868–1910), married Dr. David Murray, who became his partner about 1901; Janet R. (b.1871); and Walter (b.c.1882), who was a tweed merchant and married Daisy Blenkorn.

He is seen in his ‘gig’ on the High Street in a photo taken shortly before his death. John (16th C.) notary in Selkirk. He was also referred to as ‘chaplain of Glasgow’. His ‘protocol’ book along with Ninian (his brother) covers the period 1526–36 and a separate book of his covers 1530–37. He probably had a tenement of land within Selkirk. A document of 1527/8 refers to both John ‘younger’ and John ‘elder’, these probably including the burgess and bailie recorded at different times, and distinct from the notary and priest. In 1530 he was ‘chaplain in Fairnele’ (i.e. Fairnilee). He is probably the John, son of the deceased Thomas and brother of Ninian, recorded in 1531/2. William was Vicar of Selkirk at the same time and may have been related. In 1535 he and his wife were appointed executors for the will of John Turnbull, Vicar at Benedochy; this suggests that his wife may have been Turnbull’s sister. John (16th C.) local notary. He was notary for documents of the Scotts of Harden in 1553 and 1576 (although this date may be an error). He was ‘Schir John Bryden, notar publict’ in 1568/9 when he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He may be the same man (or close relative of) the John ‘Brydin’ who was a notary in the ‘Selkirk Protocol Books’ in the period 1530–37. John (18th C.) recorded as tenant in Langhope in 1784 when he accused someone in Selkirk of non-payment of a bill. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of James, merchant in Hawick. In 1708 her illegitimate son John was baptised, who she had conceived with William, son of John Scott ‘Cloaks’, on common-Riding night in 1707. Robert Scott, ‘Wyndhead’ gave evidence that the couple ‘were together a considerable time alone in her Mothers Stable’. William Scott fled the country and since she was ‘furious and not compos mentis’, then the Kirk Elders ‘made faith for ye child’s education’. The witnesses in 1708 included David Miller and James Gray in Whitchesters. Ninian (15th/16th C.) notary in Selkirk. Along with John (who was probably his brother) he kept a ‘protocol’ book for the years 1526–36, which included many documents of relevance to the families of the Hawick area. For example, he was notary in an action against Patrick Murray of Falahill (with procurator John Scott, Vicar of Hawick) in 1530, a witness to the document where Robert Scott of Howpasley sold his lands of Birkenside to Andrew Ker if Primside in 1532 and served as notary in 1536 for a transaction between Walter Scott of Robertson and Michael Scott of Aikwood. In 1534 he was procurator for his kinsman John Brydon. In 1536/7 he was recorded owning some rigs of land in Selkirk: his nephew John is also mentioned. Probably the same Ninian was also notary in his protocol book for 1536–64. Robert (18th C.) tenant farmer at Todshawhill. His son William was born in 1748 and daughter Helen in 1751. Robert (d.1876) born in Kirkhope Parish, he was steward at Highchesters farm. He was recorded there in 1851, 1861 and 1868. He firstly married Isabella, daughter of Robert Scoon, farmer at Todshawhill. He secondly married Jane McMorran who died at Union Street in 1871, aged 40. His children included: Margaret; and Walter, who died aged 20. He died at New Woll, Ashkirk. Their is a stone for his family in Borthwick Waas. Robert (1938/9–2018) ‘Rob’ son of Bill, he was Cornet in 1964 and Captain for Hawick R.F.C. As a rugby player he was a member of the ‘Magnificent Seven’ who won 10 consecutive Sevens tournaments in 1966/7. He served for 2 years with the K.O.S.B. and worked for the family joinery business on Drumalanrig Square. He was Jubilee Cornet in the Quincentenary year, 2014. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Braiden merchant in Hawick’ on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitive for religious non-conformity. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded along with Mary Park as owner of 2 horses at Hoscosethie in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.1788/9) born in Ashkirk, he was a mason at Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Agnes, James, Mary, Janet, Elizabeth, Jane and Thomas. By 1861 his widow and several children were living on Havelock Street. Thomas L. (19th/20th C.) baker of 16 High Street. He had taken over the business that was originally his uncle’s, George Paterson, at 53 (or 55) High Street. His daughter Maisie married Charles Oliver of Bucklands. Walter (15th/16th C.) Town Clerk of Selkirk, who some suggest was the only survivor of Selkirk’s 80 volunteers who went to Flodden. This story is somewhat contradictory to the ‘Fletcher’ version. However, it is certainly the case that there were prominent Brydons in Selkirk at that time. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as herd at Merrylaw in 1764. His children included Betty (b.1764), Isabel (b.1764). Walter (b.c.1770) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he was at Stirches. He was then shepherd at Midshiels in 1840 and on the 1841 census was at Littledean. His wife was Helen Grieve, and their children included James (b.1762), Marion (b.1764), Thomas (b.c.1770). Walter (16th/17th C.) notary to a charter of 1510/11 by David Scott of Hassendean. He is recorded there as ‘William Bryding’. It seems unlikely he was the same man as the notary of 45 years later, but may well have been his father. He may be the Vicar of Selkirk who is recorded in 1528 as a witness to an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and James Murray of Faluhill and witnessed other documents in Selkirk in the period 1528–36. This included, for example, the marriage contract between John Scott in Hawick (for his daughter Janet) and Thomas Johnstone, son of a Selkirk Burgess. The Vicar of Selkirk was recorded in 1534 as brother of Robert and uncle to another William. William (15th/16th C.) Vicar of Auld Roxburgh. George Ker, Rector there, renounced the perpetual vicarage of Auld Roxburgh to him in 1520. In 1530 he was sold the lands of Philhope by Christian Inglis, with the consent of her husband Thomas Inglis. He was recorded in transactions in Selkirk in the period 1527–34; it is unclear whether or not he was the same man as the Vicar of Selkirk. In 1540 he resigned the Vicarage of Auld Roxburgh in favour of Thomas Ker, with witnesses including Gilbert Ker of Primside, George Ker of Linton, Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall and Andrew Ker in Auld Roxburgh. At the same time the Kers agreed to pay a yearly sum to William, Vicar of Selkirk, perhaps confirming that the Vicsars of Selkirk and of Auld Roxburgh were the same man. William (16th C.) notary in 1556 for a document relating to the land of Nether Harden passing from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He was probably a local man, given the names of the witnesses. Perhaps the same William was notary for a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. William (18th C.) resident of Craik. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1762), Marion (b.1764), Thomas (b.1767), Walter (b.1769) and Adam (b.1771). William (1740/1–1818) weaver in Newcastleton. His children included Janet (1774/5–1804). They are buried at Ettleton. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included William (b.1761), Jean (b.1763), Janet (b.1768) and Mally (b.1773). William (19th/20th C.) Hawick Doctor. He gave an address at the 1891 Colour Bussing. William ‘Bill’ (20th C.) Cornet in 1935 who was Left-Hand Man twice, repeating his duties in the first post-war Common Riding of 1946. He worked for the family business of joiners and undertakers and was also nicknamed 'Bunny'. He married his Lass, Jean Butler and their son Rob was Cornet in 1964 (formerly spelled 'Bridon', 'Bridone', 'Bryden', 'Brydene', 'Bryding', etc.).

Brydon's (brí-dinz) n. James Brydon & Sons, grocer's shop at 8 High Street, established in 1852 and in existence into the mid-20th century. James Brydon also had a grocer's shop at Station Buildings for over 40 years. The name was later used for the joiners, furniture removers and undertakers business at 12 Drumlanrig Square.

Bryson (bri-sin, bri-sin) n. Alexander 'Sandy' (18th/19th C.) one of the Halfberdiers in the early 19th century, overlapping with Caleb Rutherford and 'Tufty' Wilson. He accompanied Rutherford and Wilson in 1824, for the last 'drumming out of town' to take place in Hawick. He may be the 'A. Bryson, constable' recorded being paid by the Town Treasurer in 1794 for 'pressing baggage-carts for soldiers'. He is probably the Alexander whose mother-in-law Margaret Govenlock died in Hawick in 1797. John (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick. In 1755 he was paid for '11 thrave for thatching the schoolhouse'. He may be the John, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1712. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Murray and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Agnes (b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and John (b.1760). The witnesses in 1741 were merchants Andrew Scott and William Oliver, junior.

Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Town'. He was probably from the west side. Walter (17th/18th C.) carrier and merchant in Hawick. He is probably the Walter born to William and Agnes Smith in Hawick in 1680. He was recorded as a merchant in Hawick in 1709. He was listed as a merchant in 1720 when he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Scott and Janet Bryson (probably related to him) in Hawick. He was recorded as a carrier in 1725, asking the Session for relief to help 'to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins latelie brought forth'. He married Janet Wilson in 1708, and their children included: William (b.1709); Agnes (b.1711); John (b.1712); William (b.1715); Abraham (b.1717); Walter (b.1719); James (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); and twins Walter (again) and Helen (b.1725). The witnesses in 1709 were weavers John Richardson and Andrew Jardine, in 1712 were gardener James Falsyde and flesher Robert Deans, in 1721 were merchants Francis and Robert Scott and in 1725 were candlemaker John Scott and wright Adam Thorbrand. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Smith and their children included Walter (b.1680). The baptismal witnesses were John Tinlin and Robert Scott. William (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Town'. He was probably from the west side. He is probably the William, married to Janet Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included Janet (b.1686) and William (b.1689). Helen (b.1692) may also have been his child.

Brythonic (bri-tho-week) n. a group of Celtic languages, including Welsh, Breton and Cornish, and also referred to as 'p-Celtic', to distinguish it from the 'q-Celtic' or Goidelic group, which includes Irish Gaelic, Scots Gaelic and Manx. The ancient Northumbrian language once spoken throughout the Borders was part of this subdivision, and bore great similarity with modern Welsh. Some remnants in local place names probably include Caerlenrig, Minto, Penchrise and several other hills and rivers.

the B6359 (thu-bee-siks-thri-nil-nin) n. road beginning as Appletreehall Road and going through Hassendean and on to Lilliesleaf and Melrose.

the B6399 (thu-bee-siks-thri-nil-nil) n. road beginning as Liddesdale Road, continuing along the Slitrig valley to Newcastleton.

the B711 (thu-bee-see-vin-nil-nil) n. beginning at ‘Mertin’s Brig’, it is the road leading to Roberton and the Borthwick valley, which continues via Greenbank Toll to reach the upper Ettrick valley at Tushielaw Inn. It was constructed in 1826 with the toll-house at Greenbank also dating from that time.

bubble (bu-bul) v. to cry, snivel, weep – ‘she hed a wee bit bubble ti hersel’, ‘hei bubbled and gret like a bairn’.

bubbly (bub-lee) adj., arch. having a snotty nose – ‘A bubbly nose an’ dirty face, This youth o’ Liddesdale did grace’ [RDW].

bubbly-jock (bu-bu-lee-jok) n. a turkey, particularly when served for dinner on special occasions such as Christmas or New Year – ‘He asked me if I had ever seen a turkey mesmerised . . . upon which he made a dive at a promising young ‘bubbly jock’ . . .’ [RB], ‘Birsselt an scowert, leike a bubbly-jock duine weel in ov an oven’ [ECS].

B Buccleuch

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. hamlet on the B711, about 15 miles west of Hawick, being the original seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and now split into the farms of West and East Buccleuch.
on opposite sides of Rinkle Burn. The original ‘castle’ (more likely a fortified house) was close to East Buccleuch, the foundations being uncovered when the modern farmhouse was built in the early 19th century. Sometime around 1490 (shortly before the death of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch) the manor house there was ruined by Simon Routledge and his son Matthew (who appear to have been tenants at the Trows), when they stole a large amount of livestock and food. It seems the house was never rebuilt, and the family seat of the Scotts moved to Branholme. However, the name survived in the main title of the Scott family, and they continued to own the lands there. Andrew Dickson was recorded there in 1494/5. In 1517 the lands were described as being in ‘waste’, but valued at £20 in times of peace. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540, there is a record of payment for 20 bolls of grain from 4 pastures in Buccleuch. The tenant farmers in 1574 were Simon and William Nichol. In 1653, along with Rankilburne, the farm was recorded with a value of £20. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branholme according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The ‘Buck Cleuch’ lies on the Clear Burn, just to the east. The traditional origin of the name (first written down by Capt. Walter Scott) involves an early ancestor seizing a buck with his bare hands while hunting with the King; unfortunately this seems too similar to other fanciful stories from separate families. In 1694 the farms of ‘Easter and Wester Buckcleuch’s’ are listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with 10 hearths between them. The 2 farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, bounded by Bellendean, Henwoodie, Whitslade, Craik, Wolfcleuchhead, Langshawburn, Dalgleish, Broadmeadows, lands held by Scott of Harden, Ameishope and Deloraine. (the origin is probably English for ‘an opening in a height’, but could be ‘buck’s ravine’ too, if one insists on romance; it was once spelled interchangeably as ‘Buckleugh’; it is ‘Buckleuch’ and ‘Buckluch’ in 1431, 1446 and 1449, ‘the Buckluch’ in 1436, ‘Buckluche’ in 1443, ‘Bucklouch’ in 1448, ‘Buckluch’ and ‘Buckluth’ in 1470, ‘Buckluch’ in 1475/6, ‘Buckluch’ in 1488, ‘Bucklewcht’ in 1491/2, ‘Buckluche’ and ‘Buckleuiche’ in 1494/5, ‘Buckluch’ in 1504, ‘Buckluch’ in 1515/6, ‘Buckluch’ in 1517, ‘Buckluche’ in 1519, ‘Buckluche’ in 1525, ‘Balcleuch’ in 1530, ‘Buckleuch’ in 1540, ‘Bukeleuth’ in 1543, ‘Buckleuch’ in 1553/4, ‘Buckleuch’ in 1564 and 1569, ‘Buckleuch’ in 1564/5, ‘Buckleuch’ and ‘Buckleuch’ in 1574, ‘Buckluch’ in 1576, ‘Buckluche’ in 1577, ‘Bucklucht’ in 1579, ‘Buckleuch’ in 1587, ‘Bakeleuch’ in 1597, ‘Bachughe’ in 1597 in a letter by the Laird himself, ‘Balcleuch’ in 1599, ‘Buggleuch’ in 1611, ‘Bacleugh’ in 1627, ‘Buggleuche’ in 1628, ‘Buckleuch’ and ‘Buckleuge’ in 1634, ‘Buckleuge’ and ‘Balcleugh’ in 1648, ‘Buckleugh’ in 1649, ‘Bacleugh’ in 1659, ‘Buckleuche’ in 1661 and ‘Buchugh’ in 1705; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Bucklech’, is ‘Buckleugh’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map, while ‘Waster Buggleuch’ and ‘Easter Buggleuch’ are marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Buccleuch (bu-kloo, ba-kloo) n. name used to refer to the Chief of the Scotts, i.e. Scott of Branholme and Buccleuch. The exact title of the head was Laird, Lord, Earl and finally Duke – ‘...And how full many a tale he knew Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS] (see the Duke of Buccleuch).

the Buccleuch Airms (thu-bu-kloo-ärnz) n. former Newcastleton inn, located at 47/48 North Hermitage Street. It existed from at least the 1830s to the 1860s. Thomas Pott was inn-keeper there in 1837 and James Telfer (or Telford) in 1852.

Bucleuch Boolin Club (bu-kloo-boo-lin-klub, bó-lin-klub) n. lawn bowling organisation, formed in 1872 to encourage the game among the working men. Its greens and clubrooms lie immediately west of those of the Hawick Bowling Club. The Clubhouse was built around 1891 to designs of J.P. Alison.

Bucleuch Burn (bu-kloo-boor-burn) n. another name for the Clear Burn, joining the Rinkle Burn at Buccleuch just after the ‘Buck Cleugh’ itself. Until recently it was possible to trace an old mill lade from the burn.

Bucleuch Estates (bu-kloo-e-stäts) n. corporate organisation which manages the estates of the Buccleuch family. Buccleuch Estates Limited is part of the Buccleuch Group, Chaired by the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, with the Earl of Dalkeith as Managing Director. The modern estates are split into the Boughton, Bowhill (including Branxholme), Dalkeith, Langholm (including parts of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale) and Queensberry parts.

Bucleuch Grammar Schuil (bu-kloo-graw-mur-skil) n. name used for Hawick High School after it moved to Buccleuch Street (about 1860), having previously been called the Grammar School. The name was changed to Buccleuch.
Higher Grade School in 1908 and Hawick High School in 1915.

the Buccleuch Handicap (thu-bu-kloo-hawn-dee-kap) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least the 1880s. Its length was 1 1/2 miles.

Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil (bu-kloo-hi-gra-d-skil) n. name adopted by the secondary part of the Buccleuch School following major rebuilding 1906–08. It would be renamed ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915.

the Buccleuch Hotel (thu-bu-kloo-lo-hotel) n. hotel at 1 Trinity Street, formerly having its address as Weensland Road. It was designed by local architect Michael Brodie and built in 1882, funded by auctioneer, James Oliver. It was run as a temperance hotel by Mr. & Mrs. Reid in the latter part of the 19th century, and used for several Common Riding dinners etc.

the Buccleuch Hunt (thu-bu-kloo-hun) n. largest local fox-hunting group, formed in 1826, and based at St. Boswells. The National Archives have records for 1827–60.

Buccleuch Kirk (bu-kloo-kirk) n. name sometimes given to the Old Parish Church in Buccleuch Street. It was built 1844 as a gift of the Duke of Buccleuch, with the foundation stone laid by Henry Scott Riddell, and demolished around 1990.

the Buccleuch Memorial (thu-bu-kloo-mun-i-ree-ul) n. officially ‘The Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute’, it was built after subscriptions were raised to build a suitable memorial following the death of Walter Francis, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It was opened by the 6th Duke and Duchess in 1887, and gifted to the Town as an adult educational institution. It was built at the corner of Duke Street and Bridge Street in an italianate style, designed by John Guthrie and with sculpted stone-work by Thomas Beattie. The main entrance was surmounted by the figure of a stag. The interior had a large lobby, with a small room on the right side and several smaller rooms to the left, with 2 larger rooms farther in. The top floor had a gallery extending round 3 sides with 3 dome windows in the roof, the largest having an 11 foot diameter. The level underneath was entered from Duke Street. The upper floor housed the Museum until 1910, while the rest was used by the South Kensington Science and Art Classes. The interior and interior Museum room can be seen in photographs of about 1890. When the Archaelogical Society moved out the Town Council took over full control and the building was known as the Buccleuch Memorial Technical Institute. It was then used extensively for textiles training courses. The building was also used by the Boys Brigade and various bands etc. The Vertish Hill Sports procession used to leave from there. It was gifted to Roxburgh Education committee by the town in 1951 and continued to be used for evening classes and the like, but by 1963 had become too hard to upkeep. It was demolished in 1969 and replaced in 1971 with the splendid new Tax and Social Security building.

Buccleuch Mill (bu-kloo-mil) n. former corn mill at Buccleuch, presumably serving the former Barony and Parish there. There are still traces of the walls in the shape of a small mound about 8 m by 4 m. It is said that no corn ever grew near there – ‘Had heather-bells been corn of the best, The Buccleuch mill would have had a noble grist’ [CWS].

Buccleuch Mills (bu-kloo-milz) n. knitwear factory on Green Lane, formerly Elliots, Bonsor’s and Sybil Gentleman’s, and more recently Glenhowe. It was built in 1862 as the stocking shop for William Elliot & Son. part having small windows for handframe knitting. It is 3 storeys high, each floor having 14 windows on a side, with each window formerly being for an individual hand-frame worker. The western part was added later in the 19th century and its wider windows match the machine-based methods of later production. The mill ceased operating in 1999.

the Buccleuch Muniments (thu-bu-kloo-mew-nee-mints) n. formal name for the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, particularly used by William Fraser in his 2 volume summary of the documents. This archive is an invaluable source of local information, since it preserves many documents relating to the area around Hawick from centuries when few other papers survive. The muniments were contained in charter chests kept at Branxholme and then moved to Dalkeith, but moved for protection to the Bass Rock in 1651 and Edinburgh Castle in 1666. They were held at Wemyss Castle during the minority of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. They were then stored for safe-keeping in a new stone building on Parliament Close, but caught in the great fire in Edinburgh in 1700; they were rescued by the Earl of Melville, who badly burned his hand and arm in the process. The index is available through the National Archives of Scotland.

n. former commercial plant nursery on Lynnwood Road/Slitrig Crescent, now the site for the Stonefield housing estate. It was run by John Forbes on land rented from the Duke of Buccleuch, running from 1879 (after Forbes moved from his present location at Havelock Nurseries). The nurseries went through various changes and finally closed in 1968. They grew a wide range of plants for sale, including hot houses etc. (in greenhouses), and supplied customers from all over Britain. It was for a while the largest grower of Penstemons in the world, offering 550 varieties in 1900. It was also known for its antirrhinums, delphiniums, gaillardias, pansies and phloxes. It was renamed the Royal Nurseries for several years in the early 20th century, and often known locally as Forbes' Nurseries. Prominent from the railway, the nurseries were also open to visitors, and there were sales on the premises, although most of the business was in supplying distant customers. Some species from the nursery colonised nearby pieces of ground, explaining the presence of some odd plants in that area, even today.

Buccleuch Park (bu-kloo-pawrk)
n. cricket field behind a high unsightly wall between the High School and the Volunteer. It has been the headquarters of the Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club since 1860. Hawick Rugby Football Club originally played their games there 1873–85. A rugby match there in 1879 may have been the first sporting event to be played under floodlights in Scotland.

the Buccleuch Pipers (thu-bu-kloo-pi-purz)
n. name used around 1900 for the pipe band in Hawick, probably the ex-Servicemen’s Band.

Buccleuch Place (bu-kloo-plis)
n. short street off Buccleuch Street, being the continuation of Beaconsfield Terrace, with houses built in 1879.

the Buccleuch Playin Fields see the Playin Fields

the Buccleuch Quoitin Club see the Quoitin Club

Buccleuch Road (bu-kloo-rōd)
n. name given in 1905 to the part of the New Road that lies within the town boundaries and is the continuation of Buccleuch Street.

Buccleuch Schuil (bu-kloo-skil)
n. new school buildings on Buccleuch Street, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch to replace those of the Grammar School on Orrock Place. The Duke of Buccleuch gave the land and offered to pay for the erection of the new school and schoolmaster’s house in 1859, and it was built by 1860. The school was enlarged in 1875 and a new infant department added. It was further enlarged in 1884 and remodelled in 1906–08, being renamed Buccleuch Higher Grade School. For several years, starting in 1895 the Secondary School was run from Teviot Grove on Union Street. The school finally became ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. Originally there was also a primary school there. A new infant building was added in 1875, enlarged in 1876 and in 1886, and ran until the 1940s. A large fraction of the early building was destroyed in the fire of 1925. The school started a tradition of singing the Common Riding song on the Thursday in 1872, which led to the Cornet’s visits to the schools that day. William Pitcairn was Headmaster from 1860s and early 1900s and William Forsyth was acting Headmaster 1905–08 – ‘Oh! where are a’ the laddies noo? We were a merry crew That day we marched in rank and file Tae oor new schule – Buccleuch’ [WLu] (also known as ‘Buccleuch Public School’).

Buccleuch Shielz (bu-kloo-sheelz)
n. former name for a cottage near Buccleuch. Thomas Nichol was there in 1720.

the Buccleuch Star (thu-bu-kloo-stawr)
n. former semi-junior rugby team. It was run by Pesco’s, and existed for only a couple of years before WWII.

Buccleuch Street (bu-kloo-stree’)
n. street that begins the New Road towards the south and was named in 1815 after the local Ducal family of Buccleuch. The first building there may have been what now forms the central portion and offices of Pesco’s, built shortly after 1816 for a firm of local solicitors. No. 2 is also an early building, once housing the Burns Inn. The terraced block of Nos. 8–20 were built around 1820, constructed of whinstone with sandstone dressings and painted tabbed margins. They also involve some elegant details (e.g. the fanlight at No. 10 and the former Grapes Close at No. 16). Across the street stands the Chapel of Saints Mary and Buccleuch Terrace

David and the adjoining hall, formerly the Subscription Rooms and the Commercial Inn. Further down the street was the Old Parish Church, as well as the High School. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 and 22 are grade C listed.

Buccleuch Terrace (bu-kloo-te-ris) n. street in the West End, off Beaconsfield Terrace, with houses built around 1903. It includes St. Margaret’s Primary School.

the Buccleuch Vaults (thu-bu-kloo-vaults) n. burial chamber of the Scotts of Buccleuch at St. Mary’s Church for about two centuries. The last burial there was that of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, and the vault was sealed up after the church was rebuilt in 1763. The site is said to have been attached to the choir, perhaps beneath the eastern stair leading to the Duke’s Loft. Rev. Somerville in 1738 writes ‘I only find their bodies in lead coffins, having sheets of lead with names and arms fixed to the heads of their coffins’. Its position was described in 1863 by a family (unnamed) with an adjacent burial place, who stated they had had an arch built at the east end of the south wall when the south wall was moved 6 feet in 1763. James Wilson stated that this was because the ‘south front-wall’ of the new church in 1763 was found to interfere with the burial vault of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and that this ‘Duke’s Arch’ formed in the wall was still visible in the 1850s.

Buccleuch Works (bu-kloo-wurks) n. name sometimes used for the hosiery manufacturing premises of James Bonsor & Co., on Buccleuch Street, also known as Buccleuch Mills.

Buccleugh (bu-kloo) n. alternative spelling of Buccleuch, common until the early 19th century.

John (17th C.) farmer at Belses Mill, recorded in 1632. John (1875–1940) Scottish journalist, biographer, novelist and statesman, born in Perth. Probably most famous world-wide for his novel ‘The Thirty-Nine Steps’ (1914), he is locally better known for poems such as ‘The South Country’. He was later M.P. for the Scottish Universities and Governor-General of Canada. He became Baron Tweedsmuir in 1935. The John Buchan Centre is located at Broughton near Biggar, which was where his grandfather preached, his parents first met, and was the family childhood holiday home. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1794 he married Betty Aitkin, who was from Hawick.

bucket (bu-ki) n. bin, pail, especially wastepaper bin or garbage bin – ‘it’s your turn ti pit the buckets oot’, ‘if ee deh behave, A’ll pit aa yur toys in the bucket’, ‘... she said her fam’ly wad juist pit it in the bucket and she wanted it ti come back ti Hawick’.[IWL]

bucht (bucht) n., arch., poet. an animal enclosure, sheep fold, particularly used for gathering ewes for milking – ‘Yestreen I saw them when whan we milk’d the ewes, He drave them to the bught out o’er the knows’ [CPM], ‘The yowes they lap out owre the bughte, And skippit up and downe’ [JTe], ‘... except the remains of its tower, which are still standing, and sometimes used by the tenant as a bught for his sheep’ [RWB], ‘... For the sun is shining on bucht and bower And I’ll find thee a mother in Kirkhope Tower’ [WHO], v. to enclose animals, particularly to gather ewes for milking – ‘Weel, it was the custom to milk yowes i’ thae days, and my faither was buchtin’ the Brockalaw yowes ’...’ [LHTB] (also written ‘bught’; the word occurs in some place names, e.g. Bught Knowe, Bught Shank and Bught Sike; also boucht; from Dutch).

Buck Cleuch (buk-clooch) n. deep ravine of the Clear Burn, just off the B711 east of the farms of Buccleuch. This is where traditionally a young Scott seized a buck with his bare hands and presented it to the King. There was once a mill on the burn, with traces of the mill lade still visible. The cleuch is about 100 feet down at its deepest part. A small crook at the steepest part, ‘about halfway between the East house and the Mill dam ford’ (according to the Ordnance Survey Name Book) is said to have been the specific location where the buck was slain (in fact the name probably has a different etymology, and was used synonymously with ‘Rankelburn’ when referring to the lands of the Scotts).

bucketfi n. bucketful – ‘go’an git another bucketfi coal’, ‘... they brocht hyim muckle bucketfis o mussels’ [IWL].
Buckholm

Buckholm (bu-kum) n. village just north of Galashiels, with the nearby ruined Buckholm Tower dating from 1552. The tower overlooks the valley towards Torwoodale and was the location for the last ‘laying’ of an evil spirit by an ordained Church of Scotland minister (the origin is probably Old English ‘bucca helm’, meaning ‘the buck’s shelter’; it is first recorded as ‘Buchelm’ about 1200).

Buckham (bu-kum) n. Adam (d.c.1683) tenant in West Lees, probably the one in Hobkirk Parish. His will is recorded in 1683 and that of his wife (although his surname is transcribed there as ‘Benholme’ for ‘Buckholme’) in 1681. Adam (17th C.) tenant somewhere close to Bolton, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Abbotrule Parish. Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Mervinslaw according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. George (16th C.) tenant at Belses Mill in 1581. He witnessed a transaction between the Haliburtons in Ancrum and the Haliburtons of Muirhouselaw. George (d.c.1686) tenant in Halrude. His testament is recorded in both 1684 and 1686. George (18th C.) coachman listed at Wells in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Elliott. Probably the same George was gardener at Weens in 1792 (for William Oliver of Dinlabyre). George (d.1820) yarn merchant of the early 19th century, running the company George Buckham & Co. Ltd. The firm continued until his death. He may have originally come from Manchester. The Museum has ledgers from 1818–20. Either he or perhaps his son subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the George who married Margaret Goodfellow (1792–1834). James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Whitriggs in 1722 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Cavers Parish, James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Howison (or ‘Jean Huison’) in 1754 and their children included: William (b.1761); Janet (b.1761); Isabel (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1767); and Ann (b.1771). The witnesses in 1764 were mason William Howison and shoemaker William Elliot and in 1771 were the whole congregation. James (d.1831) labourer who owned 12 Back Row. His sisters were probably Isobel (who died in 1829) and Ann (who died in 1820, wife of Robert Pringle). He either gave or sold his property to the Pringle family. His property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, to the east of Robert Pringle’s. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Haswell was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. John (17th C.) owner of Belses Mill, as recorded in 1643. His lands there were valued at £200 and listed in Ancrum Parish. John (1691/2–1764) tenant in Bedrule. He married Mary Oliver, who died in 1757, aged 63. Their children included: Isobel, John and Robert, who died young; Isobel (1730/1–57); and probably John, late tenant in Bedrule. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He could have been the tenant of Bedrule at the time a story of the fairy folk was told; the farmer’s wife gave her only bit of barley to a fairy, and later had it replaced by a quantity that kept her and the reapers in bread throughout the harvest. John of Overtonbush (1726/7–79) tenant in Bedrule. He was probably son of the earlier John. He married Agnes Dunlop, who died in 1814, aged 75. Their children included: Mary, James and Agnes, who all died young; Isabella, who died aged 17; and William (d.1799) who died off the coast of Africa. His family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John ‘Jock’ (19th C.) local ‘toper’ of the mid-1900s, mentioned in William Easton’s ‘The Anvil Crew’ and ‘Run Them In’. It is unclear how he was related to other Buckham’s. His memory was revived in J.C. Goodfellow’s burlesque poem ‘The Voyage of the Great Eastern’ – ‘...And Captain Menty walked the deck, While Buckham mann’d the wheel’ [WE], ‘Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags . . . ’ [WE], ‘...For Captain Fraser walked the deck And Bucham turned the wheel’ [JCG]. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded at Town o’ Rule in 1694. He may be the same man as Robert of West Lees. Robert of West Lees (18th C.) heritor of Hobkirk Parish in the early 1700s. He was recorded as Laird there in 1738 (when his servant William Turnbull’s child was baptised) and in 1745. He may be the Robert who married Margaret Hutton in Hobkirk Parish in 1732. His daughter Janet married Robert Scott in 1756. William (17th C.) recorded at Hallrule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed for 4 hearths, suggesting he was the main tenant on the farm at that time (also written ‘Buckam’, ‘Buckholm’, ‘Buckholme’, ‘Buckolm’ and ‘Bukhelme’).

the Bull an Butcher (thu-bul-in-boo-chaur) n., arch. former name for an inn in Hawick, probably the same as the White Hart at about 31 High Street. The name appears in Slater’s 1852 directory, but could not have been in use for very long. It was used as a departure point by carriers.

Bullerwell see Billerwell

bullie (bu-lee) n., arch. bullfinch.

Bulloch (bu-lok) n. John (18th C.) married Agnes Allan. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: John (b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); and William (b.1746). He may be the son of William born in 1713. John (18th C.) married Isabel Dryden in Hawick in 1768. He is probably the John whose daughter was buried in Hawick in 1772. He may be the son of John born in 1739. He is probably the carrier to Liddesdale whose son John died in Hawick in 1787. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, described as an ‘Armourour’ in 1713 and ‘brasier’ in 1719. His wife was Jean Robson and their son John was baptised in 1713, with his name appearing to be written ‘Dulloch’ in one entry. The witnesses in 1713 were smith Thomas Huntly and tailor John Little. Probably the same William secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, in 1716. Their children included: Jean (b.1717); Bessie (b.1719); Helen (b.1721), who perhaps married John Thorburn in 1756; and Thomas (b.1724). The witnesses in 1719 were carrier John Simpson and wright James Gedestains.

William ‘Wullie’ (18th/19th C.) last member of an old Hawick family, he worked as groom for William Nixon. A portrait of him giving a bowl of oats to Nixon’s horse ‘Molly’ (or ‘Moll’), painted by Adam Brown, is in the Museum. It is said that he had a strong passion for only 2 things: sitting on the back of Moll; and drinking whisky, which he would deny doing more persistently the drunker he got (also written ‘Bullock’ and ‘Bulough’).

Bullysteed (bu-lee-sted) n. possible name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Bulyastede’ in Bulman

Bulman (bool-min, -mun) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Bessie Laidlaw, who was also from Ashkirk.

Peter (b.c.1800) grocer and spirit merchant in Denholm. His shop was on Main Street. His wife was Agnes, from Bo’ness, West Lothian. Their children included Robert (who farmed at Nether Tofts), Peter, William, James and John. He died before 1851, when his widow was still a grocer in Denholm. Robert (15th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. He is recorded there as ‘Robertus Bulman’. The document probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. Robert (b.c.1768/9) from Bowden, he was farmer at Denholm Hall. He is probably the Robert (senior) listed as a shopkeeper in Denholm in the directory of 1837. His wife was Alison, who came from England. His children included: Robert, farmer at Westgatehall; and Mary, who married joiner James Elliot.

He was still alive in 1851. Robert (b.1803/4) son of Robert, he was farmer in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he is recorded at the west side of the village, farming at Westgatehall. By 1861 he had taken over from his father at Denholm Hall (i.e. Eastgate). He is probably the Robert junior recorded as a shopkeeper in Denholm in 1837. He may also have been the Robert who served as a carrier between Denholm and Edinburgh once a fortnight at that time. In 1868 he is recorded at ‘Denholm Farm’. He married Ann Hardie and they had a son Robert. Robert (b.1830/1) son of Robert and Agnes. He was recorded as vintner and grocer at the Crown in Denholm in a directory of 1852, presumably helping his mother. He was later farmer at Nether Tofts. In 1861 he is recorded as farmer of 650 acres there, employing 4 people. He was recorded at Tofts in a directory of 1868. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he leased an acre of land in Langnewton from Patrick King.

Bulman’s Scar (bool-munz-skawr) n. former name for a right of way from Denholm Brig to the ford (which was slightly down river). It had a stile at both ends (probably named after the Bulman family who farmed at Denholm Hall).

Bulmer (bul-mur) n. Sir Ralph of Wilton (c.1491–1558) from Yorkshire, he succeeded his uncle Sir John. The family estate in Cleveland is unrelated with the Wilton in Hawick. Along with Sir Oswald Westropp, he led English forces that burned Hawick in 1547/8. The Earl of Surrey made him marshal for the vanguard before entering Scotland. Everything was burned, including the houses and corn, as well as a tower containing its owner James Young and 10 others. Over 30 prisoners were taken, along with much booty. The Kers (including the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst) colluded with him in the burning of Teviotdale in 1547/8. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Thomas Tempest. He is also mentioned in the English ballad ‘Lord Ewie’ – ‘A noble Knight him trained up, Sir Rafe Bulmer is the man I mean; At Flodden field, as men do say, No better capten there was seen’ [T]. Sir William of Wilton (1465–1531) son of Sir Ralph. He was present at Flodden and was High Sheriff of Durham and of Yorkshire. He was in joint charge, along with Sir Thomas Tempest, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523; Tempest was his grandson’s father-in-law. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was hanged for treason.

bul-reel (bul-reel, bool-reel) n. a reel danced only by men – ‘...A was stamin on bluddy Ancrum Muir. Nae cannie daffin bull-reel splore that fearnith fecht’ [ECS] (also called a ‘ram reel’).

the Bul Reel (thu-bul-reel, bool-reel) n. specific reel danced by the Common Riding Principals at the Ball and after returning from the Mote, as well as formerly at the Games. The tunes used are traditionally ‘Stumpie’ and ‘Kate Dalrymple’.

bul-wand (bul-wawnd) n., arch. a weed that grows among meadow-grass, hay or corn, the ragwort.

bum (bum) v. to hum, make a humming sound, throw something with a booming sound, knock – ‘If there’s a greater bore, it is The monologueish woman; She’ll deave yer vera soul wi’ din Till baith yer legs are bumm’ [FL], n., arch. a hum, drone, booming sound – ‘...ti the droang o the Toon’s clock an the bumm of the jumboes; whan the mills was skailin...’ [ECS].

bum (bum) v. to brag, boast – ‘when heii won the pools heii was bummiii aboot it a ower the toon’, ‘...The music smilin’ in our face, What greater bliss Can a the bummiii worldly race Enjoy than this’ [JR], n. contemptuous name for a boaster – ‘there’s nae need ti be sic a bum’ (from an earlier Scots word meaning to buzz or hum).

bunden (bu-din) pp., arch. bound – ‘. . . to be bundin and oblist . . . to the rycht honorabill Schir Walter Scot of Branxholme . . . ’ [SB1595].

the Bungle (thu-bung-ul) n. nickname recorded for an Armstrong of Liddesdale in 1590, probably Andrew Airmstrong.

bunker (bung-kur) n. a wooden box for storing coal in early-to-mid 20th century houses, also known as a ‘coal bunker’, a counter-top or work-surface beside the sink in a kitchen – ‘dinni wash they cups the now, jist pit them on the bunker’, arch. a bench, pew – ‘The council condescend to make up a new table, with bunkers round about, in the tolbooth . . . ’ [JW1719].

bunnet (bun-i)’ n. a bonnet, particularly a flat-topped cap worn by older men. In the 18th century, those worn by working men would have been of blue worsed, and the employers sometimes wearing black; however, since the 19th century a checked pattern has been the norm – ‘heii probably even wore his bunnet ti bed’, ‘. . . Whan Habby gave him time o’ day, Took aff his bunnet, looked grave; My Lord said, ‘Hab, what would you have?’’ [JR], ‘Get away wi’ ye or I’ll fling yer bunnet in the glaur, and there it’s’ [JEDM] (also written ‘bannet’; see also bonnet).

Bunster (bu-stur) n. local name for Bonchester, as recorded by Walter Deans in the 1880s. The variant Binstor is more common today.

bunter (bu-tur) n., arch. a disreputable woman – ‘There are still many old bunters going about the country pretending to be skilled in fortune-telling and divination . . . ’ [EM1820].

buntie (bu-tee) adj., poet. probably referring to a style of jacket with a tail – ‘Hee cam’ to Hawick without a groat, In Denholm-blue short, buntie coat’ [RDW].

buntifully (bu-fu-lee) adv., poet. bountifully – ‘. . . the righteous sall be roun’ about me; for thou salt deel buntifullie wi’ me’ [HSR].

Bunyan (bu-yin, -yee) n. Alexander (d. bef. 1777) gardener in Hawick. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for John Kedie. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Lizzy’) Scott, who died in 1777. Their children included: Janet (b.1741); Janet (again, b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); and John (b.1747). His surname is given as ‘Bonzie’ and ‘Bunyan’. The witnesses in 1743 were dyer Robert Pringle and Pringle’s servant George Campbell and in 1745 were merchant John Rucastle and William Soon. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for smith Robert Young. In 1759 and 1760 he was listed as ‘Church officer’ or ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed several baptisms in Hawick Parish. He also witnessed further baptisms in 1761 and 1762. In 1764 he witnessed baptisms for weaver Charles Scott, for Robert Scott, for merchant John Hardie and for William Nichol (when he was again ‘officer’). He witnessed baptisms in 1765 for Robert Easton and in 1766 for William Scott. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for William Burnet, another in 1767 for Andrew Scott and in 1768 another for fellow gardener Charles Turnbull. He is probably the 'Alex. Bunzie' recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the west of his were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdykeside. He witnessed further baptisms in 1771, 1772 and 1774. George (1839–75) son of James. He was a Hawick barber like his father. In 1856 he donated to the Archaeological Society an old gun found at Hermitage, as well as stuffed animals. He donated further items in the 1860s.

James (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1728 when his son James was baptised in Cavers Parish. An unnamed child (b.1719) and Robert (b.1721), baptised in Cavers, were probably also his children. He was surely related to John, who was at Spittal-on-Rule at the same time. James (18th C.) joined at Spittal, recorded in 1787. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Agnes (b.1787). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Cote. He was listed along with John on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was recorded as owner of 7 farm horses. His surname is listed as 'Bunzie'. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Effedye in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (1795/6–1832) eldest surviving son of Thomas, farmer at Cavers Mains. He took over as farmer of Cavers Mains from his father and then later was tenant at Stirches Mains. He paid the Horse Tax at Westcote in 1797. In 1820 he married Catherine Angus, probably daughter of agricultural labourer John at Broomhill. Their children were: Thomas, who died aged 21; John (b.1828) who was a clerk; Jemima Catherine (1828–1920), twin of John, who died at Wellogate Manse, home of her 2nd cousin Rev. Ainslie; Isabella, who married her cousin Thomas Bunyan, who was a warden at the Tower of London; and Margaret Elizabeth (1833–1902). His widow and 3 children were living at Broomhill in 1842, with John Angus, and at about 50 High Street in 1851; most of the family lived in Hawick later. His wife died in 1890, aged 81. They are buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. James (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a barber in Hawick. In 1841 he was recorded at 29 High Street and was listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary, who died before 1851. Their children included: James, Mary, Ann, Isaac, George, Jane and Andrew. He could be the James who was an early member of the Archaeological Society, and of whom a portrait exists, dying at Stirches Mains in 1889. John (17th C.) married Agnes Melrose ‘At Minto’ in 1693, as recorded in the records of Melrose Kirk. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Lillico in Bedrule in 1719. He is probably the John recorded in Spittal in 1727 and 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, probably included John (b.1724), Margaret (b.1727), Bessie (b.1730), Elspeth (b.1733). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal. He is recorded as ‘Bunzie’ when he was listed as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John listed along with James at West Cote on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1828–1915) born in Cavers Parish, son of James and Catherine Angus. He trained as a Solicitor’s Writing Clerk, and then worked for the Commercial Bank. He donated items to the Museum in 1857 and became a member of the Archaeological Society in 1862. He could be the Mr. Bunyan who visited Kelso Museum in 1857 and immediately suggested that the Hawick Archaeological Society obtain a room, shelves and display cases (which suggestion was unanimously accepted). He later moved to a bank in Liverpool. He shared lodging with another bank employee who was found guilty of embezzlement. During the trial the judge remarked how surprising it was that he could have lived and worked with this man but known nothing about it; this unjust criticism apparently preyed on his mind, causing him to have to give up working altogether. Robert (18th C.) probably name for farmer at Ashybank in Cavers Parish. He is recorded on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Bonie’ and in 1788 as ‘Burn’, his name being hard to transcribe. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mason who was one of the tradesmen selected in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of Hawick Manse. He is probably the mason in Cavers Parish recorded in an Edinburgh marriage record when his son Robert married Margaret Ker, servant to George Douglas of Friarshaw, advocate in Edinburgh. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Teindside. In 1762 he was witness for the baptism of twins of Adam Hutton. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk James Inglis and Helen Bunyan (perhaps his daughter). He was recorded as farmer at Teindside in the period 1785–97, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was taxed for having 2 work horses. Thomas (1753–1823) tenant farmer of Spittal-on-Rule and later Cavers Mains and Templehall. He was recorded at Spittal on the 1794 Horse Tax rolls. He was an early member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh, becoming one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was a Trustee and Bondholder, presiding over the Session, and generally being regarded as the founding father of the church. In 1787 he married Betty (b.1767), only surviving daughter of James Veitch and Betty Murray (thus connecting all 3 of the families that farmed Spittal-on-Rule). He was stated to be from Minto Parish at the time of the marriage, which was recorded in both Minto and Cavers Parishes. Their children were: John (b.1788), who died young; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1791), who married Thomas Rutherford, farmer at Ancrum Craig; Jane (b.1793), who died young; James (b.1795), who succeeded his father at Cavers Mains; Thomas (b.1801); and Jane, again (b.1805), who was a teacher. Thomas (b.1801) younger son of Thomas and Betty Veitch. He was tenant farmer at High Tofts. He married Margaret Telfer in 1823. Their eldest son was Thomas, who became Chief Warder at the Tower of London and married his cousin Isabella Bunyan. Thomas (19th C.) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at High Tofts. He was Sergeant-Major with the 79th Highlanders, serving in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He was later Yeoman Warder at the Tower of London, for 14 years and Chief Warder for 16 years. He had a son, James, who was a banker in London (formerly spelled ‘Bonde’, ‘Bonzie’, ‘Bunya’, ‘Bunion’, ‘Bunyon’, ‘Bunzie’, etc.).

Bunyan’s Close (bun-yinz-klós) n. passage-way off the High Street, recorded in the 1860s, but of uncertain location. It was possibly near 50 High Street where the Bunyan family kept a library.

Bunzie see Bunyan

burd (burd) n. bird (occasional spelling to emphasize the pronunciation).

burdie (bur-dee) n. a little bird, affectionate term for a bird.

burding (bur-ding) n., arch. a burden – ‘...for our selfiss, and takand the burding vpoun ws for our haill surname of Batyis cumit of the hous of Cowchquhairglen ...’[SB1595].

Burge (buji) n. Richard ‘Dick’ (19th/20th C.) British Lightweight Boxing Champion and owner of Blackfriars Ring. He was one of the more famous boxers to appear in exhibition matches at Hawick Common Riding in the latter part of the 19th century.

burgess (bur-jis) n. a freeman of a town – ‘Item, that ilk freeman’s heir that is to be admitted burgess and freeman within this Bruch, sal only pay the wyne to the Bailies, with pertinents’[BR1640], ‘The quhilke day, John Gledstaines of Hillsiland, and John Scott, smith, wer admittit and creat Burgesses and gave their Burgess Oaths’[BR1692], adj. relating to burgesses – ‘...and the money payd out of the burgess money by Baylyea Ruecastell at the pryces aftermentionat ...’[BR1707] (see also Burgesses).

Burgess (bur-jis) n. Robert (19th C.) man who gave evidence at the investigation into the election riots in Hawick in 1837.

Burgesses (bur-ji-seez) n., pl. freemen of Hawick. They had the right to graze cows and take turfs from the Common, and a vote among the Burgesses selected the two magistrates. Admission as a Burgess involved a sum of money (for a long time 40 shillings Scots), with first sons automatically allowed to become Burgesses, while second and later sons, and sons-in-law had to pay a higher fee (£4 Scots; by the end of the 17th century the fees were £4 and £8 Scots). Being made a Burgess was also sometimes an inducement, e.g. in 1694 when 2 men who had been selected from Hawick to serve in the militia were admitted for free. Only Burgesses could trade within the town, and for a long time only the sons of Burgesses could be Cornet. They essentially constituted the town’s middle class. A dispute between many Burgesses followed the 1777 Division of the Common, with a decision by the Court of Session clarifying the rights of the Burgesses to elect the Bailies and other Officers. In 1781 it was decreed that no one from the countryside would be admitted as a Burgess unless they came to reside in the Town. Before 1855 the Magistrates and Council elected a number of Burgesses to assist the Junior Bailie in riding the marches, and they also had to carry out posts at the Watch-knowe. The first Burgess on record is Simon Routledge in 1433, suggesting that Hawick was already a Burgh then; there are similar records of 1447 and 1454. In the sasine of 1452 for the granting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, Thomas Blair is described as a Bailie of Hawick, and then occurs this list of 4 names: ‘Johanne Walch, Roberto Falconar, Thoma de Lutherdale, Roberto Wchiltre, burgeusibus’. 4 Burgesses listed on a document relating to Whitchesters (made at St. Mary’s) are Simon Routledge, John Waugh, Thomas Blair and Thomas Lidderdale. Robert Cessford is recorded as a Burgess in 1490. A list of those who contributed to the new kirk bell in 1693/4 is likely to be essentially a list of burgesses at that time; it contains 180 names (with the ordering of the names being according to who gave the most money, hence many of the east-end merchants are near the beginning and west-end weavers come later). 60 Burgesses voted in the election of the Bailies in 1702. In 1715 there were 82 Burgesses, Bailies and Councillors who took an oath to the new King. In 1769 144 Burgesses and owners of participates signed the statement made regarding the Town’s legal position on the Common, and there were said to be about 200 Burgesses in 1770. However, another estimate puts the number at as many as 407 Burgesses in 1770 and 437 recorded a little later. There were 211 in 1803, when a large number of eligible men were admitted (including sons above the age of 16) just before electing the Town Clerk. However, there were only 144 in 1860 just before they were made obsolete – ‘They met in the Kirkyard and loaning, Old burgesses loyal and true’ [RSC], ‘So much to sing, dear town, in the long years, Do you remember, in your old grey heart, The burgess-men who smiled at craven fears And on the field of Flodden played their part’ [JYH].

Burgess Oath (bur-jis-ōth) n. oath of fidelity taken on admittance as a Burgess, recorded in the Town Book of 1681, and unchanged since then. The words are ‘I promise and swear I shall be a true and faithful Burgess of the Burgh of Hawick. That I shall defend the liberties thereof in all time coming with my body, goods, and gear; be obedient to the Magistrates and their successors in office; that I shall give the Bailies and Council of the Burgh the best advice I can when they ask it of me. I shall conceal that which they impart to me. I shall colour no man’s goods under colour of my own, as I shall answer to God. So help me God’.

the Burgess Roll (thu-bur-jis-röl) n. list of Burgesses read by the Town Clerk for generations at the Ca’ Knowe during the Common Riding. The penalty for non-attendance at the reading was £10 Scots. The roll was traditionally read at 12 noon. After the Division the Roll was read at Bailie’s Hill for a while, but was eventually discontinued – ‘And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trysting-ground, And the Roll to the winds is given’ [JYH].

burgess silver (bur-jis-sil-vur) n., arch. the money taken in by a burgh as fees from burgesses – ‘On balancing the Treasurer’s accounts for his ‘intromissions with the Burges Silver’, he is found to have on hand £83 Scots’ [JW1656].

burgess ticket (bur-jis-ti-ki’t) n. the document affirming the status of a burgess, also given to honorary burgesses.

burgh (bu-ru) n. a town with a charter, granted by the monarch or by a noble, allowing the townspeople certain privileges, such as the right to hold a market (cf. ‘borough’ in England). They were abolished during local government reorganisation in 1975.

the Burgh (thu-bu-ru) n. term used to refer to Hawick, particularly in the period when it had its own Town Council. Hawick achieved its ‘burgh of barony’ status when granted its first burghal charter, probably by Douglas of Drumlanrig sometime in the 15th century, with a restatement of its status in 1511 and a regranting of its charter in 1537. The date of the first charter is unknown, but must be before the first record of a burgess in 1433. The confirming charter of the Barony of Hawick granted to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1407 includes ‘also the burgh of Hawick, as freely as the granter or any of his predecessors had enjoyed’, suggesting that it was not a burgh of barony at that time. Because of wording in the 1537 Charter, the legal status of the Town was assumed to be the same as that of a Royal Burgh (specifically the right of the Bailies to accepted resignations of land and grant infeftments, independent of the Baron), except for not having its own member of Parliament. However, this status was questioned at various times, e.g. 2 advocate were consulted in 1667 regarding the tenure of the Burgh. In 1770 the number of houses belonging to Burgesses was 206, valued at more than £31,000. The assessment for the poor rates in 1814 was £3717. In a case of 1807 it was established that the Burgh was independent of the Baron.

Burgh Assessor (bu-ru-aw-se-sur) n. former official of the Town Council who annually prepared the property valuation rolls, based upon which the Town’s rates were levied. This position would have existed from the 1860s until 1975. Andrew Scott held this post for a while in the late 19th century.

Burgh Brae (bu-ru-brā) n. former name for a road off Princes Street, also called Farthing Row.

Burgh Chamberlain (bu-ru-chām-bur-lin) n. formerly the Town official in charge of receiving rents etc., another title for town treasurer.

Burgher (bur-gur) n., arch. a Burgess – ‘...intimation being made to all the Burghers, and none objecting, Mungo Armstrong, town herd, was continued in that office for the ensuing year’ [BR1724].
Burgher

Burgher (bur-gur) n., arch. a member of the Secession Church that believed one should take the Burgess Oath, and separated from the ‘Anti-Burghers’ in 1747, adj., arch. relating to the Burghers.

the Burghers (thu-bur-gurz) n., pl. group who seceded from the church after 1747 in opposition to the patronage system, but were a little more liberal-minded than the Anti-Burghers, considering it proper to take the Burgess oath, which asserted ‘the true religion professed within the realm’. They are sometimes referred to as the ‘dissenting seceders’, or the Second Secession Church. In Hawick they probably grew out of a splinter group of the Anti-Burghers at the Green Kirk in about 1770, with adherents originally attending meetings in Selkirk. The East Bank (or East End) Burgher congregation was founded in 1773 and the East End Meeting House was built at what is now Trinity Gardens in 1780. There was great animosity between the two secessionist churches in the latter part of the 18th century, but they reunited in 1820. However in Hawick they continued to preach in separate churches (although the congregations would attend the other when a minister was away). The names ‘Burgher’ and ‘Anti-Burgher’ continued to be used for the 2 congregations for many decades afterwards, being synonymous with ‘East-End’ and ‘West-End’. There was also a Burgher congregation in Lilliesleaf.

Burgh Hill (bu-ru-hil) n. hill rising to 314 m (1,003 ft) near Dod farm, site of a stone circle, as well as a hill-fort with a large standing stone in its interior, other earthworks on the eastern side by the road and an extensive settlement on its southern slopes by the Allan Water. The fort is situated on the south-west summit; it measures about 100 m by 30 m, and has 2 massive stony ramparts, with quarries and ditches. The standing stone does not appear to be related to the hill-fort, although it is inside it. A smaller settlement occupies the north-east half of the hill-fort’s interior, containing a hut-circle and 2 other possible hut platforms. The stone circle is located on a shelf near the summit, and is egg-shaped. It has about 25 stones, with 13 still standing, in a ring measuring 16.5 x 13.4 m. One stone stood at least 1.5 m tall. The settlement to the east lies on the opposite side of the road from Dobburn Filter Cottage, straddling an unnamed sike. It extends about 140 m by 110 m and is a complex collection of enclosures, banks, ditches and mounds. Excavations in the early 1980s turned up numerous objects showing occupation from Iron Age to the post-medieval period, and foundations were found for several round-houses, with multiple rebuilding phases. The settlement complex to the south lies on the east bank of the Allan Water, and covers about 120 m by 105 m, defined by 2 banks and a ditch, best preserved on the north-west side. An oval enclosure inside suggests multiple phases of occupation, but it is hard to make out details because of agricultural development, erosion from the river and the now marshy ground. A drainage ditch cut in 1985 resulted in an archaeological excavation (note the area is also known as ‘Brugh’ and pronounced bruf).

the Burgh Improvement Act (thu-bur-im-proov-min'-awkst) n. another name for the Police Act of 1861.

the Burgh Members’ Plate (thu-bu-meem-burz-pla”) n. race ran on the Friday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

burgh o barony (bu-ru-o-baw-ri-nee) n. a burgh that was granted its charter by a nobleman rather than the crown (cf. Royal Burgh) – Hawick achieved this status at least by 15th June 1511, probably early in the 15th century.

Burgh Officer (bu-ru-o-fee-sur) n. in former times an employee of the Town, responsible for delivering official messages, as well as assisting the Sheriff Officer in maintaining law and order. It appears to have long been traditional that there are 2 such men. They would sometimes act as Sheriff Officers themselves, assisting in Jedburgh and being the equivalent of the local police force. Duties sometimes also included being drummer, bellman or lamplighter, and the title is often synonymous with ‘Halberdier’. They would announce deaths, as well as other events, such as the killing of a bullock. Formerly they had blue-grey coats with mulberry trim and brass buttons, replaced later with the familiar brown and yellow (for reasons that are unknown, with James Wilson in 1858 berating whoever was responsible for losing the traditional colours). Now this is an honorary position during the Common Riding. One of them delivers the official letter to the Cornet-Elect each year, receives a new shilling (the actual allowance given in the early 19th century) in return and transmits the acknowledgement back to the Provost’s Council. In earlier times they also had official duties to perform for the Kirk Session, e.g. assisting during Communion days. It also seems that in early times each of the 2 Officers was assigned to a specific Bailie. There are records of Burgh Officers going back to the early 17th century. In 1702 the ‘town’s officer, piper, and drummer’ were each allowed £6 Scots for new coats, showing that at this time they were separate positions. In order to save money (because of the debt from Teviot Brig) in 1747 the Council agreed that the officers should only have ‘coarse home-made cloth coats, and coarse hats’, costing no more than 3 half-crowns and 14 pence, respectively. In 1753 the 2 officers were allowed an annual salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. In 1806 the Officers were prohibited from being present at the Council meetings. The post of Burgh Officer (for one of the 2 Halberdiers) remained officially within the Council until 1996, with the last 3 men being Robert Naylor, Bill Allan and George Milligan (see also Halberdiers).

the Burgh of Hawick (thu-bu-rov-hlk) n. name given to one of the aircraft in the British Caledonian fleet in 1971. It was a BAC 1–11 type 201 AC, registration G–ASJH. It was later operated in the U.S.A., broken up at Southend, used to film an aircraft crash, and the hull possibly now resides at St. Leonard’s, Bournemouth.

Burgh Records (bu-ru-re-kōrdz) n. official records of the Town. The earliest existing Town Book begins on 1st October 1638 and is called ‘The Court Book of the Towne & Burghe of Hawick’. It was carried on by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681, with many other books coming later. Additionally there were books of Town expenditures kept by the Burgh Treasurer. Although the early records are scanty, the entries are full of historical colour, and become more comprehensive as time progresses. The records from before 1638 were probably lost through the incursions of ‘Englishmen and thieves’. These books are still stored in the Town Hall. Excerpts from the books make up a large part of James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and are also included in his ‘Memories of Hawick’ (1858), as well as in a series of early articles by David McBurnie Watson in the Archaeological Society Transactions and in Craig & Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898).

the Burgh Seal (thu-bu-ru-seel) n. the official seal of Hawick, being the precursor of the town Coat of Arms. The design was carried out by John Sanderson, lapidary of Edinburgh, in 1817, in consultation with John Oliver, Town Clerk. It is composed of an open bible, with 1514 flag on the left and crowned heart on the right, with a lighted lamp over all on a black background.

This was originally surrounded by a garland bearing the words ‘Sigillum Burgi de Hawick’ (Burgh Seal of Hawick), and surmounted by a castellated crest. Larger and smaller versions were made, both engraved onto pieces of jasper from Robert’s Linn. Several later variations were used, until the design was formally entered in the Public Register of Arms and Bearings in 1929. Note that a printing error in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (copied in the Marquis of Bute’s 1850 catalogue of seals) attributed part of Queen Mary’s seal to Hawick’s; this was corrected by Craig & Laing. In 1957 a scroll with the slogan ‘Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin’ was added. After Reorganisation Hawick lost its Burgh status and in 1977 the crest was changed to a coronet depicting leaves and pine cones, appropriate for use by a Community Council.

Burgh Surveyor (bu-ru-sur-vār) n. position under the old Town Council, being a person with engineering qualifications in charge of roads, sewage, etc. The last such official was George Bee. In earlier times there was someone appointed to be surveyor of weights and measures at the markets, the first such appointment being in 1774.

the Burgh Yaird (thu-bu-ru-yārd) n. workshops and storage yards of various council departments, situated between the western end of Commercial Road and the river. The first of the buildings was erected in 1885.

Burgon (bur-gin) n. Alex (1930–2020) born near Berwick, son of blacksmith James. He moved to Newmill with his parents in 1947 and helped his father at the smithy. He joined the K.O.S.B. in 1953 as part of National Service, leaving as Lance-Corporal. He shod many horses in the Borders and also made trailers and horse boxes. In 1973 he moved the business to Loch Park and the firm did lots of work for Swinton the builders, as well as fixing snowploughs and grass-cutters. His skill with metal was recognised when he was asked by the Agricultural Training Board to run a welding course. He had the house ‘Anvilla’ built on Wellogate Brae in the mid-1970s. He retired in 1990 and sold his business, but devoted much of his time to restoring vintage cars. He was also known as a keen Mason, writing a history of Lodge 111 in 1994. He followed the Cornet, who was a member of the Probus Club and was an Elder at Teviothead Church. He was also a popular speaker at Burns Nights and lecturer on the subject of Gallipoli (where his father had served). He married Margaret Millar in 1953 and had 3 children, Mary, Sandy and Evelyn.

buriet (bi-ree’) pp. buried – ‘I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it’s faisable near, burler (bur-lur) n. occupation in the tweed industry, similar to a specker in knitwear, a person who removes small imperfections in a garment. ‘Burling irons’ are essentially large tweezers.
I'd never ken o' a meenit's peace When I heard them roar and cheer' [DH].

burleyman (bur-lee-mun) n., arch. official of a town charged with enforcing the laws, another name for a Burgh officer or specially appointed Burgess. The word was formerly used in Hawick to refer to a number of Burgesses who were selected by the Magistrates to ride the marches, and is still used in Selkirk’s Common Riding – ‘John Hardie, malmant, and John Tudhope, wright, two ordinary sworne burleymen of the said town and brughe’ [BR1688], ‘May 4. Spent in Mr Weir’s, in establishing 6 burlemen for the town, . . . 0 1 6’ [BR1747], ‘The Marches shall be rode as usual, and the Burleymen to be appointed and to dine as usual’ [BR1809], ‘Burley-men and haberdiers, and ‘Drums i’ the Walligate Pipes i the air . . .’ [DH] (from ‘burgh law-man’).

the Burleymen (thu-bur-lee-min) n., pl., arch. 12 men formerly appointed by the Council to accompany the Bailies in riding the marches. After the Division of the Common in 1777 the appointment became a courtesy one. From the end of the 18th century they rode the marches with only the Junior Bailie, accompanied by the Burgh Officers and 4 men carrying the ‘slaughtier spades’. They were last appointed in 1854, and after 1856 attendance of the Burleymen and Magistrates at the riding of the marches was discontinued.

Burlington Hoose (bur-lin-tin-hoos) n. name sometimes used for 25 North Bridge Street, formerly G. Allen Robinson’s photographic studio. It was later the location of photographer William Scott Andison Ingles and then Redmayne the tailor.

burn (burn) n. a stream, brook – ‘Ah, Tam! Gi’e me a Border burn . . .’ [JBS], ‘Gie me the bonny broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins, Wi’ plash and spurt and peaceful purl, And mony outs and ins’ [JEDM], ‘. . . bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa’ [ECS], ‘. . . The Rhine, the Thames, the Amazon; of these all children learn But, how many know the magic of a lively Border burn?’ [TD], ‘Oh, ee’re juist ma little troot i the burn’ [DH], ‘. . . when the licht never fades beyond the under-water twilicht o a clear-rinnin burn’ [DH] (from Old English).

Burn (burn) n. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Synton in 1786, when she was working for Charles Riddell. Elspeth (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She is probably the ‘Elizabeth Burne, widow of Wm. Burnfield, chirurgeon’ listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4; it is unclear who her husband might have been, but his surname was probably ‘Bruntfield’. James (16th/17th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592, 1619 and 1622 (although it is possible this was his son). He is probably also the Bailie of Hawick (along with Robert Scott of ‘Aulttown’) who was involved with the years long dispute with Douglas of Druimnairrig over a bond of 1601. Bailie James ‘younger’ (17th C.) probably the son of the above. He was on the ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies in 1638 and was also mentioned the following year when he was one of 2 Hawick men who gathered money for the soldiers in the town. He was also probably the Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He was Bailie in 1640/1, along with James Scott. In 1641 (while he was Bailie) he was put in the stocks for attacking Margaret Ross, ‘Nurse’ and cutting her forehead, apparently because he believed her to be a witch! He accused her of being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was probably the same James who was Bailie in 1648/9. He is probably the James who was a Bailie in the 1650s and 60s and who was a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Earl of Queensberry in 1672. He is probably the James who witnessed bap- tisms in Hawick in 1671 for Robert Wright, and in 1673 for Robert Dickson and Patrick Scoon. He may be the ‘Burn’ (no forename given) who was Magistrate in 1675 when he was among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon (however, this could be the next generation). He may be the James who married Marion Scott, and whose children born in Hawick included Margaret (b.1643), Bessie (b.1644), Isobel (b.1647), Walter (b.1649), Marion (b.1650) and Marion (again, b.1652). It is possible he is also the James, married to Christian Scott, whose children included Margaret (b.1637) and Elspeth (b.1639). Bailie James (17th/18th C.) glove and Bailie in Hawick. He was recorded being Bailie several times in the 1710s and 1720s, specifically in 1713 and 1720. He was probably father of the next James.
He was probably the ‘Burne’ who was Bailie at the 1709 Common Riding and was Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the New Grammar School. He witnessed baptisms for fellow glover James Scott in 1702, for gardener James Falsyde in 1704, and with fellow glover William Brunfied for another glover, Alexander Hislop, in 1705. He was recorded as Bailie in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Walter Gledstains, called ‘Walter Alison’ for wigmaker John Scott, for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for for glover James Scott, in 1712 for merchant Michael Scott, in 1713 for Town Herd Adam Hobkirk, in 1715 for carrier Walter Deans, and in 1718 for Robert Deans. He may be the same Bailie Burn who, in 1716, was rebuked for being at a late night drunken brawl at the house of Thomas Huggan, the rebuke being particularly sharp because he was both a Magistrate and an Elder! He was probably the ‘Bilife Burne’ recorded in 1723 when he was asked by the COUNcil to ‘take instruments against Stobes’ (probably for encroachments on the Common). He may have been the only surviving son of Robert and Marion Burn, who inherited the lands of Croft Angry in 1728 and sold them to Walter Scott (of the Crumhaugh branch). In 1728 he gave a tenement and other lands in Hawick to Ann, Duchess of Buccleuch, in ‘liferent’. He was also recorded as a skinner in Hawick, mentioned in 1743 as being recently Bailie; in that year he granted a disposition to Robert Scott, youngest son and heir of Walter Scott, uncle of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, for the lands of ‘Croftangry’. He is also recorded in Edinburgh marriage records, when his daughters Beatrix married James Wilson in 1748 and Christian married Gilbert Gardner in 1751. He may also be the Bailie Burn recorded in 1734 as asking the Chamberlain (Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill) about why he removed the Bailies’ seat in the Kirk. He married Christian Gledstains in Hawick in 1700. Their children included: Robert (b.1701); Francis (b.1703); Marie (b.1705); James (b.1706); Beatrix (b.1708); Alexander (b.1710); Francis (again, b.1712); Andrew (b.1713); Christian (b.1715); John (b.1717); Walter (b.1721); and James (again, b.1723). The witnesses in 1708 were weaver David Miller and gardener James Falsyde and in 1712 were Bailie Robert Ruecastle and wright Francis Gledstains.
Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically her ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop and a half’. Her name was recorded as ‘Burnes’. John (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere who pledged their behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as ‘mekle John Burn in Branxholm’, so he was presumably a tenant at Branxholme who was large in some way. Marion (b.1652) daughter of James and Marion Scott.
She married Robert in 1678. Their son Alexander was born in Hawick in 1680 and Robert in 1685. In 1728 the lands of Croft Angry were re-granted to her only surviving son, James. She could be the Marion who payed for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the ‘Maryon Burne, widow’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Martin (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. He was recorded as ‘Martyne Burne in Swenesteidis’, which is probably Swinstead. Mungo (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may have served as factor or similar. Nichol (17th C.) said to have been one of the last of the wandering minstrels of the Borders. In ‘The Roxburghe Ballads’, reprinting broadsheets of the 1600s, published in 1847, the ballad called ‘Leader Haughs and Yarrow’ is attributed to ‘Burne the Violer’. His name is usually written ‘Nicol Burne’, although there is no documentary evidence of who he was and when exactly he lived. It is possible that his name is confounded with the Scottish theologian of the 16th century. It is said that in his old age he found shelter with the Scotts of Thirlestane (or perhaps the Maitlands of the other Thirlestane).
Robert (17th C.) witness for a baptism for Rev.
Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in 1680. Thomas (16th C.) owner of 11/2 participates of land on the south side of the public street according to Ha-wick’s 1537 Charter. Walter (d.bef. 1793) gardener in Hawick. His daughter Elizabeth mar-rried John Nourse in Edinburgh in 1793, and his daughter Janet married David Jackson there in 1794. He may be the Walter recorded in 1770 when ‘Mr Glaidstains’ was paid ‘for toul at Walter Burns’ port’. He may have been the Walter, son of James, who was born in Hawick in 1721. Possibly he was the Walter who married Janet Kerr in Wilton in 1752 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included Mary (b.1757), James (b.1759), Janet (b.1761) and Elizabeth (b.1763).
He was probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism (along with Archibald Henderson) for John Scott in 1765. William (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when a group of men, led by John Sinclair, came in the King’s will for attempting to steal a trove of coins found at Minto Kirk. Although his name is listed, it is crossed out. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Rev. William (1744/5–1826) also referred to as ‘Burns’, he was born in Northumberland, although the details are unknown. It is said that his parents carried him out to the fields for safety and rocked him there in his cradle while the Highlanders came past in 1745. He graduated in Arts and qualified as a minister of the Episcopal Church. In his early days he had the support of Henry Percy, Duke of Northumberland. He was for a while minister of a Church of England congregation and was later made minister of Pottergate Presbyterian Church, Alnwick in 1769. He was presented to Minto Parish (as successor to Thomas Somerville) by Sir Gilbert Elliot in late 1773, was admitted there the following year, and remained for the rest of his life. A new manse was built for him in 1773. He became a Burgess of Jedburgh in 1778. He obtained a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1786. There is a letter from him in the Walter Mason collection from 1791. He paid the horse tax in Minto Parish in 1785–88. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Margaret Ogle in 1771, and she died in 1836. Their children were: Anne Lockhart (b.1772); George Percy (b.1773), who died in Dominica; Margaret (b.1775); Isabella (b.1776), who married William Leyden from Denholm; Anna Maria (b.1778), who married Archibald Elliot and lived in Jedburgh; John, who died young; John (again, b.1781); and Robert (b.1783). He wrote a description of Minto Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account, but nothing else survives that he wrote while at Minto. He was said to be 6 feet 5 inches tall and broad-shouldered, and never missed a sermon through ill-health until 2 weeks before his death. He was buried in Minto Churchyard (formerly written ‘Burne’; see also Burns).

burnbrae (burn-bra) n. slope down which a stream flows – ‘The hames that sent the reek ascent The burn-brae heughs aboon’ [HSR].

Burnbrae (burn-brā) n. former farm between the Rule and Jed valleys, lying to the west of Ashtrees (marked ‘Burntbrae’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, with ‘Burnkinfoord’ marked just to the south-east).

Burne see Burn
Burnet (bur-nt) n. Alexander (1615–84) son of a minister in Lauder, he became chaplain to John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair. He fled to England after the National Covenant, then to Europe, returning to Scotland after the Restoration. He became Bishop of Aberdeen in 1663 and Archbishop of Glasgow in the following year. As supreme ecclesiastical, he held superiority over local lands. In 1664 he gave a charter of confirmation to William Bennet for the lands of Barnhills. He had a hard-line policy against non-conformity and was forced to resign as Archbishop in 1669. He moved again to England, but was reappointed to the Glasgow archbishopric in 1674. He is probably the ‘Bishop of glaskow’ who paid tax on land valued at £18 in Ashkirk Parish in 1678. He left again in 1678 to become Archbishop of St. Andrews, where he was buried. Rev. Alexander (b.1653) son of Edinburgh advocate Robert and Katherine Pearson, he was ordained minister of Crossmichael in about 1672. He was presented to Kirkton in late 1683, installed as minister in early 1684, but was translated to the Second Charge of the Canongate in 1685. He became minister of the first charge at Canongate 2 years later, but was deprived in 1689 for refusing to relinquish Episcopacy. He married Elizabeth Kirk, who died in 1696 and is buried in Greyfriars Kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Martin and their children included Walter (b.1738) and John (b.1744). The witnesses in 1738 were weaver John Scott and Andrew Turnbull. Alexander (1791–1876) born at Crosslee in Selkirkshire, son of Andrew and Isabel Nichol, he was a shepherd at Penchrise. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he was living with his daughters Helen and Jane. In 1861 there were 8 railway labourers also staying at the farm. He firstly married Elizabeth Cranston, who died in 1841. Their children included: Andrew (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Jane (b.1827); Samuel S. (b.1839); and Elspeth (b.1841). He secondly married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1850), William (b.1852), James (b.1855) and Betsy (b.1858). He died at Galt in Ontario, Canada. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1777. He could be the same Andrew ‘Birinet’ who in 1774 witnessed baptisms in Hawick for William Turnbull and for Thomas Turnbull. Andrew (b.1829/30) born in Traquair, he... was a local shepherd. In 1851 he was a shepherd living in the home of Walter Scott, farmer at Wilton burn, with his future wife Helen Johnstone being a kitchen-maid there. He was shepherd at Teinsidebrae in 1861, and probably at Adderstonelee afterwards. In 1901 he was a retired shepherd living at Adderstone Cottage. In 1851 in Wilton Parish he married Helen Johnstone, who was from Cavers Parish. Their children included: Andrew: John (b.1857), who was a shepherd at Newton near Stobs; Robert Mitchell (b.1859); James (b.1862); Helen (b.1864); Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); and Thomas (again, b.1872). His wife was probably one of the '5 Johnstone sisters' whose 1910 photograph is in the Museum. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Wheathop' in 1701, when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Shiel (probably the minister of Robertson). His name appears to be 'Burnit' and he was probably tenant in Whithope in the Borthwick valley. James (d.1833) recorded as owner of a horse at Bellendean in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the horse tax there in the same year. He was joint tenant of Bellendean along with his son Robert from the 1820s until his death. James (19th C.) listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He must have been related to Robert, who was also listed. James ‘Jim’ (b.1856) son of shoemaker William. Like his younger brothers William and Robert, he played rugby for Hawick. He died in Wyoming. James (19th/20th C.) lived at Langsyde in Hawick. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. John (15th C.) resident of Tushielaw, recorded on the Justice- aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was allowed to compone for pillaging Montbenger with the Scotts of Ewesdale, and resetting the ‘traitor of Leven’ and stealing sheep from William Hall in Tushielaw. His surety was Adam Scott of Anneshope. John (b.1857) born in Wilton Parish, son of Andrew and Helen Johnstone. In 1901 he was shepherd at Newton near Stobs. He appears to have married Euphemia McLean and their children included: Andrew (b.1881); Samuel (b.c.1884); Helen (b.c.1885); John (b.c.1888); and James (1891–1916), killed in action in France. He probably then married Jessie, daughter of blacksmith Robbie Davidson and had at least one other child, Jessie (b.1900), whose early stories about her family were transcribed. Mr. ?? (19th C.) tenant farmer at Pilmuir in the mid-to-late 1800s, when it was the location for the ‘Curds and Whey’ at the Common Riding. Robert (18th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1763 he married Elizabeth Scott, who was from Hawick. Robert (b.1790) shoe and boot-maker of the Howegate, son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. Thomas, also a shoemaker, was thus his brother. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is at about 1 Howegate in 1841 and 1851, along with William, his nephew. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with William. In 1861 he is recorded as a farmer, unmarried, living with his nephew William. Robert (b.c.1805) son of James, he was farmer at Bellendean like his father before him. He was there in 1841, in 1851 was listed as farmer of 1716 acres, employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was farming 1000 acres and employing 3 labourers. He married Janet (or ‘Jessy’ Paterson) in 1830. Their children included James (b.1831), Margaret (b.1832), Francis (b.1834), Isabella (b.1836), Helen (b.1836), Robert (b.1840), Ann (b.1842) and George (b.1846). Robert (b.1860) son of William and Joan Smith. He was a prominent rugby forward. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from about 1882 and was Captain in 1887. He represented Britain in the side that toured Australia and New Zealand (for about 6 months!) for the first time in 1888. The team apparently also played some ‘Australian Rules’ games to help cover their costs. He later settled in Australia. Thomas (18th C.) see Thomas Birnie. Thomas (b.1784) son of William and Wilhelmina Ogilvie. He was a shoemaker on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Alison Storie. In 1841 he was on the Kirk Wynd, along with wife Alison and children William (who also became a shoemaker), Alexander, Mina and Mary. Robert, who was also a shoemaker on the Howegate, was probably his brother. The death of his infant son is recorded in 1822. William (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Wilhelmina Ogilvie in 1784 and their children included: Thomas (b.1784); Alexander (b.1786); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1788); Robert (b.1790); Mary (b.1793); and James (b.1795). His wife ‘Menie’ died in 1798. William (d.1795) saddler in Hawick, whose death is registered. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1791 he married Helen Ward, who was from Selkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the William, married to Janet Hardie, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Isabel (b.1766); and John (b.1768). The witnesses in 1766 were mason Andrew Turnbull and Alexander Burnyan. William (b.1823/4) shoemaker on the Howegate, cousin of William who was shoemaker at the Kirkwynd. He is recorded with his shoemaker uncle Robert on the Howegate in 1841 and 1851. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate, along with Robert. He also farmed at Pilnui. James Haining states that his shop was at 5 Howegate. However, in 1861 he was at 18 Howegate with wife Joan and children Margaret R., Jane, James and Robert. He married Helen Joan, daughter of blacksmith James Smith. Their children included: Margaret Kennedy (b.1852); Jane Gardiner (b.1854); Jessie Oliver (b.1856), who probably died young; James ‘Jim’ (b.1858), who died in Wyoming; Robert (b.1860), rugby forward, who settled in Australia; William Hewitson (b.1862), rugby back, who moved to Lauder; Alexander Smith (b.1864); and John Smith (b.1868). His sons Jim, Robert and William were known as rugby players in Hawick. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William (1828–1916) son of Thomas and Alison Storie. He was a a shoemaker, last surviving member of the ‘eternal’ council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgesses. He was cousin of another William, who was shoemaker on the Howegate. His premises at the top of the Kirkwynd (No. 2) were formerly where the Episcopal meeting house had been in the 18th century. He was later at 30 Drumlanrig Square.

His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Ann, Alison and Mina. Note that he is easy to confuse with the other shoemaker William (probably his cousin). One of them donated at least one coin to the Museum. William Hewitson ‘Billy’ (b.1862) son of William and Joan Smith. He played as a half-back for Hawick R.F.C. in the late 19th century. He also represented Britain on their 1888 Australia tour, along with his brother Robert and ‘Lal’ Laing. He later kept the Temperance Hotel in Lauder (also written ‘Burnett’; note that this may have been locally pronounced Birnie).

the Burnets (thu-bur-netz) n. well-known shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries. Their shop was on the Howegate. They regularly attended Border fairs and markets. William was about the last of the line.

Burnfit (burn-fi) n. Burnfoot, area in the northeast part of Hawick, which was a former farm, developed as a housing estate after the War. The land there has a long history, being traceable back to the 15th century. The farm of Burnfoot, and part of Burnhead, was purchased in 1947, increasing the area of the Town by about 50%. It now houses around 1300 families, or about a quarter of the town’s population, being the largest municipal housing undertaking in the Scottish Borders, but also one of the most deprived areas. The estate contains a primary school and community centre, a cluster of shops, two churches and also an industrial estate at its eastern extremity. Burnfoot is its own ward for local council elections, and also has a separate Community Council. The former farm of Burnfoot, was named for being situated close to the foot of the Boonraw burn. In the late 1400s the Scott Lairds were referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’, this being the earlier name for the area (‘Over Newhall’ being Burnhead). The first record of the lands being granted to the Scots is in 1484, when they were part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear when the farm there was established, and who owned it in earlier times. Adam Scott owned the lands in 1643 when they were valued at £312. They also had the same value in 1663 and 1678. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690, when they transferred to Wilton, and they were still contained within the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. Robert Thomson and Robert Deans were living there in 1697. Adam Scott of Burnfoot and Gavin Plummer sold the land to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. James Blaikie was there in 1721, Walter Scott in 1736 and James Murray in 1747–51. The 2 halves of Burnfoot were each valued at £156 in 1788 and 1811. There were Turnbuls there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Note that there is an entirely unrelated Burnfoot farm not far away in the Ale valley (sometimes called Burnfoot-on-Ale to distinguish it), another out along the Borthwick (also known as Borthwickbrae Burnfoot), a former one nearer to Roberton (also known as Roberton Burnfoot), and one more north of Langholm, as well as many Burnfoots elsewhere. Our local one was sometimes formerly referred to as ‘Burnfoot on Teviot’ to distinguish it – ‘...as dowie I gang for the Burnfit bus’ [DH], ‘By Burnfoot, yes, Burnfoot, for that’s where I belong It’s where I live ...and where I’ll die, it’s why I sing this song It has no history of its own, no tales of yesteryear ...But half the folk in Hawick live there, so kindly lend an ear ...’ [NM] (the origin of the name is simply the foot of the stream; it is ‘Burnefute’ in 1550, 1561, 1585 and 1609, ‘Burnfute’ in 1551, ‘Birnfutt’ in 1553/4, ‘Burnift’ in 1643, ‘Burnfoott’ in 1663 and ‘Brunfoot’ in 1697; it is marked ‘Burnfoot’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with another ‘Burnfoote’ marked near to Hassendean, which is probably an error).
Burnfit

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. Burnfoot, farm on the south side of the Ale valley, just where the Woo Burn joins. It was a seat of the Scotts of Burnfoot in the late 16th century and through the 17th. Residents recorded there in 1581 were David Shortreed, Walter Shortreed, John Dunlop and William Winthrop. Walter Scott of Burnfoot was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £400. Robert Scott of Burnfoot paid tax on the same value in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. In 1694 the Laird paid tax for 3 hearths there and there were also 3 other tenants listed (Andrew Mark, Robert Mark and Jean Brown). James Hill was tenant in 1697 and James Henderson was her in 1698. In the 18th century it was owned by the Laings, Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch. Adam Armstrong was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded this way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when valued at £400. In the 1830s it was the property of Allan Elliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. Adam Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. It is occasionally referred to as ‘Burnfoot on Ale’ to distinguish it from other Burnfoots, especially the area in Wilton Parish only about 4 miles away – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Robertson, with Harden bold and Crouse’ [WSB] (probably the ‘Burnefute’ of 1557, ‘Burnfyt’ in 1579, ‘Burnefuyt’ in 1579/80 and ‘Burnfit’ in 1638; it is marked ‘Burnfoote’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and a mill is also marked there). Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. see Hassendean Burnfit.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. name in use locally for Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. Burnfoot, farm in the Ewes valley, just east of Fiddletown Toll, on the back road to Hermitage. This was probably site of the tower of ‘Archie of Whitehaughe’ (probably an Armstrong), recorded in 1590. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1105 acres, bounded by Blackhall, Eweslees, Linhope and Carewoodrig. Mrs. Little was there in 1797. Alexander Pott was there in 1841.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. farm in Eskdale. The estate was given to Rev. Robert Malcolm to supplement the meagre stipend when he became minister at Ewes Kirk. The cottage was extended by his son George to accommodate his family of 17! Most of the present house dates from the 1850s to 1880s. It was the home of the ‘4 Knights of Eskdale’, sons of George. The house later fell on rough times, with Mary Palmer Douglas (nee Malcolm) being owner until her death in 1949 and the Palmer-Douglas’s selling it in 1962. It has since been renovated and changed hands several times.

Burnfit (burn-fi’) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, near the foot of the Tinnis Burn. In 1541 it is listed as ‘Burnfute’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was valued at 2 merks and tenanted by Simon Forester. It is probably the ‘burnfoot’ in Castleton Parish listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694, with Archibald ‘Arckstrong’ as tenant, and Francis Elliot as another householder there (it is ‘Tinnisburnfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Burnfit Carnival (burn-fi’-kar-ni-vul) n. annual festivities organised in the Burnfoot housing estate since 1969. It was started by the Burnfoot Residents Association, and later run by the Community Council. The festival includes a procession, headed by a Carnival Cornet and Carnival Queen. The main area used now is the site of the former primary school buildings.

Burnfit Cottage (burn-fi’-ko’-eej) n. former cottage near the farm of Burnfoot the Ewes valley. James Scott and family were there in 1841.

Burnfit Cottages (burn-fi’-ko’-ee-jeez) n. small group of houses built in 1967 on the site of former railway cottages at the eastern extremity of Burnfoot, near where the road to Hornshole crosses the Boorow Burn.

Burnfit Cutting (burn-fi’-ku’-in) n. cutting through the rock near Burnfoot, to allow the A7 to pass to the west of the Hillend Plantation. This is one of the best places in the vicinity of Hawick to see the folding of the underlying Silurian strata.

Burnfit Haugh (burn-fi’-hauj) n. flat or low area down Mansfield, further down than the area formerly referred to as ‘Mansfield Park’, it was largely developed for sewage and gas works in the latter part of the 19th century. Part of the land was purchased by the Burgh from Wilton Church in the late 1870s and the rest owned by the Duke of Buccleuch until the early 20th century.
Burnfoot Kirk (burn-ﬁ-kirk) n. Burnfoot Church, built in 1955 by the Church of Scotland National Extension Committee to serve the new council estate. The site chosen is the highest point in the scheme. The church was designed by Alison & Hobkirk. A new Parish of the Church of Scotland was formed out of part of Wilton, and the original building was a temporary hut on Fairhurst Drive. A 50th anniversary booklet was published in 2001. The congregation was linked with Wilton in 2004. The church runs Girls’ and Boys’ Brigade units. J.W. Duncan was minister until 1966, succeeded by Donald MacKay.

Burnfoot Manse (burn-ﬁ-mawns) n. former manse at 29 Wilton Hill.

Burnfoot Mill (burn-ﬁ-mil) n. former corn-mill in Burnfoot, existing in the 17th and 18th centuries and also sometimes called ‘Wester Burnfoot Mill’. It was situated near the foot of the Boonraw Burn, and on the opposite side of the Teviot from Haughhead. Robert Roger was there in 1612. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the early 18th century. The Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there from at least 1722 until about 1750 was James Scott, also miller at Crawhill and later miller at Hawick Mill. In 1748 the Duke of Buccleuch arranged for the exchange of a part of his ‘Trinity lands’ with a piece of Mansfield that he wanted for carrying water to his mill, presumably referring to a mill lade. Thomas Deans was tenant of the mill and mill lands in the mid-18th century. Robert Liddell was living there in 1770. Farm workers Alexander Tait and Walter Brydon lived there in 1841. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with the mill lade and sluices indicated (it is ‘w: burnfoott milh’ in 1722).

Burnfoot Mill (burn-ﬁ-mil) n. probable corn-mill at Burnfoot on Ale. It is recorded in 1581 that Margaret Scott, widow of William of Burnfoot, resigned her liferent ‘of Scheilliswod with half the milm called Burnefuytmilne with pertinents’ in the Barony of Ashkirk, to her son William. Also in 1581 William Scott in Burnfoot gave half of the mill to his future wife Janet, daughter of William Scott in Huntly (it is ‘Burnefuyt Mylne’ in 1581).

Burnfoot Mill Haugh (burn-ﬁ-mil-hawch) n. former name for a meadow near Burnfoot Mill, essentially the same area as Burnfoot Haugh.

Burnfoot Road (burn-ﬁ-rød) n. Burnfoot Road, once a country lane leading towards Minto, it was realigned and houses built in 1949–58, forming one of the main roads of the Burnfoot housing scheme.

Burnfoot Roadhouse (burn-ﬁ-rød-hoo) n. public house on Burnfoot Road, often known simply as ‘the Roadhouse’. It opened in 1958 and became a central hub for social activity in the community. It was closed for several years, but reopened in 2015 as Burnfoot Community Hub.

Burnfoot Schuil (burn-ﬁ-skil) n. Burnfoot Primary School on Kenilworth Avenue, built 1952, and serving the neighbouring area. It was refurbished extensively in 1995. Recently it was renamed the Burnfoot New Community, and incorporates a community centre. Records for the period 1951–75 are in the National Archives.

Burnfittshiel (burn-ﬁ-sheel) n. Burnfootshiel, former farmstead just to the north-east of Shielswood Loch and south of Burnfoot-on-Ale.

Burnflat (burn-flaw) n. area around the meadow adjacent to the Smaile Burn, overlapping with Haggishaa, although perhaps a little further south. The name is specifically used to refer to the former group of houses along a lane reached from the northern end of the Golf Course, which was famous as the birthplace of ‘Old Mortality’; the houses consisted of a single row of low cottages. The piece of land so named was originally bounded by the Common, the Slitrig and the Smaile Burn. It was feued by Simon of Routledge (Hawick’s first known Burgess) in 1433 and sold to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448/9; it was said to extend as far as the Smaile Burn. The area marked the eastern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, and there is a historical sketch of it by Tom Scott in 1898. In 1627 it was ‘estimat to pay 4 bolls in stok, 1 in teynd’. It was described as a ‘one merk land’ in 1653 when granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill. At least some of it appears to have been part of Rev. Patrick Cunningham’s lands in the 1678 county valuation; by 1788 George Oliver is recorded as owner of that part at Burnflat valued at £40. James Hobkirk is recorded as a ‘easier coater to Walter Paterson’ (i.e. road-layer living in a cottage) there in 1708. Walter Paterson asked the Bailies and Council to mark the boundary between his lands there and the Common in 1713, and 17 stones were then set out. It was said to have been sold by William Paterson in 1753. Part of the land there was gained by Robert Oliver after the Division of the Common. George Oliver held the lands according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when they were valued at £40; John Oliver of Borthaugh held the lands in about 1874. Until the early 20th century the houses there were separated from those at the top of the Loan by about quarter of a mile of fields. These houses were incorporated into the Burgh boundaries in 1861, and the cottages can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (and others later). They fell into a dilapidated condition, some were demolished about 1939, the Paterson cottage being preserved, but also demolished following a fire in 1991. More recently there has been housing development to the west of Burnflat Brae, and a new development called Paterson Gardens in 2006. The area was also site of the worst Common Riding accident in 1919, when the brakes failed on a bus returning passengers from the Mair, killing 3 men on board and 2 boys who were walking past (also spelled ‘Burnflatt’ in older documents; the name occurs at least as early as 1433 and is ‘Burnflatt’ in 1713).

Burnflat Brae (burn-flaw’-brä) n. road running through the Burnflat area, being the continuation of Rosebank Road. The first house was built in 1856, with others following in 1865. The street was previously known as ‘Haggishaa Brae’, with the newer name adopted in 1868, although the former name is still used interchangeably. Further houses were built in the 1990s, when the Drive and Lane were also added.

Burnflat Drive (burn-flaw’-drīv) n. small development of houses to the west of Burnflat Brae, built in the 1990s.

Burnflat Lane (burn-flaw’-län) n. short street of housing off Burnflat Brae, lying to the north of Burnflat Drive, developed in the 1990s.

Burnfoot see Burnfit

Burnfoot (burn-foo’) n. house and farm about 4 miles up the Esk from Langholm, home of the Malcoms, including the famous Maj. Gen. Sir John Malcolm (1769–1833) for whom there is a memorial obelisk on Whita Hill. There are several other farms or settlements with the same name around Scotland.

the Burnford (thu-burn-förd) n. specific part of Burnflat where Hawick Common began, being next to the roadway at the bottom of the Village. This must have once been where the road to the Common crossed the Smaile Burn. The 1514 Club erected a cairn to mark the site in 1987, this being the boundary of the Common lying closest to the Town. The cairn was built from granite setts formerly used in the High Street – ‘…the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (formerly written ‘Burnfoord’).

burngate (burn-gä’) n., arch. a small watercourse – ‘To our right and left on either side of the hill, are two lovely burngates, down which rushes the mossy water … ’ [BM1904], ‘Great indeed have been the changes in this burngate’ [JB].

Burngrains (burn-gränz) n. steading on the Meikledale Burn, just above the farm of Meikledale, to the west of the A7 in Dumfriesshire. It was described as a 5-merk land in 1550, when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It was a home of a branch of the Elliots around 1600. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 1375 acres, bounded by Kirkton, Bush, lands owned by Sir William Johnstone, Stennieswater and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. It was occupied in 1841. Just to the north-east are the remains of a settlement on a terrace (it is ‘Burngranes’ in 1550, ‘Burneigranes’ and ‘Burgranes’ in 1608 and ‘Burnegrate’ in 1663; it is marked on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Burngrove (burn-gröv) n. area in Wilton that had previously been called ‘Crawhill’ and later became Bucklands. It was also referred to as Burngrove Park. John Turnbull was shepherd there in 1851. It is part of what was formerly known as Burnfoot or Nether Newhall. It is also the name of a house in Wilton Dean.

Burnham (burn-ham) n. Thomas (13th/14th C.) Sheriff of Lincolnshire. In 1292 he was appointed by Edward I as Keeper of Ettrick Forest. However, Alexander de Sinton is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirk (and probably also Keeper of the Forest) in 1293. He was also Constable of Jedburgh Castle according to a document in the period 1295–8 and was mentioned in a court case of the English army at Berwick in 1296. His name is usually written ‘de Burnham’.

Burn Haugh (burn-hawch) n. flat land around the area where the Dean Burn meets the Teviot in Denholm, i.e. the field on the left of the main road, between Honeyburn Burn and the Dean Burn.

burnheid (burn-heed) n. the area near the source of a stream.

Burnheid (burn-heed) n. Burnhead farm and surrounding area, comprising the land just north of Burnfoot, and deriving its name from the Boomraw Burn. A 16th century 3-storey peel tower is incorporated into the north-eastern end of the house. The first-floor barrel-vaulted rooms and second storey walls remain, with evidence of a parapet-walk on the northern gable; the original tower had one more level, and the roof is entirely modern. It measures about 9.5 m by 7 m. A large cupboard in the room on the upper floor was known as ‘the laird’s bedroom’. The construction was similar to that of Goldielands. The farm was for centuries in the hands of a branch of the Scots, descended from James of Kirkurd, who was second son of Sir Walter, the 6th Laird of Buccleuch. The lands were formerly called ‘Over Newhall’ and were granted to James by the superior of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton in 1484. Walter Scott ‘in le newhalburnhed’ was recorded in 1502. It is sometimes stated that an early owner was ‘Hobbie Elliot’, but this is confusion with the place of the same name in Liddesdale. The lands were valued at £156 in 1643 and in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (and listed under Hassendean Parish). William Scott of Clarilaw was owner in 1678, when the value was the same. The lands appear to have been possessed by the Scots of Burnfoot until 1692 when it became a separate Lairdship. The lands were in Hassendean Parish until they became part of Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid for 3 hearths for ‘Burnhead his hous’ in 1694, with the other householders (probably tenants) there at the time being Robert Scott and William Scott. Part of the area was also farmed by the Minister of Wilton. James Murray was a weaver there in 1709 and George Scott a shepherd. John Miller was recorded there in 1726, Archibald Scott in 1726–36, Adam Armstrong in 1728 and Patrick Black in 1751. The farm was still valued at £156 in 1788, when owned by William Scott (who is also recorded there in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). The lands passed from the Scots of Burnhead through the female line to the Watsons in 1815. The mottoes of the Scots of Burnhead are ‘In recto decus’ and ‘Nemo sibi nascitur’. Thomas Usher and William Young are recorded as farmers there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Adam Young was farmer there in 1841 and 1851 and William Scott in 1868. A painting exists showing what the tower looked like around the early 19th century. The farmhouse was added to the tower in 1858 – ‘When oo’ passed Burnheid and ower the Knowe by Galalaw me heart began tae loup, loup, loup and I could fain hae grutten’[JEDM] (it was ‘Burnheheid’ in 1579/80; a place of this name is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and also Pont’s 1590s manuscript, but close to Standhill, which may have been an error; there are many places of the same name in Dumfriesshire and elsewhere).

Burnheid (burn-heed) n. former lands of the Elliots, probably in Liddesdale and not the place of the same name near Hawick. It is unclear which Burn is referred to in the name, but it seems that the family of that designation were intimately related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. In 1581 Jock’s Willie Elliot was released from ward for the ‘gang of Bernheidis’, with Hob Elliot (brother of Gavin’s Jock of Ramsiegill) remaining as pledge for the ‘haill gang of the Burnheidis’. In a letter of 1583 written by the English wardens the branch called ‘the Borneheedes’ is listed as Jock of Ramsiegill, ‘Curst Hobbe’, Adam ‘Condus’, Archie of the Hill, Jock of the Hill and Jock ‘Halfe loges’. The earliest known Laird was ‘Hobbie Elliot’, who was accused of engaging in a foray in 1584, with ‘Bramche’ of the Burnhead, complaining of a raid on his lands by the English perhaps a few years later. He was ‘Robin Elliot the laird of Borneheades’ in 1589 and may be the same man as ‘Ill Hob’, who was a son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. ‘Gawins Jok’ was listed (along with ‘Ade Cowdais’) under that heading in Monipen-nie’s c.1594 list of Border chiefs (it is ‘Burnheedes’ in 1590).

Burnheid Road (burn-heed-röd) n. Burnhead Road, the furthest part of Burnfoot, with houses built 1953–60, and named after the adjacent farm.

Burnheid Sike (burn-heed-sik) n. Burnhead Sike, small stream to the south-east of Wolfelee Hill, which runs roughly south to join the Wolfelee Burn. Near the head of the stream there was a ditch that ran north-east towards the head of the Spar Sike, being crossed by part of the Wheel Causeway. It was probably a land boundary, but has been destroyed by forestry planting. There are also sheepfolds and enclosures in the area.

Burnheid Toor (burn-heed-toor) n. Burnhead Tower, small 16th century fortified house, incorporated within the modern farmhouse at Burnhead. In lay-out and construction it is similar to Goldielands Tower. It is a grade B listed building.

Burnhouse (burn-hoos) n. Burnhouse, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in c.1376 as ‘Burne-house’, with a value of 3 shillings and 4 pence. In 1541 it was ‘Burnehous’ (and separately ‘Burnhous’ along with ‘Gilschaw’), and vacant at that time.

burnie (bur-nee) n., poet. a small stream – ‘Deep in the glen, a burnie winds its way, Where saughgs and osiers mirk the face o’ day’ [CPM], ‘I wand’er’d down the burnie side, Until my feet were wet wi’ dew’ [JTe], ‘...And its burnies rinnin’ free Is the fairest spot o’ a’ [TK], ‘...The soond o’ the wee burnie’s wimple’ [WS], ‘How oft I walk where Burnies rin, where darting trouts jouk out and in’ [JCa], ‘There’s the little burnie sighin’ By the cosie bracken bed...’ [JT].

Burnkinford (burn-kin-ford) n. former farmstead in Abbotrule Parish, also known as Bairnkine. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map, close to the modern Ruletownhead. It was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with parts of Ruletownhead and ‘Bossithill’, when owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and split between Southdean and Hobkirk Parish; the lands had previously been owned by George Elliot, with a total value of about £224.

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. farm just south of Saughtree (not to be confused with the other farm of the same name, which lies much further south in Castleton Parish). This may be the farm where ‘Will Elliot of the Burnmouthis’ resided in 1563/4, when he was accused of crimes against an Englishman. 5 sheep of John Nixon’s were stolen from there about 1624. It was one of the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. It is probably the Burnmouth where Robert Young lived in 1694 and where James Hall lived in 1659. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it appears to be combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Howden. The farmhouse seems to be in the same place as the modern one and the combined farm covered 881 acres, bounded by Thordrishesope, Larriston, Riccarton, Pinglehole and Saughtree, with a small part on the north side of the Liddell. George Elliot was there in 1748. It is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot paid tax for 13 windows in 1748. John Elliot was farmer there in 1851 and 1861 and there were 8 huts nearby housing railway workers at that time. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ford instead of the current bridge over the Liddel, as well as stepping stones. There was once a tower there according to Pont and Blaeu (marked ‘Bournemouln’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Upper Burnmouth on Stobie’s 1770 map; it was ‘Burnemouth’ in 1624 and 1662).

Burnmooth (burn-mooth) n. lands in the south part of Castleton Parish, to the west of Kerlopefoot, formerly split into Upper and Nether Burnmouth. It is now marked on maps as the farm of Under Burnmouth. Note the confusion with the other Burnmouth further north in the same Parish, near Saughtree. In 1541 it was valued at 20 shillings, with tenants James and Henry Henrison. In 1634 the 20-shilling lands of ‘Bournemouth’ were inherited by Margaret from her father Archibald Douglas of Greena. John Armstrong was there in the mid-1700s. This is probably the Burnmouth where John Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797 and the ‘Nether Burnmouth’ where Adam Armstrong farmer at the same time. William Scott, mason and author of ‘Border Exploits’ lived at the schoolhouse there, and it was the birthplace of his son Andrew, Professor of Oriental Languages at Aberdeen University in 1800. Thomas Waugh was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Murray was farmer in 1861. There was a small school there, by the main road, which is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 lists the ‘Lands of Burnmouth, standing in name of William Oliver of Dinlabyre & forming part of Greena’, being owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £101 14s (it is ‘Baermouth’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Nether Burnmouth’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Burnmouth (burn-mooth) n. Burnmouth, a village south of Eyemouth, partly at the foot of the cliffs. Two treaties were signed here between Scotland and England in 1384 and 1497.

Burnmouth Schuil (burn-mooth-skil) n. small school at Under Burnmouth, south of Newcastleton in the 19th century. It served pupils in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It opened in 1805. In the 1830s there were about 20 pupils. William Scott was teacher there from 1810, and still recorded in 1837 and 1841. James Lewis was there in 1851 and John Hardie in the 1860s.

Burn-Murdoch (burn-mur-doch) n. Rev. Aidan Michael (b.1935) son of Dr. Hector and Burns

Barnet

Burn Park

Katharine Mary Bruce. He attended Trinity College, Cambridge and Ridley Hall and became an Episcopal Priest in Durham, then Tutor at Ridley Hall and lecturer at Bishop’s College, Culcutta. He was Rector of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk in Hawick 1970–77, moving afterwards to Swansea. He retired in 1997, but had post-retirement posts in Jedburgh and Eyemouth. He married Susan Henderson and their children were Rachel Margaret, Alastair Michael and Colin John. He later married Aleksandra Grazyna Góra and Sarah Cheriyam.

Burn Park (burn-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the left of the road after the entrance to the racecourse.

Burn Raw (burn-raw) n. former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. These were the houses on the low road alongside the burn, close to the green. The name is recorded in 1841 and 1851, but disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Burnrig (burn-rig) n. former place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded as ‘Burnerig’ in the early 13th century when it was part of a grant from Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey. The lands had previously been held in dowry by Matilda Corbet.

Burns (burnz) n., pl. streams. Those joining the Teviot from the north include (not omitting the larger Waters): Deep Grain; Mid Grain; Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Weens Sike; Kid Sike; Teindside Burn; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; Newmill Burn; Branxholme Burn (or Bloody Burn); Borthwick Water; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Stiches Burn; Boonraw Burn; Hassendean Burn; Cockerscaur Burn; Grinding Burn; Minto Burn; Craigend Burn; Barnhills Burn; Chester Burn; Ale Water; Nisbet Burn; and Tinkler Burn. Those joining the Teviot from the south include: Wester Cleuch Burn; Mid Cleuch Burn; Easter Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddenscleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Nest Burn (and Dovecote Burn); Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch Burn; Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Haysike Burn; Slitrig Water; Kirkton Burn (or Trow Burn); Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Rule Water; Newton Burn; Knowesouth Burn; Timpendean Burn; Jed Water; Oxnam Water; and Kale Water. Tributaries of the Slitrig include: Flosch Burn; Leap Burn; Lang Burn; Langside Burn; Hope Sike; Penchrise Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Cosgmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Fagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknowe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn.

The Burns (thu-burnz) n. remote shepherd’s cottage in Southdean Parish, on the Black Burn, to the east of the hill-fort system at Tamshiel Rig. The older name for the cottage was Tamshielhaugh. William Telfer and family were there in the 1860s. Some large square stones found there (described by J. Edgar in 1934) were suggestive of the existence of a bridge, but if so it is unclear to what road or century it might belong.

Burns (burnz) n. Alexander (b.1778/9–1862) originally from Hownams Parish he was an agricultural labourer and shepherd in Lilliesleaf, Wilton and Cavers Parishes. In 1841 he was at Shankendshiel and in 1851 and 1861 was living on Sunnyside. In 1803 in Bedrule he married Agnes (or Nancy) Jeffrey, who was from Stichill; she died in 1867, aged 83. Their children included: John (b.1806), who lived near Ancrum and then in Wilton; James (b.1811); William (b.1813), tailor in Hawick; Thomas (b.1815); Alexander (b.1820); Robert (b.1824); and George (b.1826).

Alexander (b.1820) born in Wilton Parish, son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey. He married Janet Nichol in Castleton in 1858. He was a shepherd living at Sunnyside in 1861. Their children included Alexander (b.1860/1). Alexander ‘Sandy’, ‘the Skipper’ (19th/20th C.) worker in Pesco’s and rugby player for Hawick R.F.C. He became an apprentice frame-worker in 1899 and was later a Shop Foreman, serving at Pesco’s for more than 50 years. He was a half-back for the Greens and was Captain in the 1907/8 and 1908/9 seasons, leading the team that year’s Scottish Championship to a grand total of 305 points for to only 44 against. He had to give up rugby due to a shoulder injury, but was on the committee for many years. Alexander (20th C.) owner of the Royal Bar at the top of the Howegate.

Andrew (b.1850) son of George and Jane Mein, he was born in Selkirk, but grew up in Hawick, where his father ran the Railway Hotel. He worked as a woolsorter and was Cornet in 1869, following his half-brother John Ferguson in 1861. George (b.1811/2) born in Jedburgh, he was a hotel keeper in Selkirk, being at the Crown Inn there in 1851. He subsequently moved to Hawick, becoming proprietor of the Railway Hotel in Wilton. In 1861 he is recorded there with his wife Jane, and children Betsy, Andrew (who was Cornet in 1869), Agnes and Helen. Later in the 1860s he was proprietor of the Victoria Hotel and was listed at the Crown Hotel in Hawick in 1868. His widow Jane was hotel-keeper at the Crown in 1871. He was step-father of John Mein Ferguson.
who was Cornet in 1861. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living on Main Street with his wife Janet and sons James and George. John (b.1806–89) son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Broom Moor near Ancrum. In 1851 he was a woolen factory nightwatchman on Upper Damside and in 1861 was a Master Gardener at the same address. He married Janet Rae and their children included: Christian; Agnes (b.1836), who married Thomas Rutherford; Margaret (b.1839); and Alexander (b.1841). In 1866 he secondly married his cousin Betsy, daughter of George Swanston. Robert ‘Rabbie’ (1759–1796) poet from Ayrshire, son of a tenant farmer, he became the most famous poet in Scotland, writing often in a Scots dialect. He never visited Hawick, but on his Borders tour of 1787 he came as close as Wauchope and Wopple, walking up to the summit of Bonchester Hill and to Wolfelee Hill. Other local connections are: Burns’ brother Gilbert declined an invitation to a celebratory dinner in 1820 (the letter is in the Museum, written to Bailie Robert Armstrong); Adam Armstrong from Hobkirk (and dux at Hawick Grammar School) married Isabella Lindsay from Jedburgh, who is written about in Burns’ journal; Thomas Brown, born in Hawick around 1823 married Burns granddaughter Jane Emma, and for a while was caretaker at Burns House in Dumfries; Gavin Turnbull, also a poet and friend of Burns, was born in Hawick in 1764: the lines ‘Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o’ need’ is said to have been inspired by the mythical story of the giant haggis served at Haggishaa; Burns mentions Teviotdale in one poem (‘Epistle To J. Lapraik’); Burns Road in Burnfoot was named after the poet in 1953; Francis George Scott set many of his poems to music; and James Thomson wrote ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’ in 1879. There were celebrations around Scotland to mark his 100th anniversary, with Hawick being no exception. Businesses closed at 2 p.m., with the main dinner being in the Tower Hotel (intended for 80, but more tickets having to be sold), with the ‘immortal memory’ being given by Henry Scott Riddell. There was also a dinner at the Commercial Inn for 400 people, and smaller gatherings at the Crown, the Plough, the Ewe and Lamb, the Half-Moon Hotel and the Railway Hotel. In Denholm about 140 people gathered in the Old Swan Inn, in Lilliesleaf 220 people gathered in the school, and in Newcastleaton there were soirees in the Grapes Hotel and the Commercial Inn – ‘Let kings and courtiers rise and fa’, This world has mony turns, But brightly beams aboon them a’, The star o’ Robbie Burns’ [JT], ‘... The frailty of mankind he kent, baith cottar and the laird, So render thanks for Rabbie Burns, and for the works he dared’ [WFC], ‘They’ll hae oor puddens oot by turns, We’ll get oor paiks! A’ owre-the-heid o’ Rabbie Burns, Yon king o’ raiks!’ [DH]. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick man who was known as a singer and acted as a judge at the Common Riding Races. Rev. Stewart (1855–1935) born in Dundee, son of bank manager William and Marjory Gray. He was educated in Dundee and at St. Andrews University and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Portmoak and at Lady Yester’s in Edinburgh and was ordained as minister at St. Mary’s in March 1880. Only a few months later he had to deal with the church being closed for more than a year following the fire of November 1880. He organised a bazaar to raise funds for a manse in 1884. He was a guest at the 1890 Colour Bussing. He demitted his charge in 1925. He married Elizabeth Carruthers Murray, daughter of teacher William, and she died in 1934, aged 71. Their children were Janet Murray Dow (or ‘Jenny’, a nurse in Edinburgh) and Marjory Gray (who died young). William (1813–73) born in Wilton Parish, son of Alexander and Agnes Jeffrey. He was a tailor on the High Street. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Tait’s Close, near 29 High Street and in Slater’s 1852 directory he was on the Punchbowl Close (either next door, or perhaps the same address is meant). In 1851 he was employing 5 men and by 1861 he was at 30 High Street. He married Agnes Crawford (from Ashkirk) in 1836 and she died in 1891, aged 71. Their children included: Agnes (b.1837), who married Thomas Robson; Alexander (b.1838); James (b.1841); Helen (b.1845), who married John Mackenzie; Catherine Bunion (1846–1919); John (b.1849), who married Catherine Blackwood Cooper; Margaret (b.1851), who married Alexander Glen; William (b.1853); Thomas (b.1855), who married Jane Bruce; Walter (b.1857), who married Isabella Hendry Drummond; Robert (b.1860), who married Margaret Clark Ker; George (b.1863), who died in infancy; and Georgina Jeffrey (b.1865). William (b.1819/20) blacksmith in Lilliesleaf. He is recorded there in 1852. In 1861 he was a blacksmith, probably on Main Street in Lilliesleaf (recorded as ‘Burn’). His wife was Frances and their children included James, Sarah Hall, Jessie

the Burns Club

Davidson, Andrew Hall and George (also written ‘Burnes’).

the Burns Club (thu-burnz-klub) n. a social organisation devoted to preservation of the memory of Robert Burns, the Hawick club being founded in 1878. This followed a more informal club that lasted a few years from 1862, and even earlier dinners in the Tower Inn on Burns night, which had started in 1815 (and had addresses usually delivered by Robert Wilson). The club moved location regularly through the rest of the 19th century, and was teetotal for a while! It first had its own premises in the Howegate in 1895, then purchased property at 12 Teviot Crescent in 1899, becoming a member of the Scottish Burns Federation in 1914, moving into the present purpose-built premises in 1928, with women admitted in 1958. The building on Albert Road was designed by George Scott and built by J. Marshall & Co. It was constructed on part of a lane leading to the river and also on the site of a public toilet. Pringle Hall was added in 1963, named after Alexander Pringle, treasurer for 37 years, and the Hunter Lounge was named after Tom Hunter who was Secretary for 19 years. A bust of Burns (by Alex Pirnie) was recently placed above the front door. The club has effectively replaced a Labour Party club in town through much of its history. A centenary booklet, ‘A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair’ was written by R.E. Scott (1978).

burnside (burn-síd) n. the banks of a stream – ‘...and it appeared to be offendit, for it left the house and gaed away down the burn side’ [LHTB], ‘By moor and moss and river, To the swish of swathed grass, And burnside reeds aquiver, The dead mosstroopers pass’ [RSC].

Burnside (burn-síd) n. former name for lands around Hassendean or Chamberlain Newton, for which Alexander Lord Home was superior in 1562/3 when he tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. A mill there is also mentioned. It may be associated with Burnfoot or Burnhead.

Burnside Moss (burn-síd-mos) n. area in Liddesdale, to the south of the foot of Hartsgarth Burn.

the Burns Inn (thu-burnz-in) n. former hostelry at 2 Buccleuch Street, run by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson in the first half of the 19th century. The building dates from the early 1800s, was later the house and shop belonging to James Elliot, and was restored in 1992. It forms the end block of Buccleuch Street. The pub sign showed a half-length portrait of the Bard with the motto ‘The muse found me, as the prophetic bard Elijah found Elisha, at the plough, and cast her inspiring mantle over me’.

Burns Night (burnz-ní) n. the evening of the anniversary of Burns birth, 25th January, when Burns Suppers are often held. The first such event in Hawick was in 1815 in the Tower Inn, and this group held an annual event for several years. There were entertainments in the main hall of the Commercial Inn for Burns centenary in 1859, as well as many celebrations elsewhere (e.g. in the barn at Weens, apparently without alcohol!). The celebrations have been a regular annual event in Hawick since at least the formation of the Burns Club in 1878. Nowadays many of the Town’s social organisations hold their own event, so that the calendar at the end of January can be very full.

Burns Plantin (burnz-plawn-in) n. former plantation (now deep within the forest) in Southdean Parish, located on the north side of the Black Burn, south-east of Charlie’s Knowe. There is an oval earthwork there, surrounded by a ruined wall of earth and stone. It may be an Iron Age settlement.

Burns Road (burnz-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, connecting Burnfoot Road with Queen’s Drive, built in 1953 and named after Robert Burns.

Burns Supper (burnz-su-pur) n. feast held on or near Burns Night, traditionally consisting of haggis, recitations of Burns poems, oat-cakes and whisky, often following a formal schedule.

Burnt Craigs (burn-křägz) n. hilly area on the north-east slopes of the Pike, lying south-east of Penchrise and about 6 miles south of Hawick. A plantation lying between Penchrise Pen and the Pike is known as Burnt Craig Wood (also sometimes ‘Brunt Craig’).

Burntroads (bu-rö-roodz, bur-in-rödz) n. former name for an area around Liddesdale Road and extending beyond the old railway line to the south-east (origin suggestive of a track through a burn moor).

the Burnt Troot (thu-burnz-troo) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

burrow rudes (bu-rö-roodz) n., arch. cultivated land pertaining to a burgh – ‘Item, tua lands in Burrow rudes, estimat to pay 8 bolls in stok, 2 bolls teynd’ [PR1627].

burthen (bur-then) n., arch., poet. a burden – ‘And the Session taking to their consideration that Mr Purdom their Clerk being an old man and not likelie to be long a burthen to them’ [PR1724], ‘Each chaunts by turns the song his soul approves, Or bears the burthen to the maid he loves’ [JL].

Burton (bur̃-in) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Howpasley, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. The Elizabeth listed as ‘Ind.’ in 1841 may be his widow. Robert H. (1885–1950) local athlete who competed in the 800 m at the 1912 Stockholm Olympics. He was probably born in Hawick (although some sources suggest Aberdeen). He lived for a while at Tweedmouth, working as a timber merchant’s clerk, before moving back to Hawick, where he joined the Teviotdale Harriers. He represented Scotland in half-mile races 6 times in the period 1908–12, won the Scottish half-mile championship 3 times and was Border quarter-mile champion for 4 successive years. He was said to have been one of the first British athletes to train in the open air. He dis- qualied for the 1912 Olympics and did not compete again at the national level. He was a Lieutenant in the Postal Service during WWI. He died in Berwick. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Lustruther on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) butcher at West Port, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Loan, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (b.c.1784) shepherd, recorded at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth (this name may have been synonymous with Brunton).

Burnwinyett (bur̃-win-yet) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is uncertain, but it appears on a rental roll of 1541 between Waterside and Wadeshill. Part of the farm, valued at 22s was tenanted by William and George Waugh and another part, ‘valued at 6s 6d was tenanted by Edward Waugh (it is ‘Bur-wynyet’ and ‘Burwinyett’ in 1541).

bush (bush) n. a bush – ‘And hear the blackbird’s cheery whustle Frae ilka bush’ [RH] (note the pronunciation with u rather than oo; cf. buss).

Bush (bush) n. former farm east of Bonchester hill. ‘ Patte Ollyver of the Bushe’ is recorded in 1544. Probably the same place is referred to as Bushhouse in the Feu-Rule lands dispute of 1562 (probably ‘Bushous’ in 1562; it is marked as ‘Buss’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and located just north of Ashtrees on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Bush (bush) n. farm in Ewesdale, near where the Meikledale Burn meets the Ewes Water, between Meikledale and Arkleton. It was formerly known as ‘Park’ and then after about 1600 as ‘Park o Buss’ or ‘Buss’, with the anglicised form appearing later. The tower of ‘ Runion of ye bush’ is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. ‘ Arche Scott’ was recorded there in 1569, as well as Ninian Armstrong. ‘ Ause Scott of the Busse’ (perhaps the same man) is listed by Monipennie in about 1594 and Walter Scott, ‘called Watt of the Bus’ was declared a fugitive in 1642. It was ‘Park alias Buss’ in 1670 when the superiority was inherited John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 338 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Arkleton, Kirkton and Burgrains. 3 separate houses are shown in 1718. George Henderson was there in 1794–97. Charles Scott from Hawick was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. John Jackson was farmer in the 1860s (also ‘the Bush’, it is ‘Buss’ in 1569 and ‘ Buse’ in 1663; it is marked as ‘Buss’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Bush Hill (bush-hil) n. hill to the east of Staney Hill and south of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 331 m.

Bush-hoose see Bush

Bush o the Linn (bush-̃-o-thu-lin) n. waterfall near the foot of the Liddel Water – ‘The sang of the mavis rings loudly and cheery, As he mingles the mavis rings loudly and cheery, As he mingles near the foot of the Liddel Water’ [DA].

bushk *(busk) v., poet. to adorn, dress neatly, prepare – ‘I’ll busk ye braw wi’ furs o’ bear. I’ll deck yer Bonnie strecht black hair . . . ’ [WP], ‘She has nae rowth o’ gowd set to her name, Nor jewel stanes to busk her braw . . . ’ [WL] (from Old English).

buskit *(bus-ki) adj., arch. dressed, equipped, adorned, prepared, made ready – ‘Threh the mids o thir verra busses . . . ’ [ECS], ‘The shiflies frae the buskit thorn . . . ’ [DH], ‘. . . Getting buskit for the Ball’ [DH], ‘Oh the fairest spot o’ a! He later lived in Wilton and Hawick and worked as a foreman of steam frames. In 1841 the family were at Roadhead. In 1869 he married Agnes, daughter of Walter Grieve and Mary Oliver, and she died in 1914. Their children included: William (b.1870); Mary (b.1872); Walter Grieve (b.1874); John (b.c.1876); and Margaret (b.c.1878). In 1891 they were living at 21 Beaconsfield Terrace. William (b.c.1800) stockingmaker who lived on Roadhead in Wilton in 1841. He was probably the William who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Mary and their children included Debora, John, Margaret and Andrew. He may have been the same ‘W. Butler’ who found a denarius of Vespasian on the slopes of Ruberslaw. William (19th C.) Hawick tailor, son of Crimean War and Indian Mutiny veteran Andrew. He married Janet Shepherd and their daughter Margaret married John Burns Elliot.

He was at about 23 Loan in 1841, on the Back Row in 1851 and at 5 Tannage Close in 1861. He married Janet Cunningham and they had daughters Janet and Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’). Helen (1824–1912) wife of Thomas Murray, who was a brother of Andrew. John and William, who were teachers in Hawick. She must have been related to her mother-in-law, who was also Helen Byers. After her husband Thomas died in 1862 (aged only 37) she supported the family by making boys’ suits. It is said that many townsmen received their first suits from her. She was known as a staunch Evangelical Union member and a woman of forceful character. She lived in Lothian Street. Her children included William, George, Mary, John (who became an accountant) and 2 who died in infancy.

Bygate (bl-gä’, ba-gi’) n. former name for a farm and area on the east side of the Hermitage valley, north of Leahaugh. It is now sometimes marked as ‘Backgate’ on maps. The family of ‘Elwald in Bagget’ is mentioned among a list of Liddesdale Elliots in 1516. In 1541 it was valued at 18 shillings and the tenant was James Elliot. Hab Elliot possessed the lands in 1632. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1677. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1694, with John Young also listed as resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 154 acres, bounded by Cleuchhead, a common (on the south) and the Hermitage Water; the farmhouse is shown near the south boundary of the farm. John Elliot ‘in Baggot’ was the eldest son of William in Park, born around 1731. The farm was given to John Elliot by the Duke of Buccleuch when he took the lands of Copshaw Park to build Newcastle. Probably the same John Elliot was farmer there and elsewhere according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Bygatewood was an old farmstead between Bygate and the Steele. There is an earthen-banked field system between Bygate Sike and the Steele Road (it is probably the ‘Bagget’ recorded in 1516, ‘Baggart’ in Bygate Sike

1632, ‘Baggett’ in 1694 and ‘Baggot’ in the mid-18th century; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘Bygate’ and ‘Bygáte wood’, while ‘Baggitt’ is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Backgate’ is on Stobie’s 1770 map.

Byreholm (bI-hom) n. farm on the B6357 just west of old Castleton. In 1541 it was valued at 26 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by Hector Armstrong. James Glendinning was there in 1623. In 1632 it was possessed by Walter Scott. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1673 and a Pringle in 1677. In 1694 John Robison was tenant and James Elliot also resident there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 102 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Whitehaugh, Castleton Glebe and the Liddel Water; the farm-house was in about the same place as the modern one. The map is at a bigger scale than others because there were small pieces of land intermixed with it belonging to Cocklait farm and to the Laird of Whitehaugh. Note that it is also listed along with Bowholm in the separate survey of Over Closs (although this may be an error, it does demonstrate that it was distinct from Bowholm). ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’ lived there in the years around 1800. Thomas Oliver was there in 1821 and Thomas Niven was carter there in 1835 (it is ‘Byrholme’ in 1541 and 1632, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Byrchoom’ and ‘Byerholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; see also Bowholm).

caddle (kaw-dul) n., arch. a set, particularly in the game ‘papés’ – ‘Note: a caddle o paips, a cass of paips = a set of four ‘paips’’ [ECS].

Caddonfit (kaw-din’-fi) n. Caddonfoot, a village 3 miles west of Galashiels, where the Caddon Water meets the Tweed. There is a fine example of an ancient oak tree nearby. It is also the name of the associated parish. The parish church was built in 1861 (designed by David Rhind) and extended in 1875.

Caddroun Burn (kaw-drin-burn) n. stream that rises near the Note o the Gate and follows the B6357 for a while, through the Caddroun Potts, to join the Liddel Water. To the south-west of the railway culvert are the remains of an old settlement, consisting of 2 separate enclosures containing several hut circles; this could be the former farm of ‘Hellcaudrounburn’. This old name suggests that the gorge was once the ‘Hell Cauldron’, i.e. with having an association with the Devil. An old hollow way runs north-west for about 250 m from this settlement, crossing the railway; it was once suggested it was part of the Catrail. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (it is ‘Helcaudron burne’ in c.1590 and marked ‘Hellcaudrenn b.’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

the Caddroun Potts (thu-kaw-drin-pots) n. a series of cavities in the rocks of the Caddroun Burn, which joins the Liddel Water about 2 miles north of Saughtree.

cadge (kaj) v. to try to get something for nothing, beg, mooch – ‘...anybody fund cadgin was teh bei gein fower-pence...an then putten oot o the toon’ [BW1961], ‘...unless hei could cadge a hurl on the scaffie cairt’ [IWL] (from Middle English).

cadger (ka-jur) n. someone who is always cadging; a sponger, beggar, disagreeable person – ‘he’is jist a cadger that yin’, an itinerant peddlar, arch. a packman, carrier – ‘...Like gentlemen ye must not seem, But look like corn caugers gawn ae road. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...in respect of John Scott, Borthaugh, and James Scott, cadger, their declaration ...’ [BR1642], ‘Lang syne ye saw the cadger’s horse, Come trot-tin’ doon the road’ [JRE], ‘An fient a trap, boaggie, geeg, larrie, caager’s caairst or hurlie coud A airt oot’ [ECS], ‘The cadger whoa’d his powny cairt Forrenst the ‘Pig and Sty’’ [WL] (also written ‘cauger’).

Cadger Ford (ka-jur-förd) n. former ford over the Harden Burn in Liddlesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Cadger’s Hole (ka-jurz-höl) n. area on the south side of the Ale valley, along Esdale Sike, just to the west of the Hill Road to Roberton.
the Cadger’s Well

the Cadger’s Well (\textit{thu-ka-jurz-wel}) \textit{n.} former water source in Wilton, located near the ‘Stell Hoose’ which was at the bottom of Wilton Hill. The area had been drained in 1826. The well was started in the dry summer of 1842 and used until the early 20th century. The name derived from James Hislop, a ‘cadger’ (or carrier) who lived there.

Cadger’s Well (\textit{ka-jurz-wel}) \textit{n.} area in the upper Ale valley, cut through by the Eisdale Sike and joining the Water close to Whitslade.

the Cadora (\textit{thu-ka-dö-ru}) \textit{n.} extensive cafe on the south side of the High Street in the mid-20th century, run by Guido Taddei. Popular with young people in the weekend afternoons and early evenings, it has latterly been a bingo parlour.

Caerby Hill (\textit{kär-bee-hill}) \textit{n.} hill to the south of Newcastleton, just to the east of Sorbietrees and adjacent to Blinkbonny Height. It reaches a height of 268 m and is marked ‘Carby Hill’ on modern maps. It is quite detached from other hills, and on a clear day its summit commands views of Cumberland and the Solway. It is crowned with remains of an ancient settlement inside an oval stone wall about 250 feet across, with signs of at least 6 circular hut foundations. It may have been a pre-Roman fort with a later settlement. There is also a meandering linear earthwork around the hill, possibly marking a boundary (like the Catrail), which may be the ‘fossa Galwalensium’ mentioned in a 14th century charter relating to nearby lands. There is also a field system, with clearance cairns around Couper Cleuch to the south (also written ‘Carby Hill’; ‘Carboch’ is marked as a hill on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and it is ‘Kerbie Hill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Carbe Hill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Caerlaverock Castle (\textit{kar-la-ve-rok-kaw-sul}) \textit{n.} castle at the mouth of the River Nith, south of Dumfries, seat of the Maxwells, who were often Wardens of the Western March.

Caerlenrig (\textit{kar-len-rig}) \textit{n.} former settlement that lay about half a mile to the west (i.e. up river) of the present Teviothead. This was the common general name for the area until about the time the Parish of Teviothead was established in 1850, and was centred on the old chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig (which lay inside the present Teviothead churchyard). Here is where Johnnie Armstrong and 40 of his men were hanged and buried in 1530 by the boy King James V. A memorial opposite the church was erected in 1897, and an older memorial stone marks the nearby grave-site. The village was raided by Dacre’s men in late 1513 and again in 1514, when it is described as ‘the two Townys of Carlanriggs, with the demaynes of the same, wherupon was 40 pleughes’. The £5 lands of ‘Carlingrig’ was among purchases by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. In 1641 the 5-pound ‘Chaplonds de Carlangrig’ was inherited by James, 1st Earl of Annandale from his father John, 2nd Earl of Annandale. From at least the mid-17th century the area was owned by the Eliots. Gavin Elliot paid the land tax on £500 there in 1678 (at that time it included Merrylaw, which was disjoined sometime before 1788). It was listed as ‘Carlanercrigg’ among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott of Stobs in 1692 (when it was still a 5-pound land). There was a chapel there from at least 1719, with regular services happening from 1721, but this was by a supply preacher for many years. John Shortreed and William Scott were there in 1729 and Andrew Rae in 1730. The name continued to be used for the ‘Chapel of Ease’ where Sunday services were held in the early 19th century, while the area was still part of Hawick Parish. The name is now used mainly for the farm that lies on the ridge. It was also sometimes referred to as ‘Rig’ or ‘Rigg’; this was the name in 1748 when tax was paid on 11 windows by Andrew Oliver and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when George Pott was the owner. It was valued at about £366 13s 4d in 1788. James Glendinning was there in 1772. It later became part of the Buccleuch estates. It is said that when the foundations were dug for the farm (in about 1790), some urns were unearthed and coins were found, claimed to be Roman, but probably of later date. Also near here in 1856 a Roman coin was found, an aureus of Vespasian, as well as a perforated stone disk, now in the Museum – ‘With hempen cordis grit and lang They hangit braw Johnie Armstrong, And thretty-six o’ his companie At Carlenrig were hung fu’ hie’ [T] (there are many spellings including ‘Callendrick’, ‘Carlanrick’, ‘Carlangridge’, ‘Carlenridge’, ‘Carlanrig’, ‘Carlenrigg’, ‘Carlenrick’, etc.; the name is recorded as ‘Carlanrig’ in 1508, is ‘Carlangryg’ in 1509, ‘Carlanerik’ in 1511, ‘Carlangir’ in 1554, ‘Carlenarig’ in 1558, ‘Carlenrick’ in 1678, ‘Carlenrickirge’ in 1699, ‘Carlenridge’ in 1694, ‘Callendridgerigg’ in 1726, and ‘Carlanrickir’ in 1788; it is marked ‘Carlanryg’ and ‘Carlangrig’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps; it may derive from the Celtic ‘caer’, meaning fort, plus the Old English ‘long’ and the Scots ‘rig’ or Old Norse.
Caerlenrig Schuil

‘hrygg’ for a ridge, this being suggested since the long ridge here is quite a striking geographical feature; an alternative origin is Old Welsh ‘caer’, meaning an enclosure, plus the Old Welsh ‘lanerc’, meaning a piece of cleared land.

Caerlenrig (kar-len-rig) n. long ridge to the south-west of Teviothead village, giving its name to the former settlement of Caerlenrig. A rod runs along the eastern side of the ridge, connecting Teviothead with Merrylaw and Teviothead Stone. It is flanked by the Teviot River and the Limecleuch Burn. At the north-eastern point of the ridge are signs of an old hill-fort, while near its south-western end is an enclosure, about 200 ft square, cut through by the road.

Caerlenrig Kirk (kar-len-rig-kirk) n. chapel at Caerlenrig, near what is now called Teviothead at the confluence of the Teviot with the Frostlie Burn. The oldest chapel was dedicated to St. Mary and lay within the present churchyard. A lintel from this building stands in the minister’s glebe. This building was certainly pre-Reformation, and possibly 15th century. The ‘chapelinyr of Carlangryg’ was listed in the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509 (and confirmed as ‘Carlanerik’ in 1511). A ‘Chapel of Ease’ was erected near there (on the Thorneyhaugh by Falnash) for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes in 1715 and rebuilt in 1799 (or perhaps 1789) on the other side of the stream. This building subsequently became the schoolhouse. Communion there were carried out alternately by the ministers of Hawick and Cavers, who would also celebrate marriages and baptisms there (with help from other local ministers). The present church was built in 1855/6 and is situated just a little west of the original chapel. There has long been a burial ground there, but how long back it goes is uncertain.

Caerlenrig Manse (kar-len-rig-mans) n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used on the 1841 census. It was a manse for Caerlenrig Kirk, built largely at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch around the 1830s.

Caerlenrig Righeid (kar-len-rig-rig-heed) n. former shepherd’s cottage at the head of the Caerlen Rig. This may be the ‘Callendridgerigg’ where Patrick Hume was in 1726. John Glendinning was there in at least 1783-86 (it was ‘Carlenrig-rigehead’ in 1783).

Caerlenrig Schuil (kar-len-rig-skil) n. former school in Caerlenrig, which eventually became Teviothead Primary School. It was built and initially supported by the Society in Scotland for Propagating Christian Knowledge in 1755, with their support withdrawn about 1767. It seems to have survived the period until 1803 when it became formally a second parish school of Cavers. It became the school of its own parish in 1850. Arthur Elliot was the first master 1755-57.

Cæsar (see-zur) n. one of a series of Roman Emperors who once ruled over a large part of Europe, including Hawick. A worn sestercius coin of Marcus Cæsar, dating from 155-6 was found by S. Scott in his garden in MacLagan Drive about 1965.

the Cafe (thu-kaw-fee) n. name often for the small building serving refreshments in Wilton Lodge Park. It was erected in the 1930s, originally as a bowling pavilion. Later it was the sales kiosk for the putting green and tramolines, as well as serving as a small cafe. Closed in 2014 it was rebuilt in 2015.

the Cafe Brae (thu-kaw-fee-bra) n. popular name for Brougham Place, after the Green Cafe at the bottom of the brae.
